

CAYMAN ISLANDS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT

2000 SESSION ELECTRONIC VERSION

(18 February — 18 September 2000)

Hon. Mabry S. Kirkconnell, MBE, JP, Speaker

Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and little Cayman

Disclaimer: The electronic version of the Official Hansard Report is for informational purposes only. The printed version remains the official record.

PLEASE NOTE: While every effort has been made to mirror the bound volume, the electronic version does not necessarily conform to the page numbers of the bound volume index. Therefore, before quoting from the electronic version users should first verify the page numbers in the printed version of the Official Hansard Report.

OFFICIAL MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Hon. Mabry S. Kirkconnell, MBE, JP, Speaker

Second Elected Member for the District of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman

Hon. James M. Ryan, MBE, JP

First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs

Hon. David F. Ballantyne

Second Official Member responsible for Legal Administration

Hon. George A. McCarthy, OBE, JP

Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economic Development

Hon. Truman M. Bodden, OBE, JP

Elected Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson, OBE, JP

Elected Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works

Hon. John B. McLean, Sr., OBE, JP

Elected Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources

Hon. Anthony S. Eden, OBE, JP

Elected Minister responsible for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation

Hon. Julianna Y. O'Connor-Connolly, JP

Elected Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture

ELECTED MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush, OBE, JP

First Elected Member for the Electoral District of West Bay

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.

Third Elected Member for the Electoral District of West Bay

Mr. D. Dalmain Ebanks, Cert. Hon.

Fourth Elected Member for the Electoral District of West Bay

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts, JP

First Elected Member for the Electoral District of George Town

Mr. Linford A. Pierson, JP

Third Elected Member for the Electoral District of George Town

Dr. Frank S. McField

Fourth Elected Member for the Electoral District of George Town

Miss Heather D. Bodden

Second Elected Member for the Electoral District of Bodden Town

Mr. Roy Bodden

Third Elected Member for the Electoral District of Bodden Town

Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP

Elected Member for the Electoral District of North Side

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
INDEX OF THE 2000 SESSION

Abbreviations. 1r, 2r, 3r, first, second, third reading; (A), Amendment; BT, Bodden Town; (C), Committee; CAL, Cayman Airways, Ltd.; CDB, Caribbean Development Bank; CPA, Central Planning Authority; DOE, Department of Environment; DOT, Department of Tourism; EE, East End; GHHS, George Hicks High School; GM, Government Motion; GT, George Town; ICCI, International College of the Cayman Islands; JGHS, John Gray High School; NS, North Side; PMM, Private Member's Motion; (RBPS) Red Bay Primary School; (R), Report; SO, Standing Order; WB, West Bay

Administration of Oaths or Affirmations

Bulgin, Hon. Samuel, 391, 443, 759, 781
Ebanks, Hon. Donovan, 353, 443, 591, 781
Roberts, Hon. Adam, 1, 591
Walton, Hon. Joel, 131, 591

Apologies for Absence/Lateness

Ballantyne, Hon. David, 101, 169, 203, 233, 335, 353, 373, 451, 453, 489, 557, 577, 591, 615, 655, 743, 759, 781, 879, 893, 931
Bodden, Hon Truman M., 233, 591
Bodden, Miss Heather, 335, 453, 469
Bush, Mr. W. McKeever, 373, 577
Ebanks, Mr. D. Dalmain, 87, 131, 147, 169, 203, 469, 513, 557, 591, 599, 655, 743, 781, 857, 879, 893, 931
Eden, Hon. Anthony S., 69, 101, 513
Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C., 31, 87, 233, 267, 469, 591, 707, 743, 893
Jefferson, Mr. John D. Jr., 131
Kirkconnell, Hon. Mabry S., Speaker, 203, 267, 297, 707
McCarthy, Hon. George A., 13, 31, 69, 101, 111, 181, 203, 233, 267, 335, 469, 489, 513, 537, 557, 577, 591, 655, 811, 879
McLean, Hon. John B., 203, 255, 655
O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna, 13, 31, 49, 111, 267, 317, 557, 615, 655, 857
Ryan, Hon. James, 101, 267, 453, 599, 655, 781, 811

Ballantyne, Hon. David F.,

Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Reply to matter raised under SO 11(6)), 651
Criminal Procedure (A) (Abolition of the Death Penalty) Code, 2000, 951 Penal Code (A) (Abolition of the Death Penalty Bill, 2000, 951
Proceeds of Criminal Conduct (A) (Money Laundering Regulations) Bill, 2000, 689, 695
Statement on the select committee of the whole House on the Immigration Law 1992; the Local Companies (Control) Law (1995 R); and the Trade and Business Licensing Law (1996 R), 973

Bills:

Banks and Trust Companies (A) (Access to Information) Bill, 2000, 675 (1r), 688 (2r), 702 (C), 705 (R), 705 (3r)
Building Societies (A) (Regulations by Monetary Authority) Bill, 2000, 939 (1r), 950 (2r), 959 (C), 962 (R), 963 (3r)
Companies Management (A) (Access to Information) Bill, 2000, 676 (1r), 688 (2r), 703 (C), 705 (R), 705 (3r)

Computer Misuse Bill, 2000, 676 (1r), 768 (2r), 773 (C), 776 (R), 777 (3r)
Co-operative Societies (A) (Credit Unions) Bill, 2000, 939 (1r), 949 (2r), 958 (C), 962 (R), 963 (3r)
Criminal Procedure (A) (Abolition of the Death Penalty) Code, 2000, 939 (1r), 951 (2r), 961 (C), 962 (R), 964 (3r)
Electronic Transactions Bill, 2000, 676 (1r), 753 (2r), 771 (C), 776 (R), 777 (3r)
Finance Bill, 2000, 437 (1r), 442 (2r), 447 (C), 448 (R), 448 (3r)
Immigration (A) Bill, 2000, 753 (1r), 769 (2r), 775 (C), 776 (R), 777 (3r)
Labour (A) Bill, 2000, 964 (1r), 965 (2r), 968 (C), 972 (R), 972 (3r)
Monetary Authority (A) (International Co-operation) Bill, 2000, 675 (1r), 676 (2r), 699 (C), 705
(R), 705 (3r),
Monetary Authority (A) (Regulation of Non-Bank Financial Institutions) Bill, 2000, 938 (1r), 946
(2r), 957 (C), 962 (R), 963 (3r)
Money Services Bill, 2000, 938 (1r), 947 (2r), 958 (C), 962 (R), 963 (3r)
Penal Code (A) (Abolition of the Death Penalty Bill, 2000, 939(1r), 950 (2r), 959 (C), 962 (R), 963
(3r)
Proceeds of Criminal Conduct (A) (Money Laundering Regulations) Bill, 2000, 676 (1r), 689 (2r), 703 (C), 705 (R), 706 (3r),
Public Service Pensions (A) and Validation) Bill, 2000, 437 (1r), 437 (2r), 444 (C), 448 (R), 448
(3r)
Trade and Business Licensing (A) Bill, 2000, 753 (1r), 770 (2r), 776 (C), 777 (R) 777 (3r)
Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 938 (1r), 939 (2r), 952 (C), 961 (R), 962
(3r)

Bodden, Hon. Truman, M.,

1999 Annual Report of the Central Planning Authority and Development Control Board Cayman
Islands Government, 879
Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Reply to raising of matters (SO 12(2))), 647
Amendment to the Development Plan 1997 (GM 1/00), 292, 293
Amendments to the Development Plan 1977 (GM 2/00), 778
Capt. E.L. Solomon's Subdivision off Eastern Avenue (PMM 25/00), 791
Cayman Airways Ltd Financial Statements 31 December 1998, 391
Computer Misuse Bill, 2000, 768
Concerns with the occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 300, 329
Debate on Throne Speech, 116, 133
Disruption of Flight Schedule of Cayman Airways Limited (Reply to matter raised under SO 11(6)), 207
Electronics Transaction Bill, 2000, 753, 768
Establishment of a Student Summer Employment Agency (PMM 21/00), 869
Financial Statements of the Community College of the Cayman Islands 31st December 1999 and 1998, 895
Government Scholarship Grants (Reply to matter raised under SO 11(6)), 509
Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 346, 347, 366, 375
Motion to debate Auditor General's Report and the Public Accounts Committee's Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 884, 885, 887-890
Public Education System (PMM 14/00), 532, 541, 612, 624, 664
Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 850
Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes (PMM 1/00), 259
Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships (PMM 22/00), 809, 820

Watersports Concessions at major hotels (PMM 8/00), 766
Wetlands (PMM 15/00), 494, 497, 498

Bodden, Miss Heather D.,

Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 651
Debate on the Throne Speech, 69
Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children (PMM 10/00), 730, 763
Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 393
Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships (PMM 22/00), 824

Bodden, Mr. Roy,

20 percent tax on Cayman Net News (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 486
Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 642
Capt. E.L. Solomon’s Subdivision off Eastern Avenue (PMM 25/00), 789
Caymanian Compass Editorial re: length of time spent in Chamber by MLAs, 181
Concerns with the occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 297, 298, 303, 335
Conducting of business, 511
Conflict of Interest Legislation (PMM 13/00), 458, 461
Debate on Throne Speech, 13
Debates on issues in the draft 1992 Constitution (PMM 18/00), 800
Environment Study to determine the long term effects of aerial spraying and landfill leakage (PMM 12/00), 482, 485
Escaped Prisoner (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 293
Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children (PMM 10/00), 761
Establishment of a Student Summer Employment Agency (PMM 21/00), 864, 873
Exgratia Payment Beneficiaries (PMM 7/00), 721, 723
In-depth discussion on increased interest and electrical rates (PMM 11/00), 716
Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 344, 347, 384
Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers (PMM 4/00), 282, 288
Monetary Authority (A) (International Co-operation) Bill, 2000, 679
Mortgage Assistance (PMM 24/00), 836, 838
Motion to debate Auditor General’s Report (and the Public Accounts Committee’s Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 885, 887, 890
Public Access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach (PMM 2/00), 278
Public Education System (PMM 14/00), 507, 524, 628
Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 843, 852
Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes (PMM 1/00), 255
Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships (PMM 22/00), 822
Rights for illegitimate children and parents of illegitimate children (PMM 16/00 - withdrawn), 506
Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 942
Wetlands (PMM 15/00), 493, 498

Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva,

Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 631, 652
Amendment to the Development Plan 1997 (GM 1/00), 293
Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 297, 299, 332
Conducting of business, 511
Debate on the Throne Speech, 160, 169, 182
Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children (PMM No. 10/00), 741

Establishment of a Student Summer Employment Agency (PMM 21/00), 870
Exgratia Payment Beneficiaries (PMM 7/00), 721, 725
Government Financial Assistance for Low Cost Housing (PMM 17/00), 834
Government scholarship grant, 510
Gross Domestic Product (PMM 23/00), 875, 877
In-depth discussion on increased interest and electrical rates (PMM 11/00), 714, 719
Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 345, 359
Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers (PMM 4/00), 282, 291
Labour (A) Bill, 2000, 967
Mortgage Assistance (PMM 24/00), 836, 837, 840
Motion to debate Auditor General's Report (and the Public Accounts Committee's Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 884, 887-890
Proceeds of Criminal Conduct (A) (Money Laundering Regulations) Bill, 2000, 694
Property in Goat Yard, Boatswain Bay (Raising of matters SO 11(5) & (6)), 973
Public Access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach (PMM 2/00), 276, 279
Public Education System (PMM 14/00), 566
Purchase of Property (PMM 19/00), 794
Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes (PMM 1/00), 261
Retirement pay for senior citizen employees (PMM 9/00), 728, 729
Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships (PMM 22/00), 805, 808
Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 941
Watersports Concessions at major hotels (PMM 8/00), 764, 766
Wetlands (PMM 15/00), 504

Commonwealth Day Message, 181

Debate on the Throne Speech

Bodden, Hon. Truman M, 116, 133
Bodden, Miss Heather, 69
Bodden, Mr. Roy, 13
Bush, Mr. W. McKeever, 160, 169, 182
Eden, Hon. Anthony, 147
Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C., 187, 203
Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., 32
McField, Dr. Frank, 49
McLean, Hon. John B., 242
Moyle, Mrs. Edna M. (comments made from Chair re: needs of district of North Side), 250
O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna, 212, 235
Pierson, Mr. Linford A, 94, 101, 111
Ryan, Hon. James M., 238
Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 73, 87

Deputy Speaker in the Chair, 170-449; 562-568; 707-712

Divisions

1/00—(A) to PMM 5/00, 303
2/00—(A) to PMM 6/00, 349
3/00—First Resolve section of PMM 6/00 as (A), 436
4/00—Adjournment, 467
5/00—Motion to deal with PMM 7/00 instead of PMM 11/00, 480

- 6/00—Motion to defer PMM 11/00, 481
- 7/00—Suspension of SO 10(2), 512
- 8/00—Adjournment, 597
- 9/00—PMM 18/00, 804
- 10/00—First two resolve sections to PMM 24/00, 842
- 11/00—Last two resolve sections to PMM 24/00, 842
- 12/00—PMM 20/00, 855
- 13/00—Motion to debate Auditor General’s Report (and the Public Accounts Committee’s Report), 891
- 14/00—(Traffic (A) (Driving while Intoxicated Etc.) Bill, 2000 (C)), 956

Ebanks, Hon. Donovan

- Immigration (A) Bill, 2000, 769
- HMP Northward Strategic Plans Document and the HMP Northward Inmate Development and Rehabilitation Programmes, 743
- Royal Cayman Islands Police Service Annual Report 1999, 893
- Trade and Business Licensing (A) Bill, 2000, 770

Ebanks, Mr. D. Dalmain,

- Public Access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach (PMM 2/00), 278

Eden, Hon. Anthony S.,

- Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 648
- Annual Report of the National Drug Council for the year ending 30 June 1999 and the National Drug Council Financial Statements for year ended 30 June 1999, 880
- Conflict of Interest Legislation (PMM 13/00), 461
- Debate on the Throne Speech, 147
- Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children (PMM No. 10/00), 762
- Exgratia Payment Beneficiaries (PMM 7/00), 722, 723
- Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 423
- Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers (PMM 4/00), 283
- Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 945

Government Motions

- 1/00—Amendment to the Development Plan 1997
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman, 292
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeever, 293
- 2/00—Amendments to the Development Plan 1977
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman, 778

Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C.,

- 20 percent tax on Cayman Net News (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 487
- Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 648
- Conducting of business, 511
- Debate on the Throne Speech, 187, 203
- Financial Statements of the Cayman Islands Government for the Year ended 31 December 1998, 881
- Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 344, 348, 399, 409

Motion to debate Auditor General’s Report (and the Public Accounts Committee’s Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 886
 Public Access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach (PMM 2/00), 278
 Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 939, 945
 Traffic Ticket Regulations, 2000, 880

Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr.,

Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 326
 Debate on the Throne Speech, 32
 Debates on issues in the draft 1992 Constitution (PMM 18/00), 795, 803
 Exgratia Payment Beneficiaries, (PMM 7/00), 722
 Government Financial Assistance for Low Cost Housing (PMM 17/00), 829, 835
 Government Scholarship Grants (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 509
 Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 348, 394
 Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers (PMM 4/00), 287
 Labour (A) Bill, 2000, 966
 Monetary Authority (A) (International Co-operation) Bill, 2000, 686
 Property in Goat Yard, Boatswain Bay (Raising of matters SO 11(5) & (6)), 974
 Public Access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach (PMM 2/00), 275, 276, 280
 Public Education System (PMM 14/00), 570, 583
 Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 846
 Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes (PMM 1/00), 251, 274
 Report of the Public Accounts Committee on the Report of the Auditor General on the Audited Accounts of the Government for the year ended 31st December, 1998, 882
 Retirement pay for senior citizen employees (PMM 9/00), 726, 727, 728, 729
 Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships (PMM 22/00), 804, 805, 825
 Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 941
 Watersports Concession at major hotels (PMM 8/00), 764, 767

McCarthy, Hon. George A.,

20 percent tax on Cayman Net News (Reply to matter raised under SO 11(6)), 487
 Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Reply to matter raised under SO 11(6)), 631
 Banks and Trust Companies (A) (Access to Information) Bill, 2000, 688
 Building Societies (A) (Regulations by Monetary Authority) Bill, 2000, 950
 Cayman Islands Monetary Authority Annual Report 1998, 373
 Cayman Islands Public Pensions Board Actuarial Valuation of Public Service Pensions as of January 1999, 374
 Companies Management (A) (Access to Information) Bill, 2000, 688
 Co-operative Societies (A) (Credit Unions) Bill, 2000, 949
 Finance Bill, 2000, 442, 444
 Financial Statements of the Cayman Islands Stock Exchange Limited for the year ended 31 December 1998, 615
 Financial Statements of the Public Service Pension Fund for the years ended 31st December 1996, 1997 and 1998, 616
 Gross Domestic Product (PMM 23/00), 875
 In-depth discussion on increased interest and electrical rates (PMM 11/00), 715
 Monetary Authority (A) (International Co-operation) Bill, 2000, 676, 687
 Monetary Authority (A) (Regulation of Non-Bank Financial Institutions) Bill, 2000, 946

Money Services Bill, 2000, 948

Motion to debate Auditor General's Report (and the Public Accounts Committee's Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 883, 884

Public Service Pensions (Amendment and Validation) Bill, 2000, 437, 441

McField, Dr. Frank,

Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 643

Capt. E.L. Solomon's Subdivision off Eastern Avenue (PMM 25/00), 791

Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 299, 314, 317

Debate on the Throne Speech, 49

Debates on issues in the draft 1992 Constitution (PMM 18/00), 795, 803

Establishment of a "Safe House" for battered women and children (PMM 10/00), 738

Finance Bill, 2000, 443

Government Financial Assistance for Low Cost Housing (PMM 17/00), 829, 832

Immigration Board's Policy re: Jamaican Nationals (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 231

Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 345, 381

Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers (PMM 4/00), 290

Labour (A) Bill, 2000, 967

Monetary Authority (A) (International Co-operation) Bill, 2000, 682

Mortgage Assistance (PMM 24/00), 837

Public Education System (PMM 14/2000), 550, 560, 627

Public Service Pensions (Amendment and Validation) Bill, 2000, 440

Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 851

Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes (PMM 1/00), 251, 264, 267

Retirement pay for senior citizen employees (PMM 9/00), 726

Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships (PMM 22/00), 824

Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 941

McLean, Hon. John B.,

Annual Report of the National Trust for the Cayman Islands year ended 31 August 1999, 373

Capt. E.L. Solomon's Subdivision off Eastern Avenue (PMM 25/00), 791

Cayman Islands Turtle Farm (1983) Limited Financial Statements dated 31st March 1999, 707

Debate on the Throne Speech, 242

Environment Study to determine the long term effects of aerial spraying and landfill leakage (PMM 12/00), 485

Government Financial Assistance for Low Cost Housing (PMM 17/00), 832

In-depth discussion on increased interest and electrical rates (PMM 11/00), 719

Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 845

Purchase of Property (PMM 19/00), 794

Report & Recommendation of the Minister responsible for lands for the proposed vesting of Block 77A, Parcel 48, 615

Report & Recommendation of the Minister responsible for lands relating to the proposed disposition of GT Block 14C, Parcel 40, 615

Motion to debate Auditor General's Report (and the Public Accounts Committee's Report —SO 77(6) & (7))

Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 884, 885, 887, 888, 889, 890

Bodden, Mr. Roy, 885, 887, 890

Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 884, 887, 888, 889, 890
 Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C., 886
 McCarthy, Hon. George A., 883, 884
 Moyle, Mrs. Edna M., 885
 O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna, 886, 887
 Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 883, 886, 887, 888

Moyle, Mrs. Edna M.,

Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 650
 Debate on the Throne Speech, (comments made from Chair re: needs of district of North Side), 250
 Environment Study to determine the long term effects of aerial spraying and landfill leakage (PMM 12/00), 482
 Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children (PMM 10/00), 730, 737
 Government Scholarships grants, 510
 In-depth discussion on increased interest and electrical rates (PMM 11/00), 714
 Ironwood Scholarship Fund, 828
 Motion to debate Auditor General’s Report (and the Public Accounts Committee’s Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 885
 Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 843
 Purchase of Property (PMM 19/00), 794
 Retirement pay for senior citizen employees (PMM 9/00), 728
 Rights for illegitimate children and parents of illegitimate children (PMM 16/00 - withdrawn), 506
 Unfinished business of the House, 975
 Wetlands (PMM 15/00), 493, 505

O’Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna,

Cayman Islands National Youth Policy, 893
 Debate on the Throne Speech, 212, 235
 Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children (PMM 10/00), 735
 Exgratia Payment Beneficiaries, (PMM 7/00), 724, 725
 Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 420
 Labour (A) Bill, 2000, 965, 968
 Mortgage Assistance (PMM 24/00), 837
 Motion to debate Auditor General’s Report (and the Public Accounts Committee’s Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 886, 887
 Retirement pay for senior citizen employees (PMM 9/00), 728

Parliamentary Questions—By Category (See also: Parliamentary Questions—Numerically)

Agriculture

28: Steps undertaken to prevent the infestation of the Cayman Islands of formosa termites, 603

Airport

54: Update on the propose resurfacing of the Gerrard Smith Airport, 787
 67: Proposed new airstrip in Little Cayman, 861

Audit

12: Audit of the Telecommunications Department, 489
 29: Audit on the Public Financial Assistance, 603

Cayman Airways Limited

30: Utilisation of CAL third aircraft, 617
 31: Cost of CAL third aircraft, 620

- 32: Update on CAL cargo service, 620
- 33: Number of flight attendants employed by CAL, by nationality, 622
- 75: Cayman Airways' Business Plan, 907
- 76: Pension benefits for long-serving Caymanian employees of Cayman Airways, 912

Cayman Islands Monetary Authority

- 47: Consideration to making the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority the regulatory body for commercial interest rates in the Cayman Islands, 759
- 85: New employees to be hired by the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority, 931

Cemetery

- 72: Acquisition of additional property for the extension of the Bodden Town Cemetery, 903

Civil Service

- 27: Appointment of Anomalies Committee to deal with civil servants posts which remain "red circled", 580

Community Development

- 59: Replacement of Community Development Officer for Bodden Town District, 818

Drug Abuse Prevention

- 13: Strategies implemented to deter substance abuse among school children since the publication of the Drug use Survey, 489

Education

- 2: Additional classrooms for BT Primary School, 454 (deferred), 515
- 3: Number of teachers and teachers' aides employed at the Savannah Primary School, 454 (deferred), 515
- 4: Establishment of a third high school on Grand Cayman, 455
- 5: Qualifications for teachers' aides in government primary schools, 457
- 6: Update on multi-disciplinary study being conducted by CH2M Hill, 469
- 9: Projected enrolment for government primary schools on Grand Cayman, 475
- 10: Number of new students enrolled for the September term at the Government High and Middle Schools, 477
- 11: Provision of a pre-school in the district of NS, 478
- 15: Implementation of after-school programmes in NS, EE and BT, since PMM 1/99, 492
- 18: Policy regarding issuance of government scholarships, 516
- 25: To provide an update on the classrooms now under construction at the Savannah Primary School, 559
- 34: Requirements needed to graduate from JGHS, 655
- 35: Terms of reference for the Millet Report, 657
- 36: Completion of the Millet Report, 658
- 70: Government's policy regarding reimbursement of expenses to civil servants studying at the Community College of the Cayman Islands, 902
- 74: Completion of the National (Education) Curriculum, 906
- 66: Number of Caymanian teachers in public sector since January 1999, 860
- 73: Update on work carried out to the Bodden Town and Savannah Primary Schools over the summer holidays, 904
- 80: Number of Caymanian graduates of the Cayman Islands Law School for 2000, 920

Finance

- 45: Update on the on-going financial reforms, 746
- 46: System in place to determine the actual cost of any government project, 748
- 83: The most recent figures on GDP and per capita income of the Cayman Islands, 927
- 84: Appointment of a Government "Think Tank" Committee, 928

Fire Station

- 51: Consideration for construction of a sub-fire station in the district of Bodden Town, 785

Gang Related Behaviour

- 8: Strategies presently employed to eliminate gang behaviour in high schools on Grand Cayman, 472

Health/Insurance

- 23: Government's policy regarding investigation into the current medical insurance companies, 542 (deferred), 616
- 58: Provide details of complaints received from Caymanians against services received from Baptist Hospital since January 1998, 817
- 61: Expiration date of contract with Baptist Hospital, 819
- 62: Reconsideration of medical referral agreement with the Baptist Hospital, 857
- 68: Registered nurses at Faith Hospital working double 8-hour shifts, 900
- 69: Employment of nurses at Faith Hospital, 901

Hurricane Shelter

- 79: Status of hurricane shelter in Little Cayman, 919
- 82: Opening of new Civic Centre/Hurricane Shelter located next to the Community College, 926

Immigration

- 42: Caymanian status to athletes, 750
- 43: Government's policy regarding foreign nationals convicted of serious crimes in the Cayman Islands, 743
- 44: Establishment of any agreements re information exchanges on deportees from other jurisdictions, 745
- 78: List of most recipients of the grant of Caymanian Status given by Executive Council, 916
- 81: List of most recent recipients of Caymanian status as given by Executive Council, 926

Information Technology

- 86: Policy adopted by the government regarding IT entities/e-businesses using the word, bank as a part of its name, 937

Labour Relations

- 63: Complaints from employees of the Cayman Resort Hotels to the Labour Department, 896
- 64: Government's position on the establishment of the National Alliance of Cayman Islands Employees (NACE), 897
- 65: Protection of government workers by the Labour Law, 898

Pedro St. James

- 26: Projected revenue and operational cost for Pedro St. James for 2000 and figures for 1999, 577

Police

- 39: Staff complement of the RCIP, by rank and nationality, 669
- 40: RCIP's policy where complaints of harassment are reported against family members, 707
- 41: RCIP procedure upon receipt of serious threats and intimidation by family members, 708

Port Authority

- 38: Update on proposed extension of the GT Port, 670

Prison

- 77: Explanation of the present parole system for prisoners, 913

Roads

- 16: Progress on erecting light-reflecting signs, 514 (deferred)
- 17: Government's plans to develop farm roads in BT, EE and NS, 514
- 19: Road works and other government projects undertaken in WB, 537

- 20: Consideration of a Litter Task Force, 539
- 21: Change of name for the road called “Harquail Bypass”, 540 (deferred), 599
- 52: List of road works carried out in Bodden Town since the beginning of this year-to-date, 786
- 57: Assessing traffic problem in the vicinity of Newlands Road and Tall Tree, 816

Social Services

- 7: Purchase of property for the relocation of the Sunrise Centre, 471
- 53: Update on PMM18/99—Assistance for the Physically Challenged, 786
- 60: Update on North Side Senior Citizens’ Centre, 818

Taxis

- 24: Government’s present policy regarding eligibility to acquire omnibus licences, 557

Tourism

- 22: Department of Tourism’s advertising campaign for the 2000 winter season, 540 (deferred), 601
- 37: Objective of the Tourism Department in hosting country music shows, 661

Trade & Business License

- 71: Update on the Trade and Business License applications of the two oil companies, 902

Turtle Farm

- 1: Production level of turtle meat at the Turtle Farm for the past four years at the present state of the breeding stock, 453

Water Authority

- 49: List the total staff complement of the Water Authority by nationality and job description, 781
- 50: State whether the sewage treatment facility is functioning at its optimum efficiency, 782
- 56: Status of the Grand Cayman Waste Water Treatment Works Project, 811

Parliamentary Questions—Numerically (See also: Parliamentary Questions by Category)

- 1: Production level of turtle meat at the Turtle Farm for the past four years at the present state of the breeding stock, 453
- 2: Additional classrooms for BT Primary School, 454 (deferred), 515
- 3: Number of teachers and teachers’ aides employed at the Savannah Primary School, 454 (deferred), 515
- 4: Establishment of a third high school on Grand Cayman, 455
- 5: Qualifications for teachers’ aides in government primary schools, 457
- 6: Update on multi-disciplinary study being conducted by CH2M Hill, 469
- 7: Purchase of property for the relocation of the Sunrise Centre, 471
- 8: Strategies presently employed to eliminate gang behaviour in high schools on Grand Cayman, 472
- 9: Projected enrolment for government primary schools on Grand Cayman, 475
- 10: Number of new students enrolled for the September term at the government High and Middle Schools, 477
- 11: Provision of a pre-school in the district of NS, 478
- 12: Audit of the Telecommunications Department, 489
- 13: Strategies implemented to deter substance abuse among school children since the publication of the Drug use Survey, 489
- 14: Withdrawn, 492
- 15: Implementation of after-school programmes in NS, EE and BT since PMM 1/99, 492
- 16: Progress on erecting light-reflecting signs, 514 (deferred)
- 17: Government’s plans to develop farm roads in BT, EE and NS, 514

- 18: Policy regarding issuance of government scholarships, 516
- 19: Road works and other government projects undertaken in WB, 537
- 20: Consideration of a Litter Task Force, 539
- 21: Change of name for the road called “Harquail Bypass”, 540 (deferred), 599
- 22: DOT advertising campaign for the 2000 winter season, 540 (deferred), 601
- 23: Government’s policy regarding investigation into the current medical insurance companies, 540 (deferred), 616
- 24: Government’s present policy regarding eligibility to acquire omnibus licences, 557
- 25: To provide an update on the classrooms now under construction at the Savannah Primary School, 559
- 26: Projected revenue and operational cost for Pedro St. James for 2000 and figures for 1999, 577
- 27: Appointment of Anomalies Committee to deal with civil servants posts which remain “red circled”, 580
- 28: Steps undertaken to prevent the infestation of the Cayman Islands of formosa termites, 603
- 29: Audit on the Public Financial Assistance, 603
- 30: Utilisation of CAL third aircraft, 617
- 31: Cost of CAL third aircraft, 620
- 32: Update on CAL cargo service, 620
- 33: Number of flight attendants employed by CAL, by nationality, 622
- 34: Requirements needed to graduate from JGHS, 655
- 35: Terms of reference for the Millet Report, 657
- 36: Completion of the Millet Report, 658
- 37: Objective of the Tourism Department in hosting country music shows, 661
- 38: Update on proposed extension of the GT Port, 670
- 39: Staff complement of the Royal Cayman Islands Police, by rank and nationality, 669
- 40: RCIP policy where complaints of harassment are reported against family members, 707
- 41: RCIP procedure upon receipt of serious threats and intimidation by family members, 708
- 42: Caymanian status to athletes, 750
- 43: Government’s policy regarding foreign nationals convicted of serious crimes in the Cayman Islands, 743
- 44: Establishment of any agreements re information exchanges on deportees from other jurisdictions, 745
- 45: Update on the on-going financial reforms, 746
- 46: System in place to determine the actual cost of any government project, 748
- 47: Consideration to making the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority the regulatory body for commercial interest rates in the Cayman Islands, 759
- 48: Withdrawn, 761
- 49: List the total staff complement of the Water Authority by nationality and job description, 781
- 50: State whether the sewage treatment facility is functioning at its optimum efficiency, 782
- 51: Consideration for construction of a sub-fire station in the district of Bodden Town, 785
- 52: List of road works carried out in Bodden Town since the beginning of this year-to-date, 786
- 53: Update on PMM18/99—Assistance for the Physically Challenged, 786
- 54: Update on the propose resurfacing of the Gerrard Smith Airport, 787
- 55: Withdrawn, 811
- 56: Status of the Grand Cayman Waste Water Treatment Works Project, 811
- 57: Assessing traffic problem in the vicinity of Newlands Road and Tall Tree, 816
- 58: Provide details of complaints received from Caymanians against services received from Baptist Hospital since January 1998, 817
- 59: Replacement of Community Development Officer for Bodden Town District, 818

- 60: Update on North Side Senior Citizens' Centre, 818
- 61: Expiration date of contract with Baptist Hospital, 819
- 62: Reconsideration of medical referral agreement with the Baptist Hospital, 857
- 63: Complaints from employees of the Cayman Resort Hotels to the Labour Department, 896
- 64: Government's position on the establishment of the National Alliance of Cayman Islands Employees (NACE), 897
- 65: Protection of government workers by the Labour Law, 964, 898
- 66: Number of Caymanian teachers in public sector since January 1999, 860
- 67: Proposed new airstrip in Little Cayman, 861
- 68: Registered nurses at Faith Hospital working double 8-hour shifts, 900
- 69: Employment of nurses at Faith Hospital, 901
- 70: Government's policy regarding reimbursement of expenses to civil servants studying at the Community College of the Cayman Islands, 902
- 71: Update on the trade and business licence applications of the two oil companies, 902
- 72: Acquisition of additional property for the extension of the Bodden Town Cemetery, 903
- 73: Update on work carried out to the Bodden Town and Savannah Primary Schools over the summer holidays, 904
- 74: Completion of the National (Education) Curriculum, 906
- 75: Cayman Airways' Business Plan, 907
- 76: Pension benefits for long-serving Caymanian employees of Cayman Airways, 912
- 77: Explanation of the present parole system for prisoners, 913
- 78: List of most recipients of the grant of Caymanian Status given by Executive Council, 916
- 79: Status of the new hurricane shelter in Little Cayman, 919
- 80: Number of Caymanian graduates of the Cayman Islands Law School for 2000, 920
- 81: List of most recent recipients of Caymanian status as given by Executive Council, 926
- 82: Opening of new Civic Centre/Hurricane Shelter located next to the Community College, 926
- 83: The most recent figures on GDP and per capita income of the Cayman Islands, 927
- 84: Appointment of a Government "Think Tank" Committee, 928
- 85: New employees to be hired by the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority, 931
- 86: Policy adopted by the government regarding IT entities/e-businesses using the word, bank as a part of its name, 937

Pierson, Mr. Linford A.,

- Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 636
- Capt. E.L. Solomon's Subdivision off Eastern Avenue (PMM 25/00), 791
- Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 300
- Debate on the Throne Speech, 94, 101, 111
- Public Education System (PMM 14/00), 586, 606

Presentation of Papers and Reports:

- 1999 Annual Report of the Central Planning Authority and Development Control Board Cayman Islands Government (Hon. Truman Bodden), 879
- Annual Report of the National Drug Council for the year ending 30 June 1999 and the National Drug Council Financial Statements for year ended 30 June 1999 (Hon. Anthony S. Eden), 880
- Annual Report of the National Trust for the Cayman Islands year ended 31 August 1999 (Hon. John B. McLean), 373
- Cayman Airways Limited Financial Statements 31st December 1998 (Hon. Truman Bodden), 391
- Cayman Islands Monetary Authority Annual Report 1998 (Hon. George A. McCarthy), 373
- Cayman Islands National Youth Policy (Hon. J. O'Connor-Connolly), 893

- Cayman Islands Public Pensions Board Actuarial Valuation of Public Service Pensions as of January 1999 (Hon. George A. McCarthy), 374
- Cayman Islands Turtle Farm (1983) Limited Financial Statements dated 31st March 1999 of (Hon. John B. McLean), 707
- Financial Statement of the Cayman Islands Stock Exchange Limited for the year ended 31 December 1998 (Hon. George A. McCarthy), 615
- Financial Statements of the Cayman Islands Government for the Year ended 31 December 1998 (Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson), 881
- Financial Statements of the Community College of the Cayman Islands 31st December 1999 and 1998 (Hon. Truman M. Bodden), 895
- Financial Statements of the Public Service Pension Fund for the years ended 31st December 1996, 1997 and 1998 (Hon. George A. McCarthy), 616
- HMP Northward Strategic Plans Document and the HMP Northward Inmate Development and Rehabilitation Programmes (Hon. Donovan Ebanks), 743
- Report & Recommendation of the Minister responsible for lands for the proposed vesting of Block 77A, Parcel 48 (Hon. John B. McLean), 615
- Report & Recommendation of the Minister responsible for lands relating to the proposed disposition of GT, Block 14C, Parcel 40 (Hon. John B. McLean), 615
- Report of the Auditor General on the Financial Statements of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the year ended 31 December 1998 (Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson), 882
- Report of the Public Accounts Committee on the Report of the Auditor General on the Audited Accounts of the Government for the year ended 31st December, 1998 (Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.), 882
- Royal Cayman Islands Police Service Annual Report 1999 (Hon. Donovan Ebanks), 893
- Traffic Ticket Regulations, 2000 (Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson), 880

Private Members' Motions:

- No. 1/00—Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes
 Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 259
 Bodden, Mr. Roy, 255
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeever, 261
 Jefferson, Mr. John D. Jr., (Mover), 251, 274
 McField, Dr. Frank, (Seconder), 251, 264, 267
 Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 269
- No. 2/00—Public Access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach Bodden, Mr. Roy, 278
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeever, (Seconder), 276, 279
 Ebanks, Mr. D. Dalmain, 278
 Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C., 278
 Jefferson, Mr. John D, Jr. (Mover), 275, 276, 280
- No. 4/00—Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers
 Bodden, Mr. Roy, (Seconder), 282, 288
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeever (Mover), 282, 291
 Eden, Hon. Anthony, 283
 Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., 287
 McField, Dr. Frank, 290
- No. 5/00—Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison Amendment thereto (Moved by Hon. James Ryan), 297
 Bodden, Hon. Truman, 300, 329
 Bodden, Mr. Roy (Mover), 297, 298, 303, 335

- Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, (Secunder), 297, 299, 332
 Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., 326
 McField, Dr. Frank, 299, 314, 317
 Pierson, Mr. Linford A., 300
 Ryan, Hon. James M., 297, 298, 302, 310
 Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 301
- No. 6/00—Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account Amendment thereto (Moved by Hon. Thomas Jefferson), 344
 Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 346, 347, 366, 375
 Bodden, Miss Heather D., 393
 Bodden, Mr. Roy, (Secunder), 344, 347, 384
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 345, 359
 Eden, Hon. Anthony S., 423
 Jefferson, Hon. Thomas, 344, 348, 399, 409
 Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., 348, 394
 McField, Dr. Frank, 345, 381
 O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Juliana, 420
 Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt (Mover), 343, 345, 349, 353, 424
- No. 7/00—Exgratia Payment Beneficiaries
 Amendment thereto (No. 1), 721
 Amendment thereto (No. 2), 724
 Bodden, Mr. Roy (Secunder), 721, 723
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva (Mover), 721, 725
 Eden, Hon. Anthony S., 722, 723
 Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., 722
 O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna, 724, 725
- No. 8/00—Watersports Concessions at major hotels
 Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 766
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva (Secunder), 764, 766
 Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr. (Mover), 764, 767
- No. 9/00—Retirement pay for senior citizen employees
 Amendment thereto, 727
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 728, 729
 Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., (Mover), 726, 727, 728, 729
 McField, Dr. Frank (Secunder), 726
 Moyle, Mrs. Edna, 728
 O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna, 728
- No. 10/00—Establishment of a “Safe House” for battered women and children
 Bodden, Miss Heather D. (Mover), 730, 763
 Bodden, Mr. Roy, 761
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 741
 Eden, Hon. Anthony S., 762
 McField, Dr. Frank, 738
 Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Secunder) 730, 737
 O'Connor-Connolly, Hon. Julianna, 735
 Tibbetts, Mr. Kurt D., 762
- No. 11/00—In-depth discussion on increased interest/electrical rates
 Bodden, Mr. Roy, 716
 Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva (Mover), 714, 719

- McCarthy, Hon. George A., 715
- McLean, Hon. John B., 719
- Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Secunder), 714
- Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 718
- No. 12/00—Environment Study to determine the long term effects of aerial spraying and landfill leakage
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy (Mover), 482, 485
 - McLean, Hon. John B., 485
 - Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Secunder), 482
- No. 13/00—Conflict of Interest Legislation
 - Amendment thereto, 458
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy, (Secunder), 458, 461
 - Eden, Hon. Anthony S., 461
 - Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, (Mover), 458, 459, 460, 465
- No. 14/00—Public Education System
 - Amendment thereto, 612
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 532, 541, 612, 624, 664
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy (Secunder), 507, 526, 628
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeewa, 566
 - Jefferson, Mr. John D., 570, 583
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 550, 560, 627
 - Pierson, Mr. Linford A., 586, 606
 - Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt (Mover), 507, 522, 664, 667, 711
- No. 15/00—Wetlands
 - Amendment thereto, 497
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy (Secunder), 493, 498
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 494
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeewa, 504
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 501
 - Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Mover), 493, 505
- No. 16/00—Rights for illegitimate children and parents of illegitimate children, (withdrawn)
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy (Mover), 506
 - Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Secunder), 506
- No. 17/00—Government Financial Assistance for Low Cost Housing
 - Amendment thereto, 829
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeewa, 834
 - Jefferson, Mr. John D. Jr., (Mover), 829, 835
 - McField, Dr. Frank (Secunder), 829, 832
 - McLean, Hon. John B., 832
- No. 18/00—Debate on issues in the draft 1992 Constitution
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy, 800
 - Jefferson, Mr. John D. Jr., (Secunder), 795, 803
 - McField, Dr. Frank (Mover), 795, 803
- No. 19/00—Purchase of Property
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeewa (Mover), 794
 - McLean, Hon. John B., 794
 - Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Secunder), 794
- No. 20/00—Public Utilities Commission
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 850

- Bodden, Mr. Roy (Mover), 843, 852
- Jefferson, Mr. John D., 846
- No 20/00 (continued)
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 851
 - McLean, Hon. John B., 845
 - Moyle, Mrs. Edna (Secunder), 843
 - Tibbetts, Mr. Kurt D., 846
- No. 21/00—Establishment of a Student Summer Employment Agency
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 869
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy (Mover), 864, 873
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 870
 - Tibbetts, Mr. Kurt (Secunder), 864, 871
- No. 22/00—Revised Guidelines for the Award of Government Scholarships
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 809, 820
 - Bodden, Miss Heather D., 824
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy, 822
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva (Secunder), 805, 808
 - Jefferson, Mr. John D. Jr., (Mover), 804, 805, 825
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 824
- No. 23/00—Gross Domestic Product
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva (Mover), 875, 877
 - McCarthy, Hon. George A., 875
 - Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt (Secunder), 875
- No. 24/00—Mortgage Assistance
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy (Secunder), 836, 838
 - Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva (Mover), 836, 837, 840
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 837
 - O'Connor-Connolly, Julianna, 837
- No. 25/00—Capt. E.L. Solomon's Subdivision off Eastern Avenue
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 791
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy, (Secunder) 789
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 791
 - McLean, Hon. John B, 791
 - Pierson, Mr. Linford A., 791
 - Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, (Mover), 789, 792

Proclamation No. 2/00, 1

Raising of Matters for which Government has Responsibility (SO 11(6))

- Disruption of Flight Schedule of Cayman Airways Limited
 - Tibbetts, Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 200
 - Bodden, Hon. Truman (reply thereto), 207
- Escaped Prisoner
 - Bodden, Mr. Roy, 293
 - Ryan, Hon. James, M (reply thereto), 294
- Immigration Board's Policy re: Jamaican Nationals
 - McField, Dr. Frank, 231
 - Ryan, Hon. James M(reply thereto), 233
- 20 Percent Tax on Cayman Netnews

Bodden, Mr. Roy, 486
Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C. (reply thereto), 487
McCarthy, Hon. George A., 487

Government Scholarship Grants

Bodden, Hon. Truman M. (reply thereto), 509
Jefferson, Mr. John D., Jr., 509

Property in Goatyard, Boatswain Bay

Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 973
Jefferson, Mr. John D. Jr., 974

Raising of an urgent public matter (SO 12(2))

Advisory issued by the United States Treasury

Ballantyne, Hon. David F., 651
Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 647
Bodden, Miss Heather D., 651
Bodden, Mr. Roy, 642
Bush, Mr. W. McKeeva, 631, 652
Eden, Hon. Anthony S., 648
Jefferson, Hon. Thomas C., 648
McCarthy, Hon. George A., 631
McField, Dr. Frank, 643
Moyle, Mrs. Edna M., 650
Pierson, Mr. Linford A., 636
Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 645

Ryan, Hon. James M.,

Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 297, 298, 302, 310
Debate on the Throne Speech, 238
Escaped Prisoner (Reply to Raising of Matters under SO 11(6)), 294
Immigration Board's Policy re: Jamaican Nationals (Rely to Raising of Matters under SO 11(6)), 233
Immigration Issues, 131

Speaker's/Deputy Speaker's Announcements and Rulings

Commonwealth Day Message, 181
House Visitors
 Grace Christian Academy, 469
 Wesleyan Holiness School, 233
Letter from Honourable Speaker, 181
Member ordered to withdraw unparliamentary expression, 255
Obituary
 Foster, Mr. Michael, 451
 Knowlton, Mrs. Sharon, 451
Ruling on point of order, 132
Ruling on SO 25(4), 610
Speaker's Casting Vote (SO 42(2)), 480, 482
Statement on procedures, 453
Vote of thanks, 451

Statements by Members

- Caymanian Compass Editorial re: Length of Time Spent in Chamber by MLAs (Bodden, Mr. Roy), 181
- Ironwood Scholarship Fund (Moyle, Mrs. Edna), 828
- Unfinished business of the House
 - Moyle, Mrs. Edna, 975
 - Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt, 974
- Academic probation policy at Triple C School (Hon. Truman M. Bodden), 779
- Immigration Issues (Ryan, Hon. James, M.), 131
- Statement on the select committee of the whole House on the Immigration Law 1992; the Local Companies (Control) Law (1995 R); and the Trade and Business Licensing Law (1996 R) (Hon. David Ballantyne), 973

Throne Speech (See also: Debate on Throne Speech), 2

Tibbetts, Mr. D. Kurt,

- Advisory issued by the United States Treasury (Raising of matters SO 11(6)), 648
- Capt. E.L. Solomon's Subdivision off Eastern Avenue (PMM 25/00), 789, 792
- Concerns with the Occurrence at Northward Prison (PMM 5/00), 301
- Conflict of Interest Legislation (PMM No. 13/00), 458, 465
- Debate on the Throne Speech, 73, 87
- Disruption of Flight Schedule of Cayman Airways Limited, 200
- Establishment of a "Safe House" for battered women and children (PMM 10/00), 767
- Establishment of a Student Summer Employment Agency (PMM 21/00), 864, 871
- Gross Domestic Product (PMM 23/00), 875
- In-depth discussion on increased interest and electrical rates (PMM 11/00), 721
- Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account (PMM 6/00), 343, 345, 349, 353, 424
- Labour (A) Bill, 2000, 966
- Motion to debate Auditor General's Report (and the Public Accounts Committee's Report —SO 77(6) & (7)), 883, 886-888
- Proceeds of Criminal Conduct (A) (Money Laundering Regulations) Bill, 2000, 692
- Public Education System (PMM 14/00), 507, 522, 664, 667, 711
- Public Service Pensions (Amendment and Validation) Bill, 2000, 438
- Public Utilities Commission (PMM 20/00), 846
- Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-occupied Homes (PMM 1/00), 269
- Traffic (A) (Driving while intoxicated etc.) Bill, 2000, 942
- Unfinished business of the House, 974

Tributes paid to Hon. Speaker Kirkconnell upon his retirement:

- Bodden, Hon. Truman M., 979
- Bodden, Mr. Roy, 975
- Bush Mr. W. McKeeva, 976
- Eden Hon. Anthony S., 978
- Jefferson Mr. John D, Jr., 977
- Kirkconnell, Hon. Mabry S. Speaker, 975, 982
- McField Dr. Frank, 980

Moyle: Mrs. Edna M., 978
O'Connor-Connolly: Hon. Julianna, 975
Pierson: Mr. Linford A., 980
Ryan Hon. James M., 976
Tibbetts Mr. D. Kurt., 981

MEETING DATES AND PAGES

First Meeting—24 sittings

18 February through 13 April 2000, pp. 1 through 450

Second Meeting—16 sittings

7 June through 20 July 2000, pp. 451 through 780

Third Meeting— 6 sittings

6 through 18 September 2000, pp 781 through 984

Parliamentary Questions Answered in Writing included at the end of Volume II

~~~~

EDITED
STATE OPENING
FRIDAY
18 FEBRUARY 2000
9.45 AM

[Prayers read by Rev. Christopher Bailie]

The Speaker: Please be seated. The Legislative Assembly is in session. Proclamation.

PROCLAMATION NO. 2 OF 2000

The Clerk: Proclamation No. 2 of 2000 by His Excellency Peter John Smith, Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, Governor of the Cayman Islands.

"WHEREAS by subsection (1) of section 46 of Schedule 2 of the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order, 1972, it is provided that the Sessions of the Legislative Assembly shall be held at such time and place as the Governor may, from time to time, by Proclamation appoint;

"NOW THEREFORE, under and by virtue of the powers vested in me by the aforesaid Order, I, Peter Smith, Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, Governor of the Cayman Islands, do hereby proclaim and make known that a Session of the Legislative Assembly of the Cayman Islands shall be held in the Legislative Assembly Building in George Town, Island of Grand Cayman, at 10:00 AM, on Friday, the 18th day of February, Two Thousand.

"Given under my hand and the Public Seal of the Cayman Islands at George Town in the Island of Grand Cayman, this 15th day of February in the year of our Lord, Two Thousand, in the Forty-ninth year of the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. God Save the Queen."

The Speaker: Administration of Oaths or Affirmations. Mr. Adam Roberts to be the Acting Temporary Honourable Second Official Member.

Will all Honourable Members please stand? Will members of the gallery also please stand?

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS
OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Hon. Adam Roberts: I, Adam Roberts, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law. So help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Roberts, on behalf of all Honourable Members I welcome you to the Legislative Assembly for the time of your service. Please take your seat as the Acting Temporary Honourable Second Official Member.

Please be seated.

I will now entertain a motion for the suspension of this Honourable House. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

MOTION TO RISE AND AWAIT HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move that this House do rise to await His Excellency the Governor and reassemble on his arrival to receive a gracious message from the Throne.

The Speaker: I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House shall suspend to await the arrival of His Excellency the Governor.

AGREED: THAT THIS HOUSE DO RISE TO AWAIT HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR AND RE-ASSEMBLE, ON HIS ARRIVAL, TO RECEIVE A GRACIOUS MESSAGE FROM THE THRONE.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 9.51 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 10.00 AM

ARRIVAL OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR

The Governor's aide-de-camp gave three knocks on the door.

The Serjeant-at-Arms: His Excellency the Governor.

Procession:
*Serjeant-at-Arms
The Speaker
His Excellency the Governor
Mrs. Smith
The aide-de-camp
The Clerk of the Legislative Assembly
The Deputy Clerk*

His Excellency the Governor: Please be seated.

The Speaker: Your Excellency, I invite you to address this Legislative Assembly.

THE THRONE SPEECH
Delivered by
His Excellency the Governor
Mr. Peter John Smith, CBE

Honourable Speaker, Honourable Members of the Legislative Assembly, it is with great honour, respect, and no little humility, that I present my first speech from the Throne.

I have been since arrival extremely impressed with the spread and depth of excellence and quality in so many facets of the national life here in Cayman, all wholly in keeping with Cayman's status as a major player in international finance and a top destination for tourism. I must add that the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meeting held here last year reflected a most enormous credit on all those in the Public Service who were instrumental in ensuring its success.

With this wider success come responsibilities which include being aware of the implications outside Cayman of developments and trends within it. Because we depend so heavily on external investment, business and tourism, we in return have to be sure that we are taking into consideration external perceptions of what happens here at home.

On the home front, there will be positive developments very shortly in Immigration with the Work Permits system, improvements to the Parole system, developments with regard to Community Service and Alternative Sentencing and these are all moves in the right direction.

There has been concern about the health of the National Strategic Plan under the Vision 2008 logo. I have decided to appoint an Executive Director of the Vision programme with a specific mandate over the next 6-8 months to monitor what is already underway within the system, ensure that the right priorities are observed for the next round, co-ordinate the broad sweep of Action Plans covering more than one Ministry, and to produce finally a comprehensive report with detailed recommendations on the sort of organisation needed to take the Vision programme forward in the longer term.

For the Public Service, this should be a year of consolidation after the various initiatives of the past few years. I have already requested the preparation of draft legislation for the creation of a position of Ombudsman, a post I hope can be in place by the end of the year. The Ombudsman would be the point of reference for all complaints of Public mal-administration. We have a good Public Service, and I am sure they will welcome this additional element of accountability for those people whom we seek to serve across the Cayman Islands. It is the Caymanian way to resolve difficulties and differences of opinion through consensus and dialogue rather than confrontation, and that is very much the way that I wish us to work together for the future.

Let me now proceed to report on the activities and intentions of the various Ministries, Portfolios and Departments.

---

THE JUDICIARY

---

In both the Grand Court and Summary Court criminal cases have been disposed of so that there is no longer a significant backlog.

The Sentencing Advisory Committee established by the Chief Justice has submitted its recommendations on the Community Service Scheme to my office for promulgation and further consideration.

---

PORTFOLIO OF INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

---

The general election, in the Cayman Islands is scheduled to take place on 08th November 2000.

In April, the Elections Office will begin issuing voter registration cards, which will make voting an easier and quicker process. They will be colour-coded for each district, and will immediately confirm to election officials whether or not persons are voting in the correct electoral district.

This will also be the final year for Mr. Thomas Russell as the Cayman Islands Government Representative in the United Kingdom. He retires in August. We thank Mr. Russell for his many years of service to the Cayman Islands.

The Portfolio will be organising a full briefing for his successor Mrs. Jennifer Dilbert, the first Caymanian to hold that position.

THE ROYAL CAYMAN ISLANDS POLICE

This year, every district of Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac will enjoy 24-hour police patrol cover. The Police Station in Little Cayman will be completed and a police officer will be posted there permanently with a 24-hour responsibility. Each district will produce a policing plan for the coming year.

Community policing will be progressed and by continued civilianisation of the important but 'backroom' duties of constables, a further eight trained and experienced officers will be released for community duty, taking the total to 22. It is planned to recruit 24 Police Officers from the United Kingdom to strengthen the Police and to seek to reduce crime.

A pilot scheme of cycle patrols will be introduced and assessed, and police school liaison will be increased. A constable will be attached to each high school to raise awareness of students to crime and its effects.

The Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE) programme will be piloted in schools by the police who will also continue supporting other school programmes, particularly QUEST lifestyle training.

A Family Protection Unit, comprised of police officers, but with support from other relevant agencies, will be established. In all spheres of policing activity, the RCIP Service will seek to work in partnership with Government, Commerce, voluntary organisations, the Chamber of Commerce, and the "Crime Stoppers" and, particularly, the Special Constabulary, to make this year as crime free as possible.

THE PRISON DEPARTMENT

Although the events at Northward Prison have been painful and at times distressing for all concerned, the prison authorities are making a determined effort to implement changes recommended in the reports and inquiries arising out of the various incidents.

Staff recruitment and training are critical issues. Twenty trained Prison Officers have been recruited from the United Kingdom. The Prison Officer cadre is being re-formed and greatly strengthened and there is an ambitious forward-looking programme of training in place. An experienced training officer will ensure that staff are equipped with the right skills, not only to carry out their duties humanely and efficiently but also in relation to rehabilitation.

The valuable partnerships formed between the prison and other organisations and agencies have given a new impetus and an added dimension to rehabilitation efforts. Many service clubs including, but not exclusively, Rotary, Kiwanis and Leo's, have generously given of their time and talent, and the Education and Social Service Departments have been especially helpful in providing teachers and counsellors to reinforce the prison education programme.

IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT

This year the Immigration Department, faced with additional challenges as a result of the continuous growth of the Cayman Islands economy, will continue to expand its physical and administrative capacities to meet these additional demands.

Additionally, administrative systems must be enhanced to ensure that they remain in concert with the needs and aspirations of the Caymanian community. To achieve this objective, there will have to be continuous dialogue between government, the business community and the community as a whole.

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION SERVICES

This year, GIS will take a more customer-focused approach to the delivery of information. Among planned initiatives, the GIS Journal will be re-focussed to address issues as they emerge, and for the civil service as a whole media relations courses will be offered again with the support of one-on-one coaching in the unit's television section.

PERSONNEL DEPARTMENT

The Department's objectives include:

- The development of Civil Service core values;
- capacity building;
- defining competencies and standards;
- the delivery of targeted training;

- introducing a reward and recognition programme; and
- the provisions of a Masters Degree in Public Administration and a professional practice course in Personnel Management.

Preliminary work is underway to introduce an Assessment and Development Centre to provide profile tests to assess civil servants potential for advancement. The implementation of career development plans and succession plans will continue to be a high priority. The Personnel Department will introduce programmes to train managers in coaching techniques, mentoring, and other human resource issues using the Integrated Resource Information System (IRIS).

The Department will undertake a comprehensive review of the job descriptions and wage structure for un-established posts.

The revision of General Orders and Public Service Commission Regulations will be completed.

Plans will be developed for the Public Service Commission to be served by a new Department dedicated to the Commission. This is one indication of the value I place on the neutrality of the civil service and the important role of the Public Service Commission. Transparency and accountability in both Departments will be enhanced by the separation.

COMPUTER SERVICES DEPARTMENT

Computer Services will continue to provide information technology consulting and implementation services to assist agencies in achieving their business objectives while supporting financial reform and development of the infrastructure necessary to support Government's e-commerce initiatives.

BROADCASTING DEPARTMENT

The Department of Broadcasting/Radio Cayman will mark its 25th year of offering a quality broadcast service to the Cayman Islands by new initiatives aimed at achieving a greater level of representation in the marketplace and producing more programmes that showcase the Caymanian culture and heritage.

---

PORTFOLIO OF LEGAL AFFAIRS

---

The Portfolio of Legal Affairs intends to proceed with the planning of a Resource Centre for Law comprising a centralised library, information technology facilities and database access for use by the Cayman Islands Law School, the Legal Department of the Attorney General's Chambers, the Legislative Drafting Section and the Law Revision Unit. It is hoped to include private sector participation and to enable the Judiciary to access materials as required.

It is intended to maintain the working relationships between the Law School and the Legal Department of the Attorney General's Chambers to encourage interaction and opportunities for law students in the Government Legal Service.

PORTFOLIO OF FINANCE AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development will continue to implement the next phase of the Integrated Resource Information System (IRIS) and by the end of 2000 will have installed a financial management system which will transform the way the Government carries out its business.

Other major projects for this year include:

- continuing to study and provide policy advice to government on the full implications of the OECD, G7 and EU initiatives, and to advise on governments response to these initiatives;
- continuing revision of the Public Finance and Audit Law, 1997;
- amending the Customs, Shipping Registry and Companies Laws and regulations;
- introducing wider securities regulation; and
- establishing the framework for ensuring the operational independence of the Monetary Authority.

BUDGET AND MANAGEMENT UNIT

The main objectives of the Budget and Management Unit for this year are:

- continuing to support the Financial Management Reforms;
- reviewing internally the organisation and staffing of the unit.

MARKETING AND PROMOTIONS

The Marketing and Promotions Unit continues its efforts in ensuring the accurate dissemination of information concerning Cayman's financial industry. A highlight of this year's programme will be the United Nations Off-shore Plenary, which Cayman will host in late March.

The primary focus of the conference will be to ensure the observance of international standards by centres engaging in financial services activities and to provide technical assistance in strengthening regulatory framework within countries demonstrating a commitment to such standards but lacking the resources to do so.

INTERNAL AUDIT UNIT

This year the Unit will implement a comprehensive 3-year plan that will continue to focus on government's revenue collection, management, and regulatory systems to ensure compliance with the Public Finance and Audit Law and Financial and Stores Regulations. The Unit will continue to review various departments' expenditure control and cash management systems.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSIONS BOARD

The Public Service Pensions Board is carrying out an actuarial valuation of the Public Service Pensions Fund. The Fund stood at approximately $59 million as at 31st December 1999. It is expected that this balance will increase through contributions and earnings to $76.4 million by year-end.

Other objectives for this year include:

- preparation of benefit statements for all participants;
- the ongoing development of the educational programme for Plan participants; and
- relocation of the offices of the Board.

CAYMAN ISLANDS STOCK EXCHANGE

The Exchange has consolidated its reputation in the international market place as a first class listing facility and continues to attract business from the world's leading financial institutions.

The Exchange will continue to pursue further international recognition to add to that received last year from the London Stock Exchange. The Exchange has published new rules for its broker members in January 2000, and will continue to conduct onsite inspections of existing broker members, in order to ensure that the Exchange meets international standards and the recognition criteria of overseas regulatory authorities.

CAYMAN ISLANDS MONETARY AUTHORITY

The Authority's main focus this year will be to continue the effective regulation of our financial industry, and to this end a Head of Banking should be in post by 1st May.

The Government remains firmly committed to ensuring the operational independence of the Monetary Authority.

ECONOMICS AND STATISTICS OFFICE

The focus of the Economics and Statistics Office this year will be the compilation and publication of data from the Census of Population and Housing undertaken on 10th October last year.

GENERAL REGISTRY

The General Registry's primary drive during this year will be the redesign of the computerised system in order to better facilitate existing statutory requirements, and to allow compliance with new requirements introduced through the Financial Management Initiative.

Also on the agenda is the computerisation of the Death and Marriage Registers.

SHIPPING REGISTRY

During this year, a wide range of new regulations under the Merchant Shipping Law, 1997 is to be submitted along with a new Marine Pollution Law.

Under Cayman's leadership as chairman of the Caribbean Port State Control Memorandum of Understanding, there will be active ongoing work to ensure safe ships and clean seas in the Caribbean region. As the Maritime Administration for the Cayman Islands, the Shipping Registry continues to promote quality standards in shipping both regionally and, by extension, globally.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The Payroll module of the new Integrated Resources Information systems (IRIS) was implemented in September 1999. Accounts Receivable and the Cash Management modules will be implemented this year.

Since January all group employees have been paid bi-monthly by direct deposit to their bank account instead of weekly.

Debt recovery continues to play a significant role in the work of the Treasury. As at 31st December 1999 debt recovery by the Debt collection Unit amounted to $3.9 million, an increase of $1.3 million over the last year.

CUSTOMS

For the first time ever, Customs revenue exceeded CI$100 million, with total receipts reaching CI$102.5 million in 1999. Cayman Brac's contribution to the total sum was in excess of CI$ 2 million, a significant amount considering that duty concessions are still in effect there.

Training of staff will remain a priority during the year with seminars and workshops designed to combat revenue fraud, enhance public relation skills and further improve levels of service to customers.

---

MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, COMMUNICATIONS, ENVIRONMENT & NATURAL RESOURCES

---

The main projects in the Ministry this year will be the completion of the:

- multi-disciplinary study on the provision of construction aggregate and fill material for the Cayman Islands (sometimes referred to as the North Sound Study). The contract has been awarded to CH2M HILL International and work has commenced and the report is due in December 2000.
- Petroleum Storage and Handling Review, being done by Four Elements Consultants with their final report expected by the middle of the year.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS AUTHORITY

The draft Telecommunications Bill has been further revised to include the establishment of a new Telecommunications Authority. This important legislation was recently commended by the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunications Union (ITU) as a model for other countries in the region. It is now expected to come into force later this year at which stage the proposed Telecommunications Authority will deal with licensing and regulatory matters.

9-1-1 EMERGENCY COMMUNICATIONS

Ongoing training is the focus this year of 911 which will be hosting a training course co-sponsored by the Pan American Health Organisation, open to all emergency services personnel to equip them to assist not only in the operations centre but out in the field.

AIDB/HDC

The availability of housing for lower income Caymanians continues to be a key priority area of the Ministry and the Government as a whole. Last year, the Ministry appointed a Committee to look into this housing issue and it is expected that the Committee will submit a report on its findings and recommendations by April.

As evidence of the Government's commitment to being more proactive in dealing with housing issues, CI$1 million was voted for the creation of a housing fund at the last meeting of this Legislative Assembly. Guidelines for the use of this housing fund are expected to be released by the Ministry in the near future.

The Ministry has appointed the Housing Development Corporation to act as executing agent in the administration of the Government Guaranteed Home Mortgage Scheme. The transfer of this responsibility to the HDC should take place by the end of the first quarter.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Department of Agriculture intends to exploit the theme "Learning from our past ... Building for the future" at the planned Millennium Agricultural Show scheduled for 8th March, 2000. This will be of a calibre like no other show has been in the past and will attempt to engage full participation from each of the three islands.

During this year construction of a slaughter facility that meets international standards will commence. Farm roads, which will improve access to agricultural land, will be constructed and the Department of Agriculture will conduct an Agricultural Census.

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT

This year the Department of Environment will implement a monitoring programme for Seven-Mile Beach, which will collect data needed to make management decisions regarding this important natural resource.

The Department will also complete preparation of draft comprehensive environmental legislation with which to address the environmental issues the Cayman Islands currently face.

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH

This year the Department of Environmental Health will begin preliminary site preparation for the new lined landfill proposed for Cayman Brac.

The Department will present an Alternative Systems Analysis to Government in March, which will address:

- current waste collection and disposal practices;
- projected growth in waste generation; and
- recommendations on how to manage waste in Grand Cayman in the future.

The upgrading of the waste collection fleet will allow the Department to develop a regular collection service for bulky wastes. This curbside collection programme will serve to replace the annual island-wide cleanup campaigns with more frequent removal of bulky items.

The Department will develop and implement a comprehensive surveillance programme for public and commercial swimming pools and spas, including preliminary steps toward operator certification.

MOSQUITO RESEARCH & CONTROL UNIT (MRCU)

The Mosquito Research & Control Unit will develop and introduce a more efficient type of aerial spraying system against biting mosquitoes, using extremely small amounts of insecticide and eliminating the need for a carrier such as diesel fuel. The Unit will also expand the use of solid larvicide pellets targeting the aquatic mosquito stages before they can emerge as biting insects.

The Department will also, during this year conduct a review of mosquito control services on the Sister Islands.

LANDS & SURVEY DEPARTMENT

This year will see the publication of the first ever Street Atlas of the Cayman Islands, and the launch of the Department's Website – initially to provide information about the Department and its services, then to deliver some of those services electronically, and finally to establish access to a National Land Information System.

POSTAL DEPARTMENT

Postal history will be made this year with the opening of two replacement post offices in Bodden Town and East End. Future plans include new replacement post offices at West End and Savannah.

The Post Office aims to capture the youth philatelic market through a stamp issue based on the popular United States Children Television Workshop "Sesame Street."

WATER AUTHORITY

The Water Authority will continue work on the East End Water Supply Extension this year and it is thought that piped water will be available up to Gun Bay by the end of this year, and will extend to Morritt's Tortuga Club by mid-2001.

Design work will continue on a water production and storage facility in North Side, which is expected to be operational by December 2001.

Construction of the Grand Cayman Wastewater Treatment Works to replace the existing waste stabilisation pond system behind the Government land fill site is expected to commence in June.

The high growth in demand for drinking water, averaging about 16% per year, requires that the Authority continue to invest in capital projects such as the Lower Valley Reverse Osmosis Plant Expansion, Cayman Brac Water Supply Expansion, and the North Side Water Works Project.

CAYMAN TURTLE FARM

The Farm will continue with the implementation of the Master Redevelopment Plan with upgrades to the visitor-areas being undertaken this year. Development of the Farm's website at www.turtle.ky will continue and a wider selection of the merchandise currently offered in the farm's retail store will be made available on-line.

---

MINISTRY OF TOURISM, COMMERCE, TRANSPORT AND WORKS

---

The Ministry having assumed responsibility for Electronic Commerce established an E-Commerce Advisory Board, which is comprised of public and private sector members.

The Board has been meeting weekly to provide input on our Electronic Translation Bill. It is the goal of the Ministry and the Board to present legislation at this meeting of the Legislative Assembly.

TOURISM DEPARTMENT

Efforts this year will focus on a renewed presence in the US market with emphasis placed on building and maintenance of relationships with key media and marketing partners.

Information Technology will focus on further enhancement of the Department of Tourism's Internet strategy. This e-business initiative will expand our current Internet communications infrastructure from just a consumer based information site to include specialised tools for Travel Trade and Media.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Capital Building Works:

The major capital building projects scheduled to be completed this year include:

- the male cell block extension at Northward Prison,
- Phase 1 of the Breakers Drug Rehabilitation Centre,
- the Bodden Town district post office,
- the Airport and Frank Sound district parks; and

- the West Bay public beach jetty and launching ramp.

Construction will also commence on the final phase of the new hospital project to provide new facilities for mental health, geriatric and hospice care.

Major new capital projects planned to commence this year include:

- office expansion to the Customs headquarters,
- Phase 2 of the Breakers drug rehabilitation facility;
- the East End Post Office;
- the West Bay civic centre and hurricane shelter,
- public washroom facilities at the Colliers public Beach;
- a hurricane resistant upgrade to the Owen Roberts International Airport for the Civil Aviation Authority permitting it to be used as a hurricane shelter; and
- irrigation systems to the Ed Bush and Truman Bodden sports complexes.

ROAD WORKS

The island-wide main road re-surfacing programme that commenced in 1999 will continue as will the programme of residential road improvements.

In the Capital Programme, Phase 1 of the Crewe Road Bypass that commenced last year will be completed, consisting of approximately 1.5 miles of road from near the Lions Centre running to the south end of Bobby Thompson Way. Improvements will be carried out also at the Crewe Road/North Sound Intersection and the Shamrock Road/South Sound Road Intersection.

Planning, design, gazetting and land acquisition will be carried out for two major sections of road, phase three of the Harquail Bypass from the Hyatt area to SafeHaven, and the Crewe Road Bypass to the Harquail Bypass Connector. Construction of these two roads will be carried out in 2001.

VEHICLE & EQUIPMENT SERVICES

This year the department will focus on improving customer service and giving improved value-for-money. Specific emphasis will be placed on reducing vehicle/equipment down time.

Construction of two additional bays of workshop space is expected to commence during the first quarter of this year and will allow for the more efficient preventative maintenance of large refuse collection vehicles and heavy-duty dump trucks.

FIRE SERVICE

The Fire Service attended and dealt effectively with 747 fires and other incidents in 1999.

It will continue to give priority to the development of its human resources and four Middle Managers and Supervisors will be attending advanced courses in fire fighting and rescue at institutions in the United Kingdom this year.

It is anticipated that land will be acquired this year in Bodden Town for the establishment of a sub-fire station for that area since the response time from the George Town and/or Frank Sound Stations is not considered acceptable.

PORT AUTHORITY

The Port Authority in Grand Cayman handled 235,000 tons of cargo last year, an increase of 6.3% over 1998.

Plans have been finalised to construct a billing office at the Cargo Distribution Centre. This will provide much needed space for staff and improve the Port Authority's customer service.

Engineering plans to expand the dock facility at George Town in accordance with the Port Master Development Plan and the results of the required environmental studies for this project were submitted to the relevant Government authorities for approval.

The increase in cargo area will total 5.9 acres at an estimated cost of $14.5 million, and the project will provide the physical facilities to accommodate the growth in cargo for the foreseeable future.

VEHICLE LICENSING UNIT

A 'satellite' unit is due to come on stream in Bodden Town in the middle of this year to provide greater convenience to the residents of Bodden Town, North Side and East End.

---

THE MINISTRY OF EDUCATION, AVIATION AND PLANNING

---

The revision of the Education Law 1983 has begun and it is hoped that the revision will reflect the increased emphasis on standards and accountability heralded by the introduction of the independent Schools Inspectorate, as well as the establishment of a National Curriculum, which is now well underway.

The Ministry intends to continue the National Training Initiative that began as a joint project with the Ministry of Community Development some years ago. A new Training Board will be convened to guide the formulation of a National Training Policy.

As part of this Initiative, the Ministry intends to set up a Career Advisory Centre which will expand on the services offered to high school graduates and others in the adult population. The Schools Careers Service will be strengthened and the Centre will also house the Secretary to the Education Council who administers the Council's Scholarship Scheme.

The Ministry is currently investigating the development of training standards, which establish goals towards which an organisation can work, and benchmarks against which progress can be measured.

The Ministry's Vision Office will actively promote a partnership between its Ministry and the private sector, and government generally, as it seeks to fulfill its part in Phase One of the 10 Year National Strategic Plan. The first project to come under this umbrella will be an Education Initiative entitled Cayman Public/Private Partnership In Education (CP3E) which is being spearheaded by the Department for International Development (DFID) (Caribbean) and seeks to encourage ways and provide models for private sector involvement in the public education system.

Cayman's CP3E which is already meeting will link the schools, both public and private, parents through the National PTA organisation, and the private sector through the Chamber of Commerce. In the early days the focus will be on preparing students for the world of e-Commerce. To this end, the Chamber's e-Commerce sub-committee on Education & Training will play an important part in developing partnerships in the area of information technology.

Growth management is the pivotal strategy in Vision 2008. It is hoped to convene a Growth Management Board that will expand on, and eventually supersede the Large Projects Advisory Board established a few years ago.

EDUCATION

The Education Department is continuing with the implementation of the Strategic Plan that was developed and approved in 1995, and held its annual update in 1999. Site based planning at all schools is continuing and the last two schools will finish their plans before the end of this school year.

The National Curriculum continues to be developed with Key Stage 3 and 4 being crafted in Maths, Science and Language Arts. Textbooks for years 1 - 6 have been developed in Social Studies and they should be ready for distribution to schools during this school year. A comprehensive plan for the inclusion of vocational education will be developed for those students not interested in a traditional college education.

Four Caymanian teachers are currently studying in the United States and the United Kingdom and will return to our schools in September with enhanced qualifications. High quality in-service training for all teachers remains a high priority.

The capital works programme is continuing with the completion of a number of projects including:

- the administration block at Red Bay Primary School;
- a two classroom block at East End Primary School;
- the school hall and hurricane shelter at John A Cumber School; and
- the kitchen facility at George Hicks High School will be operational before the end of the Easter term.

Plans have been drawn for two new primary schools and construction on one will commence during the summer of this year and the other will start in the spring of 2001. The Lighthouse School will open in the fall of this year and will be fully completed early in 2001. Development work has commenced for a new high school and plans will be initiated later in this year, with construction set to begin in 2001.

All Primary Schools on Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac have been air-conditioned and work will commence on finishing the air-conditioning of all secondary classrooms.

Education services have been initiated on Little Cayman. A trained teacher is holding regular classes for two children in space created in the Hurricane Shelter. This programme will enable workers with school age children to move to Little Cayman.

The Education Department has initiated a self-study as a prelude to inspection by an experienced United Kingdom inspector to take place in the second quarter of this year.

The Education service continues to meet the increasing challenges of a rising school population that is demonstrating more and more social problems that affect the society at large. School programmes are being expanded to include more before-school programmes as well as after-school activities.

Four schools are scheduled for inspection by the Schools Inspectorate during this year and it is anticipated that two schools will be re-visited to monitor developments pertaining to their action plans.

A Senior Management Training conference is planned for July and the appointment of an additional Senior Inspector, with expertise in special needs, is anticipated during the year.

Enrolment at the Community College of the Cayman Islands continues to grow with more than 225 students enrolled in the associate degree programme. These students are gaining ready admissions to overseas institutions and those attending American universities are awarded two years of advanced standing.

The Agriculture and Industrial Development Board (AIDB) continues to administer loans under the Ministry of Education's Guaranteed Student Loan Scheme and 129 students are presently on scholarships.

AVIATION

The Civil Aviation Authority will seek to implement various recommendations made by visiting aviation inspectors so as to further enhance the Authority's compliance with international standards and recommended practices. This will include the establishment of a Dangerous Goods Inspectorate, an in-house Telecommunications Maintenance unit and an Aeronautical Information Service office in Cayman Brac.

The express cargo business has increased significantly with five companies now operating between Grand Cayman and the United States. It is therefore intended to establish an exclusive express cargo facility to accommodate and service this type of operation.

The Gerard Smith International Airport runway rehabilitation project will be undertaken this year, involving a complete asphalt overlay of the runway taxiway and apron.

CAYMAN AIRWAYS LTD.

The new Cayman Airways schedule to become effective in April has tentatively scheduled 13 flights per week to Cayman Brac which will address the local markets' needs for day trips to and from Cayman Brac and will provide a much improved cargo service. This year Cayman Airways should fully repay the loan for one 737-200 aircraft and own it debt free. The third 737-200 aircraft enters into service shortly.

PLANNING

The Planning Department will continue to focus on improving the processing of development applications and making the everyday services it provides more readily available to the general public. The plan review process will be improved by the addition of a plans review examiner.

By introducing online services with the creation of a new departmental website many customers will be able to get information and service without having to make a trip to the Tower Building. This will enhance the efficiency of the department while creating a more enjoyable and timely experience for the customer. In the end, these new services will save time and money in development costs.

---

MINISTRY OF HEALTH, SOCIAL WELFARE, DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION AND REHABILITATION

---

The Ministry of Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation will continue to place emphasis on the implementation of the Strategic Plans for Health and for Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

The following legislation will be presented to the Legislative Assembly for approval:

- Revised Regulations to accompany the Health Services Fees Law 1999
- A revised Mental Health Law
- A revised Health Practitioners' Law and accompanying Regulations
- A revised Children Law and accompanying Regulations
- A revised Adoption Law

SECURE/REMAND/DRUG REHABILITATION YOUTH FACILITY

The Ministry will oversee the commencement of construction of a Secure/Remand/Drug Rehabilitation Youth Facility.

STRATEGIC FINANCIAL PLAN FOR THE HEALTH SERVICES DEPARTMENT

The Ministry will oversee the consolidation and implementation of a Strategic Financial Plan for the Health Services Department.

DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION AND REHABILITATION

Renovation of the main house of the Hawley Estate in Breakers will be completed and a residential treatment centre named Caribbean Haven, including a Half Way House facility and a day treatment programme, will be opened to serve the needs of addicted persons in the Cayman Islands.

Design planning will commence on a stand-alone counselling centre allowing more treatment options for addicted persons on Cayman Brac.

Efforts will continue with other agencies to enable the implementation of a programme to help eliminate drinking and driving.

The Cayman Islands Student Drug Use Survey, first administered in 1998, will be repeated this year by the National Drug Council (NDC) to identify any emerging or changing trends in order that policy may be set to address them.

The National Drug Council, with the co-operation of the Ministry of Sports, the Social Services Department and the Royal Cayman Islands Police (RCIP) will establish the first of five drug, alcohol and tobacco free youth centres where young people can spend time after school.

A solvent-abuse strategy will be implemented to identify problem-products and control access to them by potential abusers.

The National Drug Council will continue to ensure that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will participate in all programmes and initiatives.

HEALTH SERVICES

Emphasis will be placed on the Quality Assurance Programme and patient satisfaction programmes to enhance the quality of health care services provided to the community.

Construction of In-Patient Mental Health and Geriatric facilities will commence this year on the site of the Cayman Islands Hospital.

A Health Needs Assessment for the Cayman Islands will be conducted. The findings of the assessment will inform the Strategic Plan for Health.

The Health Services Department (HSD) will continue to promote health and well being through community health education programmes which will target particularly cancer, diseases of the circulatory systems, sexually transmitted diseases and other lifestyle related illnesses.

The establishment of the Cayman Islands Cancer Network will assist in the coordination of the wide spectrum of disciplines and voluntary organisations in providing care and treatment services for cancer patients.

The Health Services Department will significantly increase its revenue collection through enhanced staffing levels and improved computer systems in the Accounts Department. The Department will vigorously pursue outstanding debts in collaboration with the Treasury and the Legal Department.

Work will commence on the design plan for a new District Health Centre for George Town. The provision of Dental services and eye care services will continue to be strengthened.

The appointment of an Administrator for the Sister Islands Health Services will improve the efficiency of the administrative functions.

The appointment of a Human Resource Manager for the Health Services Department will improve the efficiency of the administrative functions relating to staffing and staff development.

SOCIAL WELFARE

The Social Services Department will direct the majority of their efforts to assist the children of the Cayman Islands in the following ways:

A comprehensive National Parent Training Programme will offer training to 15 foster parents once these have been recruited and approved.

Summer programmes with recreational, educational and cultural activities will be provided in August in every district of Grand Cayman and in Cayman Brac to help counteract inappropriate behaviour in juveniles.

The Department will provide 30 workshops and presentations to the community on such subjects as child abuse, domestic violence, child neglect and other social issues of concern.

The Department will set up two pilot projects for Adult Day Care in Bodden Town and North Side for up to 18 indigent, elderly and adult disabled persons.

The Department will provide aftercare services to 50 adults in areas such as counseling, work preparedness and follow-up after their release from prison in order to assist them to reintegrate into society and reduce the risk of re-offending.

---

MINISTRY OF COMMUNITY AFFAIRS, SPORTS, WOMEN, YOUTH AND CULTURE

CAYMAN BRAC AND LITTLE CAYMAN

Nature Tourism has been enhanced with the improvement of historic trails nature sites and wildlife areas. National park quality signs have been installed at various sites and access stairs on four historic trails up the north bluff face are now in place.

The Department of Tourism, Sister Islands Tourism Association (SITA), and Sister Islands Administration are marketing this new attraction, which I had the pleasure of opening on 29th January 2000. In early March a world-renowned photographer, writer and ornithologist will be visiting to assist in promoting the Nature Tourism aspects of Cayman Brac.

A further initiative to encourage back office work to be transferred from Grand Cayman to Cayman Brac will be proposed. A study is already underway to determine the feasibility of setting up an Informatics Centre in Cayman Brac.

The Police Station in Little Cayman will be completed by the end of June 2000 and the accommodations and workshops for the Public Works Department will also be completed this year.

COMMUNITY AFFAIRS

During this year the Ministry will liaise with the Ministry of Health to see how efforts can be combined to strengthen communities using the Community Development Officers, Community Development Action Committees and District Beautification Committees.

Monthly financial assistance to 574 ex-servicemen was increased in January 2000 from $250 per month to $400 per month.

CULTURE

In keeping with Vision 2008, the Ministry will establish a cultural policy to serve as a blueprint to cultural development. The Ministry will continue to ensure that Caymanian heritage is maintained and fostered throughout the school system, with the assistance of staff and volunteers at the National Gallery, National Cultural Foundation, The National Museum, and the Performing Arts Co-ordinator, the National Archive, teachers and assistants in the schools.

ART DEVELOPMENT

The third Arts Scholarship will be offered by the Ministry this year enabling the recipient to attend an accredited university to pursue an arts degree starting in the fourth quarter.

CAYMAN ISLANDS NATIONAL MUSEUM

This year will be a very busy year as the Museum implements its five-year strategic plan, celebrates its 10th Anniversary, and focuses on increased services. The Museum's 10th Anniversary in November will be celebrated with a new programme of exhibits, events, publications, and much more.

The year's key objectives will include providing a Traditional Thatchwork Apprenticeship Programme for Caymanian masters and apprentices, in conjunction with the National Gallery.

A Museum Education Plan will be drafted so as to complement the public and private schools' curriculum as well as continuing adult education.

CAYMAN NATIONAL CULTURAL FOUNDATION

The National Cultural Foundation will expand research and development for this year. Diverse cultural training programmes in the literary and performing arts will continue to be offered.

The fifth annual Cayfest will be held and a Cayman Contingent will travel to St. Kitts/Nevis to participate in Carifesta, the Caribbean Festival of Arts.

CAYMAN NATIONAL ARCHIVE

The National Archive's programmes to acquire, preserve, and give public access to the country's archival heritage will continue to grow during this year.

Dr. Michael Craton's preparation and revision of the history of the Cayman Islands will continue and arrangements will be made to publish the completed manuscript.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

This year, the Public Library will open a branch library in the newly renovated former town hall in Bodden Town, which will be open thirty hours per week and offer a collection of books, periodicals, audiocassettes and videocassettes for both adults and children.

A plan for future automation and networking within and between George Town Public Library and the satellite libraries in Cayman Brac, East End, North Side and Bodden town will be developed.

This year the Public Library Management Committee and Friends of the Library subcommittee will continue to explore all options for increasing the size of the George Town Public Library.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS

This year the National Gallery will continue to put emphasis on its educational mission through six exhibitions, 24-30 workshops, four to six slide/lecture presentations and three art events.

LABOUR AND LABOUR RELATIONS

The five Labour Tribunals have significantly reduced the backlog of unresolved complaints to the extent that the backlog could be cleared by the end of this year.

Project-Prepare activities towards the rehabilitation of prisoners were abruptly curtailed near the end of 1999 as a result of the troubles at Northward Prison. Some rehabilitative efforts have now resumed at the prison and it is planned to significantly increase classes in various skills as the situation returns to normal.

A Labour Inspector/Accountant's post has been approved. This officer will primarily deal with all establishments collecting gratuities to ensure compliance with the Law.

NATIONAL PENSION LEGISLATION

The Office of the Superintendent of Pensions will maintain and apply registration processes for new pension plans and renewal procedures for ongoing pension plans. It will create and maintain procedures to identify and penalise defaulters.

YOUTH

This year the Ministry will continue to develop a comprehensive National Youth Policy by refining the draft Policy and developing a Plan of Action for Implementation. The Government will facilitate the smooth transition from policy formulation to implementation by restructuring the existing Sports Office to become a Department of Youth and Sports, thereby acquiring the necessary resources to carry out the recommendations. It is expected that the National Youth Policy will be presented to the Legislative Assembly in June.

SPORTS

It is anticipated that this year will be a good one for sports both on the international and local scene. Internationally, we look forward particularly with eager anticipation to the Olympics Games in Sydney, Australia and our medal hopefuls. Locally, improvements in our field-maintenance programme and sporting programmes will continue to be made.

The Ministry will continue to develop and upgrade sporting and recreational facilities in Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac and will review and upgrade the National Sports Policy for the Islands.

Through its provision of full and partial sports scholarships and grants, receptions and awards ceremonies, as well as through the sponsorship of a Goodwill Ambassador for the Cayman Islands, the Ministry continues to promote sports and recognise the efforts of our athletes.

WOMEN

The Ministry will be undertaking this year the development of a National Policy on Gender Equity and Equality with the assistance of an External Advisor.

The Women's Resource Centre will continue to provide information and education to enhance the status of women and families by way of programmes and a monthly newsletter. In order to provide private rooms for clients and in response to the growth experienced over the past year, the Women's Resource Centre will be expanding into the adjacent office space.

CONCLUSION

Mr Speaker and Honourable Members, as I conclude my first Speech from the Throne, I should like to record my thanks to the many persons who were involved in providing me with the material for it.

As you embark on the First Meeting of the new Session of the Legislative Assembly, I pray that Almighty God will bless and guide your deliberations. May He always direct and prosper the people of these beautiful islands.

---

DEPARTURE OF
HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR

Serjeant-at-Arms (Mace-bearer)
The Speaker
His Excellency the Governor
Mrs. Smith

The aide-de-camp
The Acting Chief Justice
Mrs. Graham
Mrs. Kirkconnell
Minister

HOUSE RESUMED AT 10.57 AM

The Serjeant-at-Arms: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

I call upon the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment, and Natural Resources.

MOTION FOR DEFERRAL OF THE DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move the following motion:

“BE IT RESOLVED that this Honourable Legislative Assembly record its grateful thanks to His Excellency the Governor for the Address delivered at this meeting.

“BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the debate on the Address delivered by His Excellency the Governor be deferred until 23 February 2000.”

The Speaker: I shall put the question: Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The motion is passed.

AGREED: THAT THIS HONOURABLE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY RECORDS ITS GRATEFUL THANKS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR FOR THE ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE MEETING;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT THE DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS DELIVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR BE DEFERRED UNTIL WEDNESDAY, 23rd FEBRUARY 2000.

The Speaker: We have concluded the business on the Order Paper. I will now ask the Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning to move the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Wednesday, 23 February 2000, at 10:00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10:00 AM on Wednesday, 23 February 2000.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House stands adjourned until 10:00 am Wednesday.

AT 11.00 AM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 23 FEBRUARY 2000.

EDITED
WEDNESDAY
23 FEBRUARY 2000
10.25 AM

[Prayers read by the Elected Member for North Side]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economic Development, who will be arriving later this morning. The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture is overseas on official business.

Moving on to item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. Commencement of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, delivered on Friday, 18 February 2000.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

COMMENCEMENT OF DEBATE ON THE THRONE
SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER
J. SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN
ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suppose it is somewhat customary for me to lead off at these times.

I suppose it is appropriate to begin by saying that the speech delivered from the Throne by His Excellency the Governor, Mr. Peter John Smith, on 18 February 2000, was momentous in that it was the speech which sets the course of these islands into the 21st Century. Last year's Throne Speech led us up to that time; this speech leads us into that century. As a result, it should carry even greater significance, as there were several important things outlined, as well as a number of new challenges which the Cayman Islands must work toward surmounting.

It was also the first such speech for the Governor, and he remarked that he is impressed with the depth and breadth of excellence and quality of so many facets of national life here in the Cayman Islands. It seems that our way of life, our style, has left an impression upon him which, one could say, will not easily go away. Quite early in that speech he also cautioned that with success comes certain responsibilities, an allusion to the challenges he sees facing the Cayman Islands as we try to bridge the past with the present.

He outlined some of those developments. He talked about the concern that some members—myself included—had about the health of the National Strategic Plan under the Vision 2008 logo. So, I would like to take that as the formal launching point of my contribution to this throne speech.

The Vision 2008 exercise was embarked upon with, one could say, national enthusiasm. The results were widely accepted. They were certainly accepted by every honourable member of this House, and honourable members now look forward to the second phase, which is the implementation phase. I might add that is really the challenging phase because it is at this phase that we have to begin prioritising.

Clearly, planning is the first step. The most intricate, important and challenging step is the implementation of such plans, for it is in the implementation that we are beginning to quantify what the country is going to have to cough up in terms of money. As a result of being in a position to quantify the plans we have seriously to begin to prioritise and come up with a list of what goes in which order.

This is the challenge. The exercise conducted thus far has been relatively free of politics and political jockeying. I believe that for the country to achieve the best result, the implementation will have to continue on that course. So, it is incumbent upon us, particularly so for the successive government, that we arrive at a clear headed apolitical position that is unemotional when it comes to prioritising what we want for our country, particularly in the next eight years.

Those persons who had direct responsibility for spearheading the movement thus far should be complimented. Those persons who participated in the exercise in terms of questionnaires and verbal feedback should also be complimented. I hope that the enthusiasm experienced during the first stage can continue because the success of the plan is incumbent upon the enthusiasm of the participants and the country as a whole.

In his throne speech, the Governor announced that he would be appointing an executive director within the next six to eight months. Up to this point, the plan had been managed under the auspices of the honourable Leader of Government Business, the Minister of Education and Planning. Although some of us had misgivings at the beginning, I have to say that the plan was managed in such a way that no one could justifiably accuse the minister of interfering politically in the plan thus far. I suppose in fairness, while I have often been quick to criticise (and I will continue to criticise), I like to be candid. So, I have to give him some plaudits too. He managed to keep it above politics. Not that that would necessarily be bad under all circumstances, but I believe that it was absolutely essential for him from the outset to keep it at the elevated level he did.

At some stage, the implementation of the Vision will become political. But by that time I envisage it as being so mature that it could withstand any criticism.

So, the minister should be commended for what he has done so far. I don't know where it will go from here in terms of the executive director, but I have every confidence that the person appointed by the Governor will be quite capable of implementing it. I look forward to my participation, and I certainly will encourage anyone whom I can influence to participate fully because it is to this plan that we look for the future of the Cayman Islands.

The Governor also mentioned the public service. At this time it is interesting in more than one way to note the developments in the public service. The public service of the Cayman Islands is a mature, efficient and dependable organisation that is experiencing some growth. As a result, we are beginning to see a little cut and thrust at this time. I am not frightened about that because any organisation that is dynamic has to manifest such cut and thrust at times.

One of the reasons I believe that is so at this time is that the public service is getting what I consider a new breed of public servant—a public servant who is more than likely to be a university graduate; a public servant who is younger, more assertive, more ambitious and who is probably less patient in terms of upward mobility. As a result, I think the managers of the public service, the Personnel Department, perhaps the Public Service Commission, the Department of Internal and External Affairs, will need to be flexible, tolerant and understanding. It goes without saying that the Governor, as the head of the civil service, will also need to be aware of these things and will also need to exercise some flexibility and tolerance.

One way that I think the service can maintain its sound base and continue to improve is to promote the understanding that the public service is a specialist service, a service which operates on precedence, a formal service in that there is a prescribed method of behaviour. From my perspective, what needs to be done is to ensure that young graduates entering from university and college understand that having a degree and academic qualifications is to be encouraged and is appropriate and sometimes downright necessary. But by the same token, the public service is a specialist service where academic qualifications work best in tandem with experience and a knowledge of the prescribe procedures of the public service.

It is not unlike the diplomatic corp. One could go to school and take all kinds of degrees in international relations, but one has to actually experience and learn the desired behaviour. We are to be commended because we are getting a younger, smarter public servant. But, by the same token, we have to inculcate in them a sense of responsibility, patience and that what much of the public service is about is unfortunately not learned at university or academic lecture halls, but comes as a result of understudy and experience.

There are some other issues that we will have to address and that is this whole business of the parity between those persons recruited locally and those who are contracted from overseas. It is absolutely essential that we have this understanding and that there is some sense of parity. We are a colony. So, we have a special challenge. Some of the officers who work in the public service are recruited. Their colonial background will likely be challenged by persons who are recent graduates and who are assertive and look forward to rapid upward mobility. But they find themselves frustrated because the person senior to them is sometimes from overseas.

I think that this challenge has begun to manifest itself. There was something in the media recently about some contracted officers' supplement and some (as the Jamaican people describe it) restiveness among certain elements of the civil service. I think the management needs to be very careful how they deal with this matter because it is a delicate matter. The service should not be put in a position where any particular element is demoralised as a result of the way the situation is handled.

I am confident that the persons who have to deal with it are aware of these challenges and are eminently equipped and experienced to do so. I look forward to the matter being handled in way that is satisfactory to both parties. As you know, people on my side of the fence can dip into those kinds of matters. But we all have an interest in how the country is run. So I would like to reiterate that I have every confidence that those persons who are assigned to handle the matter will do so in the best interest of all concerned. I look forward to reading of the continued prosperity of the public service.

I come now to one of my pet subjects. His Excellency has also announced that he has given instructions for legislation to be drafted in anticipation of putting into effect the office of Ombudsman. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to associate myself with those efforts. You will pardon me for blowing my trumpet loudly, but I would like to say that Private Member's Motion No. 5/89 was brought to this honourable House by this member, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, seeking for the then government to establish an office of Ombudsman.

I believe that at this time in our development we are ripe for the establishment of such an office. Certainly, such an officer can enhance the orderly progression, development, and growth of the civil service. But, beyond that, such an officer can also enhance an understanding of the public service and can be a liaison between the public service and the persons whom they serve.

I believe that this is a progressive step and I welcome it. As I said, it had my support from 1989. More recently, the First Elected Member for George Town and I brought the motion back again. We were not as successful as we desired to be, so I am happy now. I would caution against anyone believing that the Ombudsman is going to be able to effect miracles.

One has to remember that the establishment of the office of such a nature will carry with it certain challenges, not the least of which has to do with the establishment of tradition. The problem is that certain practices that have been established are going to resent being challenged. I envisage that the Ombudsman will have to be sufficiently mature, experienced, and perhaps have some diplomatic skills as well to get around these obstacles.

It is usual for an Ombudsman to be someone with a legal background. Indeed, my model is a respected retired jurist of longstanding service. But it is not absolutely essential. Indeed, I would suggest that it may be best in our case not to seek to appoint someone with a legal background because I think what we want is to get someone who is able to take the broadest view possible of the circumstances faced. So, it is not farfetched to think that a senior civil servant of some long years' retirement might be someone to be considered.

In Ontario, they had a retired jurist by the name of Arthur Maloney, when the office was first set up. This gentleman was commissioned to do an investigation. I think it was 1976 or 1977. The investigation severely embarrassed the Provincial Government of Ontario. As a result of that embarrassment, the government did not vote any money for the office of Ombudsman in the next budget. So, Mr. Arthur Maloney was out of a job. But there was an election in 1978 and because of his popularity, and the government's behaviour, they lost the election.

Establishing an office of Ombudsman is going to be one of many challenges. While the Ombudsman does not have any powers of prosecution (because the Ombudsman reports to Parliament), in many cases if the government is not careful it could be under severe embarrassment and there could be conflicts and struggles. I would like to see our office set up much like the Auditor General's office, where he is independent. No government has the ability to shut off the Ombudsman. By doing that we remove the office from a certain amount of political interference.

Many of the countries in the Caribbean, Trinidad and Tobago, Jamaica, Guyana, have it established. In other larger Commonwealth countries, New Zealand, Australia, it is familiar. In Britain it is called a Parliamentary Commissioner. Personally, I prefer the name "Ombudsman." To me "Parliamentary Commissioner" does not have the same effect. It does not connote the importance of the office.

In the last Throne Speech, I remember vividly suggesting that the time had come for us in the Cayman Islands, for various reasons, to take a closer look at simple possession of a drug like marijuana. We do not seem to be successful in curtailing its use. As a result, more of our young people are being incarcerated for possession. I suggested that in some countries there is a move towards de-penalisation. I want to stress: de-penalisation, not de-criminalisation. I suggested that's what we should look forward to in the Cayman Islands, de-penalisation.

If we continue to send to prison young people convicted on simple possession, we are going to find that we are not only disenfranchising a whole population, but we are also placing them in a position where they may not be able to access proper drug counselling.

It's interesting that this view is not unique to my thinking. I want to stress that I am not advocating any decriminalisation. I believe that people caught with drugs, however simple the possession, deserve to have a criminal conviction if found guilty. But what I have certain reservations with is sending them to prison.

The Dutch have been the most liberal interpreters of this kind of behaviour. But The Economist magazine of January 15 to 21, 2000, says on page 55, "In Britain a Police Foundation report has advocated major changes to Britain's drug laws."

Let me explain what the Police Foundation is. It is an independent research body that is partly funded by the home office. This committee has concluded that "the 1971 Misuse of Drugs Act is arbitrary and inconsistent and imposes heavy demands on the criminal justice system to little public benefit. Its most controversial recommendation is that possession of cannabis should never attract a prison sentence, but should instead be subject to fines or other penalties."

"At present, possession of cannabis can be punished by up to seven years in jail [that is, in Britain]. The latest home office figures on sentencing indicate that about 500 people were imprisoned in 1977 for possession of cannabis; and yet trade in cannabis and its use is as an entrenched part of British life as Jack Straw, the Home Secretary, well knows. His own teenage son was caught offering to sell cannabis to two reporters a couple of years ago."

"Removing the threat of prison for possession of cannabis is technically described as de-penalisation, rather than de-criminalisation."

I interject that at this point, because page 2 of the Throne Speech as read by His Excellency the Governor said, "The Sentencing Advisory Committee established by the Chief Justice has submitted its recommendations on the Community Service Scheme to my office for promulgation and further consideration."

I hope that in the not-too-distant future we take cognisance of steps like these, particularly as the British (to whom we look for so many of our laws and customs) are traversing this route. I believe that sending young people—some 17—to prison for simple possession is certainly not in the best interest of society in the long term. They are mixing with older, more experienced, serious offenders and there is really no formal guaranteed means to access for consistent drug counselling, which I think is necessary in those cases.

I am not talking about trafficking. I am not talking about dealing. I am talking about simple possession for personal use. I am not talking about someone who engages in a whole boatload of stuff. That's a different kind of serious behaviour. I am talking about de-penalisation for any person who has what can be considered an amount for personal use. I believe there can be more effective sanctions than prison.

What I would like to see is a system whereby these people can have access to appropriate regular and consistent drug counselling so that they can rehabilitate themselves. I hope that in this business of community service and alternative sentencing that we could take this model into consideration.

One thing that concerns me about our society is that it is changing in rapid and sometimes unpleasant ways. It's sobering. Every time I read or hear the news, particularly the police reports, it seems that we are being confronted with what I would term a new breed of criminal—people who are smarter, defiant, more violent—who challenge the social control forces to apprehend and bring to judgment. I suppose I shouldn't be surprised because very often this is the downside of the economic prosperity that these islands have been experiencing for so many years.

But I don't buy the argument that these cases are all a result of dysfunctional families. Few are the persons who come from ideal family circumstances. And all of us—myself included—can find any number of reasons to be delinquent if we so choose. Let me hasten to add that there is a breakdown, which is caused by any number of circumstances. Recently, the government commissioned a family study. Well, I have to express some disappointment in the way the end result was handled.

As is usual, the government got the study and then seemed to do nothing about it. I don't know if anyone even read it. I have certainly not heard of any implementation of the recommendations coming out of that family study. We have to come to the reality that the family in the Cayman Islands is in crises.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy Bodden: I would go so far as to call upon the government to make the next decade the decade of youth and the family if we are to make any serious indentation in the social problems we are facing.

There is a clear breakdown. I am alarmed because in the 1950s when most Caymanian men were at sea, the women were left to raise the families. We never had these kinds of problems, nowhere near this scale, albeit the population was somewhat less.

Mr. Speaker, we are in a critical situation! And we cannot afford to write even one person off. We have to pull out all stops to save them. Years ago, when the First Elected Member for West Bay was Minister for Community Affairs, some strides were made. It seems that there is a discontinuity of efforts from one ministry to the next, from one person to the next, and a lot of this has to be politics.

This society is on the verge of collapse unless we can arrest this breakdown from where it is now. I mean, it is shocking to read about the kinds of crimes being committed. I would wager that Caymanians would not do certain things. Now, if I make such a wager, I run the risk of losing. Clearly, we have come face to face with a disintegrating and serious social situation, and it is made worse by the fact that the social control agencies do not seem to be capable of analysing and handling it. I want to dwell on this point because it is important.

Along with this breakdown, we seem to have a crisis of leadership because the State is faceless. We don't know who is in charge. And when the State is faceless, the State is impotent! I don't want to live in a police state, but I want to live in a policed state.

There is a void because clearly, anyone with any sense of reality will know that we really are not in control. I mean, there are too many incidents, one behind the other—one more serious than the other—happening recently and still happening. There are prisoners on the lam, people breaking out. We hear of all kinds of incidents. And yet, we are led to believe that all is well. Well, all is not well!

It is a multifaceted problem, and Social Services cannot do it alone. The police cannot do it alone. It has to have the efforts of the whole society. I want government to pay some credence to what I just said about making the next ten years the decade of youth and the family, otherwise we are losing the struggle.

Mr. Speaker, it's not the expatriates who are losing; it's not the tourists who are losing; it's all of us. Soon the Cayman Islands will be a society where we have to put burglar bars on every window.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: True!

Mr. Roy Bodden: I don't want to live like that. If I wanted to live like that I would emigrate to Puerto Rico, where when you go into the bedroom you have to lock yourself in with two locks, three locks, and a wrought iron gate. Is this what we are working for? And yet, I have to say that government, and the political arm of government, seems oblivious to this. Gangs in the schools . . . look up by Elizabethan Square on Friday afternoon.

There was a meeting in my constituency held by the First Elected Member for West Bay. And some of the things I learned about the behaviour of young people was shocking! People from the adjoining offices . . . school children. The schools were identified. I wonder why government can't do anything to keep them from congregating out there. Go out there on Friday afternoons.

A gentleman from an adjoining business complained to me about two years ago about it. And yet, the Minister for Education . . . no one else . . . Blind Bartemeus!

We have to investigate. Do we have constructive alternatives?

People give the excuse, 'Well, it's not just in the Cayman Islands.' I have no business with what happens in the United States. I am not an American. I am not elected to represent Americans; I am elected to represent Caymanians! I am concerned about what is happening here, and I am saying it's not nice! We have to get to the bottom of it, and that's the responsibility of the government.

They have the mechanisms, they have the ministries; they must do something. I come back to my disappointment again: The Family Study was tabled and I saw no rush to implement any recommendations. I saw no rush for any follow-up; I saw no public discussion or forum on the outcomes.

We have always been a matriarchal society. I grew up in that kind of household. But the problem is compounded now by mothers having to work two and three jobs to make ends meet, and by kids who are called "latchkey kids" because they have keys to the apartment or house around their necks like a pendant on a chain, and television is the babysitter. Well, we have to decide, and the government is the ultimate guardian of the society.

It is the responsibility of government to enlighten, inform, educate and curb. Otherwise we will have to be spending ever more money in the Social Services Department building more remand centres, hiring more drug counsellors until we get to the point where the whole budget is taken up in providing these services. And then, do you know what will happen? We will have to recruit even more people from overseas for the public service!

Is that the kind of Cayman we want? If not, we better take the next ten years and do something about it, beginning now!

It's a crisis of spirituality. I crave your indulgence to read something out of a book called Greater Expectations—Overcoming the Culture of Indulgence in our Homes and Schools, written by William Damon, who is a professor at Brown University. As I read this, I was struck. He is quoting another Harvard Sociologist, Daniel Bell.

I quote: “The real problem with modernity is the problem of belief. To use an unfashionable term it is a “spiritual crisis” since the new anchors have proven illusory and the old ones have become submerged. It is a situation which brings us back to nihilism, lacking a past or future; there is only a void. The elevation of self and the loss of spirituality are not in themselves responsible for all misconceptions about childhood that prevail in contemporary society, but they have created a cultural context where the misconceptions have flourished. They have established a receptivity to ideas that once would have been ridiculed or dismissed as out of hand. They have desensitised us to the inane nature of some currently fashionable child-rearing practises. Moreover, these misconceptions about children have contributed to their own perpetuation for the consequences of the misconceptions have been precisely to promote self-centredness and a spiritual void in the generations of youth who have been raised in their wake.”

We don't want to get into a culture of nihilism. But that's where we are heading because many of our children watch television unsupervised. They watch a station called the Black Entertainment Network (BET). As a black man, I am telling you that that station can't do anything for me. While I abhor censorship, I don't believe it can do anything for anyone else. And to turn our young people unbridled to watch that station is courting disaster believe you me.

I was driving down the road yesterday from my workplace on the Thomas Russell Roundabout, and I saw a young man in the middle of the day, in the hot tropical sun, in a black overcoat, with a sweater underneath it, wearing a bandanna. I was a schoolteacher. I studied sociology. I know what that is saying. I know the signals. I mean, in the tropics, in the middle of the day in an overcoat? Gang paraphernalia!

I spent some time in Panama in the 1980s. That was how Panama was when I was down there. You see the lorry pull up and the military get out. I bet there wouldn't be too many trench coats in the hot tropics after that!

These are the kinds of things we are confronted with, the kinds of breakdowns. And there seems to be some inability to deal with them. Providing constructive alternatives alone is not going to solve the problem because the problem has its basis in education, awareness, and informing. We have to get to the parents. That's why I like the way they do it in some other jurisdictions where when a child who is a juvenile delinquent and has to go to court, the parent has to go to court too. And if it can be proved that it is as a result of an abnegation of responsibility why the antisocial behaviour occurs, he gets sentenced and the parent gets sentenced. The child gets sanctioned and the parent gets sanctioned.

What is more important, to raise a productive citizen or to be wealthy and spend all your money on expensive defence lawyers? or on transportation to Northward Prison? or on expensive caskets? What's more important? We have to decide. As a nation, we have to decide.

Government has a responsibility to get these messages . . . sometimes there's no other way to put it but at it's most graphic. And we've had a couple of those. Heaven forbid that we have any more. And I worry because I am a participant in this society; I am a representative of the people. I see these problems firsthand.

What frightens me is that I am at the top of the plateau so I can only go down. Is this the kind of country I want to grow old in, Mr. Speaker? I had my chance at emigrating and I gave it up. Am I going to be sentenced to spending the rest of my life peeping through the blinds? And when I hear the news come on, turn up the volume to see whose name is called? That's not the kind of Cayman I want, Mr. Speaker. I would like this to remain the utopia that many of us have come to know. But we have to deal with these problems, so the challenge is in the government's lap.

We need to begin working now, and we need to take political persuasions out of some of the things we do and just do them because they need to be done. The very future of our society is at stake. That leads me to say that I don't see the solution in the importation of 24 new police officers from the United Kingdom. That's not the solution, and I ain't supporting it! We have to remember that when we import these people we are also importing problems.

I don't want anyone to get the slightest impression that Britain is without its problems in the prison system. The Economist of 8 January . . . and Mr. Speaker, I don't work for the Economist I just read it. It talked about some prisons in Britain and prison officers. Some of them are accused of doing some pretty serious things to prisoners including locking them in their cells for up to 23 hours, denying them work, educational and recreational opportunities. They have the same problems we have—overcrowding, rampant drug use, and appalling standards of hygiene in their prisons. So, I want to guard against anyone believing that the solution is importing prison officers or police from the metropolitan country.

I believe that we have to create our own solutions to our problems because they are unique to the Caymanian society. We have to find a way to solve the problems ourselves because, believe you me, I listen, I hear. As much as I am a talker, I am an even greater listener. I know what is going to happen because people are already asking what is going to happen to the longstanding, longsuffering and long serving. There is going to be friction and tension. And people are going to fear being displaced. So, let us not believe that this importation is going to be the panacea. No, absolutely no!

It is going to cost us money. How much we don't know because no figures have been proffered to Finance Committee. It's an expensive solution. Even if it were going to work, and there's no guarantee that it is going to work, it's an expensive solution. The best solutions may be those that are less expensive, that are home grown, home crafted. There's no quick fix to these problems. That's why I say that we need a multifaceted effort to solve them. We need to give ourselves about ten years, and we need to keep measuring, planning and realigning. Otherwise, every couple of months we will have to bring 24 new officers and the whole society will be sociopaths and psychopaths.

What I don't want is any criminalisation of the Caymanian society. There is too great a risk that people from one particular section will always be the victims. I don't wish that, and we are not on the right track.

Mr. Speaker, were you thinking that this was time for a break, sir?

The Speaker: I can wait. I figured on 11.30.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Okay, sir.

So, the government must be clear thinking in the solution and must not succumb to moves of desperation and quick fixes.

When I think about the problems we are experiencing, I come to the realisation that the crux of the matter is that nobody told us that progress had a down side. Nobody told us that there would be plenty of dollars and plenty of jobs floating around—no unemployment—but there's a price for that. And that price is bumper-to-bumper traffic jams.

If I want to get to work at 8.30 in the morning, I have to leave my home at quarter to seven. If I leave any later, I don't reach work before 9.00. There is bumper-to-bumper traffic from Bodden Town to George Town. Nobody told us that. They told us, 'You're going to be able to sell your land. You're going to make lots of money, and there's going to be jobs galore.' Nobody told me that if I didn't watch my son carefully he would be a delinquent and go on to greater and more serious things.

Nobody told me that if I didn't counsel my daughter she would become pregnant in her teen years. Nobody told me that. So lots of people were unprepared and didn't know how to deal with these things—and still don't know how to deal with them. When you get situations like that, people have to look for the solutions from the State.

But the State here is faceless; it's leaderless. It seems that it is incapable.

I don't know where it's going to end. Just like the solution to the traffic problem is not the building of more roads . . . because you know what Gresham's Law says: You build more roads, you are going to have more cars to fill those roads up. So if we build bigger prisons we are going to get more prisoners.

We are not doing a good job of managing what we have. Heaven knows what we are going to do when we get bigger. I am concerned about this whole business at the prison. One could say that I am a neighbour. I don't live very far from there. I think about these things, the riots, and all that stuff. We were unprepared. We are unprepared up to this point.

When we have these kinds of failures, someone has to assume responsibility. I don't necessarily believe that the solution to these kinds of problems is for someone's head to roll. But, you know, the Romans had a system: When a Roman General failed, he fell upon his sword. There's a certain sense of honour, commitment, and obligation. I am not suffering from the circus or amphitheatre mentality. I don't get excited by skulls and I won't call for that. But I am not satisfied. I don't feel good within myself that everything is under control because these scenes are following too closely one behind the other and I know when that happens that we are waiting for the same thing they are waiting for in California—the big one!

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Yup!

Mr. Roy Bodden: I received a letter this morning, I am sure other members did too, from a concerned citizen about events at the prison, saying we were unprepared and should have been prepared. We have no rapid response unit.

Some things I hear I can't repeat for other reasons. But government needs to be aware that the social control forces need to be sharp. We need to work not only on the social services side, but we need to work on the other side. And the solution is not the importation of more manpower. History is rife with countries that made that mistake. It's a psychological war.

I said sometime ago that the time has now come for the police to get a full-time psychologist. The life of a police officer is a stressful life. When they get certain calls, it is not farfetched to think it may be the last call. When they go to confront some of these people who are serious anything can happen. I would like to see the police have a psychologist available to go to because this is a stressful, sometimes traumatic job. There must be someone they can sit down with to seek counsel, to make them feel good about themselves and about their job. Also, that would be good in the event of any adverse occurrence. Similarly for the prison officers.

But there is also a need for a new professional nonsense breed. There are insinuations that some people who are supposed to be offering solutions are also part of the problem. We are talking about what Napoleon needed to do—professionalise and make sure you have the absolute best. Too many times I read about people who are supposed to be the guardians caught up in she-nanigans. Don't want to be like the Romans—hire a watchman to watch the watchman. Then it gets really expensive.

The answer cannot, it must not lie in building more prisons. There must be less expensive, more effective solutions than that. We have to begin in the schools, in the homes. I was talking to a person the other day. He lamented that on a Sunday morning in a neighbourhood that was formerly quiet, where people took pride in respecting Sunday, there were two construction sites going.

Now, I know that we claim we are a modern society, that we are part of the developed world. But Caymanians are quick to tell you, particularly the older ones, that the reason we have done so well is because we have God's blessings, we were always God fearing. And if we have reached the point where we disregard completely . . . I mean, where everyday is like Monday, and no one has any respect for whether or not I want to be church-going, or I want to have a quiet half hour to pray and say my incantations . . . I think that bears some reflection. And preachers talk about this breakdown, about the State being faceless, about their concerns over the breakdown of the family. People don't set aside time. We have grown away from that.

We can't legislate that. Heaven forbid, we never would. It wouldn't work, even if we tried. But it has to come from within.

The Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the morning break?

Mr. Roy Bodden: Yes sir.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes. But may I ask honourable members; this is a new Century, a new Session, a New Year. Let us keep our breaks to 15 minutes and let's get on with the business.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.30 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.59 AM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, continuing.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you.

I want to round off my dealing with the problems that society faces by saying that some years ago I brought a motion. I think it was seconded by the present Minister of Health. It asked the government to set up a national commission on crime and violence. Well, the motion was rejected. Some of the arguments were that it was alarmist, there was no need for that; and a national commission would convey the wrong impression.

Subsequent to that, the government set in place in 1996 the Grand Cayman Crime and Community Safety Survey, by Dr. Kate Painter from the Institute of Criminology at Cambridge University. This report was commissioned under the auspices of the present First Elected Member for West Bay. It is an excellent report, but it has never seen the light of day.

That report produced some of the most startling prescient and relevant information that we could have at our disposal. But here again, the intransigence of government smothered it, aborted it, and as a result, we find ourselves in this awkward position.

We cannot effectively deal with the kinds of problems we are confronted with if we are scared of studying them and realising what the solutions are. There is nothing in this regard to fear but fear itself. I understand that one of the reasons government was not disposed to airing it was because of the effect it might have on tourism. We shouldn't be foolhardy, because the very things we are failing to address will damage tourism more than any report of some criminologist in regard to strategies we should effect. We have to discontinue the kind of behaviour that does not allow us to face facts because we believe that in trying to solve a problem it is going to give us a bad reputation.

Every society in the world has crime to some degree. Indeed, the famous French sociologist, Émile Durkheim said that that any society without crime at some level was a stagnant society. What Durkheim was also concerned about was the level of certain types of crimes. I don't know how much money government paid to have that study done, yet the study was . . . and I vividly recall. I read one section about women and crime. It had some very startling data on assaults on females. It is unfortunate that that study was not at least tabled in the Legislative Assembly and made available through the media to the wider public.

I wish to move on to deal with some of the challenges confronting us. I refer to the section where His Excellency dealt with the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development. It is perhaps this portfolio more than any other that hinges the future of this country. Right now we are in the midst of some serious challenges. I am speaking about the demands of various international organisations, the OECD, the European Union, and the G7, as well as the United States.

Recently, a government delegation attended a conference in Washington. As a mature and experienced representative, here's what I can't deal with: We were trying to elicit from government who was going to comprise the delegation. If we had been speaking to the people in Beijing information would have been more forthcoming. There is a veil of secrecy. I noticed that a couple of issues of the Caymanian Compass lamented it.

I appreciate that certain business has to be conducted discretely and confidentially. But when I as an elected representative of the people am placed in a position where when my constituents ask me who is going to Washington, and I don't know until I read it in the newspaper, then what purpose do I serve? Is it that secretive that we could not be told who was on the delegation? That we could not be told with whom they were going to meet, and given a general idea of what the meeting was about? The elected government, the political directorate, has to exercise greater maturity.

We are living in an information age. There have been matters before when people have said they had to extract a pledge of confidentiality or discretion, but when you operate on the basis of withholding information and secrecy, you are subjecting yourself to insinuation, innuendo, the marl road, or worse! Indeed, your very motives may be suspected however well meaning they appear to be. So, the political directorate particularly has to display greater maturity.

That contributes to what I call the “facelessness” of the State. If you don’t know who is going, and you don’t know who is in charge, then how can you be assured that the best interests are being protected? I would hope that entering (as we have) the 21st Century that this kind of behaviour would be an aberration rather than the norm. I look forward to the next government behaving differently.

This is crucial because anyone who has been following international events knows that this is serious business that we are involved in now. Members on this side of the chamber have reassured government over and often that when it comes to the ability of the Cayman Islands to maintain its place of respectability in international financial circles there is no difference between us.

That being the case, why is government playing “Big boy/Little boy with us”? If they depend on our support . . . because together we should all be working to preserve our integrity and our future. Here is not the most far-fetched question: Should the government change in November, as many people (myself included) expect it will, how will continuity be maintained? Tell me, Mr. Speaker, how will continuity in such matters be maintained?

I like to read about how dynasties are created. I like to read about the great Jewish families like the Rothschilds, and the Brontmans, and the Frerès, and all these people. It’s a microcosm, how they structured their families. The father, Mr. Speaker (and you yourself come from this type of family) trains the son, prepares him for the eventuality that one day he will be in a position where he has to exercise judgment. To keep him ignorant is to court disaster. To withhold knowledge from him is to court doom. And still, we can appreciate that there is certain information that must be kept “in the family.” The French have an expression, entré amis, between friends.

We don’t need to know everything, but we need to be in a position where we can inform our constituents because they ask. Many of them have an avid interest in these things; they are affected by it. And it’s embarrassing to say ‘I don’t know. I have to wait until GIS puts it out, or until I read it in the Compass.’ God help us if we didn’t have things like the Internet. I used to “surf” the Net when not too many people in Cayman knew about the Net.

There is need for a change of behaviour on the part of government. There is a need to shed some facelessness, and for government to be more forthright and responsible.

Back to the matter of the challenge. There is a change in the world order. It’s common knowledge.

Some months ago, I read a book called False Dawn, by a man from the London School of Economics. He talked about the whole transformation of global capitalism. This whole business of globalisation was going to effect finances. Indeed, he was so prescient that he predicted quite accurately the Asian crash and events in Russia.

One of the things John Gray has said in False Dawn is that this whole business of countries like the European Union commandeering and monopolising financial transactions is over. The capitalist system has evolved in such a way that they won’t be able to do that because this whole business of taxation has changed and is transforming, and information technology and E-commerce . . . the Internet has demonstrated that they will never be effective.

I like the part where he highlighted that even among themselves there is no unity and unanimity. Britain wants to protect the City of London, and Luxembourg and Switzerland say they will be no part of any agreement that is going to deprive them of their ability to do what they have been doing for centuries—that is, being bankers to the world.

John Gray suggests that it will be small jurisdictions that will suffer, if we don’t. That view is substantiated by a feature of the Economist magazine of 29 January to 4 February. When I came across this article, I immediately reflected on the Third Elected Member for George Town. I was telling him earlier that I almost gave him a call because this is right up his street. He was the one who piloted the motion about E-commerce, and I know that he is actively involved with government and going to some of these meetings with the European Union and the OECD, and to Washington.

Unfortunately, I didn’t have time to get it photocopied, but I wanted to give you a copy, as I wanted to give the Third Official Member a copy. In a nutshell, this tells us where we are in the Cayman Islands and what we can expect. It sure isn’t mercy we can expect. But I have a hope that we are going to be able to continue to survive although we are now under some duress.

This feature says that what they are interested in is an exchange of tax information. It’s simple: They can no longer control the money of their large corporations and wealthy individuals. Here’s my hope: The Internet is going to make it more difficult—if not impossible—for them to do that. And that is why the E-commerce motion passed by this House is so important. The author of this article is saying that handled in the right way certain transactions will be virtually untraceable for tax purposes.

But, when it comes to negotiations, particularly crucial negotiations about the continued survival of the country and its ability to maintain its integrity, the government should not be so irresponsible and so closed-mouth.

I want to keep this debate to a high level, but I can’t resist the urge to say that that is characteristic of some people because they don’t believe that they can be effective unless they hold all the power, all the secrets. Mr. Speaker, no man is an island. You see this business about elections in November? We have to pray. No one in here has any guarantee that he or she will be back.

That's why it's important for us not to hoard the secrets and make it seem like the world can't exist without us, or that the Cayman Islands can't do without us. There is no one in here who is indispensable, be he an attorney, a lawyer, a teacher—no one. It is immature and irresponsible, inconsiderate and undemocratic to operate with such secrecy. And yet, we proclaim that we support freedom of information. Mr. Speaker, it's an inversion of the truth.

You can't on the one hand say you are progressive, and on the other hand withhold . . . I mean, such a common thing as who comprised the delegation, where they were going and what the topic was. I have been privileged to visit the House of Commons during Question Time. People ask the Prime Minister what he was doing at such and such a time, let alone questions that are more mundane. It is a part of the responsibility of the State, the Government, the Ministers, to tell Parliament, unless certain knowledge is forthcoming. Yet, when they are in trouble, they quickly run to us and say "we." 'WE are in this together, you know.' 'WE need to do this. WE need to take a stand.' Ha!

Enough of that. Like I said, I want to keep to a high road. But, I cleaned my ears well before I came here this morning, and I am going to listen. It will be most interesting to find out if the reply can be as impersonal as my comments were. I also want to hear how they plan to change their behaviour in the future so that we are not left out in the cold. God bless the Caymanian Compass!

The Financial Secretary, the Government and the country will have to work together because this challenge is going to be a withering fire. I am praying that we survive.

Clearly, we are not talking about money laundering. That is not the question in our jurisdiction. They are going to press us to exchange this information. And if we do that . . . you hear about giving away the store? Ha! Not only will we have given away the store, we won't have any house to come home to either. We will give away the house too. I don't know how we are going to survive, but government's business of dealing in secrecy is not going to help the situation.

I have to say again that intransigence has cost us valuable time. I like how John Redman put it in the Cayman Islands Executive magazine, when he said that between 1992 and 1996 the Opposition (the Opposition being the present First Elected Member for George Town, a friend of mine who is not now in the House, Mr. Gilbert McLean, and I) had brought many good motions. But government had voted every one of them down. The Financial Fiscal Responsibility Act was one I vividly remember. What a flogging we got. I never had such a flogging since my mother stopped flogging me.

The Minister of Education, the Minister of Tourism, even the Third Official Member took a little turn. But do you see what we had to do? We had to go and implement it. That should show government that there are responsible, informed, educated and serious people on this side. They shouldn't keep certain secrets from us because we could help them.

The same thing with the Disaster Relief Fund. What did they have to do? Adopt it. We wasted valuable time.

Quite interestingly, I heard on the CANA news report of a week ago that the same type of disaster relief fund that we have set up is trying to be set up by some of the countries in the eastern Caribbean, using one of the models that I gave. A group of these countries are pooling funds.

Mr. Speaker, forgive me for playing a little one-upmanship. There is no absolute guarantee that I am going to be back, so you will forgive me if I sound my trumpet. We have wasted precious time. I am happy to see that we are moving forward, but I am concerned about certain things. When I come to talk about where I see Parliament going in the next millennium, I will broaden on that, but I want to move to the business of pensions.

I heard the Leader of Government Business, the Minister of Education, talking about how the pension fund is to go to $76.4 million by year's end. He said that this was a good thing and his government deserved kudos. Sure. I agree it is a good thing and his government deserves some kudos. But the situation could be vastly improved, and we are not out of the woods yet because the fund is not to the point where it realistically should be at this time. So, I would have to make the comment after I give the grade, that this is a good beginning. But we can by no means rest upon our laurels.

It's important that we realise and take cognisance of that fact. This being a political year, I know there are those who will seek to get any advantage they can get. But I just want to sound the caution that all this is allowing us to say at this point, truthfully and realistically, is that we have made a good beginning.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Communications, Environment, and Natural Resources is a ministry that is right now under focus. There was a proposal to remove duties off of certain things. I see that someone has announced they are closing a business as a result of not being able to compete.

Then, there was a story in the newspaper about a farmer who is accusing the community of prejudice because they prefer products from the United States. I don't know if we will ever reach the point in our development where we eliminate what I call prejudicial preference for North American goods. I suppose that the geographical position these islands are in is both advantageous and disadvantageous. It is disadvantageous to the extent that goods are easily accessible from the US. We have cultivated tastes that are more akin to the US than they are to the Caribbean. We have those two strikes against us.

But I lament the fact that people who invest their money and time in ventures such as farming are disappointed because they lack support.

I am going to say something under some advisement and caution. As much as the merchants may claim that they try to support the local farmers, they can do more. I give them credit for opening up now.

The element in the society I am really disappointed with is the hotels. They are intransigent, uncooperative and ignoring. This is the only territory in the region where the hotels serve all imported fruit. It beggars description, even from someone who can be as loquacious as I can be at times. To know that even in the mango season these people won't patronise Caymanian mango farmers to any significant level is Scrooge-like and stingy. Yet, I hear that some of them benefit from certain concessions.

We, the representatives of the people, and the government give them certain concessions, yet they cannot see fit to patronise the Farmer's Market and the farmers. Perhaps someone should remind them of the old adage, one hand washes the other. Or, you scratch my back; I'll scratch yours.

This should not be a one-way street. There are other things I am going to talk about when I get to tourism where they get away with almost murder as far as patronising local people is concerned. But I believe the greatest hindrance to the development of agriculture, a part from the fact that we have no large acres of arable land, is the inability to access reasonably affordable finance.

For a long time I have been interested in what is now known as MFIs, Micro Finance Industries. I was speaking to the First Elected Member for West Bay a few days ago and he agreed. He said that the time has come for the Cayman Islands to investigate the establishment of a development bank. I couldn't agree more with the gentleman. I hope that coming as we are into the new millennium this could be a positive development. It could provide the kind of funding that small farmers could afford to borrow, small businesspersons, that small entrepreneurs could afford. There is lots of capital here. Unfortunately, most of it is loaned at the commercial interest rates. High commercial rates, I am advised.

The case for MFIs could not be more clearly made than the Grameen Bank in Bangladesh. It is now a worldwide model. A few days ago, I sent to the Inter American Development Bank for some information on Micro Financed Industries. I was reading through some of the literature. This is a widespread phenomenon. Latin America, South America, Asia, some places in the Caribbean . . . we cannot afford to borrow money from the Caribbean Development Bank to on-lend to small enterprises.

I have to say this a little tongue-in-cheek. I label the Caribbean Development Bank as the "Widow Maker." I say that because we had two Caymanian entrepreneurs in small hotels. Check the history. It's not a good record. The Caribbean Development Bank is a widow maker. We have to be able to access funds other than those if we want to help our small people.

Quite interestingly, there is an organisation in Boston, Mass., called Accion International. I was surprised to learn that this organisation on-lends money for government approved agencies for micro finance industries. I read of cases where in Latin America people started with one or two sewing machines and built up a little cottage industry. These could be sources of economic independence for our people. They could create cottage industries that could be sold to tourists.

I believe that agri-industries hold some hope, potting of jellies and jams. If that were marketed right, do you know how many people . . . because we already have one thing going for us: no preservatives or over fertilisation or insecticide. These are the kinds of solutions we have to work towards because these solutions are internal. That's why I am not ready to give up on agriculture even though I know we will probably never reach the scale where we have 50 commercial farmers. I am saying that at the semi-professional level in many more cases it can be successful.

So, we just have to persevere. I give my support to the government and the minister, and I commend those farmers. And in Bodden Town, there are a number who continue to persevere. I hope that one of these days the government can be in the position where we can really give them the kind of help they need. I call upon government, and the honourable Third Official Member (because I suppose it will be his department) to investigate the feasibility of establishing a development bank.

I am not advocating that we wean ourselves away from the Caribbean Development Bank, but I am suggesting that we find a more attractive and affordable mechanism for the kind of demands we have.

I hope that one of these days soon we can offer affordable housing to that element of our population who has been suffering for years. I have said (and I was castigated when I came out with this in 1978) that Caymanians dis-availing themselves of land is probably the single greatest threat we face in the long term. It would be interesting to find out how many of our people, how many families are in a position where they are dispossessed through whatever means and find it literally impossible to own for themselves a plot of land on which to build a house or apartment.

When I made these observations in 1978, I was maligned and ostracised. Many young people tell me that they now find themselves in a position where it seems impossible for them to own a house lot. Despite the plethora of apartment buildings I see going up, I don't hear of prices dropping to the point where they are affordable to the working class people. I have to rely on government to establish some kind of mechanism where these people can realise the "Caymanian Dream" inasmuch as American people talk about the "American Dream" where everyone has access to a house or an apartment and a job. If we don't do that, we can be prepared for a continued social breakdown and chaos.

This may be a good point to interject that multinational corporations should not expect to come and operate in the social climate and draw the kinds of profits they draw, without their consciences pricking them to practise some kind of social responsibility and help out. It should be from these people that a substantial amount of affordable funds come. They should consider it a social, if not a moral obligation. If the society crumbles, heaven forbid, then do you know how much uprooting that is going to cause? How much re-establishment?

While government has a direct responsibility to see that the society maintains a balance, the government should not be expected to do it alone. In other countries, like New Zealand for example, they make great strides toward social responsibility towards providing these kinds of services. It's an anachronism when we talk about Cayman being the fifth largest international financial centre, and we have to talk about levels of poverty and pockets where people are so poor as to be living in substandard housing. It is a sin, like the Holocaust and slavery.

I hope that the telecommunications authority I see proposed works. But I have some reservations. I have to ask, Is this authority going to be structured in such a way that it is self supporting? Is it a regulatory authority, or is it merely concerned with managing the government telecommunications equipment? I would like to know more about the structure. If it is not something that is self-supporting, if it is just another authority we are going to have to finance from the general revenue, then we might as well leave things the way they are.

If it is going to be a regulatory authority, is it going to be prepared to address some of the concerns that the wider public has now with Cable & Wireless and the provision of services? And is it going to be in a position to influence the rates we currently pay?

The Public Works Department has undertaken major projects. In addition, this department is also responsible for the road construction going on now being completed to government specifications. While on the business of road construction, I have to lament the danger in the absence of shoulders along the roads. Some of the roads are significantly higher, so as to be a distinct danger to any individual having to negotiate those shoulders. Government should be mindful that they could be setting themselves up for some serious litigation in the event anyone runs off the road and gets injured.

I don't know why, not being a civil or a road engineer, the asphalt had to be laid on so thick. I cannot understand. And while I have to admit that some shoulder work is being done from Breakers on down, there are still a significant number of miles before all of this work will be completed. I don't know, and I would like some explanation. It's not just one area. I am informed that the stuff is being laid by the ton. Again, I can't understand that. Why is it not done by the mile as it has been done previously?

Those are not only my comments. Those are comments reflected by many road users. I would expect the government to give some satisfactory answers. Of course, we are grateful for the improvements, but we have to be concerned, those of us who are conscientious, about the public purse as well. So we have to keep both eyes focused and we can't just look like the one-eyed man, at only one side of the equation.

His Excellency also mentioned the expected Port Authority expansion. This is a controversial move. Many people more knowledgeable than I say that is going to be a natural disaster in the event of bad weather. A very experienced sea captain whom many people respect, tells me that if that is done we can expect the seas in a Northwester to break where the old Kirk Plaza was. And I listened during the time it was topical to some people making some profound environmental and ecological observations. This one is not a matter that we should rush into. This is not a decision we should take based purely on emotion.

It's not even so much that it's estimated to cost $14.5 million. It's the impact it's going to have on the ecology. I am not convinced that all of that realignment is not going to affect those dive sites. People tell me that those dive sites all the way down to the vicinity of Sunset House will virtually be wiped out. And I am puzzled that it is still only limited to cargo. It's not doing anything for tourist ships. It is a development that should be approached with the greatest of caution, and only after the best studies have been made available.

We are a nation a seafarers. Cayman Brac probably produced the greatest number of master mariners of any country in modern times. I cannot understand why every time we do something like this we have to depend upon imported advice. We have hundreds of years of experience if we pool our master mariners and experienced seamen. A number of them have sailed out there under all circumstances. And to a man, they tell me that they have reservations about it, and that it is ill advised and we shouldn't do it: Yet, we go and import some consultants. I don't know where it is going to end, but I caution against it.

I am not one to stop progress. And I certainly can't stop the government. But my gut feeling and the advice I got is that it is not a wise move. We should hasten slowly.

I now turn to education.

The Speaker: Would you prefer to take the break before going to a new point?

Mr. Roy Bodden: Yes sir, thank you.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.51 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.54 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, continuing.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you.

Prior to the luncheon suspension, I reached the point where I was going to make some comments on what His Excellency had to say on the Ministry of Education, Aviation, and Planning.

By virtue of my own training, I place great importance on education for the development of these islands. I have remarked before that I see education in the Cayman Islands as what Napoleon envisaged in France in 1798, that is, that education is the vitality of the nation, the purification of its morality and the real foundation of all its habits. This is particularly so in that access to an education provides the greatest tool we can have to improve and enhance our lives in addition to making us understanding and productive citizens.

But I want to lay a caution. I have noticed that many people in the Cayman Islands see education primarily as a tool that enables them to earn a livelihood. And while one of the functions is just that, it should not be the primary driving force. The primary driving force is to make us a more informed, better-equipped and more productive citizens—productive in the widest sense of the word. Productive all around, participating in community life, just not merely out of selfish reasons or out of our own concern of self existence, but for the improvement of the community at large, making us law abiding, considerate, good neighbours. So education should serve many purposes.

I hold that if our future is to remain attractive, we have to find a way to develop a system where all of our people avail themselves of an education, where they can achieve their fullest and roundest development. I will say a little more about that in a short while, but I want to focus on the initial comment made by His Excellency having to do with the revision of the Education Law, 1983. I would say that it is timely—since it has been in force since 1983 and we are now in the year 2000.

I am going to repeat a previous observation I made: I hope that in the review of this law, the powers that be see fit to so structure the Law that the Minister of Education will be removed as chairman of the Education Council, and that someone else will chair that Council so that the Minister can be a court of last resort. The way it functions now puts the minister at a disadvantage in that having participated in certain decisions (albeit as chairman of the board he is not called upon to vote except to break a tie) he is not allowed the flexibility to be so removed from the situation in the event of a decision against what the board has set down. I think modern management practice would have it that someone else chair the board and the minister would then be in a position to be an appellate body in matters referred for his decision from the board.

Mention was also made about the national training initiative. Here again I have to express some disappointment, because it seems that one of the weaknesses we have in this country is that we are always reinventing the wheel. It is all well and good to set up a national training in initiative, and I certainly encourage this. But I seem to recall some years ago when the present First Elected Member for West Bay was the Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Labour, etc., that he put in place what was called the Cayman Islands Training Initiative. From day one I leant my support because I was familiar with some of the principles. I thought it was worthy of support.

Indeed, I went so far as to promote the initiative to young people. Tragedy struck that initiative and the responsibility was watered down and divested. I don't know if it was due to a lack of enthusiasm or political expediency, or down right disinterest, but the initiative died.

I find it a little self-righteous for the Minister of Education to announce that he is going to have a national training initiative. It is regrettable that all of the groundwork that had been laid went to waste, and now we have to begin from the beginning.

I wondered why in the first place it was necessary to divest this initiative between three ministries—Tourism, Community Affairs, and Education—when on its initial announcement it was being handled by the Ministry of Community Affairs. It demonstrates a weakness in our system. And I have been around long enough to know that when these efforts go like this it is pure half-heartedness and they are not likely to achieve fruition. So I welcome the new initiative that is going to be carried out by the Minister for Education at this late stage.

This is an election year. We don't have much time, and we run the risk of suffering a setback if the government changes ministers. Who is to say that the succeeding minister will have the same philosophy and the same desire, and the same sense of urgency? We have lost valuable time and we have to come to the point where we stop playing games of expediency with these initiatives.

The Cayman Islands Training Initiative was set on a good foundation. It was poised to tackle the challenges it was designed to face. The new training board will be convened to guide the formulation of a national training policy now. The government's role in this is a delicate one, and the government must first heed the advice that our Saviour gave on one occasion: "Physician, heal thyself."

The government's position in this reminds me of an old college joke. The principal at the college I attended did not like students with beards. One day he was passing a residence and he saw one of my friends who was growing a beard. Indeed, two of my friends were growing beards, but he saw this one.

So he called the student and said, "Mr. Reese, I would like you to do me a favour." And who would dare deny the principal? (Behind his back we used to call him God. He was that kind of person.)

So he said, "Of course, Mr. Owen. I will gladly do you the favour."

He said, "Mr. Reese, I want you to go and tell Mr. Suku that he is to shave his beard."

He said, "I will gladly do that."

"But," he said "not so fast, Mr. Reese. Before you deliver such a message you have to shave your own beard first."

So, government finds itself in the same position now with the training policy. Before the government can tell the private sector and demand that they formulate a training policy, the government has to ensure that its own training policy is up and running, and beyond reproach.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy Boddan: Therein lies the challenge.

It is my suspicion that the reason why nothing came out of the Cayman Islands Training Initiative is that some people were not prepared to deal with what that training initiative was going to be demanding. This has always been a problem in the private sector. Always.

And young Caymanians especially have suffered setbacks from inadequate training policies and the lack of supervision. Certainly, there is no enforcement that the policies, once put in place, be kept in place and that Caymanians are the beneficiaries.

The minister has announced his plan “. . . which is being spearheaded by the Department for International Development (DFID) (Caribbean) and seeks to encourage ways and provide models for private sector involvement in the public education system.” I welcome this initiative too because I think this will strengthen the opportunities for young people. And if developed properly it will certainly lead to enhanced and greater opportunities for young people to become economically vibrant and gainfully employed.

I believe that we have to turn our organisations into learning organisations. To this extent, I am attracted to what the international consulting firm, Arthur Andersen, is doing at a site they have established and named “The School of the 21st Century.” This firm has structured the education requirements in such a way that they teach computer modelling, system thinking skills, mathematics, group dialogue, and effective decision making. In Oakland-Alameda County, California, they have a special school called “The School of the Future.”

I said long ago that we in the Cayman Islands should have sought to imitate the Nation-State of Singapore. For its size and development, it has one of the most efficient and productive education systems of any country in the world. The basis of this system lies in the mastery of computers—computer assisted instruction, computer literacy, computer programming, computer modelling.

I lament the fact that we in the Cayman Islands with seemingly so much financial resource lag so far behind in this. I would like to see our education system arrive at the point where there is a reasonable ratio of computers to students beginning at the primary school of at least 1-to-3, but ideally 1-to-2. Not just when we go to computer lab, but to be available at all times for all lessons.

There are companies whose business is providing this kind of technology to schools throughout the world. The world has shrunk and is shrinking. Information technology and mastery of computers is the way to go. This is particularly so in the Cayman Islands—one of the largest financial centres in the world. I have always said that being computer literate itself offers a marketable skill. Any mastery and qualification beyond that is a bonus.

As for the national curriculum, I said before—according to the minister’s own statement in Parliament some years ago—that we are lagging behind. It is necessary for us to move forward, particularly now that we have the school Inspectorate set up. I follow these matters with interest and look forward to the whole curriculum being developed, tested, and implemented. We need to ensure that we have a proper bridge leading from primary to middle, to high school, and then college and university.

If there is one area in our system that needs examination, it is the apparent lack of enthusiasm for joint development between the Community College and the International College of the Cayman Islands. I am of the opinion that the education establishment in the Cayman Islands would be better served complementary rather than by developing each of them exclusive to the other. The jurisdiction is too small. The educational market is too small to have this kind of development.

It would be a positive step if certain resources could be shared. Certainly, this is the case in other jurisdictions where institutions seek out the similarity among themselves, rather than any peculiarities, particularly in an area where the student pool is not the largest. We could have shared faculty, shared library resources, shared specialist personal who come in from time to time to give guest lectures or workshops.

This year there is a fair amount of capital works to be undertaken. The minister must find himself in somewhat of a quandary because, according to news reports, he is having difficulty in receiving planning [approval] for a proposed primary school at Spotts. Two sites. Both sites proposed have received objections. Does this mean that the delays are going to put us in a position where we will not be able to come up with needed classroom space when the next school year begins?

Then, some time ago the minister gave us a $50 million list of capital works needed just to catch up. I wish I could say that education was at its optimum at this time. But with all of these factors impinging upon it, it seems that we are going to be taken up with fighting crises, out-ting fires, and when we consider that our moral obligation also extends to giving some kind of support to the private schools, our hands are tied at a time when we should be poised for takeoff.

As if these challenges were not enough, now we have social problems, disenchanting and alienated elements among the school population, school programmes being expanded to include more before school programmes as well as after school activities. The notion that I called for some time ago (along with other members), about the investigation of the establishment of a Cadet Corp has still not been acted upon.

It is time that when we give undertakings that we act. The schools Inspectorate is off and running and this will only serve to enhance and improve the education establishment. I hope that one of these days the Inspectorate can reach the point where it can be headed and staffed by Caymanian educators.

Planning must be a challenge. As I move around my constituency and the wider community, I hear expressions of disappointment, concern, and disgust. It seems that the consensus is that it is extremely difficult for a certain element of the population to realise their ambition. Some people seem to think that inordinate encumbrances are visited upon them when they try to construct their residences. I hope we can reach a point where our regulations can be clearly understood by all and sundry, and that the process can be one where any client can be so informed of his obligations that he does not feel the deck is stacked against him.

In terms of aviation and Cayman Airways, I guess the story in today’s paper speaks for itself. We still have challenges. I don’t know how we are going to surmount those challenges easily. It seems that just when we think we are levelling off, we hit one air pocket or another. I hope that one day Cayman Airways can realise its potential. But I am not sure that right now, for all of the little undercurrents I am aware of, that the morale is as high as it should be.

Just recently, I was approached by some people asking me if I was aware of the fact that Cayman Airways has divested its air cargo section in Miami. This approach was by some staff members of that department. It seems to have been a breakdown in communication and these people were not as informed by senior personnel as they should have been. They had to resort to picking the 'marl road' to find snippets. This is not the best way to run any enterprise—let alone an enterprise like Cayman Airways that one would have to say (for want of a better word) is always suspect.

I have found that in these cases it is best to take the bull by the horns. Straightforward plain talking, it eliminates the possibility of any misunderstanding. The thing that makes any organisation work is staff at the highest morale at all times. But if the staff is kept in the darkness, we cannot expect to draw on their loyalty, or sincerity. So the minister will have to take care in the future that these kinds of snags are eliminated. I know the minister likes to say that he has nothing to do with the day to day running of the airline. But while that is true, he holds an obligation to ensure that the airline is run properly, and that no element among the staff is demoralised because they hear something third hand.

The Ministry of Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation is not without challenges. I am worried that for all of the strides we are making we seem to only be holding our own. Perhaps we have to pray for some great moral awakening in this country, but for all of the positive strides we make, it seems that we are not denting the problem of drugs. It has nothing to do with the minister or the services he provides. It has to do with the fact that we are losing the war.

It is incumbent upon all of us as representatives of the people, as parents, as adults in the society, to join together to stop this. I see on the streets, I read in the newspapers about ever more of our young people getting involved, getting sidetracked. It's a war, which it seems we cannot win: and yet, we dare not give up. We have to keep fighting.

The Governor mentioned that the Hawley Estate in Breakers will be completed and a residential treatment centre named Caribbean Haven, including a halfway house facility and a day treatment programme will be opened. These efforts will have to be complemented by efforts in the schools, the homes, and the churches.

I compliment all those organisations and service clubs—CASA, the National Drug Council—who give of their time and resources to combat this scourge. It is a universal scourge. But we cannot let its universality keep us from crafting a uniquely Caymanian approach to solving the problem in our jurisdiction.

One of the problems we have to surmount is this "Not in my Backyard" syndrome. I am going to tell you about an experience I had. I am angry and chagrined at these kinds of experiences, but it is not uncommon.

There is a set of young men in Bodden Town. I have known them for years. Some are in a football programme that I used to run, so I am acquainted with them closely. I saw them a few weeks ago at the basketball court at the Webster Memorial United Church in Bodden Town. The court is not lighted. So, I promised myself one afternoon that I would rap with them. I did. They are always respectful. I am not saying they are angels, you know, because they are little boys all young and healthy. When I was their age, I cut a prank or two myself, so I don't want to convey the impression that they are angels. But they always treat me with respect.

I spoke with them and they told me that they wanted to enter a tournament, but they had a problem. They didn't have any uniforms. I told them that if all they lacked were uniforms, to go ahead and make the arrangements to enter the tournament. They asked me if I could get the registration forms, which I did. I went and procured a set of uniforms.

I got them from the Community Development Officer in Bodden Town who also happens to be an officer in the basketball association. He told me the uniforms cost $400. I made payment arrangements assuming responsibility for the money myself. I got the uniforms from the gentleman and was prepared to deliver them to the youngsters.

Well, the uniforms came late so they couldn't be in the opening ceremonies. When I went back to look for them the next afternoon, they were not where we had agreed they were going to be. Instead, I saw them sitting on the fence of the Adventist Church in Bodden Town. I stopped to see what was the matter. They said that someone had run them off that court.

I asked if there was something I could do. They asked if I would go and speak with the pastor. I was on my way home (coming from the Legislative Assembly as a matter of fact), and I went. The pastor was in his office and we had a nice talk. The pastor was very sympathetic. He was discouraged because he said the church had built the court and one of the stipulations of the Planning Department was that they make the court available to elements in the community to play on. But a neighbour had complained to him that the youngsters were making noise.

Tell me please, where are you going to find 25 normal youngsters playing in silence? If you find out, there is something radically wrong!

I don't know how the neighbour could be so selfish because the court was not even lighted. That means when evening fell, the youngsters had to move anyway because there was no light. I was angry!

While I was there, I saw the occupant of the house. I don't want to cause any trouble. It's my community and I have to respect the people who come there to live. But if anyone tells me that those youngsters are bad . . . they left of their own volition and gave no trouble. In my day, trust me, I would not have left so voluntarily.

These are some of the problems we are facing now. If these youngsters are playing on the church grounds, in the sight of John Public, and we run them from there, is there any wonder that they go in the bush and do things they are not supposed to do? And then when they do all the things we don't want them to do we say they are bad and we must lock them away. We have to decide.

I have come to the conclusion that I am guilty too, perhaps even more so. If I run them off a basketball court where they are doing something constructive, then they go and smoke marijuana or do something they shouldn't do and are apprehended, taken to court and sentenced, that sentence is mine as well. And people have got to stop being so selfish! The space must be shared.

Then they say, 'The boys are bad. They're worthless.' Those little guys are still there. I saw them up to yesterday afternoon. I pity them.

This is the kind of society we are living in—Not in my Backyard! It's too good for my neighbourhood. Find someplace else to play basketball. Not beside my house. Yet, Mr. Speaker, when we have delinquency, alienation, and disenchantment, we say put them in prison. And we walk around like it's no concern of ours. No, Mr. Speaker, one thousand times no! These attitudes have to change! It is our responsibility. It is our obligation, socially, morally and otherwise. We share it. It's our community.

I suppose it will cost me a vote or two. It might cost me the election. But I don't want to be popular. I just want to be right. Wherever I see those youngsters, I have their respect. I can go to them under the most adverse of circumstances; I can talk to them and tell them to stop doing what they should not do. That is more than the neighbour who ran them away can say. This kind of double standard and hypocrisy has got to stop.

I am sorry that the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture is not here, because government is developing a basketball court at the civic centre. But government is dragging its feet and that court is not ready yet. If that court was ready, the youngsters could have been playing there.

It is no wonder that for all of the drug abuse programmes we have, for all the rehabilitative services we offer, we are still having people fall through the cracks, if people are going to run them from playing basketball in their neighbourhoods. That is why we can't win. They expect the government to tow them away to the social services. Well, the social services can't handle every one, and the police can't jail every one, if every day we keep running a few more.

I even spoke to some of the ladies of the church who themselves were disconsolate over the whole matter. They said they went and borrowed the money to put up the court because they wanted to offer a facility to these youngsters. They were disconsolate over the whole affair.

That's the kind of Cayman we are living in—Not in my Backyard—the NIMBY syndrome! And then we wonder when our youngsters become delinquent. What's wrong? We are!

The Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the afternoon suspension? We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.38 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.06 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, continuing.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you.

I am going to try to conclude my contribution this afternoon, so I am going to move rather quickly over the other issues. I want to comment on the Ministry of Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

I want to begin with Nature Tourism, which seems to be an interest in Cayman Brac. I believe this is an area which we should pay more credence to, as jurisdictions like Belize and Costa Rica (to name two) are doing very well and have several years' advance on us in this direction.

I get the Sunday New York Times, and the Galapagos Islands are always very popular among tourists. It is safe to say that we are living in the era of ecology and conservation minded travellers. People are always anxious to know that there are destinations that are conscience of preserving nature in the state it is in. I think it is something that we in the Cayman Islands, particularly Grand Cayman, have to develop with a sense of balance. We have to be aware of the fact that some development should be allowed.

I believe there are areas here that we can preserve and develop into bird sanctuaries and havens for wildlife peculiar to the Cayman Islands. I have always believed that there was scope for any entrepreneur so minded to build such a preserve from the beginning. I think it would be an attraction.

Right now, there is Cardinal D's which offers some limited drawing. It is very popular among locals, particularly those with young children. So, I am happy to see that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are displaying some interest in this. Being cognisant that they have different kinds of economic problems, I hope this can blossom into something effective for them.

Women's affairs: I believe that women in this society still have a crucial role to play. We have to ensure that we do all we can to support them. As a social commentator and observer, I want to say that manhood in the Caymanian society is changing from what it was years ago. As a result, I think that women are under greater stress now than when the men were sailors and absent from home for long periods of time. If you read the cases of domestic disputes that come to the courts, you will see that women are under duress. I think that particularly among younger people, television does nothing to remedy this. Rather, it exacerbates the problem. I am happy to see that there is a consciousness towards providing the resources that will help women realise their potential and offer them some protection.

It is safe to say that we have some challenges as outlined in the Throne Speech, but they are not insurmountable. I want to key in on some of the specific problems we are going to have to come to grips with in the next little while.

I mentioned the whole business of parity and the importance of the Caymanian people realising that they have the same worth as people from the outside. I have always said that the Cayman Islands should develop in such a way that the Caymanians are (to use the Latin word) primus inter pares, first among equals. I said this way back in 1978, and I am still saying it. Having been an emigrant myself, I can view the position from both sides of the coin.

The reason I say that Caymanians must be first among equals is that this is a very small and delicate society. This is a society that had been closed to outsiders for many years. With the advent of steamships and refrigeration, when it was no longer necessary to rewater around the Caribbean prior to taking off into the North Atlantic and Europe, the Cayman Islands became cut off, and our men had to make their own boats and make their own way. This is where we developed our maritime skills.

This is not new to you, Mr. Speaker, because this is the tradition out of which you came. Well, after that, when World War II was over and commercial shipping and industries in the United States took off, we became open again. But we have never been a society accustomed to large masses of people moving in and out. So there is a certain delicacy that has to be maintained.

I also note that we cannot develop in a vacuum. No man is an island unto himself; and no island can be great in this day and age of globalisation and interdependency. The Caymanians have some legitimate concerns about being overrun, that is why it is necessary to promote some kind of feeling of equality with Caymanians being first among equals. That is why it is important for us to get this business of the Select Committee on Immigration right. We have an obligation to those who came from outside and have given their life service here, and made this their home. We have an obligation to them, just as we have an obligation to our own people. So we cannot be insular in this.

I have to remark that I am somewhat confused with the position of the government in regard to its statement in the paper this morning about the Select Committee's report. It's unusual, that when a Select Committee report is tabled the government ministers then make a statement on their behalf. Usually the report is tabled and a report is made on behalf of all members of the committee. Well, I noticed that the government ministers made a statement stressing that the issues outlined in the paper are for discussion, and that they are not recommendations, according to the Leader of Government Business. That is an unusual departure for which I seek clarification.

I wonder if this is not spawned out of politics or expediency because I also noticed that the Chamber of Commerce has come out against this whole suggestion of a five-year rollover period. This business of the Select Committee on Immigration and its findings is too important to play political expediency. I think as members of the committee we have to be careful that we are not placing ourselves, or that the ministers are not putting the rest of us in an untenable position by saying, 'Well, this is not necessarily what we would like, or the way we see it.'

I mean, the report is self-explanatory. It says we have circulated this, now give us your feedback. Tell us what you think. But personally, I find myself in a precarious position because it seems that the ministers are saying, 'Well, you know, we put these out. These are our observations and findings, but if you don't want it this way, maybe we can doctor it.' I would welcome some comment on that because we have to settle this business.

Unofficially, these are startling figures. I am informed by someone who knows, that we have about 5,000 people under the rubric of domestic servant. We have about 3,000 common labourers. Mr. Speaker, this is an analogy you can relate to: We are in a lifeboat. It's what I call the lifeboat ethic. The lifeboat can only take so many. If you are putting in more than the capacity, you run the risk of swamping the lifeboat and everybody is going to drown.

So, the Cayman Islands is like a lifeboat. We have to operate with lifeboat ethics. Unfortunately, we can't take in everybody who would like to come in. We have to find that complement. And if we overload the boat, it's going to swamp. That's what we are trying to do now. I am not discriminating against anyone, because there are people in those categories I named who will have been here and met the criteria to apply, just as there will be people in other categories. But if we don't arrive at some idea of the complement, we are going to be in trouble. And the longer we procrastinate, the more difficult this problem is going to be.

I recall doing this exercise during 1988 to 1992. The Select Committee put it out and nothing was done. We lost all that time until now. And there are persons in all categories—blue-collar workers, white-collar workers, who have been here long enough now for us to make assessments as to where they should be. And we have to come to that conclusion.

What we have happening now is a situation where our people are quite rightly getting anxious—our own people and the immigrants. This is a glorious opportunity, and I hope that we avail ourselves of it. I have always said that the Caymanian society will be great because we have the potential of being cosmopolitan, international, and interracial. We have to find the formula that works for us, and this is a glorious opportunity.

I want to talk for a minute about this Parliament and the new millennium. I have come to the conclusion that we as Parliamentarians are excellent resource people, and this Parliament is an excellent training ground for the next generation of leaders. I am disappointed every time I look up and see the gallery empty. The only time people come . . . and young people seldom ever come, except on ceremonial and state occasions. The business of politics and public service is by no means exclusive, and it should not be. But I believe that sitting here listening to people, seeing them perform in their element . . . this is like a Temple. It is the best training and the best education young people can get.

To be a representative of the people does not necessitate any university degree; does not necessitate amassing of wealth; does not necessitate any particular intellect, but, rather, necessitates a certain predisposition and interest in improving the welfare of society.

This being an election year, I would now like to see the next generation of leaders. It is inevitable that there has to be a next generation. Some of us here are ready to max out. The smart ones of us are going to move away from the scene by our own volition. Others will be taken care of by the displacement of the democratic system. But I am concerned because the notion is that anyone can be a politician. That is really not true.

A friend of mine told me, "Roy, it takes a special breed of animal." While it requires no formal education, I think that we have to cultivate the perception and insight. Where we breakdown is that there is no bridge leading from the outside in here. I mean, you yourself know, parliamentary procedure is an intricate science. And to come in here cold turkey and be effective is almost impossible.

I would like to see us evolve to a point where those of us who have served time can be used as resource people, and young people who are interested can come and sit with us and see how we perform, see what we do, see what it takes to be an MLA, see what it takes to be the Speaker. I don't think it's good enough any more to get up on a soapbox and run an election. What are you going to do when you get in? I would like to see some interest displayed. I am sure that all honourable Members of this House would make themselves available to anyone so interested.

It is only by so doing that our democracy is going to remain vibrant and strong. It is true that this is not the normal practice in some jurisdictions, but then some jurisdictions like Britain have other entities that prepare people for parliamentary life—debating societies, parliamentary clubs. I suppose I was fortunate, because when I went to college I was a member of the Parliamentary Club and the Debating Society. In my final year, I was president of both. But there are no such things here.

It would attract a cadre of young people who would be interested and ready to take up the challenges in the next millennium. I hope we can achieve this.

The final point I would like to mention is that I sense that there is some anxiety among young Caymanians as to their future in terms of employment, both in the public and private sectors. A lot of these young people come to me. I think it is a situation that we have to give the greatest attention to because it is a situation which, if not handled carefully, will serve to discourage and alienate our young people.

One of the problems we face is that many of these entities in the private sector are multinational corporations. An incident was brought to my attention some days ago about what I call duplicitous advertisement—you know, where the advertisement that appears in the local paper is skewed one way, and the one that goes internationally is skewed the other. I view these things as a serious aberration. It's disheartening to young returning graduates who have made sacrifices, studied at colleges and universities. While they have the academic qualifications, their youth does not allow them to have years of experience.

I think that any entity operating within the Cayman Islands owes it to themselves to be frank, forthright and fair with Caymanians, particularly young Caymanians. Similarly, the public service has a responsibility to see that it plays fairly. I think the greatest challenge we face with young people who do well is the demoralisation and the discouragement. They realise that often the odds are against them. It happens not only in the white-collar world, but in other areas too.

It is incumbent upon us, the leaders and the representatives of the people, to speak out against these things when we come upon them. I have never been hesitant to be outspoken in these kinds of events.

I guess that my concluding observation (which kind of mystifies me a bit) is that the statement which was made by the Minister of Tourism regarding the civil servants call for parity a few days ago . . . I was trying to understand that statement and why it was made by a minister of government. It seems that the ministers wanted to disassociate themselves from the concerns of the civil servants. While we all know that the civil service is the responsibility of the Governor, and by inference the Honourable First Official Member, in the Legislative Assembly no politician has reason to directly interfere.

We have to be careful what message we send to our people. There are legitimate anxieties among Caymanian people. And we have to be sure to encourage those who are disciplined and who have made the sacrifices to get trained and educated. It is only in so doing that our society will remain vibrant and strong.

Mr. Speaker, as the Cayman Islands enters the 21st Century it is faced with its challenges. But they are not insurmountable. I have tried to outline them. I have tried to be fair and frank. I have stuck to what I consider the high road. Those who come behind me may not agree with what I have said. I don't expect them to. This is a democratic forum. People may accuse me of politicking, they may accuse me of being self-centred; they may accuse me of being primarily interested in myself. But no one can legitimately accuse me of not speaking the truth. That is a quality I cherish.

I believe that we have reason to be optimistic in the Cayman Islands. If we as the leaders are frank and fair, then we can surmount the problems. For the next little while, I would like to see us sincerely tackle the challenge of immigration, of crime in society, of management of our institutions. I believe that the great ship Cayman, if we the crew perform, should do well in the next while. Thank you.

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of interruption. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM tomorrow.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM tomorrow. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.32 THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 24 FEBRUARY 2000.

EDITED
THURSDAY
24 FEBRUARY 2000
10.23 AM

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Health, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Honourable Third Official Member who will be arriving later this morning. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works will also be arriving later this morning. The Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture is overseas on official business.

Moving on to item number 3 on today's Order Paper. The First Elected Member for West Bay.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 24(5)

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to give permission to waive Standing Order 24(5) in order to allow motions which fell away because of prorogation to be put on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Do you have a seconder?

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I will second that sir.

The Speaker: The motion has been made and seconded that private members' motions be allowed to be put on the Order Paper without the five-day notice. I shall now put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The motion is carried.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 24(5) SUSPENDED TO ALLOW PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS TO BE PRESENTED DURING THE CURRENT MEETING OF THE HOUSE WITHOUT THE REQUIRED FIVE CLEAR DAYS NOTICE.

The Speaker: Moving on to item no. 3 on today's Order Paper—

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can I just have a clarification on something? With regard to the private member's motion that I brought, which was not completed in terms of the debate, what would be the position with regard to that particular motion now that the members have decided to bring back other private members' motions?

The Speaker: It is my interpretation that that would be allowed to be brought forward, as the Standing Order says that nothing resolved—and that was not resolved . . . you can bring it back. But you will also be allowed to read into the records the presentation made prior to the last sitting. But they have fallen away. Is that satisfactory? Do you have any further questions?

The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Could I ask a question, sir? Now that the Standing Order has been suspended, do these motions automatically come back to the Business Paper or are the movers required to file them with the Clerk?

The Speaker: The mover is required to file them, they have fallen away. No further debate? Moving on to item number 3, Government Business—

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker!

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I am sorry that I have to seek clarification on the motion we just passed. We will submit the motions back to the Clerk, but that's all? We just need to supply it back to the Clerk and she will put it back on the Order Paper? because that is what the motion said.

The Speaker: That is correct. A new Business Paper will be issued.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: A new Business Paper?

The Speaker: Correct.

I'll entertain a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 14(3) as today is Thursday, for Government Business to take priority. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(3)

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Mr. Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 14(3) so that we may continue the Throne Speech today, sir.

The Speaker: I shall now put the Question that we suspend Standing Order 14(3) in order that the debate on the Throne Speech can continue in lieu of Private Members' Motions. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14(3) SUSPENDED TO ALLOW GOVERNMENT BUSINESS TO TAKE PRECEDENCE OVER OTHER BUSINESS.

The Speaker: Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on Friday, 18 February 2000. The floor is open to debate. The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS, ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say thanks to His Excellency the Governor for his Throne Speech and his attempt to paint a very positive impression with regard to what is going on at the present time in the country.

But, Mr. Speaker, all is not well in paradise. At the present time we have a very serious situation existing in this country, and it didn't start on the 1st January 2000. It started from last year, I think September or October, when we started having problems at Northward Prison.

Mr. Speaker, one of the impressions we have always had in this country (and probably an impression that has been shared also from those on the outside) is that the Cayman Islands is a very safe law-abiding destination. But you know, last year that image was shattered. We all witnessed what happened at Northward Prison. We saw prisoners on television and they were giving us the impression that they were in charge.

It is my information that when the police arrived on the scene they were ready to move in and take control of that situation, only to be told "no, let us handle it or await orders from us." The next morning, the news that we were faced with was that they had rioted at Northward Prison; they had burnt the prison down and prisoners were everywhere. There was total chaos in this country.

Mr. Speaker, that incident in my opinion greatly threatened our national security. The veneer of law and order, like I said before, was shattered by that incident. To add insult to injury, for a period of time it appeared every time you picked up the newspaper there was some face of some prisoner(s) who had escaped the day before.

Mr. Speaker, all is not well in paradise. We had a few convicted killers housed at Central Police Station, and if what I am told is the case, there is definitely something wrong in that some little officer decided that he was going to be responsible for moving these high security prisoners to another area at Central Police Station only to have them escape. The other excuse that I heard was that they had forced their way out through the window of the cell that they were being housed in. Mr. Speaker, who would build a facility for holding prisoners that is not properly secured? They cannot blame us, the elected representatives.

The request came here for funds to do it and it was done. We voted for it and it was done. Now, every time you turn on the television or the radio, you get the impression that so much is being done to recapture this convicted murderer and other prisoners.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, every weekend we hear of a new rash of rapes, and up until now I am not aware of any arrest for those crimes. We have had two or three murders recently. You tell me, Mr. Speaker, when was the last time we had two murders in a matter of a week in this country? Mr. Speaker, all is not well in paradise. Residents in this country today are terrified for their personal safety and the safety of their families.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission let me just read a summary of the main findings and recommendation of His Honour Sir Stephen Tumin on a report on Northward Prison. It says here:

- a) "The prison remains out of control and control cannot be achieved without lockdown. Long term security cannot be achieved without a far more secure perimeter wall.
- b) "The main causes of the trouble have been overcrowding and grievances over parole, and failure in communications with prisoners.
- c) "A new Director should be appointed as soon as possible and preferably should take office before the Commissioner relinquishes control. The present Director is in no way to blame for what has happened, but in the present situation, a new Director, probably from the English Prison Service, should be brought in. The new Director needs to have a higher standing in the structure of Cayman that has been the case in the past, and he should be of a standing equivalent to that of the Commissioner of Police."

Mr. Speaker, those are some of the recommendations of this Commissioner. I think most of those things have been addressed or are being addressed but in my opinion, when you become a prisoner you lose a lot of the rights that ordinary citizens lose.

Now, if anybody thinks that I am prepared to accept or have it justified that because we had overcrowding of the prison and some prisoners were upset with regard to the patrol system that they had a right to burn down the prison, I am not prepared to do that. If that incident had taken place in any other Caribbean jurisdiction, you would not have the same results. What you would have found, and you know I don't advocate unnecessary violence, but the authorities must remind those for which they are responsible that they are in charge. Even if it means it was necessary to knock down a few of those, they didn't have to kill them but let them know that we meant business. If that was Jamaica, Mr. Speaker, 30 or 40 of them—

All is not well in paradise. The other area of this discontent is our civil service and they have a right to be upset. Mr. Speaker, you and I are elected representatives of the people and we have always . . . and I am quite sure the situation or the concern and desire have been proposed and it's the same situation with regard to all elected Members in this House. We believe that it is time for some parity in this country, and it has always been my contention even before I became an elected representative that if a Caymanian and an expatriate are doing the same job, there should be no difference in salaries or benefits other than maybe experience. You might get an increment if you have 12 years of experience and I only have ten years, but the terms and benefits should remain the same. What we have in this civil service—and you have to work for 33½ years I think, for the Caymanian to get a little pension at the end of the day. Your expatriate or foreign contracted officers get (in most cases) maximum in salary—they come here and they are given other allowances.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when they are finished, Government says, 'I am so grateful that you took time and you came away from home and the hardship that you have endured here, I am going to give you 15% gratuity at the end of your contract.' I guess if that was all they were getting it would be bad enough, but some officers even get on top of that an inducement allowance. It is time for parity and equality in the civil service between Caymanians and expatriates.

There is no reason why with the new Pension Law that we have put in place and the new Health Insurance Law that we have in place that in the case of pension they should be a part of the defined benefits plan like everyone else because the advantage of that programme is that those pensions are portable. So, wherever they go, they can take it with them.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, when we were being briefed with regard to the salaries review programme in the Committee Room. The Elected Member for North Side specifically asked the Chief Secretary whether or not with the new proposed salaries would contracted officers continue to get the Contracted Officers' Supplement. We were told, no, that with the new salaries the Contracted Officers' Supplement would fall away for new contracted officers. I understand that position has changed now that the programme has been implemented in that it is still the intention to continue to pay new officers a Contracted Officers' Supplement.

I am told that there is no such provision in this year's budget so if any new officers were recruited under those terms they would have to come for Finance Committee's for approval. I just want to say to the civil service that whenever those requests come to us in Finance Committee that at least this member will not be supporting that request.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there was a statement read by the Minister of Tourism on behalf of the elected representatives of Executive Council basically clarifying their position. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, let me just read an excerpt from that speech, it says, "The fact is that under the Cayman Islands Constitution, section 7, the civil service is the sole responsibility of His Excellency the Governor with delegated responsibility to the Honourable Chief Secretary."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I blame Executive Council for wanting to clarify the position, but that statement . . . personally, if I were in their position I would not have made it. Do you know what it reminded me of when I heard it read? Two incidents: There was a serial killer in United States known as Jeffrey Dahmer and the incident with regard to him was that he was in the process of attempting to kill another of his victims who happened to be a young oriental man who escaped from him. He ran to the police and the police took him back to Jeffrey Dahmer and the boy was killed.

The other incident that reminded me of was when Jesus was on trial before Pilate. What did he do in order to try to abdicate himself from the responsibility? He washed his hands. He said, 'I have nothing to do with this, it is your responsibility.'

Personally, I think that sent a very negative message to civil servants and a very strong message to the office of the Governor. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am one of those representatives who calls it as I see it and I believe in this day and age we as elected representatives cannot continue to maintain that kind of position.

The other day, the Honourable Minister of Health arranged a meeting with His Excellency the Governor out of concern as he felt that elected representatives should be briefed on all that was going on in the civil service. We showed up, I think there were eight or nine of us along with the Minister. And, Mr. Speaker, I was completely surprised at the reception and the attitude that we got. It was made known to us in no uncertain terms that the civil service is the complete and absolute domain—that is, from the standpoint of His Excellency the Governor—he doesn't want any political interference and whatever he does has to be accepted as being okay. Mr. Speaker, all is not well in paradise.

I was a civil servant for seven years. In 1980, Mr. Gilbert McLean was president of the Civil Service Association, and I was the vice president. I recall the battle we fought for benefits, for parity, for a salary that reflected the worth of civil servants. You know, if the Civil Service Association was not united as far as its membership and the civil servants were not behind us united, the risk that we ran (and we were prepared to do so) was that every member of that association was going to be terminated if we had lost that battle. But we stuck together. We knew we had the civil service behind us and at the end of the day the Government conceded the call for a proper review of salaries and benefits and those benefits that civil servants today enjoy was to a large part the result of that effort.

I understand the Civil Service Association is again involved in a battle for benefits, parity, and a proper succession plan for Caymanians in the civil service. They are not having an easy time, Mr. Speaker, but the message that I want to leave with them is to stand firm, stand united, and don't settle for anything less than parity. I pledge that I am prepared to stand shoulder to shoulder with them in their effort.

Mr. Speaker, the other area that I would like to comment on is immigration. I specifically want to deal with the Immigration Board and the Trade and Business Licensing Board. I remember as a result of a private member's motion that I brought with regard to attempting to retain some businesses solely for Caymanians, I was told it was necessary for us to establish a proper Trade and Business Licensing Board that would be in a position to look at these applications in much more depth and do some research to make sure that there is no fronting and that type of thing. I welcome the establishment of that board.

But, you know, the other argument they used was that the Trade and Business License application could be processed much more speedily and professionally. Mr. Speaker, that has not been the experience. I have experienced myself that applications have taken six months to be processed. I know of a number of applications that have been there a year, two years. Why? Because of personal differences that the chairman, or the deputy chairman, or a member might have against an applicant.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the other thing that concerns me is that some members of that board have been involved in conflicts of interest. I had a young man come to see me the other day, he said, "Mr. Jefferson, let me brief you as to what my experience has been in dealing with the Trade and Business Licensing Board." He said, "My partner and I have a number of nice apartment complexes, we have gotten a sale on one of them." The two young Caymanians stood to be paid something like $2 million for that apartment complex.

The gentleman, I guess through a company, was applying for a Local (Companies) Control License. They lobbied the board members—yes, no problem—only to be advised once a decision was taken that that application was refused. You know, Mr. Speaker, the grounds on which it was refused was because a member of the board wanted the gentleman in question to come to him about holding the 60% Cayman ownership in the company. Mr. Speaker, all is not well in paradise.

I am one of those persons who hates, under any circumstances, to see anyone taken advantage of. Now, here we are talking about promoting Caymanians, providing opportunities for Caymanians, and you have Caymanians that use their office to prevent another Caymanian from an opportunity. It is wrong! I am not calling any names, but I think they know who it is that I am talking about, Mr. Speaker. It is wrong!

As far as the Immigration Board is concerned, they seem to make decisions based on kisses and favours. I think personally . . . and I tell you the truth, I welcomed the other day when we were in the Select Committee reviewing the Immigration Law—

The Speaker: May I interrupt? Please do not refer to proceedings within the Committee.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: No, I won't, Mr. Speaker, I am just going to make a general statement. The statement that I am going to make was supported in the recent report that was tabled in this House which basically says that it is the intention of dealing with issues relating to immigration in an administrative fashion as much as possible.

I personally believe—

The Speaker: If I may say further to what I was saying, the report that was tabled is an interim report. It is not a final report of the Select Committee. That is why I am cautious.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I am as cautious as you are, sir. Believe you me, I am not going to say anything. You don't have to worry.

The message that I want to get across is this: I think personally that the Immigration Board has outlived its usefulness. I see no reason why in this day and age that the Immigration Board should be dealing with applications for work permits. We have a Labour Department or a Human Resources Department and those applications or that function or responsibility should be transferred and handled under that department.

The way that we have applications for banking licences and insurance licenses handled by civil servants, it should be the same way in regard to work permits and for that part even the applications for Trade and Business Licences. I am of the opinion that the decisions of the civil servants would be fairer than those made by appointed members of the public.

I think that we should put in place policies with regard to a time frame for applications for trade and business licences and applications for work permits the same way that we have put them in place in the Planning Department. Mr. Speaker, you and I are aware that probably three or four years ago, Government took a decision to shorten the planning process and it does work very well. I think that's the kind of limit that needs to be put in place with regard to the Immigration Board and the Trade and Business Licensing Board. If you haven't made a decision on an application within a month, then it is approved or referred to some other authority who deals with it and makes a decision. It is ridiculous what is going on at the present time with regard to those two boards.

The other thing that I would recommend some considerations on, Mr. Speaker, is that amendments to work permits be handled in a much more expeditious fashion. How it now works is that if I have someone working with me that would like to get a few extra hours maybe in the evening time with you, you write the Immigration Board and it takes about eight weeks, because these applications or requests are not dealt with on a weekly basis. Now, I believe if they were dealt with on a weekly basis you would have less applications for work permits because people would be prepared to share rather than applying for a totally new work permit.

That would serve two purposes and two benefits. First of all, it would limit the number of persons that we have working here in the Cayman Islands; and two, it would provide those people who are on a work permits . . . and even though they are on a work permit and they are allowed to work, some of them don't make a lot of money because of the number of hours they get from their employer. But if they are able to share with somebody else it makes it all the better. So, I recommend that we definitely take a look at those areas of concern that I have raised.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the question now has to be asked, what do these areas of responsibilities have in common? I mentioned the prison, the police, the civil service, and I mentioned immigration. What do these responsibilities have in common? Do you know what the answer is, Mr. Speaker, they are all responsibilities that fall under His Excellency the Governor with administrative responsibility assigned to the Chief Secretary.

Now, the question has to be asked if the time has not come for consideration to assign some of these responsibilities to elected ministers. You know, we question the elected ministers with regard to their area of responsibility. But the check and balance that's in place with regard to elected representatives is that every four years they have to go back to the people and give an account of their stewardship. If they have not done a good job, do you know what happens? They lose their seat. That is not the case with regard to those responsibilities that are under an official Member.

The other sad part of this whole situation is this: It doesn't matter what areas we are having problems in, I mean, the Minister of Health could be doing a fantastic job in his area; the Minister of Education could be doing a good job in his area; the Minister of Tourism might be doing a good job in his area, but if those responsibilities that fall under Official Members are not being carried out in a very efficient, responsible manner and we still have problems in the country—crime, prison breaks and all the other discontents—it doesn't matter as the final result will be that it will still destroy the beautiful, peaceful island that we live in.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of the prison riots I was one of two elected representatives who called for the Chief Secretary's resignation. I guess I could have been convinced if things had been addressed in a very responsible, prompt manner and the situation had gotten better. In my opinion, the situation has gotten worse. Mr. Speaker, you know I am not in a popularity contest and it doesn't matter to me who supports whatever I do, I take a position and I stand by that position even if I have to stand alone. Mr. Speaker, I am still asking His Excellency the Governor to request the resignation of the Chief Secretary. Do you know why? I personally feel that he has failed in carrying out his duties responsibly.

It is simple. Mr. Speaker, every four years we have to go back and give an account of what we have done with regard to our stewardship. If we haven't done a good job, believe you me, the people will let us know in no uncertain terms and nobody should be exempt from accountability. Mr. Speaker, all is not well in paradise.

Mr. Speaker, in light of what I have just said, I am now going to delve into an area that most elected representatives refuse to delve into. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? Because over the years we have been so brainwashed and frightened, and the people have been frightened by politicians with regard to the Constitution. The question has to be asked (in light of what I have been talking about) whether or not the time has come for elected ministers to have at least administrative responsibility with regard to the staff that work with them on a daily basis. I believe the present situation is totally unacceptable. For a minister, an elected representative of the people . . . and you know the sad part about it? These civil servants all live in their respective districts. They don't live in the sky where they are exempted from these things—they are still supporters of the elected ministers in their respective districts and for a minister to have to take a position that, 'well, I don't have any responsibility with regard to the civil service so don't blame me'. Mr. Speaker, we cannot continue to operate that way in this country.

Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? We try so hard in this country to educate our young Caymanians and then what do we do? We bring them in the service and who is responsible for their welfare on a daily basis? His Excellency the Governor with absolute responsibility and authority. That cannot be right under any circumstance. The ministers must have administrative responsibility with regard to their staff. They must have some say in what goes on.

Mr. Speaker, the analogy that I would like to use, is like appointing you as my general manager at Domino's and say, 'I am sorry, Captain Kirkconnell, but any decision with regard to the staff you have to come to me or that is my responsibility'. How in the world are you going to be in a position to run that operation? You cannot!

Ministers need administrative responsibility with regard to their staff. One of the first issues that I had to deal with as a freshman politician (that was between 1988 and 1992, and you know my first time was not easy) was abortion. One of the other issues that I had to deal with was the Constitution. And at that stage, it was a proposed review of the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, being a freshman I had to be guided by those who had been here for awhile and were much more [solid] with regard to the political arena and that type of thing. I went along with the idea at that stage of not improving the Constitution.

Now, one of the dangers or one of the things that the elected representatives would first charge you with is that you would like to go independent. We have used that scare tactic over these years so effectively that if you mention the Constitution all of a sudden people go running for cover. That is not what I am advocating. I am not advocating independence.

Do you know what I did? We have other dependent territories like the Cayman Islands. We have Bermuda, Turks and Caicos, the British Virgin Islands, and I think, we have Anguilla and Montserrat that are still dependent territories. The other scare tactic we have used is that we cannot touch the Constitution because if we touch the Constitution we are going to run away business. I took time to review the Constitution of the British Virgin Islands and Turks and Caicos, the Constitution basically gives the elected representatives more of a say in what goes on in their country.

The other thing is that right now the British Virgin Islands and Turks and Caicos (I don't know too much about Bermuda but they have always done well) are kicking the stuffing out of us here in the Cayman Islands with regard to business. So, can we blame them (with the new business that they have) with the fact that they advanced their Constitution? I don't think so. It has nothing to do with the Constitution. It has to do with administrative responsibility, it has to do with professional services that are available, and it has to do with combativeness.

The position we have in this country is that we sit back because we have arrived—we have always been regarded as the "Jewel of the Caribbean" so we can sit back and just allow anything to come in and we don't have to go out and compete like everybody else for business and that it comes automatically because we have such a good reputation. We have to change that thinking in this country.

I have been here as an elected representative for 12 years (this is my third term), and do you know what? I am frustrated. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? Because it is the impression of the electorate that we have all this authority. You have a prison break, do they go and look for the Chief Secretary or the Governor? No, they come to Mr. Truman Bodden, Mr. Anthony Eden, Mr. John Jefferson, Jr. or another elected representative. If I tell them, 'well, I really don't have any responsibility.' [They say] 'What do you mean? I elected you and you are going to tell me you don't have a say in what is going on in this country?' That is the attitude out there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the concern that is shared out there at the present time is this: We are losing control of this country and we must do whatever we can to take it back. I am one of those Caymanians that as long my people are taken care of . . . and this has always been the position, if Caymanians are benefiting from what goes on in this country, if Caymanians in the civil service can enjoy the same benefits as anybody else for the same job then Caymanians don't have a problem with others coming in to fill those positions they cannot fill because of numbers. They don't mind that, Mr. Speaker. But one thing that they are concerned about and they resent (and they have the right to do so) is not being treated fairly or the same as somebody else coming from the outside is treated once they come here.

It is time for us, Mr. Speaker, to stand up in this country. I am convinced from what I have seen that there are definite improvements that we need in our Constitution. I am going to request of whoever it is that negotiates the request it is time for us to have another Constitutional Commissioner's visit the Cayman Islands for the purpose of looking objectively at our Constitution and what improvements we need in our Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other scare tactic a lot of elected representatives use is that 'John has called for independence, and he has done it overnight' but it doesn't work that way. First of all, I am not calling for independence. And there is a process with regard to the review. You are aware of what happens, Mr. Speaker—the Commissioner arrives, and he will come with some model Constitution (and it is amazing how similar they all are, that is, the Constitutions of the dependent territories), they will come, we will look and we will meet as elected representatives and put together a document that we feel is practical for our purpose here in the Cayman Islands. We will then, through a select committee, solicit the views of our people on those proposed amendments or improvements to the Constitution. Even then, the UK Government is not prepared to put in place any new Constitution. They are saying, 'we want to be convinced that these recommendations are supported by a majority of the general population or the electorate.'

So, Mr. Speaker, even after you have gone through that process—and there is provision in our Constitution now to call for a referendum on issue—you make it an issue with respect to a general election. Once you have gone through that process, the majority comes out that support those changes then you know you have a mandate from the people. You [then] send it back to the UK. They do the necessary changes, and it comes back and it's put in place.

Mr. Speaker, another problem we have in this country is this . . . and I am convinced that if we as elected representatives went into that Committee Room today and decided we wanted to deal with this issue and we decided who is going to hold what positions, it would be done. The problem we have in this country is that we don't want to see one Caymanian get ahead of the next one. Someone has to be the leader, Mr. Speaker; somebody has to be in charge. All these little countries that we look down on and we find fault with, Mr. Speaker, they have their acts together. Why can't we? Mr. Speaker, in my opinion we need to take the positive actions that are necessary for us as Caymanians to regain control of our country.

The Speaker: Are you moving on to a separate issue?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Maybe this would be a convenient time to take the morning break. We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.29 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.55 AM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech.

The Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Let me just wind-up what I was saying with regard to the Constitution by saying that we all know that we can make the necessary changes to our Constitution without dealing with the issue of independence—which I am not advocating. The Bible tells us very clearly that without a vision the people will perish. Let us as legislators be the people of vision.

Mr. Speaker, let me now deal with the critical issue of training in this country. I remember during the 1992 political campaign (I don't have a copy of the National Team's Manifesto for 1992 but . . .) one of the key issues that we were advocating was the training of Caymanians. I remember the Minister of Tourism talking about how once he got in . . . I think it was the Treasure Island Resort which was prepared to allow their facility to be used for the purpose of training by adding to members of staff persons who were Caymanian who would be interested in training in that particular industry.

Mr. Speaker, we campaigned on that issue on every platform in every district in this country. It was amazing that everywhere we went we heard employers basically picking up the same theme—'yeah, you know Mr. Jefferson, I am now working on putting together a little training programme in my water sports business (or whatever business they were in) so that we can attract and train Caymanians and encourage them into these respective areas.'

Mr. Speaker, do you remember the result of the 1992 elections? The National Team won by a landslide. It wasn't even close. In 1992, I think the First Elected Member for George Town and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town were also members of the National Team. So, there weren't many independents elected that were not a part of the . . . even the Member for Cayman Brac (who is also the Speaker of the House) I think he was one of the independents that was elected. But the message that I want to get across is that the National Team trashed the Opposition at the polls. Why? Because of the platform that we campaigned on.

We came in and elected our Ministers (and for the first time they were called Ministers rather than Members) and I felt that we were on our own. I was really impressed to be a part of such an outstanding team with that kind of platform.

Mr. Speaker, the whole country held its breath to see what new policies and what new direction we were going to go as a National Team. I cannot deny that a lot has been accomplished—we have our spanking new hospital—which I am very proud of—and not just me, Mr. Speaker, but the people of this country are justly proud of the facilities that we have.

We campaigned on the district clinics. Mr. Speaker, every district in this country now has a modern district clinic all because of the National Team under the capable leadership of the Minister of Health. But the issue that I am going to deal with—

[Inaudible comment]

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: No, I didn't say the Leader of the National Team, I said under the leadership of the Minister of Health, because that is his area of responsibility. But the issue that I am dealing with is training.

After we were elected, I recall seeing an article or a letter from the Chamber of Commerce that basically said our policy with regards to work permits was too tight. In order to appease the Chamber of Commerce and its members we relaxed the policy. And do you know what happened? Even if we wanted to now, I think it is much too late because the horse has been out of the gate so long now it is going to be very difficult for us to reverse the trend in this country. What that did was allow the employer in this country rather than having a genuine look at who's available locally as a Caymanian for employment even if they had to train him or her, it made it very easy for them to say, 'do you know something, I am not making that kind of investment here. I am going to apply for a work permit because I know I can get one and bring somebody in from the outside.'

So, Mr. Speaker, we don't hear much anymore about training in this country.

Now, with regard to training, I think, we could take the respective areas, lets say the hospitality industry—I understand that the way the Bermudans have done is that they have their own hotels and they offer their programmes to young Bermudans. They go through the training, they get their qualification, and they are put in place. That could easily be done here, Mr. Speaker. I don't think we need a hotel, but we could basically implement the same programme.

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I don't think that the Community College is the right setting for this type of training because a lot of people in their respective areas, lets say, the hotel industry and the trades (plumbing, electrical and the whole bit) other than the professionals, those who are going into management are comfortable in that kind of environment where you have students who are also pursuing the academic subjects. But we have to come up with some system that is creative in order to ensure that our people get the necessary training in these areas.

One of the most effective ways of doing this, in my opinion, is by tying training to the issuance of work permits. We can say to the employer, 'you let us have your 3 or 5 year plan with regard to your personnel needs and that type of thing. Show us what plans you have in place with regard to the number of Caymanians that you are going to employ and where they will be in 3 - 5 years' time.' Based on that, a decision is made with regard to issuing work permits.

Now, one of the proposals that came out of the review of the Immigration Law is that we have a 5-year maximum with regard to work permits. Now, I know that has not gone over very well with a lot of people. And it is mainly those people who rely probably solely on the foreign market with regard to providing or supplying their labour needs—I couldn't care less. My first commitment is to the Caymanian people. Mr. Speaker, government has to set the right example for others to follow. Now, there is an attitude that we are going to tell you what to do but we can do whatever we feel like doing. I think that government has to lead by example, by showing a genuine interest and effort in recruiting Caymanians, providing them with a proper developed succession planning and a plan that they can follow with regard to a career in these respective companies or in government.

I touched briefly on the issue of parity when I was speaking about the civil service. It is not only in the civil service where this is the problem. I mean, you go into some of the local banks and accounting firms and the situation is the same. You get an officer, let's say a qualified banker or trust officer that is brought in from the UK or Canada, and I am there as a local qualified banker or trust officer working into the same department, the chances are that the person from the outside comes in on a much better salary package than I have. They are probably given a housing allowance, a car allowance and in a number of instances they also get a lot of their expenses, you know, utilities and that type of thing, taken care of. While I as a Caymanian am given a salary and I am told, 'you go ahead and do whatever you can do on that salary because you are local and you don't need these extra benefits.'

Mr. Speaker, the Caymanian has to look for housing like anybody else. The Caymanian has to pay his electricity bill like anybody else. He has to pay for his car like anybody else and, like I said, for too long this issue of inequality has existed and we must correct it. Now, I have a funny way of dealing with issues of this nature. By that, I mean it is better for us to sit down in an amicable way with the respective employers and work out a plan in this area. But from the experience that I have seen over the last eight years, I believe that certain employers are going to have to be forced to do something in the area of training and parity. I don't see it happening any other way. Some employers are going to have to be forced to do it.

Now, I think we have to be practical and we have to be reasonable with regard to this issue of training in that we have some very small companies here and the issue should be if you can find a qualified Caymanian he must be given preference with regard to employment. But it is not practical, for example, in a little retail store where you may only need one clerk, to say you have to employ a non-qualified Caymanian and keep him on the programme in order to train him. I think we can go about the training from the standpoint of an institution where we can make that training available and once it is available, insist that a Caymanian be given preference with regard to employment. But something has to be done with regard to training.

Now, the other issue that we are faced with is that every year we boast of so many visitors to this island—I am not getting into tourism as yet, but it affects this area. We have visitors to the island and we boast of the numbers increasing every year. Mr. Speaker, the preference with regard to our visitors is that they would prefer, when they walk into a hotel along Seven Mile Beach, first of all, to be greeted by a Caymanian bellhop who is smartly dressed and very friendly; and then to be greeted at the front desk by a Caymanian because the whole idea is coming here to have a local experience. Somebody coming out of Canada does not want to be served in a restaurant by a Canadian, they would prefer to be served by a local person. So, Mr. Speaker, we need to definitely address the issue of training in this country.

I know a lot of employers are not going to want to hear this, but what has to be addressed is the issue of a minimum wage in this country. What some establishments are paying their staff is ridiculous. One of my constituents came to my office yesterday and she was telling me about an establishment along Seven Mile Beach that is paying something like $2 to $2.50 per hour, but there are promotions and the gratuities are good. Mr. Speaker, the gratuities have nothing to do with wages. You have a minimum wage that you get regardless of whether or not you get any gratuities to support yourself and your family. Gratuities are there as a result of the business that comes in and the good job that you do and that should be on top of what that person earns.

Mr. Speaker, the hotels in particular have been using scare tactics again in this area because I had two young ladies from my district come to me one afternoon and they were very upset. Their attitude was 'John, we don't want you pushing for any minimum wage because our bosses have told us that the day minimum wage comes in, we are going to cut out gratuities.' Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when you walk into the Westin, the Marriott or the Hyatt Hotel and they say, 'Mr. Jefferson, we have a reservation for you for seven nights and it is $400 - $450 a night for your stay' . . . Mr. Speaker, with those kinds of rates, are you going to tell me that they cannot do better than $2.50 an hour in wages? Once again, we, the elected representatives, are so concerned that if we make a decision with regard to what is going to happen to our people that we are going to run away people. Mr. Speaker, it is important for us to attract and encourage business to come to this country, but it doesn't matter if it doesn't benefit the local residents. So, we definitely need to do something with regard to the minimum wage.

I am prepared to acknowledge that the former Minister for Community Development, my colleague from West Bay (the First Elected Member), did a lot of work in this area with regard to a committee that looked at the whole issue. I think they even came back with a report on their findings and recommendations. Of course, it was never implemented. Why? Because we have these special interest groups who lobby politicians all the time and say, 'No, don't do that! you are going to kill everything in the country.'

Mr. Speaker, rather than us making 50% return on our investment maybe we can settle for 25% or 30%. Why? Because we have had a genuine interest in ensuring that the members of staff that work with us make an income that can support them and their family. Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker, if I was the Minister of Labour, minimum wage would have been put in place a long time ago. We talked about it for too long.

The other problem that we have, Mr. Speaker, is that you have these respective issues or responsibilities, lets say, training falls under community development, it probably falls under education, and it falls under the Ministry of Tourism. What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that because you have the respective ministries all having a responsibility for a specific subject nothing gets done because there is no consolidated effort in dealing with the issue. None whatsoever!

Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that we talk less and act more in dealing with the issues of this nature. Like I said, the most effective way for us to deal with this issue of training is by tying it with the issuance of work permits. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure you have your ear to the ground like I do, there are lots of rumblings out there right now among our people. Our people are very concerned. One of the concerns they have is overcrowding—too many foreign people among us.

Mr. Speaker, there is a limit to the amount of business that we can accommodate in this country. Every time we approve an application for a hotel we are adding at least 250 - 300 persons that have to be brought in on work permits. You tell me, Mr. Speaker, does that make sense? How does Government benefit from that? Trade and Business licensing fees! Caribbean Utilities Company (CUC) gets their share because of the utilities, but our development at this stage has to be planned development.

The other thing that I see which I don't agree with . . . what happens in a country that depends on who benefits? It has nothing to do with our overall national policy with regard to growth or development, but who benefits. That is not good, at all, Mr. Speaker. There is only so much that we can accommodate in this country. So, we need to come up with a proper plan to deal with the issue of training in this country.

Mr. Speaker, the next area I would like to go into is the Ministry of Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works. Under the Tourism Department, it says, "Efforts this year will focus on a renewed presence in the US market with emphasis placed on building and maintenance of relationships with key media and marketing partners in the international arena."

It sounds good, Mr. Speaker. Like I said, I cannot say that nothing has been done in tourism. That would be telling a big lie. I think we have done fairly well in the islands as far as tourism is concerned. But I believe every once in a while it is necessary to tweak the programme to see what additional benefits or improvements can be realised. Mr. Speaker, right now I believe that is necessary.

I was talking to a gentleman the other day that is in the tourism industry. We were talking about tourism and where are the tourists and what has happened and what needs to be happening. He said, 'You know, John, we had a 7% decline in tourist arrivals (that is, overnight arrivals) from the US.' And what happened? The Director of Tourism got a raise. He said, 'If I as a manager had a 7% fall off in my business I would have been fired.'

Mr. Speaker, I took time out to do some research and got copies of the statistics of tourist arrivals. I started looking at the trend from 1996 (because between 1992 and 1996 we had a phenomenal growth in tourism). I specifically looked also at visitor arrivals from the US. Mr. Speaker, with your permission let me just mention a few of my findings.

In 1996 (and this is arrivals by air) we had 274,725 persons arriving from the United States. In 1997, we had 278,665 persons arriving, and according to my calculation that is an increase of 1.4% over 1996.

In 1998, we had 295,175 persons arriving from United States and this is 5.9% increase over 1997. In 1999, arrivals by air from the United States were 280,260 persons. According to my calculation that is a decrease of 9.5% compared to 1998.

I also went back and looked at the overall totals of arrivals by air. In 1996, we had 373,245 persons arriving. In 1997, we had 381,188 persons, an increase. In 1998, we had 404,205 persons arriving, which is also an increase. In 1999, we had 394,534 persons, which is a decrease compared to 1998.

Mr. Speaker, included in these figures are arrivals from Jamaica. In 1996, we had 32,616 persons arriving from Jamaica. In 1997, we had 35,540 arriving from Jamaica, which is an increase. In 1998, we had 39,336 arriving from Jamaica and in 1999, we had 42,751 persons from Jamaica. Basically, what has happened is that the visitors from Jamaica play a very important part with regard to arrivals of our visitors by air.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under no circumstance should we underestimate the contributions of persons from Jamaica who visit this country. But as far as the hotel and condominiums, we know that they don't stay at those establishments, not many of them. They come here and they stay with family and friends. So, to a large extent, the increase that we have seen between 1996 and 1999 was caused by the arrival of visitors from Jamaica.

Mr. Speaker, between 1988 and 1992 when Mr. Norman Bodden was responsible for tourism, from those days I heard that we were catering to a special class of tourist in this country. I think they targeted visitors as someone who earned (even it is a couple) between $80,000 - $100,000 per year, something in that region. We can go after those kinds of people, but those are not necessarily the people who come here and spend money. I am not saying they don't, but they come here with their families and they eat at Wendy's or Burger King or Domino's or any of the other fast food places like everybody else. Why? They want to control what they spend on their visit to the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Speaker, I also took time out to talk to the managers of the major hotels along Seven Mile Beach. I got most of them except one (which doesn't surprise me) and basically just asked them what's going on with regard to tourism and the occupancy rate and that type of thing. At one establishment, the occupancy rate was like 78% this year compared to 89% the same period last year. At another establishment, the occupancy rate at the present time is like 70% (and we must keep in mind that we are talking about high season, which is between December and April in the Cayman Islands). At that same establishment last year, the occupancy rate was in the 80's. The last establishment that I spoke to said that their business in January was off 15% compared to last year.

I asked them, 'what do your advance bookings look like?' We are talking about February, but up to this point a lot of them cannot predict what March or April will look like.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are a number of factors that affected tourism to a certain extent this year and one of the most popular excuses is Y2K. I believe it did affect the decision with regard to a lot of persons travelling, even me. I would have loved to have gone to Florida for maybe a New Year's concert or something, but I dared not take the chance. I believe that was a lot of people's attitude—they were just not prepared to take the chance of travelling with all of the hype that went on with regard to the possibilities of Y2K.

One of the managers that I spoke to mentioned, 'You know, John, when I see an advertisement for the Bahamas on national television I get the urge immediately to want to jump on a plane and go to Bahamas for a visit.' He said, 'I believe that our advertisements that we are running at the present time are little. They need some oomph.' 'They need a little change, a new slogan, a new theme.'

Mr. Speaker, in this business, and tourism is a business . . . one of my constituents said to be the other day, 'John, they can talk about banking and they can talk about a lot of other things in this country, but if tourism does not continue to do well in this country we are all in trouble because only a certain amount of persons are offered employment by the financial industry.' But everyone else in some way or the other is affected by what happens to tourism in this country. He said that we need to look at our ad campaigns with a view of being creative in updating it so it becomes a little more attractive.

Tourists continue to complain about the high cost in this country and, in particular, they complain about the cost of food and beverages, that is, beer, wine and all the other mixed drinks.

The other thing that this person mentioned to me, which I thought was interesting, was that visitors would like to hear more Caribbean music. Now, I don't go to nightclubs so I don't know what they are playing out there—but it is not Caribbean music as far as I am told. In other words, if they come out of United States, they don't want to hear rock music or rap or whatever—they want to hear what is available locally.

We have some very good local musicians and I remember some time ago a number of them came to me talking about the difficult time they were having with regard to finding employment, in particular among the hotels. What the hotels would do is to employ a band from the outside that came in and played the music from whatever country they came from. So, according to this gentleman, our visitors would like to hear more Caribbean music on their visit here.

The passing comment that he made was this, 'The islands have great potential, but it must be planned.' In other words, our development, how we move forward in tourism, must be planned.

Mr. Speaker, under the Public Works Department, it says here under capital works, "The major capital building projects scheduled to be completed this year include [and I just highlighted a few of them]:

- ♦ "Phase 1 of the Breakers Drug Rehabilitation Centre.
- ♦ Construction will also commence on the final phase of the new hospital project which will provide new facilities for mental health, geriatrics and hospice care.
- ♦ Also, Phase 2 of the Breakers Drug Rehabilitation facility is also planned and the West Bay Civic Centre and Hurricane Shelter."

I want to say that I think one of the major challenges that we have in this country at the present time is the issue of illegal drug abuse. I pleased (because it was a part of my political campaign from 1998) about the possibility of having local rehabilitation facilities for our people who find themselves in the unfortunate position of suffering from drug addiction.

I know the Minister of Health had a very difficult time trying to get approval from Planning, and from the residents, for the rehabilitation facility in Breakers. I recall that the process took about four to five years. But I am pleased to hear that finally, I think by this summer, the facility will be available for use in the treatment of our people who suffer from drug addiction.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned before and I will mention again, one of the greatest threats that we have in this country is from this particular area. Persons who suffer from illegal drug addiction are involved also in a number of the crimes that are committed in this county—burglary, theft, and even probably murder. When these persons need a fix—most of them have graduated from ganja or marijuana to cocaine, crack, crack cocaine—they will do whatever they have to do in order to get that fix.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a very strange philosophy in this area. I know the experts have said that unless somebody wants help there is no good for us offering them any help. What are we supposed to do as a community? Are we supposed to just allow them to continue to walk through the districts peddling their illegal drug consumption? And should we as a country just stand by until they say to us, 'Boy, Mr. Jefferson, I really need help so I am coming to you for help?' I believe personally that if you wait until somebody who suffers from drug addiction recognises that they need help, you are going to be treating very few of them. But I am hoping that the courts (where a lot of these persons end up because of crimes) will be able to demand that as a part of their sentence, if not all of their sentence, be served at the local drug rehabilitation centre where they could be counselled, where they can be detoxicated and where they can get help for their very serious addiction.

Mr. Speaker, we have been talking about the West Bay Civic Centre and Hurricane Shelter project for a very long time. I think since that 1992 it was supposed to be a possibility. As a matter of fact, if I am not mistaken we did have the groundbreaking for it about four or five years ago and up until today, we are still talking about a civil centre/hurricane shelter for the district of West Bay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have the assembly hall for the West Bay Primary School. I recall about a year or two ago, we decided to defer our civic centre in order to make sure that there was money available for our assembly hall, which I think was desperately needed. I am very proud to see the facility that our West Bay Primary School now has in place for that purpose.

I don't know what the latest statistics are, but in the district of West Bay we probably have about 10,000 people. The district of West Bay extends up to the Governor's Residence or a little beyond. In that district, we don't have a proper facility for any purpose, Mr. Speaker, social or otherwise. Now, that does not speak well for us first of all as West Bayers or as a people. We don't even have a district library in West Bay and the whole idea was that we would get a civic centre and then convert the old West Bay Town Hall into a nice district library. I think that is a good plan but let's get on with the idea or the issue of a civic centre in West Bay.

Mr. Speaker, once again, if I were in charge, it would have been done! We talk and we talk—it would be done. The First Elected Member for West Bay during Finance Committee moved a motion that we make available whatever funds we need this year in order to get on with that project. I think it was (if I am not mistaken) something like $350,000 in the budget for that purpose. It is estimated to cost in the region of $4 million. I believe that from the plan that I have seen, even though they have been scaled down a bit from what we originally proposed because of the cost, it would be a good facility once it is done but I am anxious to see to it that it is done.

The Minister of Tourism who is the Minister of Works has promised that it is going to be done. As a matter of fact from last year, he said, 'John, I guarantee it is going to be done.' I told him that I would be like Doubting Thomas—I will believe it when I see it. That is still the position I am taking, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the civic centre for West Bay. . . Mr. Speaker, I am going on to another subject if you want to take the lunch break.

The Speaker: I think this would be a convenient time to take the luncheon break. We shall suspend until 2.15 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.49 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.44 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. The Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John D Jefferson: Thank you Mr. Speaker.

When we took the lunch break I was dealing with the Capital Building Projects and I ended on the issue of the West Bay Civic Centre and Hurricane Shelter.

Before I go on to Road Works, let me just add an additional comment that I should have made under training in respect to the minimum wage. I did mention that the former Minister for Community Development, that is the First Elected Member for West Bay, had put together a committee to deal with the issue and they had come up with certain recommendations in this area. But, as I understand it, those recommendations did not come forward because he did not have the support in Executive Council.

Under Road Works, I see where it is planned that Phase 1 of the Crewe Road Bypass will continue. From what I am hearing, the work is well underway, not starting at the Crewe Road area but much further into the district of Bodden Town coming down, with the idea of linking with this particular junction in order to ease the traffic situation coming from the eastern districts. The improvements that we have made so far to our road network, in particular the Galleria Bypass of the Harquail Bypass, has made a tremendous difference in traffic congestion coming from West Bay or in the Seven Mile Beach area.

I am aware as well that there is a serious traffic problem in the mornings and afternoons coming out of the eastern districts. The experience is that if you are not on the road by 7 AM—and sometimes that is even too late depending on where you are coming from—you can spend maybe an hour to an hour and one half in traffic on your way into George Town. I am pleased that we are moving on with the Crewe Road Bypass and I am proud of the calibre of work that has been supervised and performed by the Public Works personnel, especially the Roads Programme.

Mr. Speaker, unless I see it and I am able to envision what that looks like you cannot explain to me. For example, the bypass near the A. L. Thompson Depot, I could not in my wildest imagination perceive the way it now looks. And, the thing about it is that it is such an efficient and practical addition to the road network in that area—everything runs smoothly. A lot of credit must go to Mr. Mark Scotland who is our Roads Engineer, who is a young, qualified, competent Caymanian, and to his staff for the quality of work being done in that particular area. I am quite sure that no less will be done with regard to the extension leading out of the eastern districts.

The other area that I would like to look at under the Ministry of Tourism, Commerce, Transportation and Works is the Vehicle Licensing Unit. I am very pleased to hear that plans are moving on to establish another satellite unit of the Licensing Department in Bodden Town that would be in a position to serve the residents of the eastern districts, that is, East End, North Side and Bodden Town. From experience, the one that has been established in West Bay works very well. It has convenient hours in that you can go home in the evening, take a shower, have something to eat and go back later on and take care of the licensing of your motor vehicle right there in the district. At most times there is no problem with crowds and, as I have said, it works very well. So, the addition of another satellite unit in Bodden Town will be a tremendous asset with regard to that particular unit.

The other thing that I am very pleased about is that the Vehicle Licensing Unit, is headed up by some young, very competent Caymanians, in particular from the distract of West Bay. They do a tremendous job in carrying out a very professional service from that particular unit of government.

One of the functions also of this Unit is the licensing of taxis, tour bus operators, and buses that are authorised to travel back and forth between the districts and in handling of our passengers and visitors to our islands. The issue of transportation has always been an area that has had a lot of interest because (like me, for a year and one half) many of our people depend on a livelihood from that particular service or industry.

We don't seem to be able to get it right from the standpoint from doing what is fair and equitable for all parties involved. By that, I mean with regard to the Port, we get constant complaints that the tour buses are taking away all of the business. The independent taxi operators don't get enough business. There is a constant fight and a constant challenge. One of the reasons why I pushed so hard for some type of licensing system to be put in place was because we would then be in a position to control the numbers and, by controlling the numbers, you give those persons who are employed in those areas more of an opportunity to earn a respectable living from that service.

One of the areas that I hear a lot requests from is the bus permit system that allows licensed buses to operate within the districts on respective routes. According to the Regulations, this particular service or licence was first of all to be for Caymanians only. That has not happened, we have others licensed who for some reason or another cannot find a Caymanian to run their particular vehicle. Once we start making exceptions, that particular group of persons will grow beyond what we would like. But, the problem that we are having now is that we have too many people licensed on some of these routes, which makes it more difficult to earn a descent living.

One of the other requirements to be put in place, I think from 1992, was that in order to purchase an additional bus you had to have the approval of the Ministry responsible (and in this case, the Ministry of Tourism and Transport). The idea was that you would control how many buses or vehicles any particular group or individual might have available at any time for introducing into this particular service. I was a bit surprised when I requested the statistics with the information that I got. I don't know on what basis bus permits are issued, but there is definitely something wrong with the statistics because a number of persons (and I am talking about West Bayers) . . . some Caymanian persons in my district have come to me and said, "John (or Mr. Jefferson), I have a bus, I would love to be in a position where I can get a bus permit in order to run it between West Bay or George Town." Or, "My husband needs something to do and I would let him drive it if I can get a permit for him." The problem we ran into when I went to bat for them was that we were told that there were no more positions available on the route to West Bay in particular.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, if it is controlled, you are able to make an honest decent living from this area. But, when I called for the statistics, I was surprised . . . and maybe the Minister can give us the answer why it was done this way. I will read some statistics to you Mr. Speaker and make some general comments.

District of West Bay: Route 1:

| Operator  | # of buses                                     |
|------------------|-------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave Kelly       | 4                                                     |
| Robert Ebanks    | 1                                                     |
| Mitchell Powery  | 1                                                     |
| Herby Ebanks     | 1                                                     |
| Robert Jefferson | ?? [2 - question marks: I don't know what that means] |

District of West Bay Route 2:

| Operator  | # of buses |
|------------------|-------------------|
| Dave Kelly       | 4                 |
| Robert Ebanks    | 1                 |
| Luke Berry       | 1                 |
| Manley Berry     | 2                 |
| Robert Jefferson | 1                 |
| Arlene Forest    | 1                 |
| Eldon Ebanks     | 1                 |
| Turley Ebanks    | 1                 |
| James Barnes     | 1                 |

Mr. Speaker, what is the reason why one operator from West Bay—Dave Kelly—has permission to operate eight buses?

Now Mr. Speaker, how I envisage this happening or operating is that if I had a bus of my own that I wanted a licence for, I would be given a licence to operate my bus. But this young man . . . maybe the Minister can answer when he gets up. What is the logic behind giving one person eight permits when other persons on the waiting list—I am told up to a year—cannot get an opportunity to get one bus permit?

Mr. Speaker, I don't know how much you operate in West Bay but it is my information that one of the reasons behind it may be because Mr. Kelly and his family are great supporters of the Minister of Transport. Now, if it ended there maybe it would be bad enough . . . and I did not take the time to check but I am told that that same individual also has permits at the Port Authority for another three or four buses. It cannot be justified under any circumstances in my mind when being in the industry for a year and a half, I know how difficult it is to earn a living in that area and also the opportunities that are available in that area. They must be shared equitably among the people who are interested in operating in this particular industry.

As I said, I hope the Minister can say why he feels that one individual can have eleven or twelve buses when other Caymanians who have an interest in having at least one permit, cannot get one. The Minister and I both know that there are persons who could not get a licence because too many were issued to one individual. Mr. Speaker, as I started by saying, all is not well in paradise. Not even in the transportation industry.

I have said enough about Tourism, let me move on to the Ministry of Education, Aviation and Planning. Under Training it says, “The Ministry intends to continue the National Training Initiative that began as a joint project with the Ministry of Community Development some years ago. A new Training Board will be convened to guide the formulation of a national training policy.” He said, “The ministry is currently investigating the development of training standards which establish goals towards which an organization can work and benchmarks against which progress can be measured.”

One of the problems that we have in Government is that there is very little succession planning. In other words, the First Elected Member for George Town, if he has a responsibility and it is transferred to me in a different Ministry, rather than me continuing to expand and improve on what I received from the First Elected Member for George Town, I have to come up with a new plan myself. That does two things: First of all, it delays the programme and in the long run very little or nothing is accomplished; and it also adds to the cost of the particular plan. We have to get on with this and get away from the idea that unless we came up with the idea that it is not a good one and be prepared to take the best of what is available and improve upon it.

I recall that the former Minister for Community Development during his first term, between 1992 – 1996, had a Manpower Survey done. He had a committee that was responsible for looking at those findings, coming back with recommendations with regard to the way forward. A lot of time and effort was spent in that exercise. I will tell the truth, it made me feel good for the first time thinking that something was going to be done with regard to training in these Islands. He (the Minister) lost his responsibilities it went to another Minister and today—some three or four years later—we are still talking about initiating a programme for training. Mr. Speaker, I think we have to get beyond talking and we need to get down to some positive, concrete actions in dealing with the issue of training of Caymanians. Training is a key to our continued success as the progressive and vibrant society we are known as.

Under Education it says here, “the national curriculum continues to be developed with key Stage 3 and 4 being crafted in maths, Science and language arts. Textbooks for years 1 – 6 have been developed in social studies and they should be ready for distribution to schools during this year. A comprehensive plan for the inclusion of vocational education will be developed for those students not interested in a traditional college education.”

Mr. Speaker, this is not my area of responsibility, but I remember when the Strategic Plan for Education was launched. There was a lot of hype; experts were brought in to guide the programme. It involved a lot of residents and Caymanians alike in the process and they come up with some key strategies. But it appears that we are having a problem moving the programme forward. Some of the problems that I feel this particular strategy might be suffering from is first of all, that certain individuals have been appointed to carry out these responsibilities that have not been given the proper training necessary. I have a bachelor's degree, but I will tell you the truth, I would not want to be placed in that kind of position without first being exposed to how to go about getting the job done. I believe that might be one of the problems for the programme not moving ahead as swiftly as possible.

The other thing that in my opinion may be a cause for the delay is that I understand we have a basic core of persons responsible. But it takes more than them to get the job done. And what we are doing is we are expecting or depending on teachers, I understand on a part-time basis, coming in and assisting with moving the plan forward.

Mr. Speaker, since education is such an important issue in this country, my approach would have been invest and spend whatever money is necessary, employ as many persons that are necessary in order to move the plan forward as quickly as possible. We are now four or five years later and we are still talking about the implementation of some of these strategic plans for education.

The other approach that I think we should have taken is . . . let us take the subject of mathematics. It is pretty universal. I see no reason why we had to develop a special curriculum in the area of mathematics specifically for the Cayman Islands. It is very possible that you could have gone and found a model that you felt was practical and applicable to our situation here and implemented it after some adjustments or refinements. But I don't think we needed to reinvent the wheel in all these different areas.

I am reminded that Ministers are not responsible for personnel, but maybe I should gear this directly to the Chief Secretary or His Excellency the Governor: there has to be somebody, if that person is not already employed, who is a coordinator of the whole programme to push the programme along. Set proper deadlines for things to be accomplished. There must be benchmarks on which these things can be measured and you move ahead accordingly. Mr. Speaker, the danger we run into is that if we don't find soon a way of implementing some of these key strategic recommendations in education, by the time they are implemented they will probably be outdated.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to education, I am also glad to see that a review of the Education Department has been commissioned. And I must add that I eagerly await the findings. I am also confident in adding that I have no reason to believe that the review will not be carried out in a very professional and objective manner. But the conclusion that will be arrived at is the same one that I have arrived at with regard to my dealings with that particular department. And I was thinking the other day what other department I should compare it with—I couldn't. From my dealings with that particular department, I have come to the conclusion that it is one of the worst run and one of the most unprofessional, inefficient departments in Government.

We spend a lot of money and every year we come down here for a huge budget for education but are we getting value for our money spent in this area? I have come to the conclusion that we are not.

The one thing that we have going for us in the area of education is that we have good teachers in the classroom. I am of the opinion that there needs to be a revolutionary approach to the Education Department because some serious but positive changes need to be made to the administration in that department.

Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased to see that we are moving ahead with the plans for the Lighthouse School. It is scheduled to open in the fall of this year and it will be fully completed in early 2001. It is going to cost us a lot of money to put that facility in place, as matter of fact, much more than I anticipated it would cost. But this is an area that we need to really get on with because the Lighthouse School deals with and schools our children with special needs.

I didn't see it mentioned in the Throne Speech but another area of special needs as far as education is concerned is the Sunrise Centre in West Bay. Mr. Speaker, miracles have been performed with regard to those students that attend that institution in our district. I must commend the members of staff of that facility for their dedication and efforts as they work tirelessly from day to day in meeting the needs of our students with special needs in very inappropriate, cramped and congested facilities.

I have visited there on a number of occasions and I am amazed at what they are able to accomplish under such poor conditions. Now, like I mentioned before, the former Minister for Community Development when he was there between 1992 and 1996, I think this fell under Social Services. I am aware that there was initiation by him to try to get a facility for us in West Bay and, you know, one of the facilities that was identified . . . Mrs. Edith Ebanks came to see me at my MLA Office in the West Bay Town Hall just last week. We were talking about it. I asked her if she was still interested in selling her property for the purpose of converting it for a new Sunrise Centre. She said, 'John, I am definitely still interested.' But I am aware that the former Minister did get some money put into the budget, something like $200,000 (even though he wasn't directly responsible) for us to move it ahead.

The problem we had is that people from the Lands and Survey Department went down there, appraised the property, and she was offered something like $168,000 for her property. Now, if you know the residence of this lady that I am talking about, she probably has three or four bedrooms plus there are two large pieces of adjoining property that could be used for the same purpose. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, it would be more than enough space to accommodate the needs of the Sunrise Centre. One of the concerns that the residents and parents, as well as members of staff, have is concerning the moving of that particular facility out of the district of West Bay because a lot of the students there are West Bayers.

Mr. Speaker, this lady still has an interest in selling her residence for this purpose and she said, "John, I will take $350,000 or $375,000 for my property."

I asked her if she was prepared to negotiate and provide Government with an instalment plan. She said, "Sure I would."

The Government could give maybe $200,000 - $250,000 and then extend the balance over a year or two years and you have gained a facility that you can use. You would probably have to do some renovations to make it suitable for the purpose, but the members of staff of the Sunrise Centre have been there and they have seen the facility and they love it. It is just across the road from the sports field for the West Bay Primary School so as far as exercise and that type of thing it is an ideal location. I am asking the Minister of Education to look seriously at acquiring that property for that purpose.

The other thing that we need to do with regard to that facility is to take a serious look at the salary and benefit of the staff there. This has been a campaign of mine since 1988. The difficulty that they have there is that you have some members of staff who do an excellent job but don't have a professional qualification—they don't have a degree in teaching or whatever but they are capable of doing the job. So, over the years it has been held against them with regard to their salaries. Mr. Speaker, because of the valuable role that they play with regard to our society in dealing with our students or young people with special needs, this needs to be addressed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you had to bring in people from the outside (and government is as guilty of this as anybody else), you would probably have to first of all pay whoever you bring two or three times what your Caymanian members of staff there are earning. And there is no guarantee that they will do a better job than what these persons are doing. First of all, they are Caymanians and nobody cares for your own like your own.

The other thing that needs to be done is that we need to look seriously at providing proper funding for equipment and facilities for that school. They need all kinds of equipment in order to be able to do the programme or do what they need to do with regard to these students with special needs.

Mr. Speaker, generally looking at education as a whole, as it relates to public schools, I think personally it is very sad to see that we need to, first of all, station police at our schools. What has happened to us over the years is that we have allowed persons from the outside to come in here and influence our way of life.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you and I both know that when we were attending school (I attended public school), if you stepped out of line, you were dealt with and in most instances very severely with a strap that was mainly administered by the principal of the school. Now, when I went to Secondary Modern, every classroom was basically responsible for its own corporal discipline. How in the world are you going to run a school . . . how in the world are you going to run a society that doesn't have such discipline in place? It is very, very difficult indeed and I think where we went wrong was when we started recruiting staff, that is teachers, other than from the Caribbean because the other Caribbean countries, their traditions and way of life has been very similar to ours. The UK members of staff like the UK have totally different concept with regard to control in the classroom or elsewhere. And I think we need to do whatever we have to do in order to address and correct the present trends that I see in our public schools.

Now, in the private schools we don't have those problems. For example, at Wesleyan Christian Academy before you child is enrolled you sign a little agreement that basically says, 'I agree that if my child needs corporal discipline that it can be administered' under very controlled conditions. For example, you cannot paddle a child without someone else being there as a witness. There are a certain number of swats that you can give that child because you don't want to be accused of child abuse. And that is very important. But I think we have gone to the extreme on the other side in order to avoid any semblance of child abuse. We have said, 'let's get away from all forms of corporal discipline' and as a society, we are paying for it today very dearly.

The other thing that I think we need to insist on in our public schools is the reintroduction of daily religious devotions. I have asked the students from the middle school what they do on a daily basis. How it works, you are in a house so the head of house gets together in a little group and talks about what is going to happen in the school this week and discuss matters and issues and then they may say the Lord's Prayer. It may not necessarily be someone who is religiously minded who is in charge of these particular responsibilities.

Now, I brought a motion a few years ago asking the Minister of Education to consider appointing school chaplains for that purpose. I know our schools are big, but we have huge assembly halls. Why is it that they cannot do today what we used to do at the beginning of every day, where you get into general assembly and whoever is in charge reads the scripture and you sing a couple of songs and you pray? It keeps you sober and conscious that there is a higher authority that we all have to answer to. We can no longer continue to allow people from the outside to come in here and influence us negatively in these areas.

You know when I graduated from Morgan State University in 1973, I made one conscious decision. Do you know what that was, Mr. Speaker? My fiancée at the time basically wanted to stay in the United States as she was a United States citizen. I would have probably ended up on Wall Street or someplace like that, but I had no real desire to work and live in any place other than here in Grand Cayman. Do you know why I came to that conclusion? Because of the problems and the issues you are faced with in those societies that we don't have to bother with here in the Cayman Islands.

The other thing is that there you are a foreigner. If you go to the United States today and you look for employment, you have to take whatever is available to you. You don't go there and demand anything—you cannot. They will tell you straight and plain 'Here, particular jobs are reserved specifically for Americans'—truck drivers, heavy equipment operators . . . those are the kinds of areas that most Caymanians once they migrate to the United States had to do in order to earn a living.

The reverse is not true, Mr. Speaker. When people come in from the outside . . . they are telling us what position they want, what salaries and benefits they are going to settle for. What do we as Caymanians do? Oh, we are so thankful that they came in, you know. They came away from their beautiful country and that type of thing. The conditions that they live under here . . . to come to this little backward place in the Caribbean. So, we are so thankful that we would give them anything they wanted, and that is what we are dealing with this morning with regard to the civil service. It is no longer necessary, we are no longer the little country that time forgot.

Mr. Speaker, whenever a job is advertised overseas that's available in the Cayman Islands, in most cases they have a long list of applicants. Do you know why? Because we enjoy such an impeccable reputation here in the islands. People want to come here to work, but they must come in under our conditions. They must come and they must fit into our way of life, our belief system, and the whole bit.

I understand we have in the Cayman Islands something like 150 different nationalities—as far away as South Africa. And what they all do is that they all bring their own systems, their own beliefs. What happens is that we as Caymanians, those of us who are in authority are saying, 'Well, you know, we have to accommodate everybody.' So, like the little boy, and the man who had the donkey, we try to please everybody. What happens is that we are all going to fall into the river at the end of the day.

Mr. Speaker, if there is ever a time in this country when we needed strong leadership, it is today, in every area. Set the conditions! Do you know what happens once people know what the rules of the game are? They will comply.

Are you going to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that if you have a student or a parent, let's say in this case who is Pakistani or Indian, applying for admission for his child into a public school and he is told, 'well, you know, in order for your child to be as a student in this school they have to attend religious devotions daily at the school.' Do you think they could say, 'well, because that is the condition we don't believe in that is not going to happen?' No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. People comply with the rules and those who are not prepared to do so—tough—thank them for their time and make them find alternative facilities or services. We don't need those kinds of people here in the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to move on to a different area now, if you want to take the afternoon break.

The Speaker: Yes, I think it would be appropriate. We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.40 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.09 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech.

The Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I would like to wind up my comments on the Ministry of Education by commenting briefly on the enrolment at the Community College. Its says here, “Enrolment at the Community College of the Cayman Islands continues to grow with more than 225 students enrolled in the associate degree programme. These students are gaining ready admissions to overseas institutions and those attending American universities are awarded two years of advanced standing.”

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that the Community College admission has increased. But like I mentioned before, I don't have a problem with Government granting scholarships for Caymanian students who want to attend that institution or ICCI. I believe that there are Caymanians who for one reason or the other would not be in a position to go overseas but have a desire to improve or advance their education and they should be given that opportunity to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I do not under any circumstance agree with a policy that says that you must (if you are on a government scholarship) spend your first two years here at the Community College. If it was a policy where everybody was required to do so, that would be one thing but the exceptions are people who get an SAT of 12,000 - 13,000. What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that we will go right back to where we were when I was a student here in the Cayman Islands where the elite of the society, the privileged, would be entitled to certain benefits that the ordinary student would not enjoy. That is not right. So, I do not discourage scholarships being available for Caymanians who want to attend the Community College, but I will not under any circumstance agree to a policy where your first two years must be spent at the Community College here in the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Speaker, moving on the health services. I am pleased to see that the construction of the inpatient medical health and geriatrics facility will commence this year on the site of the Cayman Islands Hospital. This is a service and a facility that we badly need here in this country. A large number of our people are getting up in years and also there are some people (a number of them among us) who need mental health services. Now, I expect and I am hoping that in addition to a facility, we will also do something with regard to improving or increasing the trained personnel that are qualified to be deal with people who suffer from mental illness.

I am pleased to see that plans are in place to significantly increase the revenue collection at the hospital through an improved computer service system in the Accounts Department and that efforts are being made to collect outstanding debts owed to Government at the hospital. Mr. Speaker, our people, and others who take advantage of the services that are available from the hospital, must understand that those services have to be paid for.

Now, with the advent of national insurance this becomes a much easier task in that everybody will be required to have health insurance. It would be very convenient when you go to the hospital for medical services to present your health insurance card and be charged on your plan through the insurance companies. Mr. Speaker, the health services must, as far as possible, be in a position where they can carry their own weight financially.

Under Social Welfare, they say here, “Summer programmes with recreational, educational and cultural activities will be provided in August in every district of Grand Cayman and in Cayman Brac to help counteract inappropriate behaviour in juveniles.” This is a good programme as I have seen it in action in my own district in West Bay especially during the summer when the kids are out of school. It is a very positive thing to be in a position where we can offer our young people healthy activities to get involved in during their break from school.

Mr. Speaker, one of the problems that I believe we suffer from in this country, and it permeates every aspect of our society, is the lack of discipline in the society. I believe that we need to come up with another alternative to the Cayman Islands Marine Institute (CIMI) with regard to dealing with our juveniles. For some time some type of cadet core has been advocated, where those juveniles who live among us that have behavioural problems and that type of thing can be forced by the courts to be enrolled in this particular programme where they are taught discipline and different life skills in order to hopefully correct their ways and become responsible citizens in our society. So, I think, a serious look must be paid to the idea of a cadet core for our young people in this country especially our young people with problems.

Under Community Affairs, it says, “Monthly financial assistance to 574 ex-servicemen was increased in January 2000 from $250 per month to $400 per month.” That is good, Mr. Speaker, that we are now in a position where those persons who could do so made a contribution with regard to the safety and security of our country and our freedom as a whole. But the other area that assistance is given through is the monthly subsistence allowance through the Social Services Department. Mr. Speaker, there is a process that has to be followed with regard to those requests. You fill out an application, it goes to Social Services Department and they then assign an officer from the district to come out and talk to the respective applicant to determine what their true financial position is. It then goes back and they make a recommendation to a committee, I understand, who makes a final decision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, especially in my district of West Bay, I handle a large number of these requests or applications. What I am surprised at is the length of time it takes for a decision on these respective requests. There are some applications right now that have been outstanding for a year. It is a good thing that those persons were not dying of hunger; otherwise, they would have died by now. I believe a greater effort should be made to see to it that the applications are dealt with in a very expeditious manner so the people who are applying know as soon as possible whether or not Government is in a position where they are prepared to offer their financial assistance.

Mr. Speaker, people are very proud and most people if they don't need it will not apply for it. So, for them to have to go through the embarrassment of even admitting that they need financial assistance is bad enough. But once they have, they have to wait for six months to a year before a decision is made with regard to the request. I think that is unfair. I would urge the Minister for Health to maybe have a word with the Social Services Department with regard to improving this particular process.

Under the Ministry of Youth, I really don't have a whole lot of comments, but I would like to just comment briefly on a few areas. The first is under Labour and Labour Relations, it says, "A Labour Inspector/Accountant's post has been approved. This officer will primarily deal with all establishment collecting gratuities to ensure compliance with the Law."

I am very pleased to see this. This is an issue that I have campaigned for since 1988 and I believe that the person should be a qualified accountant, someone with the ability to interpret financial statements and has the ability also to go there basically as an auditor and look at the books. His services would be easily paid for because while he is there those establishments that, for example, collect tourism accommodation tax, one of his responsibilities could also be to check to make sure that the tourist accommodation tax returns are being done in a very fair and proper manner.

I welcome this appointment, and I look forward to seeing the person in the post to look after this particular service. One of the problems we have especially in the hospitality industry, like I mentioned before, is that the basic salary is not very good at all. The hours are terrible. You are making $2.50 an hour and you work 20 hours a week and at the end of two weeks, you collect $150 - $200 to take home to take care of your family. The way they make their money is through gratuities. Mr. Speaker, we all acknowledge that we continue to have a problem in this area. We have heard of abuses in this area by managers of these respective properties who collect these funds. We must see to it that gratuities go to those persons it is intended to go to—which are people other than management.

I am very pleased to see that (and I know some people are going to say that they don't agree with it) finally the Hyatt Hotel has been pulled in to answer to what they have done with regard to the payment of gratuities over the years. Since 1988, I have always gotten the impression that special provisions have been made for them with regard to paying even their managers a gratuity.

The other day when I was doing my research for my motion on gratuities, I discovered that at the Marriott and the Westin, the hourly gratuity was close to $6 and at the Hyatt Hotel, it was $2 or less. Mr. Speaker, there is definitely some reason, and this was because the Hyatt continued to pay managers a gratuity. So, I am glad to see that the Labour Office is moving ahead to correct this very unfair position.

Under Sports, Mr. Speaker, it says, "The Minister will continue to develop and upgrade sporting and recreational facilities in Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac and will review and upgrade the National Sports Policy for the islands." That is good. I know a lot of people have criticised the National Team Government with regard to the sporting facilities that have been built in this country since 1992. But sports play a very vital role in our society with respect to providing healthy wholesome activities for our young people. I have spoken to the Minister of Sports and she has agreed to move on with it. I think there is even a provision in the budget this year for plans with regard to a home for basketball. Basketball is probably one of the fastest growing sports in the island, and we still don't have a home. If it weren't for the generosity of the First Elected Member for George Town and his Lions Club, we wouldn't have a facility where we can play competitive basketball.

Mr. Speaker, you know what is amazing, you have so many students involved in schools and basketball is not a part of the school curriculum. Why? I don't know. Maybe they need to recruit persons in that area who have an interest in these sports rather than give you a football and say, 'go kick it' or a cricket ball and say, 'go bat it.' There needs to be a developed co-ordinated programme of sports from the schools all the way up because, Mr. Speaker, you and I both know that in order to be competitive in any sport you have to start at the primary level.

And, I must give Coach Voote—who is our national coach for basketball—a lot of credit. He has gone beyond the call of duty in order to introduce basketball to as many young people as possible. He has gone in on an individual basis in primary schools and took it upon himself to make sure that at least one a week he can go into the schools and expose both the boys and girls to basketball. So, I am very concerned that we don't have a home for basketball. That is another reason why I am so anxious for the civic centre in West Bay because I was under the impression we could use that also as the home for basketball.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think we can sit and wait on that because that has been delayed some eight years now and, like I said, I believe it when I see it as being a reality. There is no reason why, for example, we cannot develop the Cox Court right here in George Town, which is very central. It doesn't have to cost a whole lot of money. Probably in the region of $350,000 - $400,000, we could provide a facility there that we can use in the meantime until we do get the civic centre in West Bay or elsewhere that would have the facilities to take care of basketball.

What is amazing is that despite the fact that we have limited facilities, the results that we have gotten in these respective sports, be it football or basketball, we have had our young people who have been identified and have been awarded scholarships to attend school in the United States basically on a basketball or a football scholarship, which is excellent. So, you can imagine the possibilities if we had better facilities here in the island.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have said as much as I wanted to say. I think I have said a lot, and there are others who have to speak, and I am going to give them an opportunity to do so maybe tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, thanks for your patience and for the level of tolerance that you have exercised because I went into some very touchy areas. But you allowed me to say what I had to say, which I thought had to be said. Mr. Speaker, I do thank you and I do thank honourable members for their tolerance and patience.

The Speaker: At this time I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Honourable House stands adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

AT 4.32 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM FRIDAY, 25 FEBRUARY 2000.

EDITED
FRIDAY
25 FEBRUARY 2000
10.22 AM

[Prayers read by the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture who is overseas on official business.

Moving on to item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 18 February 2000. The floor is opened to debate.

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY
MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE,
GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS
ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, the Government has been fortunate enough to have had their position with regard to the state of the nation presented by His Excellency Mr. Peter Smith. So, if they should fail to get up to debate the Throne Speech, I guess the reason is because they wrote the Throne Speech that His Excellency presented to this House. But, certainly, we on the Backbench that believe that somehow there has been something lacking over the years with regard to the leadership of the country have much to say.

I don't really believe that it is doing the country any good for me to stand up here for four hours and speak about all the things that are wrong—all the things that people already perceive are wrong. But I do intend to take a certain amount of time to try and explain what I consider to be some of the root causes of the social disorder and malfunctions that now exist in our society.

I believe also that since this is my fourth year it would be good for me to give a brief review of what I thought I could have done when I was elected in 1996.

Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of my little manifesto, which is called "Towards the Common Sense Democracy." It said that I really stood for greater intelligence in a higher moral sense.

With regard to the greater intelligence, I feel that if the social institutions of our country are not rehabilitated to the point where intelligence is rewarded rather than penalised, ostracised, rejected, and exiled there is no hope for this country. I have been preaching this message for over twenty years. And those persons who have always said that they have done this and that which was good for this country, while at the same time were unwilling to see the country mature socially, have done what is worse for the country. Even though the vast majority of us like to eat, we know that when we eat too much, we are going to have digestive problems; and if we have digestive problems then the respiratory system will begin to give problems and then we will have problems in our entire physical system. So is it also with our social, economic and political systems.

So, where should we begin to put blame? Is it necessary to blame? It's therapeutic perhaps to blame from a psychological point of view—everybody likes to blame somebody and it is always much better when you can find some group of people that have less rights, less power, and less wealth than you to blame. So, it is not surprising that many Caymanians and many persons in this House have begun to identify the problems in the Cayman Islands as being specifically caused by immigration—meaning that foreigners are taking over the country and not allowing us to do this and that.

What I propose, Mr. Speaker, and what I proposed from the very beginning, is a kind of social intelligence, a kind of social conscience that would not just cast blame on the other but would accept blame and responsibility for ones self. It should be the role of leaders in Government to preach social responsibility and the respect of other person's right regardless of their race, national origin, gender, or religious conviction, etcetera. We believe that these principles are healthy principles and we believe that if you are going to have a civil society you have to start with basic principles. These basic principles have to applied and followed. There is a certain social responsibility by all members of the society to obey the social contract once we become conscious of what that contract is, what the specific benefits and obligations are.

I know that I am often criticised in this House for speaking vague about this and that and not getting to the point. But the point is—and I have been making this point for the last twenty years—that if you don't have an understanding of social relationships and the importance social values and norms and relationships play in society then you have no understanding of society. You just cannot say that because you are a good banker, or you were a good merchant, that you are more capable, more able to manage modern society than somebody who studied the social and political sciences is.

I don't know where that prejudice comes from that you have to be a good accountant to manage society, you have to be a good lawyer to manage society. Far be it from the truth! If a lawyer does not have a good understanding of the history behind the creation of laws and statutes, he forgets that laws were created by society for society and that laws did not create society.

I think that this is a very important understanding because if we go back to my 1996 manifesto where I talk about a greater social intelligence . . . I hope that I have been able to provide this Legislative Assembly and this country with at least a deeper understanding of the issues in the country.

I believe also that in gaining that understanding over the years that I have studied, over the years that I have taken to experience some very unpleasant types of feeling that had to do with unemployment, low wages, lack of security and feelings that have to do with basically feeling insecurity in your society . . . so insecure that you begin to hate and resent people. I know about those feelings. I know, therefore, that it is important to use these personal and professional experiences to come to a conclusion as to why a reaction to capitalist development in the Cayman Islands is not sufficient.

In other words, capitalism as a dynamic economic force produces certain types of social relations—it produces crime, poverty, and dislocation. But in all the countries that have just reacted to this and said, 'We want a change to this, we want to abolish this' those countries have more problems today. Therefore, from the very beginning (since 1977), my idea was proactive approach to the social management of the social problems that would be caused by our commercial development—nobody could see that. Maybe I didn't explain well enough, maybe I was too far up in the sky someplace (as the Caymanian Compass once said about a letter that I wrote), and nobody understood what I was saying anyway. Well, I believe that a lot of people understood what I was saying.

Now, I am saying that if you cannot socially manage your development, if you cannot deal with those people that will be traumatically dislocated as a result of one of the most rapid capitalistic developments in history, then you will be dealing with a war zone where people are suffering from trauma and all kinds of sociological traumas because people cannot cope, people are insecure, people are fearful and because the basic premise of human society is that we are provided with security. Security is why we change from being individuals to members of a collective group—security, preservation.

If we find that society has developed so rapidly and there has been no consideration for the human element then you will find that people will want to pull it down. And, how do they want to pull it down? They want certain types of changes. They want to go backwards. But you cannot go backwards. It is just like once you are born you are stuck with this life until you find that final way out. When you begin to develop, you are stuck with development and you must go forward, Mr. Speaker, believe it or not, regardless of how unpleasant it might seem you have to continue.

Now, I am not talking of the fact that you have to drive at 100 miles per hour when you know it is getting dangerous, you can slow down. How do you slow down? You can discuss that. You can try to get away from opinions and find an imperial and scientific way to do it. It can be the result of research and reflection rather than so-called dogmatic common sense.

I am saying that the governments over the years in these islands (at least since 1976) have failed to understand and to take into consideration the instability which could be caused by dislocating and disrupting the traditional social fabric and not replacing it with one more modern, one that would suit the kind of commercial society that we have today. The commercial society that we have today, Mr. Speaker, is what everybody wanted. And I do believe it is what everybody still wants because if you look at England, France, America, Sweden, and Canada, and if you look at all the countries that are prosperous, they all have had capitalistic commercial developments. These are the countries that our people would want to go to if we did not continue to support capitalistic development in the Cayman Islands.

But where is the social safety net to give people the feeling that they won't be falling? Once I had a dream of falling, and there was no stop to my falling—do you understand how that feels? That is how some people feel when they feel that if they lose their jobs or if something happens where they commit a crime and have to go to prison and they cannot come back out and find employment to support their kids . . . that's how they feel—like they are falling and falling, and there is no end to their falling.

So, where is the sympathy? Where is the social responsibility towards seeing the reintegration of those types of people as part of the key to stability? Where is that consciousness? Who has informed that consciousness? Are there persons who can make these choices and bring us back some kind of sanity and stability listening?

I was speaking to a second cousin of mine this morning, a female who spent some time at Northward. She is at the Labour Board now trying to get Ms. Jane Solomon to assist her in getting a job because the hotel in East End has said that they are not going to employ her because once she was honest and told them that she had a criminal conviction for being involved with drugs. They decided no. What is she going to do about her children? I gave her $50. I try to help, but it is not my responsibility because it is not my property her children will have to come to when they have to be fed. And, when they join gangs in order to get some self-esteem and to solve the kinds of problems that we are not interested in assisting them in solving.

Society the responsibility of us all. When God made us human, he gave us an awesome task. He gave us a task of being our brother's keeper. He gave us that task and there is no way that we can get away from that—we could be rich and powerful. He sends death to remind us of this responsibility and connection.

So, what I have said over the years is that we do not want to build a welfare state, but we certainly have to have some semblance of social institution that has the principle of caring and sharing the epitomises of what I consider to be that special Caymanian humanity that has come under economic, social, philosophical and spiritual attack during the rapid commercial development of the Cayman Islands as a global centre over the twenty-year period.

Now, most countries have to go from being gatherers to being agriculturists, to being manufacturers, to being industrialists, to being financiers. There are different stages in terms of the world's economic and social growth. The Cayman Islands went from a village that they said time forgot (because we were still allowed to live in a very harmonious and peaceful fashion where relations were affectionate rather than contractual), and all of a sudden we ended up being managers of this global universe. We never even learned the value of land, and now we must talk about the value of money. What a change! And nobody feels that it is his job to educate the people and inculcate in their minds certain usual principles that have to do with the formation and preservation of civil society.

Why not? Well, you know, it is always this: We blame people, Mr. Speaker, for not looking after themselves.

When one of my constituents cannot make the grade, I am told it's because he is so lazy. That's why he doesn't have a job, because he is so lazy. But when a business is crying about failing it is not the failure of the entrepreneur, it's the failure of the Government. It is the failure of the Government to give some kind of relief by way of duty concessions to poorer people in this country—people that those same people would never employ. What nonsense!

The failure of the common man is his responsibility but the failure of a business is a Government responsibility. What nonsense! The failure of the common man in this country is partly related to the wage system in this country. It is partly related to the land system in this country.

Now, I have heard persons talking about crime and juvenile gangs, and this, and that, and we all get emotional about those things. How we do get all emotional about those things! I am very sad, because these are happening to real people's children, real flesh and blood. I am as sad for those children that will have no future as I am for those persons and properties that are attacked by those children. But at the end of the day we were warned that if you live by the sword you shall die by the sword. If you have no sympathy and no compassion then your children will not learn sympathy and compassion. If you have no sense of social responsibility and obligation and respect of rights—because they will not even bring a Bill of Rights in this country . . . Those kids are not respecting anybody's rights—now do you see why?

You need to teach people about other people's rights. We need not just to have a Bill of Rights that I might have rights but that I might know that you have rights regardless of how small I am.

I am saying that the low wages have maintained a subsistent existence for working people in this country. Tourism brings jobs, but tourism brings very low paying jobs. Banks bring jobs, but banks bring very low paying jobs. It is the creation of an army of low paid people in this country who are at the bottom, that is at the heart, that is the route of the social disease which exists in this country at the moment.

We just want to criticise the symptoms. We do not want to examine the causes of the disease. The cause of the disease is unregulated growth without any semblance of social responsibility.

Look at what happened to the American Indians. They are getting back on their feet now, but, gosh—alcoholics! That is what I wrote about in Time Longer Dan Rope in 1979. The lady said, "I don't want to see the Caymanians become all drunk and broken up families like the American Indians," because of the traumatic cultural changes.

This whole idea that we have always been trying to pretend that we are just like everybody else, it is not true, we were different. Our psychology was different and is different because it was formed by different kinds of conditions. Now, we are talking about the loss of the Caymanian identity when we were talking about it in the theatre and places like that. Back in the 70's we were considered to be people who just wanted to create differences in society, who wanted to remind them of who they were and that was not acceptable.

But without some kind of identity, without some kind of idea of who you are, you are going to have problems. Now, how does a mother who makes $1,300 in good times give a sense of social responsibility and social worth to children in a society that is totally money oriented? In a society that is totally fixated on material rather than spiritual things? How is that done?

All you can do is to create 'haves and have nots' in that kind of environment. All you can do is to create hatred and jealousy in that kind of environment. That's all you can do.

But how do we get from the point of not only creating low paying jobs for our people, but from the fact that those people who now have low paying jobs cannot buy anything with the money from the low paying jobs? Mr. Speaker, the lumber that is imported is taxed. The zinc is taxed. The cement is probably taxed. For them to construct a house, they have to pay the Government. But more importantly, the land is above the value that they can afford. If they so get the money to buy a piece of land, they have to pay the Government taxes first before they can get possession of it.

So, between the Government and those persons that have used land for speculation purposes, the lower wage earners in this society cannot elevate themselves to becoming real stakeholders in the society. So, all this thing about Vision 2008, about stakeholders and all that, what kind of stake do they have holding? Not even sweepstakes have they. Not even one of those German sweet stakes [?] they have. They have no sweet stake holding at all—and their children are beginning to act it out.

I will talk later on also about the kind of problems that this creates to the social control institutions and how the social control institutions will then be blamed for every problem in the country because you have to blame the police. That's what the people will say, 'Blame the police. Blame the judges. Blame the prison wardens—but don't blame me.' We will see that things developed so fast that these institutions were not able to make the transition and adjustment in their methods of social control in order to stem the tide.

Like I said, without social planning and social management, without an idea of what commercial development will produce, we will never know what we need to prepare and how we need to prepare ourselves. But, Mr. Speaker, the point is that commercial development is not new, we have seen it happen in other places.

When I came back here in 1977, I was able to say because I had been in New York, Germany, England, and France (I have lived and studied in a lot of those places) I saw what commercial development did.

You know, we have ghettos just like they had when I went to New York in 1964, like I saw when I went to England in 1970—we have ghettos here. In other words, we have people who feel that they are trapped at that particular stage in those particular conditions. So, as far as I am concerned, there has to be a certain change in Government's attitude, in the society's attitude, towards the ownership of land and towards the right to work and the right to a living wage.

I believe that these three conditions are important for our reconstruction of the society. We cannot abolish the growth, we have to manage the social consequences of that growth. We need the wealth that is created by the growth to now solve the social problems that have already been created by the growth. So, God forbid, should we do anything to make the wealth which the Government has access to any less than it is at this particular time, we would really have serious problems—especially when you have to bring more prison officers and police, build more prisons, build more remand homes and do all of those things. We could really lose the battle if we don't develop at this particular time a much more sensible and systematic approach to problem solving.

The economy is going good and those persons that are running the economy are doing a good job; but those people that are responsible and in charge of the civil society are doing an awful job. I mean, on first appearance it looks like it is okay because stability has continued to exist and, therefore, everybody believes that as long as you have stability you have been doing a good job as civic managers. But a further look, Mr. Speaker, as the Third Elected Member from West Bay was saying yesterday, all is not well in paradise. Why is this member getting up and saying this at this particular point? He is echoing the feelings of the majority of people that he comes in contact with.

Sometime ago of course, there were people who were saying more good things than there were people that were saying bad or critical things. But today, most of the people are saying critical things because by the time they get rid of one critical thing another thing happens to shoot back in their minds. I mean, look at the rumour with regard to the unfortunate and untimely callous murder of Mr. Curtis Seymour. Just check those rumours out. Why would a community that was healthy mentally and socially create such rumours? Because it is hard for the community to accept that people can just up and kill you for nothing. It is hard to accept that. It is hard for me to accept that people can just up and kill you for nothing because if that is so, my turn could be tomorrow.

Now, if somebody has some kind of commercial motive for doing so, then at least we might be spared. But if it is just up and killing people for nothing, Mr. Speaker . . . what has become of our society? Therefore, the rumours are an attempt to explain that things cannot be as bad as they really are and we did not really breed and raise these monsters that are going around terrorising the society. That is what the hope is all about. It's rough. It is very, very rough.

I have seen people come out almost like wanting to call the vigilante groups. And I believe, Mr. Speaker, the whole government should be in here listening to this. Of all the talks they should be listening to, it is this because they are the people that need to know this stuff. I am not talking to myself because I already know these things and if they had known these things a bit before, the country would not be in the state that it is in now. The lack of paying attention to sensible conversation is one reason why we are in the mess that we are in now because people would prefer to talk gibberish than to speak sense based upon reasonable research.

Not one member of the elected government is in here to listen to what I consider to be a greater social intelligence.

The only one here is the First Official Member, and I thank him for being here. I hope that before I wind up I can show why he has come to bear the brunt of their mistakes.

Mr. Speaker, when I first back here in 1977, I came back to get involved as the Director of Social Services, to get involved with the prison system. Even back then the prison was built late. We were behind then just like we are behind now and all we do is sacrifice people. But at the end of the day what we really need to do is to just change our ways of doing business.

I have said that the banks have come. The hotels have come—when the Holiday Inn is finished and when Comfort Inn (which is now finished) opens, and if the Ritz Carlton makes it off the ground and finishes, will the wages of the people in this country be improved? Or will the improvement simply be that more people will be brought in to work for low wages competing with our Caymanian people for the scarce resources like homes, apartments, food, schools and medical attention? What is the specific change economically for the lower wage earners in the society who are forming at least 53% of the population as they are earning $1,500 and below? How are they going to be progressing? What is progress really to them? What is one or two years growth to them?

When the Government is talking about growth, when a company is talking about growth, when the country is talking about growth, what is growth to Darlene Welcome, the President of the National Alliance Co-operative Employee (NACE), who each year has to work for the same basic low wage? You are talking about growth, you are talking about this and that growing—it is not growing for some people because they are left out of the growth as they don't see any growth except in prices. They go to the supermarket and the prices go up. They go to get an apartment and the prices go up. Why do prices go up in the apartment market? Because of the concept of supply and demand.

There are more people trying to get apartments than there are people supplying apartments. Apartments are so expensive now that we have overcrowding in our homes. You should check it out some time in George Town. A lot of people are concerned about West Bay and other districts, but George Town has some real poverty spots.

People keep going though. People are not lazy, but they are earning subsistent wages. They cannot pay for what they need. Is it their fault? Did they really know that this progress was going to mean that the only jobs that they could get with the level of education that they have are very low paying jobs? Did they really have a culture of institutionalised education and development? Did they really have leaders that were stressing these points? No! I believe that some relief has to be brought to this particular class of people. I really seriously believe that we cannot afford to create an army of hostile, resentful, jealous, vindictive, undirected young Caymanians.

I believe that organisation is better than decay. For this reason, I have become involved as part of my political obligation (at least that's the way I see it), with the assistance of people joining together in a trade union in order to protect their piece of the pie, their stake, so that they can see themselves really as stakeholders. I believe also that the response has been magnificent.

I believe that employers have showed much more tolerance and sympathy than I thought, and I believe that this is good and healthy. I believe also, Mr. Speaker, that this has helped to regain some self-confidence, some hope. I believe that this NACE movement has helped to encourage the Minister of Labour to hire a labour inspector/accountant to deal specifically with the issues of gratuities.

When people are told to organise lawfully, and are encouraged to organise lawfully in order to pursue or to protect what they consider to be their inheritance and their rights, it is social management that we are talking about and it is social stability that we are perfecting at a different stage of development. If nobody offers them any hope, then they sit and they ridicule the Government about corruption, about being no good, about only seeing them at elections. They lose confidence in the very institution that is charged with maintaining social order. When that happens, when they have lost all hope, when they are not directed, when there is no grassroots leadership, we run into terrible problems.

I had the opportunity to speak at the Rotary Club. I had the opportunity to speak at the Law School. I had the opportunity to speak on several occasions for these people, and I always say that a society that was just a settlers' society that became very late in its existence a civil society, needs grassroots organisation to keep things from falling apart. It needs grassroots organisation to connect just like arteries. There has to be some kind of connection between the people and their Government.

The Government cannot be floating out in space someplace and the people are floating out in space someplace because that's the kind of political system that we have. I was watching Issues 27 last night, and some of the things I heard I thought were very interesting. But one of the things that I had to think about was that not one single politician really was mentioned as being positive or having some slight positive trait—not one! Why? Why would people sit down and discuss their political future without any contemplation of their political presence or past?

That's a big error because there can be no future without an understanding of the past and the present—regardless of how unfortunate or how unpleasant that past or that present might be. You need to reflect on it because it is only by reflecting on an undesired past that you can have a desired future. I would like to leave that message with some of those young aspiring politicians that might be listening.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have been around since 1667 when we were annexed by Britain as a territory, as a physical place. People came here and they made a community out of it. I call it a settlement. It was a loose group of people, because we understand that three or four of us getting together doesn't mean that we are a team, and it certainly doesn't mean that we are a party. Certainly, there is a difference between people loosely gathered as individuals. So, what we had in the very beginning was a loosely settled society.

The institutions and the infrastructure was not there, so a lot of Caymanians are asking the question, Why don't Caymanians stick together? The reason why Caymanians don't stick together is because Cayman is a new society. What we should be asking is how will Caymanians be able to stick together. What kind of conditions do we have to create (if we don't have them) for Caymanians to stick together? The mere fact that when you talk about a Caymanian it is more a word rather than an actuality . . . the actuality means that was somebody that was produced because that person had a specific consciousness of his role, his obligations, his rights in a specific community with a defined head to assure that he is responsible, and to guarantee that he has those rights.

We just cannot become something, we have to work at becoming. America didn't just become America; they had to work at it. Before that it was Louisiana, and this place, and that little state, and this little community—they had to federalise; they had to come together. They had to recognise a common ideology, a common consciousness. You will get a Cayman Islands when you have this, otherwise we are just using words that we are familiar with using for the process of communicating something.

So, we need to see how we are going to give people trust in a new political direction. A direction that is going to give people back their identity—not the old identity because a lot of people don't even know what that is anyway, they are just saying it. But a new identity, a new vision, a new Cayman; a new society that has to come out of the hearts, the minds, and the souls of those persons who came before us. If I can do anything for this country, I would like to be the foundation, or help to be part of the foundation, of a New Jerusalem—a country that comes forth out of men and women dreaming of peace, harmony, prosperity, security, and friendship, rather than trying to keep something that the economic forces have shot out of space for a very long time.

As a playwright, as someone who is tremendously interested in subconscious sociology, I would say that we are at the crossroads. We can make a choice; we can build that New Jerusalem, but we have to accept that in this New Jerusalem people must have rights as well as responsibilities. We cannot expect anymore to live in a country where no rights are enshrined in our constitution, where the individual is not seemed to be important to the collective and where the collective is not seemed to be important to the individual. One cannot exist without the other.

These things are self-evident . . . this is what we need—we need to create our Caymanian state now because it has been in the making since 1667. What is the Caymanian State supposed to look like? The Government says that persons on this side have no idea, but I believe that in my short debate so far that I have already proven that, not only do I have the ideas, but that I am not afraid of them stealing my ideas because they do not feel these ideas to be self-evident, to be for the general good. If they had, they would have employed me in a capacity before now. So, I am not going to restrain from saying what I hope for, what I envisaged, what my manifesto for the year 2000 would look like. I want everybody to know, because it's a public document and it is supposed to be a public document. I am not talking about my private feelings.

So, if the New Jerusalem is to be built on what we have so far, rather than us going backwards and trying to rule and work as Caymanians of the past, then we have to have some changes—obviously not just in the State but in the immigration polices.

Immigration is an important tool of development. Man emigrated and followed the food and cattle. He got to a point where he figured he could pin the cows down and grow the seeds, and he settled and created civilisation. His population did not grow fast enough to meet his economic development, so he went out and got slaves. He brought them back and integrated them over a period of time. Yeah, that's the history of the world. What's new? All these people that are talking about ethnic purity, racial purity, national purity, are talking junk! There is nothing pure but the genes that got originally made. Adam who? Yes, and after that there is nothing pure. All mixed up here and there.

But, of course, Mr. Speaker, if this is so then I don't have to spend my life trying to keep myself separate from you, and you don't have to spend your life trying to keep yourself separate from me. Even if our blood were to mix on some occasion, it wouldn't destroy anything. So, if they come from Timbuktu or Nigeria, Paris or wherever it is, I mean, God has already said it is possible because you guys were one at one time. If you believe we come from one common father, what is the problem with immigration?

Certainly, the problem with immigration has to do with control and ethics and how we compete with different things like that—well, we can talk about that. But basically the whole concept of people coming here, there is nothing wrong with that. The reason why nothing is wrong with that is because I believe my forefathers came here from Nigeria in the first place and if it wasn't Nigeria, it was someplace on the West Coast of Africa—so we were not here in 1667, we came here too. So, what we are talking about is the time that you have been here.

How important is the time you have been here? Well, maybe your contribution should be as important as the time. We could talk about that. We need to begin to talk about those things, but let us create a framework for people to begin to understand that puzzle.

What I am saying is that you cannot control immigration, which means the numbers that come in, unless you control the number of jobs that are created. As long as the jobs are created and not filled, not only will you have social malfunction, you will have economic malfunction. And once you have economic malfunction, you will end up with political malfunction. It will not be easy to say that you are not going to accept any new arrivals in your country.

I would like to just briefly go to what happened in places in America. The reason why they have so many black people in America is because of slavery. And the reason that is so is because there were jobs available and they had to go all the way to Africa in sailing boats to get them. They went to get the Africans the Africans didn't come to them; so it goes to show how important filling jobs is. So, when we are cursing people because they are coming into the country to work . . . please! If you want to curse anyone, curse the people who are bringing the capital into the country creating the jobs. I know we don't want to do that because we all respect money too much. So, please, don't heap all of the insults at the poor Jamaican and the poor Honduran, or the poor Irishman for that matter who is out there (or the not too bad off Irishman) trying to make a living.

If that person is willing to live in a civil relationship with us, if that person is willing to respect our rights as well, then we have to respect their rights. If immigration is the result of economic growth and economic growth has been the result of the importation of capital and the use of capital (which had nothing to do with us originally from the point of view of capital), we have just provided the womb for the growth of this capital.

Then how much control do we really have on immigration? Does the Immigration Department have control on immigration? No, the Immigration Department cannot control immigration because immigration is controlled by economic growth. So, you cannot make immigration laws to control immigration. You can make laws to control immigration growth—and nobody wants to do that—so what is the play then in controlling immigration and this and that and the other thing? Where are we going with this thing?

Forty Thousand people make a very small community. I remember when I was walking around the street in 1977 after I came back here, and somebody asked how many people are in the Cayman Islands. I said, about 14,000 or close to 15,000. That was after I had a PhD—15,000 people. I went to university with more people than that! What are you going to do with 15,000? You cannot go and play football with six people. You call yourself a football team and you have six people. You call yourself a society, a nation, and you only have 15,000? No, you cannot! You cannot have meaningful development with that amount of people. If that is so, tell the people that and stop trying to pretend somehow that we are tolerating this and that.

If I cannot abolish immigration, if I cannot abolish capitalist development then I have to learn how to live with it. How I live with it will depend very much on how I manage it so that it does not totally control me and upset my social and psychological balance. So, I believe that a Government that becomes reflective, a Government that uses empirical research, not common sense anymore because we have grown beyond the tenet of common sense . . . Somebody can call me the educated idiot if they want, but let me tell you one thing: it's education that built that spaceship that went to the moon. It's education that built that Toyota car that you are driving. It's education that makes this microphone and this and that and the other thing. Okay? So, knowledge is valuable and we should not dismiss it because it plays a very important role—who owns it controls, and who don't own it is subjected by those who do.

So, the Government needs to have a total caucus. This is why I have to talk for four hours, because there is no caucusing. This is the only time I get to talk, and still I am not talking to my colleagues and they are not talking to me; and we are still passing by one another and we never talk, Mr. Speaker. We talk at, but we never talk. I know at least one old lady that listens to me on the radio, Miss Madelyn Simms. I know when she is listening to it tonight she will appreciate the fact that she has something to do because there is a lot of these little old ladies that love to listen to the politicians speak. So, if I do nothing, at least I might entertain Miss Madelyn Simms tonight in her old age. God knows she is one of those forgotten Caymanians that has very little and has very few inquiries as to her economic well being.

So, we need to talk. We need to talk truthfully though, and we need to talk intelligently. If I have to ask the people for anything, I say give me a few intelligent people that I can communicate with. Give me a few intelligent people that could become a part of my group to help build this New Jerusalem politically, socially, and economically. I haven't gone and preached some type of let's do this with them without trying to get my own people organised. One reason is that if my people are organised in their labour unions, the low wage people, they feel that they can protect themselves. So, if I say that we have to make a change they don't have to be as fearful of the change because they have a way of protecting their interests. But if they have no way of protecting their interests and I come to talk change, like let's see what we are going to do with the 40,000 integrated and assimilated and let's go from there . . . that's been one of the most dynamic vibrant Venice's in history.

Globalisation provide us with a fantastic opportunity and I hope that people don't mess it up, because if that happens it would be too bad. And it said here, if we act like there is no possibility of a change for the better, we guarantee that there will be no change for the better.

So I am saying that this November I want to talk about the change for the better, because there has to be a change. Not just a change in the Legislative Assembly but a change in the way we do things and things that we continue to think that are important. The fact that we don't want to tell people where we are going—the Government is going off, and it doesn't want to tell the people that it is going off. Do you know what that means? It means that the Government feels that the people don't exist. If you pass me, Mr. Speaker, and you recognise me, you are going to say something to me. If you don't recognise me, you say nothing to me. Your saying nothing to me means that you don't recognise me. So, if the Government does not say anything to the people about going to the United Nations, it means that the Government does not recognise the people—and that is terrible. That is such disrespect!

We need a change in those attitudes. That is so much disrespect. You have to recognise those persons that put you in office. If you feel that their values and ideas could also be improved, work along with them to improve them.

I don't just talk in the Legislative Assembly. I have a television programme going twice a month. On Tuesday night at 8.00 p.m. I have an interview the Vice Chancellor of the University of the West Indies, Professor Rex Nettleford. I am going two times a month now. I have the New Vision Newsletter that I write and print. I don't get any help with the writing of it but I do it. Why do I do it? Because I want to be powerful? Is that it? Huh? I want to control people? Is that it? Mr. Speaker, I lived without even having control of myself for a long time, so why am I obsessed with control?

I am not obsessed with control, but I want people to have a choice. And the only way they can have a choice is if they have access to information and opinions. If the Government has an opinion about the OECD, if the Government has an opinion about money laundering, it should not be their private opinion. They are public opinions because they are public officers and they are required (by morality if not by law) to share that information and that opinion with those persons that request—the Press and the other Members in this Chamber. We have to get over these old attitudes of not wanting to dialogue with one another.

When we do that we create the forum for the discussion of how the New Jerusalem could be formed.

I see that you are making your movements so we will have a pause, thank you.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.30 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.10 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continuing.

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town continuing.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, when I stopped for the break I was looking at trying to separate the economic causes of social ills. I was trying to make sure that we do not believe that the economic causes of our social problems lie with immigration. If we believe that we can solve our problems in this country by limiting immigration or by getting rid of immigrants that are already entrenched in our society, we will create even greater problems for ourselves.

I think that the social ills are partly caused by the level of pay in the low wage industries and occupations, because the pay is below subsistence level. That is to say that unlike the skills of the highest paid occupations in all groups they do not approach the income required to support a family at the levels of spending necessary in Cayman society. So, we have to look at the way in which the reward system works in our society. When I say the reward system, I am meaning at this particular point the wage system. We need to improve this system so that it comes on par with what is necessary for life and we need to stop finding excuses elsewhere.

We know that there were weaknesses in our social fabric. We know that there are social causes of our social ills as well, but I mean right now just to identify what I consider to be the economic causes. The continual enlargement of the numbers that are involved in these low paying occupations, this is at the root of what some call poverty in the midst of plenty. So, when people are saying that there is poverty in the midst of plenty what they mean is that there are ever-growing larger numbers of low wage occupations and there are fewer and fewer middle class jobs, or fewer and fewer upper occupational level jobs, and few of these jobs fall in the hands of Caymanians.

There is a reason for this also. There is an historical reason as well as a more contemporary reason for this. But this creates suspicion, disillusion, and resentment, but the stratification of the society and differentiation in the society is also a necessary part of the commercial development of the society.

So, we are looking at ways of making immigration complement our growth rather than conflict with our desires. To do this, we have to accept that there is no sure safe road back to the past and that the only safe road has to be towards a future that is thought out, a future that is planned, a future that is socially managed. We need a governmental structure. We need a political culture that is inclusive not exclusive. We need to make people feel that they are a part of the political process and that we as leaders will not abandon them.

We need to give people the security, the Caymanians, so that we will be able to provide foreigners with security of tenure. Certainly if the Caymanians feel safe and secure in their homes and jobs, they will not resent foreigners helping to increase productivity in the country. What would the productivity of 15,000 or 30,000 people be? It is not the kind of productivity, Mr. Speaker, that can buy computers, provide for computers and Japanese cars, stereo sets, and all of those things. We have to understand that our lifestyle, although we have poverty in the midst of plenty, is a very highly material lifestyle.

A lot of us consume to the max, but what we are consuming we do not produce. It is imported. So, the dependence here is a greater dependence than what exists in other places. So, we have to understand that not only are we dependent upon foreign countries for labour and capital, but we are also dependent upon foreign countries for goods and to some extent services as well. This does not have to be a bad thing because this is what I call interdependency.

Interdependency is part and parcel of the development of capitalism over the last hundred years. It makes the world more interdependent. It makes you and I more interdependent, because if I am the person who makes the shoes, and you are the person who is producing the leather, I have to buy the leather from you to produce the shoes. So we are interdependent because of the trade relations between us, and the commercial activities.

Human society is all about work. It is all about commerce. It is all about the exchange of the product of work. Therefore, it goes to show that human society becomes more and more interdependent. Not only is East End interdependent with George Town, and George Town with West Bay (more so than it was), but each family in each one of those districts is more interdependent on the other because the person who was supplying the yam, the fish, the turtle and the thatch before is not doing that. He might supply the fish today but he is relying upon someone else to supply the zinc.

We understand, therefore, that commercial development creates a condition of interdependence locally and internationally as well. So, at a time when most economists and people who are involved in international studies are accepting that whether or not globalisation has negative factors, it means even a more intense phase of interdependency. If we have started our commercial development at the global rather than the manufacturing or industrial stage, it means that not only will we have shock waves sent through our society from a social point of view, it means that we become inter-dependent even more so than America would have been and England would have been when they were developing on the manufacturing stage, when mercantilism and protectionism was a part of their political and economic policy.

At a stage of development where we are talking about ourselves as a global centre (because we are talking about ourselves being a world financial centre) we are talking about ourselves as a global centre. How protectionist can you be if you are operating in this particular global context? What will be the usefulness of protectionism? What are the pitfalls of protectionism? What will be the advantages that will come to you and how will the social and political management be? What type of social and political management will you have to have in this rapidly developing society?

I say that you must have a State that has a face. I say that you must have a State that first of all acts as the gentle means of coercion before the other part, the more bureaucratic part of the State more interested in social control gets involved. I believe that politicians have a lot of roles—they have a big role to play in preserving norms and values. I believe that a sensible political platform in the year 2000 (in November) must be based upon the preservation of certain values and ideas.

Now, we don't have to have outdated values and ideas, but we have to have values and ideas. I believe that the values and ideas that we should have should be somehow inculcated in our constitution in a Bill of Rights.

I will read from the Constitution of the Bahamas. It says, "The protection of freedom of assembly and association." Here it says, "Except with his consent no person shall be hindered in the enjoyment of his freedom of peaceful assembly and association." That is to say his right to assemble freely and associate with other persons and, in particular, to form or belong to political parties or to form or to belong to trade unions or other associations for the protection of his interests.

If we are going to have a society that feels that the only interest that people should organise to protect should be the interest of money, then we are going to have people who don't have money saying that they are unfairly treated; that they are afraid that people will come in and take their jobs and their homes.

If we look at our Immigration Law, it says that a local company in the Cayman Islands must be 60% owned by a Caymanian. Now, this was done all the way back in the 1970s, but there is nothing in our Immigration Law that says that company must employ 60% Caymanians. So, while Caymanian labour does not have the same kind of protection as for the Immigration Law to specifically say what percentage of a company must be Caymanian, is because if we wanted to control growth, immigration, we would have said that not only each resident company must have 60% Caymanian ownership but we would have said it must have 60% Caymanian employees.

That would have been a standard that would have been set that nobody would have been able to have lived up to and go at the global speed in which we are going. So, if the only protection for people in low paying jobs is their ability to work for even lower pay, then, sadly, I must say they have to protect themselves by giving more and more of themselves thereby losing even the ability to subsist.

But protection also has to mean that somehow they can improve their collective demand and this they should be able to do by associating in trade unions and/or political parties or both. The mere fact that this country finds itself so weakened, finds itself attacked from all directions by social problems, doubt, suspicion, accusations of corruption and inefficiency, the fact that the State still continues to maintain that it, like the priests of the plague age had access to information, should have sole access to that information and nobody else can be a priest . . . it is almost like what happened in Germany during the reformation when Martin Luther had to say to them that not just those could be priests but others could be priests. We have to say that today too—not just they can be the leaders of government business, not just they can be the ministers, but they can be ministers too.

We can be ministers too because they do not have any secrets that are so mystical that they have to hide it from the very people that they say they are keeping these secrets for. We want a Government that is more accountable. But for it to be more accountable it is going to have to have itself organised not just in the Legislative Assembly but outside the Legislative Assembly. I said that the Government is floating in space and not connected to the grassroots, because there is no organisation in the community to connect the Government, to communicate with to the Government and for the Government to communicate back.

The days when a politician could make it to everybody's door and say hello to everybody and how you do, how your mama doing and how your dada doing—those days are gone because we live in a complex society where if you don't get your business done, you get fired. So, you cannot be walking around all the time door to door politicians, like in 1980. Those days of being a door to door politician are just about gone. Perhaps, on Saturday if you have a little spare time as a member of the backbench at least, you can walk a little part of your district. But what I am saying is that in a complex society you need to have an organisation that keeps you in contact with your people. You cannot do it by yourself anymore.

No wonder that the Government has lost contact with the people and the people have lost trust in the Government. It doesn't necessarily have to do with the individuals in the Government; it has to do with the political system. The political system is medieval. It is out of date. It cannot function in a global setting anymore. You cannot be going off to a meeting in London or going off to a meeting in Brussels and not tell the people, because if you don't tell them, the people in Brussels will tell them. That is what globalisation means—it means communication in the electronic age.

So, this whole idea that somehow you can have this kind of primitive hierarchy without any kind of connection to the people who have to approve of it is nonsense these days. It is nonsense! Absolute rubbish! The little people—the working people—have to be organised. People say, 'no, no, don't do that, you are going to destroy the country' but how can you say that you are going to destroy your country by organising your people. You send kids to school, that's organisation. A class is an organisation. A teacher is the head of that organisation in the class. And if you want kids to believe that order should prevail, then they should see order working for them in their communities as well. They shouldn't just see order in school or the day when they go to work. They should see order in all aspects of their lives.

Now, the church is doing a fantastic job, and has always been doing a fantastic job. But the church is only one part of that human element—the spiritual part. They are organised to inculcate spiritual values in the minds of people. Now, if they have to teach you over and over again each week, each Sunday—three times a week or four times a week you get Bible Studies. But who ever gives people civic studies in this society? Who ever tells people about rights and responsibilities?

If you start a group where you are telling people about their rights and responsibilities, you are seen in this country to be subversive, to want to mash up the country, to get independence, simply because you are telling people that they have to be independent for themselves. They have to independently follow the laws of this country. You cannot come to the politician after you have broken the law and expect that the politician is going to do something. That's what I am talking about. Who has ever told these people all this?

The fact is, a lot of people have come in contact with the law in a very adverse kind of manner simply because they were never told about the formal structures of laws and the judiciary, the police and this and that. On one hand, we have a very formal State. But on the other hand we have done nothing to bring our people up-to-date with that formal State. This is because we have no political activism in our communities, because political activism is looked down upon as being dangerous and subversive to the status quo of the very few who control the benefits that are reaped from the multinationals' existence in this society. We want the benefits of the multinationals' global existence in this society to flow down to the wages of persons working in the banks and in the hotels, in particular.

When the Government of the Cayman Islands can pay its Public Works' staff a certain amount of money and the hotels are saying that they cannot pay theirs, something is wrong. If the Government can pay Public Works' people . . . [addressing an honourable member] John, is the minimum $6 an hour?

[Inaudible comment]

Dr. Frank McField: Six dollars an hour, and the hotel is still paying people $3.45 an hour. What's wrong?

We want to try to teach people how to become independent rather than to depend upon social welfare. We want to teach people how to organise to improve their wages rather than coming to me as a politician for a handout. That is teaching people dignity and self-respect. I can see nothing wrong with that.

I see something wrong when people continue to make the electorate of this country believe that their salvation is the politicians' individual effort on their part, rather than their efforts on their own part. To think that organising a general labour union in the Cayman Islands is more subversive than giving political handouts is nonsense. At least, when the unions are organised to try to improve their self-respect, self-esteem, and wage, you maintain stability in knowing the importance of yourself in the job. You know you helped to make productivity higher. You helped to make society better. Nobody organises for change unless they want to live better, unless they have hope and so kind of faith in a New Jerusalem.

I cannot see why we have a shortage of ideas with regard to political progress and social management in this country. We do not have a shortage of examples either, but if there are going to be those who are always going to point us back to how other countries went wrong while we are going down the drain and we don't know what to hold on to except somebody telling us that if you change your hand from this grip to that grip, you are going to fall forever . . . well, there are people that are falling anyway. Those people are willing to take the chance with some kind of new political direction, with some kind of new hope with a desire for change.

We want to see the Government become more responsive to the needs of the people. The first need of the people, believe it or not, is the need for work. The need to earn a decent living from that work. The need to be able to purchase certain services and amenities from the wages of their labour. If Government cannot tell us how that is going to be done—Government hasn't told us anything. Government has been very lucky in this country that it came to reap what other people brought from other places, including labour—immigrants.

The capital was brought, the expertise was brought, the things were brought, and Government is boasting about how great its management has been. It has not been Government's management; it has been Government sitting by and allowing things to happen. That is the reason why we have so many things wrong because sometimes not interfering in the things you should interfere in can make the things worse. So, it is not true that Governments do not interfere. All over the world Governments interfere because Government is the only institution with the right to interfere on behalf of the majority.

We need to reconnect, or connect for the first time. And we see that there are signs out there. People are moving forward with regard to the expression of their desires and their interests in a New Jerusalem. We see that the young people in this country, in particular, will become very important in deciding in November whether or not the foundation of that New Jerusalem will have to do with progressive thinking or reactionary thing, with progressive action or reactionary action. The reactionary action, Mr. Speaker, is the action that deals with he is going to destroy, she is going to destroy, don't trust him and don't trust her. The reactionary action is the thing that has caused the Cayman Islands for so long to be divided so much so that other persons have come in and have been able to assume immense power and control. At the end of the day, most of us would like to see someone else empowered—regardless of how much that hurts us—than to see our own Caymanian. This is what has brought me back to the thought of what is it to be really Caymanian?

Why has there been a lack of solidarity between the people? There has been a lack of solidarity between the people because the State has never existed as a true political State in this country. And, only when you have a true political State in this country will you have the solidarity between the people, because it is the State that will create that consciousness and that solidarity. Otherwise, we are just like a band of loose individuals who agree basically that we do not agree with one another about anything.

I once wrote a little play about this Legislative Assembly and how the principles were that I agreed that I do not agree with anything you say. If you say it is black, I shall say it is white; and if you say it is red, I shall say it is green because that is the principle of our solidarity. No State could ever survive any kind of onslaught from any kind of enemy be it from outside or inside with those kinds of values of collective behaviour.

This is the reason why the State finds itself at such a weak position where people can take people hostage in the prison. They can get demands that people who are lawfully organised in the society cannot get. Why? Because when we have a problem we fall apart because there is no trust, confidence, unity or solidarity. Statesmen must come, Stateswomen must come to give the State a soul, a face and to give the State the courage to move this country in the direction that it should have been moved in from the days of Ormond Panton.

That change has taken too long because of suspicion and envy and backbiting—'oh, I don't like his mama and where he came from. Those people like this and give them a little bit of this and they act like that'. But give the criminals a little bit and you see how the criminals act. I prefer Frank McField any day to those criminals out there. I prefer Captain Mabry Kirkconnell any day. We understand that our solidarity is important because they are becoming very solid comrades in the prison. Mr. Speaker, they are coming out and we cannot even find them. Why? They even have support on the outside. Why is it that they have the sense to organise solidarity and to know that only when they believe in one another, they trust one another, and look out for one another, they are going to pull themselves together as a unit like a chain that cannot be broken? And we in civic society will not accept those principles, although those principles have been accepted in all parts of the world.

Now, there is always negative that comes from everything—for every action there will be a reaction. But we can manage if we are truthful and some of the negative effects that come about as a result of political conscious organising . . . the political conscious organising has to be a part of the social development because it has to bring a consciousness of self and state without which we will not be able to defend ourselves against the lawlessness and the chaos which has been created by rapid traumatic economic policies that has led to immigration, and has led to dislocation and depreciation of the worth of the human being in the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Speaker, we have to do this for our own survival. I am quite sure that when they read this address in London that they will know that we can work together with the British Government in moving this country into a situation that makes social control once more possible. I am quite sure that the persons in London who are responsible for looking at issues of social control are very concerned at this moment. When we don't have our people who feel that the sacrifices of things are worth while in order to preserve values, when we have not trained our people, we expect that they will naturally think so. But if we look back at the development of England we will know that it was not always so, at least not among the broad masses of people. When we look back at the Industrial Revolution and the crime and poverty it created in England, Germany, and other places like New York, we know that crime and criminality is a phase that we go through and that we can get to the other side.

We can conquer this onslaught. We can win but we have to be better organised than the criminals are. That's all. We have to not throw our hands up and say, 'Oh, we didn't know this was coming'. We knew it was coming! At least I did, Mr. Speaker. I prepared myself for it. I am here to help to fight it, but I believe that to fight it we have to give the State the authority to do what is necessary to curb the tide of violence and the violation of people's rights and persons' property. The only State that is going to have that is a strong political State—a State that speaks to the minds and conscience of the people and that does not come about by itself. It has to be built.

The city of God has to be built. It cannot come about by itself. The preacher labours day after day, after day, after day, after day. But what does the State do? Nothing! It believes that pure economic incentives can keep things together. But things will fall apart if there is no glue and if there is no thread. The social values, the moral values which come from political deliberations, help to hold things apart. How can you say that when an American is talking about the values of the family, he is only talking about religious values? He made those values long ago and also political values—values to be propagated by the State and to be protected by the State. We have to see that the State has to become a new State involved in this particular process.

A lot of people believe that if parents are not doing things for their children that we shouldn't do anything but blame the parents. That would be good if the only people those bad kids would hurt would be those bad parents. It is unfortunate, but that is not the way it is. So again, we have to be our brothers' keepers. The State has to take up the slack because social control is the most important aspect of our society at the moment. We have the economics, but without social control and without really putting it back in the place it should be and with the importance that should be given to it, we will lose, because those persons that have come here graciously to invest—for their betterment and ours—will leave. That is what will cause them to leave—crime against property and person—not Frank McField talking about ideas and giving people the possibility to believe that as long as we continue to dialogue with one another we have a hope because we will be able to make a compromise that will be good for all.

So, I want to make it clear that the support of the police, the support of the prison, the support of the immigration in just cases can only come if there are men and women in this new State to give them the direction that will not create the kind of contradictions that those persons have to deal with now. It is necessary, for instance, to get rid of some of these nonsense laws because we have given our Immigration Department the awesome task of having to control some 70% of the population, or probably at least 70% of the working population . . . okay, I'll give, 65% of the working population—15,000 on work permits, or close to it. And the Immigration Department has the job of controlling 15,000 people? Hey, that is going to make any institution bad, because it is not possible. We need to do something to integrate part of those 15,000 people and make the job of policing less.

If those persons that they are policing have no rights (because they are here but are not wanted here), then all it is going to cause these kids to do is to become like Gestapo—big with so much power because they have power over individuals because they are totally geared and fixated on the policing of those individuals. So, let us say that if we don't want to absorb some of these persons in this new State, that we let them go. And if we let them go, Mr. Speaker, I am still saying that you are going to destroy your country. So, you have to integrate them because we need to get back to a situation where there is trust and where we clearly define what rights each one has—what rights that person who comes from Canada, what rights that person who comes from Jamaica, and that person who comes from Cayman, has.

We should no longer be concerned about stopping the Caymanian from lawfully organising himself and herself in order to see that they have a fairer chance to compete, because competition we will have. We are not going to stop the competition because when you stop the competition you are going to get into problems again. But there is no reason why if we have to have the competition that it shouldn't be fairer by people being able to depend upon themselves in mutual beneficial fraternal organisations.

I know enough about British history . . . I know enough about French history . . . I know enough about American history to know that without all kinds of organisations that were lawful they would not have been able to survive not only economic crises but crises with regard to wars, and values, and norms being attacked by criminal behaviour. Look at America when it went through the Mafia thing with the prohibition and all of the crime and this and that, it wasn't the end of America. We are not going the way Jamaica has gone, we are going through a phase where we are experiencing a breakdown. But if we are strong, we can get over it. The problem Jamaica had is that they didn't have the resources to put their foot back on track, but we do. And that is why I am saying we must be careful about what we say about immigration. Be careful about how we want to just limit competition by setting quotas.

Give people the possibility to organise and bargain collectively rather than to legislate for this and that and the other thing. Give people the responsibility for maintaining their own standard of life rather than maintaining it by legislation. I would prefer to see things that way.

But as a sociologist, as a person who has had intense times with relationships in this country, who has seen, felt, and experienced certain things on a very intense level, I say there is hope for us to get over this problem that we are experiencing in this country. We are not going to get over it by beating up on one another anymore except that we find that you are lacking and if you are lacking it means that you are not doing anything to change. I know that none of the Members of Government would have created what happened. They never created the problems in this country. The problems are created by a series of interactions with different factors. But they are very important in solving the problem, Mr. Speaker.

Like I said, if we believe that our people should not participate in our democracy, that they should not know about the OECD intentions, if they should not know about the need to have greater security, if we do not involve our people in caucusing their ideas and acting as strong politicians, as mediators, with regard these forums then we might find ourselves in a very difficult situation.

Now, all of us have noticed the growth in security in this country. All of us have noticed that a lot of the security officers are from Jamaica. What does that mean? It means that private property, private citizens' businesses have taken the State's role partly into their own hands. Why? Because they have observed the impotence of the State to a certain degree. If the State wants to share power with those persons who have wealth and who can afford to pay for this type of security (it has been done in other places), let's sit down and discuss it. Let's look at the pros and cons. Let's look at what has to be given to the security companies in this country to enable them to protect what they are there to protect. If we cannot give it to them then we have to be careful, because they are going to get hurt.

I mean we need to understand that part of the role of the State is to have a monopoly on violence and to use this violence when it is necessary to secure the well being of the people of the State and the property of the people in the State. I don't want to sound like I am a law and order advocate, but I can say one thing: the older you get the less you feel you can fight for yourself. The less you feel that you have the courage to pick up what is necessary to defend yourself the more you understand how important the State really is. Young people do not appreciate that particular part of the State like older people do.

It is important for me to know that the young strong policeman will lend me assistance now that my body is no longer that young strong body. I can no longer be a warrior for myself, but he can be a warrior for me. Although the enemy might not be from the outside, it's an enemy nevertheless. The criminal is an enemy of the State and the State must be protected.

Mr. Speaker, I hope to continue with this debate when we return from lunch. I know it's the time so I shall conclude for now.

The Speaker: Thank you. We shall suspend proceedings until 2.30 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.56 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.52 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continuing. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, when we took the break I was talking about the importance of the political activities, of the political institutions, in creating a moral and political consensus as a way of guaranteeing that the State is able to use its option with regard to the use of violence. If we get into a situation where it is "they" and "we" . . . if it is seen that the State is being influenced or controlled by them it could mean that we begin to disobey the State and to resist the use of the State in this particular manner, which is, at some times, very central.

We have to give the Caymanian State a Caymanian facelift so that it becomes important for the Caymanian people to understand that they are still in control of their country and that whatever is being done is on their behalf. We have to work harder to make that an understanding as we cannot take that any more as a given. The politicians cannot spend all their time, at least the Ministers in the Glass House acting like permanent secretaries coming in at 8.30 in morning and leaving at 5.00 in the evening and thinking that this is what it is all about. Part of their job is to hold the fabric of the society together. That means, handshakes when it is necessary, visits when it is necessary; that means activism and participation in the grassroots activities as well as the other activities.

So, I think that I have established the fact that I am not without some ideas as to how we can make our situation in this country better. I would like to deal though with where I still continue to believe there has to be changes, and that is with regard to the lower income groups. I talked about the value of land, the fact that today the amount of land you can use and that you can own has nothing to do with the amount of land that you need, but with the amount of money that you have. If we start off with the premise that Caymanians had land in the beginning but had no cash, and if land were exchanged for cash, it would mean that at one particular point Caymanians would have no land. It seems to be logical to assume that Caymanians would have cash. But since land is more important than cash or money, Mr. Speaker, as land is that instrument which produces all things—money is not . . . Money is derived. Money is a certificate to be able to demand certain things, but it is not a producer of anything.

So, Caymanians have not ended up with the cash and they have lost the land. They have used the cash to buy other goods and pay for other services. The mass amount of cars that you will find in the dump gives us a true indication of where the money has gone. The amount of toys that we find broken, the amount of clothes that we found that thrown in the dump; the amount of rubbish that is picked up by the Environmental Health Department each day gives us an idea of where the cash that we might have earned from selling our land has gone. It is gone, gone, gone.

The land remains, but it is not our land. The land is in the hands of private properties because we have created a commercial society that is based upon free enterprise and is based upon the ownership of private property. Therefore, for a Caymanian to say today that Cayman belongs to them—when in fact Cayman belongs to the person that owns the land—is for the people to be a little bit too late in making their claim. The claim should not have been a claim to Cayman. The claim should have been to your land—the land of your ancestors.

I had to buy a little piece of property in Windsor Park. Imagine me, a McField having to buy a little piece of property in Windsor Park when just one generation ago my grandfather had more land than we could ever use. What happened? Bickering and disagreement about the land and the boundaries of the land until all the land was lost and sold in order to acquire immediate gratification. Now, today, people are talking about Cayman belonging to them when the land of the Cayman Islands does not belong to them. The surface of this planet is the land.

A lot of those kids that might be studying astrology or geology will hear about the surface of the earth. The surface of the earth, Mr. Speaker, is also my backyard and my front yard, your backyard and your front yard. This is a very valuable commodity, and yet we found that our people were not educated with regard to how important land was. We are more interested in status and preserving status, keeping status and maintaining status, and not giving status and taking back status. We are more interested in that, although there were so many jobs being created to not only make a place for those first people that came here in the sixties and the seventies but for other persons.

So, while we were arguing about putting a moratorium on Caymanian status, nobody would ever suggest that a moratorium on Caymanian land would be in line in keeping with his or her wishes. So, we go to see that somehow the political education of people with regard to the value of things like status or nationality or land or jobs is very important. The fact that the sale of Caymanian land is not restricted, the fact that we have sold our land and now this generation needs to get it back, but will not be able to get it back by going out there and taking it back because it is already in the hands of private property—and that's for ever and ever, amen . . . people have to understand that. They have to understand that once they have sold their lands to foreigners they cannot take it back because these people are foreigners and the land is more important than status.

Why weren't we told that? Why weren't we educated to see that? I would have been better if we had given people status and kept the land because without the land you cannot live, you cannot survive as everything comes forth from the land.

When we talk about the land, we are not just talking about the earth, we are talking about the space above earth so if you want to build a 20 storey building it is still part of your land that you own. That is a magnificent concept and only God himself could have truly created something that was so overwhelming in terms of its wealth, and yet we had no appreciation for it. Why? Were we trying to get away from a tradition?

Now, when we talked about the land, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town talked about land in the 1970s. A lot of people thought that what he was talking about was farming. They thought that what he was saying was that the Caymanians should keep their land and farm it. No, you don't necessarily farm your land because farming to a lot of people is not profitable. But if you want to go to the bank today to get a loan, the greatest security you could have would be a piece of land. Since you could borrow on the land there is no need to sell the land because you keep the land as collateral and that is what most business people do.

So, the lack of economic understanding on the part of our Caymanian people or the mass or the lower income brackets in our country, the lack of economic understanding and the lack of a knowledge of the usefulness and importance of land is partly the cause of the current frustration, aggression, and dislocation which is happening in our society today. So, we need to understand that in order to rehabilitate our society we must help to rehabilitate people's understanding of the usefulness of land.

So, how do we get some land back for some of the people that need some land to build homes? Mr. Speaker, the Government recently—with a lot of encouragement from me, mind you—put $1 million in the budget for affordable homes. I was pleased that this was done. I thought it was timely that this was done, and although the Government has not professed to have any particular criteria for dispersing these funds, I thought I had some ideas, and, therefore, I welcome the possibility to encourage them and to vote along with them doing this.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot begin to allocate such an important necessity like housing and shelter to poor people (people who are indigent, in other words) before we assist those persons who are working and cannot reach the goal. If we deal with the indigent people first before we deal with the toiling people—the people who have laboured for years and still cannot get someplace—it is going to make those people who are hard workers, who we need to continue to be hard, disciplined and productive workers, feel that they would be able to accomplish what they want to accomplish if they drop out of the work system.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Dr. Frank McField: We don't want them to drop out of the work system because the work system is the most important social control system. Work is not just a system that produces; it is also a system that controls our people. I am not talking about control in a negative way, but I am talking about control in a positive manner.

In order to keep people working, let's put the carrot before them. And if the economic system itself is depressing the possibility of us holding a carrot, if the economic system itself is not giving the kind of economic rewards for people to be able to purchase these necessities, then Government intervention obviously, as far as I am concerned, is very welcomed. I welcome Government intervention—a new Government.

A New vision Government would be a government that would make available to Caymanian people that were actively trying to achieve getting a piece of land to make this possible. So, in other words, Government should use the $1 million to buy land and to somehow find a way of getting this land into the hands of the working people in this country so that, at least, they have the foundation to be able to approach the banks in order to get the mortgages which they need to build their homes.

The next thing that the Government needs to do is to be looking at low-income mortgages that people can afford. The interest rates in these areas should not be 13%, they should be more like it is in the America because the banks do not pay taxes here on their income. They are making millions and billions of dollars and they need to contribute something back into the society in order to pay for the social control strategies. Without the social control strategies that will work, there they will not be able to operate here because they will not feel safe here and they will not be guaranteed that here.

Now, they could say, 'Well boy, if we have to contribute anything to it we would have gone some place else.' But it doesn't work that way because they are not going anyplace else because they have already invested too much here. There is too much a developed infrastructure for them to be able to function as a highly efficient global institution. So, they are not going to go simply because we are asking them to look at the idea of establishing a mortgage structure for our people who are in a certain income bracket.

So, if Government were to say, annually put money into a programme to purchase Caymanian land to redistribute among Caymanian working people, and the banks were to be actively encouraged to give the types of mortgages necessary for them to be able to construct affordable homes and shelters for themselves and their children, then we might be looking at one of the most effective ways of controlling the growth of juvenile delinquency and gangs in this country. Everybody is looking at how we can spend money on the prisons and the remand institutions, but what about spending money at the source, at the root of the problem, by preventing it.

But there are those, of course, that believe that poverty is the person's own fault, the individual's own fault, the individual worker's own fault; that he is poor because he desires to be poor, Mr. Speaker, nothing is further from the truth. He is not poor simply because he has chosen to be poor, because that person labours away each day.

Freedom without opportunity is a devil's gift and the refusal to provide such opportunities is criminal. We have to provide the people of these islands with real concrete opportunities for mobility, for social and economic mobility. It is not the immigrants that they are upset with, but it is the lack of mobility that has caused them to become frustrated. We have seen this as we have seen the development in other countries that it is not . . . it wasn't so much the Jews but it was the fact that there was a lack of progress that allowed Adolph Hitler to focus on one group and to blame one group for the ills of society.

Freedom without opportunity is a devil's gift, and the refusal to provide such opportunities is criminal. I don't think that any of us in here can say that this side of this hall is without ideas. "The desire to improve our lot is born with us in our mothers' wombs and remains with us until we die." This was said by Adam Smith, a Scottish economist. Since then, we have moved from mercantilism to laissez-faire capitalism, to laissez-faire globalism. Therefore, for mercantilism to capitalism, we have to see that our particular path as a nation has been successful because of God's blessing alone and not because of any plan or any idea on the part of any individual or any institution in our society.

Mr. Speaker, the working people in this country, the people in the banks who are in that low wage bracket, the people who find it difficult to support their families to pay for the goods and services which they have to pay for in a commercial society need to be encouraged to find hope in something. It cannot be, Mr. Speaker, that they will find hope in the promises of politicians every four years for this too impacts greatly on the demise of social discipline in our society. When we see those who must help us as our main enemies, we lose hope and we become destructive. And for this reason, I believe that working men and women in this country can be helped and encouraged by the creation and maintenance of an association which gives them the possibility to become active role players in the greater economy of the Cayman Islands.

I, therefore, have put myself as secretary of a trade union in this country. Although I have been criticised by many, I said that what I was doing was lawful and therefore it could be unjust because that would mean that the law which allows us to organise ourselves as free individuals would be unjust.

What I find though with regard to the consideration of working people in the country is that if there had been a stronger desire to represent their interests as a specific interest, rather than as just part of the general interest (as the merchant interest as the Chamber of Commerce has been more specifically identified and represented), I feel if working people's interest had been more specifically defined and represented in this country the wages would not be as low and as crippling as they are. Although we had a Trade Union Law that was enacted in 1964 (already and revised in 1998 showing that there was at least a desire or a requirement on the part of the legal heads of government to keep this law for some reason) there was no show on their part to make mention of it in the Labour Law that they brought into being in 1987, 1989, 1993 and 1995. So, why is it that we would have a Labour Law, which would deal with the relationships between workers and employers and employers and workers? Why would we have a Labour Law that would deal with these things, yet that Labour Law would not even acknowledge the existence of the Trade Union Law? Why would that be so?

It goes to show that this position was, in fact, bad for the country. Nobody thought about would it be good for the workers, they just thought generally it was bad for the country. And why was it bad? It was bad because it was bad elsewhere we were told. But isn't it bad for the country that we have wages that are depressed and are suppressed to the level that people cannot earn subsistent wages? Isn't it bad for the country that gratuities are not being passed on to those persons that the law say should be rightfully entitled to those gratuities?

The Speaker: I would just like to call to your attention repetition. We have talked about wages. We have talked about NACE about two or three different times.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, it is not repetitious to talk about things in different ways—

The Speaker: I am not going to argue about it, I have just called it to your attention. Please continue with your speech and I will tell you what is what.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to you, I think that when the general public hears this . . . because I keep on talking about prejudice, about people feeling funny about certain people, certain ideas and certain things, trying to suppress these things in the society. I keep on talking about the fact that there is a need for freedom of expression, for people to listen and for people to follow.

I am talking about the general conditions of this country. I am addressing the Throne Debate. I am using this opportunity to emphasise the importance of us dealing with certain types of problems that we have dealt with before. That is my job.

The Speaker: I agree with you wholeheartedly, and I can think of numerous other problems that we have within this problem.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, you are an elected Member and I think you can have a right to debate this as well. But when I am debating, please let me talk about what I think is important and not what somebody else thinks is important.

I represent in here people, and I know the conditions of those people and I bring the message of these and I have the support of these people.

So, the Labour Law I believe needs to be revised. It needs to be updated. It needs to be brought into the 21st Century. I am happy that the Ministry of Labour could report that someone has been hired to deal with the gratuity issue, but I believe that the Labour Law has to accept the fact that a Trade Union Law also exists and that a Trade Union Law also gives people the right to organise. There is nothing in the Labour Law that suggests what the conduct should be. There is nothing in the Labour Law that says when an employer should recognise the right of his employees to bargain collectively. There are so many things that one would have felt would have been put into the Labour Law, if there was a formation of a Labour Union, to make this workable because we had a law that paid attention to it. But that whole idea of trying to banish something that exists in law even, to go to that extent is almost like a conspiracy.

Education in this country has to accept the fact that some of us will be workers, some of us will be owners, and some of us will be managers. People must be trained to develop their vocational gifts that God has given them rather than having it again ignored as if it doesn't exist. The creation of industrial education (or technical as some people like to call it) is an absolute necessity. It is so much of a necessity that we find boys and girls that are more (at least at this phase of their lives) inclined toward doing trades now in alternative education programmes. Education programmes that are an alternative to the one that now exists would be one that would educate people to earn a living to preserve a place for themselves in our society.

I want to see a change in this country. I want to see a change from some of these prejudiced attitudes in this country of ours. I want to see people have more open minds and tolerance with the views of people from the other side. I want to see the kids who cannot read and write because of whatever reason given an opportunity to learn something that will cause them to be more than just juvenile delinquents and criminals. I want our prison not to be filled with the children of the working mothers that our union represents. I want to give hope to them. I want to see that if not this year but in the coming year—when there is a new government—government commit itself to the task of restructuring education and taking it as something serious because people are very serious out there.

We need to reach out to people and we just don't need to create the opportunities or say that the opportunities are there, and because they don't take it . . . well, they had an opportunity but they didn't take it, so it's their fault. There is some reason why they did not take the opportunity and maybe we need to spend some time finding that out and we can relate everything back to work, believe it or not.

I don't think that everything is wrong with the educational system in our country. Obviously not. But I do believe that it is a terrible lack that we do not at this particular point have a vocational educational institute for kids of school age and not for when they are finished and going to college, or they are 16 or 17 years old. It is too late! They have to be socialised into accepting work as a regimented system at a very early age.

The way in which jobs are being allocated today to people . . . jobs are becoming much more regimented. The worker has less say in how he does his job. There is more supervision because it's all a part of the so-called efficiency and rationalisation of production. So, if the child is not going to school, the child is actually going to be ill prepared for the discipline of work. So it is important that the child be regimented into accepting the 8 to 5, or the 7 to 3, or whatever it is, schedule. But the child gets to learn to abide and to work with a particular schedule as a result of his schooling. So, schooling is an indoctrination process that has to do with preparing people for work—not just to prepare people's intelligence but to prepare people socially and psychology to be able to deal with the regimentation of adult work that people do for 40 years or more.

We understand that if they are able to disobey in the school because of lack of interest, lack of parental care and attention, then we cannot wait until they are 16 or 17 years old to catch and correct that problem. The problem has to be caught and corrected at the age that we find the problem. I think that if we remember the marine school and tourist school, the things that Mr. Jim Bodden was trying to do back in 1970s and 1980s, it was basically a similar thing. It was the recognition of the useful role which workers play in our society.

Now, I am looking at tourism as not just something that provides services to tourists but I am looking at tourism as a workplace. I am saying that a more industrial education would be an education that would require children to be busboys, waitresses, yard-boys and to serve generally in the lower paid positions or lower status positions in the hotel industry by the time they are 10 and 11 years old. Why not? Why not teach kids a little bit of gardening? If they learn to care for plants, they can earn a living caring for the plants at the hotels. Why not train kids when they are 10 and 12 years old to clean pools or to understand the science of cleaning a pool?

Why not train children when they are 10 or 11 years old to set plates? Would it destroy their freedom if you did so when they are bored with their books? I guess not! Some kids really don't have the kind of attention span because they do not accumulate that in the early part of their youth, their adolescence, when they are toddlers. Why not train children to be dancers, to entertain? I see people prancing with their children up and down on their knees when they are three months old and the kids start giggling and start dancing and so forth and so on. Why not see the natural talents of people, and rather than being ashamed of them, develop them.

All of this relates to work, wages, conditions and employment productivity, and relates to harmony because if the work ethics is inculcated in the children rather than the old 'junk-junkie' music and the old run-down things about what we need to do for our kids to find more entertainment and more places for them to dance and do these things rather than more places for work, I mean playful work. There are playgrounds I know that I worked on in London in 1992 when we had saws, hammers and nails, and the kids would come there build things and break them down. But even in this form of play, they were working because work is play and play is work. It is only lately that we begin to distinguish so much between leisure and work.

So, even this goes to show that we have some ideas and all of these ideas they are not being used—why? Because you cannot even talk about certain things in this country before people shut you down. They shut you down in one way or they shut you down in another way. That's one of the reasons why I have the television programme going and a newsletter going so that I will print all of this in. It is necessary to show the people of this country that those persons that said that they had the ideas only had ideas about themselves and how to preserve their interests, but in no way were they concerned about preserving the interest of the majority of the working Caymanian people. Most of us, although we might have started with a little business, all end up workers because we don't have the capital—and the banks make sure that we don't have the capital—to stay in business. So we know that business is not for us.

And, when it is for us it is for a short time just to make us know that it is not for us because you have to try to get some money from some of these banks sometimes to do something, and you find out exactly what their wealth is reserved for.

So, I see how tourism and education have to have greater communication. I see now why the Minister of Tourism and the Minister of Education have to be pals and have to have the same interest at heart, providing people and training people for jobs. If the education has no relationship to the needs of the country, it is not good education, it is trouble.

I believe that kids, especially with the maturity they have these days, can be interested in more things than we give them to do. Part of the reason why children were not used to work in other societies is because . . . when I was a kid I was use to work. Nobody ever said that I was too young to pull grass, to help Daddy go fishing, to learn how to fish, to learn how to clean fish, to learn how to chop wood, to learn how to twist rope. Nobody ever told me that I was too young. As a matter of fact, I didn't know that there was a working age until I went to America. I didn't know anything about a working age. You were working when you had the intelligence and strength to work and when there was a need for you to work. But this way of putting kids in this category and saying that they cannot work, and adults in a category that is in societies that have so many people unemployed that they need to keep the kids out of the work process for a while.

In a society like others where we have to import so many people to work, it should not be a bad thing to begin to at least train people and train children to work at an early age, and not to see work as an enslavement but to see work as a realisation of their creative human potential.

Now, tell me if we don't have ideas. Now, tell me that this is philosophy, because if this is philosophy the person who says so has not been reading about other places, about other experiments in education and educational development and the development of tourism. They have not been reading. Tell me. So, when the First Elected Member for West Bay brought his training scheme, it was a good idea, obviously, because it was based on some of the premises or some of the ideas that I am now advocating. Why is it that we don't have time to try new things? Why is it that when we find out that we are failing in so many different ways we cannot stop, reflect, evaluate our own performance, be critical of our own self and make a decision to go forward?

Mr. Speaker, the Governor made a few remarks with regard to the Vision 2008 system. The strategic plan that we must have for the country must be a strategic plan that recognises differences in people as, again, when everything is bundled together because of the hypocrisy of the society, the inability of the society to look inwards and to be self-critical. What happens is that we come up with one of these false ideologies again and do you know what these false ideologies are about? It is about blinding ourselves to the reality that there are differences and that we have to take these things into account in building a social strategy and in building a political strategy for our country.

Vision 2008 is full of a lot of ideas that a lot of us on this planet would want. The strategy here for the Cayman Islands would not differ from a strategy that anyone in any country would want because everybody wants the best. But the reality is that we are not a homogenous society. We are not as homogenous as we pretended to be in the Vision 2008 exercise. There are more differences in the society than are reflected in the Vision 2008 exercise. We still believe, nevertheless, that rather than run the country by the political will of the people, we will interview people and ask them what they want. They will tell us, and we will come back and put it on a piece of paper and say the politician should now vote for this and now go along with this. But the true direction of the country is not going to be done by Vision 2008. The true direction of the country is going to come from dedicated new politicians who are involved in building and gaining consensus among their people to be able to get changes that will create a difference in their lives in this country.

So, I have already filed my concerns with regard to Vision 2008, and I hope that they will be taken into account. I hope that the Government will have an opportunity to look at this debate in print and read it, and treat it for what it might help them to see from the point of view of what I consider to be a genuine, honest, reflective and introspective look at the Caymanian dilemma, the reality. It's no attempt to sweeten up anybody or to make anybody feel good. I stand by myself in saying that the healthiest policy is the honest policy.

I believe that we have to change the way our Constitution is now. We have to make sure that those persons that are elected by the people are accountable to the people. If we are to truly say that we have democracy, the people that are elected must be accountable—ministers must be accountable to Parliament and there must be some way of forcing that accountability. The only way that you can force ministers to be accountable to Parliament is the day that a no confidence vote is brought against those ministers and passed, and Parliament is dissolved and a new Parliament is chosen by the people. That is the only way that we will get accountability in this House.

My three years in here has told me that there is no point in asking questions because I will not get any answers. If I am not getting any answers, it means that the people who refuse to give me the answers—or the correct answer or the answer that I am seeking—feel that they are not accountable to me and, therefore, they are not accountable to the people that I represent. If people cannot accept the fact that this is good reason for some type of change in their constitutional instrument, it is because the way it is now served their purposes more than it serves the purposes of the people of these islands. That must be the only reason why.

We are not going to be any different from any other place. We are not going to run a modern economy, a modern society that is no longer homogeneous, but with so many different nationalities and with so many different interests, without a political development with regard to the responsibilities of Parliament and the ministers of Parliament.

I had something odd happen to me when I brought the motion with regard to the duties on foodstuffs. It was interesting that when the closure motion was voted that in a democratic Parliament this could not have happened because people were able to vote that are not accountable to the people. The people voted against what the people wanted because I brought it as the people wanted it. And in a democracy, the people must get what the people want because there is no will and no right higher than that of the people. I believe that there should be some change. If Governments are allowed to come in here and then form themselves as an Executive Council with collective responsibility and make the politics of convenience that makes the decision as to who is going to be in the Executive Council at the last minute, because if you told the people who was going to be together they might not want to accept it or you think the people might not want to accept it, what you do is you sneak in and then you sneak your friend in and nobody knows who is going to be in Executive Council. Then, when you have five people in the Executive Council, they use three official members and maybe one or two people on the Backbench to get what they want. But in a true democratic system when they leave the majority of the elected people, they lose. That's what democracy means to me.

I am not sorry, but I have not seen it truly work. I do believe that I am not being disrespectful in saying that perhaps my suit needs a little bit of tailoring, altering, I am not going to change it. But I would certainly like it to fit me. That's all I am really saying. I am really saying that as human beings we have these things to improve the way we do things. These things are not above us, these things are made for us, these things are of us, these things should act for us, and these things should be of us. Why not consider giving Caymanian politicians the responsibility to make administrative decisions? Why not give Caymanian politicians the awesome burden of having to perhaps fight an election not only every four years but every time they fail not to do the job that the people want them to do for the people to recall them?

Why is it that we believe that we have greater stability simply because we do not question things, that we are able to say, 'well, let's wait until four years and we will vote them out' and then we will vote someone else in that we don't know. Then we will have to wait four years again before we can get any kind of change.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are moving around, I don't know—

The Speaker: When you reach a convenient point, we will take the afternoon break.

Dr. Frank McField: Well, Mr. Speaker, my convenient point will probably be just to go ahead and speak.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.47 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.11 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continuing on the Throne Speech. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town continuing.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. once said, "Covenant asks the question: Is it safe? Expediency asks the question: Is it politic? Vanity asks the question: Is it popular? But conscience asks the question: Is it right? But there comes a time when a man must take a position that is neither safe nor politic nor popular but he must take it because his conscience tells him that it is right."

I would like to sum up my contribution, and I would like to thank you and this honourable House for the time given me to broadly outline what I consider to be important considerations for Government to make now and in the near future with regard to the improvement of the condition of the Cayman Islands people.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I might want to just say in summary that we are at a economic stage now with regard to the OECD and with regard to what is being expected of us. I think it is important that people bear in mind that this development that we have made here in the Cayman Islands over the years is not temporary, transient, and it is not by accident but by design. Many of us still do not understand the times of development that have taken place over the last centuries that have caused us to benefit and have caused us to play this vital role as a financial centre.

But the value accounting in a global trade system is a very important part of that system—the banks are here, the trust companies are here, the big law firms are here not because of any accident but because of design. We are a part of a very complex international financial system. We need to protect it by having good managers, good social political managers in the forefront. We need to protect it by examining truthfully all the weaknesses as well as the strengths which exist between our people, because its only when we have discovered our weaknesses can we truly find our strengths.

Denial about what exists in these islands to have caused it to come this far in the negative sense will no longer help nor will it give the kind of stability that we need. I want to say that with regard to the OECD and its desire to have the Cayman Islands comply with certain kinds of tax information exchange that I find this at this particular point to be unacceptable. I believe that the people of the Cayman Islands should be involved with regard to what's happening with the so-called consultations that our Government has been involved with over the past months.

It is my understanding, of course, that there is not much discussion that is taking place, but in fact we are being told what to do, when to do it and how to do it. The problem that the major OECD countries have is a unique problem. We are not their problem. Their problem stems from the economic growth of their countries to the point where the growth pours out into other territories. If we had one world, one political world, it would be no problems for them. But because wealth can be mobile most of the wealth today . . . as the land has produced mobile wealth and that mobile wealth is not American wealth, it is not Canadian wealth and it is not German wealth, it is the world's wealth. It belongs to the people who have made it and who own it. So, if somebody decides to take $2 million of that mobile wealth and relocate in the Cayman Islands, that is a gift to the Cayman Islands which has come as a result of world development. We could not have developed one individual with that capital potential.

So, for the United States' Government to say that it would like to regulate within our jurisdiction in order to regulate its citizens, I believe it is a false philosophical premise in the first place. Although that citizen might be a citizen of the United States that citizen did not by himself create the wealth. The wealth was created by citizens perhaps in other countries as well as within the United States. So, why is it that the United States feels that it has a bigger part to play in benefiting from that wealth than say the Cayman Islands or some place else?

We have to begin to develop arguments with regard to their incorrect idea of how the world should be altered with regard to taxation. We believe that nobody has the right or should have the right to actually tax mobile capital, whether or not it be the Cayman Islands, United States of America, Germany, France, or England. They should have no right to tax this because it does not belong to them. They did not create this economic progress in the world by themselves. It started many centuries ago in many different countries. And many different people have participated in building the wealth of this world and, especially, the very mobile part of the wealth.

The United States can tax property in the United States. Great Britain can tax property in Great Britain. Let them learn to live within their means. Let them learn to use these taxes. Why should they ask us to support them in exchanging information and bringing people to them so that they can take what they want from them? If I catch a cow, I am going to keep it for myself. I would only be interested in setting something like that up if we were going to directly benefit. But to actually be at this particular point asked to participate in those things, I believe the Cayman Islands needs to know more about these people's desires. I believe that we need to create ideological arguments against them. It is not just a legal thing but it is also a philosophical question about the legitimacy of what it is they are doing. Whether or not it is legitimate for them to say simply because the citizens might have had their nationality.

If an American wants to change his citizenship, and he goes to England and he gets British citizenship, he becomes British. So, if capital wants to change its citizenship how come capital cannot change its citizenship? Corporations are by law, Mr. Speaker, seen as legal entities just like human beings, and if human beings can change their citizenship why can a corporation not change its citizenship? If somebody decides that they are going to have a Caymanian corporation, then these people have no sovereignty over that corporation. As small as we are, we are big enough to say that this is not going to happen. It cannot be allowed to happen.

We are paying for the price of development today. We have social consequences as a result of it and we should have some guarantee that the wealth will remain among us because we have paid for it. The only way it will remain with us is if it is exempt from taxation not just our taxation but taxation from places like the United States, Great Britain, Germany et cetera. The argument, therefore is, if a person can change his nationality then money should be able to change its nationality also because money belongs to corporations and corporations are in law the same as people are in law and, therefore, I believe that the negotiation team would be wise in taking my view words here although I am not a lawyer. I would think that is a very good position to put to them and to stay with. You have no right to come into the country after a United States citizen has given up his nationality and assumed ours to do anything to him because he is a sovereign subject of our nationality and of our State. He owes his allegiance to our State, and we owe a responsibility to protect him according to the governance that we have made with him. And so should it be with the corporations.

So, I thank you again. There is a lot that I would have liked to have said, but all cannot be said. I am happy to have had this opportunity to use this forum to create some kind of skeleton idea of what my manifesto will look like in November.

I also think that I would like to open a suggestion here too with regard to the New Vision Movement because those of you who are familiar with the New Vision Newsletter are familiar with the New Vision television programme, Public Eye, will know that the idea of New Vision came from Backbenchers mentioning it. But I think that I also have a 1995 article where it said that society needs a new vision. I had that not so long ago to prove in fact that great minds think alike, and if they think alike they shouldn't spend time rowing about who came up with what first but who can do with what it is.

I deliberately captured that like I captured the title Time Longer Dan Rope, but it's not my intellectual property, it's the collective property of many Members here in this House. I hope that we don't let that label go to waste. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we can put a New Vision team together—a team of people that would be capable of taking the Government really into the 21st century in November. I am not saying at this particular point that I would like to play anymore a part in that movement than being a member of that movement, but I certainly would like all Members of the Legislative Assembly and all members outside with political ambitions to look toward the possibility of creating a political movement in this country that will give structure to political decision-making, that will give discipline to political activity and will give permanency to a political state which will bring us towards a New Jerusalem. Thank you.

The Speaker: I would now entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to move the adjournment from New Jerusalem to Monday morning 10.00 a.m.

[Laughter]

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 a.m. on Monday. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Honourable House stands adjourned until 10.00 a.m. on Monday.

AT 4.25 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL MONDAY, 28 FEBRUARY 2000.

EDITED
MONDAY
28 FEBRUARY 2000
10.18 AM

(Total time in Chamber 3:00)

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economic Development who will be arriving later this morning, and also from the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation, who will also be arriving later this morning.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on Friday, 18 February 2000.

The Second Elected Member for Bodden Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 18
FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Miss Heather D. Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I rise to offer my contribution on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE. I would like to thank His Excellency for his very comprehensive review of the important matters to be undertaken by government this year. There is, of course, room for lengthy discussion and debate on many of the topics covered, but I will limit my comments to those areas that are of greatest concern to me.

As reported in a recent editorial in the Caymanian Compass, time management is of the essence. I, for one, am looking forward to a very exciting year with positive developments in many areas. The year 1999 was a pivotal year for the Cayman Islands. We made impressive strides in the international arena and surged forward on many fronts here at home. We united ourselves behind a new vision.

In the international arena improved relations with the OECD and the European Union have positioned the Cayman Islands squarely on the world map. Our needs are being recognised as never before. And, while the extremely difficult task of building dialogue with these important institutions consumed a lot of government's time last year, no one lost sight of the work to be done here at home. This proves that there is good leadership all over, not just in ExCo, and there are many who deserve to be congratulated for their daily foresight and determination.

The Cayman Islands also reached a number of important milestones in the financial sector. These developments reaffirm our leadership on the global scale, and ensure that we remain at the forefront of an industry that is so crucial to our economy.

With the admission of the Cayman Islands Stock Exchange to the London Stock Exchange list of approved organisations, we can claim another first for the Caribbean region. As we move from strength to strength we are taking an increasingly higher profile on the international financial scene, and hosting major regional and international conferences. Our islands remain a model for other jurisdictions, and as we prepare to embrace the exciting opportunities offered by the exploding phenomenon of E-commerce, we can look forward to yet another financial area where the Cayman Islands is preparing itself for a leadership position.

The Cayman Islands Shipping Registry is world renowned. Having recently attended the Miami Boat Show, as I do every year through the Department of Tourism and the International Fishing Tournament, and in the company of our reigning Miss Cayman, Miss Mona Lisa Tatum, we were pleased to represent our Islands to the public at the week long show. One of the things that truly impressed us were the large number of boats registered in the Cayman Islands. This was seen all over Biscayne Bay. Everywhere we turned, we saw boats that said on the back "Registered in the Cayman Islands."

We were flooded with requests for literature, and I would even suggest that next year a representative from the shipping registry consider attending the show to answer questions, and to promote the Cayman Islands shipping registry directly. In any case, never before had I experienced such enthusiasm on the part of visitors.

Everywhere we turned people knew about the Cayman Islands and our position in world tourism and finance. I remember attending the same show some 18 years ago, and no one knew who we were. I have to smile when I think about those past years. When we mentioned Grand Cayman, they would look at us and say, "Do you mean the Grand Canyon?" As I was talking to Mr. John Redman this morning, he said that's where a lot of our mail got lost!

Now, everyone speaks highly of our beautiful home. Many had either made a visit, or were planning to visit very soon. Hopefully, with efforts underway by the Department of Environmental Health we can show them a nice, clean welcome mat when they arrive.

I am passionate about my commitment to keeping these islands clean and tidy, not just because of the importance to our tourism industry, but for us. It's where we live, Mr. Speaker. People need to get a bit of civic pride. Perhaps some people don't realise what we have here. Whenever I travel abroad, I am constantly reminded of the incredible beauty of our home. If everyone would co-operate and take care of their own little corner of paradise, we would all be so much better off.

I know that the Minister, through his Department of Environment, is doing his best, and I ask him to keep whatever he is doing going as far as getting the derelict vehicles removed. Please make an effort to have these eyesores removed.

I am also in favour of the zero tolerance campaign and propose that we tackle the issue by creating a task force, and also getting our young people involved. In addition, I would like to see more recycling. I think glass recycling would be an excellent initiative for this island. It is not costly, and produces a product that can be mixed with marl for road resurfacing. This would be a way to cut down on litre, while creating a product that is useful and needed.

I am certain that we all want to leave a nice clean environment for our children. I truly want to hear the voice of young people on this issue, and to get them involved. They may have some ideas that we need to listen to.

Earlier this month I attended the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington, D.C. It was enlightening to see that, as here at home, the big focus in the US is on the youth. This is a very crucial time for them with so many bad influences preying on their vulnerable young minds. As we all came together to pray for the youth everywhere, I was reminded that things are harder for them than they were for us. In my day and age, we had no TV. We had no major problem with drugs. We heard very little, except for the oft mentioned marijuana (or in those days, ganja). We had no idea about crack cocaine in those days. And the music that's being played nowadays . . . we didn't hear those things back in our day.

But, I am encouraged to know that the National Drug Council will establish the first of five drug, alcohol and tobacco free youth centres. Our children need wholesome activities and a place to spend time after school instead of being on the streets. This also eliminates pressure on the parents, and they will worry less.

The Secure/Remand/Drug Rehabilitation Youth Facility is also very much needed. This is where young offenders need to be, instead of the West Bay Lock-up, where they only come away with more bad ideas.

I know the Minister of Health and Drug Abuse is working very hard on this project. Although there is some controversy over the location of this facility, this should be dispelled in favour of an attitude that recognises the importance of emotional nourishment rather than incarceration.

As the minister has shown in his determination over the facility in Breakers, and this youth facility, he is committed to going the extra mile. You can be assured that he is one minister who will never write off our youth.

The residential treatment centre in Breakers will soon be a reality. I know the minister is pleased with the progress to date, and we are all anxiously awaiting the completion of this facility and its official opening, hopefully in June. This is another excellent alternative to incarceration and also to programmes overseas which take individuals away from their families. It has been proved that the success rate of such programmes is higher when individuals are treated in their own communities.

Discipline is an act of love, and we must deal constructively with this problem while these individuals are still young.

Efforts of the Royal Cayman Islands Police continue to be innovative. The pilot scheme of cycle patrols appears to be very interesting, and I must admit that I can confirm that is in progress because this morning as I looked out my window I did see officers on bicycles. I can guarantee that they will get their exercise at the end of the day. It brings officers closer to the community and their visible presence can only be positive.

In addition, the DARE programme sounds very encouraging. Students need to have this relationship with the police. Long gone are the days of fearing the police officers. This and other efforts are very much needed. There are so many crying out for help in these islands.

The residential drugs treatment centre in Breakers will offer hope to those whose lives are chaos due to this terrible enemy in our society. And, as attention is turned to care for the youth, we must not forget our elderly, who are always near and dear to my heart. I anxiously await the adult care centre projects slated for North Side and Bodden Town. I know that many of our elderly are eagerly awaiting these initiatives. It will certainly make their lives brighter if we can eliminate worries for them and their families.

Worries are also eliminated as traffic and road conditions improve. This must remain a priority. The Minister of Works and the Public Works Department are to be commended for the outstanding work in this area. The Nixon Roundabout is working beautifully and has eased a lot of troubled minds as we go to and from work.

Since we find that these roundabouts are working so well, perhaps consideration should be given to installing a roundabout at the Airport/Crewe Road Junction, more commonly known as "Malfunction Junction." I am also going to take this opportunity to ask government to look into ways to alleviate the congestion on Newlands Road or Hirst Road. Because of all the new subdivisions coming on line in that area, traffic has become very heavy and bottlenecks are occurring.

The road improvements in Lower Valley, Pease Bay and Breakers, while causing some delays during construction, are very much appreciated by those who travel that road every day. I would like to reiterate my call for illuminated road signs to be installed to indicate such conditions as curves, cattle crossing areas and other information that would help people avoid accidents on our roads. The Minister of Works and his staff may recall that this request was put forward during the roadwork tour last year. I note that funds have been approved for this purpose.

I salute the efforts within education. I look forward to the outcome of the Cayman Public/Private Partnership in Education. I am also pleased to see the continued development of after school programmes. I am also very encouraged by the recruitment of Caymanian teachers. I believe we must find a way to develop and recruit more of our own teachers.

This is probably the single most important job in any society, and yet, so often the profession does not get the respect it deserves. I believe we should not skip in this area. We should go for the best and the brightest. We need to encourage Caymanians to enter the field of education. I would suggest that a pay scale be offered that is in line with this task. Taking care of our children all day, every day, and participating in how and what they learn is very important.

Along with this respect for teaching should come adequate classrooms to accommodate the growing number of students. I am pleased that plans for new classrooms for the Savannah Primary School are all approved. I was just speaking to the Principal last week and she said she was called in to start looking for furniture. I am very pleased to hear about that.

As we all know, the Savannah/Newlands community is the fastest growing one at this time in the Cayman Islands, and it seems that everyone wants their children to attend the Savannah Primary School. I recall, after the students went back after summer break, as I entered the halls of that school, I recall seeing on the board "Savannah School—The Cream of the Crop." That's what it's often called.

The Lighthouse School is long overdue for a larger facility. All who work at and attend the present facility are to be congratulated for their outstanding ability to get by so admirably in this interim situation. As I often visit that school, I see the cramped classrooms, and areas that those little children have to be placed in every day. I know that the people taking care of the students, those handicapped children, are so looking forward to a larger space to be able to work with these children.

I was pleased to note that the Governor made mention some half dozen times to the district of Bodden Town. I must say that this was encouraging to me and all in my district who share my pride in the advancement of our goals. We have seen so many of our aspirations becoming reality, including the playfield, the public library, and the Bodden Town Post Office, along with road improvements and street lighting to help keep our neighbourhood safe.

One excellent way to encourage our youth to stay off the street is via sport facilities where they can enjoy healthy outdoor activities. The long awaited Bodden Town Playfield is almost ready to be opened. In fact, our youth are already enjoying practising sports each evening. I must appeal to them to take pride in this first class facility that has been built for them, to preserve it and take care of it. Acts of vandalism will not be tolerated.

The new Bodden Town Post Office is beautifully done. It will offer much needed services to our growing district.

The Caymanian Compass of Tuesday, 15 February, ran an article saying, "The new Bodden Town Post Office offers more services." I am pleased to note that customers will soon be able to purchase pens, writing and wrapping paper, tape, envelopes and poster tubes. That's helpful when people need to immediately respond to their mail, or when they do not have the proper materials to wrap a package.

Of course, we also increased the number of post office boxes from 224 to nearly 1,000 in the district of Bodden Town.

We are also looking forward to the replacement post office in Savannah. Once again, here is evidence that the community of Savannah/Newlands is experiencing such rapid growth that we outgrew our little post office as well. The planned sub-fire station, for which land will soon be purchased, will offer greater safety and security to the community.

I know that everyone in my district, and in the districts of East End and North Side, are looking forward to the new vehicle licensing unit planned there. Having this facility in Bodden Town will also cut down on congestion in George Town.

Members will recall that children wrote me letters about the need for a public library in Bodden Town. I am pleased to tell that their message did not fall upon deaf ears, as this will soon be a reality. I am also proud to say that some results are already been seen from my Private Member's Motion (No. 18/99), Consideration for the Protection and Assistance of the Physically Challenged. A ramp is being built at the new Bodden Town Library to accommodate wheelchair access.

Renovating the old Town Hall was an excellent move. This building is situated quite a distance from the road, which creates a safer environment for children who will be taking advantage of this lovely facility.

Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned several times in the contribution by the Third Elected Member for West Bay, all may not be well in paradise, But it's not just my problem and it's not just your problem, it's everyone's problem. But I daresay that if we don't preserve what we have, we will certainly lose it. I say let's unite and take back what we are losing. We have traditionally been a God fearing nation, and we need to stay that way and teach our children to be that way as well. Nevertheless, I would like to remind everyone that we are still a blessed little nation.

Economically we are ahead of almost every nation in our region. But it must be said in parallel to the impressive growth of this economy have come many societal changes which challenge all of us as citizens, parents, members of churches and a closely-knit community. I encourage everyone—not just those in government—to play an active part in finding solutions to these challenges. I believe those solutions must start with the family—the most critical component of any society. In today's world of two-job families, many parents say they no longer find the time to spend quality time with their children. I believe that this is more important than anything else they may find themselves doing on any given day.

It takes time to love someone, not just money. It does not good to throw material possessions at a problem. It has to do with the heart. Parents need to listen to their children and create a dialogue. In the Bible, there is a verse in Proverbs that says, "Train up a child in the way he should go. When he is old he will not depart from it." Children live what they learn.

I would like to share some words with everyone how this happens. Mr. Speaker, as I attended church service yesterday morning, it just so happened that I had this little flyer in my Bible and it dropped out, so I guess it was meant for me to read this morning. It says, "Children Live What They Learn."

*"If a child lives with criticism, he learns to condemn.
If a child lives with hostility, he learns to fight.
If a child lives with ridicule, he learns to be shy.
If a child lives with shame, he learns to feel guilty.
If a child lives with tolerance, he learns to patient.
If a child lives with encouragement, he learns confidence.
If a child lives with praise, he learns to appreciate.
If a child lives with fairness, he learns justice.
If a child lives with security, he learns to have faith.
If a child lives with approval, he learns self-esteem.
If a child lives with acceptance and friendship, he learns to find love in this world."*

In closing, yes, we are facing trying times. And although some of the previous speakers painted a rather gloomy picture of things, I must say that I prefer to focus on the positive. It is my belief that good will overcome the bad and we will certainly find solutions by pulling together. The list of recent achievements is impressive and the plans now underway for this millennium year are equally as exciting.

I am pleased to do my part to see that things move forward, and I will end with a little saying called "Faith" by Charles Stelezze. It goes like this; "I believe in today. It is all that I possess. The past is of value only as it can make the life of today fuller and freer. There is no assurance of tomorrow, I must make good today."

Mr. Speaker, I believe we all need faith to get there. I thank you.

The Speaker: The floor is open for debate. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) The floor is open for debate. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I must say, listening to the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town, it is heartening to know that among us there are thoughts such as those she expressed. And listening to her made me realise that it really does take all of us to make the whole picture complete. But, having said that, I guess everyone finds his or her own little niche. Unfortunately for the government at this point in time, where I find myself is working on the premise that the good things that can be mentioned about the government is what they should be doing. So I don't find myself being very constructive talking about the things they do that they should do. What I find myself being more productive with is pointing out areas where I find them lacking. At this point in time I can only hope that they will do something about it. If they don't, perhaps someone else will whenever given that opportunity.

That little statement was not to try to say to anyone that they should not be positive. I am not really the opposite of that. But it is just to say, coming right behind the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town, that I will not be taking that line.

In the Governor's Throne Speech for the year 2000, he mentioned a fair amount of detail, not only with the portfolios of the Official Members, but also the Ministries of which the elected members of Council are at the helm. He also mentioned certain areas for which he himself retains responsibility.

I want to start off by giving my view in regard to the government machinery and how I think it should be operating. For several years the backbench has been sending messages about transparency, about accountability; we talked about succession planning, role clarity and other areas in the public service. We have brought motions to this honourable Legislative Assembly suggesting certain (what we call) forward movements to bring about the transparency and the accountability that we feel is vitally necessary for government to continue to function, and to also enhance government's function whereby public confidence would be at an acceptable level.

The Governor mentioned very early in his speech about the Ombudsman. As is my usual style to tie in what he said, I would like to just read a few lines of his speech so that the point is complete. He said: "For the Public Service, this should be a year of consolidation after the various initiatives of the past few years. I have already requested the preparation of draft legislation for the creation of a position of Ombudsman, a post I hope can be in place by the end of the year. The Ombudsman would be the point of reference for all complaints of Public maladministration. We have a good Public Service, and I am sure they will welcome this additional element of accountability for those people whom we seek to serve across the Cayman Islands."

And while the last sentence may not seem to be important, I latched on to that when I read this for the second time. He said, "It is the Caymanian way to resolve difficulties and differences of opinion through consensus and dialogue rather than confrontation, and that is very much the way that I wish us to work together for the future."

I am going to spend a few minutes on the Ombudsman, and some other areas that I think tie in. But this last sentence, "It is the Caymanian way to resolve difficulties and differences of opinion through consensus and dialogue rather than confrontation . . ." If he had been here five years ago and made that statement I would have been in total agreement with him. And it is not to disagree with the statement now, but I wish to make a point about the statement because, Mr. Speaker, have you noticed that that is changing?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: For years we have known that to be our way. If there are differences, we have dialogue.

And let it be clearly understood that I believe that is the way to be. So, when you hear that confrontation is slowly but surely becoming the order of the day, you have to ask yourself why this is happening.

People aren't just born to be different; people are a product of their environment. If that is true, and this is changing, it means the environment under which they live is changing. What are the reasons for that? One could say that nowadays people are more informed, so they don't just accept decisions without questioning them. Perhaps that is true. But it has to extend itself beyond that. Now we see where people are voicing their opinions and wanting different results; and if they don't get those results, they are beginning to resort to some type of confrontation. It is obvious that there is something wrong with the environment.

Those who are at the receiving end of the confrontation will usually pass it off and say (as I have heard on many occasions), 'Well the young people nowadays are different then they used to be.' That provides no answer to the question. If they are different, there has to be a reason why—not because they were born at a different time. Uh-uh. It has to be the environment under which they grow. I am going to work on the assumption that times are changing. Dialogue is not always the method by which people choose now to resolve differences, and we see—slowly but surely—a little rise in confrontation when there are varying and opposing views.

Let us relate that situation back to the public service. The Governor mentioned draft legislation being prepared for an Ombudsman, and that this post would be the point of reference for all complaints of public maladministration. I firmly hold the view that if we are going to make any strides forward regarding transparency and accountability it has to be from the top down—not from the bottom up. Let us take for example the way I understand it works today.

The situation that obtains is this: the elected government, and, by association, the official arm (and I say it in that fashion for obvious reasons), who make up Executive Council are the policymakers. But if you examine the situation carefully, there is no straightforward and direct accountability at that level. There is supposedly collective responsibility, but that suits the occasion when they want it to suit the occasion. When they are ready to get all the votes going in one direction, they use collective responsibility for that. But if there is something wrong with one ministry . . . 'Oh, you must understand. I don't have responsibility for that. That's not me.' So, there are different levels. It is not consistent.

If government is going to function properly, in my view the collective responsibility being held so near and dear has to function in the right fashion. The very basic working of it talks about the fact that Council might meet, the Governor Chairs Council, and you may have varying views during a discussion, but whichever way the majority rules then Council moves forward in its entirety with that decision. And that is fair. That is one of the basic cornerstones of democracy.

But what does not happen at present . . . and we have preached this for years, but it becomes clearer every day. Regardless of what they say, they have never in my time here, come here with a plan stating to us and the country, 'This is what we plan to accomplish within the next three years, four years', or whatever length of time, medium term, or long term. I won't say the short term because you can't run a country on the short term.

What happens is that each ministry functions with its own priorities. This might not be an exciting topic, but it's fundamental and very important to understand as to why a lot of things fail. Each ministry functions with its own priorities. And then, after they establish their own path, every year they get together and by the time it's time to deliver a budget address they go through a whole long list of arguments as to who keeps what, who can hold what off, and within that short period of time no one can tell me that justice is done to the management of this country. It cannot be done!

They will say, 'Well, look at how many good things we have done.' Bologna! Not because I am saying that nothing good has been done, but because every day of the week we can still find where something has not been done. And we can say, 'Well, you know, we really should have done that before we did this.' Mr. Speaker, we are talking about priorities.

The way I think government should function is just as the collective responsibility prevails in certain areas, it should extend itself to collective accountability also. I will explain why. If every Jackman (or woman) shared the same ultimate accountability to this parliament and ultimately to the people of this country for all of the actions, then no longer would each of them have their own agenda. They would realise that even though they might get their agenda down pat, and might achieve it, if they don't look at the whole big picture, even though their agenda is complete they will be held accountable too. That is not what happens today.

One might say that is neither here nor there because that won't affect the price of rice or how government functions. But in my view, it is the single most obvious reason why the government functions no better than it does today.

This is an election year. They will tell you they have to look good. And the Minister of Education has the hardest time in his life keeping it together. As someone said in here very recently, to keep the peace, look at the state of education. I will get to that. The government cannot function like that.

So, when we talk about the Ombudsman, we talk about the functions of the government first because we are looking at transparency and accountability. If government were to function in that way, which, by the way, is what the financial reform is calling for . . . what it calls for is a medium term financial strategy outlining a list of priorities which government agrees to and brings forward collectively. And they have a game plan that they want to deliver to the country. We have never seen that. Each and every one of them talks about this, that, and the next thing.

It's not condemnation of them, you know. When I am ready to do that, the world knows and you know (and I will watch myself so I do not cross the line) that I will do that. The point is not to finger them; the point is simply to show up the inadequacies. But they cling to that because it allows them the latitude they want, and it takes away a certain amount of discipline. I won't get into specifics this morning. That is not the line I want to take.

If you have a game plan, if you have some type of medium-term plan to go forward with, . . . the tenure of a government is four years. Have a plan! Stand up and tell the country this is what you are going to do. But when each individual does it, and there is not enough money and/or time to accomplish all of it, all you have is talk in many areas and nothing gets done in other areas because no priorities have been established. I think that's a fact. It's not just conjecture on my part, I think it's a fact.

I think that if we could get government functioning in that fashion, and they come forward with a plan which has its priorities listed, meaning they project what funds are going to be available, you have your costings for these projects, and it's going to be a revolving situation, and while you have a plan you will have emergencies that will crop up, and you deal with them as they come, but you have to have a sense of direction.

Look at what is happening to roads. The Second Elected Member for Bodden Town just talked about improvements on the roads up toward the eastern districts. And she's right. But I don't know if you have driven there, Mr. Speaker, but I want anyone to tell me if the way that is being done is the most cost effective way to do it. It cannot be!

Again, so that no one misunderstands the point, I am not telling them they should not have done what they did. But it is obvious that lack of planning has caused the situation to get the way it is, that fixing certain areas of the roads is basically just outing the fires because you look at what is supposedly worse. If it were a moving plan and X amount was established every year, and you just kept at it, and kept at it, and kept at it, . . . It doesn't have to be exciting. The key word here is consistency.

I remember the Fourth Elected Member for George Town bringing a private member's motion regarding a road fund, which was approved unanimously. I haven't heard anything about it since. And that was one of his first little tick marks he got up inside of here. He saw the need for that.

Even when we talk about that . . . Lord, we are getting into things here I am not even sure we need to get into. Anyway, even when we talk about that it comes back to the fundamental way in which government operates—"Government," meaning whichever bodies are there. The reason I consider it to be so important is because it doesn't matter which bodies are there; it's because of the country. That's what it is all about. None of us are here forever.

We can't cling to that old way that we know doesn't work any more. We talk about the Ombudsman being the point of focus the public can complain to about any maladministration within the service. I just mentioned how I see government functioning, being accountable. And when I say being accountable, I don't mean hedging bets. I mean this is what you elected us for; this is the plan we are bringing to this country, and this is what we intend to deliver.

For that to happen, the financial reforms that are moving forward . . . and, by the way, I readily accept that while there may be a timed plan for those reforms, when you get into the logistics of it, if certain things take a little bit longer, I don't have any complaints about that once we understand why. I am not going to press and say that we are a year behind. No, no. But it must be done. And once we are steering the course, it's not a problem.

Mr. Speaker, you are an old seafarer. I only hear the tales. But you set course from Cayman to Jamaica and, depending on the ship you are on, if it takes 36 hours to get there, fine. But if you buck up bad weather, it might take you two days.

The Speaker: True.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: But there's no sense sticking to the 36 hours you set and making the boat roll over in the bad weather. We understand that. But you knew when you left here where you were going. That's the point. That's what we continue to lack.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Leadership!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, someone just reminded me that takes some leadership.

So, we have the way in which government should function if the financial reforms are taken on board in their broad sense. We then have a government that becomes accountable because it has a plan. And the Legislative Assembly doesn't come here once a year digging for what is right in regard to the budget. The government delivers a plan, the Legislative Assembly knows what the plan is, and the Legislative Assembly periodically gets the opportunity through Finance Committee and otherwise to question how long the plan is, what has been accomplished, if costings are still on line. That's the way it should be.

If that plan is not good enough, then when the results come the people know what to do the next time around. As of now, a large majority of the people in this country go to the poles because they have no other choice. There's no other methodology taught to them, and they vote for whom they like. That will never go right away. I know that.

This country is no longer at that stage. You have to function. I know how it works—I've been there, I've done it. But after being sociable to people, after talking nicely to them, after trying to do whatever outside of this forum you can to assist them, the job doesn't end there. It just begins there. You have a country to run. And whether it's the executive branch or the backbench the function must work in order to achieve the results.

Whenever government comes back to answer me, I hope they don't come with the same old fool/fool talk about look at this and look at that. We need to get into the functions because that is where the money is being wasted in this country. A lot of it is not being wasted wilfully. You know, they say wilful waste makes woeful want. We are soon coming to the point of woeful want. But it's not that the money is being wilfully wasted. It is because the way the system should function is not in tact.

So, now we have the government and we have the ombudsman. And we are calling for transparency and accountability. This is like a three-legged stool. If you take either one of the legs away, the stool cannot stand up. I have only talked about two of them, but there's a third one. That third one is freedom of information.

I know that the freedom of information private member's motion was passed a couple of years back. It has been unanimously accepted and it is going to happen. There is no beef about that. But I want to explain why, in my view having an ombudsman and a government functioning as it should with accountability, we must have freedom of information.

Our system of government . . . basically there is a line that has been drawn over the years when it comes to divulging information. That line is drawn because the system is there to protect leadership. Perhaps that comes from the old colonial style where if you look, even to this day, the real head of state is royalty. But in truth and in fact, there has been a certain revolution in that system. While the head of state is royalty, royalty really doesn't run the country. But that stems from that old style. You can't have any scandals—nothing like that—so you have to keep information tight. As far as I am concerned, none of us should have that luxury today.

If you have a government, and if you have a civil service where you have freedom of information, . . . and by freedom of information, I am not suggesting that there are some things that you don't call the press and say 'Come, I have this information, take it.' We all know that. I am talking about regular decision-making processes. If you have freedom of information, if you have a government that collectively is accountable, immediately—even with the existing government today—the thought process in making decisions is going to be a better one because they are accountable and people will know how they made their decision.

It is not to judge anyone saying people use the fact that you don't have freedom of information nowadays as shelter to do any shenanigans. I am not saying that. I don't want to entertain the thought! What I am saying is that we could never think of it like that if there were freedom of information.

Let us look at the chain of command. If we had a government that was accountable, they are the policy makers. The civil service takes it from policy to make it happen. If you have freedom of information, every level of decision making that is done would be done more thoroughly. Do you know why? Because at every level, from the Minister to the PS, to the Head of Department, to the man on the road, is going to know that whenever anything went wrong, because of that freedom of information you will be able to say, 'Well, it went right up to here. The policy was correct, the directions were correct, but they used the wrong piece of equipment.' So, you can understand what happened. It's a matter of rounding the system off to where decisions are made by thorough thought processes.

We cannot say that is the case today. The reason why is because we don't have a system that ensures that that happens. We must have freedom of information for that stool to stand firm.

The ombudsman's post by its mere existence is three-quarters of the job. If you have an elected government and a public service that knows, if there is any perceived injustice, that there is an ombudsman who after receiving a complaint will have access to determine exactly what happened, then they are going to ensure to the best of their ability that they are not exposed.

The fact that nothing like that exists does not give anyone the impetus to really make sure that when they are dealing with me, or you as the public, that they are going to do what they are supposed to do. Again, it is not to suggest that people in the civil service don't care, or that government is hiding behind a cloak of secrecy—although at times I have my thoughts about that because the world knows me and them hook on that all the time. We are going to continue as long as I am here, until I am satisfied.

Even when perception becomes reality, if we have a situation where everything that really matters is in the open, the public has access to such information, then the whole process will be transparent, the accountability will be levelled where it should be, and the system will call for much better results. The public will have the confidence they should have in the government. I guarantee you that now they do not—not just because of who the government is, but government itself. The public, not just of this country, but the public in large of the whole world now see it as much more important than it used to be that they have access to information. And they have every right.

Sometimes I truly wonder . . . if we look at any one of us who might be in Executive Council today, people see that as a position of such importance. Yes, on the one hand, because there is a fairly large responsibility there if you are going to be effective. And a lot of people think that it's something that makes you somebody. It makes people have to call you sir, and when they know you have come to do business, they treat you special and all of that. If you go to the public to ask them for the opportunity to represent them in these hallowed halls, you then are a servant!

Now, if you don't want it to be like that, then don't fool with it. That's how I see it.

So, it behoves anyone in the process to be willing to be held accountable, to be willing to participate in the process in such a manner that the public feels comfortable with the process and that they don't feel like you are doing something behind their backs to please one individual and at the end of the day causing more harm than good to the wider cross section. Why not?

I took the time to talk about that because the Minister of Education on many, many occasions has jumped up—as is his only defence so many times when criticism is levelled at him or at his government either for their actions or their inaction about the opposition not offering any solutions . . . do you know what I want him to do? Pick this one up and go do it. Then we might get somewhere.

It is nothing new to them. You hear me mention the medium term financial strategy? That strategy has been prepared and redone. It will have to be redone. If you have a medium term strategy that encapsulates a period of three years, what it means is that after you complete one year you have to add another year to it to keep three years remaining.

The Speaker: Right.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: So that means that you have to do a revision every year.

Mr. Speaker, I happen to know that six revisions have been done which means a minimum of a six year period! And the Financial Secretary has answered me on at least eight occasions if not more that it is coming. I am not blaming him for one second. I know he wants it to come. It is coming. It is coming! And it is still coming! But it has not come yet!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: This is not new to the government. But what that does is tie you in to a list of priorities. That is what they have run from for years! Because it requires discipline.

What they are used to is walking whoever you walk over to form a government. After you wear your crown and people throw you up on top of their shoulders, clapping and you come down to what really has to be done for the country, . . . they want the latitude to please whom they wish on any given occasion. And to be able to do that you cannot have a plan. I want them to ask which is better and tell me that it is not a planned priority process that is better than getting up every morning and listening to hollering. It has to be!

Go to your home, think of your children. Think of how they throw things at you every day, and think, if you responded to their whims and fancies every time they made their requests, if you would have any uniformity, any discipline, or any progress. It wouldn't happen because they are acting on instinct. I don't think I have to go any deeper into that. I think the point is made.

The Speaker: If you have reached a convenient point, we shall take the morning break.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes sir.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11:32 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12:10 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. This break was exactly 38 minutes. I ask honourable members, let us try to shorten the breaks. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Just to sum up on the picture of the three-legged stool I have been painting in regard to the working of government, I want to say that if there is an intention for legislation to be brought forward and for the post of ombudsman to be created before year's end, then I think that it is important to move the introduction of legislation for freedom of information forward. I think the way it was originally planned was that it would have taken a little bit longer for such legislation to be introduced, but I hold a firm view that the post of ombudsman cannot function effectively unless freedom of information exists.

So, I urge His Excellency, in tandem with what he said about the ombudsman, to take into consideration the accompanying legislation for freedom of information. I certainly support the post of ombudsman because I think it will allow government to function much more effectively, and public confidence in government to rise.

When we look at the way in which a government should function, and we look at the distance we have travelled as a country in such a very short period of time, relatively speaking, we find that we are facing a myriad of problems today that perhaps the majority of us would not like to have to face. But along with certain things come others, just by the nature of the beast.

There has been a select committee on immigration that has met. There is an interim report that has been laid upon the Table. We have asked for more public input based on that report. By now, we will have various sectors of the community responding. As was anticipated, and as is expected, we will have varying views from various areas.

The progress we have enjoyed as a small country is phenomenal, to say the least. There is always the down side. And several of us have talked about that over the years we have been here. There is always the cry about the price of progress and do we really get the benefits of such progress accruing to as many as possible.

In any country—and we are no exception—certain sectors of society cry out for certain areas; others say, ‘Well, if you do that, it’s going to affect us negatively.’ You will always have these varying views. But there are certain basic commonalities that I believe any deliberations on this matter must take into consideration, otherwise the logic will be skewed regarding what is best for the country.

When it comes to immigration in our situation, I think that one of the base ingredients has to be, regardless of which angle you are looking at it from, the pending social impacts. A friend of mine said to me this morning that if we do not do the best we can to control our own destiny in this area, then perhaps what we are doing is throwing our hands up in the air and having to accept whatever happens. Regardless of the varying views, I don’t believe anyone does not want the right thing to happen.

Bearing in mind that we should try to be as least confrontational as possible and entertain dialogue, I think that is exactly what we need to do. I am going to just say a few words about it. I think while the Governor made no specific mention in the area of immigration, I think it is very important for us to consider. It is going to have—as it already has had—a very, very serious effect on what this country is going to look like even ten years down the line, much less twenty.

There are some basic facts, which at the moment I don’t have all of available. But I am going to talk about that for a second. I don’t have exact figures, so I will use approximations. But the approximations are not quite as important as the ramifications, so I think I can just use rounded figures.

If, when the census is completed and collated and the results made known, we end up with what is thought to be a population of 45,000 people, and if perhaps the Caymanian end of that population (Caymanian being status holders and their offspring, and what is termed the indigenous population) is 20,000, then if we take the rest of that figure and try to discern what figure is called “transient” and what figure may be termed “residents of the island” even though the vast majority will not have achieved what we know to be “permanent residence,” it is still very likely that we will have all inclusively 20,000 people who would consider themselves at this point in time to be permanent residents.

One of the things we have to be looking at is when we want to talk about Vision 2008, what the country should be like by the year 2008, the immigration factor is a very vital part and ingredient of that entire picture. I pause to make a little joke here.

From the day I sought to represent the people of the district of George Town, I have constantly been accused by those whom the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town would call the “detractors” of wanting to be elected because I want to give all the Jamaicans status. Yes. I have heard it time and time again. I heard it recently too.

I hold the view that that stems from the fact that perhaps because of my long association with sports and other areas, that a lot of the Jamaican population who have been here for many, many years . . . I know the vast majority of them. People associate me on occasion with that part of our community.

But, I am also known (as I will say today) to have a belief that the many long term residents in this country—and when I say “long term” I mean long term, people who have made here their home; people who have been accepted in this community; people who have bore children here; people whose children have gone through the school system here, have grown up here and are working here—cannot be left as they are. I hold that view out of a sense of natural justice, but also because the fact is are we going to tell them they have to leave the country?

We haven’t done so thus far. In fact, it seems pretty obvious that government has found itself in a situation where it is such a difficult task to tackle that in its eighth year as the government it hasn’t done anything about it at all.

Here are the facts as I know them. While many of us will agree that these very long term residents should be dealt with, because they are not going anywhere, and if they are going to be part of this society they may as well feel themselves part of the society, to be able to be the productive members of society we would like them to be, then if we even take those away, and we want to talk about, let us say people who have lived here between five and 15 years, but who may not have permanent residence at present, but who consider themselves to be permanent residents of the country because they are acting the role of permanent residents—they are buying homes, and all of those types of things, those people in that category are several thousand people.

In fact, I believe that we are looking in excess of 10,000 individuals—not counting children. And they are making children! We are not talking about one person. And with any decision you are going to make, you cannot think of a displacement in the society as it is of any of those numbers I am talking about. It’s just not practical, it’s not sensible, it’s not reasonable. So, when we look at that type of stuff, Mr. Speaker, we have to consider how we want our country to be within ten years, within 20 years. We have to begin to make some decisions.

When we look at the kind of numbers we are talking about, we will have one arm of the society saying, with a valid fear, that Caymanians are already beginning to be outnumbered. Then, you look at the wider ramifications and you think of the business world in this country. While the people involved in business may want to agree on the one hand about Caymanians being outnumbered, if the facts are put to them, for those businesses to function the way they are now, and to have any chance of continuity, you cannot displace these people out of society. Not only do these people work in these businesses, but their earning power is just as important as any other segment of this society to keep business rolling. It's not an easy task.

Some people will make political hey-day out of this situation, trying to grasp opportunities when they hear certain things being said just for political expedience. In my view that is so irresponsible it is not funny! This is a serious situation. We have people who have made their lives here over many, many years, who you find it difficult not to be willing to say we have to do something about these people. I don't care from what angle you look at it.

Let's get this very clear now. Government has taken it on its own to put some fancy thing in the paper about this interim report, as if to absolve itself, in that statement about the five ministers. I ain't getting into that. Don't worry. I am not going to do that.

The fact is that the report is just that—a report. Obviously, there were various thoughts that went together from amongst us on the committee to come up with that report. But no one is saying that there is a hard and fast circumstance coming out of that report, which is what any amending legislation is going to bring.

I will tell you that I think it is very important for everyone in considering this situation to have the ability to look at the wider picture to make sure that, as difficult as these decisions are, at least we get it as right as we can before we move on. What would be the worst to come out of this is for nothing to be done.

The Speaker: I agree.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: That's what would be the worst, for nothing to be done—as has been the case for many years. I contend that because nothing has been done for many years is why the decisions that now have to be made are that much more difficult—simply because you are looking at larger numbers of people.

I am going to use a little example. There are seemingly many concerns about the five-year rollover period for foreign nationals being employed in the country. Those concerns have their validity because a business will say, 'Well, if we are going to have to continue to import labour, then if someone is working with me for five years and that person knows the business and is performing his or her functions very well, why are you saying to me that I can only have that person for five years, and then I have to go and get someone else and go through transition periods and lack of productivity until I can get the new person in gear and get going again.' That's valid.

But, on the other hand, if we look at the broader picture—and this is going to be shocking, but mathematically it is correct—and we do nothing for the next 15 years (hear this carefully), if we do just as we have been doing now, we are going to have a population in this country where 70% of the voting age people will not be able to vote, but they will be residing here on what they call a permanent basis. You will have a government and a Legislative Assembly that basically represents 30% of your population. That's the big picture! I may not have all of those figures right down pat, but mathematically, the way the trend has been I am not far off.

Let us examine the wider ramifications. Any country in the world (Cayman being no exception) cannot survive or function with a population with that type of ratio. It cannot. Let us look at some very basic problems that creates. Let us look at the makeup of this Legislative Assembly, if that were allowed to happen.

People who seek to be representatives are only naturally going to expend their energies in the areas that matter at the poles. That's only natural. Mr. Speaker, do we realise what kind of country we could have then? And then you look at 70% of the population that feel totally disenfranchised. How can they function in this society? How can they feel they are part of a society and still be expected to function by being good citizens, by making the sacrifices they should make to have their country in good shape? You couldn't expect that.

Now, what I just said . . . chances are that half the world that might hear this statement will say that I am a mad man. I am not! I am not known to make those kinds of statements off the cuff. I am much too cautious for that. I have thought about this. I have looked at the numbers. I have been scared you know what, and still am, because I (admittedly so at this very minute) am still not 100% sure of the correct direction. But, as I said, what I know we can't do is nothing.

If we paint that picture and understand those ramifications, what it comes down to is that, first of all, every Jack man in this country, whether he is resident or Caymanian, must understand that all of us—every one of us—has a responsibility to ensure that our actions are based on proper knowledge when it comes to what we want to see happen in this direction. We also have to consider, very, very seriously, what kind of composition we want our society to have over an extended period of time. I am going to explain that.

I believe that because people don't think I have any hidden agenda I feel free, even when it's controversial, to speak what I know is my truth. I don't think people believe that I have any ulterior motives. And I believe that I have the responsibility to make the facts known to make sure that people consider all the things they have to consider. I understand that it's difficult when you take one perspective and come to a conclusion to really take time out to look at the big picture. But our responsibility is that whole big picture. It is not to one person, or to one arm of society, or to one special interest group. Our responsibility is to hear all of them out and to ensure that the dialogue gets to the point where all the facts are known so that people can begin to look at the bigger picture rather than be insular. And that's what I am trying to do with this little area this morning.

It's touchy. It's very difficult to deal with. And most of us are afraid to pass opinions for fear that we have more against that opinion than we do for it. But when I talk about the composition of society over an extended period, and I think if I am correct, the facts will be made known to the public in very short order (I don't have those facts, but I think we will all know in a very short time), let us look at work permits, and let us look at the numbers of those work permits and which categories constitute the larger amounts of bodies. These are just hard core facts, no emotion.

The trend that we have allowed by inaction on our part over the past several years (because of not having any real policy direction of consequence, so to speak), is that people have come here because of the way the economy is. The way the country is, many people naturally want to stay here. They enjoy good working relationships. But we have to look at those numbers and consider as time goes on (when we see the categories that have the most bodies) what will make up our entire society in a few years' time.

The reason I am not going much further with that argument is because I don't have the statistics available to me. But, as I said, they will be available shortly. But we have to be looking at that. And we have to create a balance in our society. We cannot simply look at if any decision that is made is going to perchance financially impact negatively any sector of society. This decision has to be made based on the big picture.

You know, Mr. Speaker, what is more frightening with this immigration issue is that I don't think the majority of people really, really, realise the numbers we are talking about. Let us extend the argument a bit further.

On more than on occasion, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town has mentioned that 53% of the Caymanian working population earns below $1,500 per month. This argument about immigration cannot be isolated simply with numbers. That's a very important part of it. But it also extends itself to our ability to educate the Caymanians. And not only the Caymanians, but also those others who are here to stay whether we like it or not.

If those proportions which have increased dramatically over the past few years because that imported labour force continue to increase in that proportion, what kind of society are we going to have? People might not want to talk about this. They might not want to address it. They might think that because it is not looking at the day after tomorrow that we can just shove this aside and make somebody else deal with it. I ain't planning to go anywhere right now. I think we should have dealt with this a long time ago.

Every day that passes and we don't try to make conscious and informed decisions about this situation makes it more difficult and makes it have less chance of us doing anything right about it.

I, for one, hold the view that if we drew a line, created a perspective, and put the majority of the people in this country on a course with their lives, that everyone would want to protect the future of this country all the more. Right now, we don't have that. You hear a lot of people talking about the cultures being imported, and all the negatives about that. Some of us actually witnessed some of those negatives. Those statements are not totally unfounded.

If you want to try to establish some type of control over that, you have to have policy and direction—and we have none at present. We cannot create policy or direction in this area by listening to one person regarding a certain issue. We have to be looking at the whole big picture.

When I speak about policy and direction, I am not just talking about little policy directions being forwarded every now and then to the Immigration Board from Executive Council. I am talking about broadbase policy which determines as best as possible how this country is going to view itself within given periods of time. And if you don't have policy, which gives as much possibility of that occurring in that period of time, then you basically have to take what you get.

I don't think we are in a position any longer to simply just sit and hope for the best because the best will happen. It's not going to happen.

I welcome all the varying thoughts about our situation regarding immigration, simply because I want as much information and knowledge as possible so that my perspective when it comes to the decision-making process can be as informed as possible. But I will tell you what I am not going to do—and I mean this from the bottom of my heart—I am not going to participate in any decision in any manner which does not allow for us to look at the broadbase picture that we have to look at now.

We cannot make decisions any longer in an insular fashion just to get this person or that group off our back. Everyone's responsibility—including ours—is to ensure that we look at the entire picture when we come to make these decisions, and we have to begin to make them. We can't get scared and use avenues and methods to hold off on these decisions because it makes our life easier. That is what has been happening for too long.

I am not a proponent of any single action just to satisfy any person or group of people. I have my own views which I have no problem expressing. But at all times, when I express those views, because I know how difficult the situation is, I always crave for other views so that it may help me to make the right decisions. I think that all of us should look at it in that light.

So, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned this area to say that when we are looking down the line in all of our dealings with the workings of government, and how we see the country being shaped over the next several years, this is very critical. We have to be willing and prepared with all of the information available to us to make the decisions that are necessary for the very survival of this country.

The social impact alone that faces this country, not only in the immediate but down the line . . . if we do not do what is right in this area, it can be totally devastating.

Law and order, and social harmony are the attachments to our success in the tourism industry, the financial industry, notwithstanding all the legislation that keeps coming in place to keep up with the times. But the day our country is not safe and the ambience that exists disappears, it won't matter what type of legislation we have, or how many attractions we have, people will stop coming here and will stop doing business here. It is as simple as that.

So, our responsibility has to bear that in mind. We cannot simply hope for that to retain itself, but improve and make it happen, we have to make conscious decisions that will ensure the best chance of that happening so that we don't lose it all. And don't forget, the social impacts I am talking about, the social harmony, that affects everything. If our economy ever noticeably drops, we are D-E-A-D in the water!

The people in this country have become accustomed to certain things. And even though you have a lot of people not earning quite enough so they can be as comfortable as they would like to be, the vast majority can get by. But also, unfortunately for us, many people in this country are living on next month's paycheque. They are. That is a fact. If this economy slows down noticeably and people can't make their way . . . none of us even wants to think about that.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: That is not preaching gloom and doom. But any of us who don't realise the very distinct possibility of those things happening if we are not serious and conscious in the decision-making process is sadly mistaken. That should simply be the ringing bell to make sure that we do what we have to do.

The Speaker: Are you at a convenient point? We shall now suspend proceedings until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.55 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.45 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

When we broke for lunch, I was just about summing up the area of immigration. I mentioned that I considered it to be one of the most aspects of consideration we have to deal with now as a country.

Before I move away from that, I was talking earlier about the various ways one might want to look at the very serious decisions that have to be made. I would just like to make a point that it is of vital importance, from my perspective, that we decide the composition of the society that we wish.

I don't subscribe to the view that we should only allow professionals to remain in the country for extended periods of time because they are "professionals." That, in itself, can have a negative impact on your society because if we look at it from that point of view we could end up in both the medium and long term with a lot of dissatisfied Caymanians considering themselves displaced in certain types of occupations.

But neither do I subscribe to the opposite view that relates to the composition of the society we want. If we turn the coin and say that we don't want the professionals, and all we want are certain other unskilled categories by numbers, that will create its own problems. It is not an easy decision.

I raise that point to say that anyone who wants to take a position in regard to the decisions that have to be made, should take the time out to get all of the information available to ensure that that decision is not just based on how it will affect them. If we limit it to that, we are going to get nowhere. We have to look at the broad picture.

The other thing that I wish to say is that while none of us might be able to look in a crystal ball and know exactly what the future holds, I think we as a country have to bear in mind that when it comes to the rate of development we have experienced, it doesn't necessarily mean that we plan for that rate of growth to continue. At the same time, we don't want to talk about slowing the economy down to a grinding halt because the Caymanian society is not prepared for that, and that could spell more doom than anything else.

What we have to do is examine what good has come out of the growth we have experienced, and we have to be able to understand and accept the down side, the prices we have had to pay. Then we have to decide what level is acceptable. Have we paid too high a price? Are we prepared to pay some more? Exactly what are we willing to accept in order to achieve the goal?

I think that for too long we have been afraid to openly address these issues. And the majority of us in the political arena sort of have an almost inbred fear of taking positions because if we satisfy one side, then the other side will turn against us. I don't think that should be the exercise. I think we should all be willing to offer our opinion, but to respect what others say, to make sure that any position taken by any amending legislation or any policy directives which might come from government, at least we know that when those decisions are made they are made from an informed position, knowing just about all that is possible to be known about the ramifications of those decisions. That's the way I think we have to look at it.

I would say today to the public that I would hope that the public can take on board that same attitude so that the fear does not continue to exist that you know this is the right decision to make but you don't want to have to take on this group or the next. The truth is, whatever decisions are made, and whatever impact it has on society and the economy will affect all of us. So while I am sure that no one wants to make the wrong decisions, we cannot be insular in the thought process. That's what I am saying about it.

Perhaps that's enough said on that topic. I will now move on. I am not going to necessarily be dealing with the areas I want to in the order they appear in the Throne Speech.

I mentioned that three-legged stool, and I spoke about the ombudsman, and about transparency and accountability in how I think government should function. I spoke about freedom of information. Walking the same road with all of that is what the Governor referred to as capacity building under the Personnel Department.

Here are the facts, as I know them. At present we are undergoing some changes in the way we do business. The financial management reforms are going to cause the way the civil service operates to change. While this has to be a timely process whose methodology is acceptable, the important thing to bear in mind is that we have a good civil service that by and large operates within the bounds of the system it operates in as good a fashion as one can expect. But we are not going to be able to expect all of these changes to take place if we do not equip the civil servants with the right tools to not only make those changes, but having made those changes to work them on a day-to-day basis. So I think that's very important.

We have argued on more than one occasion about succession planning. And I have to say at this point in time that I do not believe there has been enough effort in that area by and large. I don't believe that enough emphasis has been put on succession planning and capacity building within the human resources available.

Perhaps it is not very sensible to go back and talk about all the things that have gone wrong with that. Perhaps it is best for us to look at the more vital role that takes on in the function of government as we move forward. I think that we should be able to identify the needs as they arise and we should be able to find ourselves with the mechanism in place to identify the people who can satisfy those needs and equip those people with the tools to do just that.

That is perhaps easier said than done, but I hold the view that we do not have a choice in the matter. I hold the view that this must be done. Along with that is the fact that if the government is going to deal with initiatives and create expectations from the private sector in this area, then it must lead by example.

It is probably not factual to say that nothing has been done about it. But I seriously believe that not enough attention has been paid to it. Unfortunately, the problem that might arise out of a lack of succession planning or capacity building within government itself, can probably easily be paralleled to the private sector.

Let us just take an example that could fall true for both public and private sector. Let us say the private sector, someone that needs an employee. Let us say one of the larger firms needs an employee with certain skills, but it is a growing company and they don't find the time to train a Caymanian to fill that post. It is much better for them, and from a dollar point of view wiser for them in the immediate term to pay the government a fee for a work permit and get somebody from overseas who is qualified to do that job. While they have to pay the work permit fee, at the end of the day they are importing some immediate efficiencies in human capital which will in turn produce results for them, both financially and otherwise, within their company's operation.

If one simply looks at the logistics of that in the immediate term, you can't fault them for that. So, let us look in the public sector. We find the same thing prevailing in individual jobs. The Immigration Board will write back in certain categories and say you must be able to find a Caymanian who can do this job. And there is continuous argument over this. It just never ends. And you wonder what the solution is.

I say that government has to lead by example because we now have to be looking a little bit further than our noses when dealing with such matters. If we are not prepared, not only in the public sector but in the private sector, in all sectors, to accept not only a social responsibility but a financial responsibility to our own well being, we are all going to pay the price for it.

Remember when I started off this morning I talked about the Governor's statement that the Caymanian way is to have dialogue when there are differences rather than confrontation? Now we notice that there is just a little bit more confrontation and everyone is wondering why. These are the reasons why. It has happened in so many other countries before, and many of us keep referring to other places. But it seems that we are hell bent on making sure that it happens to us too so that we can add ourselves to the list.

I don't want that to happen. I don't think that any one of us wants that to happen. But we have to do something about it.

You keep wondering why people start to think differently. It's like this: If you have a civil servant who in his or her own experience feels like he is being kept down and not being offered enough opportunities to avail him of better training to not only increase his earning power but to find a better lot in life, then that person who is dissatisfied is going to tell his friend, who will tell his other friend, who will tell his other friend. So, you get a way of thinking on one specific situation that they want to hold Caymanians down. Worse if you find a second situation like that and the whole situation just keeps multiplying itself. I believe that is what has happened.

Not only do you find the word spreading whenever we are not sensitive enough to deal with the circumstances in the right way, but we find that we have a double problem. Not only will you have dissatisfied individuals, but as time goes on, we find them wanting to get together to make a difference. Just like the people in church get together to make a difference in this world, so too, people who feel there are injustices. They will get together because they want to make a difference too.

Hence, you have the confrontations. You have some of it in the civil service right now. I am fairly confident that the matters can be resolved. But I use the example to show that when you don't do the right thing about one specific circumstance, the far-reaching negative effects can be much wider spread than that one incident.

The point in all of that is that we have to be proactive. We have to search to find and identify where our problems lie and immediately work on solutions. We have this thing about us where we wait until it blows up in our face before we do anything. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town talks about outing fires, crisis management. The First Elected Member for West Bay refers to that.

I don't think any one of us wants to be labelled for those types of activities, but I will tell you what—and this is not trying to hit below the belt—government has become famous for being labelled with those names.

I want to move on into a little area under the Public Service Pensions Board. The Governor said that, “The Public Service Pensions Board is carrying out an actuarial valuation of the Public Service Pensions Fund. The Fund stood at approximately $59 million as at 31st December 1999. It is expected that this balance will increase through contributions and earnings to $76.4 million by year end.”

I am going to take this opportunity to make a few predictions. I remember not too very long ago when we were talking during Finance Committee about this past service liability. We even had to get legal opinion from the Second Official Member as to whether there was a statutory obligation or not. Not by design, but by sheer luck the government discovered that because of the way the new law was crafted, the 1999 revision to the Public Service Pension Law, they discovered that their obligation ceased to be a statutory obligation when the new law was put in place. The only reason that happened is because that law took so long to come to this Legislative Assembly.

But it did not change the obligation. The only difference that the law allowed was for the word “statutory” to be taken out and thrown in the air. But “statutory” is not the operative word. It is only a term of description, and adjective. The operative word is “obligation.” Nothing changes about that. There is that obligation.

Now, two members of the government spouted off continuously about how much since this government took over in the last two terms that . . . one even went so far as to say that “out of the goodness of their hearts” they had agreed to fund the public service pension fund to where it would stand at $76.4 million by the end of the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, when the last actuarial review was done . . . and, by the way, I know a little bit of the history of this thing. But that's not really the important point. A soul not so kind as mine would have taken another hour to talk about transparency and accountability on this same issue. But I am not going to do that. Had that actuarial review which was completed in 1996 been tabled in this House, we wouldn't have had any problems. But it wasn't tabled because I couldn't remember it. And my lady friend who does all my research (that is the Member for North Side) checked straight through the Hansards and that report was not tabled. That's why I can afford to say that without guessing.

When that review was done in 1996, if memory serves me right, the total liability of the government for pensions, public service pensions (it is called contingent liabilities, and I will deal with that in a minute), was somewhere in the region of $157 million. At that time, the fund had but a paltry sum in it.

Now, hear this carefully: In 1996 that amount was supposedly $157 million total, the liability of the government. The government boasts of the fund having $76 million by year-end 2000 and talks about how much they have done. Let's establish a few facts.

I am the first one to admit that this government has dealt with the issue more effectively than any other government. I totally agree with that.

The reason given by the Minister of Tourism for why they didn't add the past service liability as a part of recurrent and statutory expenditure, the 5% they had been doing in the past couple of years, is because they looked at the fund and thought that it was healthy. And they would wait until the actuarial review was completed before making another assessment.

I want to know what the government is going to say, since they did so much to fund the fund, when this review is done now and it comes back that even though the fund has been increased to $76 million by year end, that the liability that was $157 million is close to $250 million now. I want them to answer that.

That figure is not said with authority. But I am going to wager a guess today that when that actuarial review is completed, that the liability between 1996 (because I think it will have been done as of 1999) is going to rise between $50 million and $100 million. When that happens, the same law . . . and I want them to listen and hear me out, because I want them to come back and tell me where I went wrong. The very same law that took them out of the misery they were in about a “statutory” obligation, that very same law is going to pin them to the cross with that “obligation.”

The new law says that the Board will prescribe the rates that the employer pays. Now, if the liability has increased from 1996 until now, which means what the country was paying in to the Public Service Pension Fund was not enough because the liability increased, then it must mean that the payment is going to have to increase. Payment, meaning the contribution.

So, you see, because that obligation was not statutory when the budget was done, and because we raised a little stink over it because we didn't think it was right to do it like that, we were made to know that we didn't know what we were talking about; we didn't have any idea of anything like that. But the way the law reads now, when that actuarial review is completed, the honourable Third Official Member is obliged to table it. And I know he will, unlike the first one we didn't see.

Transparency? They should never utter the word. They shouldn't even try to spell it, much less say it! But this one will be different.

It is not just the elected government that has to bear that burden. That is this country's burden. Understand that. And because of not addressing it for so many years is why we are faced with what we are faced with now—just like immigration. And, Mr. Speaker, I remember distinctly hearing you speak about it the first year I was elected in this Parliament. I remember hearing you, sir, voice your concerns. And at that time it was a hell of a lot less than what it is today.

But, the budget had to be balanced—on paper. This is an election year. And if we pay past service liabilities we can't get out of paying the rest. I believe if they figured they could get out of that, they wouldn't have done that either. Anyway . . . I didn't say that.

If we can't address past service liability, that means two things: It means we will have more recurrent revenue to put towards the capital development fund which, as a result, means we will not have to cut our capital development programme for the year. Yes, election year! You see?

The reason why I can stick my nose out with this one is because they can say anything they want, that report is going to be tabled. And we will see how far off I am. And, oh, by the way, I don't know who the actuary is. I don't know the person. So that cannot be considered a leak.

Talk about leak, you know, Mr. Speaker, we talk about transparency. And I hear this business about leaks. I am told that when this issue was brought up about past service liability that the Minister for Tourism made a comment saying that he had a pretty good idea where the leak came from. I didn't hear him myself, but I was told he said that. And if he wants to deny it, I will sit down and not discuss it any more.

[pause]

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: It doesn't seem so.

There are some things that really carry me close. Some things that bother you, I laugh at and vice versa. But I want the world to understand that I never come here to capture no leaks from no one. And if the Minister of Tourism, or the Minister of Education, or any one of them believes he has a monopoly on intelligence, he is sadly mistaken. And if I didn't have respect for people, I would tell the Minister of Tourism right now that he's facety, but I have respect for people, so I am not saying that.

Some things upset people, others roll it off their backs. But the way I look at life is for any minister to indulge in that thought process tells me what that minister thinks of his civil service. And on the other hand, to tell you the real truth about it, if the word "leak" and its connotation is what this was considered to be, and there was nothing wrong with it, then what are you worried about it for? If their decision was the right decision, why are they worried about it? Why is it considered a leak?

But at that point in time two things occurred: They didn't figure that somebody like me could notice something as blatant as that. And perhaps they figured that somebody wanted to cause them some trouble. That's the only thing I can figure. Perhaps that minister and his government can talk to the Member for North Side and ask her how the story went.

The call for transparency right across the board—government, civil servants, the whole works—is exactly for reasons like this. Two budget documents prior to this 2000 document had everything about past service liability including the little footnote down below, because it is part and parcel of one figure and the footnote explains what that figure is comprised of including past service liability.

If the two documents, the 1998 and the 1999 documents had all of that in it, and all of a sudden it's not in the 2000 one, people are going to notice it. I have been here almost eight years. This is my eighth budget. I am sure the government knows by now that I don't sit down and twiddle my thumbs. I took my time to learn the document and how it works.

It really was so funny. If you turn the pages of this 2000 document and you see where it has recurrent and statutory expenditure by classification, when you get to the section of the various funds and where the contributions come from, in the 1999 document it had past service liabilities and how much the amount was. Then you have what the amount was in 1999, the projected, the revised, the actual in 1998. And in the 2000 document it has that same line, and it has what the amount was in 1998, the projected in 1999, the revised in 1999, and for 2000 it's blank. Who's not going to notice it? If they didn't want anybody to notice it, they should have taken that whole line out.

Anyway, they called it "a leak."

Getting back to that same past service liability, it is going to come back and haunt because what is called a contingent liability on the part of the government for the public service pension fund, in my view (and I am no expert) it is only a deferred liability. It is not contingent. When I see them refer to contingent liabilities, it means some other agency has accepted responsibility for paying a debt. But the government has a contingent liability because if that agency cannot pay the debt then government is going to have to.

But this public service pension fund is not like that. The government will pay this debt, albeit they are not called on to pay it at one time.

When they call for an actuarial review and it is done, the reason for that actuarial review is to determine what your projected liability is at present, how your fund is in place, what your contributions are on a regular basis, and whether over the period of time you will naturally be called upon to pay out certain amounts from that fund will allow it to sustain itself. That's my understanding. That's what I understood when they took us up inside the committee room very early in 1997, not long after the 1996 election, and they talked to us about that. Because I kept hearing you talk about it. I didn't have a grasp of exactly what it was, but that's my understanding of it.

It's like a mortgage. If you have a mortgage and the bank gives you a repayment schedule and you are paying $1000 a month, which on a graduating scale the vast majority of the payment goes to interest. And the smaller portion goes to bringing the principal down. But as time goes on the tables turn, and slowly but surely more of the payment is going towards the principal because once your principal drops the amount of interest drops. That's how you end up paying off a loan. The bank makes money because it charges a fixed interest rate and you know what you are up against.

So, if the liability of the fund is such that what you are paying into the fund, whether by contribution or out of general revenue as is now, whatever pensions have to be paid out to individuals is also paid out of general revenue. We know that. And nobody is complaining about that. But government keeps talking about how much they are doing. If what they are doing is not enough, it really doesn't matter. If the mortgage payment is $1000 per month, and $999 is going towards interest, and you are only paying $500, your interest adds up every month, which makes your principal higher which means you'll never pay it off; which means you will never get to the point where you can deal with it.

They would take their own command of the Queen's English and take their fancy words, and probably have convinced the public of what a good job they have done in regard to the public service pension fund. As I said before, I am the first to admit that this government has, in its last two terms, done the most towards addressing that deferred liability. I accept that immediately. All I am saying is that if what is being paid in now is insufficient to bring the liability down, then it is not enough. I can afford to say that because that actuarial review is going to prove it.

When the government did the regulations creating this regulation which called for them as a statutory obligation to pay in 5% of basic salary toward the past service liability, that was part of the 1996 formula. Simply because the amount that is going in now from the PPE, that is the permanent and pensionable establishment, that is the 6% plus the 6%, my understanding is that at best that can only address current and perhaps some of future liability. So that does not address the past liability which means all the things that should have been done before by way of contributions to pension fund. That's why it was done.

But had government come up front and said, 'Listen, we've had a hard time balancing this budget. We feel we have done well with our contributions to the public service pension fund, so we are going to bypass this year's past service liability payment and wait until the actuarial review, since it's being done at present . . .' We might have huffed and puffed a little bit, but it wouldn't have been anything like this.

To me that too was another irresponsible act. You cannot run a government and base it on political careers. That's not how we should run this country. We should not be looking to deal with our budget and to make sure we have to satisfy the purchased loyalties with all the parochial politics. And because you find yourself in a position where you can't deal with certain things and do that, then you figure you can brush this one aside for now. Perhaps it is even possible that they didn't include it in the budget because the figures wouldn't balance, but they were hoping that if recurrent revenue was up from what the projected amount for the year was they could deal with it later on in the year. I don't know. Either way was wrong is what I am saying. You are testing a projection that you really don't know is a finite figure.

I notice the Minister of Education is smiling at what I am saying. Perhaps if I could read his mind he would be saying 'There he goes again. That's Kurt. He's well briefed again.' I don't want to hear what he's saying!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The truth of the matter is that is just another example of why we need the government to function in the way I described earlier this morning—a government that is prepared to be accountable for its actions; a government in the middle of being prepared to give access to information to the public.

This was certainly not an example of that.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.40 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.09 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I think perhaps I will move on to another area now.

I want to speak on Cayman Airways. Even as we speak, it seems that our national airline is experiencing a continuation of problems. I take this area as one of the more difficult ones, because, taking away any political posturing and looking at the reality of the situation, we have an airline that many people say has played a very important role in our economy.

In fact, if one were to listen to the news of only one day ago, American Airlines is pulling out of another one of the eastern Caribbean countries. That would strengthen the argument that you cannot depend upon a foreign airline to have enough regular schedules to the Cayman Islands to maintain the stay-over tourism traffic that has developed over the years. They also sometimes bring the argument that in case of pending national disaster you need to ensure that you have control over your own airline in case of evacuation or anything of that nature.

Added to that, you have a few hundred Caymanians employed with that airline. Notwithstanding other foreign nationals who are employed with Cayman Airways, I think there are still a few hundred Caymanians. So, we have to bear that in mind.

Then you take the flip side of the coin and look at a situation where even when attempts are made to paint a picture of an airline with much hope for the future, it never ceases that you find another string of problems with the airline, that is Cayman Airways, and you are back to square one again. You make projections that by the year 2000 you will be able to report an operational profit. And yet, at the end of the day with the costs incurred that were not anticipated, you find yourself in a position where it's impossible to meet the expectations.

You have a Board of Directors that works very hard at trying to make the right decisions. You have dedicated staff with the airline. And you just wonder if it's ever possible that one of these days you will get it right. You will find the professionals and the technically professional staff always saying that you need to change your equipment because the maintenance costs on your existing equipment is too high. Then, when government looks at the picture to make any meaningful attempt to change the aircraft itself, you are looking at several million dollars.

You find that even though the government budget, even this last one, shows a $4 million subsidy—plus a six-hundred-and-odd-thousand dollar amount under the ministry that will take care of advertising for the airline—but then, when the Auditor General reports on what the actual subsidy is, because of hidden costs you are looking at a figure more like between $7 million and $8 million a year. The accumulated deficit continues to increase.

I know government must face difficult decisions with the airline. Being totally honest now, I cannot stand here today and say that I am very sure of what the correct way to go is. But I mention it in my debate because it is obviously a question that has to continue to come to mind. Every year, the country, because of an operation we have existing, has to ensure that it earns $8 million from somewhere else to be able to ensure that the airline flies.

If one were able to say, 'Well, okay. Let us wipe the slate clean and start afresh. Accept that we are going to have the $8 million that we actually spend on the airline every year available; organise proper loans for the right equipment, get your staff all organised again . . .' and you would figure that $8 million a year might service a reasonably long-term debt. When I say reasonably long, maybe a ten or 15-year loan that government might want to take on. Get two new pieces of equipment, get the airline going and perhaps the airline might be in a position at that point in time to not incur operational losses while government is taking care of servicing a debt.

The unfortunate thing about all of that and the difficulty any government will find itself in with that position is that to wipe the slate clean there is also another debt facing the government because Cayman Airways is not going to be able to repay that debt.

So, while I am not 100% sure of what that figure is, I would suspect (and perhaps when the Minister of Education gets up to speak he can fill us in on it) that if you were even to look at going that route—if you liquidated the assets of the airline as it exists now, and tried to clear away whatever debts that exist—you would probably still be into (and I am wagering a guess) $15 million. Perhaps more! If you did it right now, my understanding is that you won't be able to sell the third aircraft for what it is going to cost. So, there may be another amount you will have to find. But I am just guessing, because the actual figure is not that important.

It must be a difficult task to talk about getting the airline on a sound footing. Whether government is prepared to engage in more borrowing for new equipment, or whether it is going to try to putter along with the airline as it is—accept that you are going to find between $7 million and $8 million every year, whether in direct subsidies or services rendered that are not paid for, or whatever—it is a difficult decision.

Regardless of what is said, when you look at the bottom line, the big question that we face at present is does it make sense to continue the way the airline is? My understanding of the situation is that as it is it is costing the country between $7 million and $8 million a year. The airline is not to this point—regardless of what anyone is saying—making any progress. In fact, I would venture to say that in recent times it has experienced some tremendous difficulties with customer satisfaction.

I cannot say that I would indefinitely support the thought of the airline continuing just the way it is. We don't know all the facts about the airline in recent times, but we understand that the third aircraft that has been purchased is not working out exactly as anticipated. I also understand that there may be some additional costs incurred. The airline is not operating in such a way that it has any backup cash, so to speak, for these types of unanticipated occurrences.

So, in my view, the airline is almost a shoestring operation. And on many occasions by not having the kind of capitalisation you would hope for, you have to be pennywise and pound-foolish. And it just goes on, and on, and on. I mean, it must be a real difficult situation. I think all of us do not wish to have to entertain the thought about the staff there. But then, you find yourself asking can we just leave it like that and forget about it. It must be difficult.

Unfortunately, I can't really discuss it with any pointed opinions because many of the facts are not facts that I know. I don't even know if they'd want me to know. But at present, I do not. So, I can only talk about it a little bit. My view is that I do not believe that the country should continue to make the airline function and exist in the fashion that it is.

If the country is not prepared to take what may well be some bold steps to look at the whole thing from the long-term viewpoint, then certainly it is senseless to be operating the airline when it costs the government—which means the country . . . and not out of my pocket alone, it's everyone's pocket because the government takes revenue from all of us to subsidise it. But if it costs the country $8 million—and there does not seem to be any light at the end of the tunnel—then you must wonder if we should continue it in that vein.

I know, like everything else, you have varying views, and you will have one side arguing that it just needs a little bit of time. You will have the other side arguing that it needs new equipment; you will have another side arguing that it needs different staff, different management, and you will hear all kinds of views. But, regardless of what those views indicate, at the end of the day there needs to be some serious decision.

I remember being back and forth with the Minister of Education about this: The government took the position at one time to form leasing companies. And the government guaranteed loans for these leasing companies which in turn purchased aircraft, which in turn leased the aircraft to Cayman Airways, who in turn paid the lease to the company which would service the mortgage.

I related on more than on occasion to the fact that if you, Mr. Speaker, own a house (whether or not you are paying a mortgage), and you rent the house to me, and I am paying rent, whenever my lease is up it's still your house. If it weren't a lease, I wouldn't be leasing from you. I would have gone and got the mortgage you got and that's the way it works. Hundreds of people do business like that.

People know someone who is coming to work for several years as a bank manager, or in a trust firm, something like that, and the person does not intend to purchase a house. Within their contract with the firm they have a certain housing allowance. So, somebody locally builds a house. There have been occasions—and I know this for a fact—where people have gone to the same institution leasing the house and borrowed the money from them.

Now, the person borrows the money from that leasing institution. After that person builds the house the leasing institution turns around and leases the house from that person and that person takes the same payment the leasing institution is paying him to pay them back. When the payments are completed, he owns the house—not the leasing institution.

After that exercise, because things don't look so good, government then turns around and closes out the leasing companies and invests more into Cayman Airways. Since Cayman Airways is owned by government, they supposedly build up equity in Cayman Airways by Cayman Airways owning the planes.

It's not that I don't understand, but it changes the whole perspective. And I have a problem with that. When it was done from the very beginning there was sound business sense. And I remember hearing the Minister of Education himself being the strong proponent of buying the aircraft in this fashion. It all has to do with limited liability. I don't have to go any further than that. And I understand that.

But then, because you are nearly there, and politically you have to find some answers and go and start talking about it, you change the whole picture. So, he said that we are going make Cayman Airways own it so that when we do the books for Cayman Airways . . . because the government's asset that it has paid off a loan for is transferred into Cayman Airways it paints a whole different picture for Cayman Airways. And this is not really curing the airline.

But the same thing the minister preached against . . . because I distinctly remember the first time I sat in here what the minister talked about—the contingent liability to the country with Cayman Airways, and how the whole thing had to change. At the end of the day, and what is in my view happening now, is that we are doing a full circle of the whole event.

In regard to the initial plan and Cayman Airways leasing these aircraft from government, at the end of the day government owns the aircraft and the sound financial reasoning why those aircraft should then be put into ownership by Cayman Airways . . . somebody needs to explain that to me.

Again, this has nothing to do with whether or not we want Cayman Airways to survive. What we are talking about here is that the kind of decisions we need to make about Cayman Airways is not whether we can make it look good or bad.

See, Mr. Speaker, I know there is some difficulty when I speak about certain things, you know. It is much easier for them if I just talk about people, because they can come back in the same way. But they know I am not dealing with that. And even these kinds of things I am talking about, I am not trying to suggest as those fancy talkers would talk about something “untoward,” but I want the question answered: What is the real basis for changing the whole philosophy?

Mr. Speaker, I certainly won't be finished in the next few minutes sir.

The Speaker: I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM Wednesday.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Wednesday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.32 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 1 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
WEDNESDAY
1 MARCH 2000
10.27 AM

[Prayers read by the First Elected Member for West Bay]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Speaker: I have apologies for the late arrival of the Second and Third Official Members, and from the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works. The Fourth Elected Member for West Bay is not well.

Moving on to item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 18 February 2000. Debate continuing, the First Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOV-
ERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 18
FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you Mr. Speaker.

When we adjourned on Monday afternoon, I was dealing with the subject of Cayman Airways. I remember distinctly asking for the minister to answer one specific question regarding Cayman Airways whenever he got up to speak. And I have a few more questions that I think other members and the general public would like to have clear answers to simply because rumours are never found to benefit anyone.

Mr. Speaker, that first question was regarding government's transfer of ownership of the aircraft into ownership by Cayman Airways. I think perhaps how that may have been done was simply government acquiring more equity in Cayman Airways. I really don't know how the financial ramifications of that work. Anyway, looking at Cayman Airways, there is a question that was mentioned previously in Finance Committee regarding the long term employees (and not to discriminate but . . .), especially the Caymanian long term employees and those with Caymanian connections who have been at Cayman Airways and at present don't see any sensible pension benefits.

The minister was supposed to be getting the facts together to bring back to us, to see what kind of costs we were looking at. But we still haven't heard anything about it.

Mr Speaker, if we tried to do a synopsis of Cayman Airways' financial position (and without having all the relevant facts available to me I can only make a summary, so to speak), I think if we look at the position of the airline right now as we speak, it would be safe comment to say that the airline is not in a better position today than it was six or seven years ago. Before I go on, I am going to beg the minister (even though he is not in the Chamber) when he comes back to answer. Please don't kill us with having to listen to him talking about all the things that happened before—for 15 or 10 years—that we have heard two hundred million times. Please, Mr. Speaker, if you will remember that, sir.

Anyway, let us look at what has happened in the last seven or eight years. The government engaged in a US$20 million [loan]. I don't think the loan was taken out until 1993, and, if I am not mistaken, the loan is either just about paid off or has recently been paid off. But the government has been paying that and we understood all of that and we understood the problems the airline had before. It is not a matter of believing that there should be a miracle every day of the week and expect it to happen.

Mr. Speaker, we have to decide what we are going to do with the airline, and I say this for a reason. Although it is said on paper that there is a $4 million subsidy every year to Cayman Airways—and in recent times there has been some money placed for advertising—one year it was in the tourism budget and after that it has been in the budget of the Ministry of Education, Aviation and Planning under that estimate.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, the Auditor General said in his 1997 report that from what he could gather, factually, it was somewhere between $7 million and $8 million that government subsidised the airline with on an annual basis—whether it be direct subsidy or whether it be services rendered—that aren't charged for or whether it be landing fees that the airline simply is not in a financial position to pay for, and then they have to be written off or government pays it off and buys more equity into their line, however it works out. So, based on that it is not—and I repeat it is not—in my view incorrect to say that between January 1993 and year-end 2000, the country will have spent pretty close to $50 million on Cayman Airways.

I am using a round figure based on what the Auditor General said. If we simply look at what the subsidy says, then we are looking at $32 million plus the advertising. So we are probably looking at maybe $36 million or $37 million. But realistically we are looking at $50 million and that's without exaggeration. Between $7 million and $8 million, and if you multiply that by 8, you come with $60 million (or over $60). So, we are saying that we are calling it about $50 million.

Mr. Speaker, if we have spent $50 million on the airline during that period of time just to keep it going, and if the accumulated deficit has continued to rise during that time, then we are going nowhere with the airline except that we still have it. It still works somehow, and we are keeping a certain number of people employed. Now, I cannot stand here today and say that the answer is to go forward and purchase new equipment right away and dispose of existing equipment, I am not equipped to do that. But what I am saying is, if in eight years we spend $50 million the accumulated deficit is not decreasing, the equipment that we are using is ageing very fast then certainly we are almost at the end of the road.

Let us take for example the kind of situation we have occurring: The airline just purchased a third aircraft. Do not forget when we debated in here, those of us who supported vocally guaranteeing the loan for this third aircraft . . . one of the key ingredients when we looked at the picture was to increase revenue for the airline because there is a very obvious need for the airline's ability to operate a freight service in the North American continent. We agreed that the airline could easily operate four freight flights a week and it would generate good income. And that third aircraft could allow for more flexibility with certain schedules, operate as a passenger aircraft, and at the same time be able to operate this freight service.

Do you know what I heard, Mr. Speaker? And the minister will have to answer this: I remember us going through this problem and hearing about some documentation that they couldn't get and all of this type of stuff. The way I understand at present is that the documentation that they have for that aircraft now whenever they have finished doing whatever checks they are doing with it, putting it all back together and getting her (the aircraft) here now, the documentation will not allow for that aircraft to operate the freight service that it was in my estimation bought to do. So, all that it is going to be able to do is operate passenger service again.

Mr. Speaker, if that is the case then somebody has to answer to that kind of decision. I also understand that the technical people advised them not to purchase the said aircraft. I understand the Civil Aviation Authority advised them not to purchase that aircraft.

When we sit here and agree to government guaranteeing a loan, none of us here have the benefit of all that technical knowledge. We have to depend on the minister coming here and saying to us that this is the case, or that's the case, and everything is in order. I think that is a fact.

Mr. Speaker, I am now becoming very, very wary because I don't have the kind of confidence I should have in the decision-making process. I mean, it is not even our money that we are spending here—it's the people's money. I don't know if what I just said is the fact, but it is my understanding that that situation obtains at present. If it is the case, then somebody has to be held accountable for that. All that is going to do with the age of that aircraft is that we are going to have three 737 aircraft with varying ages.

You know, the other question that the minister needs to answer is: What have those aircraft cost in maintenance? Is the maintenance designed maintenance (that is, the checks that have to be done periodically that they know about), or whether the aircraft simply broke down and they had to do maintenance on it and it was unforeseen circumstances. I want to know, within the past eight years, what each of the aircraft has cost from a maintenance point of view, and I am not talking about the regular maintenance. I am not talking about what staff gets paid to keep them flying. I am talking about down time maintenance.

What I would also like to know, Mr. Speaker, is how much money the airline has had to pay to charter another airline to keep the schedule going whenever one or both of those aircraft have been down. The minister must answer that and add that figure with the $50 million that the country has spent on Cayman Airways. I would like them to tell me if somehow or the other some better decision-making process cannot go on.

Mr. Speaker, if the maintenance for the aircraft is simply prohibitive, if the length of life of the aircraft is not something that you can make long range plans with, and if the actual subsidy that the country provides for the airline is going to be more like between $7 million and $8 million per year, then this cannot continue indefinitely.

I also [heard] about another situation. I understand that two mechanics were hired recently—foreign nationals—to work with Cayman Airways. And they could not be certified by the Civil Aviation Authority because they do not have any time on 737s. Now Cayman Airways has to send them abroad to train them for six months for the Civil Aviation Authority to sign them off as mechanics. But we have had Caymanians working there as mechanics that are not certified, but have hundreds of hours—if not thousands of hours—working with the 737s. Somebody tell me the sense in that.

Now, if my information is skewed then I want the Minister to clear it up.

Mr. Speaker, standing in this forum and talking about Cayman Airways the way I am talking is not for any other reason than to try to do something that is sensible to go forward with the airline. Cayman Airways is near and dear to all of us. There is a purpose for its existence, but I contend that right now we are falling into a mode of being pennywise and pound-foolish. If the minister has the courage to bring back those answers, it will shock us to know the amount of money that is spent. That is of no benefit either to Cayman Airways or the country for its existence in the manner in which it exists. As far as I am concerned, we have gone from one extreme to the other and I truly don't know which one is worse. That is my view.

Mr. Speaker, this business I mentioned about the long serving employees of Cayman Airways, I am not suggesting for Cayman Airways to throw away money, but there is a responsibility that I feel. Just as was mentioned before about all the people with local contracts who get no Contracted Officers' Supplement, and they get no pension with the government and have served for many years with the government, I believe the same falls true for those people at Cayman Airways. That is not politics either.

Now, whether the airline can afford it is another matter, because it doesn't seem to be able to afford anything. But we still need to look at that and be responsible, at least to know what we are up against if we were going to make an attempt to do something about that because I think it is only fair to those people. Those people have spent (some of them) the better part of their lives working for Cayman Airways under all kinds of adverse conditions and they still hold on there doing the best that they can.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move on now because it is obvious to me that I won't get an opportunity to speak on as many different topics as I would like to, but, perhaps because I am not the best at putting it together, I may take longer to make some of my points and I don't use the time as wisely as I could. But I do the best that I can.

I am going to deal with education now, Mr. Speaker. The very first thing that I would like to talk about is when the Governor said in his Throne Speech under the Ministry of Education, Aviation and Planning: "The Ministry intends to continue the National Training Initiative that began as a joint project with the Ministry of Community Development some years ago. A new Training Board will be convened to guide the formulation of a National Training Policy."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I made a joke before, but I think this is very serious now. If it weren't so costly and taxing on the people and on us, I would almost think that we would be better off having an election every year because we might really get something done then. You see this business about this training policy, Mr. Speaker? I sat here not being in the middle of too many of these arguments, but I have listened to hours and hours wasted on people arguing about who's responsibility this is, and then as soon as that quiets down, it lays dead. But I guess they must have gone through their checklist now and realised that if they don't come up with some stuff that these are the points they are going to get slaughtered on in the elections. And for that, my country suffers.

Here we are in the year 2000, when several initiatives were started. I am not saying that everybody agreed with everything that was done. I am not saying everything was perfect. But we had a lot of false starts with training and two governments later . . . in the last Throne Speech before an election, you hear about a National Training Policy having its genesis.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the government has access to information. And I want to make a point here. Many of us have talked about technical and vocational training. While I don't believe that this training policy is limited to technical and vocational training, I believe that if it ever gets on the move and we are to see tangible results, there will be a huge focus in that area.

Mr. Speaker, there are in excess of 13,000 one-year work permits that were granted and in force as of Deember 21, 1999. In the area called trades, technical and skilled, the amount of work permits in that area is just amount half of the entire one-year work permits that had been issued. This is one figure for December 31, 1999, but if anyone goes back and looks at the figures as this government had access to for the past eight years, the proportions would have been the same. There is no sudden change or sudden leaning in the trend. It means that the labour demands in this country in that category is by far the most and the country knows that. But in the year 2000 is when we are going to talk about initiating a National Training Policy? Mr. Speaker, some people would say that the tail is wagging the dog! I would say, this breeds of incompetence—that is what it does.

The Minister of Education was elected to create policy. If he had to depend on his technical staff to create that policy, there is no need for him to exist in government. Their job is to carry it out and make it happen, but if he has to sit and wait for them to create the policy, then they don't need him. You know, Mr. Speaker, we come back to accountability. And I just have to pray for God to give me the strength to listen whenever he (the Minister of Education) comes out to speak because oh Lord, the things that he is going to say to make the excuses now why he doesn't have anything to do with it . . . But anyway . . .

Mr. Speaker, every problem we have in this country can be attached to a problem in the area of education. Every solution that can be found to be real to the problems in this country is going to hinge on our education policy. The answer to the problems is education, education, education.

Education doesn't necessarily mean degrees, and it doesn't mean PhDs. It means people having the ability, the knowledge, and the skills to fit into the society to make positive contributions and to pay their way at a reasonable and acceptable level so that social harmony can remain with the citizens of our society.

So, training . . . elections are coming up and you are going to hear the big boast and the bang about this policy that's being developed—eight years later. It is almost like the 1995 to 1999 Strategic Education Policy that His Excellency the Governor went on to say they had their update in 1999. I am going to tell you something now, the reason why the dates were attached to that policy, 1995 - 1999, meant that it was intended to accomplish what that policy set out within that time, and not a half of it is accomplished. I know that sometimes it puts you in a little funny situation, Mr. Speaker, because I know where you sit. But that is okay. Everybody has to do his or her job, sir.

So, when they had their update . . . that is why it suits the minister to create this type of methodology. What you do when you fail is to simply do an update and you now change it from 1995 to 1999 to 2000 to whatever. But, you still haven't completed what you were supposed to do between 1995 and 1999—not even half of it. But, as he would present it to you, they did their update that means we are doing fine. But is not fine. Mr. Speaker. Again, the minister's job is policy and he must make sure that things are done—he doesn't have to go and do them but he must make sure that they are done that's how every organisation works.

Do you know the real beauty though, Mr. Speaker? The Governor says under education, “The Education Department is continuing with the implementation of the Strategic Plan that was developed and approved in 1995, and held its annual update in 1999.” That is what I just spoke about. Now here is the little nicety that comes in right afterwards, “Site based planning at all schools is continuing and the last two schools will finish their plans before the end of this school year.” Does anybody remember what happened during Finance Committee about site based planning?

Now, the Governor makes this wonderful report and he just gets the information from the minister and puts it all together. I know how it works. He says, “Site based planning at all schools is continuing and the last two schools will finish their plans before the end of this school year.” Mr. Speaker, if we had not been keen with our eyes and looking very carefully through the estimates, the budget would have been approved and there would have been no funds for site based planning in the budget except a figure of $24,000 for the George Hicks High School.

I haven't had the courage yet to speak to the head of that school, but I know her and I honestly believe the reason why they put that one in first is because they know how much hell she was going to raise if they didn't do it. They figured they could get away with the rest just to balance the budget. The minister need not tell me (now, he can try it with somebody else) that he didn't know—that is not going to work with me. The point I wish to make is if they were prepared for the budget to be passed without funds being in there for site based planning, then site based planning could not have been important to them. But they are boasting about it in the Throne Speech after we picked up and the diverted funds from somewhere else. You cannot operate a business like that.

Even if what has been said or touted is correct (that they balance the budget without it being there—knowing full well that we would make sure it gets put back) that's worse yet because it is all a game. For that, Mr. Speaker, my country suffers—it does!

No one is saying that this thing is easy. And no one is saying that any one person must have the answers. But the only way that we are going to move forward in this country is if we are open, honest, and willing to dialogue at all times with everyone. That's the only way you are going to have an informed position to take. But, as is usual, some of us think that this information is a prize and no one else must have it. You must have the ability to use it at will and get that advantage, and then when you decide anybody must know anything then you can just leak it out as you please. It cannot continue to be like that. The way I see now (and I have given up all hope elsewhere) is for different bodies to do it because the same bodies are not going to change.

Mr. Speaker, I have only been dealing with just a few areas of education to show up some things. Look at what is going to happen in September again. I know you have vivid memories of the arguments and cross talk the Minister and I have had about physical space in the schools. For the last six years we have been at it. I have hollered about it. I have argued about it. I have been nice about it, and we have talked well about it, and we still have a problem.

You see, Mr. Speaker, when the Governor mentioned in his Throne Speech about the ever increasing number of students, the Minister too at all times has available to him the trends with regard to immigration and everything else. They have the ability to project the numbers they are going to have. How is it that I can sit on the Backbench and squeeze a little bit of information out and do it for myself? I am no smarter than the average Joe. I know that. I don't pretend that I am. But after continuous talk, you are going to hear that the objections people have to these schools caused these delays. Mr. Speaker, it should not have come to this!

Even when they expand the classrooms in Bodden Town, and even when they build new classrooms in Savannah, and even when they make additions to East End . . . come September, Red Bay Primary is not going to be able to hold the bodies. I don't know how they are going to do it this time. They are probably going to have to take a one-storey classroom, divide it in two (not from top to bottom but from side to side), and the children will probably have to kneel down to learn. That's probably what they will have to do.

West Bay is going to be the same thing and George Town is going to be in problems too. But, you see, the answer is going to be if we had gotten this other school finished that we planned to do in Spotts, it wouldn't be a problem. Mr. Speaker, you cannot operate under crisis all the time like that especially when he (the Minister of Education) knew—they all knew, and for years they have known. Must I now say thank God they are finally getting done and say nothing more? I cannot do that because if you leave them alone, and if they are there next year, they are going to wait until it happens again—history has proven it. You cannot operate like that. It is irresponsible.

They might also say it is easy for me to sit on the backbench and tell them that, as I don't know what it is like. Mr. Speaker, he has his job to do and I have mine. Whatever the good Lord leaves to be my job, I am going to do the best I can with it. But the point I make about it (and I don't want to go into all of the ramifications about the money and all that) . . . When I spoke earlier on about having a medium term financial strategy and a plan with priorities in line, this is the kind of thing that shows up in the lack of planning. Look how many things have been done in the country, and if you asked an entire nation when they understand the problems we have in Education, they would tell you that should have come first.

The government knows what should come first and we know what should come first. Why doesn't it come first? I wouldn't even waste the time this morning (because I am running out of it) to talk about why, because it would not be nice.

Mr. Speaker, the last thing on education that I would like to talk about is the Lighthouse School—the same Lighthouse School that the minister during his 1996 campaign tried to convince people in this country that I tried to stop him doing until I produced a certain memorandum that he had instructed his Permanent Secretary to send to the Financial Secretary, to advise the Financial Secretary to stop all negotiations with the owners of the Cayman Food Building. They found out who stopped it then. But even with that reprieve in time they have gone on, and now I agree there is no turning back.

Mr. Speaker, that project (because some of us are not prepared to listen to other ideas and I am not for a minute suggesting that every idea I come forward with is the best one) is going to cost somewhere between $3 million and $4 million more than it should to get the right end results. I stopped by the Old Cayman Food Building the other day, and they looked like they are lining out the building for construction of the Lighthouse School. I pray to God that there is enough fill around to fill the lake that I see just past where they have lined out because that is what it is. Oh yes! This is the dry season and we haven't had plenty rain, and I don't know what it is going to be like otherwise.

When some of us walked it years ago, when some of us could have gotten six acres right behind filled and ready to build on for $700,000—no, that's foolishness. So, you buy a building that exists and buy a property of 4.5 acres for $1.45 million and negotiate to pay 10 per cent interest on it that you have never done before—and hopefully will never again because not even the banks are charging the government 10%—and end up paying $1.62 million for the building. To build the new building . . . $213 per square foot. To renovate the old one that existed that the minister insisted was the current thing to do, bearing in mind that the new building is $213 per square foot, is $313 per square foot. He should get a knighthood for that!

And, we are concerned about our children's education? That is not what it means to me, Mr. Speaker. I will suffer the pangs of having to listen to him make up the excuses with what I have said about that.

In a nutshell, what I have heard in very recent times regarding education is, thankfully, some effort seemingly have been made to make some in-roads into the problems. I contend that enough of us . . . and he must have had advice during times before now have said and talked about all of these things before. The minister has not acted in a timely fashion to address these problems. Whatever excuse is proffered it cannot justify the inaction because no one in this country would not understand the priority that education has.

The immigration problems that we were talking about earlier on, Mr. Speaker . . . if our education policies and the direction in which we had gone with education—especially in the area of technical and vocational training—had been done from earlier when they knew they should have done it, some of the problems that we have today would not have existed. If we do not have an educated population, social harmony cannot exist, because in today's world your earning power is totally equated to the education that you walk with, whether it be of a technical nature or whether it be that of an academic nature. It is simple, simple, simple, and we have not looked at it like that.

Mr. Speaker, this country needs a whole new outlook. God has blessed us in many areas, and like most of us, I am eternally grateful to God for those blessings. I am always very grateful for opportunities that I have had in this country. But I feel totally responsible that others like myself must be able to get similar opportunities and it is to that end that we must struggle. We can no longer think that once you get up in the morning and whatever little problem you are going to find, you can take care of it and then you can just continue on and the next morning the same thing . . . it cannot work like that anymore. That's the way we have seemingly dealt with it.

You know, when that same minister is going to get up and boast . . . what is the word he used again? Is it "recurrent profit"?

Mr. Roy Bodden: Yes, "recurrent profit."

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: When he talks about $60 million in "recurrent profit," and he gets a flyer and he sends it all over the place just to make people get all excited and say, 'Well, we will vote for him again,' but today when you examine the results of his tenure—even with that $60 million "recurrent profit" that he talked about—he has fallen short by miles of what should have been achieved by now.

The big problem is not so much to argue about what's not done that should have been done, Mr. Speaker, it is that the longer you wait to do the things that you should do the harder it gets to do them. We all know that because no existing problem remains stagnant. If it is a problem, then, as time goes on, it becomes more acute. And all he continues to do, Mr. Speaker, is to try to catch up, catch up, and catch up.

Everything that we talked about that isn't right about education, when it gets into crisis he tries to work toward the point where he staves of the crisis. But it continues again and he has to go back to the same thing again. Do you know how it is, Mr. Speaker? Do you remember when we had to go to the well and dig up the water? I am going to tell you how it is. Thank God, I just thought of it and it is perfect—the parallel is perfect.

Imagine yourself with a bucket with a hole in it. And you had to walk about a quarter of a mile down to the well from out of the back door in the kitchen to dip up a bucket of water with a hole in it. You leave the kitchen and go to the well. You dip up the bucket of water, and by the time you get back to the kitchen all the water leaked out and you have to go back again. You stay just like that instead of fixing the bucket—that's what it is like.

Mr. Speaker, the country needs leadership. It needs people who are prepared to utilise all avenues to make things work better. You see, Mr. Speaker, what we have grown into is a situation where if government is seemingly going to make a certain decision and some people don't like that decision then you hear a hew and a cry. We need to think things through. We cannot continue to operate how we have been operating . . . and not only think things through but if you utilise the resources and the brainpower and the willingness of the people in your country (because they trust that your wanting to move forward is in a manner that will benefit all), utilise them and they are happy to participate in the process.

You know, Mr. Speaker, if there is only one parking space out there and there are three cars, and the three of us drive up at the same time and nobody is really prepared to be the gentleman about it, we are going to have a big fight. But if we can stop and say, 'Listen, there is only one space and we are going to be here for only five days and the best way for us to do it is to alternate it so that everybody gets a time in the space' and if we know that we don't have a choice, we will agree to that.

So, that's the way we need to be thinking. We need to be looking at the big picture for government to function. We need to understand the social problems that are emerging from our society. We need to be prepared to make the medium- and long-term decisions that will overturn those problems. It is not like we don't have to be working at it all the time, but many of the problems that we are beginning to face today do not have quick-fix answers. The sooner we come to grips with that, the better.

We can employ short-term measures to try and do damage control, but any meaningful answers for many of them are going to be long-term or at least medium term measures to bring about any reasonable results.

I was almost tempted to ask you to move Standing Orders to give me another hour, but I decided against it because I didn't want to try to set precedence and I didn't want anybody to feel that I wanted to hug up the show. But I am going to tell you something, Mr. Speaker: The immigration problem, the first thing that needs to happen in my view is the entire population needs to understand all of the facts. They need to understand the figures that we are dealing with.

When I spoke on Monday, I dealt with it a little bit. We cannot make decisions that will have far reaching ramifications for this country just based on insular thoughts. The interim report that has been done, of which all of us were members of the committee, is simply just that—an interim report. It displays views that have been expressed from within us, some of which are mine that I agree with. But the important thing about all of that is (and we need to be talking serious language) that we cannot take politics into this. Our very future depends on how we tailor the immigration policy from here on in, which will decide how the society is made up in years to come. That's the bottom line regardless of who says what. If we don't want to decide how we want our society made up in years to come, then we can leave it alone and whatever happens, happens—take the good with the bad. But I am not prepared to do that. Not me! I don't have any fixed ideas, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot listen to anyone else. I am not like that. But what I refuse to do and the reason why I talk about it today again before the time runs out is because if you leave it alone the government is going to do nothing. I am telling them that plain and straight. If we leave it alone, the Government will do nothing.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True, true!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: We cannot afford that as a country. This is much too serious to play politics with. And if they want to sit by the sideline and wait to see who sticks his neck out and gets it cut off to decide on what positions to take on a popularity basis, they can do so. I am not doing it. I don't care what happens to me because I am going to deal with it from the point of view of pure total honesty to the public of this country. It is much better to be right—at all times it is better to be right—than to seek popularity.

Mr. Speaker, the people in this country are not idiots. But they need to have the facts before them for them to make up their minds. The statement that the government made about we are hear to listen Mr. Speaker, that too they don't have a monopoly on. I listen all the time. When they don't, we are here to listen too. But what they didn't address is that their obligation as representatives of the people . . . it is their responsibility just as much as it is ours to explain to the people what we are up against because not everybody understands. Not just ability—I am not talking ability. Not everybody has access to all of the information from which one might be able to make certain determinations.

Our job is to make sure that the public understands exactly what we are talking about. And there are some things in the interim report which (because that's what it is and it doesn't give the full explanation behind it) the public is worried about. I am confident that once we explain the facts to the public and hear what the public has to say, we can make sensible decisions that will move us forward—decisions that should have been made many years ago, decisions that this government for two terms refused to address.

Some of them might laugh now and figure, 'Oh boy, he is putting himself in trouble now.' Mr. Speaker, if I have to live in fear as a representative of the people of this country, that I cannot engage in dialogue with them and take from them things that will make my decisions better, and that they are not prepared to listen to anything I have to say, then I may as well go home. I cannot live as a representative fearful of every little thing I do. What I must be able to do is to justify any decision that I make and make sure that I make that decision from an informed position—that's what I must do.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Preach, brother, preach!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The government, in my humble estimation, has failed to do that on too many occasions. Mr. Speaker, there are a few minutes left and I would like to say that education in this country has to take the position that it should be now, that's first place. It has not been the case.

Our immigration situation is one we have to deal with immediately. The decisions that might be made presently do not mean that if you try something and two years down the line you realise that you have to make readjustments based on facts that prevail—it doesn't mean that you cannot do that. You try to get it as right as you can, but you cannot live in fear of not getting it perfect and do nothing.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the government thinks about me, I am not going to sit here and leave them alone to wait until after the elections to deal with this matter. They will not have that luxury, Mr. Speaker. They will not! If we have to bring private member's motions, they will come. Trust me! It must be dealt with. Everybody, whether he or she is a Caymanian or has been living here for five to 15 years, must be able to get all of the information and must be made to understand exactly what is happening so that we can make serious and clear decisions. We don't know about tomorrow, but we know what we have now and we have to deal with it and that's the only way we can plan our tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, so we have to deal with that.

We have to look into the public service to deal with succession planning for our civil servants. We have to deal with human resource management and our investment in human capital in order to create efficiencies in Government, in order to achieve the financial management reforms that we need to do. If we are only getting a value of 65 cents to the dollar, Mr. Speaker, we must be able to do better than that. If we look at every budget that we are doing, we find that our recurrent revenue position is coming closer and closer to where recurrent expenditure is almost the same thing. That's is not a good position to be in. We cannot work towards that. We have to work towards that not happening.

Mr. Speaker, we have to create a country where there is little to no chance of any social problems because the way our economy is built anything like that happening in this country is a total ruin—never to come back. I won't even talk about looking around us at the examples. Enough of us know enough about that now. Enough of us have seen enough here to know that we must ensure it stops. And you don't stop that by putting a gun to somebody's head and telling him or her to stop. You stop that by creating a society where people have neither the need nor the desire to be deviant—that's how you prevent it.

You could get 4,000 police but that is only a short-term solution. That is how we need to be thinking in our country, Mr. Speaker, and every one of us has a responsibility to do that. I just pray to God that we have the staying power. I really do. I am not suggesting it is going to be easy. But I tell you that I am never going to be one who is satisfied with anything being swept under the carpet because it can wait until the next time around until it erupts in front of us again. I never believed in that. I hope that before I allow myself to be part and parcel of this process and allow that to happen knowingly, that I would have the sense to walk from it and go home. Because that would be an injustice to the people who have displayed confidence in me. That is my feeling.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the government, I can only say that I will continue to be what I have been as a Member of this backbench and I do the best I can to be able to work along with them in whatever we have to. But they must not expect me not to do my job because I am going to do that. If I ever found the day, Mr. Speaker, where the situation was reversed, they must do their job (or whoever is here must do his job) because that's the nature of the system that we have. And, from it we must get the results that we need to make the country move forward in a positive way.

I think that if we made the right approaches, the civil service by and large can become a more productive civil service, a better tooled civil service, and a civil service that feels a little bit better about themselves (not that they shouldn't feel good about themselves at present). I think we need to create the marriages in the private sector with the public sector to utilise the resources that are out there.

The Third Elected Member for George Town has been chiming about new sources of revenue and broadening the revenue base, there is much merit in that thought, Mr. Speaker, because we are not going to be able to continue the way we are now. I am not so sure that we can plan for the next 15 or 20 years for the rate of growth of the economy in this country to follow the same vein that it has been. I am not so sure about that so we have to create efficiencies.

I have every intention (as long as I am here) to do the best I can; to be the check and balance for the government even though they will now have to get up and defend themselves. Let them do that. I don't have a problem with that, but let the truth be known. Let not the whining start, let not the sympathy play start—we don't have any time for that anymore. Come out (the government) and talk some good sense and tell us what you are going to do and tell us why you didn't do what you didn't do. That's what we want to hear. I am sure that there are others who are quite prepared to continue and my time is nearly up. There are a few things that I would have liked to say, but it makes no sense to start because I will get into the middle and not finish. I think, that is worse than not starting at all. But, God willing, there will be other opportunities.

I trust the government will get up and expand on their policies that have been put forward in the Throne Speech. I hope the Minister of Education answers the questions that I asked him. If he does not, I am going to find other means to ask the questions so that every morning when he gets up it is going to stare him in the face. He must answer them. Perhaps, when the truth is known about that and other things we might be able to find methods by which we can go forward.

Some of my colleagues on the backbench have spoken, some haven't. I am certain that they will, but I think they all concur that as we move forward into the election year, we are going to be presenting policies to the country that we believe should be the way forward for the country. And, as we do our best to do that we will simply see which way the country wants to go because certainly, Mr. Speaker, the people will have a choice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: At this time we shall suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.37 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.05 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The floor is open to debate. Does any other member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I open my contribution to the Throne Speech by firstly congratulating His Excellency the Governor on a fine delivery of his first Throne Speech which indeed signals the opening and the first meeting of this new session of the Legislative Assembly for the year 2000.

Also, Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to congratulate you on the latitude you have given to all Honourable members who have thus far debated this speech. I feel that this is only appropriate concerning the high importance of this occasion.

The Throne Speech in many respects is similar to the State of the Union Address delivered by successive presidents of the United States, as it sets out the plans and policies of the Government for the ensuing year. It is, in fact, the Government's Throne Speech and not really, in my opinion, the Governor's Throne Speech. But before continuing, I am disturbed by certain news of national importance that I feel I should pause at this point to mention.

This morning I heard disturbing news on CITN that one of the airplanes, I think it was Cayman Airways, had to circle the airport for about twenty minutes because no lights were on the airport. Also, it was said that there were no Traffic Control Officers to bring that plane in. It was also mentioned that this information was confirmed by the Managing Director, Mr. Mark Winders, of Cayman Airways. If this is indeed correct, I feel that this Honourable House should be told the details of that incident and that urgent action should be taken against all individuals responsible for that situation.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious and dangerous situation. What would have happened if that plane had only ten minutes of fuel on board? Would the carelessness (if it was that) of the individuals involved had been taken as seriously at this point as I am portraying? Would the Managing Director or the Director of Civil Aviation have a valid reason or excuse for no Traffic Control Officers being available?

Why weren't the lights left on when the Civil Aviation had to know that a plane was due to land? Why were no Traffic Control Officers available?

Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister responsible for Civil Aviation is in the next room. I would be quite prepared to take my seat at this point to allow him to clear up this issue because it is that important. Mr. Speaker, this is no less (if it is correct) than sheer slackness. We cannot have that sort of a situation existing. It is no wonder that we are having problems at that level.

Mr. Speaker, I had intended to bring this matter more formally at the adjournment, but I feel that it is so important that if the Honourable Minister would wish me to take my seat so that he could clear up this matter at this point, I would be more than happy to do so.

Since it seems that the minister is not available, I hope that he will take the opportunity to make a statement on this as early as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister would like to make a comment on what I just said.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Mr. Speaker, I actually mentioned to some of the members here . . . I am really sitting in the conference room, obviously listening or I wouldn't be in here now trying to deal with some serious problems because the country needs to continue to be run even though we are sitting down here.

What I have also done is that I have put through a call, which I could not do in the Chamber. I would have had to have gone out anyhow to Mr. Richard Smith, who is the Director of Civil Aviation Authority. I hope, sir, to have for the Honourable Member who is speaking . . . to have something, or as soon as I have it, I would let him know, sir, and whenever it is convenient for him, then, by all means, if he wishes I would interject.

I must say sir, with respect, if I could ask you to release me as I am listening to what the Honourable Member is saying but I have four management people in the conference room and I really need to try to continue with that. But I undertake to the Honourable Member that I am listening otherwise, as he knows, I wouldn't be in here now and I would not have made the call to Mr. Smith, which I understand has already been done from the ministry anyhow, so I should have it today, sir.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the Honourable Minister for taking time from the meeting that he is now involved in to comment on this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker, by the comment the Honourable Minister has made it would seem that the news release that I heard this morning is indeed correct, as he made no attempt to correct anything that I said. I am also happy with the undertaking that he has given that he will indeed be looking into this matter. He will be calling the Director of the Civil Aviation Authority, Mr. Richard Smith, to get the facts in this matter. But I am hoping that it will not be allowed to just be pushed under the carpet, but that, if necessary, those responsible will be pulled over the carpet because this is indeed a very serious situation.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, we could have been today mourning the loss of a number of people if something had gone wrong at that airport. It should not be allowed to ever happen again.

Mr. Speaker, a number of the previous speakers have debated this Throne Speech in detail. I am sure that others will do likewise, because it would be remiss of any elected member not to take the opportunity to speak on this Throne Speech considering the many areas that were touched on by His Excellency, and considering, as I said earlier, that it is the plan and policy of the country for the ensuing year especially now that we are in the middle of an election year.

Whilst I will quickly say that I do not encourage that the Throne Speech be used just for mere political posturing, I do feel that with the many questions now unanswered that politicians incumbents should let the people know exactly where they stand. We talk about freedom of information. We talk about leadership—let our people know exactly where we stand and on whatever issues, whether those issues are popular or unpopular. They need to know the truth.

Mr. Speaker, whilst all areas of the Throne Speech were important and appropriate to our situation in the Cayman Islands, of greatest interest to me was the broad area dealing with the social and economic conditions of the country. Under the socio-economic conditions, I will broadly speak on various issues as I think that those issues are very important and are apropos to the issues raised in the Throne Speech.

From listening to a recent forum of Issues 27, I am also convinced that a number of individuals, especially the young people of these islands, are waiting to hear what their representatives, or any politician that decides to come out during this year, will be putting forward as key issues facing these islands. It is not enough for individuals to say, 'yes, I plan to run.' They should tell the people exactly what they see as the key issues facing these islands.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank CITN, the Caymanian Compass and the other news media for the wonderful job they are doing in keeping the people of these islands and the broader community, even overseas, informed of developments in these islands.

Perhaps, one of the most learned and best read individuals that we have in this assembly is my good colleague the Third Elected for Bodden Town. It was interesting that the very article he quoted from in the Economist, was the one that I had made notes from as regards not only OECD but also other areas pertaining to and affecting the future of these islands.

Mr. Speaker, the buzz word around the Cayman Islands, the United States, Europe, and Asia . . . and every time you turn on CNN the first word we hear is "reforms." The Republican candidates are trying to out-fox each other as to who have the best reforms and who are imitating whom. The Democratic candidates in the United States during this political phase also tout their reforms and even in Cayman, we have government talking about reforms. I am seeing more talk than action in many areas in Cayman, and I will deal with this.

In Cayman, we are hearing about financial reforms, government reinvention reforms, freedom of information reforms, and of course, the major reforms suggested and proposed under Vision 2008.

It was, therefore, most refreshing to see the forward progressive thinking of His Excellency the Governor and the position he took in his first Throne Speech, which was delivered on Friday, 18 February. I was a little disappointed that a few topical and important questions and issues were not included in the Throne Speech (this is my opinion), such as the progress being made on the White Paper. With such an important issue before this country why were comments not made on that important issue?

Mr. Speaker, it is important that this matter is kept constantly in the eyes and ears of the wider public, especially now with the situation we see unfolding in the UK as regards their participation in OECD, the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), the European Union (EU), G-7 and other major groups. What will it mean to our people if we accept any or all of the recommendations and suggestions within the White Paper? This is why I feel that an issue of such high national importance should have been commented on in this most important speech.

What would happen (and this is a rhetorical question) if we indeed decided that we were going to accept citizenship of the UK? I heard that question raised last night on a television programme. Could it mean that if we are members and citizens of the UK that we will have to do the same as the average UK citizens living in the UK are expected to do? If this is the case, what will be our bargaining powers as we enter into talks with the OECD, the FATF and other groups with which we are talking at present? Will we be given special status, special treatment because we are UK citizens living in the Cayman Islands?

These are issues that we need to be addressing. Many of us talk about the situation with the homosexuality. And that is a serious situation, but I have contended and will continue to say that the two most important issues under the White Paper are the issue of citizenship and the issue of our financial situation—the initiatives that we will have to negotiate with the UK, United States and the other countries directly or indirectly connected with the OECD, FATF and other major bodies.

Mr. Speaker, I alluded to the Issues 27 programme last Thursday which dealt with some major issues concerning the candidates for the upcoming election. One of my good colleagues once said (a gentleman that I have a lot of respect for and I consider him perhaps one of the best politicians on this island) "you have to be fish or fowl." Mr. Speaker, that is correct. We cannot be telling the public one thing when in our hearts we are hoping and wishing for something else.

One of the major issues that came out of that Issues 27 programme was the lack of leadership. But if any of us on this side of the House are aspiring to fill those important chairs across the aisle, it is important that we deal with this issue. It is not enough for us to be critical of the elected members of Executive Council, we must tell them and tell the public exactly where we feel they are lacking.

The panellists on this Issues 27 programme were very articulate in the issues that they spoke on. I would congratulate each one of them, in particular Mr. Charles Glidden for the wonderful job he did in chairing that panel. Also, Mr. George Ebanks, Mrs. Mary Lawrence, Mr. Craig Merren, and Mrs. Theresa Lewis-Pitcairn for their contributions on this important issue.

One speaker said that the country is at a crossroad. But what I heard echoed not only by the panellists but by those calling in was the need for leadership. Mr. Speaker, we have all Chiefs and no Indians. If we had a more disciplined system in this House . . . and I am not just blaming the current government because this has gone on successively from government to government. Mr. Speaker, the public is constantly frightened when an election time comes if the question of leadership is brought up.

There are individuals that will deliberately go out and tell the public that if you put one of your own Caymanians as the Chief among equals, that that person is going to destroy the country. But do you know what it is, Mr. Speaker? It's the lack of respect for our own people because if we brought somebody in from Little Cayman . . . as long as he comes in here with an accent, we would accept that person for any position. But we feel that our own people are going to destroy our country. We cannot find one individual . . . I can look over there now and either one of the three elected members sitting there could be chief among equals—either one of them!

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House, we have all leaders so I don't have a problem with finding somebody from this side!

Mr. Speaker, why is it that we are not telling our people the truth about this situation? Somebody said to me, "Linford, you shouldn't speak on that because you know how the people out there feels about it, it's election time, you should be careful not to speak about it."

Mr. Speaker, my motto is tell the truth, because when you tell the truth you don't even have to remember what you said because it will always be the truth. It is only when you lie that you have to worry about things. The truth is that these islands would be better served if we had a proper system, if we had better discipline in this House.

Mr. Speaker, with choosing a leader, whether you want to call that person a Chief Minister or whatever, you need somebody that can be held responsible for the actions of your government—

Mr. Roy Boddén: Hear, hear!

[Members: Clapping on desk]

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: But with that, Mr. Speaker, you need to have proper discipline, and that discipline will come out of a proper party system.

People might say, 'Well, Linford, you are talking about this and remember election is in November and this could be held against you.' When I listened to that Issues 27 programme I believe the people were saying that we want people that we can hold accountable; we want leadership in the country and it's time that we faced up to that and stopped going out there frightening people to death telling them that if they have a leader in their country that everything is going to go down the drain. I have never been so embarrassed.

When I go on some of these conferences abroad and the chief ministers of various areas are asked to assemble, and we tell them we have the equivalent—what is the equivalent? Then we find out that they regard our Leader of Government Business as the equivalent of their Chief Minister. I must say, Mr. Speaker, giving the gentleman his due, when the Leader of Government Business is abroad at the meetings I have been to, he has well represented these islands. But that is not the point. The point is that we are here telling the people that proper official leadership is bad for the country; yet, the UK, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other areas are recognising the Leader of Government Business as the de facto Chief Minister.

[Members: That's right!]

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: So, what is so bad about that?

Why don't we have a serious look at our Constitution, talk to the people and find out exactly how they feel about the situation?

In addition, Mr. Speaker, if we had an official party system . . . and speaking of that, I am never so embarrassed as when I am on these conferences and somebody asks, "What party do you belong to?"

I have to start by saying, "Well you know, I ran with the Democratic Alliance . . ."

"No, what party do you belong to?" That's the question the person will ask.

It is most embarrassing. We have an antiquated system. I am there telling them we have teams and they look at me like I am crazy! "Teams? What are teams?"

"Well," I said, "we have Team Cayman, the National Team and the Democratic Alliance Team."

Mr. Speaker, we need to get better organised and more disciplined. We need to have something like, perhaps the Democratic Progressive Labour Party or whatever, so that we know that we are talking about a party system. With that party system, Mr. Speaker—and I am prepared to say this on the political platform so that the people can be educated on this issue. We have to stop being afraid. I cannot run for the November election if I am going there feeling afraid of my people. I am representing my people and if they say to me, 'We do not want you to do so and so . . . ' then I will not do it. But, at least, give them the opportunity to tell us what they want us to do.

With a party system, we could save half of the time that we are spending in this House. What you would have happening on an issue like the Throne Speech is that nobody would have to try to outfox the other. What is happening now is that each one of us feels that we had better get up and say something. We are almost like all independents in this House. But, with a party system, the Chief Minister would speak on behalf of government and the Leader of the Opposition would speak on behalf of the opposition and we would cut the time that we are spending in this House in two.

They also try to frighten the public by telling them that if you have a Chief Minister he is going to be too powerful. Mr. Speaker, that is rubbish. The Chief Minister is only as powerful as the people who have put him in the position will allow him to be. If he does not toe the line, he can be removed like anybody else. He will have to carry out the wishes of the majority. That is what it is all about, Mr. Speaker, and our representatives should stop frightening the people telling them that if they get a Chief Minister it means we are going independent. What rubbish!

Many of our brothers and sisters that are still Overseas Territories—Bermuda, the BVI, Turks and Caicos, just to name a few—have had proper party systems and their Chief Ministers have been in place for years, and yet they are not independent. All the independence that we need in the Cayman Islands we already have, and that is financial and economic independence.

Mr. Speaker, we do not need any constitutional independence because it would destroy this country. And for any Member to get up in this House and intimate that his colleagues are seeking that sort of thing is downright mischievous, because they know better. I respect my colleagues too much to even think that they would be thinking in that direction but what we need is to have more respect for our fellowmen for their abilities.

Mr. Speaker, we are the fifth largest financial centre in the world, yet we have the most backward political structure of all of the Overseas Territories. We need to give more respect to our fellowmen, our own Caymanians. Some of the biggest problems our Caymanians are having today are not with the expatriates but it is with our own people. We need to put give more respect to our people. We need to be able to say, 'Yes, we have matured to the point where we can find one person amongst our group that can speak for us.' I call that chief among equals, or first among equals.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what is true? Nobody wants to come out and say anything about it because they fear that some other group will go out there and paint such a dark picture that they stand a chance of losing the election. But, if you ask them how they feel deep in their hearts, they will tell you that the time is long past when we should be restructuring our political system. But they will also say, 'Boy, I am not going to be the one to go out there and say it.' What hypocrisy!

We need to be truthful and let the people know what is in their best interest as far as you are concerned, and they can make a decision whether you are correct or whether you are wrong. Knowing my people as I do, they will not hesitate to tell you if they feel that you are going wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a stealthy way of doing it, if nothing is said until after an election, and the first week after being sworn in, you push it down the throats of the people. It cannot work like that.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: It cannot work like that. Let's clear it up now!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: We must be honest and tell them exactly where we want to go.

Mr. Speaker, I am of the view that there are not many out there that will fault us if they feel that what we are doing is in the best interest of the country.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: And, tell them where we want to go.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is so important that ministers, especially the Chief Minister, would also have a certain amount of administrative responsibility.

Earlier I alluded to the situation at the airport, the Civil Aviation Department, but the truth is that even though it is a statutory body the minister responsible has very little administrative authority over what happens there. The same thing applies to other elected ministers—if something goes wrong in their portfolios they have to rely on the goodness of the hearts of the people in the Personnel Department as to what action they would take.

I remember once when I was minister, I had just completed the West Shore Centre Post Office. People were asking, pounding me for post boxes and there we had a number of post boxes available for rent but yet administratively the decision was taken that unless those people where living in George Town they couldn't get a box. Mr. Speaker, I called my Permanent Secretary in and I said please look into this problem. He came back to me and said that the person in charge said that was the policy she had agreed on, and that was it. I remember getting so frustrated that I took it to Executive Council, only to be asked if I was not over-reacting, and that was the end of it. Yet, I was being blamed for not providing the facility that was needed by the general public, by providing the necessary post boxes.

Mr. Speaker, that is happening right throughout. I remember when I built a certain road in George Town, one of my good friends on the Opposition got up and really peppered me. I still love him to death, but he really peppered me and I couldn't do anything about it. I remember that Member getting up and saying, 'Mr. Speaker, this is the most expensive road in the world!' And he was almost right! [Laughter] But there was nothing that I could do about it. All I could do was to call in the heads of the department and plead with them, 'Please see if you can build the road a little cheaper. Do you need all of these sort of elaborate things that you are doing?'

Now, Mr. Speaker, that person faces the same problem building the most expensive schools ever! [Laughter]

This is nothing against my official friends across the way. I am talking about a system. The official members even (though they are members of Executive Council) have a little bit more latitude. And you will find that the elected members, even though they are being held responsible for their portfolios, do not have the authority to get anything done.

Then, Mr. Speaker, if we know that our public expects a certain performance from us, why are we so afraid to examine ways and means of improving the system? If that improvement means that we should have a full ministerial system with one individual who will be called first among equals, the Chief Minister, with a proper disciplined party system, why won't we examine the pros and cons of such a situation? Why are we so happy to say, 'Boy, let's leave it alone. Let's remain with the status quo because that is the safe way to go'? We are afraid that the people out there might not elect us if we speak about it publicly, and, as a result, some of them are happy to leave it alone because there is really no accountability under this present system.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come . . . and I am not here pushing for any particular system because I (and believe me, I say this with all honesty), the Third Elected Member for George Town, am not interested in the position of Chief Minister—even though I feel I could fill it as admirably as any other Member. I am not interested. But I would support the right person for such a position because I believe that it would be in the best interest of this country.

I know that I have spoken at length on this particular issue, but it is something that is near and dear to me. We are complaining, the civil service is complaining, about the present system. Some people are saying that even where the Governor is concerned they feel that too much authority is at that level. But the Governor is only exercising his duties under the Constitution. If you read the Constitution (not you particularly, Mr. Speaker, this is generic) . . . if any of us read the Constitution we will see what the Governor's responsibilities are under the Constitution, and that he is carrying out those responsibilities. We cannot blame him. We have to be more introspective. We have to look at ourselves and decide on what we are willing to accept and what we are willing to do to improve the system.

Mr. Speaker, I now plan to move on to a new subject, if you wish to take the break.

The Speaker: If you have finished, yes. We will suspend proceedings until 2.15 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.52 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.41 PM

The Chairman: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continuing. The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, when we took the break I was speaking on the very important subject of the perceived lack of leadership in our government. I qualified that statement by saying that it was not directly pointed to any particular government, indeed not directly at this government, but this has been problem with successive governments.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn my attention to the vexing subject of the immigration system. But, before doing so, I wish to reiterate that an improvement in our political structure in the Cayman Islands can only augur for good. It will not destroy things, as some politicians would have people think; it will only improve the efficiency and good governance in these islands.

Mr. Speaker, whilst it is not my intention to debate the recent report on immigration, I would like to generally speak on one small aspect of it. Before doing so, I think it would be remiss of me in dealing with the immigration problem if I ignored some of the problems I have seen within our community that have been caused through the insensitivity of some of the people brought here on work permits, and even, as far as that goes, some of them that have had the good fortune of obtaining the grant of Caymanian status.

I specifically refer to the unfortunate letter that appeared in the Caymanian Compass of 12 January, this year, written by Mr. Douglas Calder. Whilst it is not my intention to open up this subject unnecessarily, I feel that this is such an important issue that it deserves some comment. Whilst Mr. Calder had the guts to append his name to a letter stating the way he felt about Caymanians, there are a number of expatriates in this country in a similar position to him who act and feel the same way.

Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying, "When in Rome do as the Romans." Basically that means that you don't leave your country and go to a new country and try to voice your culture and views on the people of that country. Though it is true that people like Mr. Calder have lived here for many years (he said from 1969), and have received the coveted Caymanian status, he is as English as the day he came here! That is not to berate the English, because I was fortunate to live in the country for four years where I got my education. In addition to getting an education there, I learned a lot about the culture also.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most dangerous issues facing these islands is the dichotomy and separation being caused through this same attitude being displayed towards local Caymanians. We see this in all aspects of our lives—we see this in the workplace, we see this in the churches and even on social occasions, it is rampant. I know many of my fellow Caymanians are even afraid to attend cocktail parties because they are treated like foreigners in their own country.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to continue the smooth and harmonious running of these islands and live together in peace and harmony, this condescending attitude has to change. There are individuals that come to these islands who feel, because they are flying from some other country, that that gives them the right to treat the local people with disdain. There are certain expatriates that feel that Caymanians are all stupid and they don't have any valid ideas. That attitude, Mr. Speaker, has to change.

The Caymanian society is a very open, loving and giving society. The people of this country are often lauded and congratulated for being some of the nicest people in the world. But, like every other country and every other nationality, they too have their limit and threshold.

Mr. Speaker, in the same way that we open our arms to these people that come here to work with us, we try to welcome them, they should also show due respect to us when they come here.

Some of the attitudes we see being reflected are attitudes of arrogance and condescension. I have seen it at all levels, and even at the government level you find some of these employees who are brought in from abroad by the mere fact that they have a different nationality, acting as if that gives them a superiority and intelligence. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. Some of our Caymanians are as intelligent—or more so—than a lot of these people that come in here to work. They are not doing us any special favours.

Granted, fifteen to thirty years ago it was necessary to offer an inducement to get people to come here. But that situation has long passed. Very few come in here on work permits, regardless of where they are coming from, who want to leave when their work permit is up. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with that. What is wrong is this superior attitude being displayed by these individuals. That must cease if we are to continue as a harmonious society.

What is happening, Mr. speaker is that those attitudes are only serving to polarise and inflame the social discontent that now exists in these islands. What is also bad is that even within our own civil service it is understood that this arrogance and this condescension is rampant. I have been told that expatriates are being brought into this island with lesser qualifications than some of our own Caymanians, yet they are given more salary and bigger positions. That is not right and it must stop.

So, Mr. Speaker, my advice to people like the Calders and the A. D. Taylors in the Cayman Islands would be to show due respect to the Caymanian people. If we took a poll tomorrow, it would reflect the high esteem in which Mr. Alden McLaughlin is held in these islands. I want to congratulate people like him for speaking out in favour of the Caymanian people. It is not only Mr. McLaughlin who recognises that there is a problem within the succession planning of government and the private sector, but many of the representatives in this very House have also voiced their concern about this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that this unfortunate incident that Mr. Calder's letter caused will be a lesson for all those out there who may have this superior feeling that they are God's gift to the Cayman Islands. Mr. Speaker, much of the problem is caused through our own people because there are some of us that feel that our own people cannot do a job as well as the expatriates. But as long as he comes in on a plane (as I said this morning it could be from Little Cayman), by virtue of flying in here with a different accent makes him a superior individual with superior knowledge. I feel very strongly about this issue. The reason I feel strongly about it is that I really do not want to see it destroy these islands. I do not want to see it polarise our people, and I would ask that it stop.

In the same way that we have a very tolerant attitude towards all people coming here . . . one only has to go down on the waterfront and then you will see the tolerance of Caymanians—tourists walking all over the place in the front of cars . . . Caymanians are a very tolerant and loving people. But we don't like to be trampled under foot. I would ask that the respect that we give is reciprocated, otherwise it could create an unwholesome situation.

Mr. Speaker, the whole question of immigration is a touchy subject and one that most governments deal with very delicately. Thus the reason why it has taken so long to even get a report from the select committee that has been established to look into this matter. It is not my intention to debate this report as it is not now before the House for that purpose, I will reserve that for another time. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it is my responsibility to comment on the concern that is being caused, perhaps through misunderstanding, on the question of work permits for the future.

I do not believe that it is the intention of this honourable House and its members to create a situation that is untenable, or one that would tend to destroy the future of this country. Thus I do not believe that it is in the best interest of this country that we should have a maximum non-discretionary five-year term on work permits. I see the reasoning behind this, but the good reasoning behind this can be the very cause of the reason for even looking closer at it because it could prove the destruction of a number of our locally owned businesses.

Also, I fully recognise that the advancement and protection of the Caymanian people in the workplace was the primary consideration on the question of the five-year permit. I believe I differ slightly with some of my colleagues, but I am sure they will understand that I am expressing my view on this. It is my view that a maximum non-discretionary five-year term is much too restrictive and that it could do irreparable damage to many local businesses. As a matter of fact, some of the businesses would be forced to lose some of their key employees.

Worse still, Mr. Speaker, such a policy would prevent these islands from attracting the best calibre of permit holders to these islands. Somebody comes here on five years, they would say, 'I am only here for five years, why should I bother. I am not going to even buy real estate. Why should I bother about training somebody if I am only here for five years?' Mr. Speaker, let me quickly say that against that background is the danger of continuity of tenure. This is what this five-year term is trying to address: that people are not allowed to get too much of a strong foothold in the territory because as my good friend the First Elected Member for George Town said this morning, there are over 13,000 people now on work permits.

We have to be extremely careful in balancing this whole issue. But as the old saying goes, we cannot throw the baby out with the bath water; we have to be extremely careful. If we have a good employee in our service then it is going to be very difficult for us to perhaps replace that person with somebody of equal qualification and calibre.

Mr. Speaker, there has to be another way for us dealing with this issue. The reason that I have commented on this is that up to midday when I had lunch with some folks, the same subject came up—they are very concerned that this particular issue could drive business away from the Cayman Islands.

You know in this connection, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at both sides of the coin. When we say we have 13,000 people on work permits, we are looking at the effect of economic growth. The reason we have these numbers of people on work permit is because there is a demand, and this demand is fuelled through economic growth. Not only is the demand in the private sector but in government alike. I have heard a number of people saying, 'let us slow down economic growth' but I wonder if they give a lot of thought to what would happen to these islands when we start turning away investment.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True! Mash it up, as they say.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I remember 1988 to 1992 when I served as a Member of Executive Council (it is now called "Minister"). It was one of the periods that we had the biggest recession in these islands caused through the recession in the United States. It was at that period when the unemployment rate went up to almost 1,000 people in these islands, notwithstanding all efforts made by government to keep the economy going through capital development. Yet, there are some that are calling to slow down the economy without first weighing the pros and cons of doing so.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you wanted to break at 3.00 p.m., so I could take my break at this point.

The Speaker: If you haven't reached a convenient point, you could go on a few minutes longer.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: This is okay, Mr. Speaker, I will pick up tomorrow on this.

The Speaker: I will now entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

The Speaker: I shall put the question that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Honourable House stands adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

AT 3.04 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 2 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
THURSDAY
2 MARCH 2000
10.37 AM

(Total time in Chamber 1:49)

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment, and Natural Resources]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the honourable First, Second and Third Official Members who will be arriving later this morning. I have also received apologies from the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation, who will also be arriving later this morning.

Moving on to item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 18 February 2000. Debate continuing, the Third Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOV-
ERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 18
FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

At the adjournment yesterday, I had reached the point where I was discussing the pros and cons of a forced slowdown in our economy. However, before continuing on that subject, I am constrained to make a few comments on the reply that was made through GIS on the matter which I raised early in my debate yesterday in regard to the incident of CAL having to circle the airport for some 15 to 20 minutes because of no lights on the airstrip, and because none of the air traffic control officers were available.

I think that the author of the article released by GIS was somewhat confused and totally missed the point I raised in this honourable House. The article concentrated mainly on the point that the aircraft had sufficient fuel to go to an alternate site (and they named Montego Bay) if necessary, and could have circled Montego Bay for another 30 minutes. That response was most inappropriate and simplistic at best.

I raised the point of fuel as an example, but I have been connected with the airline long enough to know that crashes can occur for a number of reasons. And running out of fuel is perhaps at the bottom of that list. The point that should have been taken into account is what would have happened if that aircraft had to make an emergency landing. That is the point. What would have happened, not if the aircraft ran out of fuel? The number of crashes we have read about, Alaska Airline, and others were caused by a multitude of various reasons. I have not yet heard that any of them crashed because they ran out of fuel.

I don't know who crafted that reply, but I think it is an insult to the people of this country that GIS would release such a reply to this serious problem. I think what should be concentrated on at this point is why an air traffic control officer was not present. They knew there was a scheduled flight coming in from Miami. Why was the airstrip not lit? That's what we have to concentrate on, not trying to make somebody look like they don't know what they are talking about.

That sort of thing has to stop, Mr. Speaker. Let United States concentrate on the apparent slackness, incompetents, and irresponsibility surrounding this issue. Any of our loved ones could have been on that plane. It could have been an emergency situation. It is not good enough to hear something sort of pushed under the carpet or pushed aside as if it were no big deal and nobody on this side has a right to the information. It is a big deal! That is totally wrong.

I ask the honourable minister to look into this. It was totally wrong to have released such a statement. Further, I would ask the Civil Aviation Authority Board to investigate this issue since we are talking about a statutory authority.

Yesterday in my debate, I was showing where this country is backward politically. I was also saying that many of the politicians had frightened my people in the past, making them believe that if they have one of their own that that individual is going to destroy the country. I was also pointing out the need for leadership, because the country is crying out for it. We have to get away from this shroud of secrecy under collective responsibility, and hold one person responsible.

I was very pleased that even the media, television, CITN, already recognised the proactive approach of the backbench. They are already referring to my good friend and colleague, the First Elected Member for George Town, as the leader of the backbench! They made a mistake with the backbench, because there are also government members on the backbench. It should have been [leader] of the Opposition. I only mention that to say . . . and I am not doing this to embarrass anybody, but just to say that already the public and the media seem to be ready to accept that we need discipline and proper leadership, and too recognise that we have capable Caymanians on both sides of this honourable House who can admirably fill the position of leadership.

And to also make the point that already we have a de facto leader on the government bench called by another name. But a rose by any other name is still a rose. Whether you call that person "Leader of Government Business," or whatever, it is still the leader, and still the chief among equals.

Having made those two points, I now wish to return to the point I left off on yesterday at the adjournment regarding the pros and cons of a forced—and I stress "forced" because it would have to be mandated—slowdown in the economy. If it occurs because of circumstances beyond our control, like a recession in the United States, etc., then these are problems we have no control over. But I just wanted to make the point that before any elected member or individual attempts to create a situation where we try to slow the economy down, we need to study the pros and cons of such an action.

I gave the example of the experience that was forced on the 1988 to 1992 government through a United States recession. I would make the point that it is the economic conditions of the United States in particular that determines the health of the economy of the Cayman Islands. It is not, as some members of this Legislative Assembly would have you believe, the policies they have put in place. The person responsible for the Cayman Islands' growth or recession is a gentleman by the name of Alan Greenspan. He is the one who dictates economic policies in the United States.

It is the economy of the United States that dictates the health or sickness of the economy of the Cayman Islands. It is not any economic policy that any member of government, or a group, may put in place. I want to make that abundantly clear. The US economy was responsible for the growth in our economy over the past eight years in particular. It was the economic growth in the US that also trickled down and gave us the benefits we are experiencing in Cayman. I will speak on that when I reach the area to do with the Finance and Economic Department.

Let us think very carefully before we go around saying that this development and that development is not benefiting the Cayman Islands and therefore we should stop them. Let us look at the pros and cons, and see if indeed there is any form of trickle-down economic advantages accruing to these Islands. It is true that we now have to employ some 13,000 to 14,000 people. But it is also true that if we were not doing that we would probably not be the fifth largest financial centres in the world. And some people might even say that we are even further up on the totem pole.

It is those individuals, regardless of where they fit in to this global wheel . . . each one as a spoke fills a most important role. We would not be able to maintain the services we are in the Cayman Islands from the top to the bottom if we didn't have those individuals in place.

As I said yesterday, there are two sides to this coin. And because of the lack of succession planning and the lack of training, there are many Caymanians not benefiting to the extent they should be. Much of that blame has to be placed squarely on the shoulders of the Immigration Board. If the law is inadequate in this respect, then it is the duty of all honourable members of this House to strengthen it in such a way that our people will receive the maximum benefit. I am happy that I am associated with a group on this side of the House that is thinking in that direction.

On that very delicate question of immigration, I was pleased to hear my colleague, the First Elected Member for George Town, state his position regarding long term residents in this country. He was, in fact, echoing the sentiments of my colleagues, and me in particular. Even though we must recognise the need for succession planning, there are individuals in this country that have spent all of their lives here—20 years and more. Their children were born here. How can we now look those children in the eye and say they must go back home? Go back to what home? The only home they know is the Cayman Islands. We have to be a people with heart and compassion.

It is not being compassionate and God fearing when we look at our fellow man and treat him in that way. I feel (and I believe it is a feeling that is shared by many of my colleagues) that the time has come when we must do something to assist that category of individuals, especially those in the category of 25 years and upwards. They have helped to build these islands. And they should not be treated with disrespect, as pariahs within our community.

I want to be associated with a government that is compassionate, that has a moral conscience, and practices the greatest of all commandments, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." So I am hoping that before very long this question of security of tenure for these individuals will be seriously addressed, and that there will be some kind of wrapping up exercise to look after those individuals.

I also know that the interim report now circulating is inviting comments from the general public and once the select committee receives those comments they will be seriously acted upon. If not during this year, I hope it will be as soon as possible thereafter.

I was also happy that I dealt with the issue of the five-year rollover permit yesterday. I understand that the Chamber of Commerce had so many people at their meeting yesterday, that they had to expand the area to accommodate them. That suggests how important the whole issue is. And, since I spoke at length on that issue yesterday, at this point I will only reiterate my position on that suggestion—and it is only now a suggestion or proposal in the interim report—I do not think that that proposal, however well intended, is appropriate and practical at this time.

But I do know that the underlying problem is crying out for assistance, for help, for a solution. The whole immigration issue in Cayman is such a major issue that both sides of this honourable House were in a select committee to deal with it.

On a broader and more encompassing prospective, if we are to grow as a nation, as a country, as a territory (call it what you may), human resources is a key ingredient. If we are to maintain our position as a leading financial centre in the world, our human resources is a key ingredient. Unless our males in this society are going to get more amorous and have many more children—and when I say males, I include the females—to provide the needed services, then it is important for us to rely on outside help for many years.

So, for us to even think that we will be able to Caymanianise the Cayman Islands work force overnight is fallacy. It cannot happen. There has to be tolerance and understanding of our economic needs, our economic situation, our economic structure, and what is required. The Cayman Islands is one of the leading financial centres today not by chance, but because we provide some of the best services. We are some of the best and most professional service providers in the industry. But much of that expertise has to be brought in from overseas.

What made America the greatest country on earth today was the tolerance exercised in integrating the outside world within its society. If you were to ask an American what his roots are, you would probably get a million different answers because America is populated by individuals from all different countries. That is not to say that the indigenous American is still not recognised and respected, as it should be.

Some of most talented Americans today are the descendants of people from various countries. I say that to say that we will have to seriously look at the Cayman Islands position from a broader perspective and take off the blinders that might insulate. We have to consider that if people are going to come to these islands and spend all of their lives, 25 years, 30 years, 40 years, and make a contribution to these islands, that they should be recognised and accepted for that contribution.

I totally support any view, and in particular the views expressed by one of my colleagues, that we should be most sensitive to the issue of integrating into our society individuals who have spent most of their lives here, 25 years and upwards. This should not be an open door policy; it should be done very carefully and very selectively.

I have a problem with individuals who come to these islands and spend three or four years in government or otherwise, and because of their lofty positions are granted Caymanian status by government, by the Governor in Council.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True, true, true, true!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I have a problem with that.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Preach, brother, preach!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Yet we have people who have spent 25 years, 30, 35, 40 years and they are still on work permits. That cannot be right.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Against the law of natural justice!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: It is certainly against the law of natural justice.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True! Preach, brother, preach!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: We, as a country need to focus on those injustices. And we are the individuals in this honourable House that can change that, and the people are expecting us to do so!

Mr. Roy Bodden: Hear, hear!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: We need to have the courage to do so!

Mr. Roy Bodden: Hear, hear, Linny! Hear, hear! God bless you!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I know that there are individuals who are quite ready, willing and capable—

Mr. Roy Bodden: They just need the chance.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: —of making those changes.

The time has passed when you can just pat somebody on the head and say, 'You're a good boy.' We have a lot of bright young people in this country that are expecting to see those changes made.

I believe that this election is going to be influenced heavily by the young people in this country. They want to see forward-thinking leaders. They don't want to keep us back in the industrial age. We are now in the information technology age. And they want us to move ahead accordingly.

I wish now to turn my attention to some of the negative social behaviours I see creeping into our society. When I started my debate yesterday, I pointed out that I saw as the two major issues facing this country being enveloped under the social and economic situation that exists. A consequence of our economic growth is, frankly speaking, some of the negative antisocial behaviour we see creeping into our society. This is not peculiar to the Cayman Islands, but that should be no reason to be complacent, saying that other countries are experiencing the same problem.

I heard a representative in this House refer to these gangs as groups. Be they groups, be they gangs, whatever you want to call them, we have a major problem with the antisocial behaviour of some of our young people. And let me stress that we are speaking about some, and that "some" is a small minority. I believe that most of our young people are good young people. They are young people that are setting themselves up as good role models.

But, we must also recognise that there are some young people who are involved in unacceptable behaviour. These gangs must be identified and firmly treated. When I say treated, I don't mean abused, but dealt with. If they need psychological assistance or whatever, it should be made available to them. But they must be made to understand that they can't wreak havoc over this society and the society must accept it without retaliation.

One speaker said that it takes a village to raise a child. We cannot continue to put the blame in any one direction. From the best-regulated homes, we can have children with antisocial behaviour. We need a multifaceted approach where the schools work with the homes, the churches, and also the wider community. I was at a function a few nights ago, and it was so good (there were other members of this honourable House there) to see within what would be regarded as the middle-to-lower income individuals so many of the children . . . and I don't mind saying that it was at the New Testament Church. It was so good to see the work that that church is doing with their young people.

I want to publicly congratulate Pastor Mitchell and his congregation for the wonderful job they are doing. I believe there are other churches. I know for a fact that my church, the Elmslie Church, is also very much involved. I know that other churches are doing a great job with their young people. I want to also congratulate them.

But the point I am making is that the job of raising a job is a multifaceted job. It takes the home, the school, the church and a broader community to raise a child.

It is unfortunate that today we are living in such a society under so many rules and regulations that if an adult sees a child doing wrong that he is no longer able to correct that child for fear of being taken to court. When I was growing up, if I did something wrong—and the Lord knows I did a lot of things that were mischievous—and an adult saw me, I would be corrected on the spot. And if I went home and complained to my parents about it, I got another correction.

Unfortunately, we seem to have gotten so modern that that is no longer possible. The community can no longer take the active role it used to. When I look around, and I know a lot of the people who are holding key positions today, they will proudly attest to the very strict upbringing they had. Not only in the home, but from the neighbours. They were each other's keepers. They were their brother's keepers. Rather than taking a holier than thou attitude and ignoring the problems, let us get involved in solving the problems.

This is one of the reasons why I have a bit of a problem with some of the churches that concentrate solely on outreach missions. I feel that the churches should also try to help the poor and needy in countries such as Haiti, Turkey, and other areas of the world, and some of the African countries. I feel that charity should begin at home. We have a lot of "Haiti's" in this little island, and rather than the substantial concentration we see being placed on some of the overseas countries, we should be placing it on our youth in areas like the Wat-ler's Road area, the Rock Hole area, the Scranton area, and other areas where individuals in those areas are trying so hard to assist the youth. Charity must begin at home.

In this connection, I must congratulate the wonderful job that is being done by the George Town Development Officer, Mrs. Zelma Thompson, and others. And even by the police involved with the community work. I also want to congratulate Mr. Dale Ramoon for the wonderful job he is doing in the Scranton area for the youth and individuals in that area. He and his community are doing a wonderful job.

What is so wonderful about that is that the whole neighbourhood is involved in trying to improve the conditions. It is not enough for any church to say that we have services at our church therefore the people should come to us, because the Bible has commissioned us to go into the highways and the byways to spread the Word. It is not only a need, but it is indeed a responsibility of our churches to first look at the needs within our islands' community.

Much of the violence we see occurring today is caused by drug abuse. There are people in certain socio-economic situations that because of the mere situation they are in they feel there is no way out and they resort to drugs of one nature or the other. It doesn't have to be cocaine or marijuana, it can be drinking because drinking is one of the worst drugs one can take. Statistics have shown that the problems from drinking far surpass those of the use of some other drugs.

We need to get into those homes and counsel people. Somebody using drugs should not be castigated as if he is a leper. That person needs help in most cases. And many of our people will say that if they need help they can get it. I regard that as being callous and a cop out. We need to go in there and do everything we can to help those individuals. I know of a lot of promising young people in this country who have been destroyed by the scourge of drugs. I can think of a number right now, but what are we as a government, what are we as a church, what are we as a people doing to try to help those individual? Do we just sit back in a holier than thou attitude and criticise them? Or are we willing to roll up our sleeves to try to help to pull them out of that state they are in?

It is my understanding that the chemical dependency on drugs is so powerful that it is practically impossible for people to kick it on their own. Let us have that compassionate heart, and try to reach out to those individuals.

What about domestic violence? I am proud of the ladies in this honourable House for the focus they have placed on this. They have done a fantastic job, and I want to encourage them to continue.

There is always a cause and an effect. Many of us try to cure the disease after we have contracted it. But a wiser thing to do is to take preventative measures to avoid contracting it in the first place. This same policy can apply in the case of domestic violence also. Most of the people I hear speaking about it are always dealing with the effects of it. They are dealing with the husband who physically abuses the wife, or the wife that physically abuses the husband and the children that suffer. But they are not effectively dealing with the cause. There is a cause and an effect.

Are they going into the homes, looking at the living conditions of those people? Trying to assess the frustration of the individuals? Trying to find out what is causing this unrest in the home? Is it that the husband is drinking too much? Is it that the wife is nagging him too much? What is it that is causing this? And rather than taking a judgmental posture in the whole thing, we should be trying to deal with the cause at the preventative level, and not only at the level where the problem has already occurred and we are trying to cure it.

Some of the problems contributing to the negative antisocial behaviour within our community especially with the youth, is the unrealistic expectations of some of our young people. This can be attributed in many cases to a lack of proper training. We find that within the school system there is an inadequate education system for some of those young people that will never become academic students.

Statistics have shown that perhaps only 15% to 20% of the total school population will ever be able to go to a tertiary institution. And if that is correct, what is effectively being done to help the 75% to 80% of those students? Unless they are properly guided, unless they get the proper training on the vocational or technical side so that they can fill their rightful place in society, you are then throwing a youngster of 16, 17 and 18 into a society as sophisticated as the Cayman Islands without the tools to cope. Then, within a short while you have a young individual who is most frustrated with his life, and this is one basis for the antisocial behaviour.

I believe that one of the reasons we see a number of young people getting involved in drugs, especially those who sell it, is in an attempt to live like the Jones's. They see their friends driving a car, living in a nice apartment, wearing nice clothes. But, because they were unable to get the requisite education, be it technical or some other type of education, they are not in a position to earn the same type of income. Therefore, they try to supplement that, in an unwholesome manner many times.

I do believe that when we start concentrating more on the needs of the majority—because these children fall into the majority—they we will assist those children to bring more respect to think more highly of themselves to be able to fit better into society, to obtain better jobs, that will be a direct way of dealing with this problem of the antisocial behaviour in our youth.

It is in our hands, not only to criticise, but to also assist. But let us be more proactive in trying to deal with the cause. That's the message I want to get across today, that we should be dealing more with the cause than the effects. We are coming to this honourable House and building places to detain antisocial youth and older people. And that is as it should be where necessary. But I am saying that we need to be concentrating also on the reasons for this type of behaviour, the cause. And if we do that effectively, I truly believe that we will reduce the need to put another cell block at Northward Prison, or to be building a remand home, or a lot of things we are doing as a result of this behaviour.

I now wish to turn to another point raised indirectly in the Throne Speech. It has to do with the whole question of representation in our country, voter registration and the general election coming up on 8th November.

I have heard figures given in this honourable House and outside, of the number of registered voters. It's frightening when we consider that of the 50,000 people or so that we have in these islands, that only approximately 25% of them are able to determine the future of these islands. It is my understanding that only about 10,500 people are registered or eligible to vote.

Some countries have 60%, 70%, 80% of the population is eligible to vote. The point is that it behoves each member of this honourable House to ensure that those who can vote are given every opportunity to register to vote. I want to congratulate the young people. I heard on Issues 27 a few nights ago that a group of young people, Craig Merren, Bernie Bush and others will be getting together on the public beach to assist young people in being registered. I think this is a very commendable move by those young people.

Because of this proactive position taken by the youth, I would suggest (and I hope that the Minister for Agriculture is hearing this) that government consider setting up a booth at the Agricultural Grounds on Ash Wednesday where we will have a lot of people visiting that show. Those who have not yet registered would have the opportunity to register on that occasion.

In requesting the honourable minister to look about that, I would also like to put on record that I am asking the First Official Member, who is responsible for elections, to look into that matter.

In continuing to go through the Throne Speech delivered by the Governor, I am now having a look at the reference he made to the departure of Mr. Thomas Russell as the Cayman Islands Government Representative in the United Kingdom. Just to say that I wish to join all those in congratulating Mr. Russell for a job well done. He has indeed been an ambassador to the Cayman Islands. He's an individual who is very knowledgeable and he performed well. It was always a pleasure to visit his office and receive whatever assistance we required, especially the group of us that went across to the UK and to Paris for discussions on government affairs such as the OECD and otherwise.

I am sure that my colleagues who went on that trip as well as a number of others who have been helped by Mr. Russell join me in wishing him all the best in his retirement years—his second retirement.

It would be remiss of me if I did not also congratulate his successor Mrs. Jennifer Dilbert, on being selected to fill this most important position. It just highlights what I said earlier, if our people are given the opportunity they can rise to the challenge. I want to wish her all the best, and to let her know that I believe she has the support of this honourable House in assisting her in efficiently and effectively carrying out her duties.

Having mentioned that, I wish to now have a quick look at the question—

The Speaker: I think if you are going on to another subject, this would be a convenient time to take the morning break. We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.43 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.22 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate on the Throne Speech continuing, the Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

Before the break, I was moving to the section under e-commerce. I noticed that under Computer Services the Governor made reference to development of the infrastructure necessary to support Government's e-commerce initiatives. And also under the Ministry of Tourism he made reference to the progress of the Electronics Transactions Bill.

I would just like to say that I am very pleased with the progress of the development of the Electronics Transactions Bill. I wish to congratulate the minister responsible for this subject, that is the Minister of Commerce, for piloting this bill through the advisory committee to the stage where it is hoped that it will be presented during this current meeting.

Many time members on this side of the House are accused of criticising without bringing forward any helpful constructive suggestions. But I think it has already been acknowledged in this honourable House that the introduction of this subject through Private Member's Motion 27/99, which I brought here in September last year, is a true example of constructive criticism and also assisting in a constructive manner. I do believe that the introduction of the Electronics Transactions Bill will indeed provide the machinery for the diversification of our economy.

At present, our economy is divided right down the centre between our financial industry and our tourism industry. As is well known, both of those industries are somewhat fragile. There are a number of external pressures and initiatives that could have a substantial negative effect on those industries. I feel that it was only appropriate that government and this honourable House look at ways and means to expand and diversify the economy. It was against that background that together with the First Elected Member for George Town, as seconder, and myself as the proposer, brought Private Member's Motion 27/99 which was accepted by this honourable House.

The Minister for Commerce has been the chairman of the advisory committee, and much has been accomplished since the passage of that Private Member's Motion. I do believe that the country will produce a piece of legislation to govern electronic transactions that will be superior to anything in the region, or, as far as that goes, to anything in the world. Thus far, we have had the opportunity to look at a number of laws to see where we can benefit from some of the weaknesses in those laws, such as the laws of Bermuda, Australia, Singapore, Ireland, Hong Kong, UK, US, just to name a few.

This is as it should be, because as the premier financial centre of the region and the fifth largest financial centre in the world, we should not be following any country with any of our legislation, but we should be the leaders. I believe that the legislation now being looked at will reflect that we have taken that policy in preparing it.

We have moved from the industrial age into a new age that has been heralded in with a new century. That is known as the Information Technology Age. It was against this background also that in my Private Member's Motion 27/99 that I called for government to work together with the private sector to develop a policy which would actively encourage e-commerce within the islands. In our deliberations we have also considered the technical meaning of e-commerce as against the technical meaning of e-business, "e" meaning electronic. It is felt more appropriate that we should refer to our law as the Electronics Transaction Law that deals with e-business because e-business is all encompassing and includes not only the area of commerce as we know it, but all aspects of transactions, be it commercial, financial or otherwise.

We also asked in that motion that the Electronics Transaction Law would be suitable to meet the needs of these islands as a financial centre, but also as a premier tourism centre. The progress made to date on this piece of legislation would suggest that government is taking into account all the necessary areas to ensure that security is held uppermost in mind. It is this type of security and the integrity of the legislation that will continue to encourage the very best business in these islands. It would have been easy to ask why should we get involved with electronic business. But that would have been a backward step, burying our heads in the sand, because the wave of the future is information technology.

The action I took in September last year by introducing this motion was also as a result of the wish of the people. In the Vision 2008 proposal, a particular strategy, strategy 12, was devoted to the whole question of electronic technology. Eleven of the action plans under that strategy were dedicated to information technology, telecommunications, and electronic commerce. Because of this interrelation between information technology, telecommunications and electronic business it is my view that at some stage government should consider placing these three subjects under one minister or member, with very close correlation and interrelationship between these subjects. At present, they are placed under three separate ministries.

It is my view that electronic business in the Cayman Islands may well become the third sector of our economy. It is fast becoming a revenue earner in most of the industrialised countries. As a matter of fact, Bermuda, one of our competitors, is much further advanced with the e-commerce business than we are, or even, as far as that goes, further advanced than other countries within the region.

But one of the setbacks we will find with the success of e-commerce in the Cayman Islands is the cost of providing those services. Government will have to take a firm position with the local Internet service provider, Cable & Wireless. I know they have promised to reduce their costs in the charge for providing Internet services, but it is not enough for them to say they will bring the cost down to the level of that existing in Bermuda. They already have a major financial and moral commitment to Bermuda having established the electronic platform there that cost them almost $2 million. But we do not want to feel that we are second best to Bermuda. We must be given special and individual treatment.

When they tell us that they are considering bringing our cost down some 80%, or to the level of Bermuda, that is not good enough. Reports have shown that Bermuda has the third highest Internet charges in the world. The figures also show that only Luxembourg and Germany were higher than Bermuda. One member said they don't have any business anyway, so they can afford to push their prices up. We want to be able to negotiate head to head with Cable & Wireless so that we can get the very best rates possible.

I will go further to say that government should look very closely at the franchise between Cable & Wireless and the Cayman Islands Government if we are unable to get the proper arrangements made with Cable & Wireless. A good analogy of e-commerce forming the third leg of our economy is the example given by my good friend a few days ago of the three-legged stool, except with this stool I am hoping it will have a firm balance and not turn over. I think I have seen three-legged stools that were very firm. And I believe that the third leg will give even more balance than two legs.

It is very important that government have a serious talk with Cable & Wireless and remind them that a part of their franchise is that they will provide the necessary and adequate services to these islands. If their cost is too high for us to provide that service, then we have to question whether they are meeting the terms of that franchise. I will say no more on this particular issue at this point. By the time this bill is brought to the Legislative Assembly we should know a little bit more about what Cable & Wireless is doing in regard to their Internet charges at which time I will plan to say more on this subject, if necessary.

Once again, I ask the honourable Minister for Commerce to continue the good work he is doing on the Electronics Transaction Bill. I know that it is his desire, as that of the advisory committee, to have that Bill brought to the House during this meeting if possible. There is already a lot of interest being shown to conduct the business of electronic commerce in the Cayman Islands. But we need to have the proper machinery, the proper guidelines, law, and regulations in place to ensure that we can properly regulate e-commerce in these islands.

Just going down the Governor's Throne Speech, the next area I would like to touch on briefly is the Portfolio of Legal Affairs. I am happy to see that the plans for the Law School are progressing. I do hope that within the not-too-distant future we will see some substantial efforts being made with the building of the facility.

I am sorry that my good friend the Third Official Member is not here, because I am coming to my pet subject, the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development. His Excellency made mention of some of the notable projects that will be dealt with under this Portfolio during the year 2000. One of those subjects is the initiatives under the OECD, G7, and European Union. To this we could safely add the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) and the United Nations Initiatives.

I know there has been criticism levelled at the negotiating team for the certain level of secrecy taken on some of these talks. But as one who has been involved in these talks, many times (especially on our trip to the UK) we were asked to keep much of the discussion confidential at this point in time. But that is not to say that the general outlines of discussions should not be made available to the media.

It's only fair to the negotiating team to say that the reason why the names of the team were not given earlier was because I, Linford Pierson, was not quite sure I would have been on that trip. And the members were waiting on my decision. I partly take the blame for the news media not being told earlier.

That said, I feel that the public deserves to know what is happening with these talks, the talks with OECD, the UK, US, and other countries involved. I believe that the public should not have to wait to read on the Internet or some other media what is happening with the Cayman Islands. If I have anything to do with the future discussions with OECD, EU and G7, or any of these bodies, I will be insisting that as much information as possible be disseminated to the press before and after these meetings so that it will avoid any speculation that may justly or unjustly be made.

I believe that the Cayman Islands is the envy of many of these industrialised countries. Many of them questioned why a small island with 50,000 people or less should be the fifth largest financial centre in the world. So there is a lot of jealousy there. But what is not being told is that the Cayman Islands has one of the best regulated financial centres in the world.

As recently as last month, there was an article I alluded to in the first part of my debate, published in The Economist, a well-known and respected magazine. If anyone wishes to see this article, it is The Economist of 29 January to 24 February 2000. It had a major subject devoted to globalisation and tax survey. There was an article that took up some ten pages. It is very interesting reading, and I would commend it to each honourable member of this House.

I thought it was interesting to note the position now being taken by some of the leading economists in the world. The caption on this particular article stated "A Contradiction in Terms." It says, "Some officials at the OECD now regret ever using the phrase 'harmful tax competition.' As one of them puts it, 'As an economist, how can you ever say anything bad about competition?' The OECD's main objection to some forms of tax competition is that they reduce another country's tax base, or force it to change its mix of taxes, or stop it taxing in the way it would like. But that seems a bit one-sided: what about the democratic rights of people in poor countries to enjoy a higher standard of living by pursuing tax policies that attract overseas investment? Indeed, says Edward Troup, a lawyer at Simmons & Simmons in London, it would be possible to argue that the OECD initiative is 'an attempt to create a cartel amongst certain developed countries who have an unsustainable activity—raising revenue by taxing capital—that they want to protect.'

Mr. Speaker, that is revealing and most interesting. What is most interesting is where it goes on to say, "Variations in tax rates across different countries are a good thing, because they give taxpayers more choice, and thus more chance of being satisfied. They also create pressure on governments to be efficient. That makes harmonising taxes a bad idea."

That is an article in The Economist, one of the leading authorities on world affairs. That is how a lot of the people now in position of authority are thinking. That is not to say that we are not to continue with all our efforts at negotiating as we have been. We cannot afford to be complacent. As was told to us in the UK and in other forums, the OECD is very serious and committed to the initiatives under the report that they submitted.

Closer to home, as a member of the Cayman Islands Society of Professional Accountants, I receive their newsletter on a regular basis. This is made public and is available to any Member of the House. I will be happy to lay it on the Table or make it available to them. They, as the authority on finance in the Cayman Islands, issued an article in their 1 February 2000 newsletter. With your permission, I would like to make a quick reference to this.

The caption is "OECDs Place for Offshore Centres." The article states, and I quote: "A key figure behind the OECDs Report on Harmful Tax Competition has hinted that the Paris based organisation could end up endorsing the activities of some of the worlds better regulated offshore centres. OECD head of fiscal affairs, Geoffrey Owens, denied that he was seeking to put offshore centres out of business, and he said that many jurisdictions are pretty well regulated."

Mr. Owen is quoted as saying, "We are trying to transform them into financial service centres that are viable in the long term without having to rely on money laundering or tax evasion." Mr. Owen also sought to dispel any myths about the future of the whole offshore industry and said, 'I am sure there are offshore centres that will thrive in the next century because they do provide real services which are appreciated by companies and individuals.'"

I am reading this so that the financial centre and other people involved in financial business here will realise that there is no reason for them to start fearing and pulling business from here and taking it to another country. This is a well regulated territory. And every effort is being made to improve on that.

The last part of this article says, referring to Mr. Owen, "The fiscal Pharaoh also denied that the OECD wants to harmonise tax level at the rate set by the most inefficient systems. He said, 'Why should Greece and Germany have the same tax level and the same taxes? It's not about that. Each country is free to decide on the type of taxes suited to its environment. Some of them may decide not to have income tax. That's fine,' he said, 'it's their decision.'"

I believe that we are on the success curve in our negotiations with OECD. Much of this credit must be given to the hard work of the government-selected team that has been negotiating with OECD. We have had people like the Chief Justice, the Attorney General, the Minister of Education, the Minister of Tourism, the Financial Secretary, and me on these negotiations. We will continue to do what we feel is in the best interests of these islands.

In discussing this matter with people in the community and the financial centre, individuals should be careful that they do not just paint a dark picture, for political or other reasons, to try to make the government look bad. There are other ways of dealing with the government in this election year. But to use the initiatives of the OECD, the EU, G7, Financial Action Task Force, or the United Nations Initiatives, would be a mistake. We should be in this together. Both sides of the House must put their heads and hearts together to deal with this issue. If the Cayman Islands financial integrity is damaged, there will be no need for this Legislative Assembly.

Let us all work together on this very serious issue. We talk about slowing down the economy, but let us consider the number of negative initiatives out there that we have to contend with that could have the ultimate effect of slowing things down for us. We may not have to take any direct action in that respect, it may be done for us if we are not very careful. I have the feeling, I have the faith, I am of the view, that things will continue to move from strength to strength as regards the Cayman Islands.

We have cooperated in every way possible. We were the leaders with the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty in the region. We were the leaders with the Proceeds of Criminal Conduct Law in the region. At present we are preparing a Code of Practice on the Know your customer principle within the industry. We are leaders in this respect. That is why if the Financial Action Task Force or any other group targets the Cayman Islands we should not wait and react after the fact, but should be proactive in saying that this is what we stand for. The Cayman Islands is not interested in harbouring any money launderers. We want no part of them. And we are in the fight to stamp out money laundering. We cannot just sit back and hope this will go away and then react after the fact. We are leaders in the financial industry and as such we should take a lead in this important industry.

Mr. Speaker, if you are trying to catch my eye, I can take a break now.

The Speaker: It is my understanding that they would like to hold a select committee [meeting] immediately after the lunch break. If that is the agreement, we shall suspend until 3.15. That should give time for the deliberations.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1.05 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.20 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Honourable Members, there are other important meetings which members have to attend at 3.30. I shall entertain a motion for the adjournment at this time, if that pleases the House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM tomorrow.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM tomorrow. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 3.20 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM FRIDAY, 3 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
FRIDAY
3 MARCH 2000
10.30 AM

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for West Bay]

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

Item No. 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Third Official Member who will be arriving later this morning; I also have apologies from the Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture who is in Cayman Brac on official business.

Moving on to Item No. 3, Government Business, continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on Friday, 18 February 2000. Debate continuing, the Third Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOV-
ERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS, ON FRIDAY, 18
FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. Linford Pierson: Thank you Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, in my contribution yesterday, I made mention of the progress of the Electronic Transactions Bill, E-Commerce Bill, and the possible problems that could be faced in an attempt to introduce Electronic Commerce in the Cayman Islands. I cited as one of the problems the very high cost of doing business on the Internet. I also mentioned that there was an article in the Royal Gazette from Bermuda that stated that Bermuda had the third highest Internet charges in the world, and that was third to Luxembourg and Germany. That article also stated that Bermuda's two Internet companies charged nearly $30 more than the OECD average.

I was also surprised to learn that the Cayman Islands is some 60% higher in telecommunication charges than Bermuda—who is the third highest in the world. That revelation certainly justifies the concerns expressed by me that government would certainly have to take a very close look at this situation if there is any reluctance on the part of Cable & Wireless to reduce their rates to a competitive level.

The information received on Bermuda within the Caribbean region is that Bermuda continues to offer by far the cheapest overseas telecommunication rates compared with its rival offshore jurisdiction in the Caribbean. Let me quickly say, before any confusion is taken on this particular point, that the Internet charges are slightly different from the regular telecommunication charges in regard to telephone, faxes, etc. Nonetheless, this is a matter that is of grave concern to the people of these Islands. While rates have generally fallen in many islands since the last survey carried out in April 1997 by a certain group, the gap between Bermuda and the pack remains huge largely due to the introduction of competition for international calls.

The article also stated that TeleBermuda International offers the cheapest rates in the region. TeleBermuda International is the competitor of Cable & Wireless in Bermuda. A typical bill for a small business that communicates mostly with the United States but also regularly contacts Canada, the United Kingdom, Europe, Asia and Latin America, is about 34% more expensive in the next cheapest island, and the British Virgin Islands, than in Bermuda using the services of TeleBermuda International. Of interest is this area that states that residents of the Cayman Islands who bombarded the Caymanian Compass newspaper last year with letters complaining about overseas rates charged by Cable & Wireless are vindicated by this particular survey. Cayman is the most expensive offshore centre in the region for international telecommunication transmissions during business hours and is generally 60% more expensive than TeleBermuda. Mr. Speaker, that is very, very serious indeed.

Of the twelve offshore centres in the Bermuda-Caribbean region that were featured in the survey, Cable & Wireless has a monopolistic joint partnership in every island except Bermuda, the Bahamas, and Dominica. It also says that although the introduction of competition in Bermuda over the last two years has pushed down overseas rates, Cable & Wireless has also reduced rates in islands where there is no competition as they have responded to a growing tide of resentment over their high rates. The 60% margin between business rates in Bermuda and the Cayman Islands that currently exists is a marginal improvement on the 62% gap that existed in April 1997. Even at 60% at the present time, it is a slight improvement because in 1997 it was 62%.

Also of concern is that it seems that Cable & Wireless continues to bury its head in the sand when it comes to justifying how they can charge peak rates of US$1.50 per minute to the USA when a call made from the USA to the Cayman Islands costs just 25 cents. I have given that information for the possible intervention of government at some stage if Cable & Wireless is not cooperative and reasonable in the reduction of their rates so that our e-commerce or e-business can get a good start. There is no use having the best legislation in the region or indeed in the world if our rates are so high that we are not competitive, and therefore unable to attract the necessary business to the Cayman Islands.

Cayman Islands' [rates] were higher than the Bahamas, Barbados, Grenada, Turks and Caicos, Dominica, Anguilla, Antigua, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent, British Virgin Islands and of course, Bermuda. We were on the top—the most expensive territory in the region.

While I would be the first to say that Cable & Wireless has provided an excellent service to these Islands, I am also concerned that the rates that they are charging are so high. They have, in the past, shown a lot of co-operation with government and hopefully this will continue. In the past there has been a partnership between Cable & Wireless and government, and long may this partnership remain. But, for this partnership to continue and flourish it must be a partnership that is good for both sides. It cannot be a one-sided partnership.

Also of interest on the introduction of e-commerce in the Cayman Islands is the fact that most of our competitors, the Bahamas, British Virgin Islands, Turks and Caicos, Anguilla, and other areas are simultaneously introducing e-commerce legislation in their countries. Bahamas' Minister of Finance, William Allen, has said that he is hoping that a final draft of the Islands' E-Commerce Law will be finished by the end of this month. Hopefully, we will be in a position to introduce our e-commerce legislation to this House during this meeting.

In the British Virgin Islands, the government has spent a huge amount of money advertising their territory as an e-commerce centre. They realise, as we do in the Cayman Islands, that electronic commerce, electronic business, is the wave of the future and will indeed become the third leg of our economy and fill an important role in their economy. I trust that when that legislation comes to this honourable House it will indeed receive the full support of all honourable members.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had reached the point of discussing certain subjects under the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development. I had spoken on the subject of the OECD, the European Union, and the G7 Financial Action Task Force United Nations Initiatives as they apply and may affect the Cayman Islands. While I sounded an optimistic note yesterday, I would not wish to give the impression that there is still not much to be done, because there is still a lot of work and negotiation to be done.

But Mr. Speaker, what has the government done? What have past governments done to provide a healthy position for the unforeseen, for the proverbial rainy day or for the time that we may have to dig into our reserves? Where is the long awaited Economic Development Plan?

I remember years ago (under a previous government) that a Five-Year Economic Development Plan was introduced. And we have heard that under government's Financial Reforms, that a similar plan would be reintroduced. We have also heard that the Medium Term Financial Strategy would be laid on the Table of this honourable House. We have been hearing that almost every meeting for the past two to three years—or longer.

To date, we have not had a Medium Term Financial Strategy laid on the Table of this House. We have also been told that the Public Sector Investment Programme, which will determine the level of capital expenditure that is affordable within the parameters of the Medium Term Financial Strategy, would also have been laid on the Table. To date, there has been no sign of this most important policy.

Mr. Speaker, it asks the question, How can this government (or any other government) properly operate without some guidelines? I am not here to point fingers or to cast blame, because I realise that this subject is one that falls under the Finance and Economic Development Ministry. I also recognise that the person that heads that is doing a good job for this country. Be that as it may, if we are to develop as a sound financial destination and continue in a well-structured manner, then these Plans should be put on the top of our priority list.

The Hansards of this honourable House will also show that on many occasions I have called for the expansion of the revenue base of these islands. I have done that against the background of the increasing cost that is being borne by the people of these islands. Every Budget we find that government has no choice but to add a little bit here, a little bit there, on our already very high consumption tax base. I am not suggesting that we should move away from the consumption taxes. What I am suggesting is that what has been good for us for the past 30 – 40 years might not now be adequate. It is time that we move away from a little bit on diesel, a little bit on garbage fees and so on and so forth.

I have been told that before a think tank can be established we need to have a study done to determine the baseline information. Mr. Speaker, I do not have a problem with that. What I do have a problem with is that I have been told this on several occasions over the past two to three years. I have to ask when will this information be made available to this honourable House? When will a think tank be established for these Islands?

Let me just briefly explain what a think tank will do, and show that it is not necessary to spend a long time doing any sort of baseline studies before that think tank is made operational. Baseline study is a comprehensive study that will determine basically what the Medium Term Financial Strategy and the Public Sector Investment Programme should determine because such a study will determine the amount of revenue required to finance or service the amount of capital and recurrent expenditure that is required.

What a think tank would do for this country is provide a number of options to the Finance Department and to the Financial Secretary in particular, for such a committee to run in the best possible manner. It would require input from some of the best financial brains we have in the country. Mr. Speaker, there are a lot people out there that are very bright and who could assist on such a committee. Together with input from the private sector and government, recommendations would be forthcoming from such a think tank and the government would be in a much better position to look at these recommendations and to have a list of options to deal with.

From these recommendations the Finance Department can then take their suggestions to the Executive Council then on to the Legislative Assembly for discussion.

Mr. Speaker, I find that the Finance Department in this respect is somewhat derelict in its duties. Unfortunately the Hon Third Official Member, the Financial Secretary, is not present. I wish he was here to hear what I had to say, but I will certainly let him know what I said when he arrives later this morning. He and I have a very good relationship and he knows that my remarks are not intended to be personal. I am dealing with the policies as I see them, and I have always tried to discuss and debate issues and stay away from personal attacks.

When I speak about a need for a think tank and the urgent needs for expanding the financial base of this country, I do it from the point of view of focussing on an issue that is of national importance. This is not just an issue that is personal to the Finance Department; this is an issue that concerns the whole country.

I would have also thought that this responsibility (because it is a national issue) should be focussed on by the Elected Members of the Executive Council. If the official side under the leadership of the Third Official Member is not forthcoming with appropriate financial policies, then it is a responsibility of the electorate, the elected Members of Executive Council, to see that this is done because they form the majority on Executive Council. Regardless of which Executive Council is there, it is not just this one, because this situation has been going on now for the past 20 – 30 years. So, it has been successive Executive Councils, yet they sit back—I am sure that my good friend doesn't want me to respond—but they sit back and they leave it to the Third Official Member, the Hon Financial Secretary. What they don't realise is that it is the Elected Members that are being held responsible for the running of the country.

Mr. Speaker, if I am ever fortunate to ever sit on that side of the House again as an elected Minister, it will be one of my first duties to see that a think tank is set up that can advise not only the Financial Secretary and Hon Third Official Member, but also the Elected Members of Executive Council.

For the past eight years, these islands have seen the good times. That has been mainly due to the very robust economy in the United States, not—and I stress not—as a result of any financial policies that have been put in place by any government. When we look at the pitiful state of our general reserves, we have to ask what do we have to show for it. Oh, I know that there are some Elected Members of Executive Council who will quickly say we have put it in the Pensions Fund. For those people that may say that, may I remind them that contribution to the Pensions Fund is a legal and statutory responsibility and has nothing to do with the responsibility for funding the general reserves.

The major difference is that if it was necessary to have funds taken from the general reserves (that that can be done fairly easily), but that Executive Council is prohibited from taking out any money from the Pensions Fund. So, that is not readily available to this country.

What is also of concern is that when we look at the total amount of general reserves it is perhaps only sufficient to carry this country for two weeks. What will happen if we had some serious disaster such as a serious hurricane or other type of disaster that hit this country? When we look at the reserves that are held by places like the Turks and Caicos Islands, the British Virgin Islands and other places, it makes us look . . . we should be ashamed! And it makes us look pretty pitiful.

I am not saying this for any political posturing because it is an election year. I have been saying this for a long time. We need to have a very strict policy that we will bring the general reserves up to a reasonable standard and also that the Public Service Pension Fund is brought up to the actuarial standard recommended. It might mean that certain capital expenditures might have to be delayed, but we need to get our priorities right. We cannot be all things to all men, we have to do what is in the best interest of these Islands.

Mr. Speaker, in the Governor's Throne Speech under the same Ministry, under Economics and Statistics Office, he stated that focus of the Economics and Statistics Office work this year will be the compilation and publication of data from the census or population and housing which was undertaken on the 10th of October last year. I wonder if that office is in a position to provide the result of the population census? And, if they are in a position to do that, how reliable would that information be?

For quite some time now I have been waiting in this honourable House to receive information on questions that I had asked about that department or unit. I am not satisfied that that unit could not be doing much more within the Finance and Economic Development Ministry. I am not satisfied that that unit should not also be heading up the think tank and also be providing valuable input into the Medium Term Financial Strategy and the Public Sector Investment Programme.

One of the questions that has been long pending and was asked in the November meeting of this House was, "What percentage of the 1999 Population and Housing Census Forms have been returned, and how many of those returned have been properly completed?" The reason for that question is that most people that I spoke to found those forms very complicated. I believe that if a more simplified form had been distributed that the information received would be much more reliable. I cannot see how any reasonable reliance can be placed on that information without a very high percentage of those forms being properly completed.

I also asked in a previous question (and it could have been a second part to the same question), "What are the most recent figures on the Gross Domestic Product (GDP)?" Mr. Speaker, to date, I have not been given that information.

My concern is if the Economic and Statistic Office is not in a position to provide me with details on the GDP of this country, then how can they provide information on the per capita income in these islands? How can they provide this information if they do not have the basic details required for this information? I also asked them "What percentage of the Gross Domestic Product is regarded as transient?" How much of our money that is made here is being banked overseas? That information should be readily available.

Unless we have this information, when we go abroad and we give information on the per capita income of the Cayman Islands or the GDP of the Cayman Islands, unless we have information to base this on, then the best we are doing is providing guestimates for a country that prides itself as being one of the best regulated financial centres in the world and indeed the fifth largest financial centre in the world. I have to ask, why is it so difficult for members like me to obtain that type of information when it is put down on the Business Paper of this House? If other information based on that data can be provided, then why cannot the data itself be given in this honourable House?

Mr. Speaker, lest I be misunderstood, again let me make it very clear that what I am saying is no direct personal attack on any member of the civil service or of the general public at large. I am more concerned with the well running of this country. My interest is the national interest of this country.

I now move to the Ministry of Agriculture, Communication, Environment and Natural Resources. I noticed that it is hoped to establish a new telecommunications authority. As I said yesterday, whether my suggestion is made under this Ministry or the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs under the Chief Secretary, I feel that the subject of telecommunications, e-commerce or e-business, and information technology should be placed under one ministry because they are so closely interrelated.

On the question of the Agricultural and Industrial Development Board, and the Housing Development corporation the Governor said in his Throne Speech, "As evidence of the Government's commitment to being more proactive in dealing with housing issues, CI$1 million was voted for the creation of a housing fund at the last meeting of this Legislative Assembly. Guidelines for the use of this housing fund are expected to be released by the Ministry in the near future." I would have hoped that the guidelines would have been released during a meeting of this House. I trust that the honourable minister will attempt to table those guidelines so the people of this country can benefit from this $1 million that has been provided by this honourable House. There is no use in Finance Committee providing funds for our people if it is not going to be made available to them.

Many times we hear criticism levelled at departments. I am pleased to be able to congratulate the Postmistress General for the wonderful job she is doing within our postal system. I trust that she will continue to do the wonderful job she is doing. As minister responsible for the post office at one stage, I believe I made a contribution in that area. It is certainly gratifying to see that improvements are continuing to be made.

I now turn my attention to the Ministry of Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works. In so doing, may I take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on the work he is doing with the roads in particular, and to say that I am happy that he is taking the Master Ground Transportation Plan (MGTP) in stages. I am happy that even though the Master Ground Transportation Plan took this long to be implemented, that it is in fact being implemented in stages by the Public Works Department and through that ministry, even though it may be called by another name.

If one examines the MGTP that was rejected by members of the present government, one will see that many of the improvements being made to the roads—at a much higher cost—are the same improvements recommended in that plan. If one looks at the Harquail Bypass, the Crewe Road Bypass, and on a lot of other road works, you will see the Master Ground Transportation Plan written all over it.

It is unfortunate sometimes that such precipitous actions are taken in the name of politics. If at that time the Master Ground Transportation Plan had only been accepted within the composite maps, if the corridors had been kept, the cost today would have been much less to this country. But just to make the former incumbent look bad, members decided to scuttle that plan. I consider that a most irresponsible action for any group or representative to have taken.

No one can say they did not have the opportunity to take that plan in stages. The excuse given at the time was that it was going to cost the country too much because the plan called for all the work to be done within a short time frame. That is not correct, Mr. Speaker. If it was the intention to keep this road plan in place, these corridors, that could have been done even if it was decided to delay the building of certain roads. There is no excuse for that irresponsible action taken at the time. As a result, the country is suffering today.

I share the view that it could cost tremendously more—some people think up to ten times more—than it would have cost the country at that stage. What has happened is that certain buildings have now been built where those corridors should have been. A case in point is down by the Hyatt and other areas. To try to put a proper road system in place now is going to cost the country much more.

The answer some time back was to put a three-lane road on West Bay Road. We are very lucky that we have not had more accidents on that road. We have to thank the good sense of our motorists. I can understand the confusion on the minds of tourists when we have one lane going down, two coming up . . . it takes a lot of concentration not to make a mistake with that kind of system.

But, as I said, I do congratulate the honourable minister who now heads this for the amount of work that has been done in the past year or two. I cannot fully blame him, because when I brought the Master Ground Transportation Plan back in 1989 I think he was then the Financial Secretary. I believe he supported it under collective responsibility. So, it's understandable since he, under collective responsibility, supported it back then that he is now using it. He knows it's a good plan!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: While I am making some very favourable comments, I would like to include the Director of Tourism.

I noticed recently in the Caymanian Compass that not only does she have the distinction of being the first woman in that type of a position in the Caribbean, but she also has been awarded with a very high honour and recognised within the region. That says a lot for the women in this country.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: If we look inside this House we see a lot of capable women. We also have a lot of capable women on the outside. They just need to be given the opportunity.

We now have a woman on Executive Council. And I believe that if there was a change of government tomorrow that we will have another women on Executive Council. Even in this House, the Deputy Speaker is a woman. And she does a great job when she sits in that Chair.

But my sincere congratulations to the Director of Tourism. I trust that she will continue to do a good job.

The next area that I wish to speak on is headed by a minister who I feel has done a tremendous job during the time he has been there. That is none other than the Minister responsible for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. I think that the greatest compliment I could pay him is when I said to him yesterday that I wished somehow if the future will smile on me that I would have the opportunity to work more closely with him. I find him to be a very dedicated individual. He's done a great job.

I am hoping that the projects that are now pending in Breakers, including a halfway house facility, will become a reality within the not-too-distant future because those facilities are badly needed. I am concerned though, that there seems to be a fragmentation of individuals trying to accomplish the same type of service and facility. I hear of a YWCA, a YMCA and other facilities being built. I hope that while these facilities are good and needed, that individuals so interested will coordinate their efforts with the ministry responsible for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

The whole question of drug abuse is a very serious issue in these islands. It respects no family. The very best families can be caught by the scourge. I didn't realise that the time was flying so fast, because this is one Throne Speech that I found so interesting.

Again, I must congratulate the Governor because it was his first Throne Speech in this House. I know that some Throne Speeches delivered here were not even debated. This one is receiving a lot of attention. Because I only have seven minutes left, I will have to skip some of the things I wanted to speak on. But one thing I want to speak on very quickly is that I want to congratulate the Health Services Department for considering the construction of an inpatient mental health and geriatric facility. I think that is so much needed in these islands.

I won't be able to comment in the detail I wanted to because of the time constraints, but I want to congratulate the minister for moving this ahead.

On the social welfare, the community welfare and the youth that I wish to speak on, may I also congratulate the honourable minister for moving those issues ahead.

I think this is a golden opportunity for me to say to my fellowmen, to my constituents and the country, that, yes, by the help of God it is my intention to stand for election in November. Further, I am happy to say that the First Elected Member for George Town, Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts, and I have decided that we will be running together on the same ticket again. We have not yet decided about expanding that ticket. But that is not to say that if the right individual comes along (and I say "individual" because it is our intention to have a ticket of three) . . . but that's only in the preliminary stages. I have to discuss that with my good colleague.

It is our intention not to go beyond that. But I don't want to keep the general public guessing as to my intention. I have always tried to be an open book—what you see is what you get. We will soon be getting together, that is, the First Elected Member for George Town and I, and preparing a manifesto we feel will take into account the needs of this country and our people. We will also be looking at the question of the needed leadership in this country that I spoke on in this honourable House. We will best decide how to approach that problem of the perceived lack of leadership in the country.

We will attempt to be as honest as possible because we believe that is the only way to go—being honest with our people. During my debate, I have concentrated my efforts on highlighting some of the problems within the social and economic strata of the whole structure of these islands. I trust that as we look forward we will try to pull ourselves away from hearing the old saying 'that is the way things have been done.'

I remember when I first came back as a qualified accountant that was the first thing I was told by certain individuals, "This is the way it has been done." And a lot of people were reluctant to make any changes. But we are now going through a transition from the industrial age to the information technology age. We are now in a new millennium, we are now in the year 2000. We have to have a forward-looking approach.

I wish to once again thank His Excellency the Governor for a very enlightening, interesting, and timely Throne Speech. I also thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your graciousness, the latitude and tolerance you have shown in allowing honourable members the type of latitude and opportunity to express their views on this important occasion. And I thank all honourable members for their indulgence. I thank you.

The Speaker: At this time we shall suspend proceedings for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.37 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.03 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The floor is open for debate. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you.

I would like to begin by congratulating His Excellency the Governor on a very good, precise and very important speech from the Throne. It clearly covered the policies that the government ministries and departments will pursue this year. It was a very positive speech, one that was very much in line with the good condition of the economy with the good condition of the country generally. And, despite what may be said from time to time, this country is the best country in the world. And it is only sad when there are those who only look at the negative side and not the positive, who criticise rather than taking a positive approach and provide solutions.

The country has been built by the positive people who have moved forward, looked at whatever problems are there and come up with solutions rather than wasting time griping about them. That's really what the country and every business looks for—solutions and positive approaches to developing the country.

We see that the policies of the government here, as they have been in the past, are positive. I am certain that the longest history of this country where there has been forward, solid, and good development has been specifically in the past five to seven years. In fact, it is unprecedented to have had an upward economic cycle, which has produced continuous upward development of the country and expansion of the economy for such a long period. Normally, we have two to four year economic trends when the country turns downward, and seven years ago the country had hit a record low and we have pulled out of that. And, with God's help we have moved this country forward. There is a lot of positive in this country that I believe members and the public should look at.

If there is anyone who believes that this country is not in good shape, despite whatever criticism may be levelled, then go to some of the other areas of the Caribbean and you will really see what crime is; you will see what serious social problems are; you will see what a failed economy is, and you will really see the type of position that we have to be thankful to God does not prevail in this country. It's always a good reminder in amongst all of the criticism we hear to really look around the Caribbean and take stock. Tell me whether there is any other country out there that's even comparable in a few ways to the Cayman Islands.

That is acknowledged by the continuous good running of the country, by decisions of a medium level and up being taken at a governmental level by eight persons under collective responsibility with the Governor as Chairman, and being taken by people who are responsible, people who understand as ministers and official members the importance of making the right decisions after proper consideration of all of the issues and thus coming up with what is fair, what is reasonable, what is equitable. And what really will keep the business of this country continuing, and believe me it's so easy to lose all of that good business . . . not too many scares are needed within a country for that to disappear. It's also very easy to affect the social harmony in this country. It is so important when we speak, or when people in the public speak, to try to balance those speeches rather than taking small problems and blowing them out of proportion and then trying to gain some sort of mileage as a result. That only hurts the country. We are in here to represent our country and to do what is positive and right for it.

I would like to say that sometimes statements are made that are so wild it's hard to believe they have come from someone who has lived in and has been raised in the Cayman Islands. One of those statements was made by the First Elected Member for George Town, when he said words to the effect that every problem we have in this country can be attached to a problem in the area of education. That, in my view, was one of the wildest statements that could be made, and I must deal with that. Beyond dealing with the areas of criticism, I will basically deal with my ministry, but other areas as well.

There has been talk in relation to the Civil Aviation Authority, and I would like to begin with that one because it is an extremely well run statutory authority, one that provides very few problems, thank the Lord. What has been achieved with the Civil Aviation Authority from 1997 to 1999 (and I will be as brief on this as I can), we look first at the airport operations work in the systems. Major works were undertaken on the second floor of the terminal building to replace the paver type surface with tiles. That has now been completed and the flooring is now of a very good quality.

A new fire alarm system was installed allowing more accurate detection of fires and new screening equipment (that is, the metal detectors) was installed both at the airport in Grand Cayman and at Cayman Brac. We have also installed a closed circuit television system to enhance the security of the premises at the airport and to also assist in detecting and aiding in the detection of breaches of the law and by-laws.

A new revenue parking control system has been installed. I apologise to the public for the period that the old system was out. It really was a problem, and we tried fixing it. Unfortunately that did not work and we ultimately had to replace it. But that is in place now, and it seems to be working okay.

A new computerised energy management system is at present undergoing testing before it will be fully accepted. There has been an expansion of the staff parking facilities (and this should be completed this month) which will double the capacity to approximately 150 vehicles. Included in the expansion is a reconfiguration of the holding and queuing area for taxis and pre-booked transport vehicles that will provide a safer and more efficient loading area. That does get congested at times.

On the security side, the United Kingdom has appointed a regional aviation security advisor to assist the Overseas Territories (UKOT) on aviation security matters. As a result, a new national aviation security programme has been published and implemented. The Civil Aviation Authority has also recruited a former police sergeant that now fills the post of our chief airport security officer. I know that in the early stages the tightening up on the security that has now been introduced at European standards, which exceed in some areas that of North America and the US specifically, did cause some concern or discomfort. I apologise for that period.

We were very happy that the worry over having our equipment and our systems Y2K compliant went off well. We had no failures or problems in that area.

Perhaps the most important aspect of the Civil Aviation Authority was that in 1997 we were audited by the United Kingdom. As a result we were granted a Federal Aviation Authority Category 1 status enabling Cayman Airways to expand its route capacity into the United States. For some time we held the position of being the only Caribbean country that had a Category 1 status, the highest status we can have. That, in itself, speaks well of the good staff, the good systems and the up-to-date equipment that ensures the safety of the air corridors, not just above these islands, but in the near vicinity of these islands.

The Flight Operations Department in 1997 saw the recruitment of a Transport Canada inspector who came into the post of Head of Flight Operations. By early 1998 an in-house flight operations department was fully operational. More recently, we saw the conclusion of a safety oversight audit, which was carried out by the UK surveyors last year (1999). They found and concluded that the department was up to internationally recognised standards, which will ensure that the category 1 status for the Cayman Islands will be renewed.

There were some wild rumours, which either referred to this or to the Air Rights Bilateral Agreement that said there were problems in those areas, which may affect the Cayman Islands. That is not true. There are no problems. And, like I said, we have been audited as recently as late last year.

Our aircraft register for the first time has exceeded 100 registered aircraft since its formation. On air traffic services, three air traffic control personnel were recruited, trained, and licensed as air traffic controllers, one at Owen Roberts and two at Gerrard Smith. Further, automatic weather stations were installed at the tower which provide a secondary means of meteorological information for air controllers.

A communications satellite system was also installed to improve coordination with Jamaica and Cuba, those have the air space through which we fly, and the coordination with them was important. A bird deterrent system was installed to reduce the number of bird strikes, but that continues to be a problem especially in some of the summer months.

Maybe I should interject now that I promised the Third Elected Member for George Town that I would make a statement in relation to an incident that involved Cayman Airways flight 205 and the air traffic control tower at Owen Roberts that caused the plane to circle for about 20 minutes.

I have now had the opportunity to receive first reports from both Cayman Airways Flight Operations and the Director of Civil Aviation Authority on that incident. As promised, I can confirm that the Civil Aviation Authority is investigating what took place when a delayed scheduled Cayman Airways flight circled Owen Roberts Airport because the tower was unmanned at the time.

On Tuesday, 29 February 2000, at approximately 1:20 AM, Cayman Airways flight 205 from Miami arrived overhead Grand Cayman and entered the standard holding pattern after failing to get any response from air traffic control at Owen Roberts International Airport. I have had it confirmed that the Cayman Airways pilot explained to passengers that he was circling while he awaited clearance to land and some 15 minutes later he advised passengers that such clearance had been given. This is in accordance with Cayman Airways policy to keep passengers informed and to prevent alarm.

During the period, the aircraft maintained communication contact with Kingston Air Traffic Control Centre until communication was established with the Grand Cayman Air Traffic Control. Both the Director of Civil Aviation Authority and Cayman Airways have confirmed that at no time was the safety of the flight jeopardised. International standards require commercial air transport to carry enough fuel to reach their intended destination, to hold overhead the destination airport for 45 minutes, proceed to their selected alternative airport and to hold an additional 30 minutes. And I appreciate that some of this has already come out in the Press.

Cayman Airways has confirmed that flight 205 that night had more than the statutory requirement of fuel on board, and had the aircraft failed entirely to establish communication with Owen Roberts, they would have diverted to Montego Bay, Jamaica.

I would like to make two points for clarification: The air traffic control services operated by the Civil Aviation Authority provide air traffic control services throughout the official operating hours of the airport which is from 7:00 am to 9:00 pm. Outside these hours services are provided half an hour before a scheduled arrival and for 15 minutes after departure. I would also like to mention that the Civil Aviation Authority has a contingency plan which kicks into place when an incident which is out of the ordinary, as this one was, occurs. The contingency plan went into effect early on Tuesday morning.

Having said this, and realising the seriousness the Third Elected Member for George Town placed on this, I have had confirmation from the Director of the Civil Aviation Authority (and I so confirm to the member) that this matter is being treated very seriously and an investigation is being carried out. Every effort will be made to ensure that even stricter protocols are put in place to prevent such an occurrence in the future.

Let me say that I am responsible for the Civil Aviation Authority and that department, and I obviously take full responsibility for this. I take it very seriously. I take the points that the member has made and I will ensure that that investigation provides what is necessary for this not to happen again in the future. Hopefully it will not.

Moving on with that department, in Cayman Brac wiring and regulators for runway lights have been installed to replace the old wire and improve lighting capabilities. A voice switch air traffic control voice recorder and new emergency communication lines were installed in the Cayman Brac tower.

On the runway in Grand Cayman the turning bays on both ends of the runway were expanded, to facilitate the movement of wide bodied aircraft. We have seen British Airways 777s in operation now for some time. They have also placed additional approach and runway end indicator lights. Runway and taxiway markers and signs that had deteriorated were also replaced.

On the administration side, we have seen an upgrading of the accounting system, which has provided for improved accounting, more complete audit trails, improved reporting and improved collection of receivables. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Civil Aviation Authority who put in long hours dealing with serious matters. I thank each and every one of them. I also thank the members of the air traffic licensing authority whom, while they sit somewhat less than the Civil Aviation Authority, also carry heavy responsibilities. I also thank the Director of Civil Aviation Authority and his staff at the airport and the tower for their work throughout the year.

I guess like any staff, as we have seen with the recent incident . . . there will be some scope of human error from time to time. But if that is dealt with properly, backup systems should—as it did in this instance—go into place. It did work, and it did work within a short period of time.

I would now like to begin with another department. The Planning Department has, by anyone's standards, moved to where it is now a very efficient department, one that is well run, has substantially gotten rid of the vast bureaucracy that once shrouded it. It is a department that deals with a very important area of this country's development and, in fact, will be going on to deal with an even more important area which I will touch on at a later stage, the growth management of this country.

As far as transparency goes, and we have heard a lot about this, the Central Planning Authority meets with objectors. Theirs is probably the only statutory authority that actually hears every objector who wishes to be heard in person and makes available for scrutiny any records relating to the approvals and refusals that it deals with. There has been a continuous increase annually over the last four years with the number of applications for development in all sectors. That is in line with the fact that the economy has been good. People have been able to build more houses. There's been more commercial development. But it's all been within a development plan, which I think the Lord was able to be amended two years ago after nearly 20 years of being in force.

The department has now reached a stage where over the last four years we have processed a total of 4,066 development approvals with a total value of over $1.2 billion. The Planning Department has worked continuously not only to process the increasing workload, but to also improve the level of customer service the applicants receive.

Respondents to the customer service questionnaire (transparency, once again) which was conducted in 1997 indicated that the time to process routine matters such as single family homes, and final certificates of occupancy was too long and costly to the applicants. In direct response to that public input, the department in consultation with the ministry received permission for the delegation of approval authority for routine matters and final certificates to the director of planning. This move reduced the processing times for some of these applications for up to seven weeks.

It's one instance where as a minister one has to trust one's staff. And where delegation can be done as in this case which assists the public, it should be done. Going along with that is the fact that if there is an error by staff, that is my responsibility. I take, as I have just done, that responsibility seriously.

The delegation of approval of the authority was recognised as a significant approval in the customer service by the inaugural Governor Owens Awards. The department in conjunction with the ministry has committed to continually reviewing the way it does business with the focus on improving the level of customer service its clients receive. These continued efforts have met with very good feedback from persons who are applying for planning approval or for final certificates of occupancy and other matters at the department.

The department has also sent officers for training and further education because this is very important. As an example, we have seen a clerical officer from Cayman Brac who is pursuing her undergraduate degree in planning, while the assistant director of long range planning has nearly completed his executive masters of business. Two additional members of staff are also expected to go on study later on this year.

The department has received a connection to the land information system, allowing the department to produce its own maps in house. This has been a tremendous help to the department and also to the public, both in terms of time and cost, and especially where it had been necessary in the past to deal with plans manually.

The planning department has also introduced a building permit system furthering the departments role in ensuring that development meets basic life safety standards. As you know, we also introduced for the first time the building code (which is the Southern Building Code of the United States), and under that we have in relation to training in several areas we now use the examinations system from the United States.

Also, the Planning Authority annually attends seminars in the United States relating to the Southern Building Code and this has been a tremendous help to those members. Undoubtedly the most important aspect of these four years in relation to planning has been the unanimous passing of the Development Plan 1997 by this House, in November of that year. That is something that took 20 years to do. I know how difficult and politically dangerous a development plan is. That's why it had not been achieved over the 20 years prior to 1997. The first plan was in 1977, of which (I guess I am getting a bit ancient here) I had a direct hand in the middle of an emergency situation in assisting with putting it together and the drafting of it . . . I must say that it stood the test of time, but was very much out of date.

I have tried to do a review of that plan, as I undertook to this honourable House and the public. And that is now in process where it will be going to the Planning Tribunal for hearings on matters other than the area relating to the wetlands which, as you know, has been in controversy and is now subject to an appeal.

It is so important that the National Trust as well as the landowners in those areas attempt to get together and find a resolution to this problem. There is already some protection on that land, but on the one hand, while I understand the view of the National Trust protecting as much land as possible for future generations, and I fully support that principle, I also support the principle that you must not take a man's land except in rare instances. And if you do, you must fully compensate the owner of the land in accordance with the law.

I believe that there is a solution to every problem. Some take longer than others. With the original development plan it took 20 years. But, thank the Lord, we do have a development plan for these islands, which is updated. I hope that some midway compromise can be reached so that land which owners wish to sell and which the Trust wishes to preserve could reach a stage where that could be achieved by both sides. I will do everything that I can. I have met with both the Trust and landowners. I know that other members of this House have as well. We can assist up to a certain point but the duty really lies on the parties to try to reach a compromise. Life is not perfect. We all face times when to achieve something we have to give and take a bit.

In 1977 (and I think you know the history of this as good as anyone else, Mr. Speaker) the plans for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman were not dealt with. There were several reasons for that at the time. Up until this time there still is no development plan for those two islands. I did try. The process for development plans is that the Central Planning Authority Development Control Board, the department, will prepare plans which are not just physical maps but also have written guidelines and regulations.

We did these following the democratic process . . . in fact going a bit beyond what is required by the law, having meetings with the public in the two islands and then they were released to the public in January of this year. Opposition to those plans has been received and I hope that we can find some way on a compromise basis that we could get in even a part of those plans.

I understand that the one in Little Cayman follows fairly closely a plan that had been prepared by my friend the Third Elected Member for George Town back about nine or ten years ago. It follows extremely closely to that. It was one that I hoped we could perhaps amend in some way to satisfy the public. However, at the end of the day, my duty is to be politically bold enough to prepare plans or have them prepared, and get them out to the public. It's up to the public whether or not they wish to have them. I will abide by the public's wish.

I do believe that it is important to the future of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman that we have some type of plans in place so the development of those two islands can be done in an orderly way to the advantage of the public. The only way to guarantee that is to have some sort of guidelines or plans that are acceptable to the public in relation to the physical land development.

We have seen also considerable improvement in the electrical inspection department with amendments to the regulations. In fact, I think we also amended the law sometime back. The level of service in the building inspection department has been increased. We have had the addition of a second planner and we have had cross training of the planning officers in the building inspection department. We work continuously to improve the level of service offered here as well as in Cayman Brac.

We also have had the recent addition of a clerical officer in Cayman Brac, which I understand is now fully staffed. We are expecting to see a continuation of the increase in the level of customer service.

The Chairman and members of the Central Planning Authority . . . and, by the way, many of them have been on that board since three governments ago. Many of them went on there well before this government came in. I believe that continuity is important with my boards, including the Education Council. There are members on that who have been there for 18 years some of them. New ones have come in after, but I believe that experience in continuity does have the advantage of strengthening the board. I know if you want to look at it negatively there is a saying that maybe they should be rolled over often. But if you have good people why roll them over? That goes to any type of rollover we may be talking about.

I would like to thank each and every one of the members of the Central Planning Authority and also the Cayman Brac Development Control Board for their hard work, their dedication and for especially dealing with the development plans. This has taken a lot of extra work and they have had to do this unpaid while also dealing with their own areas of work in the community and in their own businesses.

I believe that the improvements to the Planning Department here and in Cayman Brac have been a vital part of the success of this country. Unless there is planned development, it is not possible to deal with projections over any period of years. But I am happy to say that not only have we done the development plan here, which should last or will last by law at least five years. We have also seen that there has been a serious reduction in bureaucracy. Bureaucracy is something that I have no time for. I have so little time in life that I quite frankly don't really have time to waste when it shouldn't be wasted.

We have seen the increase in speed in which approvals have been done. But we have also seen a considerable increase in the efficiency of those departments. While they are not perfect, basically 90% of the feedback I have had on the department here and also the Brac only more recently got staffed, but here it has always been good. In fact, I think there has been a further award by the Rotary to someone in Planning.

They are efficient. I must thank our Director of Planning very much, an extremely efficient gentleman, very courteous, smaller than I am physically, and that is saying something, I guess! But really, he along with his good staff has shown the government how to effectively take a department that was probably spending 80 or 90 days to deal with planning approval generally, cutting that down well beyond the half. It takes about three weeks for statutory objections. But to also take on the direct responsibility himself of dealing with minor approvals, but which are important to the public, house plans, dishes, storage buildings, which has helped considerably.

The department has also increased its revenue considerably. I know that we helped them on that by increasing some things. But it is now in my opinion in extremely good shape. I spent about a year where I could not figure out why it took so long not just on planning approval but on appeals. Appeals were running seven to nine months before they were coming up for hearing. I tried, and I tried, and it was difficult just probing to find out where the problem was. Ultimately, we were able to bring in (and it was first introduced into the planning appeals by a student during the summer) a tracking system. That system showed me where, when, and with whom the problem arose. If you cannot find out what the problem is, you cannot fix it.

I wonder if I may break here, sir. I see it is a bit after 1.00.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1.03 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.36 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The other area on planning that I would like to finish on relates to how to efficiently manage and run a department.

When planning came to me a few years ago (maybe three years ago) the delays in the appeals were probably running about nine months and probably 90 to 100 days in planning applications. During a summer, a student in a very short period on a PC set up a review tracking report. I would like to show what has developed from that at the Central Planning Authority.

This report has one line only for each application. It first has a column for the application number, a column for the file number, the block and parcel, the name of the applicant, the date the application was received, the development type, the value of the application, the assigned planner, the department contacted, the date the memorandum is issued, the date comments were received, the date the planner made recommendations for the CPA, the date of the CPA meeting, or administrative approval, the CPA meeting number or administrative approval, the decision of the CPA, the date the letter is sent, and the remarks. At any one time it is possible to take this tracking report and see exactly where it is being held up, or where the problem is.

The effectiveness of this was seen in the appeals. When I produced this the first month, I sent it across and I saw where the problem was. And the next few weeks I did the same thing. At that stage both the person who was the delay in that could see it was that person, and the person delaying it knew that I knew, and knew that the Director of Planning knew. The Chairman of the Board knew where the delay was, and after about two months the time on the appeals slowly started coming down. It dropped to about four or five months and kept dropping each time I sent one of these in until finally it got down to where it was somewhere within the law and maybe everything would be prepared and into the appellate body within about one month.

The effectiveness of this (and sometimes people regard this as too simple) . . . but unless there is an effective review tracking report to tell you where the problem is, or who is causing the delay you can never correct it. This is why if someone knows that their boss knows that they are not doing their job then something results from that—either that person comes and says he needs more staff, or training, and then the duty of the department is to assist that person in ensuring that he or she reaches the required standard.

This is something that I didn't invent and it is not just used in planning. It exists in private business. But if this were put into other areas where there are delays, whether that be in areas such as applications coming in for immigration or other areas such as applications being made to a statutory authority for specific purposes it is very easy to look at this and you can tell where the inefficiency in the department is.

I hate to stress this again, but too often people who are in charge of departments sometimes do not know exactly where the problem is. This type of document shows where the problem is. If you don't know the specific problem, you can't correct it. The first goal is to find the problem; the second goal is to correct it. I am happy to say that I normally get them monthly and I go through them. At any time the director or someone in the planning department can pick this up or go into the computer and get records of this, which would then be up to date.

Talk arose about the pensions and the pension fund. That was dealt with in some depth last year in the budget. I would like to stress again that this government has been the only government that has dealt effectively and honestly with the pensioners of this country. We have increased the pension fund from seven years ago when we came into office from about $7 million, which at the end of this year will be up to $76 million—an increase of $70 million. That's made up of money put in by government for present staff, the percentage that the staff also put in, the percentage for past pensions.

What's so interesting about this . . . and, by the way the honourable Attorney General clearly ruled legally that there was no statutory duty to fund past pensions. So let's understand clearly that this is the government doing this without a statutory duty in relation to past pensions.

At the end of last year, we were told that the fund was making an 18% return, which would be in the area of $11 million or $12 million per annum. The cost of funding past pensions and current pensions is under $6 million. So the fund at present can pay for present and past pensions and accumulate an extra $6 million. Therefore, it has come to a really fantastic stage.

Now, a review has to be done to calculate what, over a given period of time, needs to be put into the fund, and over what period will it then become fully funded. It's also important to note that nothing is coming out of this fund. The full fund remains because the government from its recurrent revenue is paying for past and present pensions. So, what is happening is that the fund is increasing in any event, substantially nothing is coming out of it. I am sure that no other country in the world has a pension fund that has been funded so rapidly.

Something was said that this could have been put in to the general reserve. Of course, we could have put it in the general reserve. But, you know, at the end of the day if you owe, say, $50 million for pensions, and you put the $50 million into general reserve, it's six of one, and half a dozen of the other. If you need that $50 million for pensions, you are going to have to take it back out of the reserve anyhow. What had happened in the past—until this government came in seven years ago—was that the liability to pensioners was substantially ignored. There was no money in the pension fund.

The overall position must be looked at. While the general reserve is not what it should be, and I will be the first to admit that, it would have been shortsighted of us to put, say $30 million inside of the general reserve. But then the pension fund would have been less that amount. At the end of the day, it's all money, regardless of which fund it is in. I think it is a fantastic achievement for a government to have taken and sacrificed in many other areas where we could have gotten political mileage. This money didn't even need to go into the general reserve. It could have been spent—as past governments did—on capital or recurrent expenditure, whatever. But we chose not to do that.

I know that future government will thank this government for what it has done because at the end of the day some government will have to fund this pension fund. I ask the public to look at the prudence that has gone into this, to realise that in seven years getting an increase from $6 million to $76 million—$70 million increase in seven years! And with income coming in that is twice the amount necessary for present and past pensions. In other words, the fund at present is self-sustaining on past and present pensions at this time.

Obviously, to begin taking more than the excess income of $6 million out at some stage would obviously require further funding. But, presently, the government is in a good enough position to pay for past and present pensions of $6 million directly from the budget.

One member talked about the type of person that should run for office. I think he said words to the effect that if a person can't run their own business then why trust them to run the biggest business in the Cayman Islands, the 300-and-odd-million dollar business of government. That's quite right. Talk is cheap. It is quite easy for anyone to stand here and criticise what any government does. But where are the solutions? The bottom line is where are the solutions. Believe me, people who can't run a little business . . . you have to be naive to let them run a big business.

So I agree with that speaker from the backbench that it is so important, especially with this upcoming election that the public look carefully at the ability of people to actually do things and produce solutions. Anyone can criticise, but it takes a capable experienced person to produce solutions and effectively run a big business, and government is an extremely large and complex business.

As that member mentioned, the voters should ask themselves 'if I am going to vote for that person to run this country would I put him in to run my business?' If the answer to that is no, then I can assure you that you better say no to putting him in to run the country. If the end of the day, if the country is run into the ground, then your business is going to be run into the ground along with it.

Like everything else, experience in running government can only be gained to a large extent in government. So, I agree that it is so important to look at what has positively been done. Remember that you don't run a business on negative approaches. Anyone can criticise. Anyone can spend money. But it takes someone with ability to make the money and come up with solutions to problems. I can clearly say that literally all of the solutions in this country over the past seven years, and the positive approach to things has come from this government.

As the saying goes, talk is cheap. And a minister told me many years ago "I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day. I would rather one should walk with me than merely show the way." Talk is cheap! Positive actions are what are necessary to run the country, and what have gotten this country to the good position it is now in.

By that, I don't mean there should be no criticism. What I am saying is that if someone says this is no good, then if they don't have a solution they are not helping to build the country, they are helping to tear it down. This is still the best little country in the world. Those who don't appreciate that, and don't appreciate the great distance we have travelled in such a short time, then they can't recognise the past. They have no way of trying to guide the country into the future.

There was considerable criticism in relation to the group that went to Washington not getting out a press release before we left. For that I am sorry. But I think this has to be put in the proper context. Since the middle of November, we have been in this honourable House continuously. The day we are off on Tuesdays, the government has Executive Council. I'd ask anyone out there running a business to put themselves in the official and elected ministers' position where you are out of your office every day for about four months. Tell me how much you can get done. What is happening is that the business of government is being hurt because the eight official and elected ministers cannot get to do their work because they are inside of this Legislative Assembly.

I leave here and go out . . . I was in the middle of trying to deal with Cayman Airways or Planning, members in this House, and this is especially true of The First Elected Member for West Bay, who, by the way isn't here today. But I don't get up every half-hour and say the member isn't here. Every time a minister goes out to see someone or do some business, people are jumping up saying the minister is out. We have to carry out the business of the country.

In this case of the Washington trip, we finished this legislature late on Friday. I spent just about all of Saturday, when GIS or government does not work, trying to deal with preparing for the Washington trip. We went off on Sunday. Got into Washington, went into very serious and high level talks. To be frank, I didn't remember it. These things are going to happen. But what we should not let happen, and this is what helped to destroy the eastern Caribbean countries, is to be tied inside this honourable House month after month. I believe we sit more than the Parliaments of Canada or the United Kingdom—big countries, which have 600 or 700 MPs and where they rotate with 60 or 80 in at a time.

What happened to the eastern Caribbean countries 15 years ago is that the government was so handicapped by not being able to do the business of government that the country suffered, which means the people suffer. There is no way that ministers . . . and, Mr. Speaker, I walk around with two of the biggest briefcases anyone has ever seen. I carry them home every night. I work on weekends. I work before I come here. I work after I come here. I work inside here. But the ministerial position is a full time job. And it cannot be done by taking several months out at a time. Something must suffer. In this case, it was something relating to the press.

Now, I hope the press will have a bit of sympathy. If they were out of their office for four months, I wonder how many press releases would not get out. What I am saying is that we are doing as much as we can. But we have to be careful, this is the fourth month, that what happened in the eastern Caribbean . . . and I am not saying that anybody is intentionally doing this, where the government ground to a halt because all of the time was spent in the parliament and they could not do their jobs.

So, I am sorry that we forgot to deal with this, or we were not able to do a lot of things. We got a bit of criticism because it was nearly a week after we got back that we could get a report out. But when I came back, I came back to problems. Before I even got back, I had to try to deal from Washington with problems I had in areas of my ministry, Cayman Airways and other areas. You can do just so much as one person, and no more.

Really, that's all I am saying. I don't need sympathy because I work all the time as much as I can. I am just saying that there has to be some understanding of reality. If we are going to spend our time in here we can't spend it in governments doing things.

If someone calls for me, I am not there. Many times I make the call the next day. I always return all the calls, but sometimes there are delays, like this lunch period when I normally would have made a lot of calls, I had to prepare for this because I was doing other work. This is one of the things that we find.

I will talk about the OECD, FATF, EU, G7 and those at a later stage.

Education: I have no doubt that the education system in this country can be put up against the education system in any large country. The parents out there recognise it, regardless of who else does. The education system of this country is good. The proof of that . . . and, Mr. Speaker, I get so tired of hearing about transparency, and I am going to deal with that. Those who preach it don't do it, and I am going to show that.

We have sat inside of that committee room (and I have to look up the Standing Order), where we can hold it in public. And every member of this House, rather than being transparent and holding it in the public, sits inside of there with the power and deals with it. I get so tired of hearing about it. I better develop that at a later stage when I look up that Standing Order, because transparency . . . and this comes back to the point I am making, that talk is cheap. Charity begins at home.

The Finance Committee of this country became public because of a motion that I put some years ago. But every member of this House, including the backbench with a majority in many of those select committees, sits in secret. Transparency? Nobody thinks about that. Now I am hit about transparency with education or other areas, because it is continuously levelled.

What has been accomplished in education? I am going to be brief, and keep this in nearly a note form for brevity. From 1996 to 1999, on facilities, the following projects have been completed:

- ♦ Construction of a teachers' centre in Cayman Brac

- ◆ Construction of a staff room, Principal's office and one classroom at West End Primary School
- ◆ Construction of a 2 classroom blocks at Creek Primary School
- ◆ Construction of a School Hall/Hurricane Shelter at John A. Cumber Primary School
- ◆ Construction of a Library, staff room and administration suite John A. Cumber
- ◆ Construction of a 4 classroom block at George Town Primary
- ◆ Construction of an administration block Red Bay Primary School
- ◆ Construction of 2 additional classrooms at Red Bay Primary School
- ◆ Creation of school athletic field at Red Bay Primary School
- ◆ Construction of a 4 classroom block at Savannah Primary
- ◆ Construction of a bus shelter at Bodden Town Primary School
- ◆ Construction of a 2 classroom block at East End Primary School
- ◆ Construction of exterior wall and parking lot at North Side Primary School
- ◆ Construction of a 3 room art block at George Hicks High School
- ◆ Construction of new changing facility for PE at George Hicks High School
- ◆ Purpose build kitchen at George Hicks High School (should be completed this month)

That's the other thing, Mr. Speaker, I really feel bad . . . and let me make this clear. I know that you do everything you can to make this House keep moving, and you are very flexible at times, like yesterday in allowing us to adjourn early. And I appreciate that. But I cannot get time to go to the schools during school time because I am here. By the time I get out of Executive Council on Tuesdays, school has let out.

Also, there has been air-conditioning of all primary schools on Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac. I know the parents and teachers appreciate that and the students, especially the young ones, appreciate that. We have also air-conditioned the school hall at the John Gray and the Islay Connolly Hall and also the hall George Hicks. It took some time because in some of the older schools extensive electrical work had to be done before the air-conditioners could be brought on line.

The following projects are either in the plan stage or physically started: the Lighthouse School and the planning for the new High School.

On the curriculum side, we initiated the creation of the National Curriculum in 1996, and I have answered this in depth and I don't intend to go far into it. But 75% in the core subjects was completed in 1999. I think that's quite an achievement.

We have completed the development of the pre-school curriculum guide. There has been a reintroduction of the spelling bee competition. There has been continued excellence in the National Children's Festival of the Arts. It would be good for all members to come out and have a look at things like the Children's Festival of the Arts. It's really some fantastic work they are doing. The teachers and the parents put a lot of effort into this.

We have introduced the Week of the Young Child. Expanded the Book Fair to where it is now a daylong event. We have developed learning packets in Years 1 to 6 for Cayman Social Studies. We have increased the music teachers at the primary and secondary level, which was something parents asked for.

On the administration side, we have established Education Services in Little Cayman. We have seen the creation of a National PTA HAS. I am very happy to see that because it fills a very important role of centralising and pulling the respective PTAs together. Speech Therapy services have increased by 35% to include Cayman Brac. Psychological services have increased by 100% over four years. Special Education staff was increased by 100% over three years. And hiring of a facilities officer to improve maintenance in all the schools. This is perhaps the best thing that ever happened on the physical side. That gentleman is a fantastic person with unlimited energy.

Creation of a steering committee to oversee the capital works projects. And we have initiated island wide opening of in-service programmes on both Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac.

On the student achievement, we have introduced standardised assessment in primary schools and the middle school. That's a very important step. There has been continued improvement in the examination results. For the first time in the Caribbean, we had one winner of the Commonwealth Essay Contest. We have had one winner of the Caribbean Examination's Council Best Short Story Award. And at we initiated the Cayman Scholar Award and we now have two of them who have distinguished themselves at the tertiary level. Over the three years, 145 students have been awarded scholarships to study at institutions.

The policy of the Education Council is that students who can qualify for scholarships get scholarships. Not necessarily full scholarships, but they are helped as necessary within their means. I would like to repeat that especially teachers and nurses who are Caymanian are given first . . . well, I shouldn't say it is first priority, but they are on the top priority list. But because everyone gets a scholarship, it makes the priority less important because of that. But we do really encourage everyone who can get a scholarship to take a scholarship especially in the area of education and . . .

Also important in this is despite the talk of the $50 on school books, every child who either needs a lunch or a breakfast for that matter, or who needs uniform or books, pens, pencils, whatever, gets that. Nobody is deprived of it. I repeat that the policy of government is not to make a child suffer because of the financial position of the parents. Our duty is to assist the children to ensure that they do not have to worry about a meal or a uniform, or about supplies, books, whatever.

You compare that to any other country in the Caribbean and you will see the difference. I have been to some of those islands. We talk here about being overcrowded. Mr. Speaker, we haven't seen what overcrowded is. I have seen schools where there were 40 or more children in classes. I am not criticising the country. That's probably the best they could do. But this is a country that probably 12% of its revenue goes on education. That has to be one of the highest . . . and I may be out slightly, but has to be the highest in any country. So, children are protected in the education system.

At a later stage I will talk about discipline and show how protection extends as far as we can go. But, as the saying goes, to raise a child you need a village. It takes effort, a lot of effort, from parents and society to ensure that the children who do stray . . . and I want to repeat that we have to look at the positive side of this. We have more good children in this country than anywhere else in the world. And nobody acknowledges that. We come in here day after day, spend our time on the children, probably 10 or 12 out of 850 in the school, that create the problem. We have to spend some time on them, but I am saying that we also have to acknowledge the good children out there. The vast majority of children in this country are good. They are obedient. They are smart.

We also have to acknowledge the many family units, the parents who do so much for their children. We always hear about the few who may be neglected. In every society that will be, but please acknowledge that there are so many good ones who far outweigh the few who have problems. We have to do everything in our power to deal with them, I guess if I can ever get the site back for the alternative education we can perhaps get on with more effectively dealing with alternative education.

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town spent quite a bit of time talking about the technical and vocational side of education. I will be the first to admit that no matter how much one has done in education, there will always be more to do. We can never do enough for the children of this country. But let us analyse the position in a factual way.

At present, technical and vocational courses offered through the George Hicks High School, the Cayman Brac or the John Gray High School (and I am bundling them altogether, they are not all offered in every school, obviously) are as follows:

| Year 10                     | Years 11 and 12                   |
|-----------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Office Studies              | Building Technology               |
| Introduction to Accounts    | Technical Drawing                 |
| Craft and Design            |                                   |
| Information Technology      | Woodwork                          |
| Introduction to Typewriting | Traffic and Motor Vehicle Studies |
| Introduction to Business    | Materials Technology              |
| Home Economics              | Electricity/Electronics           |
|                             | Graphical and Material Studies    |
|                             | Child Development                 |
|                             | Child Care                        |

|  |                        |
|--|------------------------|
|  | Food and Nutrition     |
|  | Food Studies           |
|  | Information Technology |
|  | Office Procedures      |
|  | Principles of Business |
|  | Principles of Accounts |
|  | Word Processing        |
|  | Business Studies       |
|  | Typewriting            |

When I went to school, nothing on this list was there. In fact, in those days, one was lucky to have much more than one teacher for each very large class of each very large Year in the school.

We are constantly updating. And when I deal with the five year education strategic plan I will show that a plan is a living thing; it is not set within the corners of five years and must be completed at the end of that five years and that's done. The same as we make change from day to day in other areas, we make changes in the education plan. With this, we are also looking all of the time at updating. We are re-thinking the various subjects. We are revising as well these vocational and technical areas. There has been progress in the core curriculum areas also at the primary level.

During the past 12 months, the Community College has had five new programmes introduced, four of which fall under the category of vocational and technical training, namely: legal secretary's certificate, certificate in nursing, office administration, and condominium management.

During the 1998/1999 academic year the College offered 9 technical and vocational programmes, 13 programmes in the associate degree level, and 160 short and long-term courses through the extension services department or evening classes. Technical programmes basically cover the same wide area I read before.

A lot of on-the-job training is offered through the College. It also works with industry, the Chamber of Commerce and businesses to put on short term and long term courses specialised to the needs of the specific industry. The fees are low, $370 a year. And we also now give scholarships to Community College, ICCI, our Law School for Caymanians who qualify for the Bachelor Degree.

I guess if you are really looking at success, it's in the fact that over 90% of the graduating class at John Gray in 2000 plan to attend the Community College. It's very popular. In fact, in 1998 we had 1512 students enrolled in 166 courses offered through the extension studies. I would also like to clear up another myth and point out that the enrolment figures for the College for the last academic year show that 80% of the total enrolment was Caymanian irrespective of the level of the programme.

It is not that strides haven't been made in the vocational and technical side. Now, let me be very blunt. A decision was taken long before I got responsibility first for education in 1976 that education in this country should be comprehensive. That is, there should be no distinction within the schools, creating a school that dealt with technical and one that continued on with the arts side of education. I think that that decision was right. It was not my decision. If you now try to create a technical college . . . and, not only have I looked at that but experts have looked at it . . . within a small society it is going to create the type of segregation that would not be good. Then the criticism would be levelled by those same members who are talking about the difference between those bright ones who may attend one school and others who may attend the other. I am satisfied that the decision was right to deal with the vocational and technical within one system.

The one thing that seems to always be levelled at the government is this whole question about transparency. Believe me, in my 20 years in politics if there is anything hid that the public does not know about, I don't know about it either because, especially in this last seven years I have had everything in the world levelled at me, but nothing substantiated. I have done everything I can to be open to the public. One area it can never be levelled at is education.

If I wanted to hide anything, would I put an inspector into every school in this country and give the report to the press? I sometimes believe that some members of the opposition who level this (and I don't want to call them individually, they know who they are) sometimes must have nightmares and the only thing that comes back to them is their transparent view.

Some time ago the press wrote an editorial that I will never forget in my life. I have read it before, and I will read it again.

“Last month with very little fanfare, reports on three local schools assembled by the School's Inspectorate were released to the public.

“The inspectorate, a wholly independent branch of the Ministry of Education, came into operation in 1997 [obviously, I was here in 1997], its job to monitor and report on educational standards in Cayman. The publication of the Inspectorate's first three reports, for distribution to the schools and parents, is a highly significant moment in the history of education in the islands.

“The ministry had a choice to publish or not, and, to its great credit, chose to do so. Going public with the strengths and weaknesses of local schools is an admirably positive step towards transparency and accountability within the education system. It has meant that, for the first time ever, objective and independent assessments of standards at local schools are available to parents. That is information that all parents and guardians in every country deserve—or perhaps have the right—to have, but too often do not.

“Publication of the reports establishes the honesty of the Ministry of Education, gives much credibility to its stated aim of raising educational standards, and encourages trust between the Ministry and parents.

“Now the reports have been published, the schools are using their own self-assessment reports in conjunction with the Inspectorate reports to produce action plans. The purpose of these will be to bolster areas which have been identified as weak. The Inspectorate is to monitor the implementation of the action plans, and each school will continue to evaluate its own work on a regular basis.

“If staff at the schools concerned can remain motivated to see through their action plans in the coming months, it seems likely that real improvement in standards will quickly follow.

“It remains to congratulate the Inspectorate staff for carrying out its mandate with such thoroughness and professionalism. The inspectorate reports—detailed, concise, and objective as they are—provide an extremely valuable framework for upgrading the quality of education in the Cayman Islands.” [Caymanian Compass, 24 November 1998]

That is the first time that was ever done here, and the first time it has ever been done with institutions of that sort. And in many countries it still is not done.

I don't have anything to hide. I am as transparent as they come. Somebody as thin as I am has to be transparent!

What have I done next? We have done a review along the inspection process of the Education Department. They will produce a report, and I am sure that that report (whether I am there or not . . . I should be there, God willing) will come here. And let me say that I could put any one of the members in this House, give them the tones of documents, and believe me, they wouldn't find their way through it.

I have requested inspectors to go into the schools who are experts and find the problems in them. But the positive side provides solutions. One thing I made abundantly clear at the beginning of these processes is that it is not to be a witch-hunt. It must be positive, it must define areas that need improvement and it must assist the people and the schools with improving themselves. This is so important. So, this is a positive approach. It's open, transparent . . .

The Caymanian Compass on the 28th had an editorial headed “Promoting Positive Change.” This is what it says: “It is unusual, at least for the Cayman Islands, that a government department should be reviewed by outside experts.” I thought about that for a long time, but with everything that's leveled up in here, a lot of these people sometimes believe that to get total independence you have to go outside. Fair enough.

“The Education Department, it was recently announced, is undergoing such a review, patterned in many ways on the school's inspection process. [which is what I just talked about]

“It is a project that should be closely watched throughout the public service as well as the private sector.

“Entities in both sectors can become hidebound doing things the way they have always done because that is the way things have always been done. Others embrace every innovation without necessarily mak- ing sure first that the new is indeed better than the old.

“In both cases it is often difficult for the people involved in these entities—departments or whole businesses—to zero in on where change is needed and where the tried and true should prevail.

“Sometimes the shortcomings are well recognised within an organisation but for one reason or another, change is not implemented.

“In both scenarios the views of an expert outsider working with the people inside the organisation may well provide the fillip for positive development.

“The system is working well with school inspection. [Three years later! And if the press is happy, I don’t see why the politicians in here shouldn’t be happy!] If the education department review produces positive results, other departments and organisations might be motivated to follow suit.”

I am going to deal with the question of transparency generally, but I have done everything I can. I have put the faults of the schools out there basically on a plate for member to look at. I haven’t hid anything. But it has been done in a positive way. And I keep coming back to this.

If members of this House and politicians out there expecting to run this country . . . a positive attitude has to be taken. If I sat here day after day and spent my time trying to figure out why I couldn’t do something, do you think I would achieve anything? If I spent my whole time criticising without saying what the solutions are . . . and I say that to show that the school inspection system is based on positive approach and the production of solutions to the problems. Yes, you have to find the problems, but most fools can find problems. It takes a fairly smart one to produce solutions. Where are the solutions?

If you can show me any solutions of any consequence that came other than from the government, then I will look at it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was a very harsh criticism of the education strategic plan. That criticism is unfounded. One member said words to the effect that the 1995 to 1999 education plan meant that it was intended to accomplish what the policy set out within that time, and not half of it is accomplished.

First of all, there is a basic misunderstanding of what a strategic plan is. It is so basic that it’s the difference between being dead and alive. It’s that extreme. The education strategic plan was never intended to be a plan that would be finished within the four corners of five years that it originally spanned. If it were meant to be that, then this would achieve practically nothing. It would be a dead plan! It would no longer be alive. In a country where we are talking about planning, how can you plan for five years, run it within five years, stop and then turn out another plan for five years? That has to be a short-sighted approach, and, as I said, a dead approach.

Let me say that it’s not Truman Bodden’s plan. This is a plan of the vast majority of people in this country. It is a plan of 353 people that produced it, accepted by me, fully accepted by my ministry, accepted by this honourable House (and I thank them for that). But it’s a plan that is updated annually, with the exception of the year that it was not, and I explained that. Yes, but it was during the stage that Vision [2008] was going on. I will deal with that. I have accomplished my part on that, thank the Lord. My ministry has, my permanent secretary has and I too will be dealing with that and where it is going.

But the important thing is that this plan is meant to be a live plan. It’s meant to be amended, to be changed to suit the needs of the country’s education system from time to time. So it is really ludicrous to talk about this should have been finished within the four walls of the five years. In fact, I will go on to show what is being implemented. I know this is going to be a bit tedious, but I would hate to see the national education plan destroyed through a misconception or wild statements made by a member of this House.

Mr. Speaker, strategy 1 says, “We will establish a national curriculum the standards at every level which will fulfil the needs of students of every ability.” We have either now completed or are in the stage of dealing with the following:

1. To establish national guidelines to govern education policies,
2. To establish a committee which includes a cross-section of society to advise on curriculum content
3. To establish continuity between pre-school and Year 12 for each subject area
4. To provide a wide range of subjects, knowledge and experiences for students of all skills and aptitudes at every grade level
5. To develop locally accredited examination based on the national curriculum at level 3, 6, 9 and 12 to provide measurable qualitative and quantitative outcomes which may be used as a gauge of achievement.

This has not been done. As you know I gave a report on this. The national curriculum core subject should by now be just about completed. There are other subjects to go on. This will come in at a later stage.

6. To provide programmes of work which promote master of basic language and mathematics skills at each grade level
7. To incorporate in the curriculum strategies to promote cognitive, effective and psycho-monitor behaviour, self-motivation, self-confidence, independent and cooperative working and thinking, curiosity and other learning skills.
8. To provide for students who demonstrate an aptitude for the technical and vocational fields programmes which incorporate relevant and integrated language mathematics and science courses
9. To establish a consistent and standardised system of assessment
10. To infuse key elements of Caymanian culture in all subjects of the curriculum
11. To promote a sense of responsibility towards local and global environmental issues

12. To establish criteria to set a minimum standard of competence for graduation from High School.

Eleven out of the 12 have either been completed or are continuing and being dealt with. One is not. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, this is long. But it is not correct to say that the plan is a plan that should not be alive and continuing. I want to just tell you what has been done.

The Speaker: If this is a convenient time, we shall take the afternoon break. We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.50 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.20 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to go on to deal with one area that was raised by one of the MLAs. It was dealt with by the Third Elected Member for West Bay and it came out in the Caymanian Compass, saying “MLA Condemns Education Department.” What I would like to do, sir, is to quote from areas of the letter that the department put in because they have, I think, dealt with it in a comprehensive way.

Mr. Speaker, like I said, all of my departments, I am not saying cannot do with some changes, however, I think, the Member went overboard in this one. I would like to first quote . . . I will be just quoting because this letter has gone public. It sets out the department’s position and it says, “I take particular offence to the Member’s statement that the Education Department is one of the worst run, most unprofessional and inefficient departments in Government. I challenge him to defend that statement with concrete facts. I can state that the Education Department is staffed by dedicated group of professionals who work long hours to provide a direct service and a support to our schools.”

“While the tone of the attack seems to be aimed towards expatriate officers, he should know that the staff of the department is predominantly Caymanians who have had long and distinguished careers in our schools. To call them unprofessional and inefficient is completely irresponsible and I feel that an apology is due. If an apology cannot be made then evidence of that inefficiency and unprofessional behaviour should be given to the Chief Education Officer for action.”

What he is really saying there is, look, tell me where these areas are and if not then to withdraw.

“The recent undertaking of an in depth review [I dealt with that earlier, Mr. Speaker] of the department was initiated internally and not externally. This whole reason of ensuring that we function the best way is to provide leadership and support for the education of the children of these islands. That report unlike this recent attack will be supported by evidence. Will it show room for improvement? Absolutely! It will and we welcome that criticism for information will be constructive rather than destructive.

“The Third Elected Member for West Bay also indicated that the department spent a huge amount of money each year and that he had come to the conclusion that value for money was not being obtained.”

The Chief Education Officer of the Department then said, “I think that our recent graduates will probably disagree with that statement and should feel hurt by it.”

I would again challenge him to submit to the Chief Education Officer or to myself his data to show how no value was obtained.

“While this attack on the department is perhaps somewhat understandable in the current political climate, I find his attack on foreign teachers to be reprehensible and completely naïve. Had the Third Elected Member had any understanding of the problems in the very small percentage of our children, we would have known that their problems are complex and have their roots in a deteriorating family structure characterised by a distrust for all authorities and not just schools. These students bring their problems to schools, they do not develop them there.”

It goes on to say, sir, “The principals and staff at all of our schools have implemented a structured discipline programme that enables the schools to operate properly and over 95% of our students abide by these rules.” That’s the point I was making, sir—the vast majority of our children are good and there is no two ways about that.

The department goes on to say, “The school disciplinary code is supported by teachers, principals, the Education Department, Education Council and the ministry. The few students that choose to disrupt the schools become the same few adults who disrupt our society and regrettably end up in Her Majesty Prison at Northward. The inmates of Northward, however, are not representatives of our society and the few disruptive students are not representatives of our student body.” I think that is a very constructive statement. It is what I made earlier.

“Regrettably, the Member then went on not only to blame foreign teachers for the short comings [but] to single out teachers from the UK. I fail to understand his logic and would like to point out that all of our foreign teachers are actively recruited from their training and subject to their expertise which brings strength to our education programmes. This includes our teachers from the UK.

“For the record I would like to point out that 263 of our 412 teachers are expatriates, that is, 2 out of every 3 teachers. Unfortunately, we are still not attracting enough Caymanian teachers and it is an issue that concerns us all. I will ask the Third Elected Member where he would find these teachers to teach our students. I should also state that 88% of all stu- dents in Government schools are Caymanians. That, I think, is a very important fact.”

He says, “I should state that 88% of all students in Government schools are Caymanians and it is our duty to see that they are prepared for the future. Our teachers all work diligently to give of their best to assist our students. They not only teach their regular classes, they teach extra classes, run extra curricular activities, are active in the community and stand up to the abuse of the few students and often their parents in an honest attempt to help our young people. They deserve far better than they receive in this Member’s contribution to the Throne Speech.

“While I understand the political process and I understand the need to get re-elected, I find it difficult to accept this type of political posturing when the reputations and emotions . . .” and that basically was about where—

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I understand that the Minister is reading from what the Chief Education Officer had to say about me in the Caymanian Compass of today. But I got a copy of the Hansard of my speech and a lot of what he is saying, especially the alleged attack on teachers, is not justified.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, let me read an excerpt from the Hansard of what I had to say with regard to teachers. That is, “The one thing that we have going for us in the area, and that is a key, we have good teachers in the classroom . . .” Now, if this is a statement that I made, how could the Chief Education Officer or the Minister come to the conclusion that I am attacking the teachers in the classrooms?

My comments were basically geared towards the administration at the Education Department and even the administration with regards to the schools. I was referring to the issue of discipline in the schools or the lack of discipline and my comments were made in that context, Mr. Speaker.

I did call the Chief Education Officer this morning. I told him that he was totally out of order with regard to what he had to say. I also added that I thought he was delving into the political arena, and I was not a very nice person to jump in that arena to fight. So, Mr. Speaker, I believe what is being said is not correct. It cannot be justified because the Hansard of this House—which is the official record of what was said—does not support the comments that are being made now with regard to the Chief Education Officer.

<sup>1</sup>The Speaker: The position is, in the absence of the Hansard I cannot make a ruling on that. I will make a ruling on that on Monday after having had the Hansard on which I can see exactly what was said.

The Honourable Minister for Education you can continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I don’t—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, if I may, sir?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Is this a point of order, sir?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, it is.

The Speaker: What is your point of order.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Obviously, if you have to make a ruling not having the benefit of the Hansard sir, the least should happen is that the Minister should not be allowed to continue to deal with that matter until you have made the ruling, sir.

The Speaker: In view of the fact that we have a approximately three minutes, I don’t think it makes much difference either way.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I wasn’t going to go on with it anyhow, sir. If that is going to cause a disruption, I won’t pursue it. All I would say, maybe—

[Inaudible comment]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: No, I am not going to pursue it. But what I may say, maybe the Member needs to look at what the Member reported and what was said.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what has gone on, I will show on Monday that the results in the schools have been fantastic compared with the Caribbean and also good internationally. I really don’t want to pursue this any further. Perhaps, the paper may not have quoted things fully.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do, I know we are just about to a stage to stop and I can either just finish reading—

The Speaker: We only have one minute so I think we might as well adjourn.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: It will probably be better to just adjourn.

The Speaker: I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

<sup>1</sup> See page 130

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 11.00 a.m. on Monday.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 11.00 a.m. on Monday. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. This Honourable House do stand adjourned until 11.00 a.m. Monday morning.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 11.00 AM MONDAY, 6 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
MONDAY
6 MARCH 2000
11.00 AM

(Total time in Chamber: 2.23)

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Administration of Oaths or Affirmations. Administration of Oath of Allegiance to Mr. A. Joel Walton, JP to be the Acting Honourable Third Official Member.

Mr. Walton, will you come forward to the Clerk's table? Would all Honourable Members please stand?

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS
OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

(Mr. A. Joel Walton, JP)

Hon. Joel A. Walton: I, Joel Walton, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law, so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Walton, on behalf of all Honourable Members, I welcome you to this Honourable House for the time of your stay. Would you please take your seat as the Acting Temporary Third Official Member?

Please be seated. Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Third Elected Member for West Bay, who is off the island. I also have apologies from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is not well.

Moving on item number 4 on today's Order Paper, Statement by Honourable Members/Ministers of Government. A statement by the Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

STATEMENT BY HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS OF GOVERNMENT

IMMIGRATION ISSUES

Hon. James M. Ryan: The Cayman Islands Government, being aware of the community's concerns in regard to immigration issues has decided in both the short and long-term interest of the Cayman Islands, to institute significant changes to the Immigration Policy Directives. These directives are issued by Executive Council to the Immigration Board and the Chief Immigration Officer in accordance with the provisions of section 72 of the Immigrant Law (1997 Revision).

Some of the changes, which have been approved, will require adjustments in legislation and will be submitted to the Legislative Assembly in the form of amendments to the Immigration Law

In order to forge greater partnerships between the Immigration Board and local business and to move away from the micro management of work permit applications, Government will now invite companies to submit a three-year business plan to the Immigration Board at regular intervals. The plan will detail how many positions are held by Caymanians, non-Caymanians and permanent residents within their organisation, and which positions are crucial. Companies will also have to outline their training programmes in relation to Caymanian staff and when they expect to be able to place a Caymanian in a position currently filled by a non-Caymanian.

To streamline services and increase efficiency, additional changes to the Policy Directors and Regulations are as follows:

- ◆ In an effort to simplify the procedure for repatriation deposits and to reduce the sums previously involved, which had ranged from CI$150 to CI$2,000, a non-refundable flat fee of CI$200 will now be paid for all new grants. The former repatriation deposit will be held until the employee departs the Islands or no longer requires a work permit;
- ◆ In response to a survey of customers, the validity of temporary work permits will change from the current 60 days up to a period of no more than 90 days. Not only will this serve to improve customer satisfaction but will also reduce the workload of the Immigration Department by reducing the need to process renewals and therefore the time it takes to process applications. In addition, some temporary work permits may be approved in a "batch" for qualifying companies. The Chief Immigration Officer will have the sole authority to granting temporary work permits;
- ◆ The development of a definition of the various classifications of occupation which will require temporary work permits. The Immigration Law does not currently provide any such classification resulting in everyone who enters the country for business purposes to be required to have a work permit.

- ◆ Senior Immigration Officer will be authorised to grant extensions for visitors' permits, within guidelines. This will prove a one-stop service where applications and decision can be given at the counter and will result in fewer delays in processing applications. Previously, and up until now, they were only approved by the rank of Assistant Chief Immigration Officer.
- ◆ In order to simplify the work permit process and increase the speed of processing, the need for personal references to accompany applications for work permits will be abolished;
- ◆ An administration fee will be applied for the submission of appeals to the Governor-in-Council in respect of work permits and Trade and Business Licenses, Caymanian Status and Permanent Residence. This will discourage applicants who file mainly to allow them to continue employment while their appeals are being processed. It will also help to defray the cost in processing the appeals.

With all of these changes coming into effect, designed to increase efficiency with regard to the issue of first time work permits, the Board will no longer grant work permits for those currently on the island as visitors.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I wonder if under Standing Order 30 (2) you would allow me to ask a couple of short questions.

The Speaker: Short questions, yes.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Would the honourable member be considerate enough as to make a copy of the statement he read available to members? And would the honourable member explain when these new changes are coming into effect?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Depending on whether it requires a change in the Law or the Regulations, or change in the Directions to the Immigration Department and Board, the introduction of these changes may be staggered. By that I mean that we will have to get the amending legislation before the House to make the changes in the Law. In the case of the directions, if it's a change as a result of the direction, the Executive Council can move forward. So, not to give a short answer, but the changes will come into effect as soon as possible, depending on whether there is a change in the Law or in the Regulation as in the case of the fee, or in the case of the directives.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I would just like to ask one short question. In regard to the appeals, what would be the cost of the filing fee for an appeal? Has that been worked out?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: I don't have that figure here. It is minimal, but I don't have it here. I can certainly get it for the member. Of course, that also has to be done by regulations, so that will take a little while. But I can get that information.

The Speaker: Moving on to Item 5, Government Business, a continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 18 February 2000.

SPEAKER'S RULING

On Point of Order raised by the Third Elected Member for West Bay on Friday 3 March 2000

The Speaker: All members will recall when we adjourned on Friday, 3 March, the Third Elected Member for West Bay, who is absent today, rose on a point of order which read as follows, "I understand that the Minister is reading from what the Chief Education Officer had to say about me in the Caymanian Compass of today. But what I did, Mr. Speaker, I got a copy of the Hansard of my speech and a lot of what he is saying, especially the alleged attack on teachers, is not justified.

"With your permission, Mr. Speaker, let me read an excerpt from the Hansard of what I had to say with regard to teachers. That is, 'The one thing that we have going for us in the area, and that is a key, we have good teachers in the classroom . . .'" He goes on with a lot of other deliberations which are not a point of my concern at this particular time.

Reading from the Hansard what he did in fact say about that was as follows, "The one thing that we have going for us in the area of education, and that is a key, we have good teachers in the classroom. I am of the opinion that there needs to be a revolutionary approach to the Education Department because some serious but positive changes need to be made to the administration in that department." [24 February 2000] That is that.

Another concern was the alleged attack on the Department of Education in which he said, and I read from The Official Hansard Report of 24 February 2000, quoting from contribution of the Third Elected Member for West Bay, ". . . I have come to the conclusion that it is one of the worst ran and one of the most unprofessional, inefficient departments in Government. We spend a lot of money and every year we come down here for a huge budget for education but are we getting value for our money spent in this area? I have come to the conclusion that we haven't or we are not."

In referring to the Caymanian Compass publication of the 28 February, and I quote (they have quoted almost verbatim) "The Education Department is one of the worst run, unprofessional, inefficient departments in the Government," MLA, John Jefferson claimed in the Legislative Assembly."

Skipping down a part and going on to another paragraph, "He felt there needed to be a revolutionary approach to the Education Department and that positive changes needed to be made to its administration. He attacked the influence of foreign teachers on the school."

I quote from the contribution made by the Third Elected Member for West Bay on 24 February 2000, the [unedited] Hansard, "... I think where we went wrong was when we started recruiting staff, that is, teachers other than from the Caribbean because the other Caribbean countries, their traditions and way of life has been very similar to ours. The UK members of staff like the UK have totally different concepts with regard to control in the classroom or elsewhere and I think we need to do whatever we have to do in order to address and (should I say) correct the present trends that I see in our public schools."

I give the Third Elected Member for West Bay the point that he did say we have good teachers. But where the Chief Education Officer (and I refer to Dr. John D. Tudor, the Chief Education Officer of the Cayman Islands) in his speech ... his quotations are almost identical of what I read from the Cayman Compass. And from the debate by the Third Elected Member for West Bay, it is easy to take an inference that the conduct of the United Kingdom teachers was a part of our problem. So indirectly the teachers were brought into question.

Therefore, it is my consideration, giving him the benefit of the doubt that he said that they do have good teachers, for which I am very grateful, he did certainly on the other hand contradict his statement of good teachers in saying that they were disruptive and brought us to where we are today. Therefore, I rule that he has no point of order.

The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning please continue.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

On Friday, when we were closing I had started to go on to strategy number 2 of the five year education plan. That strategy states that we will develop personalised education for each student that ensures his or her success.

There are ten specific objectives, and all except one are now being implemented. I am specifically addressing the area where one member stated that all of the strategies should have been completed between 1995 and 1999, and that not even one-half were done.

The first one is "Centralised professional services—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, sir.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: As offended as the minister may be, and he did not call a name, I am sure the minister is referring to what I said. I do not remember saying that all of the strategies should have been completed between 1995 and 1999. I remember saying there was a timeline attached to the strategy. I also remember saying that probably not half of them were completed. But this is the second time the minister has tried to suggest that I was saying that the 1995 to 1999 plan should end in 1999—end of story. I was not suggesting that for a minute.

I am saying that it is misleading for him to suggest that that is what I was saying, because that was not the point I was making.

The Speaker: Would you accept that as a point of explanation, or do you want me to rule it a point of order?

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: Mr. Speaker, before you rule, may I read what the member said? He said, "I am going to tell you something now, the reason why the dates were attached to that policy, 1995 - 1999, meant that it was intended to accomplish what that policy set out within that time and not a half of it is accomplished." [The Official Hansard Report, 1 March 2000, page 89]

I understand that to say that the policy had set out ... well, as it says, it's clear.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it is not my intention to interrupt the minister. I just wish as a matter of clarification for the minister to understand that ... and I heard what he read, and I know that I said that. But, my point was never intended to say that between 1995 and 1999, once what is set out in the National Education Strategic Plan was intended to be accomplished, and then that would be the end of it. I understand that the plan is an ongoing situation. But there must have been some clear objectives set out within a certain timeframe, and I was suggesting that those objectives set out to be accomplished within that timeframe had not been accomplished. That was the whole point. I just wish for him to clearly understand that so that we don't have to be back and forth with it all the time.

The Speaker: We thank you for that explanation.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Let me just read then, sir, for repetition, what I just read. It's the honourable First Elected Member for George Town. I was careful not to start this. I didn't refer to any name. But, the member went on to say, "So, when they had their update . . . that is why it suits the Minister to create this type of methodology. What you do when you fail is to simply do an update and you now change it from 1995 to 1999 to 2000 to whatever. But, you still haven't completed what you were supposed to do between 1995 and 1999—not even half of it." [Ibid.]

I go back to this: This is a living plan. We never set out to complete within the five years of this plan what all is in the plan. The criticism on the update, as I understand it, is that what was in the plan was intended to be completed between 1995 to 1999. That is what was said twice, and that not even half of it is completed. I am saying . . . and I will show because I have information from the planner as to what is done. I don't want to have to read all of this, but let us just take a second strategy that I was going on with, strategy 2.

"Specific Objective 1) Centralised professional services so that all children have equal access to services provided by the multidisciplinary team.

[Objective 2:] "Develop a comprehensive, non-discriminatory evaluation policy for all students."

[Objective 3:] "Provide a continuum of alternative placement and related services to meet the varied needs of exceptional students, from the least to the most restrictive environment." And I would like to stress the word "continuum"—it's a continuing policy.

Objective 4: "Ensure that students leave school with a marketplace skill to function within the society."

Objective 5 . . . it goes on.

There are ten objectives. One of these at present has not been started, but it's one out of ten. The policy is well on. But it's a living policy. It's not a dead policy. I will show how the timeframes have been set because it is a misunderstanding of this type of policy that leads to what would be . . . and I understand where the member may be coming from. The old traditional policy was 'Here is a five-year policy, do it within five years'. . . Bam! That's the end of it. After five years, do another five years. That's been the tradition. But that went out a long time ago. This is a rolling, continuous policy and I will show that it is a vibrant policy. There have been a lot of additions to the policy, and that is the way it should be. Some have also been removed.

The education planner has stated clearly that it was never intended that in 1999 all objectives would have been achieved, as this strategic planning process was intended to be a dynamic and not a static process. Therefore, opportunity would be provided for strategies or action plans to be added each year. This has certainly been the case because the number of action plans now stands at 132, instead of the 105 in 1995.

Twenty-seven new action plans have been added over the review periods. It's a dynamic policy. It is always looking five years ahead, and that is the only way it can work. Referring to not even half being completed, or being dealt with, it is also worthy to note that according to the records 73% of the action plans are being implemented at this time. About half of the remaining 27% consists of plans that were added at the last update held in October 1999. What more can we do?

Of the original 105, when you work this out, I make it that about 86% or 87% of the plan is being implemented. But that implementation is a continuing thing. In fact, I read action plan 4 of the strategy, and it refers to a continuum. That objective goes on, like many of the other objectives. Agreed, some may come to an end. But many are continuing objectives. In fact, as you know, last October (1999) not only did the team add the extra plans, but also a new mission statement has been published, and a new parameter was created.

This is not dealt with by me. I need to make that clear. My ministry is not doing this, as such. It is the duty of the planning team (that consists of thirty-odd members) to assess the progress of the action plan in each strategy and it is their mandate at each update to determine the action plans that are operational, adequate or that need to be revisited. The planning team decides when new strategies are needed.

And, Mr. Speaker, the implementers were allowed to chose which action plans they wished to do. This is very important because this education plan is a plan of parents, teachers, the public, generally, and it is a well-balanced and very able planning team and I am very happy to say that this is one of the few times that this education plan has been criticised, especially to the extent it has. There is no political mileage in this. Criticism of this plan is a direct criticism of the public, the parents, the teachers and the education staff—not of Truman Bodden, sir.

This is not my plan. This is an education plan, a five-year rolling, live education plan of the people. It is substantially under implementation. These are facts. This is not coming from me. They are facts that are coming from the planning team and the education planner who deals with this. So I hope that we can see that it has to be not only dangerous, but unsafe to make a statement that was made by the First Elected Member for George Town when he said every problem we have in this country can be attached to a problem in the area of education. I refute that very strongly. It is an incorrect statement. The education of this country has undoubtedly helped the public, the students, it has helped society.

I have full faith in the planning team. They are very capable. The education system does not create every problem in this country. That is totally ludicrous. In fact, without the education system we have—which is undoubtedly the best in the Caribbean, and it's comparable with education in the developed countries of the world. It is a very good one and it is a dynamic and live education plan that is always looking five years into the future, and is changing from year to year and has the wide support of the public.

I would now like to touch on Public Private Partnership in Education. The Department for International Development (DFID) in the Caribbean recently announced an initiative aimed at examining the potential of partnerships between government, business and civil society to enhance education. DFID is responsible for the British government's contribution to international development. DFID is hosting a high level conference in Jamaica later on this week which will offer Caribbean countries the opportunity to examine some of the activities involving partnership which are helping to raise attainment and achievements in other parts of the world.

Delegations will be able to explore which of these could be useful models to adapt in our own countries, and to share the ongoing partnership programmes through a country presentation. Cayman has been asked to send a delegation to the DFID conference, and to include business, education, the civil society, and elected and government officials. In preparation for this, an informal committee was made up of my permanent secretary, the deputy chief education officer, the acting education planner, manager of the Chamber of Commerce, the president of the National Parent Teachers Association, the president of the Private Schools Administration Association, and the chairman of the E-Commerce Subcommittee on Education and Training, and a government school principal. They have been meeting for the past two months.

The committee has looked at existing public, private partnerships. They have considered the roles and responsibilities for good practice in education partnerships, and they have discussed how formalising that partnership in education can enhance the five year education plan as well as a ten year national strategic plan with Vision 2008. Also, the committee is examining how it can support government's recently formed E-commerce Task Force in developing technology and promoting the concepts of e-business in schools. I know that the Third Elected Member for George Town has spearheaded this e-commerce, which I think is really fantastic.

We are lucky that Cayman has a rich tradition of partnership between public and private sectors. I would just like to touch on some of these:

- ◆ Chamber of Commerce
- ◆ Junior Achievement
- ◆ Work terms in the Chamber of Commerce companies
- ◆ Career awareness visits to schools
- ◆ Careers Expo
- ◆ Awards and Scholarships
- ◆ Education and Training Scholarship Booklet
- ◆ Work Experience
- ◆ Internships
- ◆ Donations
- ◆ Resume writing and work ethic workshops

Individual companies have also made very significant contributions and I would like to mention Cable & Wireless and computer companies and dealers that have put Internet connections and necessary equipment for this into each government school. Indeed, I think they have put them into all schools.

Larger companies continue to assist with music programmes in schools. However, we know that 80% of companies in Cayman can be considered small companies. The structure provided by Cayman's Public Private Partnership will be able to focus resources into school and education programmes where they are most needed. This will give small companies and individuals the opportunity to contribute to enhancing our schools and also the assurance that these resources are being appropriately applied.

I would also like to mention the service clubs that continue to support education programmes, in particular the Lions Club, since 1987, has contributed thousands of dollars in text books and training of teachers for the Quest Programme which focuses on skills to allow young people to make healthy choices including drug abuse prevention. The Quest Programme is a very good programme and I would like to thank the Lions Club for their support and contribution on this.

Our Parent Teacher Associations, our Home School Associations are very important partners in our schools. Many PTAs raise money through running the canteens and running the school buses. They hold fundraisers for materials, trips, sports uniforms, and they spend countless man-hours in the schools assisting in a variety of ways.

Last, but not least, I would like to mention the extra-curricular activities run by our teachers. Many teachers can be found on Saturdays or during holidays, after school, providing extra classes helping to organise social activities, and putting in extra time and effort with our students. Just this weekend the Cayman Islands Mathematics Association had its official launch. The Association aims to instil a love of mathematics and to show students the place of mathematics in everyday life. It will also provide support and training for math teachers. This is but one example of teachers banding together to enhance teaching and learning.

When the Public Private Partnership in Education group makes its presentation next week, they will have a lot of positive things to say about the contribution being made to education by the various sectors in our community. I believe that we can be proud of the Public Private Partnership in Education in this country, and I believe that it is a live and vibrant partnership, not one that has time limits and comes to an end. It continues on in harmony for the development of education in the Cayman Islands.

I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of my ministry and on my own behalf to thank these groups that I have mentioned and the many other groups and companies who continue to support the children of these islands through the schools.

I come back again to repeat: We have many, many good children in this country. The vast majority are good. I am asking this honourable House, and especially new candidates coming into the political arena to spend some time congratulating and appreciating the good students of this country. Some time must be spent on the few, and they are only a few, Mr. Speaker, probably between eight to 15 in the two schools of well over 800 children each; yet the press is as much to blame as members of this House. They focus on the bad, and in the course of it never see the good.

I wonder when the last time members of this House or the press have actually gone out and positively said that we have good children in this country, thanked the Lord for them and looked at the positive side. We have a few problems, but they will be dealt with.

I try to go, and I do go to the vast majority of school functions, but one of the things that I have often wondered is when sports day is on and there are hundreds of children in uniform doing a march past, there is no press there. I know that the press are called. I am positive they are, because I get confirmation from the department each time they are called. But I bet that if there was a bit of ruckus by six or eight students among the good children who are out there participating in sports, the press would be there and they would have that on the front page headlines.

I am criticising the press, but it is a negative attitude that we also find among politicians. I repeat: you cannot run a country on negative attitudes. People have to have solutions and you have to take a positive approach. So I am really begging the press (and that includes television and radio) to give the children of this country some good coverage. Put some good things in the headlines say some good things about the many good children that we have.

I believe that if we try to see the good in people rather than constantly focusing on the bad, we would have a much better world. The opposition members who spoke went into a lot of bad areas and just focused on problem areas. But, you know, no solutions were put forward other than by the Third Elected Member for George Town, and his fantastic solution to revenue in this country relating to e-commerce. What has been put forward? Has anyone come forward and said, 'You have these problems in education. Here's the solution'? And the people of this country better not wait until a person gets into government to provide solutions, because if they don't have it before the elections, or on the floor of this House, I can assure the public they don't have solutions. And they are sure not going to become brilliant persons overnight!

A lot was said about the Lighthouse School, mainly by one of the opposition—I guess the Leader of the Opposition—but all I am going to say on that is that there has been too much politics on that. I am tired of having to justify the past. These are special children. They need all the help we can give, and what should be done here is to try to help me get on and build this place. The decisions are made, it's been funded by this honourable House through the Finance Committee. It's an accepted project of this Legislature. Just try to help me. I have enough problems trying to get planning permission for schools and everything else. This one does have it, and I am not going into it. I will take whatever licks I have to take on it and just simply move on.

At the end I will deal with where the Throne Speech has dealt with some of the objectives and outcomes for this year.

I would like to touch on another area because there are so many good things in this country and it's unfortunate that a lot of these speeches have to be spent on the few odd things. A lot was said on a continuation of the position on the finances of this country, a lot was said on pensions. At present the debt of this country can be serviced by 7.4% of the recurrent revenue. If you go to a bank, the bank will lend maximum guideline is 40% of your recurrent income. So this is extremely low. The internationally accepted standard is 10%. Very low. In fact, many countries around us are spending 40% of their revenue just to pay interest.

We are paying interest and principal with only 7% of our revenue. That is because we have chosen to take loans that are short. The loan amount to be borrowed this year is only $16 million. We will repay on the central government debt, $13 million in principal, and $6.7 million in interest. On the self-financing loan, $1.8 million principal, and $.9 million in interest. So, we are borrowing $16 million, but principal is being repaid at the rate of $14.8 million, leaving a difference between what we are paying back and what we are borrowing of $1.2 million. Anyone can see that that is over prudent. In other words, the net borrowing this year of principal is $1.2 million.

But, we are putting $43 million into capital. That is money that is partly coming out of recurrent revenue. When we look at the figures on this, we find that the position in the country is that not only is there this year a net borrowing of $1.2 million (when you look at what is being repaid), but out of the total debt, which is central government and self-financing debt and add that into it, we find that 70% of the debt is under ten years. In most countries that debt is spread over 20 to 30 years. As everyone knows, if you have a loan for ten years, you pay probably twice as much as you would in 20 years on principal. So we are paying back a very high amount because the debt is going to be retired, 70.4% in ten years.

Within ten years what will be left is . . . well, let's go a little bit further because a lot of this is being repaid in a shorter time than ten years. In 2005 (and I am reading here and I will lay this on the Table if need be), there will only be $30.1 million owed because of the rapid payment government is making on this.

I am happy to give the First Elected Member for George Town a copy of this. I am taking this from the Financial Secretary, or Finance Department's, schedule of the debt that was tabled here during the Finance Committee.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The question is, I think very clearly, if the debt in five years is going to be $30 million, if other governments are doing what this government is doing this year, they are paying back the sum of $14.8 million and borrowing this year $16 million. There's a difference of $1.2 million (when you take the $14.8 [million] away from the $16 [million]). It's a net of $1.2 million. And that has to be prudent.

I am just looking for a further document, sir.

The Speaker: If you need further time, we could take the morning break.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That would be fine sir.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12 NOON

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.32 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I was mentioning earlier about the very slight increase in debt in 1999. I will just read an excerpt of the Budget Address. It says, "Total debt was $23.7 million on 1 January 1999. Total public debt is expected to rise to $95.7 million by year end 1999." In other words a difference of only $2 million (in rounded figures). He went on to say, "Mr. Speaker, even though the total value of outstanding loans has risen over the year by $2 million, total public debt service (that is, principal and interest) remains at 6.2% of 1999 forecasted recurrent revenue. This is well below the generally accepted 10% upper limit established by the Government."

And this year it's only $1.2 million difference from what I calculate.

Also, on the good side of this is the reserve fund is expected to rise to approximately $14 million by year-end 1999. And we know that that fantastic fund, the pension fund, has moved from $6 million seven years ago to $76 million at present. We also know that the honourable Attorney General has ruled that there is no statutory duty for government to pay past pensions. And, most importantly, the fund has enough income to pay twice the amount of past and present pensions.

Also very important, is the fact that this year (I am taking this from page 15 of the 1999 budget) the position then was that the contribution to capital acquisitions, contribution to reserve funds and capital development expenditure was $18.5 million, in other words, a surplus of $18.5 million which went into capital. Also, sir, we have another aspect here that in 1999 the total capital, and I am reading from the budget, "Total capital development expenditure is forecasted at $27.5 million which is 35.3 percent below the $42.5 million budgeted." In other words, government, even though it budgets $42.5 million last year for capital, only spent $27.5 million (sic). It is not as if this government is just spending money as such. We don't even spend what is budgeted. This was a clear example where one-third or more of what was budgeted to be spent on capital was not spent.

The Financial Secretary went on to say, ". . . and an undrawn amount of $11.3 million against the capital loans approved for 1999." We didn't draw down the full amount of the loan either. That is very prudent financial budgeting. We know that we have 47 of the largest 50 banks in the Cayman Islands. They have faith in the Cayman Islands otherwise they would not be here.

The success of the country, the success of the stability, the success of the financial ability has come about because the Executive Council (made up of three very good Official Members, and my four other colleagues and me) is very able, very capable, very experienced in running a government. Like I said earlier, apply the standard of whether you would let a person run your business. I am repeating something one of the members over there said, if you don't think they can run your business, why put them to run the country. Because if they run the country into the ground, they will run your business into the ground. That's very logical.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Ugh!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I hear that didn't go down very well. But think about it: why put somebody to run a big business if you wouldn't let him run your small business?

On Vision [2008] (this is very important to me), I have spent a lot of time and effort and I would like to ensure that this is put in the right perspective. The duty of my ministry was to see that the public of this country completed a ten-year national strategic plan under the Vision 2008 Logo. That vision plan is the people's plan. It has been approved by the government and this honourable House. It is the most important document in this country. It is important that it be implemented and carried out because the public of this country expects that the ten year national strategic plan will be implemented.

I think it was right that the guidance in the time when it was being prepared as a plan would be left under my ministry and to that very capable executive, especially, my permanent secretary, Mrs. Joy Basdeo, and the many others who assisted in getting this national strategic plan, Vision 2008, completed as a plan. I would like to thank them very much, and also the many people who put in countless hours to complete that document.

That phase which was given to my ministry and me has been completed for some time. What remains is a very important aspect of the implementation of that plan.

I can't stress how important it is that there appears to be the momentum, the continuation of the plan, to take the Cayman Islands forward in the right perspective, but most importantly in accordance with the wish of the people of the Cayman Islands.

For my part, on this aspect I say I have carried out my duty, I have finished what has been assigned to me. We have now moved into a stage of implementation. And His Excellency the Governor has stated, at page 1 on his Throne Speech, "I have decided to appoint an Executive Director of the Vision programme with a specific mandate over the next 6-8 months to monitor what is already underway within the system, ensure that the right priorities are observed for the next round, co-ordinate the broad sweep of Action Plans covering more than one Ministry, and to produce finally a comprehensive report with detailed recommendations on the sort of organisation needed to take the Vision programme forward in the longer term."

I stand ready to do anything that I can with the implementation of this. To that effect, I would just like to say what my ministry is doing on Vision, so that it is made clear to the public and this House that I am moving on with implementing within my ministry and departments the different aspects of the plan. I know this is going to be a bit tedious, but I think it is very important that I go through this.

One of these was, "Supporting an educational system which identifies and develops the abilities of all persons encouraging them to realise their full potential." That was strategy 3. Priorities on that strategy for 2000, first Education: "To establish educational facilities to meet the needs of children residing on Little Cayman." That was strategy 7, action plan 9.

I don't intend to read all of these out, but I will begin and then . . . but I have the specifics of which action plan it is, what strategy it is.

"To develop and implement a careers advisory service which provides professional guidance to students." That was strategy 3, action plan 4.

"(c) To develop and implement academic, vocational and technical curricula for secondary and tertiary students." That covers two action plans.

"(d) To create and implement a nationally recognisable vocational programme that expands the opportunities for Caymanian youth to become more productive citizens in their community."

"(e) To establish a national programme to introduce a variety of businesses to students prior to them entering the work force."

"(f) Continue plans for three new schools, namely, Lighthouse, Spotts Primary, and Boatswain Bay Primary."

"(g) To consider the Beckles Report on Sunrise Centre and persons with disabilities in general. Advance facilities and programmes offered to such persons"

"(h) Identify a site for a new secondary school and purchase it."

"(i) To conduct a management audit of the Department of Education."

These specific strategies are now being dealt with and the implementation and planning is beginning. I must say that in the early stages of Vision, especially the first two years, a lot was sent around planning.

"(2) To develop and implement a growth management plan to achieve and maintain a balance between the natural and built environment." So this is really under planning. And, what are we doing? One, is "To gain a better understanding of current use of land in these three Cayman Islands, and an assessment of the future use of land services." That was strategy 10, action plan 9.

"(b) To determine carrying capacity for the three Cayman Islands would achieve more acceptable quality of life for our residents."

"(c) To conduct a review of existing laws and regulations in order to provide the necessary framework for effective growth management." These are being dealt with.

"(d) To educate the public regarding the requirements for growth management in the Cayman Islands."

"(e) Draft and implement new laws and regulations in addition to the existing laws and regulations in order to provide a framework for effective growth management."

"(f) Produce a comprehensive, flexible and responsive development plan for Cayman Brac based on the village concept model of planning." Strategy 6, action plan 5.

"(g) To implement immediately a set of planning regulations governing the roads, aesthetic zoning design and development to ensure that unique character of Little Cayman is preserved and that minimal harm is done to the natural environment." Obviously, these are subject to the public's view.

"(h) To ensure that flooding will be minimised in new developments." That was strategy 9, action plan 3.

"(i) To provide adequate parking for all proposed developments."

"(j) To establish provisions for mandatory process of environmental impact assessments relating to development."

Also, on aviation, priorities for 2000 are to "Establish a safe day VFR Island style air field 3000 feet in length which will serve the airlift needs of Little Cayman." Strategy 7, action plan 2.

"To provide Cayman Brac with efficient and cost effective and suitable scheduled air service which is capable of responding to immediate current and future needs of the island." The schedules have been increased up to 13 per week, nearly doubled. And that's to come into effect with the third plane.

"(d) To encourage and support the national airline to become commercially focused so as to eliminate the need for government subsidy."

“(e) Maintaining awareness of Vision 2008 and the specific results action plans identify as being necessary to bring both the desired openness and accountability in local government.

“(a) To publish in the yearly anticipated outcomes for the ministry via the annual speech from the Throne [and we have done this].

“(b) To report back to the public on outcome achievements during the Budget Session of the Legislative Assembly.” And this is a lot of the new finance areas.

I will do what I have to do on Vision. It obviously has my full support. There have been a lot of sacrifices on my part. My permanent secretary spent a large amount of time on that and it meant I had to work a lot harder. But it was important that this be completed. We have delivered that document and we look forward to the implementation of it.

I would like to go very briefly into this whole position relating to . . . I don't have time for that though. I better just leave this for this afternoon, because it's going to take me about 15 minutes.

The Speaker: Would you prefer that we take the lunch-eon break at this time?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That may be better. I was going to go into Immigration, but I don't want to break what I am going to say on that, if I can help it.

The Speaker: It is my understanding that there will be an informal meeting in the Committee Room at approximately 2.15. So we will suspend proceedings until 3.15 for lunch.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.52 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.25 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The government has been criticised time and again about there not being enough transparency and freedom of information. This has been leveled at us time and again. I go back to what I said earlier. Some opposition members preach a lot, but they don't practice it.

If I stood up here today and tried to say anything that went on in the Immigration Select Committee, you would stop me, because select committees—that select committee and the others—are secret. We cannot disclose on the floor of this House anything that goes on in there. The opposition members have two functions basically: we deal with legislation and other matters, and they do private members' motions, they can go to select committees.

Now, we have had seven select committees in the last few years during this session. There's been one on Elections, one on A Freedom of Official Information Act, one on Minimum Wage, one on Privileges, one on the Standing Orders, and one to take input from the public on Review of Dependent Territories, and a select committee on the Immigration Law and Local Companies (Control) Law and Trade and Business Licensing Law.

Except for the time when the public was giving input into the select committee on Immigration (because I don't think the committee on Dependent Territories has advanced to that stage yet), the opposition has chosen not to be transparent, but to hold very important—far more important matters that what would happen in day-to-day government—in secret.

Standing Order 72(5) states, “(5) Subject to any order of the House or resolution of the committee, the sittings of a select committee shall be held in private.” So, the motion that private members put in here to do a select committee can clearly say that that committee shall be transparent and it shall be held in public.

Mr. Speaker, you know, and I know that for the last seven years the people who have preached this transparency have not made any move to put these select committees in public and make them transparent. But it goes beyond that. Even when the select committee is sitting afterwards, a resolution of the committee can make the proceedings transparent and public. It's very clear that the opposition does not practice what it preaches.

To put this even further and to really show you how it is nothing but talk, the very select committee on Freedom of Information and the Official Information Act is secret! Every select committee of the House . . . let me just go over it again, and if I am wrong, you can correct me. Every select committee of the House, unless there is an order of the legislature or unless the select committee itself passes a resolution to be transparent, is secret.

[Inaudible comment]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: What I am saying is nobody's fault. But don't tell the government about being transparent when the very select committee to deal with transparency is not transparent!

I mean, that may sound stupid to the public, but that is a fact. I have the select committee motion here.

[Inaudible comments]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Yeah, I would say so. It's a very convoluted way, as the member was saying, of looking at transparency when the opposition sits only in secret in their select committees. Any one of them can put a motion to make it transparent. But does that happen? No!

We all sit inside there, day after day, and a larger part of the select committees are private. And even on the select committee that is supposed to produce freedom of information and make things transparent, that select committee is held in secret!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER
(misleading)

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Again, I really don't wish to engage with the minister, but the minister has just said that the private members' motions which have led to select committees . . . and then he referred to the opposition as if the select committees . . . he said "their" select committees. All of those select committees are constituted with all members of this House. He is misleading the public into believing that those committees are committees that consist of the opposition only. Any obligation he is suggesting on the part of any one of us, he and the government also have the same obligation because they are part and parcel of the committee, sir. It is a misleading statement he just made.

The Speaker: I would say that what he is saying is that you can suspend Standing Orders to have the select committee held in public. Any member has that right, whether it be a government member or a backbench member.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That is correct. That is Standing Order 72(5). What I am really saying is that if the opposition is serious about transparency, then why haven't they made the very select committee that is dealing with transparency . . . why have they left that secret? My point is a very simple one—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER
(misleading)

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I understand what the minister is trying to do. If the minister didn't skew the facts we would understand very clearly that that committee has not begun its deliberations yet, and perhaps the minister's point is a very good one—I will endorse it to ensure that those deliberations are done in public. But the minister's attempt to make it sound like any one of us is trying to hold meetings in secret is misleading.

He keeps talking about the select committee on the Freedom of Information and the proposed legislation to come from it. He, sir, like all of us, knows what has transpired with that. The Chairman of the committee has told us verbally on more than one occasion the way forward with that, and we set a time schedule for that. So, it is not for him to insinuate that the committee has been meeting, and that it has been done in private, because that is not a fact.

The Speaker: Let me set the record straight. Under Standing Order 86, it says, "86. Any of these Standing Orders may be suspended at any time for a specific purpose by the consent of a majority of Members present."

Standing Order 72(5) says, "(5) Subject to any order of the House or resolution of the committee, the sittings of a select committee shall be held in private."

The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna M. Moyle: Thank you, sir.

You yourself said a while ago that any member in this parliament can suspend Standing Orders so that the proceedings of these committees be held in public. Am I correct?

The Speaker: Yes, that is correct.

Mrs. Edna M. Moyle: Then my question, if I may . . . the honourable minister is saying that the opposition who brings these motions on Transparency is holding meetings in private. Had he wanted transparency, could he not also suspend that Standing Order, seeing he is a member of all these committees?

The Speaker: I think I made that very clear. It says "any member."

I don't want to continue a debate on this. Please continue, Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Yes, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The difference between the government and the opposition is that the opposition is constantly leveling at the government that we need more transparency. What I am saying is that the opposition isn't transparent at all because important meetings, important select committee meetings dealing with far more important and serious matters than Executive Council or government deals with . . . the opposition has taken no move to make them transparent.

The fact that the select committee on Freedom of Information hasn't sat, unless something is done—and hopefully it will be done—the allegations against government should stop. At least some of our meetings are transparent and public. In fact, in this House hundreds and thousands of questions are asked. The government is as transparent as it can ever be.

I am saying that the opposition is not practicing what it preaches. If it were, these important select committees . . . especially those who level it at us so much . . . one of them would have put a motion to make it transparent. I mean, very important things, Immigration. Look at the problems that have arisen out of that.

[Inaudible interjections]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Here's a motion on Freedom of Information Official Information Act. Do you want me to read it?

"BE IT RESOLVED that the Cayman Islands Legislative Assembly enact a Freedom of Information Law similar to that proposed in the United Kingdom's Freedom of Information White Paper;

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a select committee of the whole House be convened to determine the parameters of such legislation, after public input."

Moved by: Mr. Roy Bodden, MLA, Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. Seconded by: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts, MLA, First Elected Member for George Town.

Is there any part of that which makes that public? No, Mr. Speaker.

That's all I am saying. There's no use in the opposition levelling at government that we are not transparent when the most important area where you need transparency has to be in the very important select committees of this House. So maybe the time has come to stop all of this nonsense about who's transparent and who isn't because the government is far more transparent than the opposition ever could be. And, like I said, up until now, the select committee on transparency is not transparent. That may seem funny, but that is a fact at this stage.

It was so easy for the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, or the First Elected Member for George Town to add the words 'And it is hereby ordered that it should be held in public.' Why? Because there is no desire on the part of those members to be transparent. So what needs to happen in this—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Let me just finish—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The member is misleading!

[inaudible comments and general uproar]

POINT OF ORDER
(misleading)

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The minister just insinuated that neither the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town nor I have any intention of practicing transparency. That is misleading.

While he uses his legal jargon with the Standing Orders to try to insinuate that, there is nothing that he can prove by any of our actions in this Legislative Assembly which says the same thing that he is saying. He is misleading not only this House, but also the public. And he knows better!

I am saying, sir, that he is making a misleading statement. You rule as you wish, but that is my point of order.

[an honourable member: Right!]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: May I just say something? He stopped me, and I was trying to tell him this before I could finish my sentence.

The Speaker: Please continue and let me hear you.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I was referring in relation to Private Member's Motion No. 12/98 on Freedom of Information, Official Information Act, in that the two members could have added 'And the proceedings shall be transparent and held in public' or words to that effect. That's the point I am making sir.

The Speaker: Taking it in it's full . . . that's not a point of order. Please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I will merely just refer (I am coming off this subject sir) very quickly once again to remind this House and just to read a few areas that . . . well, firstly I have to thank the Caymanian Compass for so many good editorials, but in the editorial of 28 February, 2000, they said that it was promoting positive change, and obviously therefore transparency for me to request a review and an audit, so to speak, of the Education Department. It's the first time that this has been done.

They went on to say, "If the Education Department review produces positive results other departments and organisations might be motivated to follow suit." As we know, they stated very clearly that "Going public with the strengths and weaknesses of local schools is an admirably positive step towards transparency and accountability within the education system."

There can be no doubt that the government is transparent. Like I said, it's all well and good to level and say these things, but the Scottish Poet, Keats, once said "Oh wad some power the giftie gie us; To see oursel's as others see us!"

Hon. David Ballantyne: Point of information—

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That was another poet I believe.

Hon. David Ballantyne: Point of information, Mr. Speaker. I believe the honourable minister is referring to the Scottish Poet, Robert Burns.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I bow to the honourable Attorney General's knowledge.

[Members' laughter]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I knew it was a Scot but I got the wrong one. They were both two good men!

And, Mr. Speaker, before the . . . well, my mother used to tell it to me, that's where I learned it.

Before the four people should criticise others, what it means, sir, is that they should look at themselves. Are they being transparent before they level a lack of transparency at someone else?

I am going to now move quickly on to deal with the position in relation to immigration and once again, because there is no transparency I can't say anything. In fact, anything I say will not relate to the proceedings to the select committee on immigration. I want to make that clear. I will be saying some things that were said outside of that select committee. I know that that select committee is not transparent, and is secret.

The select committee's report that was produced . . . and what I am saying here, sir, are my personal views. I want to make that clear. It is not speaking on behalf of government. I am speaking purely on my own behalf and not in relation to the select committee, because I don't want to get ruled out of order because that committee is secret.

First, to come out with the sections relating to permanent residency and status, one with 25 years for status and 15 for residence, and then say that a person can only have a work permit for five years means that no future person could acquire permanent residence or status. That seems to be very clear. This, I tried to point out informally and outside of the committee.

Also, there's not much use in having an Immigration Board if they have no discretion. And it has to be some flexibility. I agree with the Third Elected Member for George Town who dealt with this. There must be some discretion and flexibility in the length of time that work permits are issued for. If the policy is too harsh, and indeed areas of this could be so construed, then it could well run investors and people out of the country. This happened in the Bahamas 15 or 20 years ago. It was a mistake they made. We reaped the benefits of it and we should not make this again.

Now, if that policy had followed more closely on the Vision document policy, what that said (and this was condensed, but I believe my interpretation was right) . . . there were three phases, phases 1, 2, and 3. What they said in relation to work permits was that during phase 2 the maximum is to be ten years, and during phase 3, such maximum is to be 15 years. And they said that after five to seven years (I will read this to be sure I am interpreting this right), it says, "establish after the transition period no new permit holder can aspire to permanent residence or Caymanian status for a period of five to seven years at the end of which time the position will be subject to review [this is where the difference comes in] with a view to the implementation of the permit holder permanent residence/status graduation or ladder system."

So, there would be a period of time where people would come in on a permit. At the end of five to seven years it seems that a decision would be made then whether that person would progress on for permanent residence, and, if so, they would be subject to graduation or the ladder system. Then, at the end of 15 years, it's the last action step, it said "Establish that all persons who reach a maximum allowable length of stay in the islands under the work permit system [which is ten years during phase 2 and 15 years in aggregate during phase 3,] having not qualified for the grant of permanent residence leave the island for a minimum period of one to two years."

So, this was not a matter of an absolute bar, but it allowed for an equitable approach with discretion in the Board. If people were needed in the country, in accordance with all the guidelines (which are quite a few, laid down in the law, not guidelines but conditions), then a person could go on to get permanent residence and ultimately status. If not, and it was refused at the length of that time, then they would have to leave the island for a minimum of one or two years. That was very different from what has come out in this saying that work permits can be issued for five years only.

I know this is a discussion paper, and this is why I have my personal views. But that in itself will hurt this country and the businesses a lot, and the people a lot. Take a simple example: A person looking after an elderly person. They are used to giving medication. At the end of five years you are going to turn them over, start over again, bring somebody new in, train them up again, . . . and that's even more pronounced in some types of business. I believe the public feedback is going to be that that is not acceptable in that form.

I want to draw a clear distinction between the government and the select committee because these have been used interchangeably. The select committee is made up of all members of this House, which includes the government members. But the government produced a press release quite a while ago, just after this came out, within a week of it, in which the five ministers of government clearly said, and I quote "The recently published Select Committee's paper for public feedback is purely for the public to consider and give its views to the Select Committee. They are not recommendations, they are only issues for discussion. We, the Ministers of Government, will listen to and follow the public's views and there is no commitment on the Government to act in any of these matters."

The interim report is a report of the Select Committee. It is not a report of the Government. I want to make that clear. Subsequently, a similar press release was made on Thursday or Friday of last week that came from the Select Committee of the House. So there is a clear distinction between the select committee and government.

I would just like to point out a few other things. This honourable House deals with serious legislation only, or deals with legislation. Under legislation, much lower down the rung are regulations that are dealt with by Executive Council, orders that are dealt with sometimes by Executive Council, sometimes by the Governor directly, and directives, which are really a very lower subsidiary form of legislation. It appears that the Legislative Assembly seems now to wish to have legislative participation in the issuing of directives.

I guess what I am saying sir, is that this is a Legislative Assembly. It deals with the most serious legislation and that seems very strange that this House is going to start having legislative participation. I am not too sure whether that means passing laws relating to directives, or the legislature dealing with participating in directives or whatever.

I would like to make on other point, sir. In the hierarchy of the appeals procedure, the first appeals in a court system in Cayman go from the Magistrate's Court to the Court of Appeal. One person sits as a judge in a Court of Appeal where there are three judges, a president and two. The highest Court is the Privy Council, which ranges from five to seven Law Lords, or Privy Counsellors.

Under the Appeals procedure here, the most serious matters, status and permanent residence, will go to one person, whereas the least serious matters, work permit renewals and grants, go to a tribunal consisting of a chairman and two other persons. I think these roles are very much reversed. The more serious matters go to higher appeal courts, if they are following what I say on that.

I would ask the public to look carefully at this and to give us the feedback. But as the government clearly stated a week or so ago, we will follow the wishes of the public. These are really not recommendations, and we are not bound by them.

Now, the statement read today by the honourable First Official Member sets out very practical changes that I think will be useful. For example, reducing from the $150 to $2000 deposits to a flat fee of $200 would allow for it to be less expensive for persons coming from further away to come here. Extending the temporary from 60 to 90 days is also a positive step because many times people have to go back for extensions.

Also, to speed up the grant of extensions for visitors permits within the guidelines, and also where people come more in a tourist situation that if they are going to look for a job they should be back off the island when they apply for the permits. Those I think are positive. Also the dealing with permits with companies so that the training and ensuring that proper three year business plans are in place in relation to training and moving Caymanians upwards is very important. This would be in place. Then there will be an inducement for Caymanians to move upward in the workforce.

The Speaker: May I interrupt you just one moment?

Is it the wish of members that we continue straight to 4.30 without a break, or should we take the afternoon break?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Let's continue so we can get rid of him!

The Speaker: Is that the wish of the House? That we continue until 4.30?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes sir!

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I intend to now deal with as much as I can on Cayman Airways. Obviously, the First Elected Member for George Town has put many, many questions. I will answer what I can within my time, but those that get left unanswered I will obviously have to try to deal with at a later stage.

I wanted to first put the accounts of Cayman Airways into some perspective. Back in 1992, when this government inherited Cayman Airways, it was in a very serious financial state. In fact, in 1991, the net loss was $14,310,056, a horrendous sum. At the time it owed on a bank overdraft, $10,143,264. Today, while I am dealing with the 1998 audited accounts, which will be laid on the Table, our overdraft had been reduced to $243,222.

Also, the long-term liabilities were then $4.2 million and the current portion of the long-term liabilities is now $820,000. The current liabilities were $36,054,422. At the end of 1998 the liabilities were $18,604,852, or one-half of what they were at that stage.

The total shareholders deficiency at the end of 1992 was $18.9 million. The shareholders deficiency at the end of 1998 was $5.7 million.

Now, the contingent liability of the company at that time was $105 million. It either exceeded or was close to being the government's total annual revenue for the year. If that had continued, it could well have wiped out the whole country, if that $105 million had ultimately been called on. It took a long time for me and the then Board and managing director to negotiate our way out of that contingent liability. We also had judgments in London against Cayman Airways, and it was not a very simple position at all.

We have moved to a stage where several questions have been raised. What I would like to first say is that criticism was made of the $4 million and the $600,000 that goes in each year as a subsidy of Cayman Airways. I would like to point out that, firstly, the $4 million we get now is the same amount we got seven years ago. The $600,000 has come in more recently, within the last three or four years. But it is substantially the subsidy of seven years ago. Believe me, the amount of money put in in the early days, where Finance Committee met at very short notice and appropriated millions of dollars, is something that has to show the stability of the company that that has not increased pea tremendously since then.

It is all well and good to criticise that one subsidy. When you look at CAL it is the one subsidy that everyone seems to look at and level criticism. But we turn to pages 22 and 23 of the Draft Budget Document, we will find that under grants, contributions and subsidies, the government in the year 2000 paid out $36,897,328 out of which $4.6 was CAL. But nothing is said about the rest of theses, only poor old CAL is taken and singled out. Do you know how many grants, contributions and subsidies will be made in the year 2000? We are one of 79.

Yes, it would be good to cut that subsidy. But there are other statutory authorities, other subsidies in this thing that far exceed CAL, and nothing is said about that. Last year it was $32,760,864, and probably about 79 as well. So I don't think it is fair to constantly single out CAL for subsidy and say nothing about all these other statutory authorities, companies and everything else.

It would really have been shocking, if you think the $4 million is anything, but back in August 1991 some options were given to CAL of what to do. Option 1 would have meant $12 million in cash a year. The second option (and this is not paying any of the fees) would have been $800,000 cash injection from government. So CAL has stabilised.

They have good staff. They have dedicated staff. I guess that so much is said about not spending any more, yet we hear the call about making settlements to staff or this or that when we are saying stop spending money.

The questions relating to long term CAL employees who do not have pension benefits prior to the 1998 mandatory pensions, CAL has only 20 of its 300 plus employees who are over 45 years of age, and have more than 10 years of service. Of this group, seven are over 55 and only one has 20 years of service. CAL management is sensitive to the issue, has agreed prior to this with the ministry to develop a recommendation for board consideration for this small group of employee. So, something is being done.

The other area was in relation to why the leasing companies transferred the jets to CAL. The answer is that they were set up to be legally separate and to isolate liability. What has happened (because of the barrage of questions in this House over seven years) the legal distinction and the advantage we would have gotten by being able to say that the two companies are at arm's length was destroyed because I had to answer questions which dealt with CAL and the jets. Even the public has legally separated the two.

Questions came in such a way, that yes, I answered about the jets. Ultimately, the legal advantage was destroyed. In my opinion it was destroyed maybe three years ago. Everything from the very accounts . . . in fact, at one stage I was requested to consolidate the accounts of the companies because they are owned by government. But the legal distinction was ultimately destroyed.

I wanted to say one other thing. Some Internet release caymannetnews.com said that the cost of CAL QC could surpass $10.5 million to $13 million. That's nonsense. Utter nonsense. I don't know where caymannetnews.com has come from or who it is, but they have also said that the jet is being held because it can't be paid for. That's a total lie. Really, whoever is responsible for this should be responsible enough to call CAL.

About Caymanian staff and training, the maintenance staff, I may ultimately have to answer the rest of these if the member asks me questions. I have the answer, but it's a page long. Anyhow, only two persons with airline qualifications applied for approval of hire. Ads were placed in Jamaica, Bahamas, Trinidad, training for two local persons currently employed in the maintenance department has also been planned in an effort to continue upgrading skills and qualifications of staff. Yes, we employ Caymanians whenever they are available. Sometimes we do bring in persons from other countries, and sometimes they need to acquire company or local licenses and yes, they have to be given some training here.

In summary, the education five-year plan is a living, vibrant plan. It is updated, and has been updated every year other than one with Vision. The education system is good. In fact, our results have been the highest in the Caribbean year after year, consistently. The position of the Cayman Islands as far as its economy goes is very good. I showed that in 1999 the difference between the amount repaid on principal and the amount borrowed was only $2 million, and I repeated the statement by the Financial Secretary. And this year, 2000, it is estimated to only be $1.8 million, the difference between the loan and what was repaid.

Further, by the year 2005 the debt will only be $30.1 million. I also pointed out that in pensions we have put vast sums that we could have put into the general reserves or could have paid off debt or done something else with it. In fact, $70 million increase, which is partly what has been put in by government, has gone in there. That could have gone elsewhere.

I would just like to point out that the legal ruling was that there was no obligation to pay into a fund for past pensions.

Also, at present the revenue coming from the pension fund is twice the amount needed to fund present and past pensions. So every year the less than $6 million goes to pay for those pensions, but in any event nothing comes out of that fund, we pay for it out of revenue.

I also pointed out that, as the Financial Secretary said, $18-odd million was contributed as a profit, surplus or whatever of recurrent last year towards the capital of the country. Also last year, the drawings on loans were much less. I think it was $12.8 something million that we could have borrowed.

On Vision, I was given the responsibility to produce the Vision document which was really done by the planning team, so to speak, and the hundreds of people involved in that document. I thank the Lord that it has now been completed.

I just want to mention one other thing. The First Elected Member for George Town mentioned that the third jet would only be used for passengers and not freight. That is not correct. They can use it for freight and passengers. And the CAA did not recommend that we do not buy it. I can give that in more detail, but that is a fact. That is very important.

What was passed in relation to garbage fees that will have to be corrected, because the areas were wrong, should only have been that houses that are on the water, and apartments that are on the water between the Wharf Restaurant and West Bay, have increased to the $300.

Somehow that got extended all over the place and has caused quite a bit of concern. So it was really the Seven Mile Beach area.

[Inaudible interjections]

Hon. Truman M. Boddien: Well, that's not what this House meant to have passed. No. All of us were involved. This is a law isn't it? I didn't know any more than the First Elected Member for George Town. I thought all we were doing was passing it between the Wharf Restaurant and the West Bay cemetery for houses on the beach.

At least it's good to see that I've kept this debate so high that I have most members still smiling with me.

I guess what I would say to members is that it is very important to get the right perspective on things, to take a positive attitude, to look at the good children we have, the good parts of the economy. Yes, there are problems. But to those who criticise the problems, please give us some solutions to those.

I would ask that as we continue, sir, that the Good Lord will continue to bless this country. It is a good country. It's religious and the country itself, especially when we look at the chaos that exists, whether in the education system or the economy or otherwise, we are indeed very blessed. I would ask the Good Lord that that continue in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: We have approximately seven minutes to the standard adjournment time. I think it's unconscionable to ask someone to start speaking in that short period of time. I recommend that we move the adjournment of this honourable House.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: You can't ask someone who has listened to him all that time, Mr. Speaker, it's right to do that.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Anthony Eden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM Thursday.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Thursday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.28 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 9 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
THURSDAY
9 MARCH 2000
10.27 AM

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is not feeling well.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. I would appreciate the moving of a motion to suspend Standing Order 14(3) in order to take Government Business in lieu of Private Members' Motions, as today is Thursday.

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(3)

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Mr. Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 14(3) so that Government Business may take precedence over Private Members' Motions, this being Thursday.

The Speaker: I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Standing Order has been suspended.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14(3) TO ALLOW GOVERNMENT BUSINESS TO TAKE PRECEDENCE OVER PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS.

The Speaker: Moving on to Government Business: Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J. Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 18 February 2000.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, before we get into the continuation of the debate, as you are aware I got your permission not to be here on Monday. When we left on Friday, you were supposed to do a ruling on my point of order with regard to what the Minister of Education was reading. I would like to know what that ruling was.

The Speaker: That was read into the Hansard. I would suggest that you get a copy of the Hansard and we will discuss it after that, please.

The floor is opened to debate. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J. SMITH, CBE, GOV-
ERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 18
FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I rise to offer my contribution to the Throne Speech as delivered by His Excellency the Governor. I too would like to take this opportunity to offer congratulations to him on his maiden speech, as some people term it when you deliver your first speech to a Parliament. I think he did a good job.

I would also like to say that I am very pleased at the level of debate that is taking place in this Honourable House up until this time. I think it was started by my colleague, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and the standard has been maintained.

I think this is a good message to go out to the public that we can debate at a level where I am sure the public appreciates what we say and do here. Many people say that our younger generation will be listening to us, and I am sure this is a good example that we set for them. I will briefly go over areas that are not pertinent to my ministry and then I will speak on my ministry in more detail.

I would like to say special thanks and best wishes to Mr. Thomas Russell who will be stepping down as the Cayman Islands representative in the United Kingdom. I know Mr. Russell has done these islands a great deal of justice. I would venture to say he was one of the most, if not the most, popular Governor ever to come to these islands and he has represented the Cayman Islands in the United Kingdom with very professional and very capable efforts.

I would also like to offer congratulations to our own Caymanian, Ms. Jennifer Dilbert, who will be taking over the post. I am quite certain that she will also do the Cayman Islands proud being the first Caymanian to be appointed to this post . . . and a woman as has been indicated to me by my friend, the Elected Member for North Side. This shows, once again, the maturity these islands have come to and I know it will be good for us all as we have a person there with our feelings and emotions knowing the culture and the way that we think. I think she will do a great job.

The Royal Cayman Islands Police Force has been under a very difficult strain lately. I must take my hat off to its leader, the Commissioner, for the job that he has done. Over recent times, from September last year, the difficulties that he has had to deal with, the problems and riots at Northward with escaped prisoners—much of problems that he has had to deal with is not by the Police own making. One of the things that I appreciate with Commissioner Thursfield is his forthrightness and frankness in sharing with members of Parliament and the public what has taken place and what he plans to do.

One of things that I appreciate and see is the aspiration for this year, the pilot scheme of cycled patrols and the school liaison. Also, Mr. Speaker, the programme DARE, which I am made to understand is very popular in the United Kingdom and also in the United States, where the early intervention programme is focused at the primary school level. People will be sick of hearing me preach this but I honestly feel that the earlier get to our youth to make them aware of the dangers of drugs and its dreadful effects on them, the better it is. I strongly support the efforts in that area.

Moving on to the Prison Department, these certainly have been perilous times for these islands. But, thanks be to God, there is a degree of stability now as we move forward to make Northward [Prison] a more secure place. I had the privilege last year along with the Honourable First Official Member and a gentleman from Social Services in the Probation [Section] to visit the Turks and Caicos Islands where we observed their prison.

I must say I was quite impressed with what I saw there. It was a sensible and a logical layout. There was a part in the middle and down three or four lines you could look and observe exactly what was going on. I think in the future if we come to that stage when we do build a new prison (as has been advocated by some people) that we have the opportunity to look at a situation like this where it could be utilised here in the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to now speak on areas in Immigration. As we all know, this House has sat in a Select Committee of the whole House dealing with the concerns of immigration and we all know that for us to go forward as a community we have to come to grips with the immigration situation in these islands.

Over this weekend, I spoke to a lady from my own constituency. She has been here for 42 years and still does not know what will happen to her. I hope that once we have come to a resolution and finish taking input from the public . . . and many of these people are in this situation, Mr. Speaker, they know no other home but the Cayman Islands. I think we have to give them that assurance or reassurance that after spending so many years here some 2 - 3 decades and in this instance 4 decades that they will be able to live with the comfort of knowing that they have a safe place of abode.

Many of them have made significant and impressive contributions to the development of these islands, and I think it is no more than fair that we regularise and give them that degree of comfort.

One of the areas that I would like to speak on . . . I think just last week ideas were put forward by the First Elected Member for George Town, the Chairman of the Immigration Board, and I. But what I would like to say to the public is that all we did was summarise what input we had taken from the public and what we had gathered within the community. It was not our putting forward.

This sub-committee was chaired by my good friend, the First Official Member of Government. I must say, I think in what we were doing there was a good job and it made it easier for the whole committee of the House to understand what we were doing.

I must say that under the chairmanship of the Second Official Member we have made significant strides and we have all as an elected Parliament stuck together on this. We have come a long way and it is an area that whatever happens in this Parliament, we can certainly say that we have taken this bull by the horns and have attempted to deal with it. We have given the public the opportunity for input and there have been no firm decisions, no final proposals as to what will happen.

We still invite the public's input, and we look forward that before this House is finished that we can finally come forward with the document that we as representatives and the public on a whole will be able to live with and go forward for the betterment of these islands.

Mr. Speaker, in the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development, there has been a tremendous amount of work done under the able leadership of the Honourable Third Official Member. How he holds out sometimes is beyond my wildest understanding. He seems to be in the Glass House every time I am there late and I think we can look up to his leadership in this area under very difficult circumstances, as every time we turn around we seem to be confronted with something from OECD, G-7, EU—you name it!—and we are being laced with it. But thank goodness, with his faith in God it has given him the ability to lead and guide these islands in the area of finance.

He has many able and good managers that work with him. And I must take my hat off to Mr. Peter Gough and his support staff—for the many hours that they put in and Budget time. They will sit down and talk about our concerns if we don't understand what is what and the further implications. These people always have the time to sit and talk with us.

Mr. Speaker, the initiatives that are being put in place and the meetings that are being arranged and the discussions under the able leadership of my colleague, the Minister of Education, the Third Elected Member for George Town; the Minister for Tourism, the Second Official Member and, of course, as I said earlier the Honourable Financial Secretary. I feel that these will pay dividends. As the public out there knows the commitment of the Cayman Islands in these areas, our firm intention to deal with whatever the problems are and to raise the standard of doing business in the Cayman Islands. We have always been an international leader and we will continue to do this in the good hope that the public out there internationally will understand the commitment that these islands have to where we are now the fifth largest financial centre in the world.

We take this serious, Mr. Speaker, and when we have the leadership that we have here and the dedication, the many long hours that these gentlemen have to put in, we hope that it comes to a successful conclusion. It is really the future of these islands and we have to do what is best and I know that is now being done.

Mr. Speaker, there has been much talk about pension and the Pension Board. All I would say on that is that whatever happens I think it is best for the civil service that equity seemed to be done across the board. And, once all of our Caymanians are comfortable, it will encourage them to perform at a higher level and the dedication and the commitment there by our Caymanian senior managers, we must encourage them.

I would urge that whatever support that we need to give to them, whatever we need to put in place to make it easier for them who put in long hours that we make sure that everything is equitable across the board.

We know the phenomenal success of our Stock Exchange. I know it is the fastest growing of any entity in the world of this type and it has brought the Cayman Islands so that the international monetary [personnel] will understand and know the commitment once again of our Cayman Islands.

Also, the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority when we move on with the proper legislation to have it as independent as possible, that is something that the international operators are looking at and I know once that is finalised it will be another stepping stone to show how serious the Cayman Islands are about our position in international finance.

I would like to take my hat off to the Deputy Financial Secretary for the work he has done on the Shipping Registry. Its incredible the growth that we have seen in that area and I say it bodes well for the Cayman Islands what has been put in place under his leadership.

Customs, I don't need to say a lot. Under the able leadership of the Collector, Mr. Carlon Powery, for the first time ever that department exceeded revenue of $100 million to the tune of $102.5 million in 1999. What was also most encouraging, Mr. Speaker, is Cayman Brac's contribution which was in excess of $2 million.

It goes to show that the efforts that we have put in place to assist Cayman Brac are now paying off. But we must not just pay lip service to what is happening in Cayman Brac.

We must continue to look at areas where we as a Government can assist and improve the fate of Cayman Brac because when you look at the innovative manner and the ambitious way of the Cayman Brac people as many of the leading businesses and firms are headed by Cayman Brac individuals. I know it is incumbent on us to put in place what we need to do to make it easier for the young people over there (in Cayman Brac) to make a living. I feel sure that within the Government system alone there is much back office work that could be put over there. So, we have to take this serious and assist wherever we can.

Speaking on the Ministry of Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources, I had the honour and the opportunity yesterday to attend the very successful 34th Agricultural Show. It was most impressive and the throngs of people that were there, I think, the Minister has done a good job in turning this around and the support that the farmers need we must once again not just give lip service to them but we must be serious and genuine.

One of the areas that I looked at is really pertinent now to the Agricultural Show, and that is the prizes that are offered to the farmers who truck in their animals and produce from long distances. The first place prize for some is just a pittance, sometimes $5. I think the cattle is $100 and if you think it is a picnic bringing those cattle from long distances with trailers, up all hours of the night . . . It was also good to see at the fair the representation from the Cayman Brac people.

The organisation was also very pleasing. I must take off my hat to the Minister for Community Affairs and the Sister Islands to see her there some ungodly hours working along with our people.

This is a good message to send, the encouragement that we give to them. I know their dreams and aspirations is one day to have their own fair over there (Cayman Brac). That would certainly give a lot of encouragement. The wonderful products that I see coming from there—the papaya, cassava, sweet potatoes, bananas, and some of the cattle. It really goes to show when a determined effort is put forward by a community what can be done.

The 911 Emergency Communication System, we all know how beneficial that is to these islands and we have come a long way since we have started this a few years back but it is of very great importance to these islands especially in cases of emergency.

Postal Department: It is with great pride and joy that I speak on this as the electoral district of Bodden Town was just recently the recipient of a brand new Post Office being opened. This was desperately needed in that district. The Postmistress there, literally on the edge of the road for decades under very difficult and adverse circumstances, being suffocated by dust and every time she stepped through the door, she was taking her life in her hand, actually almost right in the middle of the road. But, thank God, the people of Bodden Town are very pleased to have this outstanding facility and it was good to know that we as representatives for Bodden Town work together and supported this community effort.

It was also pleasing to see that in due course we will be looking at post offices in Savannah and also one at the West End in Cayman Brac. I don't need to tell this Honourable House how the Savannah/Newlands area is literally exploding population-wise over the past decade. We all know that the Bodden Town electoral district has been the fastest growing district in these islands and we certainly look forward to the day when we can have a much more enhanced and enlarged facility for that area of the district.

Mr. Speaker, in the Ministry of Tourism we continue to make strides. There was a slight downturn in air arrivals last year but beside that there was a significant increase in cruise ship arrivals, which has been of great benefit to these islands. We continue to grow in this area and I am very pleased with the facilities that are now in place for the visitors like the Botanic Park and our own district of Bodden Town, Pedro Castle. This is an absolutely wonderful facility and, I think, it's a credit to these islands and I would say to the entire Caribbean when I see what has been put in place there.

Yes, it has cost a few dollars more than what we expected, but I think it is all worth the while as its part of the history and culture of these islands.

If we don't know our history and we cannot tell our children much about where we have come from, it can now be seen in the displays at Pedro Castle. And, once again the beauty of the Botanic Park no matter how stressed or uptight you may be it is most relaxing when you take a walk through that wonderful facility.

Road Works: I take great pride in seeing the amount of work being done on the roads—and I must say that Bodden Town and the eastern districts actually from Prospect up to Breakers—historically, Bodden Town was a district that was neglected in past administrations prior to 1992. There was minimal work done despite being the fastest growing district in the island but there is still much to be done.

When I look at the barber green paver that has been put down, I am very pleased to see how the shoulders are now being fixed. I know it was a serious concern of all of us as legislators the possibility of overturning but I know in due course the shoulders' work will be completed. They are really doing a good job on this.

I am sure that for the next one or two decades that amount of work that is being done will not have to be dealt with. It is of a very high standard and it is a pleasure when you get on from by Cayman Foods and go right on to Spotts. I am looking forward as we go into this year and next year, whoever is here, that they will continue these programmes of improving our main roads.

I know specifically in Bodden Town, we still have a lot of side roads that need to be dealt with that has never been touched. I know the Hirst Road going into Newlands and Northward has never had a recent overlay or chip and spray, but I am hoping that we can do some of that work this year.

One of the biggest concerns to us as representatives of Bodden Town is the junction by Tall Tree. I am hoping that we can deal with this as it is a source of frustration in the morning for people coming out of there because of the number of people that's now living in that area. I guess this is one of the problems that we experience when we move into communities that are populous. We have to deal with the side effects. But I am hoping that with my colleague, the Minister for Works, that we can come to a solution that will ease this up. Basically, what I see works really effectively is if we as drivers courteously and sensibly . . . all we need to do is to ease our foot off the break and let one or two cars come out and the traffic keeps flowing.

Where the big problem comes in is when we stop and let out maybe 4 - 6 cars and then the chain reaction which then takes us into Bodden Town almost as far as Pease Bay. I know that the Minister will be looking and has looked at us with many of these problem areas and we will deal with this. It's not a short-term solution but as we go forward there must be some relief.

I am very pleased with how the Crewe Road Bypass is moving. I see they are now at the area close to the Lions Centre and once this is sorted out hopefully in very short time, it will alleviate many of the problems that we have.

Mr. Speaker, what I found so very interesting this morning (and it is with the knowledge that the schools are out) was how the traffic flowed. Can't we as legislators and the powers that be—the Education Department—can we not sit down and analyse this situation and try to work around that problem whether we take a few hundred thousand dollars and provide a dependable and trustworthy public transportation system, or whether we need to sit with education and vary the time an hour or so . . .? But it was incredible at primetime this morning, I left home a little bit after 8.00 a.m. and by 8.30 a.m. I was in town. Normally that takes an hour or an hour and a half. We must as a country, Mr. Speaker, look at these problems and try to address them.

Building more roads will help. But we have to come to grips with the number of cars on this island. There will be relief, but what it boils down, Mr. Speaker, is that when the vehicles get into George Town, where are they going to go? I am hoping that we as legislators can sit together and discuss and I know under the leadership of the Minister for Works that we can come up with solutions. I think it is of great importance that we do this not only for us here in the Cayman Islands but for the growth of our tourism industry. Nobody wants to come and sit here hours on end in traffic lines.

I know we as Caymanians have difficulty in adapting to change but I sincerely believe that if we provide a dependable transportation system, I would be willing to leave my car at home, I wouldn't want to be fighting the traffic the way that I do. But once again it just boils down to coming together as mature and bipartisan representatives to deal with these problems.

Fire Service. What can I say? We cannot give enough credit to the Chief Fire Officer, Mr. Kirkland Nixon, under his leadership what he has been able to accomplish with the efforts and dedication of his staff and whatever the philosophy he has put in place of using so many Caymanians. I think these islands can certainly with pride take our hats off to Mr. Nixon.

I am pleased to know that for the eastern districts a location has been identified where the Vehicle Licensing Unit for Bodden Town, North Side, and East End should come on line later on this year. Once again, this will offer some relief from the congestion especially of the big vehicles which are mostly on the eastern part of the island where they can go in and get inspected and keep that heavy traffic coming into George Town.

Mr. Speaker, on the Port Authority, I am pleased to see how things are moving there with the new crane and the amount of cargo that is handled. I know there were concerns by some of us over the speediness and the turn-around for the boats, but this seems to have gotten sorted out. I am glad that we are now in a position where we are going to make some money out of that facility.

I now move on to the Ministry of Education. It was pleasing to see the development of the national curriculum, the key stages 3 and 4 and the books, Years 1 through 6, have been developed in the area of Social Studies. This, Mr. Speaker, is another indicator of the progress of the Cayman Islands where we can have books that are relevant and pertinent to our own culture.

I am pleased to see the training of Caymanian teachers and the emphasis being placed on moving more Caymanians. I do know that one of the concerns at that time that the Honourable Deputy Financial Secretary was looking at was increasing the entry-level wages of university students into education (the teachers). The little pittance that they were getting it's good to see that they now have some relief also nursing.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: [Inaudible comment]

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: It's quite interesting and the Member from North Side is correct that the vast majority of these people . . . We must encourage and do whatever we need to do to make it easier especially for the teachers, nurses and doctors.

Prior to this, nobody wanted to go there—it was the last place in the world they wanted to go to work at and it was the facility that existed in previous times but thank God, I have seen an increase. I encourage our young Caymanians, our graduates that are coming out of high school to look and focus on teaching and medicine. There can be no greater degree of satisfaction than having our own Caymanians work in these areas.

The area that really makes me feel sad is what I have experienced with the Breakers Rehab, and the great difficulty that the Minister had with getting approval for a primary school at Spotts. I am continuing to experience with the secure remand rehabilitation facility for our juveniles.

We as a country and as legislators must look at these difficulties. Something as important as education and the rehabilitation of our youth, we must be able to cut through the bureaucracy of sitting down and waiting when people that don't even live in the district can sit down and object to facilities. I am not saying that we deny people their democratic right to object, but, by God, we cannot continue with what's going on in these areas.

I am pleased to see the advancement of the air conditioning of all of the primary schools and now shortly all of the secondary schools. I found it quite interesting last week when I attended John Gray High School, year 12 in preparation for their final exams when it was revealed to us that over 90% of the graduating class of 2000 plan to attend our community college. This speaks well, Mr. Speaker, for the facility. It allows our young children who may not be ready for the big wide world to stay at home with their parents and family and have that degree of protection and safety.

There are so many wonderful young children out there, Mr. Speaker. Just this last Monday afternoon, I was listening to some wonderful young ladies who spent their Monday afternoons between 4.00 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Radio Cayman. I think we should take our hats off to these young ladies—they are Anika Martin, Faith Geely and her sister Grace, there was a young lady there from West Bay, I don't recall her name right now.

But, Mr. Speaker, when you listened to the depth and understanding that these young ladies have, their concerns for these islands it was very touching to me. The concerns of the fast development of these islands, of the mangroves and of their very serious concern that what we as parents and adults took for granted when we were growing up, they worry that they may not have this for themselves or their children down the line.

It was a pleasure to listen to them and I would like to encourage them and other young people to express their feelings in this manner and to let us as representatives know their concerns. By doing this, Mr. Speaker, we can make a better place for us all in which to live.

Mr. Speaker, I may be out of line on this next subject, but it is dear to my heart and all of us as representatives from the Bodden Town. It is the recognition by the International College of the Cayman Islands (ICCI). It's hard to believe that still exists in this day and age when . . . and I am not bragging about my ability but I will certainly brag about the ability of the Third Official Member of this House who went there, my good friend in the private sector, Mr. Carlyle McLaughlin, was a partner in the firm of Ernest and Young, many others and I that these island can look up to as examples and still wherever the powers may be when it comes to recognition or promotion, I am not sure which one it is within the civil service it is still not looked at.

I do know that there was an assessment made, but I still think that we as a nation need to look at this situation. The College has been there for over three decades. Back in 1970 when I came out of the United States Military, one of the benefits I had for serving three years was to receive benefits under the GI Bill. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Defence recognised ICCI (at that time) as a provider of higher education. Let me tell you that there are not too many colleges in the Caribbean that had that distinction.

One of the concerns is the rating by two of the catalogues or magazines that recognise schools of higher learning (one is Barons and the other is Petersons). Barons' terminology refers to "competitive" and Petersons' refers to "difficult." But, Mr. Speaker, why can't we sit and look at this and get it resolved? There are many young Caymanians that have been there and have gotten their degrees and are now in the private sector and they receive due benefit. I would encourage the powers that be to once again look at that situation. Mr. Speaker, if we don't do something I don't see how the College can continue, and that would be sad.

I know that some of the students that go there may not have finished high school, but they are prepared to work. Let us give our people the chance. Let us give them a choice as to where they would like to go. It is a fact that the degrees from ICCI can be transferred to most universities in the United States.

What is the big mystery?

What is the big hang-up?

I must declare my interest in saying that other Members of this House and I are on the Board of Trustees, but I think it is a great injustice what is being done. Whatever we need to do to get it regularised, let us as a Parliament or as a community come to grips with it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move on to the Ministry of Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture. It has been a distinct pleasure to work with Mrs. O'Connor-Connolly, the elected Minister responsible. She, like most of us, has had difficult times to get to where she is. But I am very proud of what she has been able to accomplish, sometimes without the full support that I think is due her for whatever reason.

As I indicated earlier, I saw how she worked with her people in arranging to get them to come to the Agricultural Fair yesterday from the early morning hours. I am also aware of the tremendous efforts when the floods were in Cayman Brac last year. I say, give her the chance. I can tell you also that (and I am not taking stories out of Executive Council) she has brought some very good legal perspectives and different angles. I really appreciate some of the ideas that she comes forward with. She has certainly brought a degree of stability to the National Pension Plan, her work with the youth and sports and also with women.

I was certainly pleased to see that one of the outlines for this year (under Community Affairs) was that the Ministry would liaise with the Ministry of Health to see how efforts can be combined to strengthen communities using the Community Development Officers, the Community Development Action Communities and the District Beautification Committees.

Mr. Speaker, I very much welcome this. Even before she put this in here, she and I had been talking of how we could work and share some of the resources. One of these is in Cayman Brac in the area where the old swimming pool was, and I look forward to working with her where I am made to understand that the young people over there want to develop a facility where they can go and (to put in slang terms) 'hang out,' be supervised and have fun.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move on to my own ministry. The first area that I would like to touch on is what was formerly Cayman Counselling Centre. We have now changed the name, and it has become a department for better and easier management to Caribbean Haven Outpatient Services. Counselling issues relating to alcohol and drug addiction remains the focus of the Caribbean Haven Outpatient Services.

During 1999, 295 new clients were assessed and entered the treatment services. In addition, continuing care was provided to 373 clients already in the service. This represents an increase of 63 new clients. As well as addiction specific counselling, Caribbean Haven Outpatient Services offers counselling to people affected by domestic violence, sexual abuse, marital and family problems, depression and poor self-esteem. In 1999, there was an increase from 1998 to 158 non-substance-abusing clients. Thirty-one clients were assessed as part of our outreach programming and entered treatment via the district clinics last year.

Mr. Speaker, an early intervention group was piloted in cooperation with the Women's Resource Centre for young female adolescents and had excellent results. This group will be added to Caribbean Haven's ongoing treatment programme. Two more adolescent treatment programme groups were conducted at John Gray High School and in addition adolescents referred by the Cayman Islands Marine Institute were counselled at Caribbean Haven Outpatient Services.

The services provided to Her Majesty's Prison Northward have been expanded to include an increase in counselling time for both male and female inmates and a Caribbean Haven Counsellor is co-facilitating an ongoing group therapy which meets weekly.

Staff from Caribbean Haven Outpatient Services was heavily involved in the 1999 drug awareness month activities. One of the events sponsored by Caribbean Haven was an open house during which participation awards were presented to our community partners.

Also last year, staff participated in some rigorous training, which resulted in a restructuring of the treatment programme so that more treatment options are now available. New programmes include a family support group, structural relapse prevention group, a motivational enhancement group, a 12-step facilitation programme, and an early intervention prevention group for adolescent girls. There is also a new central intake system, which allows clients to be matched to the most appropriate treatment resource.

The sister islands counselling centre also saw an increase in new clients from 28 in 1998, to 51 in 1999. That too has been renamed Caribbean Haven Sister Islands.

Building renovations for the residential treatment centre in Breakers are underway, and it is anticipated that the centre will be operational in the summer of this year. The centre will have the capacity to admit 15 residential clients and an additional 8 clients for the day programme.

Plans to open a halfway house in the year 2000 for those clients who need longer supervised care are also in progress. I must say that I was very pleased on visiting the site a couple of weeks ago to see the progress being made. I feel sure when, in due course, I have the opportunity to take my colleagues in the legislature and you, Mr. Speaker, to look at this facility we will be proud to see what is there. Certainly to me, it appears to be an ideal setting. The philosophy has also been within the ministry that if we can provide these rehabilitation services here in the Cayman Islands, we have a greater degree and hope for success in dealing with our problems in the area of drug abuse.

On Cayman Brac, the first phase of building a stand-alone facility for drug counselling was initiated and will result in a detailed site plan and cost estimate, which we hope to deal with later on this year.

Mr. Speaker, I will now move on to Social Services. In the year 2000, the Department of Social Services will direct the majority of their efforts toward the children of the Cayman Islands. The recent study of the family in Caymanian society by Dr. Eleanor Wint revealed that there was a need for parenting skills to be enhanced in all aspects of society. In order to have children who grow up to be healthy, contributing members of society must help parents to be able to raise them to be this way.

Mr. Speaker, it is not easy. It is not an easy task to be a parent. But it is one of the most fulfilling things a person can do. It is therefore commendable that Social Services has seen fit to be proactive and offer assistance in training parents for this noble task. Accordingly, the department will offer a comprehensive national parent training programme dealing with all aspects of healthy and effective parenting skills.

Just last week I was reading from an article and with your permission I would just briefly like to read this into my contribution. It comes from a magazine called Awake!, produced by Jehovah's Witnesses. The article was talking about the situation in Canada. Just briefly, the headline was "Shortage of skilled parents."

"Canada's first national survey on parenting reveals that 'many [parents] lack even basic knowledge of how children develop and how parents can assist in that process,' says the National Post. Of the more than 1,600 'fathers, mothers, and single mothers with children under the age of six' surveyed, 92 percent acknowledged that being a parent is the most important thing they can do. Yet, 'less than half were fully aware they can positively influence their child's level of intelligence by reading to them, playing with them, touching them, or holding them.' Additionally, about 30 percent 'believe every baby is born with a certain level of intelligence, which cannot be increased or decreased by how parents interact with them.' Such findings are troubling, says the Post, since research shows that 'a child's first five years are pivotal in developing their ability to learn, create, love, trust, and develop a strong sense of themselves.'" [Awake!—8 December 1999]

Mr. Speaker, there is not much difference between Canada and the Cayman Islands in this area. That is why Social Service is placing this emphasis on parenting and trying to deal with the situation, especially with our younger parents. It is the most difficult task that we have to deal with in this day and age. I know that one of the great concerns we share in these islands is the way in which we go forward and deal with our younger people. They are the future of these islands, and many of the problems that we see exhibited today in the schools and on the streets come from the lack of proper parenting.

Mr. Speaker, there will always be a handful of difficult children, but I do believe that when we undertake our God given responsibility to raise our children in the proper manner . . . and people will say one parent families, but I have seen many one parent families where the children have turned out to be very fine youngsters.

Throughout our Cayman Islands the vast majority of our children are wonderful and excellent kids. It is too sad that we do not hear enough about them. Most of the time the emphasis is placed on that very small minority which, if we looked at it closely, would be less than 100 in these islands. I say we must place emphasis on this area of concern and whatever we need to do we must come together as a community, as legislators and unite towards this effort to make our youngsters more comfortable with their surroundings, give them the choice of growing up and providing the services for them.

Many of the younger ones . . . you can go on the street 2.00 - 3.00 in the morning . . . and I know that it has been suggested that a curfew is the wrong thing to do, but I honestly believe that we are coming to the stage that we must come to grips with this. Whatever we have to put in place it may not be the thing to do in other territories, but if we are going to deal with some of the problems that I see evolving here, we must stop pussyfooting around and do the right thing and put our foot down once and for all. We must as a nation do the right thing. We must be able to identify within the school system when they are there but it should be done before it gets to the schools, Mr. Speaker.

Are you going to tell me that on occasion a parent of a 3, 4 or 5 year old has to ask Social Services to intervene? It is absolutely ridiculous! If this is the way that we are going to raise our children . . . I hear the thing about a village has to raise a child, I do not necessarily agree with that theory. I think the responsibility of that child being raised should be by that parent, whether it be one person or two. We should not come with the idea that a village has to raise my child, but that is how life is. I have no problem with the community pointing out to me if there is a difficulty. If they see my children doing the wrong thing, let me know.

I will die with the belief that we as parents have to accept our God given responsibility to deal with our children. We have to stop blaming the teachers.

Mr. Speaker, this problem starts manifesting at an early age and it has to be addressed within the home situation. If I have a rude child at home, I should not expect the teacher to have to deal with that child when he goes to school, as he will do the same thing there. I support the philosophy of putting the strap back into the schools. But that will not alleviate the problem. I know that there are many difficulties out there for some of our young children. It's a real tragedy, and one of the greatest menaces is television.

I have used this example before, but in my first overseas conference I met with some Canadians (this was back in 1993) and they said the greatest scourge ever to hit Canada was television. Mr. Speaker, I don't have to tell you that with cable television and satellite television here, our children have that access. Unless we monitor them, there is no telling what they can run into.

We must encourage and look at the opportunity which can present to censor—not necessarily censor, but prevent our young children from having access to some of the sexually explicit information that comes out on television. What are we going to do about it, Mr. Speaker? We criticise our young children. Yes, we didn't have a lot of these things when we were growing up, but whatever we need to do to address the problem, we, as a nation, should be able to take that decision and make it right.

The whole sad thing about this situation is when you look at network television . . . it is just as disgraceful, Mr. Speaker, as primetime channels. Where are we going? The great United States has experienced tremendous economic growth, but, by God, when you look at the morals in that nation . . . what is happening is really sad. When they have taken prayers out of the schools, the Ten Commandments out of school . . . what in the world do we expect our children to do?

Sadly, our Cayman society is based on what happens in the great United States. We as families, parents, and guardians must do whatever we need to do. There are international regulations that we don't necessarily have to violate, but we must get back to discipline our children in the proper manner, to take responsibility for them.

Getting back to Social Services. It is anticipated that revision of the Children Law 1995 and the development of regulations for this law will be completed during the year thus enabling its enactment. In addition, the Department of Social Services plans to implement those sections of the law for which it has responsibility by providing training to its staff as well as persons from external agencies. Training will also be arranged for 15 foster families once they have been recruited and approved.

Mr. Speaker, there is a small segment of our young people who require specialist attention since, for whatever reason, they have made inappropriate choices in their lives. This is what I alluded to earlier on. This is a fact that has been recognised for many years, but unfortunately has always been put on the back burner.

The proposed secure remand drug rehabilitation youth facility will be advanced once planning approval has been received this year. And it should be completed shortly after that, or, hopefully, next year. The facility will provide rehabilitation programmes for juvenile substance abusers as well as provide secure accommodation for juveniles needing such care, and is the final component of a continuum of care, which will be available to juveniles in our society who require such a service.

Mr. Speaker, this facility is badly needed. I need not say that. I think it will be the vehicle that will enable these islands to break the funnel that goes into Northward. It's amazing when the teachers have commented to me that the young inmates at Northward, just a short while ago were the very students that gave them a hard time at the schools.

This facility will be costly. But I am afraid if we don't do this the right way, we will go through the pangs of hell that the Honourable First Official Member has gone through with the situation at Northward. What we must remember in building this facility is that it has to be built to international codes. We intend to do that, but the majority of the Justices of the Peace . . . the Honourable Chief Justice in his address earlier this year at the opening of the Grand Court also expressed his disappointment that planning failed to give approval for this facility. We are diligently looking at our options and, with the help of God, within the ministry we intend to persevere until we get this resolved for the benefit of these islands. It is too important to let it slide.

Everybody complains about my child or their children and the youth out there, but no one wants to agree that this facility should come near to them. Mr. Speaker, these are children we are dealing with—children under the age of seventeen. Whatever we need to do to make sure that this is put in place . . . the problems will not go away. It can only be dealt with in the comprehensive way as is being put forward. With the help of God, it is my intention to follow this through as I did with the Breakers rehab facility. We have to stop burying our heads in the sand thinking these problems will go away—they will not go away! They continue to get worse.

The programmes we need to have in place . . . we cannot continue using the West Bay lock-up and Northward [Prison], it is too inhumane. I was thankful for the support of this Honourable House when I shared with them what we are doing. I am most thankful. But we cannot give up on this. We will continue.

To help counteract inappropriate behaviour in juveniles, the department will provide a summer programme in every district of Grand Cayman as well as Cayman Brac during the month of August this year. This programme will provide recreational, educational and cultural activities for our young people and should serve as a preventative measure.

Another early example of preventative services provided by the Department of Social Services will be the provision of community outreach services by way of workshops and presentations during the year on such subjects as child abuse, domestic violence, child neglect or other social issues of concern.

Mr. Speaker, if you wish, I will take a break.

The Speaker: When you have reached a convenient point, or have you?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Two more minutes.

At the opposite end of the age spectrum, the department will also offer services to the elderly citizens of our country. This is with the adult care in North Side and also Bodden Town. I do know the great need in North Side. I visited there last year and just a couple of days ago. I got an impassioned plea from one of the elderly, extremely well respected resident of North Side, for the provision of a full facility to help with the elderly in North Side.

I do know that the Member for North Side has been advocating this for about eight years, and it has to be dealt with. I know, and I will admit that there are not sufficient funds in the budget this year, but I would hope that before yearend we could address this. I have spoken to the Director and she has assured me that she is preparing information for the documentation that would go before the Public Sector Investment Committee, which is one of the routes that I have always gone through in my ministry. But I do know, Mr. Speaker, that this facility is now needed and I am pleased to know that the Director has now given the commitment that we will be looking at this.

There was a gentleman in the community who was willing to assist in this area. I need to try to understand exactly what his expectations are, and ours, but I will say to the Member for North Side that we will share with her as we go forward in addressing this. It cannot wait because in Dr. Eleanor Wint's study of the family, North Side was indicated as one of the areas that had the highest concentration of elderly.

I am also pleased to note that the churches not only in North Side but in East End now want to come forward and assist with some of these programmes. This will be a temporary situation until we become more regularised, but I certainly appreciate the churches taking this effort and we look forward that in the not too distant future that we can provide this facility in North Side.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, another initiative of the Department of Social Services is that it intends to pursue in the year 2000 the provision of aftercare services to 50 adults in areas such as counselling, work preparedness and follow-up post release from prison in order to assist the prisoner to reintegrate into society and reduce the risk of re-offending

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: Before we take the morning break, since proceedings commenced this morning I received apologies from the Honourable Second Official Member who will be arriving later today.

We shall now suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.52 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.17 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continuing on the Throne Speech.

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was addressing areas within the ministry and under my responsibility. I was talking about Social Services. It was pointed out to me at the break that it was actually all of the churches in North Side, the primary school in North Side, the North Side Clinic, the North Side Community Development Committee that have been assisting with the elderly and this certainly is very commendable. I would like to say a big thank you to all of those involved.

One of the areas within Social Services that we undertook was the increase of financial assistance to the needy, which moved last year from $250 to $400. As I mentioned last year (and I would say again) we are in the process during this year and probably into next year, we will be doing reassessment of our clients to further determine their needs, whether they still need the assistance that Government has given them.

I have had a number of calls where people in the community have indicated to me at the ministry that there are people receiving some financial assistance who have fixed deposits, apartments on rentals. Mr. Speaker, this cannot be right. The emphasis on the financial assistance is to help those that are in need. I am hoping that when we do our checks and assessments on those receiving that, wherever this system is being abused we can deal it. What we really need to do is make sure that there is a genuine need.

Over the next few years, this assistance can be increased because the little pittance that we give them of $400 a month is not sufficient to really help our needy people adequately. By making sure that those that are receiving it are genuinely in need, we can then look at improving and increasing it.

Mr. Speaker, in time to come we must look at Social Services as being a vehicle of helping our people, not necessarily by giving handouts, but by enabling them through training to make their lives better and assist them. There are certain programmes I have seen and heard about in the United States where we can get them back to work and a lot of it would be through training programmes. And, whatever happens down the line, this year or next, I trust that whoever has the responsibility for Social Services will address these problems in that light. There will always be some that we will have to help, but I feel that some great degree of emphasis would be in assisting our people to help provide for themselves. I think their contribution to society would be much greater if we empowered them to be able to help themselves and their families.

I will now go on to speak on the implementation of the family study. We have addressed and continue to address a number of the recommendations put forward from that study and I will briefly mention some that have already started, are ongoing and will continue. One, the structural changes within the department, has been addressed. There has been a greater focus on community based initiatives and one only has to follow the various releases in the press under activities of the Community Development Unit to be informed.

The Community Development Unit is actively involved with the elderly in each district, particularly in the area of housing. I am made to understand that just last weekend the construction of a small house began by community members for an elderly woman in Central George Town—this is certainly wonderful to hear. They work closely with the CoDAC and have formed community development committees where no CoDAC exists. Christmas celebrations, celebrations of International Day of the Elderly are held jointly with Health Services, and various outings have been spearhead by them.

Summer School was held in every district including Cayman Brac during the month of August last year. They have assisted with clean-up campaigns in each district and the establishment of parks for children. The latest proposal has been an apprenticeship scheme for youngsters who are not academically inclined.

The Community Development Unit is working on this project jointly with the Education Department. So far, one student has been apprenticed to a business in George Town. The Foster Care Unit and Adoption Unit have been established.

The Adoption Law is currently being reviewed to bring it in line with standard international practice. Training for foster parents in place. Probation and an aftercare unit have been established since recommended from the family study. Staff works closely with the courts and also Northward Prison. Efforts have been to provide regular training for all staff and so far one social worker has graduated with a Masters in Family Therapy and a second is due to graduate in December this year with a Masters Degree in Conflict Resolution and Mediation.

A well-qualified departmental trainer has been recruited for the department, and her function is to coordinate and to deliver training. She has been doing this for the past nine months.

Work with sister agencies such as the Education Department, the National Drug Council, Caribbean Haven, the Juvenile Bureau . . . health services have been strengthened and, as I said earlier, are ongoing. Special programmes have been designed to encourage growth and development of the children in care. Some very good results have been seen in the area of arts, crafts and agriculture.

School reports indicate that the children have improved overall academically. Maple House, our home for disabled children, has been extended and a respite care is offered to the disabled on a small scale.

The young parents' programme, which came into being when the First Elected Member for West Bay was there, has been evaluated internationally and proposals pursued. The need for the programme has not diminished, but we have observed that those girls who complete the programme do not have repeat pregnancies. The programme now falls under the Community Development Unit and has been expanded to serve young unskilled mothers.

Several are currently attending the programme in the evenings and are pursuing the GED with a view of improving their education generally. Vocational courses such as sewing and food preparation are also offered to them. A wide range of subjects is offered at the programme and all participants pursue computer courses at the Community College. Recently, three scholarships have been made available by the private sector to the girls to pursue two-year courses at the Community College.

Social workers continue to assist the school with family life education, child development courses and counselling when requested.

The island wide parenting programme commenced in 1998 and a number of facilitators from various related agencies were trained. Workshops on parenting by a small group continue on a regular basis at various venues. Further training will take place in May of this year by the Bernard Van Leer Foundation, and it is hoped that the momentum will be stepped up, as all districts require parenting training. I talked about this earlier in the importance of parental responsibility and the difficulties that some parents have, and we need to assist the parents with their young children.

So, as I have mentioned earlier, this indicates many of the initiatives undertaken in response to recommendations made in the family study.

Mr. Speaker, I will now go on to talk about the National Drug Council (NDC). This has been a key player in our response to the drug problem in the Cayman Islands. One of the greatest concerns in these islands today is the problem of drug abuse and the mammoth task of addressing it.

In the area of overall responsibility, this group has the task of coordinating the efforts of Social Services, Law Enforcement, the Judiciary, Customs Service and the Education Department to ensure that our efforts are consistent and cost effective in dealing with both illegal and legal substance misuse.

In addition, the NDC is the research body principally responsible for collecting and analysing data relating to the Cayman Islands in particular. Finally, it is responsible for interacting with international agencies to bring to Cayman programmes and data in a cooperative sense to make sure that our efforts are consistent with experience of other countries and that we may learn from the experience of others.

Specifically, the NDC in its 2000 plan will concentrate on the following principal objectives: The updating of the Cayman Islands Student Drug Use Survey.

This survey was administered first in 1998 and submitted to the Legislative Assembly during the week of November 12. It was the first comprehensive study conducted here that pointed out the magnitude of the problem and specifically areas, which needed attention. It is important to understand that as valuable as this information this, it is only a baseline and does not show one of the most important factors required for the implementation of policy, that being emerging and changing trends.

We must know where the problem is heading. Which drugs are being used more and which are declining so that resources may be used more effectively. This survey must be repeated and will be done during the month of May this year as planned.

The establishment of intervention programmes has been established as a priority for the upcoming year. Studies show that the after-school hours—especially on Friday nights—are when our youths are most vulnerable.

The NDC has taken the lead and responsibility for the creation of the first of five youth centres. The first is to be established temporarily at the Old Racquet Club in George Town. I would like to thank my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, for allowing us to utilise that space and with the cooperation of the Ministries of Sports, Social Services, and the Royal Cayman Islands Police.

Mr. Speaker, the plan is to provide a safe, supervised place for our youth to spend time after school where people and resources will be available to assist with problems or simply have a place which is theirs and which is drug, tobacco and alcohol free.

Mr. Speaker, just this past Friday afternoon, going back to the Glass House I was once again very much disturbed to see the gathering of several of our high school students around the Anderson Square Building.

We must address this situation. We know the strain that our young people are under. The kind of music they are hearing on the radio stations, I talked earlier on about the television. I wonder if the DJs on these radio stations listen to some of the lyrics that are coming out there. It is embarrassing to hear some of this stuff that is coming out and putting forth—and here we are trying to put programmes in place and our youth are being bombarded with sexually explicit lyrics and music coming from all of the radio stations. It is ridiculous and disgusting.

There is one radio station in the morning that I absolutely refuse to listen to. It is downright disrespectful to these islands and some of the vulgarity that comes over there. It is really sad.

But, Mr. Speaker, I come back to the Friday evening rendezvous of our high school children gathering. Where in the world are these parents? We all have to work, there is no doubt about that. But, by God, these are people that work in this building. When these young girls are being fondled, not necessarily by their classmates but by outsiders, do you know where your young daughter is on a Friday evening?

Do you know where your young son is?

What is the use of us putting programmes in place when after school they are allowed to roam about town and people that work in those buildings have called to the students to let them know what is being observed?

I am pleading with the powers that be and I will talk when I have the opportunity with my colleague, the Minister of Education. I know that once the children are out of school, it is not their responsibility, but we have to do something about this. It is not a good spectacle in the centre of George Town. What message are we sending? Parents shame on you!

The sad thing is, Mr. Speaker, a lot of the children are still in uniform. What a message for visitors to see and take back. But, with the help of God and the putting into use of these youth facilities, hopefully these children will have a place where they can go, where they can be supervised (and this is what I am coming to, Mr. Speaker), to supervise them and to help them with their homework if necessary, to channel some of this energy in a positive manner.

What do we expect from our young children when they are constantly bombarded on television with the lyrics of the most distasteful songs being played on our airwaves?

I urge us all to work together to deal with this problem. We need to visit these families to assist them in whatever manner necessary (because I know it is difficult Mr. Speaker). If we don't address this at an early stage, all we will be doing is building rehab facilities and prisons for our people. We have to address this at an early age. Parents must accept their God given responsibility.

In the area of prevention and education, the NDC will continue their school based programme which provide curriculum support as well as activities to raise awareness amongst our youth and to assist in educating them, not just about the dangers associated with drug use but to provide alternatives and support in helping them to resist peer pressure. This is where much of the difficulty exists—peer pressure. Yes, when we were younger we had some, but not to the magnitude experienced by our youth today.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Lions Club for helping with our Quest Programme in so many ways—financially and morally. I want to thank education for allowing these programmes to go in there and now with the addition of the DEAR programme in the primary schools, I trust that this will have an earlier impact than what has been happening in the past.

We must realise that we can no longer ignore this problem. It is for our very survival that we must address this now. As a responsible nation, we can wait no longer. We saw the results of Vision 2008, and one of the greatest concerns was drug abuse and crime in these islands.

There are many out there that objected, as I said earlier, when we were trying to establish the rehabilitation facility for our youth. They had made great investments. I respect that, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to democratically deny anyone of his rights, but all of these investments can be for nought if we do not address crime and drugs in our islands. Which investor is going to come here when every time you go to the hotel room its being broken open? Petty crime! And most of it appears to be able to get a hit.

Mr. Speaker, let us find out where this problem is. We are always picking up the user. When, who, and where are the 'big guns' in this whole scene? Until we start to make some examples and find out where all of this is and who's behind it, we are just paddling in the ocean in a little canoe. Let us dedicate ourselves as legislators to working together to deal with this problem, it is too huge of a problem for just a handful of people. Unless and until we as a community accept that responsibility, we are doomed to fail.

The NDC's role in community awareness programmes: This year marks the tenth anniversary of these programmes and the first time that the drug awareness was extended from one week to one month. This initiative was very successful and it is projected to repeat this programme in the month of October this year.

Further efforts in the community will concentrate on implementation of a solvent abuse strategy comprised of an education programme combined with a merchant based system of identifying problem products and controlling access to these products by potential abusers. Mr. Speaker, it was frightening to know the sources of some of these—the glues, the aerosol cans. I am made to understand that there was a youngster that got hooked on gasoline. The tragedy with someone like that is not only does the damage mess them up their thought process but things like gasoline cause serious mental damage. There is not a lot that can be done when children resort to these solvents, these deadly chemicals. The youths are out there crying out for help. Let us help them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, a few of the highlights of the programme undertaken by the NDC for this year are, in addition, the fine work that has been typical in the areas of parent and teacher education, drug awareness, co-ordination of drug education training for stakeholder agencies, supporting local, regional and international conferences and the public information and media campaign are all included in the year 2000 plan for the NDC.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank Miss Mary Lee Rowlands, the past president of Cayman Against Substance Abuse (CASA), for her hard work and dedication in leading that august body over some difficult times, and also to welcome the new president who seems to be a very energetic and a very ambitious young man. It is important, Mr. Speaker, that we as legislators give support to CASA. I would urge all MLAs to join CASA as a member. I think the fee is $15 or $20 a year. I would ask that you please, as always, continue to support these programmes in any way that you can.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, the last area that I want to speak on is Health. When I look back at the 5½ years that I have had the privilege and honour to be the Minister responsible for Health, I do so with considerable satisfaction and above all else with gratitude for the support received from our excellent civil service and, of course, from my colleagues on both sides of this Honourable House. I could not have done it without their trust and support in me.

At this opportunity, I would also like to thank the Third Elected Member for George Town in his winding up, the kind remarks that he had and I thank him.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that I believe it is essential for the political arm of Government and the civil service to work together in a climate of trust in order to achieve what is necessary for the ongoing smooth development of these blessed islands of ours. I believe that we have done great things in my ministry. With God's help, we shall continue to do so for the remaining months that I am in office.

I would like to pay particular tribute to the support I have received from my colleagues in Executive Council who have been behind me one hundred percent in the expansion and enhancement of health services in the last five years. But as I said, Mr. Speaker, I must also acknowledge the responsive attitude demonstrated by colleagues on the Backbench and the overwhelming trust they have placed in me.

They have asked sensible questions, made constructive suggestions, been fair in their criticism and generally have supported to the hilt that which was good for the country. I look forward to a continuation of this partnership as we face the new challenges in the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, one of these challenges is already upon us and we have begun to meet it head on. I refer to the cost of health care and people's accessibility to it. I am very pleased that over 28,000 people now have health insurance and that 70% of them are estimated to have plans which have benefits greater than the standard policy. Very shortly, those for whom Government has the responsibility to provide health care will also have health insurance.

I think we should recognise that the introduction of health insurance has been a very significant achievement during the tenure of this Government. Heaven knows it has been talked about for long enough but finally by all of us working together—politicians, civil servants, insurance providers, employers and the public at large, we have put in place one of the most significant pieces of social legislation in the history of these islands. It just shows that we can do what we can do when we put our differences aside to work for the good of our islands.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are still some teething problems to be sorted out, but we are working on these. I know that there is a motion that will be dealt with later on in this sitting, and I am hoping that we can deal with this and make the efforts that we have put forward come to a greater degree of satisfaction.

No insurance scheme will satisfy all the people all the time. In addition, some people do not understand that their particular policies do not cover certain procedures. This gives rise to frustration on their part. But, as I said, we are working on these and will continue to do so. I shall have more to say on a strategy that we plan to implement this in the very near future to inform the public and let them know in more detail. I would encourage the providers to assist in this area to help educate our Caymanians and all residents.

We must all be concerned with the rising cost of health care. This has become a big issue in other countries and it behoves us in the Cayman Islands to try to avoid some of the excesses that have taken place elsewhere.

I will concentrate my remarks on the Government health care system, but I must note in passing my great concern at the traumatically rising fees being charged recently in certain sections of the private medical sector. I am aware that this is one of the complaints being aired in connection with health insurance. Some doctors are claiming that they are not being properly reimbursed. The insurance industry on the other hand is saying they will not pay rates that are even higher than South Florida's [rates] to practitioners providing health care in the Cayman Islands. Some compromise must be arrived at, Mr. Speaker.

Turning to the Government's health care system: I am very pleased to report that, as was promised two Finance Committees ago, the Health Services Department working in conjunction with the Ministry has brought what we consider to be a fiscally responsible operational budget for the year 2000. We are determined to operate a tight cost efficient ship and we will be concentrating more and more on this from now on.

We will be looking closely to see where we can make savings in services and staffing without adversely affecting the quality of our product. Indeed, while one of our thrusts will be on cost efficiency, the other part will be on improved patient care in all sections of the department and by all members of the Health Services Department.

I have said more than twice this year to health services personnel that we are entering a new era of health care in these islands, especially, of course, in Grand Cayman. Entitled cases make up 67% of the clientele of the Health Services Department. They will now, like 28,000 other people, have health insurance and for a very modest premium will have the choice to seek their health care in the private sector where a new private hospital is about to open.

I must say well done and congratulations to Dr. Tomlinson for this very nice facility.

What I must go on to say is if the quality of service in the government sector does not please its patients, they will go elsewhere. Less patients means less demand for services and, therefore, less staff. Mr. Speaker, if this happens I can promise this Honourable House that we will take whatever measures are necessary including cutting services and staff to ensure that we run the tightest, most cost efficient service we are able to do. Government does not have money to waste, and as long as I am Minister it will not be wasted on maintaining staff and services no longer required.

We have also begun this year (and will continue next year) a massive effort to increase our revenue capture. We all know in the past that only a small fraction of revenue was collected. I look forward to bringing and sharing with the Honourable Members of this House our new fees and the regulations as promised last year. At the moment, we are only collecting a percentage of the true cost, but I don't plan to put full cost on our people at this time. I think it is a method that has to come on in increments gradually where we and our people can deal with it.

This House may have seen in the budget for this year under New Services that we have included a significant number of posts for the Health Services Finance Department. Some of these people are also acting as debt collectors. Others will be processing the increased number of insurance claims that will come in as a result of insurance being provided to those for whom Government is responsible.

Also, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I hope to be able to bring to this Honourable House for approval in the very near future regulations to accompany the Health Fees Law 1999. These regulations will prescribe a new fee structure, which will involve setting fees for new services recently introduced and increasing fees and services that have not seen an increase in nearly ten years. Mr. Speaker, I don't have to tell you that the cost of health care has skyrocketed throughout the world and we hope that we can address this sensibly. As I said, in a manner that will not be a strain on our people.

We will have to gradually over a period of perhaps four or five years increase these fees until they represent a more realistic figure than they do now. It cannot be done all at once and I keep saying this. It has to be done gradually so that people can gradually adjust their budgets accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude my remarks on health by making it quite clear that the humane approach that Government has always taken towards its citizens who are genuinely in need of financial assistance with health care costs will continue as long as I am Minister. Those who can pay must pay. And we all know that unfortunately there are some people who believe that it is not necessary to pay Government for the services it renders including health care. This cannot continue.

I repeat, those who can pay must pay. Those who have no assets that Government can place a charge on, or whose family members are unable to assist, will receive assistance in meeting their health care costs. No one in the Cayman Islands can say that they do not have access to health care because they cannot afford it. This is a caring society and we must do all we can to keep it that way.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to know that in the budget this year . . . and this House has for many years anticipated the creation and building construction of a new inpatient mental health facility which also will house geriatric and a small hospice unit. For too long we have not dealt with mental health in a humane manner. It is true that the more chronic cases, we may still have to utilise outside facilities but we are on a foundation here that we can now build on. It is inhumane to have some of these people on the streets and at Northward.

I look forward to sharing the plans with this Honourable House once they have become more firmed, most of them are almost there.

Once again I want to thank the entire Legislative Assembly for the support they have given me on this. It is one more piece of the puzzle in developing a complete medical facility on these islands. I also know, as I mentioned earlier on, a parliamentary question where we will be drafting plans for a health centre for George Town itself. I think it is timely but I feel that we must live within our means and provide these services on a timely basis.

Mr. Speaker, I know it's now 1.00 p.m.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until 2.30 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1.01 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.55 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues.

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation continuing.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As I wind down, I would first of all ask your kind permission as I know it has been the tradition of this Honourable House that when there is a death in the family of any of its members that we record condolences. I would first of all beg forgiveness from my friend, the First Elected Member for George Town, and although it is late that it be recorded to him and his family. Also, to the family of the Deputy Chief Secretary and his family, and Mr. Craddock Ebanks was one of the members of this House. I know its even much further down I am made to understand the family of my colleague from Bodden Town, Mr. Roy Bodden. Even though it's belated, I think, it is one of the courtesies that I feel that we should extend. I know that all my colleagues in here join with me in doing this.

Mr. Speaker, as I wind down my debate, I just wanted to comment on one of the articles put out by one of the real estate companies, Caldwell Banker, who normally gives some forecasts on the state of affairs of the islands. I would just like to read a brief paragraph from one of their newsletters saying, "Our forecast of a market plateau had been correct and with some of the negative indicators we have mentioned you might expect our winter forecast to be gloomy.

"However, for all the local growing pains, one only has to go as far as Miami to appreciate the pluses of our country. Add to this, the continued strength of the Stock Market and the start of our high tourist season, and there are a lot of positives. As a result we predict a fairly strong selling season but not accompanied by significant value increases. In other words, clear skies for the winter with moderate temperatures."

Mr. Speaker, I think it indicates how things are in Cayman. I know the Third Elected Member for West Bay said all is not well in paradise, and to a certain degree in certain areas I think we all agree with him. But we as legislators and as a community of committed people, can work on our areas of concern. It is only we as representatives working along with our people that can improve what we see and put in as priorities to help make Cayman a better place.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that this is an election year. All I would say is that there is still much water under the bridge. There is still much to do before November and I would encourage us all to continue to work together towards making these islands a better and safer place for all of us in which we will be able to live.

I would like to thank the staff in my ministry—my permanent secretary, senior assistant secretary, assistant secretary and all the other staff, not only in the ministry but in the department of Health Services, Social Services, Caribbean Haven and the National Drug Council for the support they have given me, and also other areas within the civil service. I am not bragging but I think I can afford to say that my relationship with the civil service through my eight years has been quite cordial. I have a lot of respect of them, and there is a lot of potential, a lot of resources that we can tap into there. As we go forward, I hope that we can use these resources to the best of our ability. By working together, we can make these islands a even more better place than what we now have. Thank you.

The Speaker: The floor is opened to debate. Does any other Honourable Member wish to speak?

The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, I will give way to the First Elected Member for West Bay.

The Speaker: If that is your wish, the First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

This Throne Speech will be the sixteenth that I have debated in this Honourable House, and twenty budgets. While I can congratulate His Excellency the Governor on his presentation (being his first in this Honourable House, a quite a good presentation) the content from the government of the day is lacking in direction to deal with our problems.

Mr. Speaker, the state of the country is not good. There is uncertainty, disenchantment, far too much crime and rising poverty. The sad fact is that there is not very much in the Throne Speech—which is the first in the new century, the new millennium—to address the uncertainty, disenchantment, the crime, and growing poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I have never been one to run down my country. This is where I was born. Here I live and hope to have my bones buried. While we have a lot of problems and insufficient vision in its present management where leadership is expected, this is still the best place to live. I am proud of our civil service.

I am proud of our good workers who do their part to keep the country running and, in the words of an old [Jamaican] festival song, "Nu Whey Nu Betta Dan Yard" (Nowhere is Better than Yard), in spite of Government. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we are all suffering the agony of misdirected leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned too about the state of our democracy. I recently wrote in Common Sense that while the 1980s and the 1990s were a time of renewing of democracy around the world, I found that in the Cayman Islands many things were slipping that we could count on as a democratic country. If there is not good government, democracy will suffer, and, unfortunately, there is a weak cord running presently through our Government. It is evident by the way some Executive Council members operate.

Mr. Speaker, we talk about openness and accountability—and we see how well the Pedro St. James Castle fiasco has been covered up thus far—and we know there is a breakdown in good government. When we see the slight-of-hand to put more money in the hands of Government by taking from the Environmental Fund, we know that there is a lack of good government. When we find out that huge sums of money are not put towards Government's liability of civil service pensions, good government is lacking.

When Executive Council members embark on million dollar projects in our districts without the involvement of elected representatives, this is the worse kind of Government. If MLAs cannot function properly and if we cannot participate in what is the simplest part of representative government then how can we have good government? Mr. Speaker, all those things just further erode our democracy.

I would hope, sir, that with new ideas and reform this will change the way things are done or else we will not boast of being democratic in the future. We know that democracy is in trouble and good government is lacking when the independence of the civil service is interfered with. Mr. Speaker, that was obvious when the Director of Social Services was stopped from attending the public meetings on crime. What was the purpose of stopping the lady?

Here we are trying to do something about crime, which is affecting the whole country and the one person who knows about what is happening, if not on a daily basis certainly on a weekly basis, they stop her. This fashion of government only highlights the blatant disrespect they hold for elected members.

It also highlights the fact that there are attempts to make elected representatives less effective in their efforts to represent their people properly. This is an eroding of democracy. It is a dangerous trend. In a democracy, everyone has a responsibility—not just Government but all of us.

Sometimes the Government says that we in the Opposition are responsible too; yet when the time comes that we may share in that responsibility, they act like it is only the Government that needs to know or must have the say. Many times when they are in trouble, they come running like little children asking us to be involved. And most times, it is only something which they need to stand up and be counted as responsible men instead of ducking, hiding, and running from the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I could stretch this out beyond this House too because it is most obvious that there are those . . . no matter what representatives face or plan to do, they don't have the time to give a moment to assist. It is not just the Government that has a responsibility in a democracy or in a country.

Mr. Speaker, you will notice there is always a flurry of activity at election year. It seems some people only believe that they have a responsibility if they are going to get involved as a candidate, yet they quietly have a good time for the four years. This is a democratic country, and I don't believe the people will be fooled!

Mr. Speaker, I have been criticised by the Government and by their candidates running around the country about not offering alternatives to the problems. Other members have been criticised as well. I can speak for myself, Mr. Speaker, and, to be fair, I can speak for several backbench members. When I was in charge of policy it was a good time, and things started to get better for the community from various standpoints.

So, they can criticise me all they want, but I have a good record of accomplishments that I believe fare the country well—sports, youth development, the elderly and veterans, housing, training, women affairs, social services (that the Minister spoke about this morning) and the programme for young girls; community development, student loans, pensions—something that various members of long-time service and who were responsible for pension for years could not get, including the present Minister for Education.

Labour benefits . . . when I consider that people were not able to get proper vacation time until we put it in law, when women in their childbearing years had better benefits confirmed in the Labour Law; the Cayman Islands Marine Institute, I took a heavy criticism for it. Culture, Cayfest . . . the truth is, Mr. Speaker, after my departure from Executive Council what had not already been sabotaged by some was rendered ineffective.

Many problems in this country would have less negative effect on the community today had I been able to get proper support for training. Had I been able to put the Youth Corp in place without the back stabbing that went on after Mr. McCann and I came back from Bermuda where we observed the Bermudan Youth Corp at work . . . but I am going to propose it again and I will put it in my manifesto.

Mr. Speaker, for thirty years or more this country was devoid of meaningful community development programmes—until McKeeva Bush was put in Executive Council. And Mr. Speaker, I left the Health Ministry (which I had for one year) to work on the new Community Development Ministry, not because I could not handle health, but my priority was community development. I knew that our problems needed serious attention and only a good programme of integrated community development would help lessen the negative impacts we were and are now experiencing.

Juvenile crime at the time had reached an all time high of over 300 cases before the Juvenile Court . . . don't tell me that I didn't try—and succeed in some instances. Alas, history will condemn how I was butchered when community development taken away from me and rendered practically ineffective. But as one poet put it, "The sunshine eye shall light the sky as 'round and 'round we run; And truth shall overcome uppermost and justice shall be done."

Mr. Speaker, our islands have several good social agencies for community assistance, for which I have always been thankful. What is presently happening (and I would certainly hope a new government will change this) is that our community development initiatives effectiveness is being limited due to fragmentation, duplication, inadequate resources, isolated work by the various agencies, and lack of much national support and cohesiveness.

The few community workers that we have are doing an excellent job, and are not always hindered because of government. But there are limited manpower resources and limited financial support to tackle community projects on the scale required for real effectiveness. I would have thought that they would have picked up where I left off and been serious about using this means to change the community and environment to give the youth an alternative to drugs for instance.

This morning the Minister responsible for Social Welfare (who tries to be as fair as possible) spoke about what is happening with school children after hours. I have to ask the question, Where is the meaningful continuation of after-school programmes?

Where is the big effort to see that after-school programmes are put in place and working properly with good staffing?

Mr. Speaker, that is where money should be spent. He has a right to lament the situation which the country faces because we have gone back further than we were in 1992.

Whilst some efforts are being made, meaningful community development demands agency collaboration, integration, and empowerment of communities to ensure a good core of workers to deal with the problems, and residents mobilised to support the various project initiatives. Think, Mr. Speaker, if we had a national disaster like a strong hurricane and we had a good core of workers working in each community (because they belong to the community, live there and are proud to belong there), think of the good that could be accomplished.

A new government (whoever it is) will have to move for an increased inter-agency collaboration in fieldwork and a greater sharing of resources between agencies doing common tasks; an increased involvement by community residents and community leaders in project design and implementation in, for instance, the schools, the civic centre and hurricane shelters that we want to build in our communities. We would have to have increased involvement by community residents in this kind of project design.

Mr. Speaker, for integrated community development strategies to work, Government will have to encourage and somehow entice ordinary Caymanians and others to feel that by participating in the management of their communities they can make a difference in how things are done and effect change in their local areas. That is what community development is all about.

A new government (whoever it is) will have to do what this Government will not—and that is to shift their budgetary priorities, not to build another government bureaucracy but a community centre working unit and put in place the CoDAC with proper government help to train and develop new cadre of honest men and women charged with responsibility to take hold of community affairs in the communities where they live.

That's what is needed to deal with the problems we are facing. We need to deal with our problems from a community level and that was the intention of the Community Development Ministry, the priority we had to move in that direction. All of this can only do one thing: change our community for the good to deal with the problems we face in the new millennium.

That is what it will do. Mr. Speaker, I can be criticised, but I cannot be criticised successfully for not attempting to do something about those areas I was charged with responsibility for.

I want to move to another area. I listened to the Minister of Education who was pushing a lot of rhetoric in his speech and doing the usual—blaming somebody else for their problems and their mismanagement—saying that the Opposition is responsible for the long meetings in the House.

Mr. Speaker, what the Government must accept—and they cannot blame the Opposition for it—is that they have squandered time. That is one of their problems. They cannot continue to blame the Opposition for the problems of this country, Mr. Speaker, because some of them on [Executive] Council sat there longer than any Opposition Member. They have squandered funds, mis-managed funds.

Mr. Speaker, is the Opposition responsible for the revision in salaries which gave Ministers $10,000 per month? I don't think so. You cannot blame the Opposition for that!

Is the Opposition responsible for the serious rise in crime? I don't think you can blame the Opposition for that.

Is the Opposition responsible for the serious rise in the cost of living? I doubt it.

Is the Opposition responsible for the disparity in the civil service? I doubt it. That was left over from one government to the next.

Is the Opposition responsible for the maldistribution of income in these islands? I doubt it.

Is the Opposition responsible for the lack of community development? I doubt it.

Is the Opposition responsible for the poor handling of tourism? I doubt it.

Is the Opposition responsible for lack of sensitivity for farmers and other manufactures and other local business people? I doubt it.

Is the Opposition responsible for the burning of Northward Prison? I doubt it.

Is the Opposition responsible for the various mess-ups in the budget having sometimes presented a budget on Friday coming back during the course of week and saying, 'no, we are changing everything?' I doubt it. That's the Government!

Is it the Opposition who puts policies in place to make these things better? Or is it the Government members who are the managers in Executive Council?

Mr. Speaker, the Government is responsible for all of these areas, and the truth is, you cannot fool all the people all the time!

What is true, Mr. Speaker, is that the situation is so bad and they have managed some of these areas so poorly that they are trying to blame everybody else for the problems. Now, what would have been true is if the Minister of Education had said these problems are not new. They had been left over from 1972, 1976, 1980, 1984, 1988, right through until now. He would have been correct, because no one government is to be blamed here. But there is a responsibility for each one to put in place measures to arrest the deteriorating situation that each one finds, and that is where this Government is at fault.

Where this present administration is at fault . . . I tried to put certain programmes in place and they didn't support it. The documents are there to prove what I am saying.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister for Education who also used a scare tactic about the House meeting so long that we are trying to be like the Eastern Caribbean. I know his politics. I know it well. He usually tries these things on election year or the year leading up to election to scare people about any of his opposition.

Mr. Speaker, if there is any fault to lay for the long meetings it is the way Government runs its business. A good example is the way the Business Community is run and the way business is put on the Order Paper. This Parliament has been stopped for every conceivable matter that could come up—partial road openings, stop and go cut a ribbon; turning on traffic light switch, stop and go turn on the switch; funerals, memorial services . . .

Well, Mr. Speaker, I would not say anything about that because it is good to give proper respect and sometimes its family members. But what I believe Government should do is that one person from Government should go to represent Government and the Parliament continues. That is what needs to be done. We don't need to shut down the whole Parliament. If somebody in my constituency or on the Backbench (because the Backbench doesn't run the Assembly, it's the Government and it has its majority) . . . and, therefore, they carry on business. They stop and go as they please. They put what is on the Business Paper as they please. You cannot blame the Opposition for this.

Every day some strange face shows up down here for a meeting with one of them. And I know that ministers are busy, but it is their lack of being able to manage their time properly. If one of them has to go off the island to a meeting . . . the country has to go on and those things have to be done, but they are so bad off the whole House shuts down every time somebody has to go away.

Now, is that any way to run a country?

No, it is not!

And it is one of the prime reasons, Mr. Speaker, why we are here so long.

The Opposition is always here with three or two Official members and the Minister of Health.

[Inaudible comment by the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: [addressing the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town] Yeah, but you are not counted in this baby. You just keep out of this sweetie.

[Laughter]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: And to give due credit (because she is complaining about it), the Second Elected Member from Bodden Town is here but her leaders are not so she cannot get anything done.

Who are you going to blame, Mr. Speaker? It was wrong for that Minister to blame Backbenchers the way he did last week. There is the absence or the reluctance to answer questions and that causes a problem.

Then, because that happens, to do our job properly when we have the chance (for instance in Finance Committee), we have to ask all kinds of questions to get one simple answer. Questions lay unanswered for up to a year and more.

Then Government brings business down here and before we are finished dealing with it, they change their mind. That takes up time. That is why the House is in meeting so long.

Two have to go off to OECD Meetings and the whole House shuts down. Mr. Speaker, this is the country we are talking about. These are the various reasons why the business of this House is dragged out, and I have been saying this for years. It is in the Hansards. It's recorded. This is not good, and I will come to some statistics to show you how poor it is. This is not good.

These are the various reasons why the business of the House is dragged out. That, plus we are operating a system without discipline where everybody has to talk and ask questions. I think it was the Third Elected Member for George Town who raised the same matter.

In this new millennium, the year 2000, we are still here doing things the same way we did it back when we first began Parliamentary Government one hundred and something years ago, except for a few pieces of paper that have been changed. We cannot continue because there is too much disruption.

And if we don't get some sort of discipline—I am not saying that this comes solely with parties or groupings or named whatever they be, because any group or party is only good as the individual. Constitutions are only good by those who work them.

Mr. Speaker, why he blamed Backbenchers I don't know because what he could have done was to rightly lament the shortage of getting things done. Just look at 1999 alone. Do you know how much time we spent in the first meeting? Twenty-nine days. The average time [spent in the Chamber] per day was three hours.

Mr. Speaker why can't we change this? Why?

The second meeting—16 days and the average hours per day, 3 hours.

The third meeting—20 days and the average hours per day, 2.4 hours.

For the fourth meeting, the total sittings were 12 days, and the average hours per day, 2.5 hours.

Mr. Speaker, this is an indictment—an indictment on the way this country is run!

[Member pounding on desk]

The Speaker: May I inject that the House meets at the will of the House?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I am not blaming the Speaker, because we cannot blame the Speaker. But the House meets at the will of the Government who has a majority!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I take a point of order.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: That is not correct. This House decides on setting its times and not the Government, sir. It's the full House in here that sets the time.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh no, no, no! Don't worry about that. This House don't set no time.

The Speaker: It's the will of the House.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, we run by Standing Orders, and I am not going to waste my time up here today (what little time I have to speak on this whole matter). But the fact is that no one can say otherwise. We have Standing Orders. We are supposed to meet when you call us, when we set down the times, that is, the meetings.

The Speaker: Please sit.

I said the House meets at the will of the House. If you read your Standing Orders it says that. Please go on to another subject.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ, sir—

The Speaker: And I asked you to go on to another subject.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, if you allow me—

The Speaker: Please sit while I stand.

I ask that you move on to another subject. I have said the Standing Orders are very plain. The will of the House carries the Standing Orders.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, please, you are not right!

Mr. Roy Boddén: Mr. Speaker, if I may sir.

You, yourself circulated this this morning—the time that we spend in the Chamber. Mr. Speaker, you yourself have lamented on numerous occasions the fact that we are not making judicious use of our time. It is not a reflection on you, sir. You have done your job. But it is a reflection on the poor management of someone, and the Government has to take it.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I shall be giving this to the newspaper and the public shall know. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: That is perfectly fine with me. But what I am trying to explain to the members of this House and to the listening public is that I have constantly asked that the House meet. But when you refuse to make a quorum, it is the will of the House that you are not making a quorum.

I sit in my office hour after hour without a quorum being here. I have come in the door and sat there and waited until there was a quorum. So, that is the will of the House!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, this is the [debate on the] Throne Speech. And in [our debate on the] Throne Speech we have the greatest of latitude to say what is on our mind. This is the one time that we have that latitude. And no one is here blaming you. What I am saying is that we cannot blame this side of the House for not operating. That is what causes these averages here—the non-operation of the House and not having the quorum! And you just said that, Mr. Speaker.

It is the Government's duty when business is brought here to be here and to have their quorum when we are here. How many days are we supposed to come to this House—

The Speaker: Please let us not go on now, I do not want—

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: —and then we have to meet at 10.00 a.m. and we don't start until 11.00 a.m. or 12.00 p.m. because we don't know.

We are here! I will move on, Mr. Speaker, but I think my point has been made.

The Speaker: I want to make it very clear: I circulated that to show you my concern.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, all of us have the same concern!

The Speaker: But I want the blame to rest where the blame is supposed to be—the House meets when a majority of members are present, and you need to form a quorum. So, please go on to another subject now without further argument.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, I would like to know who is getting the blame, Mr. Speaker. That's what I would like to know since you said you wanted the blame to lay where it should. Then whom are you blaming?

Mr. Speaker, I will move on because I think the point is made is not good. This average of hours is not good! I am here unless I have to leave for a funeral or unless I go away . . . as I did the other day on constituency business when the Minister of Education made it public that the First Elected Member for West Bay was not here.

Mr. Roy Boddén: True!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I knew that would have gotten them because of their dismal record.

There has been a recent disquiet in the civil service of this territory. They seek equality of benefits (parity they call it), and rightly so. Mr. Speaker, years ago, Caymanians were told that the big jobs in the service needed people with expertise.

So, we sent our children to get an education to be trained in specific areas. After a time of getting on-the-job experience, there is no longer the need to take a backseat in the service. I believe that they are being encouraged to move forward.

The big thing that brings this disquiet to the forefront is the matter of the Contracted Officers' Supplement (COS). Executive Council put the funds in the budget and brought the budget here. Then when the noise started, they quickly came to the Assembly and the Minister of Tourism, on behalf of the other Executive Council members, quoted the Constitution—how useless in this instance. Everybody knows that the elected Executive Council does not hire or fire.

Civil Servants understand this even more so, but elected Executive Council sets policy. And it would have been the right thing to have clearly stated their policy on this matter so that hardworking Caymanians and hardworking expatriate civil servants would understand what Executive Council wants. That's all that needs to be done. That's where they have the responsibility.

But to make a statement which is tantamount to saying 'it is not my responsibility and I don't want anything to do with it' that is like . . .

Mr. Roy Bodden: Pontius Pilate.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah, Pontius Pilate.

The Speaker: When you have reached a convenient time, we will take the afternoon break.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, this is a good place. Make them think about that one!

The Speaker: We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.51 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.10 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech.

The First Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I was saying that the statement made by the Minister of Tourism on behalf of government was like Pontius Pilate declaring "I want nothing to do with this." It did not, and cannot give civil servants—expatriate or Caymanian—any comfort in knowing where they stand in the future on COS as far as ExCo is concerned.

It would have been prudent for government to take a stand and state its position at the time because the country cannot take any more uncertainty. The civil service should know where their elected Executive Council stands with the issue.

The civil service understands who hires and fires and they are not expecting Executive Council to take away the responsibility from the Governor. What they are expecting is for their elected ExCo members to state their position.

There is nothing wrong if the elected Executive Council feels so strongly about an issue that they differ with His Excellency the Governor and they say so. That is constitutional. It would be good for the country and the Governor to know where they stand. The elected Executive Council makes the budget. They put it together and they bring it to the Legislative Assembly and they get it voted upon, so Executive Council need not try to fool anyone on that matter.

I will move on to this area of constitutional change. The country not too long ago did a constitutional review. In that general election the people spoke in loud terms, not to say that on the ballot it was a "yes" or "no" what constitutional item should be included in the Constitution. But the issue was well debated several times in the House and certainly throughout the campaign with various persons (present members of the House and those who are not now) debated the issue on various platforms. That was just some eight years ago.

I don't know that the country can now come back and say 'Let's change the Constitution.' I would be one who would want a definite clear call from a majority of my people before I embark on any constitutional changes. Not to say that there are not some needs for reform because that is what is needed. And it's obvious, as I said earlier in my debate, what is taking place. Ministers' hands are full, the way the House is set up. The process being used now for reform . . . I think that various members sit on various committees.

And when those reforms come, as I asked the party who was talking to members about the various reforms whether those reforms could work without constitutional changes (and when I say "party" I mean the consultants government was using) their answer to me was "Look, this country can't work these reforms unless there is some constitutional change."

Nobody elaborated. Again, I think that the public needs to know what any change will be. The public needs to be informed where they are with the reform, and the public needs to be told that for this thing to work, this thing, or that, needs to be changed in the Constitution. That would be so that the public understands where you are going with reform.

There are no two ways about it, Mr. Speaker. There needs to be reform in the systems of government, in the civil service, in the way we budget, in the way we plan. You are not going to be able to continue doing things as we used to—we can't! The people are demanding too much. And for the country to proceed in a fashion that is stable, we can't continue doing things as usual.

I don't know what those constitutional changes are. They did not elaborate. And I don't know if any member of government sat down with those consultants after they admitted that at the Marriott Hotel and decided that those changes are things that will not hamper the government in any shape or form, or the country in any shape or form. Not the government, the country. That would be ExCo's job.

If I were in Executive Council, dealing with the policies of the country where we make policy, I would certainly have said to His Excellency the Governor, right there and then, that we need to look at this. But is the government ready for reform? Are they in favour of the reforms being worked on? Are they in concert with the three main committees that are operating?

There are a lot of things happening that the majority of us on the backbench don't know about. We don't know about what is happening in those areas. So, when we talk about constitutional change and the government is in favour or the government is against, and when we are told that reform means constitutional change, there is an obligation on the government to say to the country what that reform is and what those changes in the Constitution will be.

[Member continued speaking after he turned off his microphone] Mr. Speaker, I am about to go on to another subject. I would like to begin in the morning on immigration. If it's okay with you . . .

The Speaker: I have 4.23 p.m.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, lest I get blamed for wasting time, let me continue then for the next seven minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I see rising poverty in these islands. There is a potentially dangerous state of affairs in the contrast between great progress on the one hand applying to one sector of the community, and apparent stagnation, want, and outright poverty in other areas.

Some people say we don't have poverty. Well, that is because those people don't know what is happening in the country. They don't go on the highways and the byways. They are not talking to the single parents. They are not talking to the couple who has three children, making less than $1600 per month.

The Second Elected Member for Bodden Town says they still have their telephone—their cell phone (she corrects me). I don't know whether this is so or not, and I don't know what that signals.

But I can tell you this: When you walk through the length and breadth of this country there are far too many people not being able to make it as good as the economy and the standard of living we talk about says they should. I don't know of any couple with three children making less than $2000 a month who has a cell phone.

Maybe the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town knows that, and I don't know whether she counselled them in any shape or form that that was a bad thing. I don't know whether she sat down with them and did a budget and told them that they didn't need the cell phone.

The lady member is saying that she told the couple, the people (whoever it was . . . she's saying it was not a couple now) that they should get their priorities straight. That's not bad advice. Maybe that's what she should say to the government!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I didn't hear her say that in here though.

Mr. Speaker, rising poverty is evident in this country. Those of us who on a daily basis meet up with school children, or parents of school children who come to us for school uniforms, school lunches . . . something is radically wrong when that is happening on a widespread basis. I, for one, would never take the school lunch vote out of the budget.

I increased it when I was in charge. But the fact is that an economy where we boast of the kind of growth in the financial industry, and we have to put $200,000 to $300,000 in our budget for school lunches says that there is rising poverty, or somebody is not doing their job. That's what it tells me.

I say that the Social Services Department gets a lot of cussing, but their hands are full. I believe that they are doing the best they can under the circumstances. When you see $200,000 or $300,000 for school lunches . . . we don't have to ask anybody about a cell phone. We don't have to tell anybody about priorities because we realise that there is rising poverty in the country and the question that I pose is: What is being done to alleviate that?

Tomorrow morning I want to give some statistics on what I believe is the cause of this rising poverty. Before I finish, I can tell you that it is not just Caymanians. We have an expatriate community making less than $800 to $900 per month per person. If you think that is not dangerous for this country, then we think other than good.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4.30. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: In accordance with the Standing Orders that set this specific time for rising, I am happy to move the adjournment of this honourable House until 10.00 AM tomorrow.

[Members' laughter]

The Speaker: Before putting the question, it is my understanding that there will be a meeting of Finance Committee tomorrow morning at 9.00 AM.

Hon George A. McCarthy: At 9.00 AM Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: And you feel that you can finish the deliberations of that by 10.00?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Maybe we should say until completion of the Finance Committee. I am sorry.

The Speaker: Fine. That's more appropriate.

The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until Finance Committee has completed its deliberations tomorrow, hopefully by about 10.00 AM.

I shall now put the question. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.33 THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL THE FINANCE COMMITTEE COMPLETES ITS DELIB-ERATIONS.

EDITED
FRIDAY
10 MARCH 2000
12.25 PM

(Time spent in the Chamber: 2.09)

[Prayers read by the First Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

Item No. 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies for late attendance from the Honourable Second Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Legal Administration, and apologies for absence from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is not well.

Moving on to Item No. 3, Government Business, continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. Peter J Smith, CBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on Friday, 18 February 2000. Debate continuing with the First Elected Member for West Bay.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J SMITH, CBE,
GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS,
ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yesterday afternoon when we took the adjournment for the day, I had spoken on several areas. One was the criticism by government that the opposition was not offering alternatives. I had said that the several initiatives started during the course of my period in Executive Council were initiatives to better the community from various standpoints.

The matter of sports, youth development, the elderly and veterans, housing, training, women's affairs, social services, community development, student scholarships, pensions, labour benefits, the Marine Institute, culture, Cayfest. I can say that most of these were put on a firm foundation, and that the people of this country benefited from my work on Executive Council.

I had started to talk about the rising poverty in the country. Let no one fool you that that is not so. We have rising poverty. It is a potentially dangerous state of affairs with a vast contrast between great progress applying to one section of the community over the past 25 years, and the apparent stagnation and outright poverty of the other.

All of this is borne out by the statistics showing what it costs to live here, and what kind of income Caymanians and expatriates alike are making. But for various other reasons, we all know that our people are finding it more difficult to live, especially those with two to four children and single parents.

Some people cannot pay their loans, their mortgage or rent at times. Parents cannot pay the new fees for school. When challenged with that statement, the Minister of Education quickly said that the new school fees could be waived. It is not that the fees can be waived, it is the fact that people are so bad off that they cannot pay in a country that the government likes to say is so well off!

We have far too many poor people, single parents who can't buy uniforms. It seems we are now building a country of poor people, yet there is this cry to stop development in some instances in a country where the social decay is more evident each day. Why? And we heard some of the reasons why there is social decay in this morning's meeting of Finance Committee.

Why is this so? Because the powers that be are afraid to act on the things it would take to solve some of these problems. Poverty is growing. There is a maldistribution of income in the islands. The powers that be are afraid to act on those things, but they sit and criticise the Opposition asking where are our alternatives when they are charged constitutionally with the responsibility to do something about it!

Poverty is growing. There is a maldistribution of income in these islands. According to the Economics and Statistics Office, the average working Caymanian earns $2,600 per month. However, according to the same statistics, approximately 6,900 people—or 60% of all working Caymanians—make less than $2,500 per month. That is, in the range of $833 per month (at the low end), to those on the $2,500 per month level.

Compare this with the fact that somewhere around 2,300—or 20% of all working Caymanians—make more than $3,300 per month. It is clear from those figures that there is an unequal distribution of income in these islands. We find also that there are 809 Caymanians making less than $833 per month. On the expatriate side, there are 2,321 making less than $833 per month.

Statistics tell us that it takes a monthly household expenditure of $1,870 per working person to live. That is the latest statistics. Approximately 9,000 persons—or 41% of working people in these islands—make less than $1,700 per month. There are some 14,000 making between $2,500 per month and $1,600 per month.

According to the Economics and Statistics Office 5,300—or 51% of expatriates working here—make less than the average monthly household expenditure per working person. In other words, 51% of expatriates working here make less than what it takes the average person to survive in these islands.

According to the same statistics, 31%, or 3,351 Caymanians . . .

Mr. Speaker, I don't have a quorum!

The Speaker: If we don't get a quorum within two minutes, I will have to suspend.

[Pause]

The Speaker: We now have a quorum, please continue.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: I was saying that according to the Economics and Statistics Office 5,300—or 51% of expatriates working here—make less than the average monthly expenditure per working person. In other words, 51% of expatriates working here make less than what it takes the average person to survive in these islands.

According to the same statistics, 31% or 3,550 Caymanians out of 11,525 make less than it takes the average household for expenditure per working person. In other words, 31% of the Caymanians make less than what it takes the average person to survive in these islands.

We are creating a poverty stricken country. And most alarmingly we are creating an expatriate community that is poverty stricken in the majority. It is hard to think that in the year 2000 these kinds of statistics exist. This has to be rectified.

This 3% raise, or 5% raise, in salaries per year in the private sector cannot continue. People have to live. And we have a high cost of living in this country. And what do we have in some instances in the hotel industry? Some people cannot get a proper raise. For five years, they get like 25 cents, ten cents on the hour, five years apart. That is why I keep saying that reform is needed in almost every sphere of business in these islands. We cannot continue doing business, as we have been over the past years because our people are becoming poorer and poorer.

There is a harsh reality of growing poverty in an expanded economy such as we have had over the last 25 to 30 years. The policy over the years where government taxed local businesses large and small directly affects and increases the cost of living to those at the end of the scale that cannot afford to pay any more. As I said, we cannot continue that policy.

For example, an offshore banking license is $18,000 per year. And a local business permit for a managing director is $6,000. The local business will have to recoup his $6,000 from within these islands, so he gets it from the public. And whatever he is selling or making is sold for more. The public pays that higher price. The offshore bank doesn't hit the public here; their funds are made elsewhere.

Of course, we have to be careful not to go overboard because of the competition of other jurisdictions. But I believe this is as good a yardstick as any to show how and why government can help stop this unequal yoke in income distribution in this country.

It is true that high income in certain sectors produces savings, which in turn become investments, which in turn provide employment. That is what the economists say. When government provides incentives, or goes easy on one sector of the economy, it should be the expectation that it would be filtered down to people at the very low end to bring them up so they can live properly and save something for their future. But not in this country, where we have that many Caymanians making less than $833 per month. They can't live properly, much less save anything for their children's future.

But, our experience over the past 30 years is that the disproportionate sharing of income which exists is so large, because so much goes to a certain sector that they in turn can become investors of some kind. They can do well. Those of our poor people who have the lesser income and are not investors of any kind never accumulate sufficient savings, if any at all, to rise out of that strata of the economy. So the hard fact is that we have a one-sided prosperity whether we want to agree to it or not.

I am not saying that our people are not better off today than they were in the 1960s or the 1940s. But the fact is that because of the high cost of living in this country our people who are making $833 or $1,600 with two or three children, this is a one-sided prosperity. Those in that sector, our poor people, will not rise out of that strata of the economy.

I can stop now, if you want Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We can go on until 1.00.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Are you sure, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker, everyone is realising the situation with yourself, and I think that you should take a break and go to your doctor's appointment.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings, then, until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.50 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.35 PM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker, in the Chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is good to see you in the Chair.

When we took the adjournment for lunch, I was talking about the rising poverty and the statistics showing the rising poverty. I said that there were far too many people not making enough money to live in the kind of economy in these islands with the high cost of living.

Having said all of that, I want to make it absolutely clear that I am not saying that we should take from the rich and give to the poor.

What I am saying is that much thought, plans, and workable ideas must be given as to how to bring those of our people out of that strata, that mess they are getting into. Let no one believe that we are not going to have to take some hard decisions that will probably be unpopular. But, to turn around this growing imbalance of income and allow those people a chance of existing, hard decisions will have to be made. To do this we will need caring and concerned leadership.

Income must be brought in line with the high cost of living in these islands. We have a situation where for periods of five years at a time people working in the hotels get no more than a ten cent or twenty-five cent raise per hour. We can see why we have these kinds of statistics. There is no reason under the sun why we should have hotels paying $3.50 or $4.50 per hour. If they can't do better than that, if they can't bring a better quality tourist than that to upgrade our tourism product, then we shouldn't have them.

And it shows that there is a problem in the management and the policy because if the work had been done before and all the statistics done, because I am sure all the business plans must be done when they go to build one of these hotels, then it must be that the ministry should be able to say at that time 'If you can't pay more than $3.50 we can't give you any license.' They must be able to show what their business plan is, what they are going to make, what their projections are. I find that you cannot lay blame anywhere else but on that management policy.

I have no axes to grind. All I want to see done is that the people I serve—especially the man on the street who cannot pull himself out of this stratum he is existing in—are taken better care of. That is not happening. That is why the minimum wage is needed. I know the problem the minister is having. She can't say it because she is bound by collective responsibility. I know why that committee has not met since it was instituted in 1998. I am not going to blame the minister because I had the same problems.

We have people on Executive Council who cater to that sector of business and do not want to put any pressure on them as far as minimum wages or any kind of labour benefits. And to give credit where credit is due to the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, if he hadn't put some pressure on we would not have gotten certain cases to court, have not had certain payments and hourly gratuities paid. I give credit where credit is due—not to say that I agree with him on everything. I don't.

We cannot allow our tourism product to grow on the basis that we are bringing people in that people cannot make the money to pay our people properly. We are creating poverty. And nobody should ask about my position on development because I am pro development, and I will talk about that a little later on. But the truth is, that when you have people taking home less than $200 per week it can only do one thing: It can only create the crime that people were lamenting this morning.

We talk about our prison being filled up. And some people like to say it's the expatriates. Well, look at the figures. Look at what some of them are making. Look at what some Caymanians are making and you understand why we have this problem. We have some serious problems, and it is fundamental because of what people believe. It is not that it cannot be changed. But it is a fundamental thinking of theirs that you cannot touch certain businesses or else they are going to run.

Yes, we have to be careful because of the competitive marketplace in today's world, Cayman probably is in a precarious situation. Nevertheless, that should not stop us from putting in place those measures that bring our people out of that stratum. We are creating a nation of poverty. I would hope that a new government would see to it that a minimum wage is put into place in the New Year.

It is unfortunate that we have this rising poverty. Unfortunately, some people believe that the way to get this turned around is to stop development. How mistaken they are. They believe too that all initiatives for development should be harassed unless they or their friends are part and parcel of it. That's a game I see being played here. We cannot build a country on selfishness. If that attitude is to prevail, the favoured few would live and the poor will get poorer. That's what will happen.

The figures I have given show a growing poverty. Stop development and we will be nothing but a poverty nation, with only those who have already made it able to live and have their being. That's what will happen. The poor will get poorer. That's all that will happen. The figures I have given of a serious mal-distribution of income tell me—and should say to all of us in this honourable House—that we cannot continue to import people who are not paid enough to live.

Think of the problems being created because people brought in here are paid $800 per month, if that much. And Caymanians are paid $833 per month. Think of four or six people living in one room. Think of the problems our own people, and the outsiders, can cause and those problems we are already facing because people are not paid properly. No one should be imported here to do construction for $3 or $2 per hour. Not in today's economy! Not with today's cost of living! And that is happening because the good Caymanian has to compete with that kind of salary. He cannot go out and quote on a piece of business when somebody else is bidding on it and they have workers who they are paying $2 per hour. I see it. It is happening.

You know some contractors are not paying sufficient salary. What is this creating?

And then we quarrel about the number of work permits we have. It is a fact that there are far too many people who have permits that have them and don't need them because they can walk around and get work here, there and everywhere. So that has to be streamlined somehow.

Now, you might say that that person is a Caymanian too operating a little business. So how do you fine-tune it? What I am saying is that you can't allow them to pay $2, $3, $4 per hour. A nation of poverty is being created, and look at what is happening to us. We are all suffering because of it.

Are we so fool to believe that by stopping development we can stop that kind of selfishness? Are we to believe that if we run away good developers that crime will cease? The only ones to suffer most if developers are harassed or if development is stopped are those who are making less than the $2,500, those making less than the $1,600, those making less than the $833 per month. They are the people who will be hurt. Development breathes life—without it we wither up and die.

Somehow, there is a belief that we always will be as well off as we are. We hear people saying that we can stop because we have enough. How wrong they are. And the worse thing that could be done is to allow that kind of notion to be spread and made as gospel truth. What is needed is good ideas, and better management of whatever development comes to these islands. Manage our national assets better. And we only have a few.

What are those national assets? The Caymanian people by far are still the best national asset we have. We have peace. We still have tranquillity. It is still relatively safe, although crime is running high. Those are national assets that have to be managed better. But how do we manage them? Do we manage them by continuing in the trend that we are? No. What is going to happen is more and more crime.

Let's not continue to blame foreigners. We can lay some blame there, but we have to look at the salary levels. We have to wonder where and how people are making it. Those of us who walk the highways and byways of this country know that they are not making it good because they come to us for the handouts. They can't say that all of these people are lazy. And they can't say they are extravagant, and not prioritising. They can't say that because I am studious enough to check out when somebody comes, and I more or less know who they are. And if after 16 years I don't know my people, then I am in bad shape!

All of us who are representatives know how many single parents come to us because they cannot make it in these Cayman Islands today. Why is there growing poverty here when we are supposedly doing so well, and have so much to get from? Shouldn't this buoyancy of the economy provide immense opportunities for the development of Caymanian entrepreneurship? Sure it should. So to speak, we should be in the prime of life, rather than Caymanian businesses closing down. In this New Millennium . . . and it is precisely at this time that small and medium size enterprises should blossom forth and be able to take advantage of a growing economy. We are still at about 5%. They should blossom forth to take advantage of new niches opening up as our major sector expands and grows. But is this happening? This is what I would like to see happening.

It is now in the New Millennium that the right environment of economic, political and social stability, our responsible fiscal framework, essential public services and encouragement of good investment and enterprise should be taking place. Is it here? If it is, there are only a few to benefit. Then, when these things are in place—facilities to assist and encourage prudent financial preparation and planning so that our people—our entrepreneurs can be able to seize the opportunities from good development and live a better and more financially secure life.

For as long as the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town has been in this House, he has been talking about the Gramean Bank. I have been talking about the Singaporean experience and places like that, which are progressive. I think it is now time to set up a proper development bank. And the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town made reference to it in his speech. It could be the catalyst for advancing the development of small and medium size businesses in these islands.

This is in part so that very low rates of financing can be given to our people to start up small businesses. All countries in the region . . .

Well, Madam Speaker, do I have a quorum?

The Deputy Speaker: It has been brought to my attention that there is not a quorum in the Chamber. If there is no quorum within three minutes, I will have to suspend proceedings.

[pause]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Where's Truman? I want him to listen to this!

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Elected Member for West Bay there is now a quorum in the Chamber, you may proceed with your debate.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

All countries in the region subscribe to the Caribbean Development Bank, true. But it is also true that all progressive countries have development banks. We have seen several small hotels here fail, and a few barely survive through the blood, sweat, and tears of the owners. I don't know if Caribbean Development Bank is the best place to finance these kinds of small businesses. I believe that a proper development bank could help this country. It could be the catalyst for financing of small businesses.

One of the most important aspects of starting up a small business is proper project preparation and technical advice in the financial area. As chairman of the AIDB, this was one of the shortcomings I found in projects, as past chairman, that is. The experience in the past with such things as boats for commercial fishing and small hotels was the absence of sound technical advice, and thus not enough capital lent to ensure the business success in the early days for start-up and expansion.

The basket of currency loans from the Caribbean Development Bank and the local high interest rates have been a hindrance to more successful Caymanian entrepreneurship. That is what we have to rectify. That is why we need to put in place a development bank of our own. The basket of currencies and the local high interest rates have been a hindrance to more successful Caymanian entrepreneurship.

There is no use in having the kind of growth we have experienced in the last 25 or 30 years only to find our people worse off. And that is the position today in many areas. Some have done exceedingly well.

The byword in recent days has been "growth management." I said that since 1980. It is no doubt that we cannot subscribe to too large a population. We know that would do us no good. But we have to be careful in talking about development that we don't destroy what has given us the standard of living we have enjoyed. Several things are drawn to my attention when we start talking about growth management.

One is, Who is going to fine tune it? If you listen to some candidates . . . because this is the time we start to hear about growth management from outside because we talked about long-term, short-term, and medium-term planning in here, but we are getting that now on the outside from the candidates. But if you listen to some candidates, they will do nothing. They seem to have all the answers. But they can't give a viable alternative. Some of them talk about "good development," but they themselves build apartments with no exits, no backdoors. Yet they have the audacity to criticise me!

As a representative of the people, I am not in charge of development, not even when I was in Executive Council. But what I do know is that when the economic situation has taken a down turn and people are out of work, as has happened before in these islands, then people start hustling and bustling and pressuring you to get the economy going. People need to live, simple.

Over the last several years, many Caymanians invested their lives in building apartments. What happened to them? They are talking about keeping it as it is. When you start to badmouth development and you have no plan as to how you will ensure that our people will not be hurt, the only thing to happen is that those Caymanians who are even now not making sufficient money to meet the cost of living here now, will be the ones to suffer.

So, I ring a warning bell that the people of these islands had better pay close attention to who is talking. As I said, we have candidates running around the place talking much. Some of them already have it made yet they have no plan as to how our people will survive economically. If they succeed and they run everybody who is thinking of investing in this country away, who is going to pay the bills? Who will pay their mortgage? Who will pay their car loan? Who will pay their school fees? Who will pay their grocery bills? Who?

And when the economy is down, people are not working, and businesses small and large have to close down, they would have caused a nightmare of poverty worse than we now have. Let no one believe that it can't be worse than what it is today. It can be Madam Speaker. Let us be careful. It is bad that there are those who are pushing this view of slow growth now, advancing the position that slower growth means we can live on what we now have. They are sadly mistaken.

All that will happen is that we will all be much worse off. And then you will see real crime in this country. And then you will have instability and much more social collapse. And the main manifestation of social alienation is crime, violent crime with more poverty.

Some of them believe that all you have to do is cuss the present representative. Give fancy-sounding words like "growth management" and say "I am for Caymanians" and that that entitles them to be managers and run the country get votes and get in here. Since when have some of them been for Cayman? It can't be the ones who when they headed departments in big business beat up on Caymanians and wouldn't lift a straw to help them. It can't be them. It can't be those who sat down for four years and did nothing to help the community, but who are now ready, willing and able to cuss McKeever and everybody else in this House.

Well, let's put it this way: I know what it is to be poor. I know what it is to sleep on a floor bed. I know what it is to have no shoes. I know what it is to have one [pair of] pants. I know what it is to have two shirts to my name. I have done some things to help the poor in this country, and I intend to continue to do the things necessary to help the poor and I will join with those who are willing to help the poor. And, we can bring the poor people to a better situation in these islands.

If I am given the assistance, I am not going to do anything to make the poor people poorer. If you get in here . . . some of them who are cussing us now, that is what will happen because of their ideas. They say dog ate your supper, well let me say this, dog not going to eat your supper because there will be no supper for the dog to eat!

While they are in an election flurry in this country, and say they want to represent the people, they don't care about the kind of Cayman their ideas will build. They don't care about the poor. I am not going to join anyone who doesn't have an idea of where we have come from and where we are going, except to say they are "for Caymanians" and "let's stop development so we can get more." They don't have one shred of an idea what they are talking about.

Some of them had their opportunity before too. What did they do? They came promising they were going to do this for the young people. Why didn't they do it when they had the chance? This brings me straight to immigration.

Every election year since I have been here this immigration issue has been a debating tool. And it's sad because some people want it that way. It behoves all of us to bear in mind where these islands have come from, where we are and where we, the people, desire to go in the future. Immigration means people, and we cannot play with people's lives. We must come to a stage in these islands where everyone living here, everyone brought in to do a service, must know what their future is from the day they agree to come here and we agree to allow them to come in.

In that sense, we have people living here for 25 years—someone said 42 years—not knowing what can or cannot happen to them. I have Cuban family here who can work but can't get a passport to travel. A nation cannot long withstand that kind of policy and remain stable. We cannot have this kind of situation and remain stable. The Cayman Islands today is the fifth largest financial centre in the world. And I am not one to run down my country. We still have a good country, and we want to keep it that way.

I don't get much credit for it, but while I was in Executive Council a lot of good laws were passed to enhance this country as a financial centre. We have passed laws to enhance the Proceeds of Criminal Conduct legislation and other legislation. And it wasn't easy. And they run around saying 'McKeever can't do this and that, but others can.' Well, let me just say that I was part of the team that went to London to talk about it. Let me just say that it was more than once that I was part of that kind of team too. I have my strengths. I am no financial wizard. I can't make and put together laws. But I know what is good and sound for this country. I am not going to run down the country so that others can jump on the bandwagon to come here. No!

It's not that development is bad, what we need are good policies in place to fine-tune and manage our growth more effectively so that all Caymanians have a fair chance of getting something out of it, and ensure that our children have a good future. What we all need to understand is that the world is a whole lot different today than it was 30-odd years ago when our development took off. Thirty years ago we were unique in our liberal attitude seeking to attract foreign investment. Thirty years ago there were no banking alternatives in the Turks and Caicos Islands. Thirty years ago there were no safe offshore opportunities in the British Virgin Islands. Thirty years ago Cuba was not poised to be a powerhouse in the Caribbean tourism market. So, thirty years ago the Cayman Islands stood as the prime option for investment and growth in the Caribbean basin. We all are better off.

However, this is changing. The competitive environment surrounding us has changed tremendously. Today both developed and developing countries are going all out to attract high value business and projects. They are asking people to come in. If we drive ours away what is going to happen to us? Do we want to put ourselves in a position where in 15 years from today we have to prostitute ourselves to bring in development? No! We want to keep the atmosphere where people can come.

It is a sad fact that a lot of the benefits that would have ensured Caymanians a greater share of the pie were not put in place in those early days. We just simply said "come." Training, which is needed to ensure the ability to continue as a top quality financial centre, where that a majority of our people could over a period of years be in the top positions, those benefits were not offered in sufficient quantity to allow this to happen in the beginning.

In any immigration policy, as far as I am concerned, the requirement to offer training to able and willing Caymanians to ensure proper succession planning and upward mobility within a mutually agreed timeframe must be part and parcel of that policy. It must be a key ingredient for training to take place.

What is this rubbish about forced training? We need to force some people to train. If we leave the situation as is, then what will happen? All these many years we are not up to par. Far from it. We just let everybody have his way. We are afraid to touch this one, afraid to say that. Well, what happened? We don't have the training on the scale needed. So don't say to me that the Manpower Development Plan was forced training and the Chamber didn't want it, as the Minister of Education said in Finance Committee.

I see some ugly things arising here that hitherto was not . . . and it is caused because people feel that they do not have the benefits out of what is happening in the country. Any immigration policy has to be balanced, has to be fair, but it must be fair all around and our people must share in those benefits. People from the outside must know where they are.

In connection with that, government made an announcement on 3 March. I had to think that this is a significant policy. Where in the world . . . and why was this not put in the Throne Speech that was just delivered? the state of the nation where policies and ideas flow from, where your legislative programme is more or less tabled by the Governor's Address. Why?

Let me say that it is good to have businesses put forward their business plans. That is what the Manpower Development Plan called "labour budgets." But according to the Minister of Education, it was forced training and it couldn't go through. I can't say too much on this because what the statement is all about has not all sunk in as yet. It came on the eve of a meeting that I had in the West Bay Town Hall where we had a forum of qualified young Caymanians, although I heard that being berated here this morning. Ideas come from those kinds of forums. I don't understand why the government didn't put this policy through their Throne Speech.

There are a few things that I don't know if I can agree with. Certainly, in this day and age I don't know that not having personal references is such a good idea. What are they saying about the $200? Say a very small gardening company has four or five people on permits. That's $1,000. That doesn't mean much to a big law firm. So, is this going to help the small businesses? I don't know.

Government's immigration policy is harem-scarem. I understand that long-term Jamaicans are being told they must catch the next flight home. I don't have the correspondence, but I understand that this is what is being said. Again, I want to ring a warning bell because in 1986 or 1987, a similar policy was put in place and those people who were here for a long time . . . many of them were sent back. You know the maid you have. You know the mechanic you have. You know your gardener. You don't know what you are going to get. I said that what was done in 1986, 1987, did not do this country any good. I hope that our country is not having irreparable damage done. No announcement was made, but I understand it is happening.

It is a pity that for so long, the 16 years I have been here and before, our immigration policy comes to the forefront every election year. There are people who wish to use it in that sense. Caymanian on a whole want to see a policy that is workable and fair to everybody. We are a country depending upon international business. International business demands that they have sufficient quantity of and quality staff to operate their business or else it will move to other jurisdictions. So a fair balance needs to be struck.

Whether this select committee is going to meet in earnest, or whether the government is going to sit down and do nothing about the situation is something that I still don't know. But I can tell you that it is not good for government after they sit in select committee to make blatant statements trying to absolve themselves from the decisions of that committee after government signed the report. That is what I saw with the statement made by government when they said that government does this, but the committee did that. They shouldn't try to ball around their fingers the members of this House. Be men and stand up and say 'We, the select committee, put that out for thoughts and ideas.'

What I think the Minister of Education should have said was that the committee didn't meet often. That's what should have been done, rather than making a statement saying 'We are the government, but that is the committee.' Nonsense! They are part and parcel of that committee. Why try to run and hide? Because it's an election year? That is why I say there are some people who don't want the immigration policies straightened out. They want to use it for whatever purpose they can use it in an election year.

I move to another subject. I called for some career guidance unit to be set up back in 1998. I see that the minister is moving in that direction. I am appreciative of that because it is needed. Children need to know from an early age and be guided in a direction before they reach college age and don't know and it hurts their whole four years in college. So I am pleased that that is happening.

There has been some criticism of the education system. I certainly believe that there has been some laxity. But can we blame teachers? Can we blame administrators? Or do we blame policy? I believe that the education policy in this country suffered during the year and one half that the minister and his permanent secretary took on the Vision 2008. I saw that happening when the Governor announced it. I saw some difficulties there. It is proved that that is where some problems never got tended to and only grew and manifested themselves.

I want to congratulate our teachers who have a hard job. But they do a good job. Dealing with children, as those of us who are parents know, is not easy.

It's not Johnny, it's you!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I am talking to the Minister of Education who knows when I am going on to a good subject. He wants me to beat up on my colleague—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, and Honourable Minister, I would rather that there is no cross talk across the floor of the House.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Good! Tell him about it!

It is not easy dealing with children. Madam Speaker, you are a parent and you know what I am talking about. If we as leaders criticise our teachers and show them no respect or no appreciation, what can we expect from our children in school?

What we have to do is ensure that we pay them competitive salaries and give them good working conditions instead of voting for big pay increases for members of this House. Just think of it. In previous generations, when, for instance, the honourable Chief Secretary was a teacher, and when I was going to school, women in particular (both men and women) had few good career opportunities. So, the teaching profession was a relatively attractive occupation. But I believe that if you look at the trends in salaries and benefits, by the 1980s salaries for teachers had declined both in absolute terms and relative to other occupations and opportunities that had increased.

We can encourage our teachers and administrators who have to deal with teachers and children. It is unwholesome to criticise them when they have to deal with so much discipline in the schools. High school, the middle school, and other primary schools, have a difficult job. I can congratulate Mrs. McLaughlin and Miss Adora for the task they have. We know what we faced. We know what we see on a daily basis on the streets. We know what is happening.

Can you imagine that in this day and age we have children beating up on teachers in school? This is happening. So they have a difficult job.

I can say that I am totally satisfied with the teachers in my primary school in West Bay. It is a joy for me to visit there and find the kind of atmosphere that exists. Mrs. Shirley Kidd is a good principal. We have had some good teachers and principals in that school. She has a good rapport with her staff. I think it is a blessing that we can send our children to a place where they are so well cared for where we have primary schools with teachers like Mrs. Mendosa-Hydes. These people care a lot about the situation surrounding them; they care a lot about the children. We have good teachers.

Like I said, there's been a laxity in the policy for the 18 months or so that the minister and his permanent secretary have been involved in Vision 2008.

What I often look at when it comes to schools and teachers—and I find a shame and a disgrace—is that we have an immigration policy that does not allow some of our teachers the satisfaction of knowing without a shadow of a doubt that they have security of tenure here. They are here for 25 or 28 years not having that security. Yet, they perform so well dealing on a daily basis seeing to our children's welfare, preparing them for the future. I say a big thank you to them for all of their hard work.

And, Madam Speaker, not having any security of tenure here, not having any pension, not knowing if they are going to have pensions because of the local contracts . . . and no COS!

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: That's right!

Mr. Roy Bodden: The minister can't dodge that either!

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: So, Madam Speaker, we cannot allow an immigration policy . . . and I am imploring the government to get together because I am not going to blame any chairman because he was studious in what he was doing to either say this immigration situation gets some level of satisfaction because when we come to things like teachers and doctors we have to be thankful. How many of our own are going into that profession?

And it's true. We gave the Governor status, we gave the Attorney General status, the previous ones, and yet we have people for 28 years who care for our children on a daily basis, walk them through school, teach them the reading and the writing, and they, Madam Speaker, do not know what their security is. Some are reaching the age of retirement, mind you.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Give them a little long service medal.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Yeah, and even that they messed up!

[Members' laughter]

The Deputy Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the afternoon break?

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.42 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.00 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The First Elected Member for West Bay continuing his debate on the Throne Speech.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you.

I was dealing with the immigration policy particularly in regard to teachers. I closed by saying that we cannot expect to have teachers here for 28 years and not make it lawful for them to be one of us. They have homes, children born here, and yet no security of tenure, no COS and no pension. Yet, teachers are some of the most important people in our islands, dealing with our children from day to day.

This is not new. As I said, they have been here for 28 years. But it is time now that we take it in hand and deal with it. A nation cannot long withstand that kind of policy. We become unstable in more ways than one.

I want to deal with a matter raised by the Minister of Education. He talked about the opposition not offering alternatives to the problems, or assisting the government. The opposition, in Westminster style of government, can only offer what we believe are workable solutions. Either we catch a minister, or whoever the administrators are, and we talk to them on a one-to-one basis and give them an idea of something that can be done, or if we feel strong enough we bring it by way of a private member's motion. In our context here, that is how we have operated. We have brought a majority of things through private member's motions to get legislative sanction.

It is very political for him to say that members here never offered anything of any good quality for an alternative. When we look at the various private member's motions, it tells what we have tried to do as an opposition backbench. It tells what we believe can be done. The only problem is that while the government has voted for these motions what have they done? No matter what kind of alternative you give, or what problem you try to rectify, and you bring it here and everybody votes on it, if government and its machinery, its departments, does not take it in hand and deal with it, then it can't help the country. So after it leaves this House, it is the government to deal with the matter.

I will look [at Private Members' Motions] from 1998 onwards.

- ◆ No. 1/98—Long Service or Meritorious Awards—Customs and Immigration Officers
- ◆ No. 2/98—Change of Dredging Policies (By the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 4/98—Establishment of a Road Fund (a good idea, by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 8/98—Increase of Financial Assistance to the Elderly, Handicapped and Other Persons in Need (by myself.)
- ◆ No. 9/98—Minimum Wage (by myself.)
- ◆ No. 10/98—Assistance to Local Farmers in the Importation of Shotgun Shells (the Elected Member for North Side.)
- ◆ No. 11/98—Appointment of a Select Committee to take input from the Public on the Review of Dependent Territories (Moved by myself and the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 12/98—Freedom of Information/Official Information Act (the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 13/98—Problems of Public Education in the Cayman Islands (the First Elected Member for George Town, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 16/98—Amendment to the Marine Conservation Law (five things that need to be done, moved by the First Elected Member for George Town and me.)

- ◆ No. 18/98—Moratorium on Liquor Licence for West Bay District (moved by myself and seconded by the Third Elected Member for West Bay.)
- ◆ No. 19/98—Loud Music on Public Beaches (moved by myself, seconded by the Elected Member for North Side.)
- ◆ No. 20/98—Award of Government Contracts (moved by the Third Elected Member for West Bay and myself.)
- ◆ No. 21/98—Appointment of a Complaints Commissioner (This was rejected but we moved it all the same. Moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, seconded by the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 22/98—Amendment to the Development and Planning Regulations (Assisting Caymanians again for guest houses and apartments. Moved by the First Elected Member for George Town, seconded by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. Still hasn't been done but this is something that is good for the public.)
- ◆ No. 23/98—Referendum Law (The First Elected Member for George Town, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 4/2000—Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers (Moved by myself and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 5/2000—Concerns With The Occurrences At Northward Prison (Moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and me.)
- ◆ No. 6/2000—Investigation into the Pedro St James Construction Project Account (Moved by the First Elected Member for George Town and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 1/99—After School programme (Moved by the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town and me.)
- ◆ No. 2/99—Training Initiative (Moved by me and seconded by the Third Elected Member for West Bay.)
- ◆ No. 3/99—Housing Initiative Affordable Housing—and Madam Speaker, we dealt with that issue for three days, and on that day alone I myself (I think all totalled there were 20-odd suggestions in one day on how to help housing) . . . moved by myself and seconded by the Third Elected Member for West Bay.
- ◆ No. 4/99—Civic centre for George Town/Hurricane Centre (moved by the Third Elected Member for George Town, seconded by me.)
- ◆ No. 5/99—Amendment to the Immigration Law RE: Domestic Problems (Moved by myself, seconded by the Elected Member for North Side.)
- ◆ No. 6/99—Multidisciplinary Environmental Impact Study. Can't say that's not good. And it passed too. (Moved by the Third Elected Member for George Town, seconded by the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 7/99—Engineering investigation into the causes and possible effects of flooding in the Savannah are (Moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, seconded by the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 10/99—Renaming of Harquail Bypass to "Esterley Tibbetts Highway" (Moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and me.) It passed, but I don't see any signs up yet.
- ◆ No. 11/99—Referendum Law (I don't know if I mentioned that one before.)
- ◆ No. 12/99—Cuban Nationals with Caymanian Connections. Trying to help our people there. (Moved by the Third Member for West Bay and seconded by me.)
- ◆ No. 13/99—Assistance for Local Potable Water Producers (Moved by the the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, seconded by me.)
- ◆ No. 14/99—Motion to Restrict the Practice of Tattoo Artists and Other Persons from having School Age Children as their Customers (Moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and the Elected Member for North Side.)
- ◆ No. 15/99—Enquiry into Local Companies Control Licence for ESSO Standard Oil SA Ltd. (Moved by me and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 16/99—Caribbean Utilities Company Ltd's Rate Increase (Moved by the Third Elected Member for West Bay and seconded by me.)
- ◆ No. 17/99—Motion to Establish a Family Unit within the Police Department (Moved by the Elected Member for North Side and seconded by me.)
- ◆ No. 18/99—Consideration for the Protection and Assistance of the Physically Challenged (Moved by the Second and Third Elected Members for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 19/99—Electronic Mail Service (Moved by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, seconded by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 20/99—The Development of a Strategic Approach to Crime and Recidivism (Moved by The Fourth Elected Member for George Town and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 23/99—Vesting of Crown Lands (the First Elected Member for George Town , the First Elected Member for West Bay.)
- ◆ No. 24/99—Review of Measures Imposed Under the Finance Law 1998 (the First Elected Member for George Town and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 26/99—Request for Government to Consider the Purchase of Properties for cemeteries and this Legislative Assembly (Moved by me and seconded by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.)
- ◆ No. 27/99—Introduction of an Electronic Transactions Law (Moved by the Third Elected Member for George Town, seconded by the First Elected Member for George Town.)
- ◆ No. 29/99—Government Action Needed in Taxis, Watersports and Tour Operators (Moved by me and seconded by the Elected Member for North Side.)
- ◆ No. 30/99—Government Assistance for Local Farming Community (Moved by the Third Elected Member for West Bay, seconded by the First Elected Member for West Bay.)
- ◆ No. 31/99—Removal of Import Duty from Imported Foods, the motion that did not get finished. But I believe they agreed on it (Moved by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, seconded by the Third Elected Member for West Bay.)
- ◆ [No. 16/2000]—Equal Rights for illegitimate children and parents of illegitimate children (Moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, seconded by the Elected Member for North Side.

So, Madam Speaker, all of these motions impacting and dealing with practically every area of life in this country . . . and the government says we didn't try to do anything. Well, if they thought that we were no good and such poor representatives, why in the world didn't they reject those motions? No, they passed every one of them. Every single one of them was given a safe passage in this House.

The problem is that the opposition cannot do anything about the situation after that. Government needs to take action on those things. Every sphere of life we have tried to do something positive to assist from this side.

Government doesn't do anything about it except to try to blame us for their problems. But, it's an election year so the Minister of Education will try to show us in a bad light—but not successfully!

Politics will be politics. I don't expect government to say any good about me. But my record of accomplishments stands. Some of the surest foundations were set in the Ministry of Community Development. While I didn't agree with everything the new minister did, at least on most of those initiatives she kept the same policy. In sports she carried on the same policy and I am concerned that things like Cricket did not get its facilities and I believe there are some funds in the budget again this year. I don't know if it's sufficient. But I do hope that they get on with the facilities.

It's a growing programme. We have a good coach. A lot of people are interested. There's well over 400 children involved in the sport and it's growing. But sports, like many other things, is at a crossroads and needs some re-thinking through the various organisations.

I am glad that we started the youth policy. The minister has completed it. I would hope that a new government would take that policy and put it into proper implementation. Not everything can be done at one time, but if anyone believes that the social needs of this country can afford to take a back seat—and I keep saying this—then they are sadly mistaken. They only have to see what is presently happening with us.

The increase in juvenile crime: Between 1989 and 1992 it was up to over 300 and we brought it down in 1996 to the 100 mark or 89 cases. But we drastically brought it down because we put emphasis on those things that impact children, and we had a good atmosphere all around trying to do something about the situation.

I believe that the minister didn't have a tremendous . . . although they all say over there how much they help each other, I don't believe that that is so. I think that they are saying that because they have to say it because they are still in Executive Council, and when election time comes, they are going to have to be saying something different because they are going to have to say what the facts were. They are bound by collective responsibility and I know that they had their difficulties and not enough support in certain areas. And I know that ministry never had the kind of support it should have had because it was always the bastard child in government.

When the New Year comes in, God willing, the youth policy . . . a new government is going to have to sit down and decide on those things that can make better direction for our young people. There is far too much crime. And we lament the increase in the police, but the police force is stretched to its limit. That's a fact. We cannot say otherwise. While we do not like the way certain things have been done, there is so much going on that they are stretched.

I cannot expect if something is happening in Northwest Point and the car is in Botabano for them to cure it immediately. I am hoping that the people of this country understand that. We have to do a lot of policing ourselves, in more ways than one. No, we can't deal with the criminals. Law enforcement has to deal with them. To say that there has not been laxity in the areas that need to be dealt with, as members mentioned this morning in Finance Committee, it is a fact. I asked for a task force in 1998 and the Minister of Education was making fun of that again this morning. And nothing was done.

At that time I asked that education, the ministry, the department, the schools, the police, the churches, the social clubs, get together and form a task force to deal with the problem that was arising. Not to say that the problems did not exist in the schools before. It existed. But not on the magnitude we are finding, and it was spreading out into the community because school children, especially from high school, were going to various parties just to wait out one another to have a fight. Not with fists, but with weapons. It started at school and stretched out that they couldn't even go to a party because of those kinds of things.

So, we asked for a task force. Nothing has happened. We have a problem on our hands and I have moved from district to district, but the task force in George Town, the one in West Bay and the one in Bodden Town are working. If they can make recommendations and send them to the Governor to help the situation, because this is what the Governor and other officials need to know—what parents know, what people who deal with it on a daily basis find out.

I don't think that my time was wasted. And I don't think that those persons who came to the various meetings wasted their time. I believe it was all good for the country.

Crime has to be treated as crime. We have to have humane prisons. We have to treat them and see that when they go in there they come out better persons than when they went in, through the various programmes. That is government's job to do. But where crime has been committed, you must pay the price. Where you become soft, then the country is in danger. Where you ease up, and make people believe that anything and everything can be done and you will only get a slap on your wrist, there is a growing lack of discipline in this country that needs to be dealt with seriously.

If we seem to be weak, then we will be taken advantage of. We need to be firm in dealing with the issues, especially when we have to deal with young people who have their own ideas. They are not stupid. They are not dunces. They have their own ideas about how they want to see things go. So, we cannot ease up. Prisons will have to be prisons. We will have to be humane—feed them, school them as much as possible in there.

We spent some $40-odd million on prisons in the last 12 years. What are we doing wrong? Something is not right when we find the need to constantly fill the prison.

Madam Speaker, I don't know about you, but I believe that I have done enough talking for today. I am going to ask you to adjourn until Monday morning at 10.00 AM.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I can put the question on the adjournment I will have to ask the Serjeant-at-Arms to bring in sufficient members to form a quorum.

[pause]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, my watch is very fast and I have twenty minutes to five. It seems there are still ten minutes left.

The Deputy Speaker: It's 4.20 PM, by the Speaker's clock. I was going to ask if it was the wish of the House that we adjourn at this time. But if you are prepared to continue.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I might as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I don't want to impose my will on the House, but as I said, my watch is fast. I am sorry about that.

I am concerned too about our national security. It is obvious that with all the good attempts of our police force utilising the one ocean-going vessel we have . . . in today's world where our islands are open to so much illegal traffic by air or by sea, I would have thought that by now a more serious attempt would have been made to curb the illegal activity of importation of things like guns.

We hear various reports saying that there are guns everywhere on the streets. As I said, it gives me cause to think hard about national security. We have government now removing the requirements for personal references for work permits. And they say that could be good for businesses. I don't know. But I would hope that if they are going to stick to that policy that a serious consideration would be that the police force in conjunction with immigration would enhance the present fingerprinting capabilities by instituting a more thorough system.

There will be no more personal reference and there is belief that police records can be tampered with or bought in certain places. So I would hope that this suggestion would be looked at. I know that the Chief Secretary moved out of his seat when I was talking, but I hope he heard the suggestion. If I need to I will tell him about it again.

We don't want to have a country where we live in fear of moving about because we don't know who is who. And we have to have some feeling that somebody knows who is coming into the country and about who is coming into the country, what their makeup is. I would believe that a law firm hiring an attorney from overseas would want to have a professional reference. I would think that a bank hiring a manager would want a personal reference for that manager. If I am wrong, then somebody tell me so.

Is the removal for the need of personal references going to attract a different kind of element than we would want? Is the removal of that requirement going to endanger us any more than we are? Yes, it probably was some paper work for each application, I think three references were required. So three sheets of paper less. Maybe it doesn't mean a whole lot to some people, but I believe that in a country where our police force is stretched to the limit and where we have national security limited, that immigration should have the means to know who is who, and together with the police have that knowledge, something that can move quickly.

With today's technology, that is possible. I am not sure how they do it, but I would hope that it would be a reality for a more thorough fingerprinting programme.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, if you are going on to a new subject, according to the clock on this desk it's one minute before the hour of 4.30. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this House.

The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure of moving the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM tomorrow. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.37 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 13 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
MONDAY
13 MARCH 2000
12.25 PM

(Time spent in Chamber: 2.23)

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation]

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

First item on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

COMMONWEALTH MESSAGE

The Deputy Speaker: Today being Commonwealth Day, I now read into the records of this Legislative Assembly a message for Commonwealth Day 2000, from Her Majesty the Queen, Head of the Commonwealth.

"It is highly appropriate that the theme of Commonwealth Day at the start of the new millennium should be 'The Communications Challenge.' For much of the millennium just ended, the challenge was to relay information as speedily and accurately as possible.

"What once took weeks is now instantaneous, but the advance in technology brings a new challenge of how to use rapid communication responsibly and for the common good.

"We have to strive to ensure that the advantages of modern communication systems are available to all and are used to bring us all closer together, not to create fresh divisions. And we need to remember that exciting though the new ways of communicating undoubtedly are, what matters most is what we say to each other.

"The Commonwealth is an organisation so diverse and widespread that it has always depended on good communications which are helped, of course, by having a common language.

"Recent advances in communication technology are particularly helpful in fostering the non-governmental networks which help to make the commonwealth so unique. The exchange of information and sharing of experiences between representatives of civil society and the different countries form an important part of the Commonwealth activities at the start of the 21st Century. Both in these networks and in our co-operation at government level our shared values and traditions provide a foundation for using the new technology to our common advantage.

The challenge for the century just started will be to find ways to use ever faster communications to bring greater harmony and understanding both within each of our societies and between them, and thereby to strengthen the Commonwealth. Elizabeth R. 13 March, 2000"

LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE SPEAKER

The Deputy Speaker: I have received a letter from the honourable Speaker, which I will read. It is addressed to me as Deputy Speaker:

"Honourable Members, Ministers and Members of the Cayman Islands Legislative Assembly: I wish to express my sincere gratitude to you for the assistance rendered to me on Friday, 10th March, when I became suddenly ill. Particularly, I wish to thank the Serjeant who was there at a hand's reach, the Clerk and the Hon Minister for Health who arranged that I be seen immediately at the Hospital; Drs. Cummings and Robertson and their staff who upon my arrival there, rendered the necessary medical attention.

"I am most grateful to you all and am pleased to say that I am recuperating satisfactorily under the very professional, efficient and capable hands here at the hospital.

"Once again I thank each and every one for your concerns. May God bless you all.

"Yours sincerely [signed] Mabry S. Kirkconnell, MBE, JP, Speaker."

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have received apologies from the honourable Third Official Member, who will be arriving later.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

STATEMENT BY HONOURABLE MEMBER

CAYMANIAN COMPASS EDITORIAL
RE: LENGTH OF TIME THAT HONOURABLE
MEMBERS SPENT IN THE CHAMBER

Mr. Roy Bodden: I crave the indulgence of the Chair to raise an issue that I think needs some explanation and clarification. It has to do with the headline and editorial in today's newspaper, and emanates from a circular that was handed out by the Honourable Speaker concerning the length of time that Honourable Members spend in the Chamber.

I am concerned because the circular, the article, and the editorial in newspaper make no distinction between those who arrive here early on a regular basis, and those who have been tardy. I find it unfortunate and regrettable that in this case, the innocent are lumped with the guilty.

In the interest of the fraternity of honourable members, I do not care to make any distinction as to those who are early and those who are regularly late. Suffice it to say, however, that this being an election year, I am concerned that detractors may see fit to use this information in a way that casts aspersions and casts those of us sitting now in a bad light.

I would caution the public's interpretation of this to mean that honourable members are irresponsible, while at the same time I have to acknowledge that some of the blame lies clearly with us—even those of us who are here early on a regular basis. I want to say that I am not disputing the account of the newspaper, but I caution those who would come to hasty conclusions to think that all honourable members are irresponsible.

At the same time, I am asking the Government—through the Honourable Leader—to see that we keep to the hours that we are supposed to keep to more regularly so that we do not continue to put ourselves in this unflattering position. Thank you ma'am.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddien: The honourable member just referred to me getting and keeping people in here. Madam Speaker, that clearly is the duty of the Serjeant-at-Arms to call members. I would not like that to go through to the public that I am the keeper of time. It is set down in the Standing Orders that the Legislative Assembly begins at 10:00 AM, and there is fault on both sides of the House. I would not like the public to believe that it is only one side of the House that is tardy at times.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, I did not gather from him that it was your responsibility to have members in here. I think he was more or less referring to the Ministers of Executive Council.

Shall we proceed to the next item, Government Business—

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, I don't think I will let this continue into a debate. What has been said by both sides has been noted. We will now continue with Government Business, continuation of the Throne Speech, delivered by His Excellency.

The First Elected Member for West Bay, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS, ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I can hear you are in good form this morning. I would not want it to be left that the Serjeant-at-Arms in this honourable House—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, I would rather that you continue with your debate.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: No, Madam Speaker, I think it behoves us to say that the Serjeant-at-Arms does his job and calls members to this Chamber. If they don't come, well, that is not his fault. He can't speak for himself, but I think it should not be left where people believe that he is not doing his job. He is very studious, an honourable gentleman.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, if I may, and I am not going to continue this debate. It was an oversight on my part not to correct that point because the Serjeant-at-Arms of this Parliament does a tremendous job. Would you now please continue with your debate on the Throne Speech?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I now turn to the matter of youth. It has often been said that we have good youth. I have said that often, and I have often given statistics. But government has the responsibility to do something about the few bad ones. When we say there are only a few bad young people, that is correct. But government has a responsibility to do something about the few bad ones before they influence the good ones.

There is a lot of emphasis put on the responsibility of parents for children's bad behaviour. If you bear children, . . . then we are all responsible for our children. I agree that parents must be responsible. But if we Americanise our society, what else are we going to get?

America is the greatest nation on earth, so they say. But we don't want to adopt everything she does. I don't scoff at anything done to try to improve the lot of young people in our islands. But if we mimic everything out of America, or someplace else, then we will be like America.

I just saw some correspondence about Big Bird and the Cookie Monster. This is clean fun, of course. Sesame Street was always a good children's show. But if we concentrate on things American, rather than things Caymanian, we will be like America. We lament the bad news television. Our children need to be taught to identify the things Caymanian, the good things we have. And I will just name a few: Dance Unlimited has a good young people's dance group. Very, very talented. Miss Jackie Balls' Dance School can match any related school in America with taste, quality, and professionalism.

I also recently attended, with other members here, some of the primary school sports. Our children are good. They are excellent. And it's a joy when we see some of our children the way they perform, the talent they have. Cayfest is Caymanian at all times. All these things are good, clean things that people and children can enjoy, and they can be put on stamps. That's what I am trying to say.

We should be showcasing our children. How can Caymanian culture grow and be identified with if all we are going to teach them is something from somewhere else? Nothing more powerful determines a child's behaviour than his internal compass, his beliefs, his sense of right and wrong. Of course, it starts in the home. But the country has a wider obligation in the shaping of their elastic minds. If someone said that he has been taught and guided to believe that drugs, promiscuity and assaulting other things are wrong things to do, this will contribute to his own well being and to the well being of others. If this lesson is multiplied 20,000 times, we will have a greater and broader well being, fewer personal catastrophes, less social violence and fewer waster and lost lives.

The character of a society is determined by how well it transmits true and time-honoured values from generation to generation. We have all lamented (as the Minister of Social Services said the other day) the gathering of young people by Anderson Square Building. It seems that this is building into something that is not good. We have asked where the parents are. This is not new. This has been a practice for several years now. Where are the parents?

I know the minister meant well, as he always does. But I have to ask, for as long as those children have been meeting there, where is the government? Do you know where the parents are at 2.30, 3.30 or 5.00 in the afternoon? Parents are working. That is where 99.99% of them are. Where the community fails to do something, or the parents fail, the government has a responsibility to act to find ways and means to channel all of this energy that we see by the Anderson Square Building into positive action.

I think the same thing. That is why I channelled funds into the television programme "Spotlight." Say what you will about television, it is here to stay. People are watching it whether it is good news or bad news, technology will only get better, it's not going to get worse. I thought it appropriate and beneficial at that time for the youth of this country, to start and fund that "Spotlight," what I thought was an age appropriate educational programme. I think that "Spotlight" was a good programme. Where is it now?

The radio programme that we hear from the young people, Faith Gealy and others, I congratulate them on a wonderful job. There is nothing wrong with what they are doing. We need more of that. But it doesn't take the place of television. It can't compete. And we are fooling ourselves if we believe so. The radio programme is excellent, but I would suggest that that programme is on at the wrong time. I would hope that a prime time for this age group could be found on Radio Cayman.

Also, perhaps we need to look at whether the right curricula is taught in school, that can teach our children the values we want, teach them about the dangers of promiscuity, and the dangers of being sexually active too early. I firmly believe that we must have a strategy that makes a difference in the lives of our children and teenagers that can compensate for the well-known deficiencies in family functioning.

Let no one believe that we don't have a large number of single parent families in the teenage bracket. But regardless of family type, what I believe is most significant in the lives of children is a growing inequality of prospects related to their family circumstances. Reducing out of wedlock childbearing, teenage pregnancy, educating parents and potential parents, enforcing financial responsibilities and making sure that government policies are consistent with our goal of parental responsibility I believe are useful steps that we must ensure. But these will only work if there is a more general commitment to the task. Is government up to par? I say not enough.

Once again, I make the call about paying attention to the Sunrise Centre. They need space so that they can put on needed programmes they must be brought up to par with their salaries in accordance with others in their work. Some time ago I identified a building with space, which the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town also picked up in his debate. They are still there in a building, which the fire department says is bad. This is not good enough and I hope that the good advice we have given will be heeded.

It seems that Cayman Airways is going to be a campaign issue. I have been here 16 years, and it has not changed. Here's the present fundamental problem: Cayman Airways has planes that Caymanians don't particularly like. More so, we have equipment that the pilots and other staff members don't like. We have management that some of the staff now says must go.

These are matters that need to be addressed urgently to build morale. I believe that a meeting needs to be held with all the staff so that they can understand what is happening from ministerial and board level. I have asked for that meeting. We have not had it. Ten years from now it will be the same all over, no matter who is in the seat.

The country (and by that I mean the government) has to decide whether these islands are going to stay in the airline business or not. If we are, then we are going to have to put more money into it on an annual basis, which means different planes. I am on record as saying that before as well. Or, they are going to have to get rid of it; it's one or the other. It will be a campaign issue. Those candidates who want to make political mileage and those who are prepared to help them, well then let them go ahead. I have stood by the staff, particularly the pilots, every year. At all times that's the side I fall on, the side of the working people, not just in Cayman Airways, but in this country. If I fall, that's where I fall.

But every election year (and this year is no exception) there's a flurry where everything happens. This will not change things. So decide whether the present equipment stops, or much more money is given to put Cayman Airways on a more profitable and publicly acceptable footing. That is what is needed.

Right now I know that morale is down. There are problems which did not start today, but that does not stop us from taking the bull by the horns and doing something about it. As for the candidates, I will say that debate is good, but knowledge gives better sensible debate. They should bear that in mind.

I want to turn to the matter of tourism. We have been told, for as long as I can remember, that tourism is one of the twin pillars of our economy. I have asked questions of the Minister of Tourism, some of them dating back to May 1999, and the Minister refused to answer these in open sittings because he wanted to avoid supplementary questions. But a mere few days after the 1999 session was closed, and he never had to answer them on the floor of this House, he could give me the answers in writing. A mere few days after some year or so. And even when he did provide something in writing, he did not answer the question, he bluffed, and he danced and he avoided.

I want answers, Madam Speaker! I asked him if the DOT overseas office spending conforms with Financial and Stores Regulations. His answer is to tell me that each office has a copy of the regulations. Ha, ha, ha! What kind of answer is that? Plenty of people have copies of the Bible too, but they don't adhere to it!

I want to know if the Minister—and I am glad that he just walked in and is here— . . . what I want to know, Mr. Minister, is if you can really clearly and categorically say that all the spending by the overseas DOT—which is ultimately his responsibility—conforms to the country's financial regulations. It is my understanding that the minister gave sweeping authority for large items of expenditure to Mr. Phil Sanfilipo [?] the manager in North America. Expenditures that should have been the responsibility of the director who is the lawful controlling officer.

Mr. Sanfilipo should report to the director, not the minister. Then, to top it all off, when Treasury made him know they couldn't take a non-civil servant's signature, the minister had to reverse his decision and give the responsibility back to the director. If the director is in charge, the director is in charge. Why the change? Is it because the US staff is outside the control of Financial and Stores Regulations so they can hide inappropriate spending?

It is the minister's job to make sure there was no inappropriate spending. It is obvious that he tolerated it. I am looking forward to the Auditor General's report, if they don't cut that up too much.

I believe that the minister has played too much politics with his ministry in these last couple of months. And it is an election year, so he is playing politics. It's natural. That happens with most elected people.

[inaudible comment]

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Not as much as you're going to do!

I understand that some 31 individuals have been invited to New York for the Caribbean Tourism State Ball at the end of this month. That's a lot of money. I fully understand the minister taking four or five guests, but more than 30 people? If that is true, for what? Is that good use of public money? No! That is politics! It is old time politics!

He has been the minister for eight years and he rightly attends every year on behalf of the Cayman Islands and every year he carries a few guests. But what is different this year? This is an election year. And it is obvious that he is doing so to get votes. I understand it is important for other people to see what the Caribbean is doing, and I have gone there once myself, so I understand the value. But why 30 people this year?

What I want to show is that there is a dangerous trend in how the minister has used public funds for nothing but glorious political and self-serving reasons. I do not have the statistics on hand, but his nephew, the Third Elected Member for West Bay, gave them the other day. This is how the transportation licenses are being approved, and to whom they are being given.

It is obvious that he is awarding licenses to get votes. I would be the first to give West Bayers as many as possible. I would be the first—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, if I may. Unless there is proof that these licenses are being given for the minister to solicit votes, please do not continue in that vein.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Unless you or anyone else has a different interpretation, that is my opinion. And I think opinions are perfectly constitutional. And, Madam Speaker, when you have one person having 12 buses in one district, and other people applying and not getting licenses, then what is the reason?

As I was going on to say, I would be the first to give West Bayers as many as possible, but what we cannot do is hurt non-constituents, other Caymanians, and deprive them of making a living and hurting their children. That's what we can't do. And unless someone can show me that giving one person—who is constantly out there on the road cussing me and the next politician in favour of that minister— . . . then what other conclusion can I come to?

The Deputy Speaker: If you said it was your opinion, I could understand. Would you continue please?

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my opinion. That's what I have said.

I am sick of giving him chances to answer, and we get answers in the way we have gotten answers—

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: On a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Deputy Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: If the honourable member is going to express opinion, it has to be an opinion that is substantiated in some way by the fact that he is alleging. He is confusing between opinion and fact. If you hold an opinion, there has to be reasonable grounds for doing so.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, honourable minister. I think I made it clear that the member speaking . . . and I am not a lawyer, and I do not sit in this Chair pretending to be a lawyer. But I feel that if it is his opinion, what can I say? Or it is his belief. So, I don't see a point of order.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, it is time for the people of the Cayman Islands to be shown where their $23 million is being spent. Through bad ministerial management, nepotism, and inappropriate use of funds we are left struggling.

Our people in the tourism industry are suffering and fighting for every dollar. The Tourism Management Policy expired in 1999, and as of yet we don't have an approved policy document. Basically tourism has $23 million—no plan, unless that's the same plan he is continuing on—and no clear indication of who the money is benefiting. It is time this nonsense stopped!

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

(Imputing improper motive)

The Deputy Speaker: May I hear your point of order Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I believe the member is waxing a little bit too hard and basically imputing improper motive to me about nepotism.

The Deputy Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, I would appreciate if you would move from that point because I don't like the words "inappropriate spending" unless there are facts to back up the inappropriate spending.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, as I said, we shall await the report of the Auditor General, and I trust that the Public Accounts Committee will act on it quickly. I hope that that will be the case, and before September we will get the report of the Auditor General with the report of the Public Accounts Committee. You will find proof.

But I will say that when we find Caymanians going there who can't get jobs in the United States, and they have every excuse in the world, but the people over there are given every chance, and family members—and

I didn't say his, so I don't know where anyone gets off saying it was him. I didn't say it was him. But I believe as much as they talked about Sanguinity [?] and this one and the next one over there, the same situation obtains today.

At this time I want to call for an in-depth, independent audit of the Department of Tourism on behalf of all the stakeholders of the Cayman Islands Tourism. I think all of us on this backbench agree, and should demand that this independent review answer the following questions: Who is the tourism for? When will an updated tourism policy be brought to this House to ensure it addresses all of the issues of these islands? And what has to change in order to ensure good management fiscal responsibility and sustainable tourism for this and future generations? I would like a report of that laid on the Table of this House no later than September before the House is prorogued.

Much has been said and is being said about general elections. The Governor has set 8 November for the general elections, God willing. I have served this country and the people of West Bay for 16 years. I have served to the best of my ability. I have given them honest and fair representation, and I believe I have succeeded in those areas I mentioned in my debate on the Throne Speech, helping people to obtain a better quality of life. I have decided to offer myself to the people of West Bay for four more years.

Times are changing. I will be inviting our people to share a vision of the new Cayman Islands they want where fairness rules, where human dignity, economic opportunity and social progress are the right of all where no one is left behind; where in diversity we live in harmony; where all of our people can benefit from what our country offers; where all who are able to work find dignity and reward in secure jobs, better benefits, or in their own business; where every aspiring entrepreneur has the opportunity to own and operate a business on a level playing field; and where government serves all of the people, where government operates in the sunshine of public scrutiny.

We should be a good democracy and a place of equality, safety, peace and prosperity for all. I will be running on a slogan of "Better Balance—Better Prosperity" with a team to be announced at our first meeting, Tuesday 21 March, God willing, at Northwest Point.

I have some symbols too. The bell for freedom, and the "V" for victory. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you Madam Speaker. I am going to spend a little time trying to be constructive and I will get to answering a number of questions raised.

First, I want to begin by offering congratulations to His Excellency the Governor for his Throne Speech. May

I also offer my thanks to the Heavenly Father for His love, mercy and protection of the people of the Cayman Islands. We are indeed a blessed country. We need to praise and glorify His Holy Name as we recall numerous blessings bestowed on each of us, and on the country as a whole.

In my view, Cayman has the formula for love and friendliness. It is our belief in the Hold Word commanding us to love one another that we are our brother's keeper, that we should honour our father and our mother, that we should live an honest, moral and god fearing life, if we are to live pleasing to him. Those who are spirit filled, meaning filled with the Holy Spirit, shall see the Kingdom of Heaven. It is this Christian background that has caused all of us here in Cayman to live neighbourly, to be friendly, to respect each other's property, to be honest, to care for the less fortunate, and to look out for those who cannot help themselves.

Now it appears in some circles that we are looking for some other cure for our ills. Although we know that He is All Powerful, All Wise, One who has promised never to leave us nor forsake us, and One who answers our prayers, which empowers every one of us to carry out his or her responsibilities to the people of these blessed islands, I ask for His blessings as I make my contribution to the Throne Speech.

I wish to also offer thanks to our forefathers, the churches, justices of the peace, vestrymen, members of the Legislative Assembly, former and current civil servants, the veterans and members of the Home Guard, former seamen and community leaders for their dedication to building a country which became the fifth largest banking centre in the world.

It is appropriate too to thank those foreign persons who invested their money, their skills, their international connections to help us achieve that envious image and rank of the fifth largest financial centre in the world. Those who came among us with an attitude of assisting the country and obviously themselves as well were willing to employ Caymanians and assist them to rise to significant levels in the financial industry and commerce. They were willing to provide training in those early years to Caymanians who excelled in accounting and auditing, banking and law, to name some.

That approach is still being practised by a number of good citizens of this country who have come to these islands to help us. But we would like more of those members of the private sector to commit to this same approach that has worked significantly in this country. When I think of the amount of training that was done in the private sector, today it is so evident when you walk the streets of George Town, when you move into social circles, when you go into the churches you find people who are partners in law firms, partners in significant chartered accounting firms.

We can just drive down Shedden Road and we can easily find partners who have risen through the ranks, who were trained by those organisations to rise to a level where each and every one of us wants to be. And we must pay credit to Caymanians for making the sacrifice, for giving up the night life and the almighty dollar in those early days, going off to school to become professionals in this country who, when they walk and talk are respected by just about every member of this community.

This provides the social harmony in this country. The social harmony in this country was assisted by that fair and reasonable approach that Caymanians must be assisted to rise in the promotional ranks. Regrettably, today, although government is providing more and more scholarships to assist Caymanians, we are not achieving the same results over all. By that I mean Caymanians are not receiving the same helpful attitude from some of those who come and work at senior levels here.

It's not a subject that we should lambaste. It's a subject we should not sweep under the carpet, it's a subject we should bring to the forefront and speak about. And in our speaking about it, we also need to speak fairly about it. It doesn't matter where it is, whether it's in the private sector or public service.

When we listen to our people we hear a number of issues that concern them. So these are issues that governments (in the plural) have wrestled with for quite some time. We must also remember that the world around us is changing, but equally important, the Cayman Islands and the community around us is also changing.

My personal view is that we must commit ourselves as leaders to visit and revisit these issues, such as succession planning, and I mean that in the global sense of the Cayman Islands. Succession planning in the private sector and in the public sector; the issue of COS and pension; the issue of housing; the issue of conditions of service within government and in the private sector; the issue of senior citizens and how they are looked after; the youth problems, crime, gratuities, and that's not an exhaustive list, but it's some of the issues that I believe we need to . . . and there used to be a song that was very popular in the 1970s. The title was "Promises, Promises, Promises." We don't want that.

When we make a promise we want that promise to be committed by the person who uttered the words. Realising that one man can't do everything—one man can't run the government, one man can't get all the benefits for the public, does not have all the answers—but at least one man can start talking about it and try to convince others if need be to address the issue.

Let me repeat myself. Succession planning must be something that we deal with not only in the government service, but also in the private sector organisations. May I admit at this point that I do not profess to have all the answers. But what is required is that we commit ourselves to finding a fair and reasonable answer not only in the government service, but equally in the private sector organisations. This answer should be found as quickly as possible, and in the best interest of the people now and in the long term.

Caymanians must be given every opportunity to rise the highest possible level in any department of government, any bank, any trust company, any insurance company, any law firm, any accounting firm, any hotel, any condominium, any restaurant, any supermarket, any duty free store, or any other company or organisation operating in the Cayman Islands. I believe that succession planning must look at each Caymanian in each department of government or private sector organisation and examine whether or not they are ready to be promoted to a higher level within the department or company. And provide training if found to be genuinely necessary. Not to decide that this person needs training to slip them aside for a couple of years while you bring in your buddy. That's not what I am talking about.

As a former civil servant, I would offer some additional specific comments on the civil service. I will begin by saying in respect to His Excellency's comments on succession planning in the civil service and recognising that the service is solely His Excellency's responsibility, we nonetheless hope that any succession planning will be cognisant of the needs of the entire service and address such issues as the accelerated promotion of these Caymanian officers who are already professionally qualified with several years' experience and proven ability.

There are many such officers spread over several departments and ministries that should be promoted lest we will not have the benefit of their long term commitment to the civil service. As history tells us, they will look to the private sector for better opportunities. We will lose those high flyers, those young people who possess not only the academic skill, but have applied that skill in a practical sense for a number of years and have proven their ability to lead at middle management level. They have proved that characteristic so ably that I believe many of them are well suited for other higher positions.

Secondly, the encouragement and unequivocal support of those officers who wish to qualify in specialised areas such as medical, teaching, legal and accounting. As I understand it, there are officers who wish to qualify in specialised areas but cannot afford to, or feel there is no support from the service, especially in terms of being allowed time off or leave of absence to study. This must be addressed if succession planning is to have any credibility in the service.

Thirdly, the placement of returning graduates in jobs that are relevant to their qualification. I must say that as a former civil servant I groan myself when it happens. Too often, returning graduates are placed in jobs that have absolutely no relevance to their area of study. This practice only serves to de-motivate some of our bright young Caymanian graduates and is in direct conflict with the spirit of succession planning.

I also feel that if the graduate who has sacrificed and found himself breaking open the piggy bank from time to time before the cheque arrives to make ends meet, if that graduate cannot be placed in a department where his or her specialisation and interest rests, then I sincerely believe that he or she should be released to the private sector with the bond being to the Cayman Islands, as opposed to the government. Let me say that we know that is possible.

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a convenient time to take the morning break?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Yes Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.19 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.38 AM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, continuing.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you Madam Speaker.

I believe that there is a need for mandating succession planning for all departments. It is important to recognise that departments with Caymanians at the helm must also have a plan as these Caymanian HODs will, at some point in time, be promoted or retire from the service.

It is my view that there needs to be effective appraisal evaluation systems designed to test the success or otherwise of the implementation phase of the succession plan. Succession planning must include checks and balances. The appraisal and evaluation element will provide these checks without which I feel succession planning will be susceptible to failure.

Consideration should be given to work experience placements in the private sector in appropriate circumstances. An example would be in the financial centre or industry. Such placements would provide valuable experience and knowledge with respect to the global economy, individual major economies and how they influence or effect our economy, E-commerce and the potential this industry has for the diversification of our local economy, and most importantly, would provide hands on experience of the mechanics of our local economy.

Work experience placement is an area we have done to some extent. What I believe needs to happen is a broader comprehensive programme to deal with it. For example, when the present Financial Secretary returned from school, we arranged for him to be attached to Ernst & Young where he spent about 24 months attaining the practical side of his qualification as a Certified Public Accountant. So, it has been done before and can equally be done more comprehensively again.

Succession planning should include very clear and achievable objectives with mandated target dates. I believe this would give credibility to the undertaking. It is also fair to say that some years ago, the centralisation of training within the public service was instituted where each department of government would budget for the training needs of that specific department which I think leads to a co-ordinating role to the various portfolios under which the departments fall, be that the Department of Tourism or the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs, or Finance and Economic Development, or the Attorney General's Chamber or the Department of Education. I believe that coordination is necessary because we need to understand at the ministerial level what training is suggested and can it be justified and agreed to fit into the succession plan in the various departments.

We know that the Public Service Commission is the body that globally looks at approval of training. But what we are talking about is a co-ordinating role of the ministries or portfolios.

In my earlier comments I talked about succession planning and I mentioned conditions of service within government and the private sector. I also mentioned that in the early days of Cayman, in terms of being a financial centre, there was that helpful attitudinal approach by those who were at senior levels in banks, trust companies, accounting firms, or law firms, where they tried to assist the Caymanian to rise to different levels within their organisations and tried to use training as a methodology where genuinely necessary.

Today, we hear about a number of cases where this is not working to the satisfaction of many of our young people in the private sector. Some who are university graduates feel they are not being given fair and reasonable opportunity to rise to higher levels. I believe that there is a need for all of us not only speak to it, but to address that issue so that the social harmony we boast about can continue. I believe sincerely that Caymanians must be given an opportunity to rise to the highest level of their potential and expertise.

We hear about people who try to demoralise Caymanians who behave in not good work ethic manner. We believe that the government and the people of this country must move every obstacle by consultation or otherwise, that kind of behaviour in our country. It is our forefathers, it is the churches, it is the former members of this honourable House, and the present members, it is the vestrymen, the veterans, the former seamen, the community leaders, the justices of the peace who have contributed without any substantial financial reward, but from within their god given obligation to this country, the people, the children and us who have now come up to be leaders of the country to help move this country into an arena that nobody ever thought we'd be in.

If you told me 30 years ago that someone could have predicted that the Cayman Islands would be the fifth largest banking centre in the world, I believe somebody would have thought we were crazy. But here we are! We've made it. Actually, we made it almost ten years ago. We need to work together, is the message. We need to speak to those persons who have come to these Cayman Islands and who have become good corporate citizens, who fit into the community of these islands, who have given their skill, energy and dedication to improving the standard of living and the way of life in this country. We have to call upon them too to speak to others who have come to this country, who are at senior levels in companies to ensure that Caymanians are given every opportunity to rise to the highest level at which they can perform.

Let no one believe that I am saying that because you are Caymanian you have to rise to any level. That is not my message this morning. What I am saying is that Caymanians who possess the skill and the expertise to rise to higher levels, but my information is that they are not given the opportunity as often and in every organisation that they should. I am calling upon the private sector to ensure that that happens.

I want to move on to another subject now. I think it's important that I make some remarks on COS (meaning Contracted Officer's Supplement) and pensions. The statement I made in this honourable House which referred to a headline in the Caymanian Compass on Monday, 7 February, which was basically referring to the government in relation to civil service matters, we thought it was right to say (and I still think it is right) to the people of this country and civil servants what the position is. You could interpret the Caymanian Compass article to mean that the government means the members and ministers of Executive Council, when in fact the Constitution says (section 7) the civil service is the sole responsibility of His Excellency the Governor. It's not a matter of sitting on any fence. It's a fact of life.

What is important to note too, is that when we talk about this entire COS, it's important in an effort to understand where we are to remember from whence it hails. Where did this come from? It was the salary review of 1990 that dealt with a number of issues, in addition to salaries and wages. It also dealt with housing allowances. It also suggested that the COS payable to officers who are appointed on contract terms should be a methodology for replacing gratuities. My recollection of the COS is that in the early 1990s the government of that time was dealing with the National Pension legislation. In dealing with that the government wanted to understand what the value of the pension of a civil servant who was on permanent and pensionable terms of employment (PPE).

The exercise was done by an organisation that we still employ from time to time to deal with pensions, Watson & Wyatt. Their analyses of it indicated that the value of a pension to a person who as PPE is 15% of his or her salary. The government in 1990 took the decision that we would do away with gratuities, establish the COS and that in order to have what we today call 'parity' that the COS should be equal to the percentage of a PPE person's pension, 15%. The only difference being that the person who is on pension would receive his or her pension when they qualify at a particular age. The person on COS would be paid that amount on a monthly basis. But those same people were also entitled to housing allowance and the COS which was instituted was at a time when we abolished housing allowances for those officers.

We know that in even recent times, when we used this same organisation of Watson & Wyatt, the value of the PPE person's pension is actually 18% and not 15%. Some of the rationale for this is that we know by history that many of the people coming to the Cayman Islands being recruited by the government already have pensions established. The COS payment was to allow them to continue to use that amount to pay their pension in their respective country. Perhaps today that is not 100% of the people we are employing, but that was the decision in those days.

I believe from a practical standpoint that it has merit to continue to pay the COS with that justification and that rationale. I don't believe civil servants today are trying to spite anybody. I think they are looking for equal treatment. I believe that I understand that just as well as anybody else. There may be cases where the individual who was recruited doesn't have a pension and he or she coming to the Cayman Islands would need to have a pension as required by law. Therefore we will have to work some kind of procedure within government to honour the obligation of the National Pension.

But one thing I can tell you, Madam Speaker, and the rest of the nation, is that those who are coming in drawing COS and there are none at present . . . there are no civil servants drawing COS and also drawing pension at the moment. What I was about to tell you is that it is every intention of this government to ensure that the persons who are drawing COS do not also draw pension. That amendment will be coming to this honourable House.

What I want to put a proviso on is how do we handle the person who is recruited who does not have a pension? We have to take that into consideration and we are dealing with it. But even so, you get one or the other—not both. I want to make that, as they say, crystal clear. There is every intention . . . and the legislation is being looked at (actually we have most of it) to ensure that whatever amendment is needed to the Public Service Pension Law (Law 6 of 1999) will be done by this government to ensure that no one qualifies for COS and pension. That's where the government stands on that issue. And we are not on any fence.

I believe this links to the public service pension fund. I want to make a little explanation there too. If we were to look at those early days of this fund, we would find that the contingent liability of this government as stated in the Government Accounts as at 31 December 1994, in the case that the civil servant pension scheme, and I quote "The statutory pension liability of the government as actuarially determined at January 1 1993 was a little over $65 million." At the end of 1992, the pension fund was at $6.2 million. You look at it, that was about 10% of the contingent liability.

I believe that when we get to 1996 and look at an extract from the government's accounts, it talks about the (changing the terminology) public service pension fund being the actuarial deficiency as at 1 January 1996, "fund liability was $157.116 million compared to assets of $16,735,000."

But I want to step back and I want to give a little bit of an appreciation for the way in which this government has taken on the obligation to the civil servants of this country. I want to track what this government approved to be inserted in the budget to be formally approved by this honourable House. I think that if we follow the figures we see what I think is a clear attitude and honouring of our obligation. I want to underscore the fact that every civil servant on pension and every MLA on pension is paid separately from the figure I am mentioning. While they are being paid and their pension is being honoured by this government, we are simultaneously building a fund to take over the total obligation to civil servants and others.

The pension contribution in 1992 (rounded off) was $1.1 million; in 1993 it was $1.1 million, in 1994 it was $1.2 million; in 1995 it was $2.1 million; in 1996 it was $2.3 million; in 1997 it was $5 million; in 1998 it was in the area of $8.5 million. (I have a series of number I haven't totalled.) In 1999, it was $6.5 million, and we know that in 2000 it is over $10 million. Tell me now about whether the government seems to be following its obligation or not.

When we look at the real effect of it, then, and when we take in the Public Service Pension Fund that not only deals with civil servants, but also includes some people who are under the statutory authorities, and some of the investment income, we find that at the end of 1999 (which is an un-audited figure) the amount in the fund itself is $58.4 million. And when we take into account the contribution to the fund and the income, at the end of 2000 the estimated figure is $76.4 million.

Part of the reason for this escalation in the contingent liability figure is because some years ago the hospital was an authority. Some years ago we included group employees into the eligibility for pension in a serious way. So that caused the contingent liability to rise.

I recently saw a statement that came out from the Public Service Pension Board to participants regarding past service liability and what have you. And it reads, "The Board notes the recent discussion in Finance Committee and the relevant opinions given by the Attorney General on past service liability. The Board wishes to issue the following statement: An actuarial valuation as at 1 January 1999 is being carried out in accordance with the Public Service Pension Law 1999, and once completed will be considered by the Board. Thereafter the Board will carry out its further responsibility under the Law to prescribe rates in accordance with that actuarial valuation report. The Board wishes to remind participants of its responsibility under section 7 of the Law."

The point we made was that this report is in the offing and we hope that it will come to us in the near future. When it does come to the Board, I am sure the Board will carry out its obligation under the Law and as a government, we will deal with whatever that actuarial report does say.

I believe too that we have every need to deal with the subject of crime. We have seen matters happen in recent times that are not normal or usual, and certainly not anything that the community wants to accept. In my view, there is a need to look at this with a comprehensive view to the future. We realise that that long-term view needs some amount of discussion among the parties it will affect or who deliver that kind of service to the community. I also think that the public of this country wishes this government to deal with that now—not next week and not next month, and certainly not eight months from now. It is the reason why the government (and I use that word deliberately) asked for a report from the Commissioner of Police to get the facts from the person who understands the problem.

We know that policemen were utilised to bring order to the prison last year. We know that they worked with heartfelt commitment in dealing with that difficult and complex problem. They did an able job in putting that matter right. But just as we can't be in two places at the same time, they have that same difficulty. They can't be carrying out their duties and also at the prison carrying out duties as well. Therefore, persons who think they are from us do take advantage of that opportunity. We have seen crime that we didn't really expect—ATM machines, persons being killed and aggressive attitude among some members of the population.

I believe there is a need. And I was pleased to know after all the discussion in Finance Committee that we wholeheartedly support the Commissioner of Police and the recruitment of 24 officers. We can argue about the distribution, and we can certainly take comments and views on board. But I believe what the public wants is a quick resolution to putting trained persons on the streets of this country to ensure that crime is minimised. That is the view the government holds.

Yes, we have to deal with the person on the street, the person who can't find a job, the person involved with drugs, the person involved with gangs. We have to deal with that too. But the longest journey begins with that first step. And the first step, in my view, is to address as quickly as possible the show of force, sufficient numbers of policemen in this community to give the impression to those who try to walk over the borderline of being law abiding citizens, that there is enough force here to deal with that.

There is a growing amount of frustration because of some of the attitude I talked about earlier, some people not giving a fair shake to Caymanians, who are quite willing, it seems, to use somebody else rather than the Caymanian. I believe that too, the government as well as others must address in the best interest of all of us in the long term. This social harmony that we think we have, if not addressed compassionately and energetically could rise up to change the way we live in this country. I don't want to bury my bones anywhere else but here.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Madam Speaker, there's across-the-floor talking here. And I am not sure how you rule on that. I am saying that in pun. And I am not asking you to rule, Madam Speaker . . .

I just wanted to say that I have what some people call vision. I would call it the need for action. I have this belief that unless the government initiates a programme to assist these young people who appear to not have the proper tools to get into the labour market, that it's not going to happen right now. It may not happen in the near future either.

When we think about young people growing up, we see some that were born with God-given talents. We see people who can draw and it looks so real. But if that person pursues a degree in art or his God-given art in architecture, then he can make a significant contribution to the country and its needs. There are some people who blossom late in life, after 16 or 17. But sometimes a young person with all the peer pressure gets sidetracked and does not start to focus on where he is going until after he gets out of school. Then he tries to figure what he is going to do. He doesn't have to go to school, he's finished. But he doesn't have the tools he needs. How is he going to get them?

There is the Community College. Can he utilise that? But suppose he's not an academic person. How does he get that help? I believe that like any other issue there needs to be a revisit on our thinking in dealing with these young people, and others. Whether you call this compassion, concern, caring, or the need to play the big brother role, it's all. I think we need to take action to establish consultation with the various organisations in this country to work together to find an answer to helping some of our young people who are not working and who need additional skills to rise to different levels in the organisations they are in.

Many people in the Cayman Islands are not in the financial industry. And sometimes we talk about the tourism industry and the only thing we hear quoted is $3.50 per hour. When you look at the hotels around the world, their package is different. Theirs is a combination of wages and gratuities. And when you look at the number of hours they work per month and you take into account the gratuities and wages they earn, you are not looking at $3.50, you are looking at maybe $6.00. But what is important is to also give the public an understanding that there are opportunities in the tourism industry equal to almost any that you are going to find in the financial industry.

When you are the bartender . . . do you know what a good bartender makes in this country? They make $40,000 to $50,000 per year. It's all part of the salary plus gratuity. When you think of a waitress or waiter, we say a couple of dollars. I ask, why, if that is so, is it that we see people coming into this country working in that area and in a very short period of time buying apartments, new cars and all sorts of things. Why is it? The bank isn't going to lend you money unless you have the ability to repay it. So, to me it means that the waitress or waiter is making substantial money, probably in the area of $30,000 a year, maybe more, depending on how good that person is on delivering the service.

We have a system that charges 15% on the bill. And then, because the waiter has delivered the service to the individual, they are given another $10, $15, or $25. It's all part of the income.

I come back to the central point I was trying to underscore. There is a training need in this country and it's not strictly academic. The training needs of these young people out there on the streets (among others) requires us to establish in conjunction with the hospitality industry or the construction industry, or any other industry in the islands, a training project that allows these young people . . . let's address it to them in the first instance. Allow these young people to become productive citizens and get them off the streets. Help them lose that frustration of being turned down time after time looking for a job.

I am not going to try to diagnose and state how this will happen. I am trying to air my thoughts, which requires much work to be done to put this altogether. But sometimes, in this big picture, there could be smaller circles that allow us to step off, even though we are not able to deal with the big global picture of the labour market in the Cayman Islands.

How do you actually help these young people to be productive citizens? Because I believe that is what they want to be. When I was a young person, I didn't know what I wanted to be. I would venture to say that the majority of us don't. Not at that young age. Surprisingly I started as a plumber's apprentice at the old Galleon Beach Hotel. Then I did three and one half years going to sea for National Bulk Carriers. Then I served in the US Army for two years. It was at that stage (1965) that I decided what I wanted to do with my life.

There is a need to understand, or to try to understand the problem and to take action. Let us not wait to say that we need all the facts to deal with it. We have some of the facts already, we just need not to step off in a way that places government in the picture totally. I don't believe that is going to work. They will end up being on government's payroll and that is not the way the scheme should operate.

I am looking to help people find their job of interest within this country—carpentry, mechanics, masonry, banking, whatever it is. That is how I think it should happen. I have heard about people who return to this country as university graduates, who go to work in the private sector, who are not getting that helpful attitude they had before. Some suspicion is that I am not helping you because I have a good friend out there in some other part of the world that I want to bring. I even hear about fraudulent resumes, fraudulent character references. I believe that with have to put a stop to this.

If Caymanians are not given their rightful role in this community, then no wonder some people are making certain remarks. Like I said (and I even tried to sing it!) this is not about promises. This is about taking action that seems in all of our best opinions to address the issue. Some people would say that for eight years we did nothing about it. I would ask the member to search his mind and his soul.

The Deputy Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the lunch break?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.00 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.38 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.15 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, continuing.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you Madam Speaker.

When we took the break I was still making some comments about training in this country, trying to look specifically at training that could be organised to assist people in this country who are not able to find a job, or a job that they have an interest in. I believe like the old saying, the Devil finds work for idle hands. So, it's in the best interest of the people of this country and the prosperity and social harmony that we cherish for government to spearhead a movement that leads to the establishment of training in a comprehensive way.

Can we work a training system that is agreed between government and the private sector? Can we work a training system that is agreed between Public Works Department and the construction industry? Can we work a training system that is agreed between government and the hospitality industry, or the financial industry, or any other industry in this island? I have always believed that working together hand in hand there are not many problems in this island that we cannot solve. So my call is to let us join efforts to ensure that the young people of this country do not end up on the street. That if they do not have the tools to find a job of their interest that government spearheads a movement to cause that to effectively happen.

I have had a lot of satisfaction from the Ministry and the Department of Tourism spearheading and encouraging and trying to motivate young people of this country and their parents as well, to consider moving into the tourism industry. I think if all the data were available we would find that in the early 1990s not one person was on an overseas scholarship seeking to have a bachelor's degree in hotel or other hospitality management positions.

I would venture to say that since the establishment of the tourism scholarship by my ministry, we have seen a significant improvement and interest by young people who are now studying either marketing, which is a tourism tool, or management of hotel or restaurant. We are very proud of the young people who have been selected by the ministry and its committee and awarded the tourism scholarship.

The first young lady received that scholarship in 1996. And she is graduating from Cornell University shortly. A young lady that has, as some people like to say, walked the walk, not talked the talk, a young lady who sacrificed and put her best efforts forward and who, from a university of that calibre is in that top echelon of students.

We have a young man in Florida who is also studying marketing. We are very proud of him. We have a young lady studying hospitality management. We have a young man studying the culinary arts and doing extremely well. And just last year we awarded two scholarships to two young ladies who are determined to make their mark in the academic world and to return to the Cayman Islands to also establish their mark in the hospitality industry.

We need to ensure that these young people, after making that sacrifice and after obtaining high academic levels get the right opportunity to fit into the labour market in this country and be assisted, if necessary, by government. But hopefully, by the organisation they work in, they will have every opportunity to rise to the highest possible level that they can.

I am very proud that the ministry agreed to take over the Miss World and Miss Universe pageants in this country. We have seen people blossom into significant flowering young people who are not at all shy to give you their opinion about any particular issue they are asked about. These same young ladies who qualify for a scholarship, one is already off studying her master's degree. I am proud of that.

Sometimes you create a lot of energy and you utilise a lot of it to get something going, and I am very pleased that the Miss Cayman Islands Committee works like a real team. I believe they have caused the community to rally around those young ladies participating in the contest and I wish every one of them well in their pursuits. But even those who have not been chosen as Miss Cayman have gained from that exposure. And I believe that we can find a way to help young people in many different areas, and I site these two particular areas which I think have made a positive impression on young people, in this case young ladies.

I wonder what impression it creates for young ladies in this country when they are ambassadors of this country around the world representing Miss Cayman, who may not even be eligible to participate as yet. I think the way in which they carry themselves is commendable. They are indeed good role models to follow. Just like the people who have been selected for the tourism scholarship. We have some very able role models when they return to this country for the young people of this country to be able to take their rightful place in the community of the Cayman Islands.

I don't believe the economy of this country has ever been better. It might be equal. I believe that when we look at it . . . there will always be challenges. There will always be issues that we have to address, but I believe that the economy is buoyant, it's healthy, and we need to use all our efforts to ensure that the stability of this country remains permanent. It is that stability, be it the political stability or the professional stability of delivering services, or be it the government's management of its financial resources, I think those three areas in particular lead to an impression of the Cayman Islands that has created the investor confidence that has caused us to be so prosperous.

The Cayman Islands as a place seems to be a country where people want to stay. When we see people who come to our shores and the fact that they want to find a work permit, or if they are a visitor they want to come back again, the real lure of that is the people of this country. That friendliness that we talked about earlier that going out of one's way to ensure that the visitor gets the right direction, the right appreciation, the right impression so that they leave with a warm and rich experience in the Cayman Islands.

Immigration has always been an issue in this country, from the first time they enacted the law in the early 1970s. And the world around us is not as prosperous as we are. And when that is so, we know that we have to be charitable to ourselves and look after the people of the Cayman Islands. Years ago we were the ones leaving the country looking for a better way of life, voyaging the high seas, coming in contact with people from different countries. I believe that was a healthy experience. I did three and one half years of it myself, so I think I am qualified to speak on it.

But there's no place like home. And when home is able to give you a livelihood that enables you to stay with your family, then we saw what happened from about the mid-1960s forward. Now, when we read about countries around the world, we find there are substantial unemployment difficulties, be it the Caribbean or otherwise. So, there should be no surprise that people want to come to the Cayman Islands and stay. There should be no surprise that they want to have a work permit, and there should not be any surprise that their culture may be different from ours, that their way of life may be different, that their attitudes may be different.

But I believe that everyone who comes to our shores has an obligation to try to fit in with the Cayman way of life. It is my belief that these people who come to us wishing to work in our country, to have a better way of life for themselves and their families need to be cognisant of the way Cayman ticks. What I ask is a reason why people want to come. And after they come, some of them—and I emphasise "some" of them—immediately want to change what is here. Now, if we change what is here, what we are accustomed to, the way of life we have enjoyed might be like where they came from, yet they were attracted to come here.

I am not saying the Cayman Islands is perfect, far be it from me. What I am saying is that there is a need to be good corporate citizens in somebody else's country, and there is a need to be generous to the people who are around you. And I am not talking about financial generosity; I am talking about personal generosity, kindness, and assistance.

We are not all university graduates. So some help even for those will be needed now and in the future. And there is the need to have that helpful attitude towards our people that will assist us in the long term to continue to prosper and maintain the social harmony that we so cherish.

We have seen a lot of movement on immigration matters. We have had the select committee produce a white paper—meaning a discussion document for the public to give its views to the committee. And let me underscore the point that what is in the white paper, the discussion paper that is put out to the public is as a result of taking input from members of the public and these issues that are in the white paper are as a result of that. It is not the views of members of this honourable House. But it is the view of all of us, having received this input, that it is our obligation to say to the general public "Here's what we have. What comments or views do you have? Let us have them so that we can be sure that whatever action is taken by this honourable House is done with the input coming from the public." That's all that paper is.

I know there is a lot of concern about that paper, and rightly so. We didn't think they were easy issues either. But we believe that they are issues the public should know about and speak their view to the select committee and also to their representative in this honourable House. I believe that when we get that input we can then determine whether all of these issues go forward or whether the public does not support. I don't think anything here is going to happen. We say we are guided by the public and we have to carry out what we say, not promises, promises.

I don't want to get into too much detail on immigration matters because I believe that it is a subject that much discussion and/or comment will be coming forward in the future. I sincerely believe that there is a need to have a comprehensive coordination so that whatever is done at Immigration is known to the Labour Board, Planning and vice versa.

The other thing I believe is that we need to find a different system to deal with the volume of applications going forward to the Immigration Board. I don't find any logic when a person is granted a 12-month permit that one year later it has to go back to the board. I wonder why we can't just have an administrative process since there are no criminal convictions against the person, and no justifiable complaints. Why not just renew the permit and move on with it? Being mindful, of course, that the Labour Department's list of people looking for jobs is borne in mind before any renewals are done. But I think it needs to have some type of administrative process.

I really believe that what I am talking about, the coming together of the Immigration Board, the Labour Board, and Planning (and that is not an exhaustive list), we need to ensure that the information in the Labour Department is as comprehensive and accurate as we possibly can because with the best of systems somebody will try to find a loophole.

I believe that if you have a system of saying to the companies in this country, be it a bank, a trust company or any other company, it may be difficult when you look at the one man, two man operation, but when you look at the majority of companies in this country, I think it is sensible to say to the person who is the leader of that organisation, 'You come before the Immigration Board and justify what work permits you are going to need in the next three years. What training are you going to do for Caymanians? What promotion will you do for Caymanians in your organisation.' And you tie that package up with monitoring to ensure that the obligation to train Caymanians does actually take place.

This is not the first time I have mentioned this. I believe the volume of work is so huge that it turns everybody off to try to deal with it. When the Immigration Board sits at 9.00 in the morning and can't finish until 7.00 or 8.00 at night, it's time to look at the system. I also believe that we have reached the day when the chairman of the Immigration Board needs to be a full time job. I don't believe that job can be carried out by all of the persons who have been so generous before, spending that amount of time from their respective jobs.

I want to say that we all need to be careful about the selection of people at chairmanship level, that the person possesses knowledge and understanding about the various industries that go on in the Cayman Islands. I believe that we need to be careful how we find that person so that we are sure of the way in which the person will perform. A lot of this country rests on the responsibility and obligation and dedication to duty of the Immigration Board. But if we use this mechanism of a three year coming before the Immigration Board and laying out your plan for three years, and yes, it has to be that this information is treated with confidence.

But you lay out your plan for the three years. The plan will involve the essential work permits you need for that period of time, the Caymanians you are going to promote in that period of time, those who are not eligible for promotion but who are going off on training to put them in a position to be eligible for promotion I think has to be laid out. If we change that system to this I believe we are going to end up with much better administration of that 13,000 work permits (if that is what it is), of training and promotion of Caymanians.

I believe that to effectively deal with this, we have to tie it together. If you are walking in and getting a work permit for 12 months, and two months later you get a work permit for 12 months, and six months later you get another ten work permits for six months, then it is difficult to see the overall picture. But if you can see the overall picture in a company for its needs over three years, and you can set up the proper mechanism to monitor it in terms of promotion and training of Caymanians, then I believe that system with everybody working effectively will help the situation we have today.

There is another area at issue—housing in this country. There is a need to deal with it. While we have agreed to $2 million in the budget for housing, meaning housing for persons who have difficulty in getting a mortgage from the bank, I believe we need to take a comprehensive look at this housing. I sincerely believe that while this is a good step, we do not want to end up with somebody branding us, saying this is a Band-Aid approach. One of the things the census form I answered asked was a lot of questions about housing and the quality of it, in terms of rooms, and what have you.

I believe that as we move around the country and go into those unusual areas people don't go to, we see the need for housing assistance. I know that many countries in dealing with housing for lower income families have a tendency to put it all in one place. I don't believe that that would be the correct thing to do in the Cayman Islands. I believe that we should look at each individual case in each district and take some decision about leaving the person in that particular district rather than moving him to some other area of the island. Sometimes it is better to create little houses than to create substantial apartments, and then find that the maintenance of those properties is not all that you want it to be.

If the organisation that builds houses for $125,000 can do so in this country I ask why can't government do it as well. If we do not help our people, who is going to do it? The cost of construction is constantly increasing. The cost of land is constantly on the upward spiral. Probably 20 years ago you could buy land on Seven-Mile-Beach for about $1200 a foot. Tell me what the price is today, if you can find a piece to buy. I would venture that it's more than $20,000 a foot!

I am not suggesting now that the housing I am talking about would be on Seven-Mile-Beach, but I do know that 20 years ago the cost of a house lot was then deemed to be a reasonable sum of money. Today it's probably going to be in the $25,000 range. And the people we are trying to help, which is the waiver we agreed to, that those houses will not attract stamp duty up to $150,000, it's a help to members of the population trying to get a roof over their heads, who are trying to really move away from paying rent with no benefit accruing to themselves.

If they take a mortgage on a house, after a couple of years they begin to accumulate some value in the house. And I think that is a sensible thing for government to begin to address. Not to say we haven't, but to say that I think we need to find the details of the census report which we are all asking for. But I do know that persons are still going around trying to get information from households who have not completed this census questionnaire. Really, we have to be honest and reasonable. That is the reason for the hold-up. That is really the reason.

I also want to say that the senior citizens of this country were here toiling long before we were little girls and little boys. I believe that it is proper for us as government (or any other government) to look at the needs of these senior citizens. I remember my days of working in New York. I remember going into a restaurant half a block from where I was working and something happened that I never forgot. A waiter was serving two or three of us who had gone there for lunch, and he expressed the feeling that the manager of the restaurant was on his back, so to speak. After a while he said, "You know what, I don't have to work here because the $80 you pay me . . . when I go on welfare I can earn $90. I am going home. The Devil with you!" And he did.

My wish is that every senior citizen in this country who is in need is professionally assessed by the Social Services Department and my personal view is that whatever that need is that should be what government addresses. If the need is $600, I think that's what we should give them. Maybe they need more because it may be combination of financial need to assist the operation of the household and in that assessment they may also determine that housing repress are necessary. I think that when we deal with these senior citizens who delivered to this country . . . I think we need to look comprehensively at what the need is and seek to address it.

It's only a few years ago that people were making real money in this country. So when they start talking about this huge nest egg, and their certificate of deposit, and a big savings account, that's why I am saying let's do a professional assessment of the needs of the senior citizens. And let's ensure that we meet the needs of the family.

I think that is one that all of us have looked at over the years. And the initial amount has been increased and last year we moved a motion and increased it up to $400 today. That might not help the full extent of the need. So I think we need to revisit this area. If I understand it correctly, the Minister responsible for Social Services is looking at this in some depth. But I don't want to leave any doubt in any senior citizen's mind that this government is willing and has assisted the senior citizens of this country and will continue to assist the senior citizens of this country.

Then you hear on the marl road 'You know, this person (who is not a senior citizen) should be assisted to go to work.' That's where I believe the training of government should step in and provide the tools to allow the individual to walk with pride and pay his or her own bills by the (as they say) sweat of the brow.

The youth problems in this country . . . you know, there are always degrees of appreciation of it. When we were growing up and mischievous, like most boys are, in those days they called us bad boys. All of us have been labelled at one point or another with different degrees of what a "bad boy" (or bad girl) is. Sometimes these young people are crying out for attention. And sometimes the only way they are going to get attention is by demonstrating some unusual behaviour that the community does not want to have. I believe it's time for all of us, government and others, . . . and it is true. Policing is not the whole problem. We have to address the family unit because the person on the street causing the problem comes from some household.

We have to assess the needs of that household, the needs of the parents and of this individual and try to come to grips with it. Just locking him or her up doesn't change the attitude. It may harden the attitude. And they may get further training for misbehaving in this process of being incarcerated. I think the government on a whole has put together a number of programmes and facilities and coaches, and people have rallied around football games and young people and the Cubs, among others, there is a lot of activity going on. It is healthy and there are a lot of good young people in this country.

When you take the time to look and analyse the position, what we are talking about is a small number of people who are misbehaving. So, why can't we find a way to deal with it? I am talking about dealing with it from the household coming up. Sometimes we say the Devil finds work for idle hands to do. If you are not working, and you are on the street with the peer pressure today, there is every likelihood—unless you come from a strong Christian background—that you may get involved with something you should not. The problem when you are in the peer group is that if you are not careful you get led into things that you don't want to be part of, but the fact that you are there makes you guilty by association. I think we all need to pay attention. Young people need to pay attention to this.

And it's not just true for young people. It's true for all of us at whatever age: the company you keep gives you a label. I say commend all of the people of this country who are delivering services to young people and senior citizens. I support you and I will do whatever I can to assist you in your duties.

I want to now move on to one of my ministry subject, Vehicle Licensing. I think the Omnibus operation (from all I hear), although not established long ago is certainly being utilised by the public and we don't hear a chorus of complaints. I interpret that to mean that it is working reasonably well. I know that there were a number of persons in this business before the ministry assumed responsibility for it from the police department, and a number of them were not in possession of the status required, that of being a Caymanian.

So, in recent times we said to them that we felt they were earning their livelihood in this area. We knew they were married to Caymanians, did not possess Caymanian status, but that they had been in this business for so long, without any objection we felt there was a need to provide a signal that they did not fall within the law in terms of a possession of an Omnibus permit. So, we said by letter that we would give them until June to sort out their status. We know this doesn't take a long period of time if you are married to a Caymanian and you have been residing in the Cayman Islands for ten or more years. We felt a moral obligation to the Caymanian spouse not to step in with a big stick, so to speak, and discontinue that service.

Some members questioned why one West Bayer had eight buses. My understanding is that the West Bayer had a number of buses, and some of the people delivering the service sold out to him, thus he added three or four additional buses. That's how he came to possess that number of buses. I am pleased that a Caymanian is involved in this service. I am pleased that all the Caymanians are involved. I think it came as a surprise to most of us when a year or so ago when we decided to allow people, Caymanians, to apply for a taxi licence. We wanted to lift the quota by 25, and we got 60 or 70 applications. We took the view that if they could all pass the examination, and they are Caymanians, that we should give them the opportunity.

What we were trying to achieve was for the visitor to get that Caymanian flavour. One of the first people they come in contact with is the taxi driver. If that person has been in the Cayman Islands for a long time, has Caymanian status, or was born here, they will get that flavour from them. We felt that this was a good thing. So, we said if they could pass the test we would licence them.

When we started dealing with the Omnibus permits, almost the same thing happened. They came forward like they had never come forward before. But some of the people who came forward had not been in the business before. Some of them are Caymanians married to a non-Caymanian. The law says you cannot allow a non-Caymanian to have a licence. So what they really need to do is sort out their status and then come forward. That's the simple answer to those issues raised.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable minister, would this be a convenient time to take the break?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: It is.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.13 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.32 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, continuing his debate on the Throne Speech.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: When we took the break, I was dealing with the Vehicle Licensing Unit. I want to say how proud I am of the way in which the director and his staff have really delivered the service to the population of this country who are in need of driver's license, or registration of vehicles, or whatever service needed from that unit. I believe we have transformed this organisation into a much more consumer-friendly unit than ever before. I know the unit we established in West Bay last year is one that is well appreciated by the population of West Bay. I have only had good positive comments about that unit in particular.

We have been trying for some time now to move an amendment to the Traffic Law and Regulations that deals principally with handicapped parking in this country. Vehicles driven by handicapped persons will have a special emblem from the Vehicle Licensing Unit, and only those vehicles should park in a handicapped parking space. We also want to legislate a fine for those who park in those spaces when they should not. We are pressing on to have this amendment and we are hopeful that within 30 to 60 days we will have the amendment to the legislation and will move forward to have legal backing on handicapped parking.

We are not focusing on the fine, we are focusing on the need for the space to be left open so that people not as fortunate as others can go wherever they wish in this country and find a parking spot available. That is the focus.

When the ministry assumed responsibility for E-commerce, not too long ago . . . and I must say the committee is working at such a pace that it even surprises me sometimes. It's a good committee made up of public service and private sector individuals who are contributing to the legislation of the Electronic Transactions Bill. I hope that we will be in a position to move that legislation through this honourable House. My view is that before we present it to the House, members of the Legislative Assembly would be given a briefing by the drafting subcommittee of this organisation so that they have an opportunity to hear firsthand from the people involved in the drafting of the legislation, to ask questions.

One of the areas I am sure we will have to address is the cost of conducting e-commerce business in the Cayman Islands by Cable & Wireless as providers. We all know that we have to be competitive in order to attract business. If our prices are twice as high as others, do you have any questions about where the public is going to go? In looking at a publication that compares the typical weekly communication bill for a small business, we find that the Cayman Islands is approximately 60% (59.94%) higher than Bermuda. Is there any question as to who is going to get the business? It is an area that government will have to address with Cable & Wireless if we are to be successful in competing in this market.

We know that this market, e-commerce, has the potential to move this country to an even higher level in the world of service. We know that e-commerce is the way of the future and an area that we have to compete in. If the cost of doing business in the Cayman Islands is a stumbling block, then we must address that issue. We must ensure that Cayman is competitive. What is the point of making legislation if we are not going to address all of the various pieces that cause us to be competitive I call on Cable & Wireless to address these issues.

While this publication I am reading from may not be wholly accurate (I have to say that because I don't know that it is accurate), the fact that we are approximately 60% above Bermuda and 57% above The Bahamas, and 56% above Barbados, I would draw from that that we are likely to be more costly than them. I think it has to be addressed.

Sometimes people use a profit margin (and I am not saying this about Cable & Wireless) that says 'I know that I am only going to have a small turn over, so I am going to charge all I can for the service and thus make a profit.' There's another way of carrying this out, realising that the volume is so huge, unlimited in a sense, that if you cut your price right, you will make an even greater profit line at the end of the day. I believe that is what I would ask to be taken into account in considering the cost of service by Cable & Wireless.

I am also pleased to be the Minister for Works. I am pleased to work with professionals in the Public Works Department. I will not name names, but I think we all know who they are. They are providing able services to this country, all of the work being carried out on the roads in this country, be it resurfacing or the extension of the Harquail, or the Bob Thompson Way junction, all done with Public Works Department expertise. I have to commend them for their dedication and commitment.

When we were dealing with the roundabout at North Sound Road towards the end of last year they were out there morning, noon, and night to make sure it happened on time, before the peak tourism season. I have to give them full credit. Full credit goes to the men who work on the district roads as well.

I was very pleased that this honourable House agreed in Finance Committee to vote the funds to start this work in January, when we have dry season, when we are able to more effectively deal with repair of roads or building or resurfacing of roads and be more cost effective. When the Auditor General talks about value for money, this is the best way to achieve it. I am very pleased that members agreed to that.

We have seen that the shoulder work in the George Town/Spotts/Lower Valley/Breakers area is well underway and some has been completed. I am very pleased about that and I think it's right that if the public is not happy about something that they should say something. But I think it is also right to realise that sometimes there is another way of doing it other than the way I am thinking. Let us understand that as well.

We are hoping that the Crewe Road Bypass, which will be of significant benefit to the traffic from the eastern districts, will be open in the summer. We are addressing that issue at the moment, working diligently. I think that some of us can visualise the work nearer the Old Crewe Road/New Crewe Road Junction.

I have to particularly mention the Deputy Chief Engineer, Mark Scotland. I think he's an excellent young man with potential. He's dedicated to the Cayman Islands and the people of this country. He was one of those who I mentioned being out there morning, noon, and night when we were trying to get the roundabout finished at North Sound Road.

Members of the public told me that when the extension to the Harquail and the roundabout they travelled from as far as Lower Valley to drive on it, and they found themselves going round and round in the roundabout, just to get a full appreciation for it and how to manoeuvre it and they were tickled to death—and, I must say, so was I—when they went through it. I think that overall, we can all be proud of what has been accomplished there.

We plan also to deal with the road that leads from the roundabout to Crewe Road, and we also plan to deal with the Crewe Road Junction where we will have a junction similar to what we have at Bob Thompson Way. Even now as we drive through in the morning and the afternoon, the people turning right or left create some congestion in that junction. There is also a need to resurface and lift a portion of North Sound Way in order to deal with the flooding that took place last year.

When dealing with the Crewe Road Bypass we also have to deal with the junction across from Hurley's. We will soon be bringing that to members of the House so they can visualise what it is we have in mind there.

Resurfacing of roads . . . I think we accomplished a great deal in 1999. We are looking forward to more resurfacing. We believe that public is indeed pleased with the portions of roads resurfaced. I want to thank members for voting the funds to let it happen.

We also want to look at the Bob Thompson way coming across to Crewe Road into the roundabout at Thomas Russell Way which will allow two lanes of traffic to come into it, one to turn left and go down Elgin Avenue, and the other to go right through the roundabout and across to Crewe Road with a view to a smooth traffic flow now and in the future.

District roads are moving on. One team is working in George Town since January. There is a team working in East End. I hope they have come onto your district, Madam Speaker, or will be shortly. There is a need for road visits in the Bodden Town and West Bay area and we are hoping to do that shortly so that we can move on with those district roads as well. Let us caucus and see what is a convenient day for all to do this visit. The last time we had to do it on a Saturday because we couldn't find any other day we were so committed with other activities. Quite frankly, I have no hesitation with doing it on a Saturday morning if that is what is required. Otherwise we are going to get to a position where the teams are finished with their work in the respective districts and then no where to go because there isn't an agreement for the roads to be done in Bodden Town or West Bay.

I know that we have been working on Fairbanks Road, leading from Bob Thompson Way, down through the back and out by the schools. Public Works Department has been widening the road, doing chip and spray and they are still trying to make sure that it's done to all of our satisfaction. When the Crewe Road Bypass opens in the summer, we thought we would get ahead of that and do that particular section now that needs to be addressed so that when the road opens we will have a good flow of traffic and not wind up with potholes all over the place.

The area of streetlights is an area we are also working on. I think if members have some need, if they would assist us by getting the number on the pole and writing to us we would do it. All of the requests that have been made to us we have put on to Public Works Department, who does the coordination with CUC. Unless something came in this morning we have asked Public Works Department to deal with all the matters that were put to us. They have asked CUC to deal with it. Sometimes it appears we are taking a long time, but we are in the hands of CUC as to when they are available to do it. I do know that when you require a pole to be installed, it can take months to get it done. I mention that to say to members that this has been my experience. I wish it were different.

Cable & Wireless has numbers on the poles and they have a system that identifies exactly where that pole is in Grand Cayman.

We know that in all that we talk about, and all that we attempt to do that there will be times when we do not accomplish all that we set out to. There can be a variety of reasons why that is so. But we have to continue to press on and work at our objective of providing service to the people of this country.

We also know that we have been working on the quantity surveying section of Public Works Department. We have the computer programme for it, and I understand that it is being or has been installed. They will be able to do a lot of the work without having to put it out to the public.

Since assuming responsibility for Public Works Department we have been trying to deliberately say to those organisations that make classified ads on behalf of Public Works Department that they should not quote the dollar figure, just the specifications of what is needed. Let those persons willing to put in a bid do the bidding and work up the figures themselves. I feel that if we put the figure out, then there is that possibility that people will use that figure for their bid, rather than doing the exercise for themselves by looking at the specifications.

We hope that the Harquail Extension and roundabout will come sometime in the not-too-distant future. The overall plan seeks to extend the Harquail through the Hyatt property down behind the Grand Pavilion on the east side of Foster's Food Fair at the Strand, and to the east of Bella Capri, tying in to the property presently leased by Ritz Carlton into SafeHaven. I believe that if we are able to punch through to SafeHaven we have the majority of the problem licked. There will be a need for the widening of that particular area as we go through Governor's Harbour and down towards Indies Suites. The proposal also takes it a little East of Indies Suites and ties in with Batabano Road. And that's as far as the present proposal takes it.

Work is continuing in the drawings and the cost, so we hope that next year government will be in a position to put forth a budget seeking to move further north the present Harquail extension. I believe that is in the best interest of the country.

And when we talk about resurfacing, last year we took technical advice about what part of the road should be done. As a result of that advice, we now have what is done. But I sincerely believe that the worst part of the roads in this country is from the Governor's residence coming into George Town. Whenever it rains you need to put on your boots to get past the Hyatt. We have a similar problem by Treasure Island coming up towards Sleep Inn which will not only require resurfacing but lifting the road to deal with the flooding problem.

In recent times, Public Works Department has installed drains. In the past, the diameter of the drains was 4" or 6". They are now 10" in diameter. That has assisted tremendously, especially in the industrial area on Dorcy Drive. They noticed that the water drained off rather quickly in comparison to how it used to drain. So I think that all of those are additional items that Public Works Department is using for road improvements.

When we deal with some of this roadwork, there will be a need to purchase land. So far the majority of the road known as the Harquail Bypass didn't cost us anything. There is one claim before the government that is about to go before the assessment committee. Barring that one, there is no other claim that I am aware of.

When you get into town and you start dealing with what we call the North Sound connector, which is the road leading from the roundabout to Crewe Road, when traffic is backed up from the traffic light, and you want to go to the airport you can't get around that piece of sidewalk that jets out to the west. Even though the lane is open you can't do it. So there will be a need, and Public Works Department has been talking to the owners and I think to the best of my recollection there is agreement as to how that can be handled. It will be widened and we will have to purchase property to give them a similar amount of parking space with a view to opening that up so that traffic can flow freely.

I am proud to have been the minister responsible for the Port Authority. The service delivered by that statutory authority is at a level that I am satisfied with. I think the majority of the public is satisfied. I think the director and his staff are worthy of my commendation for the able way in which they have performed their duties. We have looked at many different decisions that are necessary with a view of ensuring that when we do take a decision to purchase land we are looking 15 years or more down the road. So much so, that we have purchased land in the cargo distribution centre. We now own land when we look across at it, coming down North Sound Way . . . all the land that you see from the Cargo Distribution Centre (you have to be at a specific point, of course), is owned by the Port Authority, with a view that sometime in the future you will need to have another access. You will need to have more roads, more space for parking of containers and the sort.

We made some modifications in the area to ensure that the public coming in to receive their goods are not placed in an area where 40 foot containers are being lifted, ensuring the safety of the public. We have extended the warehouse to such an extent that it is double the space it used to be. When we look at the tonnage that has been coming into this country since 1992, it's surprising to know the growth of items coming into this country. In addition to expanding the warehouse space, we have also added racking which allows us to stack up to eight or 12 feet which more effectively deals with the volume of cargo coming into this country.

One of the items that the Port Authority has been examining over the last two years is the need for a dock. The present finger pier is 190 feet long by about 40 feet wide. In February of 1998, it was damaged to such an extent that to fix it would really be a Band-Aid job. I say "Band-Aid" for a couple of reasons. But one reason in particular is that when we have the Morrant Bay in port, which is often, the ship is 380 feet long. That is why she sticks way out beyond the dock. Even when you have the cement boat come in, she's way beyond the dock. So the rationale is that the next size ship that would come to the Cayman Islands—not necessarily next year, but five or ten years down the road—would be 450 feet long. That's the reason we came to the conclusion that the dock should be able to deal with that size ship and the expenditure would be more effectively spent than doing a Band-Aid approach.

The width of the dock is 240 feet wide. And the reason for that is that you would be able to take two ships up to 450 feet long on either side of that dock, while simultaneously utilising both cranes and trucking to take containers off. I believe that we are listening to all input. But in the best interests of this country, we need to build a dock. If we get a serious hurricane, God forbid, in 2000, my bet is that you are not going to be able to dock where we are docking now. The only thing that is effectively in place are the pillars that come up from the ocean floor. The majority of that finger pier is not useable.

In that Nor'wester of February 1998 (where the wind came more from the west) the dock broke up. It fell down into the ocean. We made our claim to replace it. The insurance company has honoured the claim of one and three quarter million dollars, which we will utilise to our best advantage in dealing with the future needs of the port. What is important is that this country's movement of goods is secure. If that port does not operate for a week or two, I think we will fully understand the service being delivered there and what we are trying to accomplish. We need to try to get value for money when dealing with this dock. If you build it 200 feet long now, and ten years down the road you build the other 200 feet . . . I bet it will cost you a lot more doing it that way.

We have been in consultation from the first day with the Department of the Environment, and we have worked with them in terms of the environmental impact study that needs to be created. We have accepted their advice, we have utilised the firm Moffit and Nickels [?] they have carried out their study. They have made their report. When we had a public meeting about it some people said they were not happy with it. We then went back out and said get another professional to audit the report. I haven't seen it yet, but I understand that it is also back and the results agree with the study of Moffit and Nickels.

It says there is no serious damage to any part of South Church Street or Hog Sty Bay because when you build the dock 450 feet out, which is a solid block, not what we have now where water can pass underneath, that dock will protect Hog Sty Bay more significantly than we have ever seen it protected before. The exercise also says that when you look at wave action further to the north, there is no significant wave effect that's different from what we now have. It will be on the dock itself, that narrow portion that fits the "L" where it jets out and comes back to the dock itself will take the bulk of whatever waves there are.

The movement of sand on the ocean floor is not a factor. My view is that this dock . . . listen to all the people want to say, but I believe it is in our best interest to move this exercise forward. I know this is a political year. But I stand by my own conviction as to what I believe is right and proper for this island and its people.

Sometimes the people who complain about something, and it's not done, are the same people who come later on and ask 'Well, why didn't you do it?' I marvel sometimes when I remember the objection to the Middle School in 1979. And now everybody thinks it's a great thing. Now we are talking about a third high school.

One area I am going to step back on, where I have not really held to my promise is that the Bodden Town unit is not yet in place. But we've done the visit for the Bodden Town Vehicle Licensing Department, and we have made a selection. The Second Elected Member for Bodden Town and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town were with us together with members of Public Works Department. We are moving forward in that direction. We hope that before too long we will be in a position to open it and to deliver the service to people of the eastern districts. I think the conveniences we are able to provide will cause less traffic coming into George Town. If you have to come into George Town to just register your car . . . imagine the amount of traffic coming down Bodden Town or Red Bay Road just for that purpose.

It was just last week that I attended a graduation ceremony for six recruits of the Fire Service. I want to offer my congratulations. This country appreciates that the Fire Service is a well-run department of government. Hats off to Kirkland Nixon and his people.

Hon. Anthony Eden: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: It's not just today that he's been doing this job. My memory takes me back 30 years.

It is amazing when you look at the equipment they use, how new they look, and how old they are. It's amazing. It shows his concern and the dedication of his staff towards the equipment this House in Finance Committee agrees to make available to him. And let me say that it is seen as a model organisation in the Caribbean.

One of the great credits of Mr. Nixon and his staff is that even youngsters who can be kind of difficult at times, like we were, he causes them to be disciplined after a short period of time.

When we start talking about Caymaniansation, you don't have to look at the Fire Service; it's already that way. You don't have to look at the Customs Department and Mr. Carlon Powery and his staff. It's already that way.

Customs sometimes gets stretched to the limit. Even our expectations as to how much revenue it will collect, which is not only the duties they are providing but ensuring that we keep all contraband materials out as well. I have to say that Mr. Carlon Powery and his staff perform at a level that I can easily say, well done.

There will always be complaints, even about you and me. That's not to say that we are not performing well. It's just a matter that somebody has a different opinion than we do about something. You know when you are dealing with subjects like contraband—you can get all sorts of complaints. But the question is, Is it fair to all concerned? Is it true? Does it build goodwill and better friendship? I don't think so in most cases.

I know there may be other departments that are fully Caymanianised. Cayman Brac and Little Cayman may be one of them. Full credit to them too. And that troublesome subject of Immigration. They are also fully Caymanianised.

I have to say that when Mr. Orrett Connor took over the Immigration Department many of us said to ourselves, 'Boy, he's in for quite a task.' That is not an easy subject to be the chief of because you are dealing with so many personalities, so many different nationalities, so many different issues. It takes a real person of substance to deal with it effectively. I think he has. He has served this country well, and I commend him for the able delivery of that service.

From time to time, we need special expertise to come in to assist us with some amount of our tasks. But that sometimes is a short-term matter because we don't have the staff to carry out that particular function, or maybe we don't have the specialisation to begin with. But we are the roots of this country and we must shake the tree when it needs to be shaken and deliver the goods and find out where the beef is.

I want to make some points on all the issues facing the Cayman Islands, particularly those outside. I believe the Cayman Islands has a good team representing it in dealing with OECD matters or European Union matters, or talks with the UK or the US. I think that some ground has been covered. I believe there is a lot more work to do. Negotiations don't allow us to go public and say what is being negotiated because we know the other side has asked us not to do it.

There is a need to say to the public that we are going off the island. We haven't done that on every occasion that we have gone off. I don't know if we did it when we went to Paris, or the UK. Upon our return, we did a proper news release. None of this is carved in stone, so if the public want s to know when we are going off we are happy to give that information to the public before we leave the island. That's no difficulty at all.

The country has spent a good deal of money in dealing with capital work over the years. Some people even ask what we got for it. I am going to be able to tell them on Wednesday morning exactly what we got for it. But let me just quickly indicate some of the things we did get for it. We have a brand new hospital that is second to none in this part of the world. We have health clinics in West Bay, North Side, East End, and Bodden Town. We have civic centres in North Side, East End, Gun Bay and we are going to have ours in West Bay as well.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah right!

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Any Doubting Thomas can doubt. But my name is Thomas—and I am not a doubting one. It is going to happen.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Ohhhhhh!

[Members' laughter]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: In this country we have public beaches within the districts. Some never had jet-ties for the public before. Some districts never had them.

We have just about finished one in West Bay. There was only jetty on the south side of the island from Northwest Point up to George Town. We want to be sure people understand what this jetty is for. It's not for tying up big boats that will bang against it and knock it down. We will shortly be putting up the relevant signs. It is for dropping off. This jetty is for the people of West Bay and we are going to see to it that it happens that way.

We have a Harquail Bypass, two phases of it. The Crewe Road Bypass is under construction due to open in the summer. We have roads that are resurfaced.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, it is that hour of the afternoon. Will you be winding up what you are saying about capital projects in a few minutes?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: With the greatest of respect, I will not.

The Deputy Speaker: I did not mean for you to wind up your speech. You were just dealing with capital projects. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I apologise. I was just trying to be funny. I understood what you meant.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I have the pleasure of moving the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM Wednesday.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 11(6), I wish to raise an issue that is of significant importance.

The Deputy Speaker: I have given you permission. Before you read the statement, has a copy been passed to the minister with responsibility under the relevant Standing Order?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes Madam Speaker, this has been done.

The Serjeant-At-Arms was given a copy and it was placed on the minister's desk. Unfortunately, the minister was not in the Chamber. After some time had passed I advised the Serjeant-At-Arms to please advise the minister and he did so.

The Deputy Speaker: You can proceed with your statement.

RAISING OF MATTERS FOR WHICH GOVERNMENT HAS RESPONSIBILITY

Standing Order 11(6)

DISRUPTION OF FIGHT SCHEDULE OF CAYMAN AIRWAYS LIMITED

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I wish to raise the issue surrounding the recent and very serious disruption in the flight schedule of Cayman Airways Limited (CAL).

The Airline now has three aircraft, none of which were in service as of earlier this afternoon. While all three of these aircraft are out of service for different reasons, the fact is they are not flying. The only plane flying for CAL is a 727-100 series aircraft leased or sub-leased from First Air. This aircraft was accompanied by only one flight crew, severely limiting the number of hours that it flies on a daily basis.

The net result is total chaos with the flight schedule, freight service, inter-island services, and international flights that are almost to a grinding halt. It is my understanding that over 1,000 disgruntled and inconvenienced passengers, including many school children, parents and teachers who are still housed in hotels at various destinations with their accommodations and food vouchers being at the expense of the Airline.

It is obvious that our national flag carrier is experiencing some trying times and the dedicated staff must be finding it very difficult if not impossible to cope. We fully support Cayman Airways Limited, but we are very worried about its future. We are also very concerned about staff moral at this point.

Rumours abound and experience has taught us that they do none of us any good. Questions have to be raised, questions that are relevant. They need to be answered and in a responsible manner. Some (and I underscore "some") of the questions that need to be answered are:

Was it a sound decision to have both aircraft that were in service scheduled for extensive maintenance back to back without first waiting for the third aircraft to come on line? Might it not have been more prudent to seek an extension of airworthiness for one of them until this was the case?

That is only a question. I don't know the correct answer, but one would have thought that, as in previous times where CAL has sought extensions to their airworthiness for reasons relevant at that time, this would have been the case on this occasion.

Why would management lease or sublease an aircraft to supplement the scheduled air service when only one flight crew is provided, thus severely limiting its daily flying hours?

Can the airline survive financially within the present climate and how will it do so? Will the many staff issues outstanding be addressed? Does CAL need to re-examine the type of equipment it is presently using? Which strategy will be employed to regain public confidence in the Airline?

The truth is the issue goes far beyond the realm of the Government and the Opposition. Many jobs are at stake and it is the public's money that is being spent. The people of the Cayman Islands have the right to know the facts surrounding the CAL dilemma.

I am requesting that the Honourable Minister responsible make a public statement outlining all of these facts so that everyone may have a full understanding and appreciation of the position which the airline finds itself in at present.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Thank you. I will reply to what I can now. I really thought when the Serjeant-at-Arms spoke to me it was just a note. I didn't realise that I was going to face a major statement. I have really just read it.

The first one that relates to having both aircraft—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, if I may. If the minister would just give way for one second, please.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I quite appreciate the minister's position, and while he might feel compelled to answer immediately, I just want everybody to know that I am quite content to give the minister the opportunity to gather the facts and come back on another occasion and do it properly.

I am not expecting the minister to deal with it at this very minute. I just want him to understand that. Possibly Wednesday.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I would prefer to have a bit of time, the questions are fairly serious and diverse.

The Deputy Speaker: As I understand it, the honourable minister is undertaking to reply at the next available opportunity, on Wednesday when the House resumes. Thank you.

Before I put the question on the adjournment, I would honestly like to thank all honourable members for the time we have spent today in the Chamber dealing with the country's business. It has made my job easier, and I appreciate it very much.

The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Wednesday, 15 March. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.44 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 15 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
WEDNESDAY
15 MARCH 2000
10.12 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The first item of business, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable Speaker who has been discharged from the hospital. I spoke to him yesterday afternoon. He is quite eager to come back to the Legislative Assembly, and while he is a lot better, he is not one hundred percent so he should be with us next week. I would ask all members to remember the Honourable Speaker in their prayers.

I have apologies from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is not well. The Honourable Second Official Member, the Honourable Third Official Member, and the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communication, Environment and Natural Resources will be arriving later.

Government Business, Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J SMITH, CBE,
GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS,
ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Monday afternoon towards the end of my contribution, I promised that today I would tell the people of these islands and Members of the Legislative Assembly what the people got for the money that we spent. However, I realise that time is running short. I understand I have thirty-nine minutes this morning, so I am going to defer on that promise to another day.

I want to come now to the subject of tourism and I want to begin by talking about visitor arrivals. Sometimes when you are in the driver's seat so to speak, when you are the Minister of a particular subject, you sometimes have to take decisions that are not always popular. But when I look at what has been happening over the last seven years, let's say, from the end of 1992 until now, I look specifically at some points where the people of this country, and the construction industry in particular, were in a state of doldrums. When we took office in 1992, it took us some time to begin to get it moving.

One of the main stimulants to that construction industry was the beginning and the encouragement by the ministry to the developer who built the Westin Hotel. This happened and they opened in December 1995 with quite a substantial number of rooms, over 300. We cut a lot of flack for it, but let me ask one question: What would have happened in this country if the Westin developer was not encouraged to build those 300-plus rooms and we arrived in the summer of 1998 when we lost the Holiday Inn with 215 and we lost the Grand Pavilion with another 85 rooms? What would have happened to this country? And I ask, is this not good management of the tourism industry?

Leadership requires foresight and to stand strong when you believe that what you are doing is in the best interest of the people of Cayman. Some even spread the malicious rumour that I was an owner of the Westin. Madam Speaker, Members of this Parliament and members of the Caymanian community, I have no personal interest or ownership in the Westin. My only interest is to ensure that we have accommodation in the Cayman Islands so that visitors can find good quality service to be delivered to them and that the people within the Cayman Islands can find work. And the funds that are spent in this country by those visitors trickle through the economy.

In recent time, the ministry encouraged facilities that have either opened or have begun the construction of hotels. The Hyatt Suites on the beach (which was opened a little over a year ago with 55 suites), the Comfort Suites (110 rooms opened around Valentine's Day of this year), and the Grand Caymanian Beach Club and Resort (196 suites) I suspect will be opened shortly. The Holiday Inn with 200-plus rooms is scheduled to open in October 2000. What has the country gained from all this activity? Millions and millions of dollars of construction income in Cayman and, in addition, during this period of management of tourism we have earned billions—not millions!

When we look at the air arrivals (and let's start with 1993), we attracted over 287,000 visitors who arrived by air. In 1994, the number rose to over 341,000 and by 1995 that same type of visitor rose in number to 361,000. By 1996, it reached 373,000. In 1997, it was 381,000 that visited Cayman Islands by air, and at the end of 1998, 404,000 people. At the end of 1999, 394,000—almost 396,000 people.

It is not the number of people that we are focusing on, it's the number of yield, it's the number who spend that a cruise in the Cayman Islands . . . Let's just track it. The figures that I am going to quote are figures that are commuted by the Economic and Statistics Department of the Government.

- ◆ In 1993, the spending of persons who arrived by air was in excess of CI$200 million. The exact figures—$203 million.
- ◆ By 1994, the income was $253 million.
- ◆ In 1995, $283 million.
- ◆ When we reached 1996, visitors who arrived by air during that year spent $300 million in this country.
- ◆ In 1997, the spending was $411 million by visitors who came in by air.
- ◆ In 1998, it was $442 million.
- ◆ In 1999, it was $431 million.

That's why I said during the period of 1993 to 1999, the management of the tourism industry was able to cause a spending in this country of over CI$2.6 billion. We haven't started talking about cruise ship passengers as yet and what they spend.

The ministry has developed since 1992 a good working relationship with senior officers of the cruise line, which has earned this country in that period, 1993 - 1999, millions of dollars according to the Economic and Statistics Department commutations.

- ◆ In 1993, 545,000 cruise ship passengers landed in the Cayman Islands.
- ◆ In 1994, the number was 539,000.
- ◆ In 1995, it was 615,000.
- ◆ In 1996, it was 720,000.
- ◆ In 1997, it was 780,000.
- ◆ In 1998, it was 784,000.
- ◆ In 1999, it was 932,000 came to the Cayman Islands.

Now, what does that mean? Does it just mean that people are walking all around Cayman Islands or are we getting something for it?

- ◆ The spending in 1993 was $23 million.
- ◆ In 1994, it was $26 million. And we know, Madam Speaker, that some of these passengers don't stay more than about four hours on the island, although the cruise ship in some cases, stay from about 8.00 a.m. until 4.00 p.m. or 5.00 p.m.
- ◆ In 1995, $31 million.
- ◆ In 1996, $39 million.
- ◆ In 1997, $47 million.
- ◆ In 1998, $60 million, and in 1999, $63 million.

In summary, what has the ministry and its staff who are doing promotions around the world earned for the Cayman Islands? What is the spending in the Cayman Islands of that work in the years 1993 - 1999? The Economic and Statistics Department says the spending for air arrivals was CI$2.6 billion. In terms of cruise ships passengers, $300 million for cruise tourism.

When we think of these numbers, Madam Speaker, this expenditure takes place in hotels, restaurants, water sports, taxis, condos, duty free stores and supermarkets to name some.

What has the Ministry of Tourism done about airlift, which is one of the keys to getting passengers to the Cayman Islands? How are they coming? What are you doing to assist them in coming to the Cayman Islands? In 1994, we took a major European tour. We did promotions in two cities in Frankfurt, and Munich, Germany. We did a promotion in Vienna, Austria. We did two promotions in Italy—Milan and Rome. We decided that passengers wishing to come to the Cayman Islands leaving some city in Europe travelling to Miami (and at that time there were a few tourists murdered in Miami. It was totally unattractive to pass through that city.), we took the view then that we would carry out some work.

Sometimes you have to spend some money to earn some—in the majority of cases that's true. So, we utilised someone who was familiar with the airline industry and as a result of that work we received on 9 December 1994 the first direct flight from Gatwick, England—a DC10 Caledonia Airline. By March of the following year, British Airways decided that the arrangement was so attractive rather than having a chartered flight once a week, they would establish scheduled services to the Cayman Islands twice a week. We encouraged that and we did a special promotion in different cities in England as well as in Scotland to assist that process.

What have we done in the North American continent? It wasn't more than two years ago that we were able to attract Delta to come into the Cayman Islands direct from Atlanta. They actually arrived on 7 December 1997. To the best of my collection, the aircraft was a 757 and they have been flying daily ever since. My understanding is that their load factor is generally 80 percent. What surprises me about that particular flight is that during the process of discussion and understanding about Delta, one statistic sort of floored me one morning when the Delta representative said, "We have sufficient connections out of Atlanta to make sure that this flight works. When we take this decision we are looking to the long-term, we are not looking to come in for one year because we have 614 flights arriving in Atlanta that can connect to your flight going to the Cayman Islands." That's a lot of planes and that's why they have been so successful over the last two years.

Now, we know that when we lost Holiday Inn with 215 rooms (which has been operating in the Cayman Islands since 1972) many people had established a patronage to it. Whether they came for their honeymoon and came back religiously to celebrate their anniversary or whatever the attraction may be, the marketplace was going to suffer to some extent. When in approximately three months time we lost the Clarion Hotel with a similar kind of marketing ability, manpower, finances, promotions, they were tied in with wholesalers and travel agents, we lost a significant player in the Cayman Islands tourism industry.

So, when you pass by the summer and you lose these two hotels and you come now to January of 1999, the winter, which is your peak season, you have lost not only 600 rooms, but you have also lost the combined marketing of the Holiday Inn and the Clarion of the Cayman Islands. It's bound to have some effect on your business—and it did. If we graph the arrivals on a monthly basis (the graph of the visitors who arrive by air), we know that peak season—January to mid-April (sometimes the later part of April as will be this year because Easter falls on the 21st)—if we fall short in that period of time catch-up is difficult to do. But we ended up with a reasonable number at the end of the year.

We had a series of reasons. We had the Y2K that everybody is beginning to relax about now but were frightened to death in the summer of last year as it affected everyone including me. I decided I wasn't flying either. Many of the senior people in organisations in the United States were told by the boss, 'You stay home until this matter is cleared.' That had a significant effect on the travel into the Cayman Islands in December last year and January of this year. Not only the Cayman Islands, it affected everybody—Las Vegas, Disney World, cruise ships and any destination you want to name. So, we are all in the same downturn.

I think to some extent we even saw the airlines pull back on their schedules, because there were no demands for the number of planes and the number of seats available.

In January of this year, we saw the effect of it as well. We saw the reduction in the number of people who were travelling, but we have been working. We have been doing our promotions and we have been looking at our marketing strategy. We have been fine-tuning our integrated marketing system that we are moving on to. In February of this year, we are up over 5.1% over last year. In February, the United States (which is a major player with visitors) was up in excess of 6.2% over February 1999.

Now, there are a lot of factors we are playing with here. There is a lot of fierce competition in the marketplace—airfares being one of them. Direct flights out of New York to different islands to the Caribbean other than the Cayman Islands . . . we are working on that one too. I pray to my God that we are successful in that area because I believe when you are trying to attract persons, from New York in particular (metropolitan New York), direct flights are what they want. If we are unable to produce it then obviously we are not going to be as successful in having them come through Miami. It is not going to be as attractive as it would be on a direct flight.

So, we are very hopeful and we are diligently working to ensure that we deal with the marketplace and tie our advertising and our public relations and our promotions in the field altogether so that we are working as one. We have one objective, one goal, and we are singing one song so that the consumer is not confused about what is the position of the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, in moving on to this integrated marketing system that I briefly referred to, where we tie all the pieces together and we utilise our websites (be it the general website of the Department of Tourism or the additional specific website which deals with the diving world), in dealing with the movement towards integrated marketing, the ministry issued a document that had a series of objectives for the Department of Tourism. One of those objectives is that the marketing within the United States should be done in conjunction with the Director of Sales and Marketing.

If we are going to have a situation where we in the Cayman Islands try to decide what is attractive in California, Chicago, or some other part of United States, then really we don't need those people up there. But having lived in the United States, going to school and working in excess of thirteen years, I believe I understand a little bit about that country, at least the cities that I came in contact with and lived in. I believe that what is being done by the ministry is in keeping with the movement towards an integrated marketing system. And it's correct to have any fine tuning of the advertising, the public relations, or any other kind of radio or print material done by a group. That group involves the advertising agency, the Director of Sales and Marketing in the United States, the Department of Tourism's representatives and they sit down together and agree. Those objectives are still in place and we expect to follow through with that methodology.

Just recently, we had a discussion with the Director of Sales and Marketing in United States (and this applies to Canada and the UK), and with the Director of Tourism, the Permanent Secretary and I, with a view to ensuring that we have a total understanding about what the objectives say and the direction the ministry wishes all of us to take. If you have professional people, it would be wise to utilise them properly and efficiently for the benefit of the people of the Cayman Islands.

I know that sometimes people focus on the amount of money that tourism has in its budget—$23 million. When you take into account the figures that I have been quoting year by year, I will spend $23 million any day or any year if the country can earn $300 to $500 million. I think as a businessman, as a former Financial Secretary, as somebody who knows something about finance and cost benefit analysis. I believe that is a good investment.

I think when I look at what has actually happened in tourism, I have to say I am proud to have been the Minister of Tourism in this country. I am proud to have worked with people who represent this country around the world—some who have been with us in excess of 20 years. Yes, just like any organisation you are going to have trials, challenges, and opportunities. And you have to address it in that way. I am about building. I am about making money for this country. I am about building this country. I am about building this organisation. I am about helping children who are in need. I am about helping senior citizens who are in need, and I am about fiscal management of the Government.

I want to now try to summarise what I have said so far, Madam Speaker. I have every intention of ensuring to the best of my ability that Caymanians in this country get fair play, be it in the Government or the private sector, we must provide that support. We cannot have young people who make sacrifices, go off the island to some university (normally in the United States, but sometimes elsewhere) and come back with the proper qualifications but do not get an opportunity to rise based on their knowledge, expertise, and their performance. I think its time to stop that wherever it's happening.

I want to give thanks to our forefathers, the churches, the Justices of the Peace, the Vestrymen, the Members of the Legislature, former and serving civil servants, the Veterans and members of the Home Guard, the former Seamen and community leaders for their dedication to building a country that is envied around the world. Not just the fifth largest financial centre in the world, but the quality of life that prevails in the Cayman Islands. I have visited many countries in my lifetime and I could be biased, but I haven't found one place that I love more than I love the Cayman Islands. I haven't found one place that I could evaluate and say it's equal to the Cayman Islands. That is the reason why when people come to the Cayman Islands they don't want to leave—to be honest, they really don't want to leave. You get treated like a person not just some number floating around the road or the street or the hallway of a building.

The Cayman Islands stand for Christian values. It has the formula for love and friendliness. It deserves a leaf in the Holy Word commanding us to love another, that we are our brother's keeper, that we should honour our father and mother and that we should live an honest, moral and God-fearing life if we are to live pleasing to Him. This morning, Madam Speaker, when I was rising from my bed at 5.00 a.m., a word of scripture just came to me, Exodus 20:12, it says, "Honour thy father and thy mother." Now, when you think of the youth of our country—the leaders of tomorrow—I want to know how are we preparing them. It was that thought process that was going through me when I got this scripture, which says, "Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

What a cure it would be if all young people who are misbehaving would listen to the good counsel of their mother and father who love them. And fathers are to heed the words of 1 Timothy 3:4, "He must manage his own family well and see that his children obey him with proper respect." If we had that operating in this country, like we did when we were growing up to that level, not to say it is not happening, we would have a much more peaceful environment today.

I want to remind all in my summary that the social harmony in this country (and some people say, 'well, it's not like it used to be'—that's true) was assisted by that fair and reasonable approach that Caymanians must be assisted to rise in the promotional ranks. We hear sometimes today that that this is not always true in the private sector and it may not even be true in the Government in some places. I think we have to come to grips with it. If they are going to be leaders of tomorrow, we have to expose them to get the experience to lead. And leading means leading by example in my view.

But if you shove them in some corner and don't give them the experience of being in discussions, understanding negotiations, understanding where on the career ladder they are eligible to move, then it is no wonder there are so many complaints.

This country is in good financial shape. The economy is healthy, it is buoyant. The financial resources of this country are in good shape. But there are some serious issues outside this country as well that we need to pay close attention to. Members of this House (and of the public I am sure) have been listening to any information they can get about the OECD and the European Union. Where is that moving? Where are they headed with it? Talks with the United Kingdom and the United States of America are very serious issues that need skill, experience, tolerance and understanding in order to make sure that the Cayman Islands is not only well represented but is foremost in the minds of those who are representing this country. Where will it be in the long-term? Where will the Cayman Islands be in 10 to 15 years' time?

As they say, you have to walk the walk in order to be able to be in that position and talk the talk. Even a child at 3 or 4 years old can give you a lot of advice.

The Ministry was indeed pleased to reach an agreement with Jean Michele Cousteau to be the spokesperson for scuba diving in this country. One only has to be at any promotion of a scuba diving nature, Dive Equipment Marketing Association (DEMA), the largest dive show in the world, to see his influence and how much he is respected to understand the potential of his representing the Cayman Islands and being the proper spokesperson for this country.

I want to underscore the point, Madam Speaker, that the Dalmain Ebanks Civic Centre/Hurricane Shelter will get started this year. Funds are in the budget. The determination is there to get it done. It needs planning approval, of course, and we should be asking for that shortly.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, I have allowed you five minutes over your four hours. I would like if you could conclude your allotted four hours under the Standing Order.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I am pleased with your generosity. I want to just say how thankful I am for the way in which you have tolerated a lot of what I have said; but, most importantly, the way in which you are ensuring that the decorum of this House is maintained at its highest level. I thank you most sincerely.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I ask if anyone would like to speak on the Throne Speech, when we adjourned on Monday, under Standing Order 11(6) the First Elected Member for George Town raised some questions on the Cayman Islands. The Honourable Minister promised to answer those this morning, and he has indicated to me that he is a position to do so now. So, if the House is in agreement I will take the statement from the Honourable Minister at this time and then continue the debate.

I would like to state that at the end of the statement (and I hope the Honourable Minister can agree with me because I feel this matter is of such importance nationally, and I am sure the Honourable Minister does also) I will use the discretion of this Chair to allow a few questions from members.

Is it the wish of the House that we take the statement from the Honourable Minister at this time? Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

RAISING OF MATTERS FOR WHICH GOVERNMENT HAS RESPONSIBILITY

(Standing Order 11(6))

DISRUPTION OF FIGHT SCHEDULE OF CAYMAN AIRWAYS LIMITED

GOVERNMENT'S REPLY THERETO

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is a statement in response to the questions raised by the First Elected Member for George Town at the end of the day on Monday, March 13, 2000.

Safety is Cayman Airways first and most important consideration. There is no doubt that Cayman Airways has experienced significant problems this past weekend and, as a result, has inconvenienced hundreds of people, and for this I apologise.

Unfortunately, the new aircraft purchased by Cayman Airways to improve its schedule, its product delivery and its customer service, has taken longer than anticipated to get into service. At the same time, another one of Cayman Airways' aircraft is currently out for its routine C-check maintenance. All extensions to the C-check have been fully utilised.

In the past, Cayman Airways more often than not has been able to arrange sub-leasing coverage. However, sub-service availability for the last six months has been drying up. The only sub-service available to the airline was First Air out of Canada, who unfortunately was only able to provide one crew with their aircraft. While the First Air option with only one crew provided limited utilisation of the their aircraft, management felt that this was better than nothing.

Cayman Airways continues to hope that First Air will be able to provide an additional crew. Both the new aircraft, VPCYB (that's its registration number) and the airline's first aircraft, VPCAL, are expected to return to service towards the end of the month or at the latest by the first week of April. This past weekend, CKX (that's the second plane that we purchased) experienced a flight control problem and was grounded in Tampa.

The situation was resolved on Monday evening and the aeroplane is now operating. Please note that the mechanical repair was unrelated to the recent C-check that VPCCKX underwent.

During the period that CKX was out of service, Cayman Airways was unable to arrange for any sub-service on Saturday and Sunday, with the exception of one Houston flight Sunday evening, which was operated by Continental Airlines. On Monday evening, the national carrier arranged for Air Jamaica to operate a Kingston/Grand Cayman/Miami/Grand Cayman roundtrip and Miami frequency, as well as a Houston trip for early Tuesday morning. Lore Air[?] was also contracted by Cayman Airways to operate two trips between Tampa and Cayman. CKX operated the Orlando route once it returned to service. As of noon Tuesday, no further passengers were stranded.

With regards to the Member's questions, Cayman Airways response is as follows:

1. Management extended the checks on the jets, VPCAL and VPCCKX and all possible extensions were utilised with the expectation that the new third aircraft would be brought into service in advance of the required checks. Management could not predict the difficulties at Boeing Aircraft Corporation, which delayed the completion and engineering work for the new aircraft, or the truck strike in Florida, which continues to delay the arrival of the new seats.
2. First Air was the only sub-service operator available that could provide weekend coverage. Management felt it was better to have an aircraft with one crew rather than nothing. First Air continues to seek an additional crew for their sub-service operation.
3. The aircraft delays and the cost of sub-service coupled with the impact of the service problems will have a significant impact on the carrier's financial and cash position. Management remains optimistic that with its new schedule incorporating the third aircraft and its passenger and cargo product improvements, the national carrier's financial viability will improve.
4. Some members of the board recently met with approximately 50 employees. Their issues have been brought to the board and the executive management's attention and are currently under review.
5. In terms of Cayman Airways equipment, there is no doubt that new aircraft will potentially improve the carrier's customer service levels but at a cost that neither the airline nor the Cayman Islands can afford. To obtain new aircraft, leasing three new aircraft would add approximately $6 million per annum to the carrier's expense with very little offset to fuel or maintenance cost.

In 1991, CAL sold two 727-200 jets which were being purchased in the one year that Cayman Airways made a US$1 million profit. Today, the cost to purchase one 737-600 is approximately US$40 million compared to US$10 million to purchase a 737-200, similar to what the airline currently operates.

In 1991, CAL had three new Boeings: 737-400, one 737-300 and one 737-200, and had losses of nearly $15 million per annum and contingent liabilities of US dollars $107 million. This nearly bankrupted the Cayman Islands. I will not change the 737-200s, one which is nearly paid for, and the other two which are being purchased.

6. Cayman Airways is very hopeful that with the return of the first aircraft, VPCAL and the third aircraft, VPCYB, will be able to offer improved reliability with the new schedule. With the introduction of business class, improved seat pitch and a regular freight schedule coupled with an increased focus on quality consumer service delivery, the airline can reposition itself as an airline that Caymans can be proud of.

The management of Cayman Airways believes that they are making progress. There is no question that this process involves change, which is creating a level of anxiety and resistance within the company. The Cayman Airways Executive Team is unified in their undertaking to improve the airline's financial viability. They believe that their plan is working and their efforts need to be supported to move the national carrier forward. Change is difficult, uncomfortable but as we will all agree necessary.

In this difficult period, and especially within the next few weeks, the teamwork of Cayman Airways staff, the support of the Members of this Honourable House and the support of the public are all equally necessary to move Cayman Airways, our national carrier forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I wish to ask the Minister what steps have been put in place to limit the damage control to try to regain the confidence of the loyal customers and travelling public who are depending on Cayman Airways to serve their travelling needs?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I would refer the honourable member to paragraph six on page 4, which I think is in reply to a question that is similar to that.

Firstly, Madam Speaker, getting the three aircraft back and operational is important. Once that is done and the new schedule comes into effect, we will have much better times within the new schedule.

The new schedule we hope will come into operation on 1 May and it will add close to 40% [more] flights, many of which are better times. Also, the improvement of the seat pitch, the putting in of the business class seats, which we still don't have the seats because of the truckers strike in Florida, the provision of the regular freighter schedule, but also the capacity of the new aircraft to lift excessive luggage that at times cannot be carried when the plane is full.

We have also focused heavily on customer service. At the end of the day, the airline when it comes to competition it is mainly the service that we give. There has been considerably increased training in this area, in fact, there is nearly continuous training going on. We have hired a Caymanian human resource person who is now dealing with improvements not only to the training of staff but also assisting in ensuring that staff is being placed properly.

Also, these three jets have been through servicing. They will come out looking considerably better and the overall look of the jets, both inside and out, will be improved. We also have a united management team, which for the first time in a long time is pulling together as a team. The teamwork in Cayman Airways is so important because sometimes only one person who either doesn't pull his weight or doesn't perform for whatever reason can break the long chain of service that the airline provides, whether that person is in maintenance, sales, or just checking in people at the airport at times. Each of the many departments of Cayman Airways only functions if others within it function.

This has been what I have found (from an analytical point of view) one of the most difficult things with the airline business. So many specialised people within the chain have to all function together and perform or others cannot perform. I believe that our new human resources person together with the improved communication, which is very important, will develop and move forward Cayman Airways as a team.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, this is my final question. I listened intently yesterday to Talk Today and I noticed the Editorial. From what I have gleaned from patrons who were inconvenienced over the weekend, a grave problem had been the lack—or absence—of any communication on the part of Cayman Airways personnel who should have been in position to apprise the passengers as to what was happening.

Can the Minister say what steps have been put in place to improve the communications so that in the event of future inconveniences, passengers are properly informed as to what they may reasonably be made to expect?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, the Operations General Manager has informed that there is a clear procedure within the manual. I should say, Madam Speaker, obviously in an airline there is a manual on most things. The staff should be informing the passengers on a regular basis with as up-to-date information as they have.

Now, I have also heard what the honourable member said, and I heard that separate as well. We have requested that the weekend—which was probably the worst position at least in the last seven years I have known Cayman Airways to have—that it be analysed and find out where the shortcomings are. We then provide the training or the assistance or whatever is necessary to correct the shortcomings in that and to ensure that customers are kept up-to-date.

Nothing is more annoying than being told something, which afterwards you realise could not have been correct. It's so important to be up-to-date and to be honest with what's said. I take note of that and I will go back and ask . . . or I have already asked, but I will get analysis of it and see exactly what has gone wrong.

Once again, Madam Speaker, I apologise to the public for the inconvenience.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, in the area of the airline's financial position (the questions may be a little bit premature but I think right now they are as important as any other area), I would like to know if there are any recent figures that display what it is costing the airline for sub-service over any specific periods of time. I would like to know, Madam Speaker. It's a series of them, and I am not so sure whether I should off-load all of them or whether I should go one by one, which would the Minister prefer? Do want all of them at one time?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: [Inaudible comment]

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: One at a time? Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, the airline business is complex enough trying to take one problem at a time. I did actually reply in a question that was sent out. I don't have that with me, but I thought I had sent it out. If the honourable member would ask the other question, let's see if I could find . . . I can give the honourable member last year's figures I think.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, there are huge concerns both within the confines of this Legislative Assembly and outside with regard to Cayman Airways being able to survive financially—not just what has happened in the past weekend but perhaps that has raised the concern to a higher level. Would the Minister give us some type of indication with regard to Cayman Airways' cash flow?

I don't need exact figures. I want to find out if the cash flow that Cayman Airways is experiencing with regard to its passengers compared to what its ongoing not only recurrent but incidental expenditures . . . what type of position does it put the airline in now? I am not talking previous and I am not talking projected for future, I am asking where does it stand now? What does it do?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I have the figures to the first question. In 1999, Cayman Airways expenses associated with sub-services were as follows: Passenger $542,000; Cargo $1,182,000; Total $1,674,000 [sic] (US $1,724,000).

The $542,000 of passenger sub-service cost is associated with the regular operations, maintenance out of service as well as the planned out of service time for the hush-kit conversion, which is a one-off expense as the honourable member knows. Passenger sub-service costs vary between $2,800 to $3,200 an hour of the operation plus an out of pocket expense for accommodation and per diem for the cruise to the jet. That amount excludes the cost associated with any additional fuel cost as well as increased landing and navigation fees if we operate larger aircraft, which we occasionally do.

Madam Speaker, on the second question, money is always tight in Cayman Airways. The only reference I will say to the past is that, thank God, in the last seven years we have not had bounced checks. And I have not had to come back to this honourable House yet to ask beyond the $4 million that was a subsidy in 1992 and has continued steady, or the $600,000 to $700,000 as given for the advertising aspect.

However, as a banker, I have asked the accountant to please ensure that we do not wait until we are into a position, which Cayman Airways has seen so many times, where we are really strapped and cash is needed. But, yes, with this sub-service it has put considerable pressure on our cash flow and the checks as well. Maybe I need to just mention this: The cost of what we are doing with the third jet basically covers the major D-check of that jet and basically brings her air-frame, parts engines, ancillary power unit, the whole lot literally back to zero. She comes out basically as new a plane.

The hush-kiting of the jet engines . . . and we have also gone ahead and hush-kitted the spare engine that we have. That, together with the C-checks on these other two jets, has taken obviously quite a bit of cash to do. The accountant, unfortunately, is on vacation and will be back shortly. I may be in a better position at that stage to update the honourable member, which I am happy to do from time to time.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I would strongly encourage the Member to do what he has just said because, needless to say, many of us have great concerns for the airline and its survival not based from a political stance. It is important the minister understands that.

Now, the minister has just said that the accountant is unfortunately on vacation. Perhaps, he is not in a position to give us any figures. But, certainly, regardless of whether the accountant is on vacation or not, the management must have a pretty good indication of what the costs are going to be, the financial position of the airline at present, and whether the airline is in a position to sustain itself given bills that will be coming in. That's what I am trying to determine for the same reasons that the minister just said, rather than wait until the airline is in a position and then you come when there is a war. That's why I am asking the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Madam Speaker, I agree with the statement the honourable member has made and I keep as up-to-date as I can. As the honourable member knows, I try meeting with either the Managing Director and/or members of the management team every week or whenever is necessary. While I guess I should say the concern of cash has always been a major concern to Cayman Airways, the cash flow is seasonal. It can be interrupted with sub-service and payments that are not really expected such as at present.

I guess I should just add one thing, Madam Speaker. While we are spending a lot of money on the jets now, this increases their value. Obviously an engine that has zero hours or an air-frame like on the new jet which can go for probably seven or eight years without another D-check is a lot more valuable than one that may be one or two years away from a D-check.

So, I think there is long-term planning. But as the member knows, long-term planning costs at times in the short run for savings that will be made further down. At least, we are close to seeing the purchase and the paying off of the loan for the first aircraft which should have value (which I know I have laid here before) in the area of US$10,000. So, that is one achievement that we are coming close to paying for the first one.

[Inaudible comment]

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I thought I had. I will just leave it at that.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, perhaps I was not very clear. I was asking the minister, understanding the accountant was away . . . if the minister wants many opportunities to say what he wants to say I don't have any problems with that this morning. No arguments on that. But will he please concentrate on what is being asked?

I have asked him even though he doesn't have exact figures to give some type of indication because management must have an idea of whether the airline is going to be able to deal with the debts that have been incurred considering its present cash flow. That's what I asked.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Madam Speaker, the answer is yes.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I sense, perhaps, while we have not quite completed this exercise that we may wish to take a very short break because some of us need to do a few things.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town, I appreciate your consideration, in using the discretion of this Chair I was going to allow exactly thirty minutes for questions and we have eight minutes left. I would rather conclude this item before we take the morning break.

The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Fine. I want to ask the minister, while in his number 4 answer he has addressed to a degree the issue of staff, he said, "Some members of the Board recently met with approximately 50 employees. Their issues have been brought to the Board and executive management's attention and are currently under review."

Now, I have not had the opportunity to have any lengthy discussions with members of staff in recent times simply because the opportunities have not arisen. But I sense that the situation with staff morale is more wide spread possibly than is being perceived. Not knowing the position of the board, the minister, or the management with these problems, I want to find out if (because perception becomes reality on a lot of occasions and people have things in their minds, which if opportunities are created can be cleared away with the facts rather than to allow rumours to abound and for marl road to feed itself) there are any opportunities being created to allow for open and candid discussions so that everyone knows what the frustrations are and everybody knows on both sides of the coin what management and the employees have to deal with?

You get a lot of factions involved and people take certain positions based on personalities. That in itself can create havoc. What is being done with regard to those areas?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The member is quite right in what he said that there are factions within every organisation and Cayman Airways has because as I mentioned earlier, every link in the chain has to perform. Disruption within just one of whatever numbers of links or departments (one of six or seven) can cause a full airline to suffer. I must say that there is also airline politics involved at times.

Yesterday, I was fortunate that I was able to spend nearly six hours in meetings on Cayman Airways. I say fortunate because normally we have a lot of other meetings scheduled for Tuesdays when we are out the Legislature. This afternoon, the Chairman, the Board of Directors, the Management Team and I will be meeting with all of the staff to hear what they wish to say and to consider those matters they raised.

We realise that there are problems there. Some of the problems are probably simple and can be fixed. Communication is most important to ensure that people have a right to air their views, and also to be able to seek solutions for problems that are there. The one thing my father taught me was to listen to everyone. Many times just hearing what the problems are can go a long way towards a solution because the people with problems know what the solution is and they can pass it on as a matter of weighing that advice. That would be really up to the management and the board to do.

As the member knows, we did have these full meetings in the past. I hope that this will be a constructive one and that it will achieve what he mentioned a bit earlier.

The Deputy Speaker: This will be the last question. The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, perhaps with your indulgence it will be both a question and a comment since it is the last.

In the very last paragraph of the Minister's statement, he said, "In this difficult period and especially within the next few weeks, the teamwork of CAL staff, the support of the members of this honourable House and the support of the public are all equally necessary to move CAL, our national carrier, forward."

I want to say that whether I wear the hat of a Member of this Honourable House or whether I am member of the public (and I consider myself an average individual) it is going to be very important for Cayman Airways to make not just an effort but an incredible effort to ensure that the country knows where it is going. No longer can it be a situation where all you hear are rumours about what is happening with the airline, what is happening with one of the planes, why it is grounded and where it is doing this and that. It is obvious from the type of situation that obtains at present, the airline finds itself on many occasions in untenable circumstances. There has to be a way forward with the airline where everyone knows what is happening.

Everyone will understand when you have unforeseen circumstances that crop up, like what happened in Tampa. It is not a question that people are not able to understand . . . I don't want to rehash things again, but using that as an example, if people understand exactly what the airline is going through they are more apt to be willing to support the airline.

All I am saying is that the net result with me being there to know what has transpired and the reasoning behind certain things happening . . . it hasn't appeared. It hasn't come across to the public in that fashion. The public has a feeling that people try to hide things. I am not suggesting (because I don't know if that is true or not) that, but I am saying that is the impression the public gets. And the moment anyone, whether it is an individual or a group of people, becomes suspicious it calls for bad end results no matter what it is. I speak from experience when I say that.

I don't suggest to be a philosopher or anything like that, but I am certain there is relevance to the point I have just made.

The reason why I asked the question about the financial position of the airline again, is to make sure that we avoid a political confrontation in that area because that is where it will happen more likely than anywhere else.

The other thing I would like to say before I finish is I believe that regardless of what has happened in the past it is worthy for management through the minister or my whatever method to be willing to periodically update this legislature on Cayman Airways on the progress and/or the position of Cayman Airways. I don't want us to argue about what happened in the past and what meetings didn't occur that were supposed to occur. I am saying that if this is done on a regular basis, quarterly or however, where we can ask our questions, we can be clear with the facts that when people on the road ask us questions we don't become part and parcel of the problem. And that is what has been happening. We seek solutions, we seek answers, we are not trying to be management and we are not trying to be the board, but we too have a responsibility. So, I just would like for that to be borne in mind from here on in whenever we are dealing with any issues with Cayman Airways. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Aviation.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The member is quite right. Communication with the public, with staff, with everyone and members of this House is most important. I fully accept that.

Within the last few days we have been putting out on the average two press releases a day. I think today there should have come out an advertisement trying to explain this. I believe that you cannot repeat too much the facts of situations like this.

The second point is that, yes, I am happy to have meetings on Cayman Airways, bring the relevant members down . . . I am not going to go into past either because I don't think that's relevant. We have to try to look forward and I will try to do that again in the near future. I also have the audited accounts of the year before that I will be able to lay on the Table of this Honourable House and to let members have that.

I also have the major accomplishments for 1998 and 1999. I could just briefly give the public that—

[Inaudible comment]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: This is in a very brief form, Madam Speaker.

We assessed Cayman Airways, established turn-around (of the jet, that is), strategies and priorities.

- ◆ We improved the 1998 financial results.
- ◆ Acquired the third aircraft, which is a freight and passenger.
- ◆ Introduction and development of an executive management team.
- ◆ Developing a strong organisation based on teamwork and accountability.
- ◆ Established corporate values and beliefs.
- ◆ The improvements, financial and commercial management information.
- ◆ Scheduled development process.
- ◆ Communication, both internal and external.
- ◆ Financial return from ground handling services has been increased.
- ◆ Increased and improved the 1999 market share.
- ◆ Improved local travel agents in consumer support.

This is very important to CAL. We have to not just have the public but the local travel agency support with us.

- ◆ Implemented a pre-Christmas scheduled cargo service and preliminary framework for an enhanced product.
- ◆ Introduced United Airlines Frequent Flyer Programme, which added another 16,000 visitors made to December 1999. A lot of people like the Caribbean, they will use their travel to come here.
- ◆ Planned year 2000 product improvements, which was launched in May.
- ◆ Re-evaluated our company's positions and introduced new annual compensation programmes.

(I just have about one-third left, Madam Speaker.)

- ◆ Introduced an employee bonus incentive programme. Compensation based on corporate results.
- ◆ Conducted performance evaluations for the majority of employees.
- ◆ We visited employee and customer polices and procedures with a view to ensuring equity, fairness and rewarding desired behaviours.
- ◆ Reviewed organisation structures throughout most of the company and this is still ongoing. To date we have streamlined the Miami reservations, Cayman Airways holiday organisations. Currently in the processing of restructuring the ATO and Maintenance Departments which are the two largest employee areas.
- ◆ Improved recruitment and work permit functions moved in-house.
- ◆ Supported Cayman Islands Tourism Department including Sister Islands Tourism Association (SITA).

- ◆ In the process of reviewing maintenance compensation issues with respect to local market price and industry standards.
- ◆ Today, as a company, Cayman Airways is building on business planning process, instilling management accountability, understanding customer expectation, delivering improvement customer service, market planning and product development with an aim to delivering better financial results.

There is a lot happening there but the airline business is one of the most difficult businesses in the world that I know about. I would say I get more problems out of that one business than I do throughout the rest of every business I am associated with in my life generally. However, I will dedicate as much time as I did, for example, yesterday nearly six hours solid sitting dealing with problems in an effort to do everything I can to try to take the airline forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.49 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.10 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS, ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: I now rise to give my contribution to His Excellency the Governor's Throne Speech. I would like to start off with the responsibility given to me for District Administration, in particular Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Madam Speaker, as I have said on many other occasions, it has been my distinct pleasure and indeed my honour to have been given the opportunity to represent the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and in particular at the higher level of Executive Council. I have sought to do so with as much dignity, loyalty, and commitment as God has afforded me to do so.

Being responsible for District Administration, I have endeavoured to the best of my ability to focus on improving mainly the wellbeing of the people within those two islands. In so doing, Madam Speaker, we have continuously striven to sustain tourism in particular on these two islands. We realise that we don't have many of the normal resources that other small islands may have. We have not sought to re-invent the wheel, but have looked at Grand Cayman, in particular the Turks and Caicos, and the British Virgin Islands to name a few who have been quite successful with tourism. We feel that this is one area that we can excel in.

Madam Speaker, just a few short weeks ago, we had the privilege of opening several of our nature or eco-tourism projects on Cayman Brac. We feel that although this is but a small step, it is none the less a most significant step in the development of the eco- or nature tourism on the Brac. We were especially delighted that His Excellency the Governor, Mr. Peter Smith, and his lovely wife Mrs. Smith, together with the Minister of Tourism and other dignitaries, take the time to come across assisting us with this landmark opening throughout the entire island of Cayman Brac of these projects.

Basically, Madam Speaker, these projects consist of the re-aligning, and in some cases the establishment, of various nature trails throughout Cayman Brac and in particular on the Bluff where our forefathers used to walk many years ago when agriculture was of a greater significance in Cayman Brac. We found that many of the tourists who come (although they will turn to diving) also look for other alternatives and the Bluff being as majestic as it is, standing some 140 feet at its highest end in Spot Bay there is much attraction there—be it the wild life, the birds, or the unique type of vegetation, the caves and all of stores that may be ancillary thereto. So, we took the decision that we needed to make these eco-tourism sites more accessible and also they needed to be properly advertised and indeed promoted.

We have now established about four or five of these sites, and although there is much more to be done, we are delighted that we had the kind assistance of Mrs. Patricia Bradley. We made every use of her expertise. She has worked many long and arduous hours in putting this project together. I was especially pleased that although she was the main consultant, she took the liberty to involve local artists, speaking to the locals on Cayman Brac who had full knowledge of these trails in order to ensure that they were not just new trails but indeed the traditional trails being preserved.

I would also like to give particular thanks to the staff at District Administration and the Public Works staff and also to Government on a whole for seeing fit to fund these projects on the Brac, realising that we rely quite heavily on economic subsistence from the Cayman Islands Government and, in particular, the revenue that is made here in the island of Grand Cayman. We always strive to look for new avenues for diversification within the tourism market and other markets within the whole social stratification that we have to see where we can, if at all possible, enhance our economic potential on the Brac. I believe that year after year we are making strides in this regard.

Madam Speaker, I am also grateful for the generosity of the Minister of Tourism and indeed his entire Tourism Department. Especially in the past several years, we have had to approach them repeatedly for advertising funds and they have been most co-operative. As members will probably know, they have given great assistance to the Sister Islands Tourism Association (SITA) and they have also done some very pointed advertisement for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman in very widely read booklets around the world.

Those of us who have had the opportunity to go to New York can vividly remember the very friendly smile of Miss Lily that's placed there within the conference room. It is just one example of the kind of money that has been put into advertising, not only our physical attraction on the Brac but what I consider a most valuable attraction, that is, the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

For tourism to survive on the Brac and Little Cayman, this type of commitment and partnership has to continue regardless of whatever government may be in place. We do not have the economic resources to do so, and I am grateful for the support. I feel confident that all members within these honourable Chambers (and if it's the will of the good Lord for any new members to come on board in September) will see the necessity and the good common sense in making such an investment and that trend will continue for years to come.

Madam Speaker, we are fortunate on the Brac in that we still have little or no crime. Luckily, we have had very few if any serious crimes on Cayman Brac. We are also fortunate that it is still fairly peaceful and tranquil. The waters and the land indeed are still pristine. We believe that although we have been referred to as the islands that time forgot, perhaps one of the best kept secrets in the Caribbean is that the Minister responsible for Tourism, the Government, and indeed all honourable members are fully cognisant that this secret must be told to the rest of world—especially now that we have entered into the technological age. It makes it even that much easier with the introduction of our own website here in the Cayman Islands. I believe that there is much potential and we look forward to greater things to come with eager anticipation.

Madam Speaker, we have further sought to diversify the tourism product on Cayman Brac by the introduction of the concept of sports tourism. We know that this is an ever increasing area not only in mainland United States but the entire world. We have also seen that even here in Grand Cayman, many of our visitors are [here] now as a result of the emphasis that has been placed on the area of sports and what it can do to increase the numbers as it relates to tourism. In this regard, we have seen many teams from Grand Cayman in particular, come across to the Brac in recent times to engage in competitive sports, be it formally or informally, and this has been of tremendous economic assistance to us in the Brac.

Madam Speaker, I believe earlier I said new members coming on board in September was supposed to be November. Perhaps I can accredit that to the quickness of the time that is now elapsing in the anticipation to get on to new better and exiting times. But I thank you for drawing it to my attention and perhaps if the good Lord shines on us then there won't be any cause to talk about new, but I will still be seeing the same faces whether from this side of the floor or the other side. I thank you.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, we have tried to go into the new area of sports tourism. In doing so, we have encouraged teams from Grand Cayman to come over and visit the sister islands, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Believe it or not, this has a tremendous effect on the local Brac economy. I know the Police have been quite faithful in bringing across their dart and domino teams and normally when this happens, Cayman Airways has a full flight, sometimes more than one flight across to the Brac. They rent the cars, they stay in the hotels, they very generously support the local establishments be it the pubs or the restaurants. More importantly, it gives us a time where there can be more specific cultural exchange because when I first came across to Grand Cayman I was somewhat amazed that there were so many people living here who had not even been across to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

If I could get a free promotional advertisement at this time, I would like to give an invitation to all to come across. I am sure you too can attest that they are as beautiful as the outer districts, which sometimes don't seem to get the full appreciation for all of the natural resources that they can offer when one takes the time to indulge somewhat in the outer districts as well as the outer islands.

We can still boast that we are able to leave our doors open during the night time. And the neighbourly principle which the Good Book tells us to live by is still in full force on the Brac. Many times when I am across on the weekend, I almost have to learn to say no because everyone still offers me either a heavy cake or a drink, just to sit down and chat. I believe that we are losing that on Grand Cayman, not by intent per se, but because we are apparently caught up in the whole economic and commercial mechanism that takes a lot of our time and there is hardly any time for leisure. So, if you find that you need a stress free weekend, we will invite you to the Brac and I can guarantee that the Brackers and Little Caymanians will take extra good care of all and sundry.

Madam Speaker, I know in recent times much has been said about Cayman Airways not just in this Honourable House but in private. Being from the Brac, I think I probably hear it more than any other member. Without Cayman Airways, we have no airline contact with Grand Cayman or indeed the outside world. But I would like to say, in all fairness, that Cayman Airways has assisted tremendously with the Brac and, in particular, when we have to ask for charters, be it for funerals or special community events. Not only has this assistance been in the form of an economic nature, where they offer group fares, but they have also even on weekends such as Easter and Christmas when I am sure there could have been other lucrative markets, fully realised their responsibility to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, and offered us some very reasonable charters which we are always appreciative of.

I can also say, Madam Speaker, that when we send out the call to various churches and sporting organisations in Grand Cayman to become involved in a part of the domestic tourism product that they have positively responded thereto. We now have several times a year, various churches from different denominations on Grand Cayman going across to the Brac to hold conventions, retreats or revivals. Again, this serves a similar function as that I earlier referred to with the Police, whereby our numbers are increased. When one has about 1,200 living on the island and in Little Cayman about 250 to 300 people, an extra 100 to 200 on any given day is a substantial increase and it can make a very positive domino effect on our economy. We wish for this trend to continue because it has proven a success already.

I would particularly like to give praise and thanks to the Red Bay Gospel Band and the Voices of Praise whom I had the privilege to call upon many different times. Not only have they willingly gone across to the Brac to give an extra boost to the economy when the need was realised, but they have done so many times paying for the expenses out of their own pockets. Having realised that they are perhaps one of the most popular groups on the Brac, we continue to try to work with them. I believe that the church being a very long and established organisation within our community has many positive benefits to offer, as I am sure all honourable members fully realise. I believe that as we embark upon this new millennium that we should strive to create an even greater partnership with the churches.

Madam Speaker, less anyone perceives this as a move for government to interfere with the churches, it is far from that. It is merely pure recognition that the churches serve a very valuable important role and function within our society. I believe that rather than trying to reinvent new policies or new social concepts that we can use an organisation (if I can so term it) which has proved itself over many decades and generations, and I believe will be in existence even when we have passed on and will be remembered for making positive in-roads into the lives and the whole psychological wellbeing of the human person.

Madam Speaker, I have taken quite a bit of time to relate the impact that these small groups can make to the diversification of tourism on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman mainly because I felt it was important. Also, from Cayman Airways' perspective, we spend quite a bit of money in advertising and we have very loyal Caymanians who support the national airline. I believe we fully realise that Cayman Airways has a most important function serving as insurance as far as it relates to having access to the international world especially in times of national emergencies when other foreign carriers perhaps will pull the airlines from the Caribbean as was seen with American Airlines when we had hurricanes in the eastern Caribbean towards the latter part of last year. I believe that being a tourism destination it is in our interest to continue to support Cayman Airways in that if we are going to attract persons from around the world to Cayman, we must also ensure that not only will they have a safe and enjoyable vacation but if and when the need arises that we can guarantee them safe flight from the Cayman Islands, if that is in fact their desire.

Madam Speaker, we also intend this year to complete the Heritage Park in Northeast Bay on Cayman Brac, which is another step toward improving our tourism product as it relates to eco- and nature tourism on that island. To say a bit more about the Heritage House, basically government purchased this property (as members would know) sometime in last year or perhaps the year before. It is a very historic property leading from the road site to the base of the bluff. Surprising enough, Madam Speaker, it's the only property on the Brac where the Courts deemed that the owner owned 30 feet up on the edge of the Bluff. All of my life I have known it to be a fact that all of the vertical side of the Bluff was Crown property, save for this one piece where a ruling was done several years ago and its now completed. So it's not a matter of sub judice.

When government purchased the property, I believe we made two positive strides: we returned to the status quo whereby all the face of the Bluff on Cayman Brac is back into the hands of the Crown, and I believe that is where it should stay. I realise we have a National Trust and I have lots of good things to say about them, but because of the way in which the law is written, my personal belief is that it is much more secure in the hands of the government (the face of the Bluff) than in the National Trust at this particular time. I have no apologies for that particular statement.

Madam Speaker, the Heritage House in years gone by, the Lazzari family, as I understand it, used it for tanning and for the processing of leather and cowhides on the Brac. Interestingly enough, the tanning wells remain in fairly good condition on this property together with lovely caves on the side Bluff, huge boulders, which we hope to develop into an attraction area as funds become available.

More interestingly, there are tons and tons of old Caymanian traditional fruit trees as well as other Caymanian trees. When one sees the size of the trunks of some of the birch trees for example, one can only say that they must have been there for generations. In the development that we have done so far every effort has been made to preserve these trees and to leave this property in as natural a state as possible.

Within another two weeks or so we should be completing the Heritage House and we look forward to members of this Honourable Parliament coming across and celebrating with us the preservation of another thing that we can refer to as "Things Caymanian."

Madam Speaker, before I move off this area, I would especially like to thank Mr. Roy Tibbetts, Sr., who was the contractor for this particular project. I have particularly singled him out because this project was perhaps the only project that I have seen that came in so far below what was expected, some $30,000 to $40,000 below the next highest bid. He has done an excellent job in the construction of the building. He has kept within the timeframes and shown that Caymanians are still capable of building strong, safe and structural buildings at an economic and in an efficient way. We can still use those as examples when we hear that Caymanians are lazy, not efficient and not effective. I am not saying that is a statement we hear all the time, but having been in the private sector myself, I have heard it from both Caymanians and expatriates, not to mention the public sector. It's not a statement that is uncommon, it is still heard.

I believe, Madam Speaker, all and sundry know that I am not a person who seeks to divide, be it through gender, nationality, race or what have you. But I believe the saying "When in Rome, do as the Romanians" must also apply to Cayman. If we are indeed to preserve our culture, steps must be taken, if they have not already been taken, to preserve the Caymanian culture and that there must be utmost respect for things Caymanian and in the beliefs of our Caymanian people. We must continue our long tradition of working together and being known as one of the friendliest people in the world having a full respect for the contribution that expatriates have paid to our community, but not a cognisance that that should equate to slavery.

Madam Speaker, the property that I was just referring to . . . I should have mentioned but it escaped me at the time that we were also fortunate in acquiring pedestrian access to the beach. I mention that purely in contrast to situations that I have seen arise here in Grand Cayman, in particular on the Seven Mile Beach where for whatever reason we have allowed our properties to be sold off to a number of persons.

Having been on the Planning Board for a number of years, it is not uncommon that as a property is purchased, "No Trespassing" signs are put up and many of our people no longer have the privilege of going and enjoying the beach without interference and many a conflict has arisen. So, we were extremely pleased that we were able to negotiate and indeed purchase a 12-foot pedestrian crossing to the beach, which is perhaps the only remaining beach in that area. It is going to be held because it is in the Crown for the benefit and the interest for all of the people of the Cayman Islands.

I believe that this trend should be carried out in all districts because I am sure development has come into your district and unless we really take a strong stance, we will not have preserved. I know from personal experience that you, Madam Speaker, have stood very strong on those positions in preserving things within your district for your local residents while still appreciating the need for the investors to come and invest to contribute to the wellbeing of the people there.

Also on the Brac, we have moved forward with the development of our road programme. Although there is no formal road plan, as such, we have worked very closely with the professionals here at the Public Works Department and on the Brac, as well as District Administration. They have been of tremendous help in the development of the road structure on the Brac.

I won't at this time go into the details why I believe that is important because I believe members have heard me say so many different times here in this forum why I believe we must embark on such a programme. This policy has proven very beneficial. We have been able to complete the main arterial road going to the end of the island where the new Lighthouse is proposed. Again, this is working in harmony with our commitment to enhance the eco- and nature tourism product.

Previously there was about a 12 to 15 foot road, which I believe was mainly because of the contribution of Captain Charles and the efforts of the Third Elected Member from George Town during their time within the responsible ministry. But we felt that the time had come to extend these roads for safety reasons and other reasons to the normal Public Work's standard and requirement of 30 feet.

We have not embarked on an asphalt programme for a number of reasons. Firstly, we could not afford it, as is known by all honourable members. Also, because we do not presently have an asphalt plant on the Brac we felt that it was important for the roads and certain areas to retain that natural character if we were going to be serious about attracting persons from the ecotourism market. From a more engineering standpoint, we have learned from previous experience that the longer the base is left to remain there, the more time there is for settling and the less maintenance we will have to endure in years to come.

Also, this year we have embarked on the continuation of the road policy by commencing the Major Donald West, which is the other main arterial road going to the western end of the district. Madam Speaker, we saw, last year in particular (I believe it was in the month of November) when we experienced the serious floods on the Brac, the importance of having these extra roads because Cayman Brac being low as is the case of Grand Cayman and Little Cayman, there is very little alternative roads once flooding occurs on the coastal plains. We felt that if there were sufficient access roads put on the Bluff that our people will have the safety and the elevation of the Bluff and can have a better and more improved accessibility to the Bluff in these cases.

I had the opportunity to be on the Brac during that time as there were other family matters occurring at the same time that deemed my attendance there. Madam Speaker, in all of my life I have not seen any flooding situations on the Brac as during those four or five days. One would almost have had to be there to really realise the impact. Many of the houses of the residents there received serious damage and we were in a serious situation where most of the water . . . because the people still use well water (we do not yet have piped water, which I will come on to a bit later) we had to act quite swiftly. I would like to use this forum to thank members of the government as well as the backbench in Finance Committee for the quick and most expeditious fashion that they acted in giving the emergency funds for the floods. Although it was towards the end of the year, we did not have an opportunity to utilise the full $100,000, we did as much as we possibly could. I am sure once I receive the report from the staff at District Administration with the full assessment, we will no doubt have to come back for a revote of the $35,000, which I understand we did not have time to use but the needs are still outstanding. We are getting repeated requests from persons who I believe have been most patient in this regard.

In the past few years we also embarked on a programme of minor road development because, like other members, I found a situation where there were many minor roads where children and the elderly and in some cases the handicapped or the less fortunate were residing. Not only in times of rain but under normal conditions, access to and from their houses was quite difficult. Now that we have the ambulance and the fire truck, there were some roads they could not get into. And we thought that it was in the best interest of the people in moving along with the policy of improving the wellbeing of our people to embark and complete, as funds became available with this road programme. I am happy to say that we have perhaps completed about four-fifths of this programme. The people are extremely grateful, and I would like to convey to all honourable members their appreciation at this time for that particular project.

Madam Speaker, I am also grateful for the assistance that was given to us by the Social Services Department during the floods and, in particular, the Community Development Worker, Miss Anna Rose Scott, who was although not new to Social Services new to the particular job. The remaining of the Social Services Department who together with the District Commissioner and I worked through several nights to ensure that persons were taken to alternative accommodations and were given the necessary food and water, et cetera.

I believe that it is encouraging when we see the Caymanian community coming together at a time like this because it reminds us that all is not lost regardless of the many comments that may be made about the negativism within our social strata. I believe that I can speak for most Caymanians, if not all, that we are still a very generous people. Not only can we rally together to help our own but indeed we have done so for the Caribbean and the world on a whole, where and when the need was identified and we were in a position to so do.

Madam Speaker, as members would also know, we in the Government believe that the policy of establishing adequate and appropriate hurricane shelters throughout all six electoral districts is a policy that is prudent. It is a sensible policy and one that needs to be adequately funded. Several districts already have facilities in place. I am sure that all districts still have requirements as districts continue to grow and therefore the need continues to grow. I believe several years ago the need was identified in this honourable House for a National Disaster Fund. I believe that need is as important today as it ever was.

We see as we move into the end times that there are more disasters occurring. It's just a matter of time . . . even though I would not like to see it in my lifetime for sure, before something hits our shores on Grand Cayman. I would like to see the Cayman Islands be in a position where we are prepared not only for the immediate remedies but for the long term, because if there is a time that you are normally going to see a fleet of human resources that are non-Caymanian, it will be in time of these national emergencies as was the case in Montserrat.

I believe it would be incumbent on any government to make ample provision for disasters. I believe that one of the best ways is by creating a segregated portfolio and establishing such a fund so that we can be well on our way for preparedness, if and when that need arise.

Madam Speaker, although much has been said about the shelter on the Brac, I am still fully persuaded that it is very necessary. If I were not, I certainly was last week when I took the opportunity to visit one our veteran seamen known to us as Mr. Glenn, who as we all know suffered a stroke whilst working for us at Public Works some years ago. He is now at home because of that condition. But his mind is still very much at Public Works and he always takes every opportunity to tell us how the buildings should be built or the seawalls or the ramps. And his very first question was, will we be getting a hurricane shelter this year. The sheer delight on his face, Madam Speaker, when I was in a fortunate position of responding that, yes, Government has allocated some (not all) of the money. It's almost indescribable, the sheer delight and exuberance that came on his face.

And, of course, he proceeded to tell me how it should be built and the reason why it should be built that way, and, as usual, we are grateful for his contribution.

Madam Speaker, for a long time as well, several districts—Savannah, East End, North Side and my district, have seen the need and have made many pleas and requests for adequate postal facilities within the districts. Government has endeavoured to make budgetary provisions on an incremental development basis for these districts. I am hopeful, as I am sure you are, that before too long we will see proper, adequate postal facilities within the various parts of our constituencies.

Although we have heavily depended on the generosity of the Postmistress, and in particular I think of Old Man Bay, West End and Savannah, because they have had to operate in some fairly dire circumstances, I believe that we must really turn our attention to ensuring that these facilities are put in place. The Cayman Islands is no longer the place where it is acceptable for mail to be distributed from one's home or from a small square box. We are becoming very advanced, and happily so, but I believe that we must continue to advance our postal infrastructural development.

I look forward to the commencement this year of the West End Post Office, which we will hope not to just be a sub-post office but indeed will serve the dual function of serving the community yes, and also as a distribution centre similar to (but on a smaller scale) the airport postal facility, being that it offers close proximity to the airport because we have outgrown the space at our little town in Stake Bay.

Madam Speaker, government's economic incentives that were put in place some three years ago are continuing. I am happy to say they are working. The real estate and the construction industry in particular, have received a tremendous boost in this regard, and for the first time in a very long time we have the majority (if not all) of our men and in some cases have had to ask for some outside expertise to be able to complete the demand in our construction. We have not yet succeeded in stimulating in a positive way the more white-collar type of jobs to attract our skilled Cayman Brackers and persons from Little Cayman.

But all is not lost because I am made to understand that His Excellency the Governor and his senior staff are once again looking at the possibility for a back office. I am told that there is a very distinct possibility that some 15 to 25 jobs will be created in the near future by the government. I believe, rightly so, that we as a government must take the lead in various aspects of our development and, in particular, where it relates to the employment and the equity and parity of our Caymanians. If not, then it is going to put us in a difficult position to preach to the private sector that they must so do when we ourselves, speaking in a general sense, may at times find ourselves short.

So, I am grateful for this endeavour and this initiative and I look forward to this successful implementation of these initiatives. I would also ask that if there are any other areas be it on the sister islands—Cayman Brac or Little Cayman, or the other districts where Government can be decentralised, that serious efforts should be made for a number of reasons (traffic just being one of them) for this to come about. When one flies over the island of Grand Cayman we see that there is still a tremendous amount of undeveloped land and there is a greater concentration of business in George Town because that's how we have evolved. Nonetheless, Madam Speaker, I see absolutely no reason for that trend to continue and I believe that if it is to change, then affirmative action must be taken to ensure that other departments of government should be filtered out into the outer districts.

I know the Minister of Tourism tried to do this, for example, with the Licensing Department. I believe that there is still much room for all us in government to really sit down, be it the elected branch or the administrative branch, to see where if at all possible we can assist the areas within the Cayman Islands, which need assistance by decentralisation or other incentives that perhaps I have not been privy to or even cognisant of.

Madam Speaker, I believe that now the possibility of the introduction and the sustainability of white-collar jobs on Cayman Brac is perhaps at its best, in that, with the advent of the computer and the information technological world, it does not necessarily require a large amount of manpower but more brainpower. This is an area where we have many of our Brackers and residents from the outer districts trained in. And because of the speed of the computer and the efficiently one does not necessarily have to be in central George Town to conduct or carry on business today. So, perhaps this is the best time if we are to become serious of extending to so do.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister would this be a convenient time to take the luncheon break?

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.51 PM*PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.23 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, continuing her debate. Honourable Minister.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just before we took the break I was making specific reference to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the constituency to which I have responsibility. I had just reached the point where I was about to make the comment that I was pleased to see the performance of the Customs Department on Cayman Brac in reference to the Governor's Throne Speech where for the first time they had earned in excess of $2 million plus.

I think this is particularly commendable bearing in mind that we still have in effect the various provisions for the waiver of customs duty on building supplies. This has served to stimulate the construction industry and there has been significant increase in the construction of dwellings and commercial as well as educational structures, which have also unilaterally increased the need for more items to be imported. It goes to show that more revenue is not received just by the fact that there is duty attached, but when incentives are creative as the ones that the Honourable Financial Secretary and his team and the government as a whole have put in place, we can still achieve a high level of revenue while at the same time assisting the environment.

Madam Speaker, the government also made a policy decision to air-condition all of the primary schools, that is, government primary schools within the Cayman Islands, and the Brac was no exception. Except for the new primary school in Little Cayman, all primary schools have now been air-conditioned and the minister has given the undertaking that the high school will, in continuance with the policy, be air-conditioned this year. Not only are the students grateful, but indeed the parents and teachers are very grateful for this gesture on government's behalf (government, speaking generally).

We all went through the school system here, at least the primary system for most of us realise on those hot summer days it is very difficult for the smaller children in particular to concentrate in the small classroom. They are sometimes quite packed. Anything we can do to enhance the learning environment for our children, I believe is good investment because our youth is one of the best investments that we can make into the future.

We as a government have a statutory obligation to educate all of our students. And any support we can give them and the teachers, I know will be fully appreciated. Having been a former teacher myself, I know at times once can easily become frustrated within the system and sometimes the bureaucracy that one may come upon. But it was always good to know that there was someone or a government who was prepared to listen, take constructive criticism, and was prepared to take affirmative proactive action to solve the solutions as much as was practical or possible giving the various circumstances.

With that in mind, I believe that the salary review committee that was put in place should on a fairly frequent basis look at the teachers as well as other service providers to ensure that the salary and the benefits which they receive is relative to the viable contribution that they make to our children and in wider perspective to our society. It is not an easy job, Madam Speaker, as I am sure you will appreciate. Being an educator it takes a lot of time and the job does not necessarily end at 3.00 p.m. but there is much preparation of timetables and research that has to go in for the next day's lesson.

Judging on the calibre of student that the schools here in the Cayman Islands have produced, I can safely say that our teachers and the education system is working quite well. That is not to say that there is never room for improvement. Of course, being a spiritual person, I for one would like to see much more emphasis put on the area of religion.

Having come through the system myself, I can vividly remember in the morning having devotions, having to memorise scripture verses and even things that may seem a bit tedious, as having your nails, hair and uniform inspected. Madam Speaker, I believe that things like these serve to instil discipline and respect in our students which is needed quite a bit as they move on into the world of work. I believe that this is where we have started to see some of the social breakdown in our community and whatever we can do to alleviate or to stay this problem, I am sure that we would all appreciate it.

I know that there are many schools that are now teaching Bible versus, especially the private schools and I know that there is a daily tutorial. But I am also aware that religion is taught mostly as world religion and they are given a taste of all of the other types of religions. On the face of it, Madam Speaker, there is nothing wrong with that, provided we teach our Caymanian children or resident children that this is a Christian nation and those values are instilled. Whether we are sociologists, psychologists, or any within those sciences, many of those concepts have emanated from the scriptural basis and have been proven to be successful in many civilisation.

Madam Speaker, if I may now turn briefly to deal with the matter of the Police. I am happy to say that policing will be enhanced in the island of Little Cayman and there is now established Phase 1 of the Police Station. Just a few days ago, we were given the assurance of the Police Commissioner that at least one policeman would be employed in the near future in Little Cayman. Of course, everyone knows that I am of the view that there needs to be a minimum of perhaps four policemen to properly man a 24-hour shift.

One may say that Little Cayman merely has about 300 persons but I believe to analyse the situation purely from the demographics of the population would be somewhat shortsighted. We all have known for a very long time that a vast majority of the drugs are entering either through Little Cayman or Cayman Brac.

The goodly Commissioner has given his undertaking, which I know is supported by the Chief Secretary as well, that they would do what is possible to enhance the complement of the Police for the station in Little Cayman. In that regard also, I believe that efforts must be enhanced as it relates to checking between the three islands. I travel on a weekly basis and sometimes more than once a week between the three islands. I have had many opportunities to see that, in particular as it relates to Island Air, most times if not all times no checks are done when that aircraft comes in from Little Cayman and Cayman Brac. Having also been in the court circuit it does not take long for one to recognise some of the drug traffickers that are moving back and forth. Whereas when the travel is done with Cayman Airways, there are normally Custom Officers available and at times Policemen to check and to carry out due diligence.

So, this is one area that I would like to see enhanced—Custom Officers and where necessary Police Officers at the airport to check when Island Air or other private planes go to and fro within the three islands. Although I am sure this is not the only mode of transportation, I can say without a doubt that it is one of the modes of transportation. We have had occasions where persons will come across late at night on Cayman Airways, do whatever they have to do and go off in the small aircraft in the morning or by boat with the drugs or after having sold drugs. The island is small, and I realise that its an area that many people don't like to talk about. But I am persuaded that unless it's talked about, we would never really get a solution to the problem.

I know all honourable members in this House are extremely committed to the policy of zero tolerance to drugs. Areas that we can identify and find solutions, I believe will help us in this war against drugs. It is a war that we are facing in this regard and it has now become a undesirable cancer, as it were, in our society as it continues to destroy not only our young people and even some young children but some of the older persons in our society as well.

Madam Speaker, for the first time in a very long time we now have in place on the Brac, a local Bracker who's an Inspector of Police. I believe I am correct in saying that the Sergeant as well is a local Cayman Bracker. Although I fully concurred with the policy that was in place just recently where there was like a one-year rotation, I am grateful to see that we are back in a position where we have Brackers at the level within the Police Force that we can have almost a full complement with one or two non-Brackers there.

Inspector Scott has introduced a very favourably element of policing in the community in that whilst here the Police Commissioner had exposed him to community policing. I must say that I take my hat off to him in that ever since he has arrived on the Brac, he has made it its duty to go within the various communities and bring policing down on a more domesticated level. He has visited with many of the elderly and its amazing to see what just little visits have done. Before, one would always hear remarks about the Police here, there, and everywhere.

But I took great pleasure in visiting last week and hearing all of the positive comments about the Police on Cayman Brac from the elderly I visited and from some of the boys that hang along the road. They felt that the Police were really taking an interest in them as persons and not just as a mere statistics or as protectors or seekers of crime.

They felt that the Police were seeing policing from a wider perspective and they wanted full involvement from the community. I fully agree with this and commend the officers involved, although it takes a great deal of their time and effort to embark upon such a venture.

Madam Speaker, generally speaking, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman have very little criminal activity. But if we become complacent or in any way take it for granted, this will not remain. We have seen that as development continues more persons will come, more outside influences will come, and inevitably, the culture will be evolving as all of these things work together. We will find that the criminal activity will increase from a statistics standpoint even if the amount of crime per se would not increase. By the mere fact there are more numbers it becomes more evident.

It is a small community and I feel that we can still control and determine what happens on the island. Every effort should be made to ensure that this remains the case on the Brac and Little Cayman. Speaking specifically in relation to Grand Cayman, I am also persuaded that things are not as bad in Grand Cayman as sometimes we hear on the marl road. Yes, we do have problems. I would be very naïve to stand here this afternoon and say that we do not have problems. I believe that all persons with vested interests or all stakeholders are making a conscientious effort to analyse and appreciate the width and depth of the problems to try to come up with practical and feasible solutions to deal with these problems.

I believe that the Royal Cayman Islands Police are coping well, or the best that they can given the circumstances, with dealing with crime. Yes, I do believe that the additional 24 police, it doesn't matter to me if they are coming from the UK or from whatever jurisdiction, will assist in enhancing a better police presence here in central George Town. It is not the entire solution but one must concur that it is part of the solution by having these extra officers. We heard from the Commissioner of Police that he will now enable him to put at least one officer on a 24-hour presence in central George Town.

Madam Speaker, George Town, being the main commercial hub, has a concentration of wealth. And because it is sandwiched between the port as well as the airport, it forms a very attractive jurisdiction for criminal activity, as there is easy access. We have developed in such a way that most of the residential activity has moved on into other districts on Grand Cayman. So, at night, central George Town is left basically unattended except for the security guard here or there. I do believe that the presence of an extra police officer will go a long way, if no more than bringing the consciousness or the awareness that policing is alive and well in George Town and in other districts in Grand Cayman.

Madam Speaker, I would also submit that policing is a matter for the community as a whole. As far as practical, we must make every effort to know who our neighbours are. I realise that as we move on this becomes much more difficult. I know even for myself living in Prospect for some twelve years now, I still don't know who all lives in the neighbourhood. But I don't believe that in itself should prevent us from making an attempt. I can remember in days gone by when everybody knew almost everybody and because of that there was a bit more ownership and responsibility for being our brother's keeper. This is not to enter into gossip, but just to know what is going on. If someone was on vacation then we kind of looked out for each other as households, or children, or what have you. That in itself is not a bad thing.

I know that some of our neighbourhoods within the Cayman Islands have moved towards the neighbourhood watches. From what I understand they are progressing well. I know in Florida, for example, in the little city of Davie where one of my sisters resides, they have a neighbourhood watch in effect and it has worked quite well for the time that I have been there, which has been about ten years or so. Although they are very dense as far as the establishment of homes in that residential area . . . to use an example, whenever she is on vacation, the neighbour will turn on the lights or feed the pets or even go as far as to cut the grass and check the post office box just to give the appearance that someone is still resident in the building. It has helped significantly.

With their policemen, they have been encouraged to spread out within the community as far as residential purposes are concerned. And almost each of the blocks, you will find that there is at least one policeman residing within the district, getting to know the community and carrying out various community services within that particular subdivision. I believe that a similar thing could be done here where we can really get to know what's going on in our communities and become somewhat more responsible with the area of policing if we are to maintain and contain the ugly head of crime that we see arising within our community.

Madam Speaker, I believe in times past that we were much more of a godly nation with many more godly principles being evident in our lives. Although we have reaped quite a high degree of prosperity I do not feel that in itself should be an excuse for us deviating from the godly principles that have brought us where we believe we are today. Every effort should be made by us as parents, as legislators and as general citizens of the Cayman Islands to ensure that the Caymanian heritage is passed on to future generations so that they too can enjoy the prosperity that we are now enjoying. But more importantly they can make all preparation for the place to come, which is our eternal hope.

Madam Speaker, if I could just briefly touch on the element of sentencing within the Cayman Islands. I believe that the sentencing as it stands and many of our areas is presently inadequate. The time has come for us to take a more serious look as it relates to sentencing. This is not only as it relates to women, although I believe that area has been identified from quite a long time and we are still actually awaiting for the final version to be put in force here in the islands for the benefit of the women in the wider community on a whole. If we could take the crime of murder, for example, in the Cayman Islands (as we know) we no longer have the alternative of invoking capital or corporal punishment as was set down by the United Kingdom. If we could just pause to see the effect that this has in my humble opinion, at least.

When one now commits a crime within the Cayman Islands jurisdiction and is found guilty, upon conviction, he or she is sentenced to life imprisonment. Yes, that is a pretty harsh reality, but I believe where it starts to break down is that such a person really has nothing to look forward to. Or there is no deterrent really in that sentencing when that person is prone to escape from prison. There is nothing then left that you can really do with such a person who has committed a murder within the Cayman Islands and escaped and perhaps commits another crime.

We all know that there is only one life and there is only one sentence of life that can be rendered to such a person. I believe that's why we are seeing some of the problems that we are now seeing today when we have some murderers escaping from prison. There is really nothing that the establishment can do to deter such persons from coming out. Yes, I realise it would be good if we lived in a Utopia where no one had to go to prison because we know that blood is thicker than water and no one really likes to see their family or a friend or some neighbour go to prison. When we take a reality check, as long as there is sin in this world, there is going to be a necessity for the prison, it is almost like the poor when the Good Book said that the poor would always be with us. Because of that we have to make provisions to deal with these circumstances we are faced with.

Madam Speaker, I also believe that although we are a dependent of the mother country, the United Kingdom, in my humble opinion there is nothing wrong with us making another attempt to Her Majesty's Government to ask if there could be reconsideration of corporal and capital punishment within the Cayman Islands. The United States, which is one of our great partners, still has this on their books. I believe if one looks at the statistics of the increase in crime, and especially as it relates to serious crimes, we will see that there has been a definite change since we removed capital and corporal punishment from our books. I would really hope that in the near future the government would be so persuaded to make representation to Her Majesty's Government to see if they would consider this.

We have to live here, Madam Speaker. You and I have nowhere that we would want to run. Certainly, there are other alternatives, but when you are a true Caymanian it takes a lot to get you to move from these little rocks. We must take matters into our hands and if that is an alternative then I believe we must pursue it and not just beat around the bush and play with crime because crime is one element of our society that takes no time to play.

Madam Speaker, I believe that acting responsibly is the business of every individual who becomes competent, that is at the criminal age of ten. The society only takes on this societal duty when there is a breakdown. We have seen that in some areas of our society, there is an obvious breakdown within the social stratification and, therefore, we need to address these problems.

In more recent times we have become aware of the advent of groupings and gangs, as we now call them. Each of these members has parents, even if they are not two parents living in the same household. I believe as my Honourable colleague said, the parents must take a degree of responsibility for the actions of their children.

I am often involved in vacation bible school, regular bible school, and/or Sunday school, and I see many of these children that are coming to us, some regular and some are visitors. It would amaze you to see the age of some of the children and their behaviour and mannerism. For the life of me, I cannot really and truly believe that a three or four year old can act so and the parents exclaim to me that they cannot really control their children. It is absolutely amazing, Madam Speaker. I call upon the parents especially the mothers who traditionally have had the role of raising and instilling the good values in their children, and those fathers who are present to also take an active interest in the children.

You may say, 'Well, my children are fine and I don't have to worry.' But it is those children who don't have that leadership and guidance who would become the deviants of our society. Those same children may be the ones who take out one of our children who perhaps may not have fallen through the loophole.

I am not one of those Parliamentarians who wishes to see any generation be forgotten or fall through the gap. I believe that every single Caymanian child deserves a chance of survival and we owe it to them to protect them. Even if we save one life, it would have been time worth investing. I believe that if we are going to be leaders and states persons we have to take the view that it's a survival and safety for all of our generations and not give up on any generation.

I think it was my honourable colleague who during the midday devotion referred to a paragraph about quitting. Quitting in my respectful view has no place when it comes to our children. There is absolutely no room for it. We must persevere until we are successful because many times the influence we have on our children is not known until many years to come. Those of us who have children may sometimes shake our heads in frustration when we are trying to scold or instil discipline, only to be told many years later how happy they were that we had spent quality time with them and had shown them what was right and wrong and to keep them within the parameters of acceptable behaviour in our society.

Madam Speaker, moving on to the area of agriculture as it relates to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Most of us, if not all, would be fully cognisant of the fact that agriculture has always played a very significant role in the lives of the people there. The Bluff has quite a bit of arable land and when things were not as prosperous as they are today, many of our people resorted to farming and to spending much of their working day on the Bluff cultivating for their household use as well as to share with the neighbours and even to export to Grand Cayman and Jamaica. Of course, as time elapsed this fell somewhat by the way. So I was extremely happy to see for this past Agricultural Day that for the first time, the students from the Cayman Brac High School entered the competition. As a matter of fact, they took first place for their products.

Last Saturday, I took the opportunity to visit the high school to see the farm. Quite honestly, I expected to see a vast area of land after having seen the high quality of the produce, in particular the peppers and tomatoes. To my ultimate surprise, it was just a small strip of land perhaps about 8 x 30 feet long. It was truly amazing to see the variety and the quality that the science teacher and the students are producing there.

In speaking to the science teacher, he (being an observant person) became quite aware that not all of our students are academic as one would like them to be and they had other interests. He told me that where some students perhaps could not understand the process of metabolism or photosynthesis. But in teaching them to plant a seed he was able to show them how the seed moves from the germination period up on into maturity and be able to do the experiments of dissecting and bisecting. He said that he was truly amazed to see the interest that these children now have in science as a subject and at the same time in agriculture.

Although they don't have a modern type of watering (they are still watering with little buckets), the children are coming and doing it on their own accord. Again, those of us that have children know that nowadays with the competition we get from the television and the Nintendo, agriculture is not one of their most favourable items. I believe that we are going to see good things come out of this project and where possible, I believe that other schools should also look at it, not just in the science area but anywhere we can find hands-on experience. I think that it will stick with our children much better.

Madam Speaker, the responsibility for women's affairs in the government as a whole is a relatively new area. Nonetheless, I believe, it's a most significant responsibility which encompasses many various aspects that often leads to much uncharted waters. Having said that, I believe that the ministry with the assistance of other honourable members of the House has made great strides in the past years, in that people are now becoming much more aware of the unique needs of a woman.

From the onset (before I get into the thrust of my contribution as it relates to women's affairs) let me hasten to say unequivocally that this ministry under my leadership has no intention whatsoever of becoming a man-bashing ministry. We merely want to work together in partnership with the men so that they can understand that women, too, continue to make a valuable contribution to our Caymanian society.

There are many critical areas, I believe, that relate to women. Although the list is perhaps not all-inclusive I would like at this time, if you would permit me, to share them with the honourable House. I believe that some of the critical areas for women include us taking a very close and analytical look at women in poverty, education and training; violence against women, women and the economy, women and the decision-making process; the institutional mechanism for the advancement of our women and human rights for women; women on the media, women in the environment and the girl.

Those of us to whom this topic is very close to our hearts will readily recognise that these were some of the critical areas that came out of the Beijing Conference that was held some years ago. Women are still attempting to get recognition and awareness throughout the entire world.

Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago when I had the opportunity to be at the women's conference in Tortola, the British Virgin Islands, it was shared with us by the UK Women's Unit that they have adopted under the new Labour Government, the policy of Better for Women, Better for All. I quite like that because we somehow seem to get the false idea that if we make public remarks about women that we become sexist or over-conscious about the needs of women.

But as Fionna Reynolds, the representative from the UK Women's Unit ably put it, if we make policies that are better for women, who most times make up the majority of our populations and who usually live the longest, then there is a higher possibility or the balance of probity. It would be better for all. Never mind the fundamental use of the woman being the child bearer and usually the one who has the most impact and contact with the children who become members of the society at the end of the day. I also believe that women are crucial to the economic development of any country and they are very significant players.

Increasingly, I believe that they are becoming more important especially since the advent of information technology (IT). In years gone, one could have stood or sat back to the justification that it took manpower or it took strength. But now we are moving into a round where it takes brainpower. You don't have to be a big muscular woman (if there is such a thing) to be able to do a job properly; you merely have to be smart. I can see from the smiles that most of the men are agreeing with me on this.

Madam Speaker, in our Caymanian community we still see that most of the caring is done by the women. For example, most of our teachers are women, most of the nurses are women, most of the Sunday school teachers are women, most of the community care workers are women and, yes, most of the domestic helpers are still women—and mothers, of course. Although there is a gay movement in California and elsewhere, thank God, mothers are still women!

Everyone, I believe, will benefit from policies that enable a mother to balance her household duties and her domestic life with that of the workplace. For a long time we have heard that perhaps baby care centres should be put either in or close by the work place and very little really has been done for that. I trust that as we evolve as a society and become more aware of these needs, we can truly see that it is a good investment to care about the needs of the mother. With the traffic being what it is in central George Town, it takes more than your lunchtime normally to go to and fro to pick up your children from school or to see what is happening at the nursery. Whereas if there was a place on-site for your children to be kept in a clean, healthy and safe environment then it would take a matter of minutes to just check to see what was happening with your children.

More importantly, Madam Speaker, it would provide the mother with an opportunity to spend quality time especially in the first formative developmental years of the young child.

I believe also that the women's needs are fulfilled by the government in that when this occurs, it forms the basic of a very necessary and important government investment. The reason I say that is that nowadays, we invest in almost anything—in pension funds, mutual funds and all types of funds. I believe that any prudent government, be it this government or any other government in the future, would be wise to invest in the female. Thus, Madam Speaker, I would go a step further in submitting that this should be a matter of priority.

Again, I would like to stress that this is not a sexist approach or a gender approach but its an earnest plea for the value and the contribution that women make to our society to be fully recognised and rewarded. After all, we make every claim that we are a modern society and if that is going to be upheld then we need to realistically commence the analytical process of funding and finding practical solutions to the many varied and diverse problems that our women face in our society today.

I believe that we must now more than ever before pay very close attention to the issues that are affecting our women and our children. Otherwise, as the Bible says, what we reap we are going to sow. In generations to come we would have wished that we had paid much more time and attention to it because those children would be crying out for additional facilities at Northward and additional funding. I say rather than wait for that to happen, let us step in at this time and make a positive difference in their lives.

Madam Speaker, for this to happen I believe it is going to take the full support of the government, meaning all honourable members in this Chamber, and the full support of the community to be able to see these gender issues fully and properly addressed. Yes, Madam Speaker, it will take courage and commitment but as I have said in previous times, I believe that commitment rises on one's performance. As we go into the Vision 2008 exercise, at that time perhaps it would be appropriate to have a look (as is suggested there with their reviews) to see what is being done with the gender issues within the Cayman Islands.

I wish to say that gender issues are not just merely the responsibility of the Ministry of Women Affairs or indeed the Women's Resource Centre. I believe that gender issues are the responsibility of the entire government. As I said, we must therefore look at all areas where we can improve the policies relating to the various gender issues through the Cayman Islands, in particular as it relates to the public service as I believe we must lead by example.

For example, there is a general perception that there are still certain jobs within the public service that there are for men. I believe that perception sometimes is elevated to actuality if there is no attempt to stop, resolve or to clarify this position. For the purposes of debate, I will assume that it is pure perception. But I would call on all vested stakeholders that as we embark upon this new millennium, let us (as the young people say) take a reality check and ensure that the government when called to answer will not be guilty of having gender issues still outstanding but that they will be resolved forthwith.

The Ministry of Women Affairs, under my leadership, does not at anytime intend to sound like some of the early women liberators who wanted to be better than men. Far be it from that. Those of you who know me, know that I still like when a gentleman opens a door, or is courteous, or plays out his traditional role. I do also believe that the man is the head of the house and I can quickly qualify that in that my Bible tells me that the man must love the woman as himself. When you love somebody as yourself, there is no tendency to be involved in domestic, verbal, psychological, or social abuse but every care and effort is taken.

Men, like women in some respects, are no different when they come to a mirror. They often use it to ensure that every member of the body is in perfect harmony. If that is the time of love, the agape love that one has for the women, then most women in their good minds would have no problem making that love reciprocal and the respect that is demanded in the Good Book for the man. I cannot see any woman in her good sense wanting to take the leading role of the man, that is a man who is a real man because there are certain things that God has created to be in the domain of the man. I believe that this must prevail otherwise we would eroding the basic moral and social structure that has been put in place.

That does not mean that we must be a footstool. When in the creation story, the woman was taken from the side, we often hear the tale not to walk in front or behind but they must walk in step. I can easily concur to that principle.

Madam Speaker, we in the Ministry of Community affairs believe that the process of dialogue with women and men can only lead to a greater understanding. By so doing, we can be in a more informed position to set the standards of treatment for our society on a whole. Today, Madam Speaker, in Cayman's modern society, we believe that our people are continuing to ask for a government who cares and closely caters to the needs of people—and that's all of the people including women—and one who designs policies that are attuned to the needs of the community, that is, the people's needs. I, therefore, believe that as a government we must continue to provide economic, social, psychological or even cultural rights for our people with specific emphasis to our women here in the Cayman Islands.

I believe that as a government it is our obligation and indeed it is our duty to ensure that there are no forms of discrimination against females. I believe that there are several ways that we can do this. Firstly, we can ensure that there is no discrimination by establishing meaningful and understandable legislation. We have made some strides in this regard, but women often have made the complaint that they have difficulty understanding the legal jargon, and because justice often times ends up being quite expensive, they find themselves being barred from the remedies that are available.

At the Women's Resource Centre, we have offered a programme, with the assistance of the Business and Professional Women's Club, known as the Legal Befrienders Programme. I am grateful to the local attorneys who have offered freely of their time to come on a regular consistent basis to offer legal advice to our women, to ensure that, be it immigration rights or maintenance rights or just general legal rights, they can be translated in a more understandable form.

[Secondly], I also believe that we can address this by formulating administrative procedures for women to come out of difficult situations. I also find, and I am sure, Madam Speaker, being an activist for women, many of the women find themselves in financial and economic situations that they are almost bewildered by the circumstances. Perhaps those of the men who have excelled in this area could assist in formulating very concise and precise guidelines for our women to follow in doing simple things like buying the right car or choosing the right piece of property, the right hardware or the right business partner, things in that line. And then we can surely enhance that partnership as it was created to be.

Thirdly, I believe that there should be no discrimination by ensuring that there is no legislation—and let me just repeat that there is no legislation remaining on our books that is discriminatory towards our female.

I believe that the time has come for us to establish a law reform commission. This would serve the main function to ensure that our legislation and our laws are gender friendly and where possible we would seek to consolidate it. I know that as it relates to maintenance and the rights of children and women, we have three or four pieces of legislation that deals with it. Even as a lawyer, it is difficult to up with the various amendments to the different provisions. If we had a law reform commission who could look at this specific area relating to women and gender issues, then we could have one document, at least, for the time being that women could refer to, to find out their rights and indeed move on to enforce them where feasible.

No doubt, Madam Speaker, after this some folks may be thinking why am I making such a fuss about women because it is normally a topic that everybody knows about but very few dare speak about publicly. But I believe we are in a situation where we must talk about parity and equity for women in the Cayman Islands. Generally, it is felt that our women really have nothing to complain about—that we are equal as far as accessibility to education, occupation and other things of that nature and even to health issues. But if I may, Madam Speaker, apply what I would term as the ‘peeling away concept’ then I believe that this could be a useful exercise because I found it quite enlightening as I was making preparation and doing some research for this contribution.

In the interest of the evolution of understanding, with the ‘peeling away concept’ (perhaps it has some other scientific name I am not quite sure) we can easily say without applying that all of the women in the Cayman Islands have equal access to our hospitals and to the health services. But when takes it a further step if you could look at the concept as an orange, once you take off that general skin and you go further into the situation, one will see that as far as I understand from the women who spoke to me, that if a woman wishes to deal with one of her health issues, for example, contraception—to have an operation where she can no longer become impregnated—no doctor can do that unless her husband provides the consent. On the face of it, there is really nothing wrong with that, but when we turn that coin around, if the man wishes to do a similar exercise, health-wise, he can do so as I understand without asking the woman.

Madam Speaker, if we are going to have parity and equity, that’s what I mean by the ‘peeling away exercise’ because I am not really wearing my other hat of a lawyer. I will not go into any other situations but I can assure that there are many other situations where there is no parity and equity.

It is the intention of the ministry to expand our Women’s Resource Centre staff complement as well as its floor space. We are finding that there is an increase utilisation of this facility and we have had representation from the women who have come in there that they wish a higher degree of privacy whenever they are engaged in consultation or just in general interviews. I must say that the government has fully supported this venture and I give them thanks on behalf of the women of the Cayman Islands for this gesture. Within the very near future, we would have had the lease arranged and put in place so that there can be private consultations when the women come for assistance at the Women’s Resource Centre.

Madam Speaker, I believe there are several areas, but I will deal with three specific areas whereby our women’s unit will need the continued critical support of the entire government and on a wider perspective, the entire community.

I believe that our women’s unit will need adequate resources. We can talk, Madam Speaker, until we are blue in the face. We can say that we support but until we put the requisite funding that is needed to put these policies into place then nothing will be done. It would be a similar situation as saying that I am hungry and there is the potential to provide bread on the table but no money is given to provide it. I believe that we must move away from that concept.

Our Caymanian women must be given our full commitment and then they must be given at the women’s unit, the authority to bring about gender awareness throughout the public service as a beginning stage at the very least. By that I mean, the Women’s Resource Centre and indeed the Women’s Unit, although we are given responsibility to look at the gender issues, we do not have the administrative responsibility to ensure that these policies once accepted by the government is passed on through the various departments. This is where it is going to take a partnership between the administrative and political arm of government to ensure that these gender policies, once agreed, are carried down to the very lowest nonchalance of government.

The Women’s Unit, I believe, has a very important role and the development of the Women’s Resource Centre, which you and the past Member from George Town, Mrs. Berna Thompson-Murphy, had a very crucial and pivotal role to play in this development. I see it, Madam Speaker, of playing several roles. Firstly, the Women’s Resource Centre continues to play the role of an advisory nature. It also plays the role of monitoring the resources within our society to see where the need is and how the need can best be fulfilled. Then it plays an implementation role.

I believe that our Women’s Unit can also offer its experiences that can be found from gender analysis exercises and from gender planning. One of our women’s officers obtained a Masters in this area. She is very efficient and excited about carrying out these different gender issues. I believe that in so doing that we can actually get the gender issues into the main stream, which should ensure gender compliance.

Madam Speaker, it is my desire that this year the Women’s Unit can conduct a seminar which would involve all members of the Executive Council, Permanent Secretaries and Heads of Departments so that we can ensure that there is gender equality and parity throughout the entire public service. I believe that until this type of survey is carried out then we will really not have any concrete evidence as to the magnitude of this problem within the public service. Indeed if there are critics that they think there is not a problem then the evidence would be there as well to prove their point.

I believe that we do not have the authority to implement this within the service without having the administrative responsibility and therefore we will have to rely extremely heavily on the administrative arm of government to ensure that this gender awareness cognisance and implementation does, in fact, take place.

We in the Women’s Affairs Ministry also believe that there is a dire need for the development of sectorial programmes and that such programmes should include a reporting element to it. Let me just take a few seconds to explain why I believe there is a need for a reporting element, as far as it relates to the gender issues and the public service. I believe that in the interest of transparency and, yes, accountability if it is mandatory for the various sectors of the government to report on the gender issues achievement then a number of crucial objectives can be duly realised.

Firstly, reporting would in my view achieve a very comprehensive review of where we are today in the public service with these gender issues and whether there is gender equality and access.

Secondly, I believe that if we put in place a process of reporting, it will ensure that the situation is constantly monitored and it is not allowed to regress to its previous state of affairs.

Thirdly, I believe that reporting would provide a basis for us to evaluate the various policies and priorities so that we can at long last move into the area of forward planning and we can see some actual, tangible achievements in this regard.

Fourthly, I believe that reporting can serve to provide a baseline for the evaluation of progress. If we do not have a reporting mechanism put in place then its difficult to see how we can see where we started and where we are going. We will just end up in purely speculative conclusions and for anyone who wishes to see proactive advancement for the gender issues, unless there is a reporting mechanism, I believe, we will not have no objective measurement as to progress that is being made.

Fifthly, I believe that a reporting mechanism would provide a better understanding of the problems and the shortcomings within the system, be it, the public service or the private sector.

Sixthly, reporting also would provide public scrutiny and therefore strengthen the element of accountability. I know, Madam Speaker, that being the human beings we are, we often times are not favourable to any level of public scrutiny. But I believe that it is another measuring stick to keep (regardless of who the establishment may be) in place and accountable to the public who really in fact is who the government is there for—government including the public service. If we can have this transparency and accountability as it relates to gender issues, and I am sure there are many other issues as well then I believe that we would have achieved a great milestone towards enhancing the status of the woman in the Cayman Islands.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I believe that this reporting mechanism would allow the various sectors of government as it relates to gender issues and access to provide for an exchange of information. I find often times that it is not so much the case that programmes are not in place or there is no equity or parity but because there is an apparent or a perceive lack of communication between various stakeholders one is often lead to believe that the problem is bigger than what it really is.

So, I believe if we could have a better sectorial understanding as to what the common goal is, being the enhancement of the status of female that we would all be working towards that common goal and much more could be achieved. Then reporting can also act as an enforcement mechanism because when one knows that he or she has to report on the progress I cannot imagine that person being a prudent person would just sit there year after year and ignore the problem or not take the time through the act of omission to actually address the problem. But every reasonable effort would be made to ensure that these issues are addressed.

So, Madam Speaker, I call for due and timely consideration to be given to this element of reporting and to this partnership of administrative and the political arm as it relates to the issue (being the gender issues) firstly within the public sector and then the private sector.

I believe that an inter-ministerial committee should be established to deal with the various gender issues. We will continue to work on improving the literacy, that is, the legal literacy with regards to the rights of the women in the Cayman Islands.

If I could pause to thank you, as well as the Second Elected Member from Bodden Town, for your tireless efforts in this regard. As I said at the introduction of this topic, it does take courage and commitment to constantly fight about issues of women because it is almost a natural tendency that the hair on the skin tends to go up or different opinions seems to be forthcoming because it is not something that has been around for a long time.

Women are now just beginning to really talk about it. I guess before we were in a position where most of our men were out to sea so we really didn't have to compete, we just had to behave. That's a piece of irony, Madam Speaker, I trust all would understand.

Now, as we have moved into this modern civilisation and the economy of our islands have turned around where our men no longer have to go to sea unless its their desire, they can work side by side with us. We are finding that it is becoming somewhat more competitive for the role and the acceptance of the female in our society.

Again, I was at a conference recently when the Chief Minister of Tortola in making his address to the Women's Conference made a very eloquent and an admirable speech about his government's support for women and women's affairs issues. He decided to ad lib during the course of his speech (which turned out to be quite humorous). He went on to say that he was Rotarian and a very proud member and was one who had for many years continued to vote that women should not be a part of the club. It's inconsistencies like that, Madam Speaker, that I think have somewhat motivated me to make the contribution that I am attempting to make today and no other motivation as far as trying to outdo the man because that is not my desire.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, are you at a convenient point that we can take the afternoon break or are you about to complete?

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: No, Madam Speaker, if we could take the break, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.27 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.46 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech, the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs continuing her debate. Honourable Minister.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If I may briefly revert to the issue that I ended with, that is, women's affairs. I can assure you that I will be short this time. Nonetheless I think it's an important issue.

As we are all aware, the area of service delivery is a real issue here and that's mainly because of the limited resources that we are faced with in the Cayman Islands, as is the case in most developing countries. Nonetheless, I feel that this should not be viewed as a hurdle but instead it should be viewed more in the line of a challenge and that we can overcome if we persevere in this regard.

I believe that if we are to move forward in a positive manner or fashion, we must strengthen our legislation to ensure that the gender issues, which includes both men and women, are addressed. We must also move to increase the level and the degree of advocacy and improve the educational awareness process as it relates to women, and at all times, there must be a continued political will for this to happen.

I would now briefly like to turn my attention to the issue of domestic violence, which is very near and dear to my heart, and to publicly thank the Business and Professional Women's Club for the great strides they have made in bringing this issue to the forefront and allowing more members of our society to become aware of this hideous crime. It is a crime. I make no less of it than that. I realise that there are many competing forces that demand the attention of the Police, but domestic violence for a long time has been viewed as something that just takes up the time of any Police Force, not just this one but services throughout the world. As we go from conference to conference that is one of the complaints being made.

I am happy to say that the Police Commissioner, on the recommendation of a motion which I believe was perhaps brought by you, Madam Speaker, will now seek to put in place a family unit. I believe that this is a commendable achievement in that these issues by their very nature are extremely private and can at times be embarrassing to all parties concerned, needless to say the children and the juveniles that are involved. If there is an appropriate unit, be it the family unit within the Police Department, I believe we will find that women or men, who are the victims of domestic violence will more readily and easily come forward and feel more comfortable in lodging their complains.

Perhaps, there may be a more experienced and understanding ear to deal with in an expeditious fashion whereby it does not become consume with the many other competing crimes pending resolutions thereof.

Madam Speaker, we all know that although we live in a modern society in Cayman, there is still an unforgivable level of domestic violence that is still occurring within our community. Many of our mothers, daughters, or sisters are being physically and verbally abused and, yes, even emotionally abused within this society. We must continue to strive towards zero tolerance as far as it relates to domestic violence.

I know in other forums that I have had an opportunity to speak on this issue, I get the usual response that men are abused as well—yes, there are instances in which men are abused. They may not admit it sometimes, but there are some brave souls that come forward and say that they have been abused. I believe that there should be just as fair and equitable treatment for them in this regard and that the easiness of the accessibility to the enforcement rights should be there as well.

Madam Speaker, we realise that to some degree, however, this will no doubt necessitate a change culturally as well as attitudinally. We here in the Caribbean have come through an era where like some other jurisdictions women were referred to as property and, perhaps by the more conscientious ones, assets rather than liabilities. Nonetheless, I would like to think we have far removed ourselves from that type of attitudinal thinking and we, therefore, believe that domestic violence must and should be treated seriously by all enforcement arms of government, be it here or elsewhere, because women are not the properties of men and abuse is a crime.

Madam Speaker, this may seem a bit trivial to those of us here in this honourable House in that I am sure we would all treat domestic violence as a crime. For several years when I was a legal practitioner, a lot of my time was dedicated to dealing with family issues either directly or indirectly. It was not uncommon to see the lackadaisical attitude that some of our enforcement arms took towards domestic violence. To some degree you could see why that was being taken if there was no proper education process to let them be aware that it is crime.

Some of their complaints were that the women would come forward and once it was time to go to court they would change their minds and a lot of time was being 'wasted' when they could perhaps be dealing with 'real crimes'. If that attitude were taken then there would not be any deterrent for those persons who are victimising the women and the children in our society. Our enforcement arm must continue to take this as serious as any other crimes because often times we find that more serious crimes including murder will come out of violent domestic situations.

As we all know, recently there has been a spate of rapes in our communities and I know in the Prospect area there have been a number. I believe, Madam Speaker, that I am safe in saying that for the first time in a very long time, the majority if not all of our women within the Cayman Islands are scared to be out on the roads at night or even in the safety of their homes at night. Again, in the Prospect area, I know of a particular instance where they were at home at night. This should be so in a small society and I believe that every effort must be taken to reassure females that these types of crimes are very serious. And, the amendments that are needed to the Penal Code will be expedited and they will come before this honourable House without any further delay so that they can feel that there is a real deterrent to these persons who are running around acting in a very undesirable manner.

Even the men who are present here today perhaps hear have wives and girl children. It is not a very nice situation when there is a case of incest or rape. Unless sometimes you walk in the shoes it is difficult to really perceive all of the emotions that become bottled up into crimes like these. Perhaps, it is only then that one can fully realise the depths of concern that a woman will feel for these types of offences and the dire concern for them to be properly addressed and to be concerned as serious crimes by all.

Madam Speaker, I believe (as I said earlier) that the additional policemen will also afford the Commissioner of Police more backup. But, in addition to that, I believe we helped the Commissioner significantly when we voted on the additional half million dollars a few days ago in Finance Committee, which will now enable him to pay the overtime to the Policemen that came about mainly because of the extra and onerous duties that they were called upon to perform at Northward during the riot times last year. Traditionally, although they were uniformed services, they were not being paid. And now that they are being paid, it is my understanding that this will allow the Commissioner of Police more personnel that can come back on in full strength so that he can have the tools that is needed to do what society expects of him.

I can say that I have worked and talked with him on many issues and I find him as a very forward thinking person, very willing and easy to co-operate and to listen to the issues relating to women. We have had several occasions to talk about the issue of domestic violence and the need for it to be perceived as a serious crime throughout the entire force. I can truly say that I believe he is committed to ensuring that all members of his staff view the issue of domestic violence as a serious crime and to so treat it.

Dealing now with the issue of the veterans which is also one of the responsibilities under my ministry. This year as was promised, and the previous year, we were able through the help of honourable members in Finance Committee to increase the veterans monthly stipend from $250 by adding an additional $150 bringing it to $400 per month. Although we realise that the cost of living is quite high and, yes, they did make a very significant contribution to our society in the pursuit of peace and harmony during the time of war and conflict, this is but a small contribution to them. We nonetheless feel it can go quite a way in improving the standard of living for many of our seamen and veterans.

From the correspondence and calls that we have received in the ministry, we know that they are truly appreciative to all members of Finance Committee for this gesture on their behalf.

I would also wish to commend the veterans for the involvement that they have become engaged in throughout their community. I know that I can safely speak, in particular, with the veterans and seamen from Cayman Brac being more familiar with their activities there. When anyone of their veterans pass on, they make it a matter of commitment to turn up to the funeral and actually have a guard of honour. Most of these men are quite elderly and its really commendable to see them stand there, sometimes limping to get there for some fifteen minutes at both ends of the casket, showing their last respect to their seamen. Not only has this gained more respect for them within the community, but it keeps a continued awareness within the community of the unity, cohesiveness and the mutual respect that they have for each other, which is another traditional Caymanian trait that I would wish to see preserved through many generations to come.

Madam Speaker, the veterans have also worked very diligently to ensure that benefits, which are their entitlement, were not forgotten, in particular in the area of health. My good friend, the Minister of Health has worked with them together with other members of government to ensure that they are still in a position to receive medical attention without having all the high financial cost associated with it. Even as we move into the insurance spectrum of the health side, consideration has also been given to ensure that the veterans' medical needs are well taken care of.

Madam Speaker, with the contribution that is given to the veterans, there have been several questions that have come to my attention as to what happens upon the death of a veteran. Would the spouse receive half of the benefit or would she receive the full benefit? I am pleased to say, Madam Speaker, that in the case of a veteran when the spouse (usually it's the man as it relates to veterans) dies, the wife receives one hundred percent of the benefit unlike the case with the pensions, where in some cases (I believe I am correct in saying) the wife would receive only half or vice versa. Perhaps, at the appropriate time that may be an area that needs to be looked into as well.

As far as community programme grants are concerned, I am pleased to say that the ministry is continuing to offer various grants in this area. The grants are not only for youth programmes, but we give a yearly grant for community youth workers. When there was a sharing of the ministry in 1997, my friend the honourable minister got the responsibility for Social Services. The community workers went along with Social Services. But we still provide a grant for our youth workers and we assist the community workers where possible as well as providing grants for beautification of communities.

I can report that in most districts, if not all, they have been working diligently—some longer than others—and they have been making a positive impact be it through the CoDACs or similar community groups. We also continue to offer our grant to the McField Rehoboth Centre in George Town and we have put together a management committee to oversee the overall running and management of the centre. I believe we give some $75,000 annually for that establishment to go on. I believe they now have over 40 children and they do a number of programmes including training of the youth, the senior citizens' club, meals on wheels and adult basic education. I believe that this $75,000 is a worthwhile investment as they have really extended beyond the call of duty to reach the various different arms and elements of the community where there is a need arising.

I wish to extend my sincere gratitude to the manager of the facility, Ms. Beulah McField, and her staff for their dedication, their care and concern, and for the commitment of these young children at the centre.

Under the auspices of the Community Affairs Ministry, we continue to have a policy of funding the beautification community. I know the community in West Bay this year as well as the one on Cayman Brac really went all out in their attempts to beautify the various parks throughout the districts. It was really appreciated. Throughout the entire Christmas we had the elderly and the youth gathering together at these focal points and enjoying the thousands of Christmas lights that were put up by the beautification community. I would also wish to commend them on the splendid job that they are doing in keeping these areas extremely clean.

Madam Speaker, I believe that we all need to take full pride in our communities and be responsible for taking care of them. When we have a royal visit, for example, there is a great effort to clean up the islands and to make sure that we show the Cayman Islands in the proper light. Although it has been expressed, I wish that much more had been done as far as making more persons aware of the visit and really getting the community effort going in cleaning up and beautifying the area.

Madam Speaker, especially when one drives through the Industrial Park area of George Town (and I am sure that those of you who are from other districts will perhaps know other areas better), there is much that can be done to really beautify the roadside and keep it clean. Although the Department of Environment does its very best, unfortunately we still have members of our society who really don't think anything of driving along and throwing debris out from their vehicles. It makes it extremely hard for the Department of Environment to keep a tab on this. But especially since the Prince is coming, I thought that a bit more effort could be put into really cleaning up the place because you can say whatever you wish about us, but we Caymanians like to maintain a very tidy and a very environmentally friendly homes. We wish that hospitality to be extended to the Prince or any other dignitary that visits our island.

While I am on that topic, as I was walking into this edifice this morning, the thought also occurred to me that this is indeed the Parliament building. I am not sure whether funds have been provided or indeed requested, but I would make an urgent plea in this particular forum, Madam Speaker, that the landscaping in the front of this building could be somewhat enhanced. It is a very important building, as is the Glass House and the Court House, and we have tons of prisoners sitting down and tons of people looking for work. Let us take some time and put together programmes with the Agricultural Department to ensure that we here in the Cayman Islands can be amply proud of our public buildings and the surrounding areas.

Madam Speaker, I am not saying that to cause embarrassment or to be unduly critical of any particular department because I too am a part of the government and would share some of the responsibility. But I also feel that sometimes when things are not talked about, we take it for granted that there is a level of acceptability and that all is well. I mentioned it for the mere fact that I have been approached by members within the community, here in Grand Cayman in particular, asking what's happening and where is the cleanup that we have become accustomed to whenever we have a royal visit. So, perhaps, if there is still time and if there is the will to do it, we could see some activity in that regard for the remaining few days before the visit.

Madam Speaker, I will briefly turn to another area in my ministry that deals with labour and the issue of gratuities, which has been problematic for many years. Members will recall that we have put in place a substantive post for an accountant to be employed. We hope (that is, the government) that once this person is employed within a few months, he or she will be able to go around and do a closer inspection of the books at the various establishments so that we can really put this matter to rest.

I can say that since the establishment of the six Labour Tribunals and the Labour Appeal Tribunals that the backlog has been greatly reduced and labour disputes are being dealt with in a much more timely fashion.

I also wish to thank those members who serve on the Labour Tribunal as well as the Appeals Tribunal, who put in some very long and ungrateful hours for very little pay to ensure that the various labour issues are resolved which they face on a weekly basis.

Madam Speaker, the issue of labour is never an easy one. It is a most complex and often controversial issue, sometimes difficult to really find resolutions for. I realise that there are elements in our society that are paying wages that are less than desirable, especially as it relates to the hospitality world. It has been brought to my attention that, for example on the Brac, there is one establishment that is still paying $2 plus per hour for staff that has been there in excess of fifteen years. It is not unusual for them to get a 25-cent increase over a five year period.

Although no one wishes to have a society which is constantly regulated, I think the minimum wage concept is becoming more of a reality. We do have Caymanians who are being taken for granted as well. I am sure there are other residents who find themselves in this vulnerable position. As members know, there is a select committee that has been put together on the minimum wage. I have asked my staff since the beginning of this year if they could now address their minds to preparing a discussion document for the select committee, gathering the information from our human resource specialist as well as the expertise from the Director of Labour so that we can have a stepping stone in the select committee to look at and see how we can best address this issue in the select committee and then report to the House thereon.

I would have hoped, Madam Speaker, that the businesses involved would have exercised due diligence and paid staff reasonable sums of money. But obviously this does not seem to be the case in some establishments and, in particular, the one that I mentioned in the Brac. I am sure other members have the same thing in their districts.

Madam Speaker, we are still not up to a full complement as far as the labour inspectors are concerned. It has been approved, but we are still awaiting the requisite space for the labour inspector. We have been promised that we will get that this year. I look forward to that so that our labour inspectors can really get to do the job that they were hired to do at their full potential and can really start to get out in more of these establishments and see what is going on. This gratuity problem is a serious problem for a lot of people in that the amount of money is often used to supplement the salary that they are receiving which is already too little for most households. Unfortunately, again most of these are women working in the hospitality world. I believe, Madam Speaker, that we must now try to do whatever we can as a whole body collectively to address these issues in a timely fashion.

Madam Speaker, on Cayman Brac (if I could just quickly revert to that area) although we have some persons still in the area of agriculture who wish to continue that traditionally or commercially, we are faced with some difficult circumstances as it relates to water. We are grateful for the bulk storage establishment that we have in the West End and it has been of tremendous help. But the representation that I have received from the farmers is that often times it has proven to be quite expensive. I discussed this with the honourable minister at some length, and I am sure that he will continue to work with the farmers on the Brac to do whatever is possible to ensure that the water will be available at a reasonable price. And whenever funds become available within the Water Authority that a serious look can be taken at extending the water supply on Cayman Brac.

We realise, Madam Speaker, it will have to be done in stages because it is a very expensive exercise. But persons on the Brac are quite content for it to start from the bulk storage centre in the West End, moving towards the eastern part of the island over a phased period, which will probably take a number of years. As development continues, those who are familiar with the Brac realise that the water in particular in the western end of the island is of very poor quality. Although very costly, this is a project we believe is needed, in particular on the Bluff, if we are to see development take off in a meaningful way.

I also wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture and the Agricultural Society for the splendid show that was put on last week, and for providing a venue where families could go out to spend a day and engage themselves in wholesome activities which were safe and enjoyable where they were able to see quite a number of things of "things Cayman." To me (and I am fairly close to farming), some of the produce there was of surprisingly high quality—not just in the vegetables and the fruits but the cattle as well. I commend them for their efforts in this regard.

We also wish to put on a mini-agricultural show on the Brac. We are working towards that in July, the long weekend this year. We realise it is going to be quite a job to take on, but we got the undertaking from the agricultural personnel in Grand Cayman, namely from the Agricultural Society, and the Minister, that they will do whatever is possible to ensure that this happens. I really look forward for those plans becoming a reality within the next few months.

Madam Speaker, I am also grateful that for the first time (as far as I am aware with a royal visit) that one of them is finding the time in their most busy schedule to have a short visit to the Brac. Often times for a number of reasons it is not possible and the visit is made to Grand Cayman. I would like to especially thank the Honourable Chief Secretary, the First Official Member, as well as His Excellency the Governor and other parties involved, in seeing that this actually happens.

On Monday, the Prince will be arriving on the Brac for a few hours. The significance of this is that although an invitation would be normally extended to 30 or so persons it did not offer the opportunity for the remaining residents of the Brac or the Little Cayman to even have a quick glance at the Prince or any other royal person that's here within the islands especially our older persons who are even more committed and have even more emotion over this sort of festivity. So, it's a great joy that they will be afforded this opportunity, and I wish on behalf of them to thank all persons concerned in this regard.

I am also happy to see that with the activities an invitation has been extended for all members of the public to attend the reception at the Aston Rutty Centre. I believe this is the only way it could have been done rather than to have just a selected number because of the briefness of his visit. So, I am really grateful for this gesture on the part of those involved.

Turning now to the area of Sports: It is envisaged that this year (being the year 2000) will be a good year both on the national front as well on the international front. We have continued the policy of "Sports for All" within the ministry and we have endeavoured to improve where possible the various sporting facilities throughout all of the Cayman Islands. We have established programmes in many of the districts which will seek to enhance the better utilisation of the facilities, and we know that this is one area together with the area of maintenance where there is still much work remaining to be done. I believe, in all fairness, we can say that there has been an element of improvement in this area.

We have continued the policy of granting a number of sports grants, which has enabled some of our perhaps less academic to continue their tertiary education because they were able to excel in sports. We have in the ministry, since early 1998 I believe, commenced a programme of accountability whereby we have drafted and implemented contractual agreements with the various sporting organisations and other grant recipients as we wish to instil more accountability and to ensure that when the public's money is spent that we are getting value for money in this regard. We have also asked for the various recipients to submit to the ministry business plans.

Madam Speaker, any change in the initial stages there was resistance. But I believe now that that stage has been passed, people are now realising that it is the best way to go. Not only does it offer protection for the ministry itself in the issuance of these grants, but those who are utilising these funds are protected and they must report as to how these monies are spent. I am happy to say that this has also received the endorsement of the Auditor General.

Many of our sports, including cricket, swimming, basketball, football, and a number of them, continue to excel. Especially with swimming, we have over 1,000 young swimmers involved in the programme and there is still on a daily basis I am told more persons making requests to become involved in the programme. We had hoped that we would have embarked on our 3-year pool facility development for swimming. Unfortunately that has been delayed to another fiscal year. But we trust that in the coming year, God willing, that we will be able to move forward with the construction of the pool in the eastern district, the pool on Cayman Brac, and a pool in West Bay so that we can continue the "Swim for All" programmes and we can continue to offer this facility to the school children and as well to our advanced swimmers.

Madam Speaker, I am also cognisant that the more advanced swimmers are calling for a 50-metre pool because they are at a disadvantage when they travel internationally to compete, whether it is in New Zealand or the United States, not having practised and trained in a 50-metre pool. As we probably all know, the estimated cost is some $4 million and government did not find itself in a financial position to fully foot the cost of this. We would hope that it would be one of those projects that could be a partnership between government and the private sector so that this facility can be put in place as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker, we continue in the ministry to endeavour to recognise the efforts and the excellence of our sports persons and athletes within the Cayman Islands. We have done this not only by scholarships and grants, but, indeed, we have tried to hold various sports receptions and either hand out awards or attend their functions (whether it is here or abroad) and just try to lift their morale. We have also attended to our coaching complement, and I am pleased to say that with our national football team we now have a very competent and energetic caring individual. Having observed the level of football, it has improved and the boys are now playing in a more cohesive fashion with some work still yet to be done with their line strikes. But they are working towards it and are improving. I believe that football for a long time will continue to be one of the more popular sports within the Cayman Islands.

Our youth programme for cricket has made tremendous strides and we have had a number of youth cricketers go across to the UK for a cultural cricket exchange programme. We are grateful to Cable & Wireless for the Crazy Cricket Weekend that they funded. They do an excellent job in providing on an annual basis by bringing down the professional West Indian Cricketers so that the young cricketers here in Cayman can see the wider picture and really get a full imagery of where cricket can take you and what cricket can do for you. So, in a few years, I would wish to see even some of our young cricketers vying for a space on the West Indian Cricket Team, provided they can get back to the standard of when Viv Richards was playing for them as opposed to some of their later performances against [other] international teams.

The ministry continues its efforts with granting both partial and full scholarships. Although there has been some degree of criticism in this regard, in that the level of academic prerequisites may not be as high as your normal educational scholarships, we felt that there was a need to fill this gap for persons who did excel in the sporting world to be afforded with an opportunity to receive tertiary education. That's why we have decided to continue this policy. And it's safe to say that both here in the sporting area as well as in the arts and cultures, where we try to provide a positive catalyst and motivation for our young Caymanians to study in these areas, those students have been doing very well and we look forward to good things in this regard.

We have also recognised the need for government to take a more active role in the recognition and economic contribution to our athletes who have attained an international standard. In this regard, we have entered into contractual agreements with Kareem Streete-Thompson. He is slated, along with Cydonie Mothersill, to go to the Olympics in Australia this year. We are hoping that for the first time Cayman will get one of the three Olympic medals, which will help to put Cayman on the world stage for millions of viewers.

There have been questions, Madam Speaker, as to whether this was something government should be getting into. But having assisted in the drafting of the contract and the negotiations with Mr. Kareem Streete-Thompson, I am confident that it is money well spent. The contract is so drafted that he has quite a bit of local commitments not only in attendance to local sporting activities but also in hosting and training at summer camps as well as assisting with getting sponsorship. Already Nike (his official sponsorship) has come forward and sponsored our local track team with uniforms and other attire, including footwear. So, we have already started to reap some benefits from this contractual relationship.

Madam Speaker, we at the ministry firmly believe that the role of sports continues to be a very important and significant tool in the shaping or fostering of the behaviour of some in the society. On any given day when one visits the Truman Bodden Sports Complex, it's amazing to see the number of young persons (and sometimes those young at heart) making use of this facility and utilising their time in a constructive and positive manner rather than being involved in other deviant activities in the community. We realise that sports is a good tool for the better socialisation of members of our community as well as for the physical and psychological development of our people.

Today, Madam Speaker, we hear quite a bit about our youth, and if one did not know better we would be led to believe that all of our youth are just no good. Madam Speaker, I am here to say today that we have a vast majority of youth that are good outstanding and intelligent, who will do this country proud in years to come. Our investment in our youth at this time will be a good investment paying some very high dividends in the years to come.

Honourable members as well as the wider community would be cognisant that the ministry has embarked upon a youth policy. I am happy to report, Madam Speaker, that the final draft of the Youth Policy is in its completion stages. Within another two weeks or so, I shall be moving the draft policy on to Executive Council for their due consideration. As soon as it is approved, it will then be laid on the Table. At that particular time I will go into more detail as to the merits and demerits, and the findings and analysis that came about as a result of the new survey and the drafting of the said policy.

Madam Speaker, I fully realise that our country still has many infrastructural development needs. In this regard, now that the government has been successful in putting in place the hospital and a number of our educational needs as well as some of our road needs, I believe that we now need to bring up on the ring of prioritisation the need to pay more attention to the wellbeing of our community. Those things that we addressed were priorities. And I have given them my wholehearted support. But we live in changing times, and people continue to be an important asset. We must invest tremendously on programmes and facilities at this crossroad in our social development in the Cayman Islands, to ensure that our people have places that they can go to have quality family time, be it the extended or the immediate family, and that they are safe, clean, and modern so they can go for this enjoyment.

Madam Speaker, a few years ago when I was afforded the opportunity of being elected for the Brac and Little Cayman, I noticed that in most districts on the Brac because of the advent of the television, the Nintendo and Play Station and those other things, a lot of our people were staying at home. They were really losing that traditional heritage of gathering by the seaside or by the roadside and having discussions and passing on old Caymanian stories, where the older ones taught the younger ones or whatever it was. So, we embarked upon a programme where we constructed a number of community or focal meeting points, for example the West End Community Park, the Spot Bay Community Cove, and what is locally known on the Brac as the Panama Canal, which is similar to the cove but it's the CNN of the Brac, we like to call it.

Madam Speaker, I see you are reaching . . . am I up to 4.30 p.m.?

The Deputy Speaker: Its that hour, do you expect to complete your debate within the next couple of minutes or—

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, I did not think that during my time here that I would be asking for more time, but that seems to be case if you so wish.

The Deputy Speaker: Well then you can continue tomorrow morning.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: My pleasure.

The Deputy Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The Deputy Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

RAISING OF URGENT PUBLIC MATTER Standing Order 11(6)

IMMIGRATION BOARD POLICY RE: GRANTING OF WORK PERMITS FOR JAMAICAN NATIONALS

Dr. Frank McField: Under Standing Order 11(6), I would like to bring a matter of urgent public importance to the attention of this House, by asking the Chief Secretary to give an explanation with regard to what now appears to be the Immigration Board's policy on the hiring of Jamaican nationals by Caymanian businesses.

It has been brought to my attention by members of my constituency involved in small businesses that they have had permits rejected by the Immigration Board and that the Board has given the explanation that these permits were rejected under section 31(j) and (k) which speaks of the general requirements of the community as a whole.

From conversations with certain person in the Immigration Department, I have been able to gather information which suggests that the Immigration Board has embarked on a policy of basing work permit grants on nationality rather than the merits of the individual applicant. This is a sharp deviation from what the community understands the policies of the Immigration Board to be with regard to work permit grants. This will certainly adversely affect many small Caymanian businesses who have invested a great amount of time and money in their enterprises.

They have asked me to ask this Honourable House why the Government of the Cayman Islands is allowed to employ persons from any country in any amount they so desire, whenever they desire, and that this is not considered to be contrary to the general good. Although the complainants and the affected persons realise that the general public is concerned about the large number of immigrants, and, in particular, immigrants from certain countries, they do not feel that the Government's double standard serves to create fairness and a spirit of mutual cooperation between Government and the community.

Because of the large numbers of persons in my district and other districts affected by this type of action by the Immigration Board, I feel therefore that it needs an explanation. I am asking that the Chief Secretary under whose Portfolio Immigration falls give this Honourable House an explanation as to when this policy came into effect and whether or not it has been approved by the Executive Council; and further, to say what is the desired goal of such a policy, and what are the calculated effects such a policy will have on the various businesses in these islands. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Official Member I am prepared to give this question, that you reply to this in the morning once you have obtained the necessary information. Is that okay with the Fourth Elected Member for George Town?

Dr. Frank McField: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That will give me time to get the necessary information.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. This Honourable House is accordingly adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

AT 4.35 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 16 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
THURSDAY
16 MARCH 2000
10.26 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Honourable First Official Member]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. I would like to apologise for the late start this morning, but the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture had a very important meeting that she had to attend to and she called and asked if we could delay the start until 10.15 p.m.

The first item on the Order Paper today is Reading by Speaker by Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have received apologies for late arrival from the following: The Honourable Second Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Legal Administration, the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development, the Honourable Minister responsible for Ministry of Education, Aviation and Planning and the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

HOUSE VISITORS

The Deputy Speaker: This morning it gives me great pleasure to acknowledge the presence of the junior high school students and teachers of the Wesleyan Holiness School. We welcome you to the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly.

Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor. I would like to acknowledge the Honourable First Official Member.

RAISING OF URGENT PUBLIC MATTER

(Standing Order 11(6))

IMMIGRATION BOARD POLICY RE: GRANTING OF WORK PERMITS FOR JAMAICAN NATIONALS

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE THERETO

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to respond to the matter of urgent public importance raised by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town at the adjournment of yesterday's sitting of this Honourable House.

There has been no change by the Immigration Board in the policy of the granting of work permits for Jamaican nationals. Immigration Boards, both past and present, have sought to ensure that work permits are granted to applicants with different backgrounds and from different geographical areas, to maintain a suitable balance in the social and economic life of the Cayman Islands. This policy is consistent with Directive 5(4) of the Immigration Directions (1998 Revision).

The Board, when considering work permit applications, considers the number of employees on work permits and their nationalities, and as a result may then encourage the prospective employer to seek workers from a different geographical area if their workforce is already weighted with one particular nationality.

Section 30(1) (j), which the Member refers to, specifically addresses the issue of adequate training programmes and is totally unrelated to demographics.

Section 30(1) (k) encompasses many areas which may impact upon the requirements of the community as a whole as well as other matters, which may arise from the work, permit application.

Public concerns, as well as the work permit statistics indicate that a balance in terms of nationality should be maintained and as a result, the government has recommended that a flat non-refundable repatriation fee of C1$200.00 be applied across the board for new work permits in order to offset any hardships which may be caused by employers having to recruit workers from other geographical areas. This change in the fee structure will come about with subsequent amendments to the Immigration Regulations. Madam Speaker, for the record this replaces the repatriation fee, which was on a sliding scale, and that will disappear once this new fee has been brought into force.

In some instances also, the Immigration Board will grant the work permit and advise the employer that in the future they should seek to recruit from a geographical area other than Jamaica or Honduras. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I will use the discretion of this Honourable Chair to allow a few questions, if the Honourable First Official Member is prepared to take these questions.

The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Would the First Official Member say whether or not as early as December 1999 the Immigration Board has been advising persons to seek employees outside the geographical region of Jamaica or Honduras? And has the Immigration Board not, since that period, denied work permits because the employees were from the geographical area of Jamaica, making that the primary consideration of the denial of the work permit rather than the needs of the specific business?

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Even before December 1999 (and I alluded to this in the statement) Immigration Boards both past and present sought to ensure that work permits were granted to applicants from different backgrounds. Yes, the Board has invited applicants to seek an employee from a different geographical region, but, to my knowledge, no work permit has been refused purely on the ground that they were from a particular geographical region.

The Deputy Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, the essence of what I am trying to do here is to clarify for the public using the service of the Immigration, and for me so that I can sensibly address the queries being raised by members of my constituency. If we are vague, then we will end up in the same position. So I just need to ask the Chief Secretary through you if an application for a specific business was not denied as recently as this week because an applicant—and I am prepared to provide him with the information off the air, the business, the applicant, the justifications, the support and evidence based upon the fact that it was the opinion of the Immigration Board that because two of the employees were already Jamaican they would not give an additional permission for that person to hire another Jamaican, and that person had to seek an employee from a different area.

Did the Immigration Board in doing that consider the fact, for instance, if you are dealing with Negro people's hair, whether or not, you could get somebody from Ireland or Switzerland to be able to perform those specific purposes? Are the specific needs of the business taken into consideration? And would the honourable First Official Member be able to tell me at a later date if he feels confident that the Immigration Board has looked at all the factors and not just the question of the nationality of the applicant?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The Immigration Law requires that reasons be given for a refusal, and I invite the Fourth Elected Member for George Town to let me have a refusal letter that states only that the refusal was because the person was from Jamaica.

A refusal will state the reasons, and may include the particular section or reference to this, but there has been no refusal purely because a person is coming from Jamaica. I can assure the honourable member that the colour of a person's skin or the hair of an individual will not influence the decision of the Board.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, can the Honourable First Official Member say whether people or businesses were informed at any time to get employees from other geographic areas? If a business had them [employees] from Jamaica, were they written to get them from other geographic areas?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes. Instances when letters are sent out to employers where the ratio of their employee is weighted heavily in favour of, say, Jamaicans, there would be an addendum to that letter that would encourage the employer to seek employees from other geographical regions.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Can the Honourable First Official Member say if any policy was put in place to consider the length of time the employees had been living here in these islands?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: When a refusal letter goes out that includes the reference to geographical areas it will be in respect of a grant—not in respect to a renewal. So, it will be a first-timer to the islands. Certainly, the length of time a person is on the island would definitely be taken into consideration by the Board.

The Deputy Speaker: I will allow one more question on this subject. The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, because of the nature of what we are dealing with, I won't read this letter. But I will ask the First Official Member if any such letter has been sent to anyone and when he sees it, he will understand why I am not reading the letter.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Madam Speaker, the first line of this letter refers to an applicant of the grant of a work permit. And this is the point I was making earlier that if it is a first time grant, and the business, the employer that is, is weighted in favour of a particular jurisdiction then, yes, the person is encouraged to seek to recruit someone from a different geographical area.

I think to put this into perspective I should point out to this Honourable House and the listening public that a press release that went out not too long ago showed that more than 50% of the work permits currently in effect are in regard to persons coming from Jamaica. There has been public concern about it. The Board is not trying to be difficult. The Board is just trying to do a balancing act in keeping with the call from the general public of this country.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I know you said that was the last question, but can I indulge your patience for one more?

The Deputy Speaker: I cannot allow my patience to be further indulged, because then another member is going to want another question, and then another member is going to want another question. I have made a ruling, and I would suggest that any member that has further questions meet with the honourable First Official Member in the committee room and ask that he would give them further information regarding this business.

The next item on the Order Paper today is Government Business; continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor. The Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture continuing her debate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR. PETER J SMITH, CBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS, ON FRIDAY, 18 FEBRUARY 2000

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Permit me also to publicly thank you for your indulgence in allowing me to complete the meeting I had this morning and to be here in time to continue my contribution to the Throne Speech.

Yesterday, I took the opportunity to deal with a number of areas within the ministry for which I have been given responsibility, and today I wish only to touch on two remaining areas not necessarily of direct connection, that being Cayman Airways, and the issue relating to housing and poverty.

Firstly, Madam Speaker, I would like to commence by dealing with the issue of Cayman Airways. I am sure you will agree that it is no secret that in recent times, particularly this past weekend, our national flag carrier experienced a multitude of problems. Whether they were of a mechanical nature or other reasons, no doubt thousands of dollars have been expended which was unforeseeable at the time. However, the purpose for speaking on this issue is in no way to point fingers or to blame the board, the ministry, the manager, or the staff. But I believe that there should be accountability. I am confident that the Board of Directors and the ministry with a unified effort can deal with this at the appropriate time and in the appropriate forum.

Be that as it may, I would like to say once again that I firmly believe that we here in the Cayman Islands need Cayman Airways. As I mentioned yesterday it's our insurance flight policy to and from the islands but we also have some 300 plus persons, many of whom are Caymanians, who are employed with our national airline. Therefore, I believe that it is extremely vital and important that we do whatever it takes to ensure that Cayman Airways survives this saga, and that the steps and policies are put in place to ensure that as far as possible and practical that there is no recurrence of this past weekend.

I believe that for this to be fully realised, there must be absolute teamwork. And this teamwork, I would respectfully submit, will not only involve the cooperation of all board directors and the minister responsible but indeed the cooperation of the full top management team as well as the 300 plus remaining staff at Cayman Airways.

Madam Speaker, it is my view that in order for the board to operate in a timely and expeditious fashion, and to be in a position to make informed decisions, that at all material times the board must be presented with current, relevant, professional and technical information. By the same token, I believe that the Board of Directors must feel comfortable in giving directives to top management and the remaining staff based on this current information, based on full and frank disclosure from management and other relevant professionals, coupled together with the knowledge of the individuals and corporate knowledge of the Board of Directors.

As in all human relationships, I believe that the key element of success is found in the heart of negotiation and indeed of communication. This has to be a two-way street. It makes absolutely no sense for me to endeavour to communicate by written form only if it is found that this is not satisfactory and that the message is not being carried through. I believe that it is prudent . . . and the onus should be placed on the persons concerned to ensure that every medium is used to facilitate clear and accurate communication to all of the parties concerned.

Madam Speaker, year after year, this honourable Finance Committee has voted, I think to the tune of $4 million in our annual subsidy and in more recent times that has increased to an extent in that there is some $700,000 to $800,000 placed in the annual budget for advertising purposes. So, in actual fact it is just under $5 million that is given by way of subsidy to Cayman Airways. I believe that the minister can be commended in this regard, in that over the past few years that subsidy have pretty much remained constant and he has not had to come back to the honourable House or to Finance Committee on ad hoc arrangements to increase the sums. But I believe if the situation is allowed to continue without it being fully discussed and resolutions found to the current matters that we are now facing at Cayman

Airways, it is not impossible to envision that the airline could be in this situation in the time to come.

I believe that Cayman Airways has always had very loyal and dedicated staff. Indeed, I can say without fear of contradiction that Cayman Airways has some of the best pilots in the entire world. I have said that having had the privilege of travelling to many, many destinations around the world and landing with many different airlines and pilots. I feel quite confident when I board Cayman Airways and see our Caymanian pilots or resident pilots in the cockpit. I am also quite familiar with the maintenance team that we have at Cayman Airways, which is headed by one of our very capable Cayman Brackers and other Caymanians who are quite capable.

I know, based on firsthand experience, that their first priority is that of safety. Madam Speaker, although Cayman Airways cannot boast of a perfect record of being on time, we certainly can boast of a very high standard of safety. I pray that the Lord God would continue for this to be one of the positive things that Cayman Airways can boast of.

Madam Speaker, one of the main criticisms we often tend to hear is that the aircraft is too old. But having taken the time to speak to the engineers and those who would know much more than I, not being an aviation expert, I am made to understand that when Cayman Airways aircraft are taken in for C- and/or D-checks that it undergoes a major overhaul. As a matter of fact, when they return from these major checks, the engines and other operational parts of the aircraft are like brand new.

Therefore, I believe the perception that they are old needs to be fully explained to the public because as I tried to explain yesterday, perception, if it is left in a muddled state, will become reality. It's really unfair to Cayman Airways and its staff for this to remain the status quo.

I believe where Cayman Airways can make improvement, as far as its physical assets are concerned, is fairly straightforward and, in my opinion, not very expensive at all. When it comes to the staff, the flight attendants by the same token are some of the friendliest and most helpful flight attendants that one can find. They really do go the extra mile to ensure that their passengers are made comfortable. I believe that the interior of the aircraft can certainly take a facelift, as it were, and I also know that this has been brought to the attention of management.

I am made to understand that seats have been ordered, but because of a truckers strike in the United States, the arrival of the seats is not anticipated for another three or four weeks at which time maintenance will proceed to have these seats installed.

I am also aware that the main aircraft where this problem is most noticeable is in the aircraft that we refer to as CKX mainly because of the types of seats that are there—they are heavy and bulky. We often get the criticism that there is insufficient legroom. I know that from personal experience! Even the minister last night, being as small as he is, acknowledged that he himself has difficulty sitting in the seats on the CKX aircraft. So, I know it is a criticism that has been taken well on board and the management and board of Cayman Airways have invested in these seats.

In addition, our marketing team listened to the customers, in that customers were saying 'look we are a commercial and financial centre in the Cayman Islands, we wish to support Cayman Airways but we also like to travel first class.' So, we have taken this on board and the decision has been taken to remove some of the seats in the existing aircraft and to install two rows of first class seats. Those seats have been ordered and their anticipated arrival is in another three to four weeks, at which time they will be put in place.

We have brought to the attention of management that the mere installation of the first class seats—especially after the chaotic arrangements this past weekend—will not be sufficient to gain back the loyalty and the trust of many of our customers. I know I spent a tremendous amount of time at the airport these past days trying to get teachers, students, and guests, back to Cayman Brac and to Miami.

The main problem that I saw on a firsthand basis (as well as being told) . . . because it didn't take long for them to recognise that I was a director and a Member of Parliament . . . and I believe I hit quite a bit of wrath that was there. But, at the same time, I did not mind doing that because I believe that in these situations we should not just leave the frontline staff who oftentimes are not in the position to make these decisions, to take the wrath from the disgruntled passengers and customers—those who have been most inconvenience by whatever has occurred.

So, Madam Speaker, the main complaint this past weekend and other long weekends, in particular when we experienced difficulties with our aircraft, is that the information is either not being fully communicated to the awaiting customers, or that there is no information at all that's being communicated. This is what I refer to as something that can be corrected which should not really cost very much. It is a matter of open, frank, and full disclosure.

We have spoken to management, and they have agreed, that they will be ensuring that this policy which was already in place with the airline will continue and that as soon as possible passengers will be made fully aware of the difficulties that airline may be experiencing. Not only that, but I believe that we at Cayman Airways have a duty to the travelling passenger to ensure that, first of all, the air-conditioning at the airport is not turned off from early in the night. If it necessitates that a complaint be made to the Civil Aviation Department that this small comfort be afforded to the passengers, then I believe that this must be done. I believe that arrangements must also be put in place to adequately feed the passengers whenever there is a delay; and, if the need arises, to put them in a comfortable place so that they can be fully accommodated. Without the funds derived from the passengers—who are quite loyal—Cayman Airways could not remain a part of our infrastructure here in the Cayman Islands.

I also know that most of our market share comes from right here in Grand Cayman. Caymanians are extremely loyal to Cayman Airways. For the very first time this weekend I heard a number of Caymanians making comments that they would never ever fly the national airline again. I would like to think that was said out of pure frustration, but that their deep desire to see Cayman Airways continue as vibrant operation would prevail and would be an overriding factor, that they will come back to us at Cayman Airways; and that Cayman Airways will stick to their side of the bargaining and try to make the best of the situation that we have.

Within a few weeks I am told that we should have the third aircraft in operation and the airline will be seeking to move with the implementation of a new schedule. There have been complaints, of course, from the pilots and from other members in the community that this schedule is somewhat ambitious. But I would say that for anything to work it will take teamwork. If there are concerns, then there are proper avenues for these concerns to be pointed. Together I believe the pilots, the remaining staff and the top management should and must sit down to resolve these problems, be it with the minister or the board (as was done last night for many hours at the hangar at Cayman Airways).

It was amazing to see the difference in the faces of the staff once they realised that top management and the board were willing to sit down and listen to their concerns. No, we were not able to solve all of the problems last night with Cayman Airways. But at least we were able to listen and gather the information. We answered what we could, and we did give an undertaking (for the information of this House and for the public) that we would do whatever it takes to ensure that our national airline would continue to survive for years and years to come. It has the full support of the government and I am sure of other honourable members in this House.

There must be prudent management and there must be fiscal financial control. There is a need for change. We all realise that. But we believe that that change must be done taking into consideration the culture and the traditions within the Cayman Islands. It must be fully realised that Cayman Airways, being a small company, has operated as a family for many years. People do take objection when they are passed in the hallways or in the airport and a hello is not said to them by management or by the board or by the directors. We realise that in larger operations this is not possible. But small things like this, saying "thank you" to the staff for the good work that they did in coping with difficult situation this past weekend, are some of the things that the staff asked for last night.

Again, I believe this will not cost us any money just a bit of our time to say 'Well done! You did a good job and we appreciate you.' I trust that from here on out we can put those difficulties behind us, whether they are of a personnel or technical nature, and really move forward with the main objective that Cayman Airways has to survive and that the importance of the national airline is of such a high level that we are prepared to do whatever it takes to support it within reason.

Now, Madam Speaker, if I could now turn my attention to the other issue I indicated I wished to speak on briefly this morning, and that is the issue of housing. On the surface, it would seem that we are quite a prosperous jurisdiction, and that there is very little housing concern. But when one takes the time to walk around the various districts (as I am sure most honourable members have done from time to time), we can see that the situation is not as rosy as the initial perception would be.

I have been fortunate enough to spend a number of years at the Central Planning Authority here in George Town. I have seen all types of structures, from the million dollar structures to the very poor. Believe you me Madam Speaker, I had a rude awakening some two Saturdays ago when I was invited by a teacher from the George Town Primary School to accompany her to see one of the structures—that's really an injustice but I can find no better term to describe what one of her students was residing in in George Town.

Just coming from commercial George Town it is a matter of seconds before one enters into this yard. For a while (I am not kidding you), I really felt that I was in Haiti or in Bolivia, South America, or one of those Third World countries. The best structure in that little area was a container that had been painted up with a wooden roof, and two glass windows put in it. Although I know from a planning perspective that containers are illegal, I must tell you, I could not find it within my heart to report those persons because that was the best structure in that neighbourhood.

I then proceeded with the teacher to go to the back of the container and there was a shack, to put it simply, I would venture to say about 8 x 18 to 20 feet. It's a single Caymanian mother living in the house and she has five young children. The reason that this teacher was able to ascertain that this was the situation was that she noticed that the 7-year old child (one of the five) . . . other students in her classroom were refusing to sit by this young child because of the poor manner in which he was attired and the poor physical hygiene that this child had. So, she arranged from her own personal money to purchase two uniforms for this child and to get permission from the principal of the school for the child to take baths at the school before school started.

Madam Speaker, this is Cayman. And I am really ashamed to have to speak of this, but I have taken the other avenues that I know that were available to me and I feel that I am compelled to bring this to the attention of honourable members. If there are any members that, for whatever reason, or any members of the public that do not believe it, trust me, I will take my time and get permission and show you the condition of this house in central George Town, which we can almost walk to from where we are now sitting today.

When I entered this structure, Madam Speaker, there was hardly any space there. There were holes in the roof, holes in the side because it is obvious that it was old material that was used to put it together. It is by no means even. I don't know how it even survives a Nor'wester. There are holes in the floor. There is no proper bathroom. There is electrical wires running all over with extensions. Madam Speaker, I think, what really got to me was when I asked the little boy, 'where is your bathroom?' and he pointed out to me a 5-gallon bucket that is being used by the five children and the mother in this little shack in George Town.

Madam Speaker, even as I speak, unless it was done this morning, the children are still attending school without free lunches and without proper uniforms. The teacher has made representation; the parent has made representation; I have made representation. And this morning I am making an honest plea to members of this honourable House to let's do something.

The response that I got from parent, the teacher, and the little child, is that, yes, they have gone to the Social Services Department. But because the department has so many other priorities and so little funding to deal with it, they are but just another one in that category who is waiting a turn.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that as an interim measure we as members of this honourable House can certainly put funds together even for the first three months to buy lunch and uniforms for these children until the Social Services Department can find sufficient money, whether it is through supplementary expenditure. Although I am by no means rich, Madam Speaker, I am quite prepared to give a sum of $500 towards this. I am not doing this for politics because members will appreciate that people vote for me in Cayman Brac and not in George Town. But as a parent, it has really affected the way that I think about what is happening in the Cayman Islands.

I believe that if we can set the example here today and donate this money . . . I am not asking for members to give X amount, but whatever your heart tells you to give. I believe it would show the people that members still care and are concerned about what is happening in our country. I would be happy to deliver it with members or as a representative of members to the teacher concerned, who I am sure would be happy because she has called me sometimes two or three times per day asking, "Julianna, what is the Government doing? What are the members doing? Have you made them aware?" I felt it was my duty and my responsibility to bring this to the awareness of honourable members because I am sure that this household is not the only one in George Town.

I believe that a survey should be done. I know that the census was done and we will get a fair understanding of the degree of this problem here in our community. But I know also that when people answer the census, although they are penalties, if they are in this situation they are a bit embarrassed to admit that they have to use a 5-gallon plastic pail for themselves and their children.

So, I believe that the time has come for a real serious study to be done on not just single women and poverty, but Caymanians and residents in poverty. It makes no sense to brag that we are the fifth largest jurisdiction from a financial perspective when we have poverty knocking us down and for whatever reason we don't seem to be able to find sufficient funding to dedicate to this cause.

Madam Speaker, please let me say before taking my seat that I am not doing this to embarrass any minister, any government, or anyone. It goes way beyond the political round. If I have done so, I am woman enough to apologise and to take whatever licks I may have to take for it. But I believe that the needs of these children must go higher than egos—and the need is urgent and it must be attended to. Therefore, if there is any member or anyone in the public who hears of this and wishes to assist, if they will contact me or I am sure my good friend, the honourable Minister responsible for Social Services, we will both be more than happy to help this family.

I would also call on the Lions Club, the Rotary Club and the Kiwanis or any other establishment who can find it within their conscience to assist this family with the construction of suitable housing accommodation or in the interim, rental accommodation. I believe when members see this house, if they care to, if it is within their own means they will have that family removed. It is such a disgraceful situation.

Madam Speaker, having said that, I wish to thank you for your indulgence and for your patience and all honourable members for allowing me this time to make this contribution to His Excellency the Governor's Throne Speech. And perhaps I diverged from the normal ambit of the contribution, but I felt that it was something I needed to do.

I pray God's blessing on the continued deliberations of this House, may He continue to give us wisdom, guidance and discretion as we undertake to carry out the high calling of this office. I thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to offer a short contribution to the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor on Friday the 18th February this year.

Let me say at the outset that His Excellency put a tremendous amount of time both in and out of office on the fine-tuning of the speech. I know on one occasion he worked for some seven hours straight out of office on it. I want to offer him my warmest congratulations on the speech.

I believe that the Throne Speech has a considerable amount of substance to it, and I believe the comment has been made in the past on the occasion of Throne Speeches that sometimes they are little bit thin on issues.

In his opening remarks, His Excellency commented on a number of initiatives and issues including positive developments in immigration with the work permit system, improvements to the patrol system, the development of alternative sentencing by the courts and the introduction of legislation for the creation of the post of Ombudsman. Madam Speaker, the public service will welcome such an appointment and we look forward to it becoming a reality.

His Excellency also announced the General Election to take place on 8th November. I want to take this opportunity to encourage Caymanians of all walks of life to check the voter's list and ensure if their name is not on the list and they are eligible to be on that list that they get the requisite form and do so. The last opportunity for persons to be registered will be in June, if they wish to vote in the general elections in November. I cannot over-emphasise the need for people to ensure that they are on the list if they wish to vote.

There will be no house-to-house enumeration of voters. I have had the Elections Office, Government Information Services, and the media put out a number of different calls. We have put out flyers, we have tried to do everything, and I know that all members of this House have worked very hard and continue to work very hard to get people registered. So, I again appeal to the public to make sure that they are registered. Voter registration cards will shortly be issued and we will no doubt hear some more about those shortly.

Madam Speaker, His Excellency also announced the retirement of the Cayman Islands Government Representative in the UK, Mr. Thomas Russell. He retires in August. I want to publicly thank him for all that he has done for this territory in his capacity as Cayman Islands Government Representative. He reports to my office and he is always two or three steps ahead of the rest of us.

Frequently when I arrive in the office in the morning there is a fax from him giving me information about certain things he has picked up, perhaps from a newspaper or from a meeting, whatever, pointing out the need for us to deal with it. The Honourable Second Official Member and the Honourable Third Official Member also receive their share of facsimiles and calls, and indeed His Excellency the Governor will get word from time to time from Mr. Russell. He has done an absolutely superb job. I can believe I can safely say he is in a class by himself and he has, I know, the respect of all members of this Honourable House. His Excellency will be arranging a suitable farewell for him a little later this year before he leaves office.

I also wish to congratulate Mrs. Jennifer Dilbert as Mr. Russell's successor. She is one of us, and a very able and well-qualified individual, and I think we are very fortunate to be able to get someone of her calibre. I look forward to her taking the reins of the London Office very firmly and carrying on the good work.

Madam Speaker, the Royal Cayman Islands Police Service (RCIP) has now moved to offering 24-hour patrol cover for Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac and, of course, for the completion of the police station in Little Cayman. This has been referred to in some detail before and I will not go over that, but I would say that there are RCIP under the able leadership of Commissioner Thursfield doing a good job. They have introduced a number of initiatives recently and one in particular I believe will be appreciated is the bicycle patrol. The criticism over the years that police officers breeze by in air-conditioned cars is one that could not be allowed to go on indefinitely. Of course, police officers travel long distances by car, but I believe that with police officers getting out on bicycles and on the beat, we are getting back to the old days.

I remember growing up in Cayman Brac and seeing a police officer riding a bicycle and that closer contact with the police did a lot for us there. I am sure the same thing happened here in Grand Cayman. I believe this will assure the public that they have police officers there to protect them. If they are visible on foot or on bicycles (and, of course, in cars) the people of this country will feel much safer.

Madam Speaker, the events at Northward Prison have been upsetting and distressing to every law-abiding citizen of this country. I first advised His Excellency the Governor of the trouble at Northward Prison by fax and phone calls in late April last year even before he took up duties as our Governor. As we all know in late September and early October, there were riots at the prison that culminated in the destruction of a large portion of that facility.

Madam Speaker, I believe that lessons have been learned from those events, and as a result, we are in the early planning stages of developing a modern, secure, penal facility for this country. A secure prison system has been long overdue for Cayman, and I look forward to seeing a maximum-security prison and a female prison constructed in the near future. Residents of this country deserve the right to live here without being afraid of prisoners on the loose. But to make this a reality, we have to build a secure prison to keep prisoners incarcerated.

Madam Speaker, a temporary Director was recruited for Northward Prison last November. Mr. Nicholas Brooke came and took command and dealt with many of the problems at the prison. It was indeed a daunting task but he took it on ably, assisted by Mrs. Clara Range, the Acting Deputy Director. They were assisted by the entire team at Northward. I wish to thank them all and in so doing, I wish to thank the Commissioner and the RCIP for all that they did and continue to do.

I also want to thank my Deputy, Mr. Donovan Ebanks for the support that he has given at Northward. As a former PWD Chief, he was right in his element as the rebuilding of Northward Prison took place.

Thanks must also go out to the Public Works Department and, in particular, to Mr. Tony Rowlands and his team for actually carrying out the work. In addition, the private sector firms that were involved in various capacities must also be thanked.

Madam Speaker, in about two weeks time, the 24 new cells now being constructed at Northward should be ready, I am told. Once completed, the male inmates of Tent City will move back into Northward and the females now housed at the East End Civic Centre will be relocated to Tent City. Hopefully, we can return the East End Civic Centre to the residents of that district. I do thank them for their patience and their tolerance, particularly over the Christmas time, when the Civic Centre would certainly have been needed. I thank everyone for the cooperation.

Madam Speaker, much has been said about immigration, the Immigration Department and the Immigration Board in recent times. However, under the able leadership of Mr. Orrett Connor, his two deputies, and their entire staff, I believe that the Immigration Department has moved forward from strength to strength. They have a most difficult task. One of the serious deficiencies which the department is faced with today is overcrowding and the lack of space in the building on Elgin Avenue. However, it is hoped to begin an expansion project to house the Trade and Business Licensing Section and the Board next month with a proposed completion date before the end of the year.

I recently announced Government's plans for changes in the work permit system. It is hoped that when these are implemented the public will find them helpful. One of the issues that I mentioned was the abolition of character references for persons that would actually be employed on work permit. I think there are some concerns that those character references perhaps should not be abolished. Madam Speaker, I am not sure about you, but I have yet to see an unfavourable (or if I could use the word bad) character reference submitted by anyone.

I believe the character references have a part to play. In fact, I think they have a very important part to play. But if someone is coming from overseas and they bring character references with them, you bet your bottom dollar that those character references are all favourable. If they are not favourable then the person is not going to give the reference to their employer to submit. So, I submit that character references handled in that form will serve no useful purpose to the Immigration Board or to the country.

Now, we could deal with character references in a different way. We could, if we wanted to and as is done in exceptional circumstances in other fields, seek references from official sources, and even through Interpol. But my concern with that is that it is going to slow down the work permit process more than it is today and with work permit applications taking about six weeks to be processed, if the Secretariat has to wait to write back to a country and get them . . . and even with the advent of facsimiles there are times when things will be slowed down. At this stage the government felt it was best to simply abolish the character reference in the form that it is now submitted.

I daresay the issue can be revisited later on, but I believe there is some onus on the prospective employer, as well, to find out something about the person that he or she is applying for. I think it is important that they know as much as they can about the person's character or background. So, the reference requirement as it stands today will be discontinued and that issue may be revisited in another form.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member is this a convenient point to take the morning break?

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.30 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.52 AM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable First Official Member continuing his debate.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When we took the morning suspension, I was speaking about the Immigration Department and immigration matters, and in particular, the question of the abolition of character references for work permit applications. I simply want at this time to thank the Chairman of the Immigration Board, Mrs. Sharon Roulstone, and all the members of that Board, for all the work they do for this country. In doing so, I also want to thank Mrs. Berna Cummings and the Chairman of the Trade and Business Licensing Board and all members of that Board for an equally difficult task, and yet one that they carry out regularly and one that I believe they do to the best of their ability.

I think these boards have a very difficult and a very thankless task. If they do a good job, we never hear anything about it. If the public thinks that they don't do a good job, we hear a lot about it! But I do thank them. They put in very long hours and I thank them for all that they do.

Madam Speaker, I would like to turn to comments made by the Third Elected Member for West Bay in his contribution when he spoke about some of my areas of responsibility. He asked in that contribution that His Excellency the Governor request my resignation. Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the House why I believe the Third Elected Member has asked that His Excellency call for my resignation.

The answer simply is that I had to slap his hand for his political interference with the Immigration Board.

Madam Speaker, he has every right to say that all is not well in paradise. With your indulgence, I am going to read a letter that I received from the Chairman of the Immigration Board dated 23rd December 1999. It was written to me as Chief Secretary and it says as follows:

"Dear Mr. Ryan: I wish to bring to your attention an incident involving MLA, John Jefferson, Jr. and members of the Immigration Board earlier this month. [that is, in December 1999]

She goes on to say, "On 9th December, I received a voicemail message from Mr. Jefferson, Jr. wherein he quite sternly expressed his disappointment regarding a decision by the Board of a matter in which he had no obvious interest. He was very upset and I would imagine based on what he said was going to let others know of his disappointment with, and take action against the Board. For that reason, I feel I should provide you with the background to the incident.

“Sometime in late 1998, the Immigration Board considered an application submitted by Lacovia Condominiums for one Mr. Dwight Tyndale as a gardener. In its deliberations, the Board noted that Mr. Tyndale had a recent conviction for assault causing grievous bodily harm and further noted that Lacovia already had the services of a gardener. For these reasons the application was denied.

“Sometime in early to mid-1999, Mr. Jefferson made several requests to appear before the Board to discuss a separate application which the Board had also previously denied and he was given an opportunity to present his case.

“Although the application for Mr. Tyndale was a completely separate issue, Mr. Jefferson, Jr. raised that matter in the same meeting with the Board giving the background to the assault charge and ardently defending the ‘good’ character of Mr. Tyndale.

“Subsequent to that meeting, Mr. Jefferson, Jr. contacted me via telephone almost begging that the application in respect of Mr. Tyndale be reconsidered by the Immigration Board on the basis that Mr. Tyndale had a family to support in Jamaica and that the Board was unreasonably denying him the “right” to work in Cayman.

“I advised Mr. Jefferson, Jr. that he was not an interested party to the application and, therefore, he could not instruct the Board to raise the matter again. I advised that if Lacovia still had a need for the services of a gardener, they would be the proper party to request a reconsideration of the Board’s decision.

“Several months lapsed with no correspondence but the matter was eventually brought back to the Board during the week of the 6th December 1999. The two-line letter from Lacovia was not persuasive and, again, the Board took into account the conviction.

“It also noted that by now an entire year had lapsed since the Board had heard the original application and, therefore, without any apparent change of circumstances it was hard to justify that a need still obtained in this case. The Board again refused the application and, again, it appeared that Mr. Jefferson, Jr. had more of an interest in the application for Mr. Tyndale than did the proposed employer.

“I then received the following voicemail message from Mr. Jefferson, Jr. This was the 9th December at 4.05 p.m. ‘Hi Sharon. This is John Jefferson, Jr. I am just calling to say how disappointed I was to learn that despite all the efforts that we put forward and all the personal telephone calls from yourself that things would be okay with regard to Dwight Tyndale that your Board still refused the application.

“‘You can give them a personal message from me. Tell them that I am not a nice person to play games with and I will do whatever I can in my power to see to it that, you know, they, the whole Board, is just demolished. As far as I am concerned there are too many double standards, too many inconsistencies and I will be dealing with them on a personal basis.

“‘Thank you very much. Bye-bye.’

“On the Monday following, I played this message back to the Board members who were all concerned that not only the words spoken but also the tone of Mr. Jefferson, Jr’s voice were clearly threatening and they wished for me to bring this unfortunate matter to your attention.

“I personally found his message disturbing and entirely inappropriate especially as he was an uninterested party to the application.

“Further I wish to make it clear that I gave Mr. Jefferson, Jr. no undertaking that things would be okay with regard to Mr. Tyndale, as I have no such power to guarantee the result of a Board decision.

“I stand by the Board’s decision and trust that in future the Board will not be subjected to political pressures of this nature. Should you wish to discuss the matter further and should you wish to have a copy of Mr. Jefferson Jr’s taped message, please do not hesitate to let me know.

“Best wishes for a peaceful happy Christmas and New Year.

“Yours faithfully [signed] Sharon E. Roulstone, Chairman of Immigration Board.” And it is copied to His Excellency the Governor of the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, I then wrote to Mr. John Jefferson Jr. on 7th January 2000 as follows:

“Dear Sir: I am in receipt of a letter from the Chairman of the Immigration Board bringing to my attention an incident involving you last month.

“On 9th December 1999, the Chairman received a voicemail message from you in which you quite sternly expressed your disappointment over a decision made by the Board in a matter which you had no obvious interest. The matter related to an application by Lacovia Condominiums for Mr. Dwight Tyndale as a gardener. The Board denied the application.

“In the message which you left for the Chairman you expressed your disappointment when the Board refused the application and asked to give them a personal message from you stating that you are ‘not a nice person to play games with.’ You further stated that you will do whatever you can to see that the whole Board is demolished and you will be dealing with them on a personal basis.

“I cannot imagine what led you to indulge in such a blatant act of political interference. The additional element of menace and threat implicit in your comments is, of course, despicable. If you ever attempt to do such a thing again, I will not hesitate to expose your actions to the public through the media.

“You have been warned.

“Yours faithfully [signed] James M. Ryan” copied to His Excellency the Governor, the Chief Immigration Officer and the Chairman of the Immigration Board.

Madam Speaker, members of the Board were rightly worried about the threats made by the Third Elected Member for West Bay. I think it is absolutely disgusting to have political interference along with threats.

Madam Speaker, I do not believe there is any other Member of this Honourable House that would stoop to do such a thing. The Third Elected Member for West Bay should in my view be thoroughly ashamed of himself for this act. He has every right to say that all is not well in paradise. When political interference reaches these heights, all is certainly not well in paradise.

Madam Speaker, I have had phone calls and visits from members of the public, including persons from West Bay, and their message to me has been virtually the same in every case, it was, 'Do not let the Third Elected Member for West Bay get you down. He will be dealt with in the November elections.'

Madam Speaker, first a comment: I think the Third Elected Member for West Bay wasted his breath when he asked His Excellency to request my resignation. I can assure him this is not going to happen. And the advice I would like to give him is that he should have saved that breath for his campaign in the November elections. I think he is going to need it. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment, Communications and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Madam Speaker, I would like to join others who spoke before me in paying tribute to His Excellency the Governor on the presentation of a very comprehensive Throne Speech, being the first for His Excellency.

I guess there is nothing like hindsight: perhaps it would have added a little flare to this Throne Speech had we waited a few more days and had it delivered by the member of the Royal Family who will be visiting with us. I say this with the greatest of respect to His Excellency, but it is my opinion that it perhaps would have given the public a greater opportunity to come a little closer to the member of the Royal Family that will be with us in a few days.

Madam Speaker, it is my intention to deal mainly with the departments that fall under my ministry. But I will touch on a few areas that have always come into discussion especially during Throne Speech debates. I would like to begin with the Immigration Department.

Madam Speaker, for a country the size of the Cayman Islands we are still blessed knowing that we have in place a very good Immigration Department and also a good Immigration Board. Immigration in any country is never an easy task, and the Cayman Islands is no difference. It is my opinion that the reason we as Caymanians and even the visiting public know more of immigration matters in the Cayman Islands is simply because of the size and everyone more or less knows each other.

The big United States of America . . . I don't think there is any country in the world that has experienced more immigration problems than that country. The neighbouring territories around us, our friends in the Caribbean, it's the same thing.

Madam Speaker, it is a task that I honestly would not begrudge anybody for, having to police immigration in the Cayman Islands. It is a headache in itself and under the conditions . . . we constantly hear of the crowded facilities that the department and the board have to work from. We know of other problems that are experienced. I believe under the circumstances we are having a good job done by our Immigration Department.

I believe that as a government we must look at this from a positive point of view. Let us not dwell on what is happening. We need to look at the future and what can be done to make it better in the Cayman Islands. The fact remains that we tend to place emphasis on a certain group of people that are here in the Cayman Islands today, particularly Jamaicans. Madam Speaker, I am of the opinion that we need to have control, but we must be realistic about this.

As a small growing community, we do not have the Caymanian manpower that we need to exist the way that we have shaped our lives. We must depend upon labour from abroad. I am a funny person, but I believe that I would rather work with the devil I know. We have today in this country some of the best people in the world who happen to be Jamaicans! On the other hand, we have some that make it bad for all. But is there any difference with our people? We have good Caymanians and we have some that make it bad for us too. So, we have to look at this from a positive point of view and if there are individuals in this country, be they from Jamaica, Cuba, or Timbuktu, if they are not desired guests in our country, this is the control I am talking about that must be in place. We must weed them out, but let us not blame all and sundry for the couple of bad ones.

Some people believe that the answer to the problem is that we should switch from Jamaicans and go to another nationality. Madam Speaker, I believe that if we were to weigh the pros and cons of Jamaicans versus Hondurans versus any other country that we import labour from, we will find that we have equally as much problem with the other nationalities as we have with Jamaicans. In some instances, the problems I understand that are derived from other nationalities runs even deeper than the problems we have with the Jamaicans. I think all of this needs to be taken into consideration before a stand is taken with regard to blackballing, as they call it, the poor Jamaicans.

We have in this country today certain jobs that our Caymanian people are not prepared to do. And in most instances, those jobs are filled by Jamaican labour. It is something that at this point in time this country cannot do without if we are to survive. Madam Speaker, one that glares in front of me is construction, agriculture, for most of the work of that type we depend heavily on Jamaican labour. I believe with what has taken place as far as the construction boom in this country and the work of the Immigration Department, I believe they have done a pretty good job in policing the imported labour to these islands.

It is my opinion that if the department is now in need of better facilities, if the department is in need of more up-to-date equipment, if it is in need of more manpower, I think the time has come that we should supply that need before becoming critical of the task which they are actually trying to carry out. As I mentioned, it is not an easy task. It is one that we as a government must always try to be on top of. Therefore, it is our duty to give the department the necessary tools in order for them to carry out the job that we expect of them.

I would like to touch briefly on what was mentioned by His Excellency regarding the general elections. I believe that I am correct in saying that all elected members in here will probably be seeking to be re-elected with the exception perhaps one. What I would like to say today, Madam Speaker, is that I realise elections are never easy. God knows that if anybody in here knows it, I do. But let us first of all think of our country. Let us think of our families, and let us present ourselves to the public in a very, very special way. What I am saying is, let us all campaign on issues that concern us for our country but, let us all forget about bringing personalities into this election. Let us thank God that He has allowed us to take this country so far. Let us ask for His guidance as we enter into the campaign for the upcoming election.

Madam Speaker, mention in the Throne Speech was made and tribute was paid to a past Governor, Mr. Thomas Russell, who has manned our office in London for many years. I believe I can speak on this with some authority because I happened to have been a part of the government when it was decided that Mr. Russell would fill that post. At that time, as is usual in Cayman, there was much criticism over having this office established. But looking back today, if I had to do the same thing again I would do so, if I could be sure that we would have been recruiting an individual as competent as Mr. Russell has been.

His job in London has not been an easy one, but he certainly has assisted this country and many governments in many ways and has saved this country a lot of money especially on matters such as recruiting abroad. He will be sadly missed in that office. But, at the same time, I am so pleased to know that we have a person as competent as Jennifer Dilbert. And, Madam Speaker, I am sure you will smile when I say that I think a woman replacing Mr. Russell in London is a great move for this country. As Mr. Russell has done, I feel certain that she will always put her country first.

I will touch briefly on the Police. Madam Speaker, I must say that the Commissioner has been trying in his endeavours to make policing in the Cayman Islands better. I don't think many members have bothered Commissioners more than you and I with regard to having proper policing in our districts. We saw the problem many years ago and I am happy to know that we will soon have at least 24-hour police patrol cover in all districts. Although it came under heavy scrutiny a few days ago, I honestly believe that the recruitment of 24 more officers will be money well spent. We cannot expect the Commissioner to service the needs of policing in the islands if we do not give him the tools to work with.

I took note that there was some concern with regard to where the police officers will be recruited. Maybe, Madam Speaker, this could have been shared around a little more to the neighbouring territories. One has to take into consideration that each Member in this Legislative Assembly has seen this matter as a very urgent one. It would have taken a longer time if recruitment had to be carried out in various other islands rather than having 24 officers direct from the United Kingdom. That is my understanding, and for this I support the idea of bringing the officers.

Perhaps, when recruitment is being done next time it will be at a time when we can look around and try to get officers from their neighbouring territories. I am hoping with the additional 24 [officers] that the Commissioner will be able to distribute manpower throughout the three islands, not only putting bodies in the various districts but that we will see in the near future a decline in the problems which are brewed here in these islands today. I speak of burglaries, rapes . . . you name it, it has been happening.

In recent times, unfortunately it is true, we have heard of murders. We must give the police some credit where credit is due because in each case in a very short time the public could rest assured that individuals involved were brought to justice. I realise that like any other department, we have had our ups and downs in the Police Force. But as a small territory, we have to realise that we depend heavily on our police force. In other islands there are men in the reserves. As I understand in some places they are even termed "soldiers." But whatever comes under the line of defence in the Cayman Islands, we have to depend upon the poor old policemen.

I believe I am correct in saying that the only more ungrateful job than policing must be politics, because, as the old people say, you're damned if you do and you're damned if you don't.

We cannot sit back and worry about what is said. We as a determined Government to maintain law and order in our country must do what we think is right. I believe with the guidance of the Commissioner and the determination of the Government we can overcome some of the problems that presently exist here.

I am pleased to see that he has also put in place the Police who are now riding around the [districts] on bicycle. I believe that we lacked in that area for a long time. I am a believer in police presence and even on the main roads as we drive along, I believe it is better to see signs erected that say "Radar Ahead" rather than to see three police cars endangering their lives and the lives of the public trailing down somebody who may be speeding. I believe the signs posted at intervals have the same effect as somebody having to go out there and chase an individual.

So, Madam Speaker, I believe that with all that is being done at present, the Community Officers, the Police Officers visiting schools, I believe we are on the right track. What we need at this time is to make sure that we do not go backward but that we give the necessary tools to the Commissioner that we can move forward to try and stamp out the evils that have crept into our society.

With regard to Northward Prison, Madam Speaker, His Excellency was so right when he said there had been some painful distressing times over the last months over the happenings at Northward Prison. This is something that I as a politician and as a Caymanian would not like to encounter again in my lifetime. Not only did it cost this country money, but it created a lot of fear among our people—and not only our people but visitors alike. This is an area that we have voted funds for in recent times and I am aware that it came under some serious scrutiny, which it should have, but it was something that needed to be done.

As long as we are a growing country, we are going to have the criminal element and it is no good for us to turn our backs against it. We might as well face up to it and prepare for it. It is not something that we can be proud of, but we are no different from any other part of the world in this respect. This is something we have to live with and we must make it as secure as possible. I believe that if somebody commits a crime, he should be punished. There is but one way of offering the punishment and that is to carry out the sentence.

I am glad to know that we have service clubs that are prepared to work together with us in an effort to rehabilitate offenders. I believe that even if somebody commits a crime, at some time or the other, they will be placed back into society. Of course, they cannot just be abandoned so we must prepare ourselves to take them back. Whatever can be done in that area must be done as speedily as possible.

Madam Speaker, when I started I said I would spend most of my time on the departments under my ministry. Let me say that the main projects we hope to complete in my ministry in the coming year will be the study that was asked for by this honourable House, the study on construction aggregate and fill material, sometimes referred as the North Sound Study. In recent times, we have had presentations to Executive Council and members of this honourable House and we feel this is very important. A company has been contracted to carry out the work, CH2M Hill, which was highly recommended. It is our hope that by December we should have a report.

From the presentation that was made, I feel confident we will have a good report and that an in depth study will be carried out.

The Petroleum Storage and Handling Review is also being done by four consultants and we are looking forward to their report about the middle of the year.

With regard to our Telecommunications Office, I know Madam Speaker, that in your capacity as Elected Member for North Side, you did air certain concerns with regard to the department (which I will try to clear up) with radios. We have discussed this several times and I do have some more information.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: [Inaudible comment]

Hon. John B. McLean: I heard the First Elected Member for George Town talking about the audit. As I said in this House a few days ago, I have already commissioned that the audit be carried out.

With regard to the Telecommunications Office, it is now entering its fifth year of operation at the old radar site and it continues to provide Government with additional revenue from radio licences. Collections for 2000 are, once again, expected to approach the figure of about $100,000. Part of the increase in revenue is due to the continuing number of Cayman registered ships that are being added to the register.

The draft Telecommunications Bill has been further revised to include the establishment of the new telecommunications authority. This important legislation was recently commended by the Secretary General of the International Telecommunications Union (ITU) as a model for the countries in this region. It is now expected to come into force later on this year. The licensing matters, the regularisation of broadcasting licences is now in its final phase with both new and incumbent stations receiving their permanent licences. In the future, the new telecommunications authority will deal with licensing and regulatory matters.

Madam Speaker, when discussing the need for additional radios with the Commissioner a few days ago, I was asked that an audit be carried out on this department. I agreed, and I am pleased to say that I have instructed my ministry to go ahead and request this audit. So, that is in place. However, Madam Speaker, there were certain things that were mentioned in the newspaper with regard to cost of radios versus other departments and individuals being able to purchase radios much cheaper. I have had the department check into this and it is my understanding that the department (I think it was Civil Aviation) did buy radios for approximately US$500, which did not include freight and duty. The radios are not digital. The radios are not encryption capable and, therefore, it is not as safe a radio as what would have been bought by the Communication Department.

It is my understanding that radios can be purchased but cannot offer the services the radios mentioned here purchased by the department could do. So, I just thought I would bring that to the attention of the House and to let the House know that we are going on with the audit.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, are you at a convenient point that we can take the luncheon break?

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes, Madam Speaker, we can.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.43 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.22 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources continuing his debate.

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When we took the break I was dealing with communications under my ministry, and I would like to continue under that head.

Madam Speaker, the 911 Emergency Communications . . . let me say that this has been something that was long overdue in these islands. Thank God I can say that thus far it has been working well. My ministry is committed to ongoing training in the year 2000 and we see it very important with the increase in call load and a variety of incidents. We feel it is imperative that all of our staff members be trained to meet the new and unusual demands of that job.

This year, it is hoped that 911 will be hosting a training course co-sponsored with the Pan American Health Organisation. This will be opened to all emergency service personnel and we are hoping that it will assist them not only in the operation centre but out in the field also. The disaster management course teaches personnel coordination and organisation, and it will be designed to train all services to work as one unit.

The installation of the E911 address location has proven to be a great asset. This is an electronic mapping system that provides historical data as opposed to automatically updated. This has proven very helpful to the staff. I believe that as this unit grows a little older and with constant training and upgrading of the staff and equipment, we will see this continue to be a very helpful asset to this country.

Moving on to the AIDB and the Housing Development Co-op: This morning, the Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture spoke on the issue of the shortage and poor housing arrangements for some people. My ministry will continue to focus on supply and availability of housing for the lower income Caymanian. It is indeed a priority.

Last year we appointed a committee to look into ways and means to address the housing issue. It is expected that that committee will submit a report on its findings and make recommendations to my ministry by April. Based on the findings and recommendation of this report the Government will be able to formulate policies and develop strategies to assist lower income Caymanians who are not able to qualify under the Government Guaranteed Home Mortgage Scheme.

It was real sad to listen to what the Minister had to say this morning. I am certain, if each of us look around our various districts, we will see more of this. It is unfortunate but it is a fact. It is something that we have around us and we must address. It is long overdue.

I believe that with the number of banks around us there is no reason why funding for something like this should not be possible. I am going to appeal to the banking community in this country. With all of the large profits they boast of (having some 500 banks in these islands), I would think that one of the reason that they have been able to make these large profits is due to the harmonious surroundings offered in the Cayman Islands. Maybe the time is right when a small portion of those profits could be put aside to address this very serious matter.

I believe that what we heard here this morning should open the eyes of each and every person in this community. I feel sorry for that family, and it can only be corrected one way. I also believe that these are some of the reasons why we end up with problem children, problem teenagers, and eventually problem adults in our communities. What we heard here this morning leads me to believe that we could have a situation where a small family . . . we have kids who are surrounded by other children who (to put it mildly) perhaps have everything. And what do they have? Nothing! The jealousy must be there. That jealousy could lead from one thing to the other and God forbid that it may happen but it may be that somebody is weaker than the other. It could lead to somebody stealing to try to be on par with the other.

This is one isolated case and, like I said earlier, we can look around our various districts and I am sure we will see more of it. My appeal goes out to, as I said before, the banking community to come forward to assist Government.

Madam Speaker, many believe that Government can do everything. But it is much easier when there is a helping hand to help Government. I am sure that I have the support of my colleague, the Financial Secretary (because the banking community falls under his portfolio). But it would be interesting for us to do a survey among them to see what reaction we would get. I mean, I don't expect every bank to contribute the same amount, but I think it is fair to say those who can produce balance sheets with large profits or larger profits should no doubt contribute more.

Madam Speaker, I am not saying that they should just dish out money. It would be in a fund either controlled by Government or controlled by some responsible bodies. If it cannot be done as a donation to this country for all of the profits they make here, I believe that the money should be made available at a very low interest rate. I believe that if we can get to where we can nip this sort of thing in the bud, we will all profit in the end.

We have much prosperity in these islands. Unfortunately, we must be realistic about it. It is not evenly distributed. It is for us who are in a slightly better position to look after our less fortunate brothers.

Madam Speaker, my ministry has appointed the Housing Development Corporation to act as executing agent for Government in the administration of the Government Guaranteed Home Mortgage Scheme. It is expected that the transfer of this responsibility to the HDC will take place in the first quarter. We also continue through AIDB to administer the Government Guaranteed Student Loan Scheme on behalf of the Ministry of Education, and will make recommendations to the ministry as to how the scheme can be revamped to streamline its operation and improve the level of service to our customers. Again, this is a very important area. Enough emphasis cannot be placed on it because I am believer that where our people are best educated we can only profit in the end.

While I mentioned education, permit to say a little bit on how much has been said here in this House in recent times about education, teachers, administration, the department, the ministry, you name it. I believe today that we can boast of having an education system in this country equal to any other surrounding territory. As with anything, we are going to have our ups and downs. But we must be proud of what we have here for as small a country as we are.

Madam Speaker, when we went to school, if we saw a school bus we would probably run and hide. Today each district has available to them a school bus. Look at the air-conditioned classrooms in each district. Look at the high schools throughout the island. Look at the calibre of teachers. Look at the administration. Regardless of what anybody says about the present Minister of Education, let me say that that gentleman has dedicated his life to education in this country from 1976 until the present day. I think this country can be justly proud of his efforts in education.

I think it is very unfair for any Member to stand in these Chambers and downgrade something as important as education in this country in any way or form. If I stood here and said that I didn't have gripes with certain teachers, I would tell a lie. I am human. But I am not going to stand here and talk about it because when we discuss matters as sensitive as education today each home in this country is privy to radio and television. Those same teachers and kids that you are talking about know exactly what is said in this House and it must have an effect on our children.

Madam Speaker, teachers, in my view, are not ordinary people. I could not be a schoolteacher. It takes a special dedicated person to venture into the field of education. When I visit classrooms and I see what teachers go through for the short period of time that I am standing there, it leads me to really think what they go through for an entire day—an entire day and an entire month and an entire year. I don't think that we should in any way try to upset the teachers in this country. I think we should be in here praising them daily and asking the Good Lord to give them strength to fight a fight that we are not fighting because it is a fact that our kids spend more time in the classroom than they spend with us. So, who needs the support? In my mind's view, it is the teachers.

I must say that what was said in here the other day annoyed a lot of teachers. I got calls from several and I personally had audiences with some. In each case they were very hurt to know that remarks would be made on the floor on this House the way they were. I have no apologies for what I have said because I would like to apologise to the teachers in this country for anything that might have been said that would have upset them. Things like that can be avoided. If I have a problem with anything in education, I have no problem confronting my colleague or I have no problem speaking to somebody in education or face to face with the teacher. Thrash it out and don't involve children into something like this. Whether we believe it or not this is what has happened on this occasion.

Madam Speaker, I felt it was only right that I should put this correct. I am not acting as any whip, but I have been in this House long enough to know the areas that are very important to the backbone of this country. Any money invested in our youth today is money well spent. I would only encourage each and every one who is exposed to this high quality of education today to make the best of it and try to become good men and women to replace us in the tomorrow.

Madam Speaker, going back to the Department of Agriculture, I would like to say that a few days ago it was with a sense of pride that we held our 34th Annual Agricultural Show. I would like to publicly thank all of my colleagues who attended. I feel certain that I had the support of those who were absent. The Agricultural Show has proven to be no longer just a show. It has proven to be a family day for each and every one. The theme we adopted some years ago to make it bigger and better has really proven to be so. This last time we thought of a new theme for 2000, "Learning from our past, building for the future."

I believe the first stone has been placed in that with the success of the last show. And I would like to publicly say to the society, the members of the farming community, my ministry, my department, and all those who contributed in making that a success, a special thanks. Not only did it make me proud, but it was really touching to see how many families and friends to the island were able to come out in an environment where they were free from alcohol, could freely roam as they felt, and there was much for kids to do. This year, Madam Speaker, it was really pleasing to see the way the grounds have developed.

Sometimes it's hard for me to believe it is the same facility that I started some years ago, because when we started it was but open space with the Pavilion. I thank God that from my travels abroad I was able to bring back some knowledge especially in the introduction of the Agricultural Hall of Fame. Today that has been developed and promoted through the Department of Agriculture to where we have a fine facility, where the names, photographs, and history of agriculture are proudly displayed. It is something that all of us can be justly proud of because in each instance we have the names and photographs of hard-working farmers from the Grand Cayman and indeed Cayman Brac.

We are hoping that from the knowledge we have gathered thus far that next year the show will even be better than it was this year. I believe that is really and truly stretching it to make it better, but there is always that space for advancement.

I would like especially to pay special tribute to the farmers, those who, like I can think of in the district of North Side, Mr Daniel Rankin. We have in Cayman Brac, Margarita Chantilope. We have in West Bay, an 80-year old Mr. Bothwell (who is as I term it 80-years young) in the farming community. We have from all over those who have dedicated their lives. It makes me feel real proud especially on show date when those individuals can come out and participate. They can show their animals and their crops, and just their presence there really and truly makes one feel good.

In 1980 when I took over the ministry at the time, the first thing I endeavoured to do was to get more funds for the department. To see where we have come today, it really proves that agriculture can be of a greater success in these islands. The quality of produce and the quality of animals speak for themselves. As I said before, we can boast of quality. Before we had scrub cattle. Today, I would place a bet that we are equal to any of our neighbours and could also compete with neighbouring places like Miami where I have visited many farms.

Now that the farming community has shown what can be done, what is needed is support. Not only support from Government which has always been coming but we need support from the merchants, hotels and restaurants because the farmers are producing under very hard conditions. They cannot in any way compete with US markets. What we need to focus on in these islands is quality. Any hotel, any merchant, or any restaurant that actually utilises meats or produce from our farming community today can boast of the quality. We don't have mangoes, avocados, or citrus for example, that are forced ripe. We have quality fruits and vegetables in these islands. This surpasses cheap prices in my view.

While we are self sufficient, thank God, in certain crops in season such as mangoes, citrus, avocados, bananas and plantains, we need that added touch of assistance from the areas I have mentioned to show the farming community that what is being done is appreciated. I must say that we have been getting some support from some of the merchants and from some of the hotels, but there are still the larger ones that could do a little more in offering a helping hand to the farming community.

Madam Speaker, we know it's hard here in Grand Cayman, but it is nowhere near as hard as in Cayman Brac. Presently, Government has taken a stand to assist in any way we can over there. We have (as we have here) a bulldozer service. The farmers have complained for a long time, especially on the bluff, of a shortage of water. The Minister of Community Affairs on different occasions along with the Second Elected Member from Cayman Brac has put through the various needs in Cayman Brac quite forcefully. Thus far, I am most pleased to see that on show day, although their stall did not win, the presence was there.

From my knowledge of what is produced in Cayman Brac, only a small part was displayed.

I am most happy to know that it has been decided on a mini-show. This was said here today by the Minister of Community Affairs. I give them the assurance that with God's help, if I am alive I will try my best to be there. I think it's a move in the right direction and the people of Cayman Brac deserve it. I know that my ministry will be in full support along with my department of agriculture.

Another area that I must touch on, which has been an area of concern, is the Farmer's Market. I have said to the House before that Government has seen fit to have accountants do a business plan for the market and, hopefully, in a short time we shall be able to give a further report here.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that once we have that Farmer's Market operating the way it should be, that would be something that would greatly assist the farming community. It is a fact that although it was established, the Farmer's Market has always been under capitalised. I believe that once it's streamlined it will operate the way it should and provide the service to the farmers. It is very hard for someone who dedicates himself to farming on a daily basis, who relies on the sale of his crop or meat, to wait when his crops or his meat is taken to the market before he is paid. This is what I would like to see cleared up and to see the market rolling on a more or less cash basis whereby a farmer can receive his reward as he takes his crops or beef to the market.

The department continues to offer services to the farming community both here and in Cayman Brac. We are on 24-hour call, especially in the area of animal husbandry. We also have a team which will go from farm to farm and offer advice, or, in instances where other assistance is needed such as the need for trailers, bulldozers, and we have a spray team . . . all these try to work hand in hand with the farmers to make their crops and animals more profitable. It has been working well and the staff there has shown their dedication to this cause. I must commend them for the work they have been doing.

Again, like the farmer, the job of those in the department is never easy. They should be encouraged as I try to do as much as possible.

Madam Speaker, I would like to turn now to the Department of Environment, to say that in the year 2000, the Department of Environment will continue ongoing projects and programmes aimed at enabling suitable management of our natural environment and resources. As everyone in here is aware . . . and a few weeks ago I was most happy that we could visit the garbage site here in George Town. We are all aware of the problems we are faced with. After returning from that trip, I was most happy for the support which was rendered to the department in assisting us with some equipment so that the job can be carried out much better than before.

We have an ongoing problem with clean-ups, which has suffered to a certain degree in months passed from the lack of equipment to carry out the job. This we are somewhat overcoming at this time. I would like to say that especially the Second Elected Member from Bodden Town—who never fails to bring it to our attention when garbage is seen by her—has on more than one occasion brought to my attention various areas that deserve a clean up. Right now (as is usual with Royal visits), she is very much concerned about it and the department will be focusing and doing as much as time will permit prior to the arrival.

Madam Speaker, we have to look at the future in this area. We are trying to protect and plan for what is going to be needed and that is not only on a one-time yearly clean-up but what will take to keep the island as clean as possible. This is not an easy task, but I believe with the experience and helpfulness of the public, co-operating and working together, much can be done to reach the goal we have set out for.

Again, we have to respect the persons who actually carry out this job because it is not an easy one. Nobody realises how hard it is on an individual who has to face the sight and smell the odours of garbage. The only thing that is a concern at some times is to make sure that garbage is collected. But I take my hat off to those individuals who are in the frontline there facing this tiresome job. I would say that I have heard comments from visiting ministers and other dignitaries to these islands, who are so happy to see the way that our islands are kept—the cleanliness. It is good to know that we can hear this from visitors because we know within ourselves how hard we try to maintain and to keep this as an ongoing project. There is more to be done and here I appeal . . . and I know already that some of the schools have been doing a wonderful job in assisting. But it is the one place we can really get to the young people and on into the homes as we encourage it through the schools the importance of disposing of garbage properly instead of littering.

I am hoping as I mentioned here before that eventually we will work out the problems which exist with regard to exporting bulk garbage from the country. I am sure that once this is up and going we will be able to see a lot of changes. The biggest problem today that face this country is actually bulk materials such as old cars, old heavy equipment—stuff that is really hard for us to bury anymore for the lack of space. But I believe, Madam Speaker, if we keep at it we will no doubt succeed.

I would like to touch on M.R.C.U and to say that we are hoping in the year 2000 to develop a safer and more efficient type of aerial spraying against the biting mosquitoes. We are hoping to utilise less of that and to utilise more of the pellets.

I know there has been much concern with regard to the area of spraying and for this reason we have constantly tried to keep it to a minimum. We have been encouraging the larvacide pellets that actually deal with the mosquitoes in the very early stages. Ongoing research is done through the lab. Thank God that thus far things seem to be going pretty good.

Also in 2000, in the sister islands the department will conduct a review of mosquito control services with a view of intensifying improvements over there and also in developing new methods of control.

As we reflect on years gone by, regardless of what we may say, we can see that the work of M.R.C.U. has paid off and is paying off. I am sure I am correct in saying that without the efforts there, and the support of past governments and present, we would not enjoy the tourism boom and the financial boom that we boast of. As I mentioned, the department is making every effort to slow down on aerial spraying and I hope and trust that it will be the right thing in the end.

Madam Speaker, the Lands and Survey Department will continue to provide quality land-related services not only to Government but indeed to the general public.

This year we will see the publication of the first street atlas of the Cayman Islands. Also, we will be seeing the launch of the website, initially to provide information about the department and its services, and then later on to deliver some of those services electronically and finally to establish access to a National Land Information System.

That department plays a vital part in the financial sector, and every effort is being made and has been made to have it run as efficiently as is possible. We have some very knowledgeable Caymanians and dedicated staff as a whole working in that department. As we go along, we can see their endeavours to promote and to put forward easier methods to deal with the various transfers of land and other services which are actually done through that department.

Madam Speaker, I would like to turn to our Postal Department, first of all to say how good it is to know that we have accomplished another new facility in Grand Cayman, that of the Post Office in Bodden Town. It is a fact that that district was long overdue for proper facilities and today they can be justly proud of what is there. I know I had the support of the members from that district who were also very concerned about the age of the building and the location of the building from a safety point of view. Also, Bodden Town being a district that is fast growing it was a concern from the point of view that the services could not be offered as they should be. I would like to thank them for their support and endeavours to make this right. Today we can boast of a fine facility there.

We are hoping that the new post office in my district—the district of East End—will be the next one for us to tackle. It will be on an alternate site from where the present one is. The reason being is that the site is too small and we are trying to focus on facilities that will not only be for today but will take us well into the future.

We also have plans in place for replacement of post offices in Savannah and West End, Cayman Brac. Also, Madam Speaker, the post office anticipates the capture of the youth philatelic market in 2000. A stamp issue based on the popular United States Children Television Workshop Sesame Street was issued on the 15 February. The Cayman Islands Post Office was honoured to have been chosen by the promoters as one of the first postal administrations to be included in the programme. The Philatelic Bureau is looking towards advance technology including e-commerce.

Looking towards the future is planned acquisition of integral retail terminals that will reduce customer waiting time at counters. We see this as a step forward and no doubt it will facilitate the long waits. The new post office at the airport is working well. I know a past [minister] who was responsible for this, the Third Elected Member from George Town, Mr. Pierson, did much when he was responsible for postal services to make what we have today—especially in the new post office at the airport—a reality. For this, I am most grateful.

Madam Speaker, I would like to touch briefly on the Water Authority and to say that I am really pleased to know that the supply of water will soon be to the main district of East End. It is expected that there will be water available to Gun Bay by Election Day. We are hoping that by the year 2001 we will definitely have water to the main hotel area in my district, Morritt's Tortuga Club. Of course, we have not forgotten water for other areas where we know the demand happens to be, like North Side. We are hoping that this will be the next project for the Water Authority.

As was mentioned by the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, we realise there is also a problem with water in Cayman Brac. We will be working towards trying to do whatever possible to alleviate this problem. Again, in trying to move eastward with the water supply, we have come up on some problems that we did not think were going to be as hard as they are with regard to piping the water. Although it is going slow, we still believe that it will meet the deadlines that we have actually set.

Madam Speaker, we cite this as a very important area, that is, the production of water for this country. I am pleased to know that we have a Board of Directors that operates the Water Authority, and we have good staff and management. The production has been going well and we believe that this year with all of the various things that I have mentioned that we will be able to fulfil the needs in those areas and thereafter concentrate on other areas that are also in need.

I would like to touch briefly also on the Turtle Farm. Madam Speaker, I must say that I am very pleased with the farm and its operation to date. A few years ago, we had several changes at the farm, and while at that time it what had to be done might have seemed a bit harsh, I think it was the right thing to be done. We have proven in various areas that the farm can operate successfully. We are now producing sufficient meats so that everyone is able to purchase meat when they need to. We have been able to do some upgrading to facilities at the farm, and I would like to say that I am proud of the staff complement that presently exists at the Cayman Turtle Farm. We have in place two very competent Caymanians who have a very dedicated staff—mostly Caymanians—and it has been proven that working together can create great success. It is a great example of that.

It is my hope that with the additional upgrading that we will be doing that the farm will be an even greater attraction for the selling of the Cayman Islands. It is renowned as the only one in the world and we have been doing everything possible to keep its popularity at its highest.

Madam Speaker, I would like to just say a few words now on the national airline. To say that Cayman Airways is political is saying a whole mouthful, because Cayman Airways was born in politics. From day one it has been nothing but a political football. With all of the evils said about our national airline, there is much good that has been passed on throughout the Cayman Islands from the airlines. We can think of jobs. We can think of a service that has been provided. Most people reflect only on what it is costing the country. I am the first one to say, yes, it is costing the country money. But what are the spin-offs?

When we think of an airline on a daily basis, we see three to five different companies flying into this country. Madam Speaker, I don't think one of those companies is not subsidised by their respective governments. We make a great hullabaloo when funds have to be pumped into our airline but, again, we must look at the pros and cons. Regardless if it is costing or not, we must think of the services that are given.

I know there is much said about ageing aircraft, but let us reflect on the equipment that is presently used by numerous airlines. It is the same type we are using. While I am not full of knowledge in the area of airlines, it is my understanding that for the simple reason that certain checks are made (C-checks or whatever it is called) that aircraft can be brought back as good as new. It is unfortunate that we have had what has taken place over the last week [but] the airline still has my support.

The staff of the airline also has my support because I don't believe its an easy task when somebody has certain equipment to operate with and at one stage or the other you find yourself with no aircraft to operate with. I believe that we have some dedicated staff. I also believe that we have some that are actually stirring this a little more than it should have been stirred. I am not a believer that every time one cracks, you should be on television or radio with it. I do not believe that is the answer to problems. Most times, it ends up as airing your laundry in public rather than trying to stay behind doors working it out. I honestly believe in this instance, perhaps a little more tact should have been used in trying to work with what we have rather than trying to put it down.

Madam Speaker, I have been here long enough to know that new airplanes are not necessarily the answer. I was here when we had 727s that were condemned. Yet today, most airlines that are coming in here are proudly flying the 727s. It is my belief that we would have been better off if we had kept the ones that we had, but it's no use in crying over spilled milk. I have been here long enough to see governments that have taken the chance to purchase new aircraft or to lease purchase new aircraft—did that answer the problem? No, it did not. Maybe to the reverse, it might have put us a little worse off than we were initially. Again, we must continue to try to work with what we have.

If there is some discrepancies with staff, it is my hope that we will have that worked out. We have a competent minister and we have a competent board that will be able to sit and to thrash out the differences. I hope this will be done in the interest of the national airline and indeed the Cayman Islands.

Regardless of how many airlines fly into Cayman, I am of the belief that we should try our endeavours to maintain our national airline. I don't know about others, but I feel a sense of pride when I step on board one of our national airplanes knowing that in the cockpit, most times, it is our people.

I know that much work has already been put into this. I believe that once we have the third aircraft on line, things will be worked out in a better way so that the travelling public—especially visitors to our shores—will not have to undergo what has taken place recently. I can imagine it must have been very upsetting to some, and I can also put myself in the place of staff members having to deal with this problem. But where there is a will we can overcome it.

Lastly, Madam Speaker, I would like to touch on an area which over the years has been very sensitive to all members here, and that is roads throughout the islands. I realise my colleague has been working to maintain roads—

Madam Speaker, the First Elected Member for George Town is edging me on to tell everything. I am going to do that!

What I was about to say is that if he and his colleagues on the other side would give my good colleague here, the minister with responsibility for roads, some more money we would be able to carry on the wonderful work that he has started. I am speaking here especially for the eastern districts—

[Inaudible comments]

The Deputy Speaker: Could we continue the debate and stop the cross-talk throughout the Chamber please?

Hon. John B. McLean: Madam Speaker, I was dealing with roads and I will continue. I was saying that especially in the eastern districts we need for the work that has been started and which I must say has really improved the services to the travelling public . . . it is a pity that we could not spread that a little further into East End and North Side. I feel certain that with a little more dinero that the works will be carried out. So, I am making an appeal on behalf of the Elected Member for North Side and I to try and offer us some help in that area.

Madam Speaker, I would like to say how pleased I am with the many things that have been mentioned in the Throne Speech. I will close by saying that with all that has been said in this Chamber and outside, I believe that the present Government has done well. We have been criticised but, of course, there is always room for improvement. We have worked hard with what we had to work with and the most we can do is to try and continue to do what is best for these beautiful islands. In closing I would say, God bless the Cayman Islands.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to speak I crave the indulgence of this honourable House to say a few words before I put the motion on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency.

I speak from this Chair as Deputy Speaker, and I am aware that this procedure has been set in other parliaments. There is precedence. Having had to take the Chair because of the illness of the Honourable Speaker, I did not have the opportunity to debate the Throne Speech, so I now humbly ask all Honourable Ministers responsible to take note of the needs of the district of North Side.

Number one, the need of that district is a senior citizen's centre.

Number two, the completion of the Frank Sound Park as well as the park in the Hutland.

Number three, the teacher that was approved just recently in the budget so that we can have separate teachers for our classes rather than two classes being taught by one teacher in the primary school.

Number four, the completion of the Old Man Bay Playing Field with covered bleachers and asphaltting of the parking area. I look forward to the official opening of that facility.

I also look forward to coaches. We have the facilities in that district for basketball, football and volleyball, and I request of the honourable minister whatever help can be given to provide coaches so that we can keep our youth involved rather than on the streets would be appreciated.

Number five, to the honourable minister responsible for the licensing authority. There are three persons in my district that have these bus licences to operate and they have approached me concerning the letter that has recently been written that only Caymanians will be allowed to drive these buses. I ask the honourable minister to look favourably on these persons in North Side because it is rather hard for us to find Caymanians to carry out this job for these three people.

Number six, the need for a public beach in Old Man Bay for the people of that area, as there is no public beach facility. Everybody has to travel to the Kibo and whatever assistance can be given to the people of Old Man Bay with providing a public beach would be most appreciated.

Number seven, roads. I look forward to the repairs and maintenance of the roads in the district of North Side and I also look forward to a fair share of the asphaltting money in the year 2000 since North Side got nothing in 1999.

Number eight, farm roads so that we can assist the farmers in the district of North Side that they can produce even more than they have been producing seeing it was the district of North Side that just won the Agricultural District.

Number nine is of interest to the entire island but I am not going to delve into national issues. It also affects the women of my district that may be involved in abuse. A place of safety for the women and children that are living in abuse situations.

Number ten, legislation to assist the physically challenged, particularly the amendment to the traffic law prohibiting people from parking in spaces reserved for the handicapped which affects my people in the district of North Side when they come to George Town to do their shopping.

Number eleven, listen to the concerns of the people of my district and the district of Bodden Town regarding the wetlands. I implore the Government to bring proper terms of reference for the use of the Environmental Protection Fund so that the people in the district of North Side and Bodden Town who may wish to sell these lands . . . the Government will be in a position to purchase rather than to declare them central mangroves without giving the people any money.

To the Government and Members of this Parliament I say there are serious issues facing these islands. I say to the Government that taking action to deal with these issues is much cheaper than the cost of reaction. Thank you very much.

The debate on the address delivered by His Excellency the Governor having now been concluded I shall put the motion. “BE IT RESOLVED THAT this Honourable Legislative Assembly record its grateful thanks to His Excellency the Governor for the address delivered at this meeting.” I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. The motion has duly been passed.

AGREED: THIS HONOURABLE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY RECORDS ITS GRATEFUL THANKS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR FOR HIS SPEECH DELIVERED AT THIS MEETING.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.35 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.56 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Other Business, Private Members' Motions, Private Member's Motion No. 1/2000, Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner/Occupied Homes. The Third Elected Member for the West Bay.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 1/2000

REDUCED COST OF MORTGAGE FINANCING FOR CAYMANIAN OWNER/OCCUPIED HOMES

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg your permission to move Private Member's Motion No. 1/2000 entitled, Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner/Occupied Homes that reads as follows:

“WHEREAS the Cayman Islands boast of unprecedented economic growth and prosperity and a standard of living unparalleled in the region;

“AND WHEREAS some steps have been taken by the Banks and Government to make first time homeownership a reality among a greater number of Caymanians and a large number of potential first time Caymanian homeowners continue to experience difficulty in qualifying for mortgage financing due to insufficient income and the high interest charged;

“AND WHEREAS many of these Caymanians are experiencing severe frustration, hopelessness and general discontent because of the situation and this could be a cause that could lead to the destabilisation of our society;

“AND WHEREAS it has been proven that homeownership adds to the stability of any society;

“BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED that Government takes the necessary steps to meet with the commercial banks that offer mortgage financing with a view of negotiating preferred interest rates especially for Caymanian owner occupied homes.”

The Deputy Speaker: Is there a seconder?

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, I beg to second that motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 1/2000 has been duly moved and seconded. Does the mover wish to speak to it?

The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The issue of housing is a very important and critical one here in the Cayman Islands. On a daily basis, I would say elected representatives and others are confronted and approached by members in our community that are finding it very difficult indeed with regard to affordable housing, in particular, the difficulties experienced with regard to qualifying for a mortgage.

Madam Speaker, this is an issue that I feel has to be addressed rather quickly because in an island that boasts of unprecedented economic growth and prosperity. Many of our people are becoming very frustrated and a lot of them have also lost hope of ever having an opportunity of owning their own home.

You know, Madam Speaker, up until yesterday or the day before, at my MLA Office in West Bay I had a gentleman and his son come to see me so that I could assist them with the transfer of a piece of property from the father to the son. I had to remark to them that the Caymanian today, who is fortunate enough to still have some property that they can assist their children with in regard to a home, is very fortunate. There are very few indeed.

Madam Speaker, today when we hear of an average house lot that is 100 x 100 costing on average $25,000 - $35,000, it makes it extremely difficult for our people to ever realise the dream of owning a home. I am quite sure you found yourself in the position where you had parents that had the foresight or were fortunate enough to have acquired some property. When you were ready to build . . . or when I was ready to build I could go to my father and he was able through love and affection to transfer a piece of property to me at a very nominal cost, maybe $25 or $35. Even today in order to be able to do that it is still only $70, but that gives that young Caymanian a very great advantage with regard to the possibility of owning a home.

Madam Speaker, the other difficulty is that the cost of construction has increased to such a level in this country that I shudder at the thought of what young people are faced with in regard to a mortgage. The only way we are going to be able to ever realise a home in this country is by borrowing money.

Madam Speaker, I recall in 1975 when I was building my home, I borrowed a total of $30,000 from the bank. I was able to build a home in excess of 2,400 or 2,500 square feet—a three-bedroom home. Today, we have a nice little development in West Bay by Frank Hall and I think the average price for a one-bedroom home is $119,000, and a two-bedroom is like $130,000. People today have gotten so used to the high cost of living, that is considered reasonable.

The difficulty that we have had is that even though the cost of living has gone up, wages and income have not kept pace. So today you are asked to find $130,000 to build or buy a home but the average person in this country I would say is probably earning in the region of about $1,500 to $2,000 a month. Now, when you take into consideration the fact that there are other living expenses utilities, food, gas for a car, school fees and all of the other incidents that go along with living, it makes it very difficult indeed for our young Caymanians, in particular, to have available the income that they need in order to qualify for a mortgage.

Now, Madam Speaker, I would say that over the last five years we have made some progress with a greater number of Caymanians qualifying for a mortgage in this country. I want to congratulate in particular the First Elected Member from West Bay who when he was Minister for Housing came up with a very creative plan to make this reality more of a possibility here in the Cayman Islands by offering Government's Guaranteed Housing Programme.

The way that programme works is that you walk into a bank and say that you are looking for $120,000 for a home. They will ask 'What's your income?'

'Yes, you do qualify but in order for you to be approved you have to find 20% or 30% of that money yourself and then we will pitch in the rest.'

There are a very few of us who can put our hands on $20,000 - $30,000 in cash in order to make that possible. What happens with the Guaranteed Housing Scheme Programme is that Government has basically said to the banks 'if you are happy with this person as a client and if he does qualify for your consideration then we will be prepared to guarantee you that 20% or 30% that you are asking them to take out of their own pocket.'

Madam Speaker, it is amazing how many people have benefited as a result of this particular plan. I did request some statistics on how successful this plan has been, and, with your permission, I would like to give you those statistics. It is broken down also between the banks that are involved in the scheme, for example,

| Bank                  | Number of mortgages approved to-date | Dollar value of mortgage |
|-----------------------|--------------------------------------|--------------------------|
| CIBC                  | 144                                  | $15,477,921             |
| British American Bank | 31                                   | $4,384,848              |
| Bank of Butterfield   | 15                                   | $1,356,455              |
| TOTAL          | 190                           | $21,219,224      |

Like I said, that scheme has been in place over the last 4 or 5 years. As far as delinquency, I am told Government has never been called upon to make good on any of those guarantees.

Madam Speaker, I recall a number of young Caymanians . . . and it is normally the young Caymanian couples that basically qualify for this consideration. They ask how the programme works, and you explain it to them and you guide them as to whom to talk to in the banks. Madam Speaker, what a difference when that young person or couple can come back and say, 'Thanks we qualified.' You can see the spring in their step, the confidence and the hope that they exhibit as a result of the possibility of owning a home.

Madam Speaker, we need to make the issue of home ownership more of a reality in this country. Probably just a year ago, I was at shopping at Foster's at the Strand. And I ran into one of my constituents there from West Bay. He said to me, 'Mr. Jefferson, I am retiring' I think he said the next day. I said, 'Oh, congratulations that's the day I am looking forward to seeing myself.'

I said, 'What are your plans?' He said, 'Mr. Jefferson, I am going to retire, but I am not going to retire here in the Cayman Islands. I really just cannot afford it. I am going to move to Costa Rica. I was able to build myself a nice 3-bedroom home for about US$25,000.' He said, 'Let me tell you, that home is well built and it lacks nothing and I am getting it for US$25,000 or US$30,000.'

Madam Speaker, I am not sure that we will be able to get back to the point where the cost of housing is around $25,000 or $30,000 in this country. I think that is a thing of the past. But what we have to do in this country is be sensitive to the hopes and aspirations of our young people and we need to make those aspirations a reality. We have a problem in this country where once we make it, we kind of forget about other Caymanians that live among us that may not be as fortunate as we are. Also, we as a people have a tendency to try to lash out at other nationalities here who are able to work together, are able to assist one another, and before you know it they own a home or business. Why? Because they work together.

Madam Speaker, not too long ago that was a way of life here in the Cayman Islands where if you were building a home and I knew about it, I would come and help to mix cement, lay blocks or do whatever I had to do in order to assist. By doing this we reduced the cost of that construction. Today, that is not the way of life in this country.

Madam Speaker, one of the difficulties that we have is that . . . let me give the banks credit. They have done a tremendous job of making mortgage financing more affordable and more available in this country. Right now, I think banks on average probably request you to find 10% to 15% of the requested mortgage amount, which is a tremendous difference from where it came from. I remember when I was thinking about building, I had to find one-third of what the estimated cost of my home was going to be. That has helped.

The other thing they have done is extended the repayment period to a longer period of time, which means on a monthly basis the repayments are much more affordable to the mortgage holder. The reason for this motion is to ask Government . . . I am not saying force the banks to do anything because I am one who would prefer to deal with cooperation and negotiation first rather than coming to that approach. I believe that much can be done through the process of cooperation in order to make the reality of mortgage financing more available to a larger number of our people.

To give you an example, I was listening to CNN up until today, and I saw a quote about a 30-year mortgage with 8½% [interest] I think it was. Madam Speaker, if we had 8½% mortgage money available in this country it would make the idea of owning a home more of a reality. At the present time, I would daresay that the average mortgage interest rate is about 13% or 14%. Now, on the other hand, unless you have $1 million on fixed deposit, you are probably not making any more than 4% or 5% by way of interest on a Certificate of Deposit. So, there is a huge spread between what the banks are paying for those funds and what they are loaning those funds out on the other side by way of mortgages. I would say that the average mortgage rate today is probably around 13%.

Madam Speaker, I resorted to my little loan and mortgage table index. To give you an idea of what I am talking about, if you took the average home at C$120,000 over a period of 20 years at 13½%, the average person is paying close to $1,500 a month.

Now, one of the recommendations that I am also putting forward is that the period of repayment be extended from 10 to 20 years, to 20 to 25 years. To give an example of what the difference would be, let's say at 25 years, those same funds at 13½% would be close to $1,400 a month. Madam Speaker, the same about of money, let's say at 9½% over 20 years would amount to a monthly repayment of $1,100. That might not seem to be a lot of money but on a very small budget $300 or $400 difference is significant. I believe that the banks would be prepared to consider offering Caymanians (and I am pushing for Caymanians) mortgage financing at a much more reasonable rate than what exists at the present time.

In order to make more Caymanians qualify for financing is to expand the repayment period over 20 to 25 years rather than 10 to 20 years because it makes a tremendous difference in the monthly repayment—the longer it is, the less per month, and the more affordable it can be.

Madam Speaker, we have another group of people in this country who is suffering tremendously with regard to housing, and that is single parents—be they men or women. Like I said before, even though we are experiencing unprecedented economic prosperity in this country they are still averaging $1,500 - $2,000 a month. There are some that are out there working—normally women who are the head of a single family—two or three jobs just in order to be in a position where they can have a little place for themselves and their family to live. The other difficulty that they run into is that if they don't have their own home, if they have children, they are discriminated against by landlords who have places available for rent. So, it makes it very difficult indeed.

I had a young lady come to see me sometime ago who was estranged from her husband. Her situation became so difficult and so desperate that she and her kids were living and sleeping in her car. Now, Madam Speaker, in this country where we boast of such prosperity and success that should never be the case.

There are some people who would still not qualify under this particular programme, but the more Caymanians that can have an opportunity to earn a mortgage in this country the better off we are going to be as a society as far as stability and the whole bit. I am appalled at what some people are demanding in this country for rent. A one bedroom apartment . . . if you can find that for less than $1,000, you have a bargain. If you have children or other family members and you need a two or three-bedroom apartment, it could run you as much as $2,000 a month. Now, Madam Speaker, I don't know about you but I would find it very difficult to take $2,000 out of my income to pay for rent and at the end of the day the difficulty is what do you have to show for that money spent.

Madam Speaker, it is also a fact that home ownership adds to the stability of a society. We have always been able to boast of how Caymanians used to do it before the advent of banking and tourism in this country. They went to sea for a number of years and they gradually saved some money, sent it home and normally it was a wife or mother who would take those funds and buy blocks, sand, and whatever else it was. And over a period of time, they were able to build their homes from the income that they earned from going to sea.

Madam Speaker, that is no longer a reality in this country. Today, for you to sit and wait until you can earn the money that you need in order to buy or build a home you would probably be a very old man or woman before you realised that dream.

Like I mentioned before, I don't see the banks having any real difficulty sitting down with Government and negotiating a better rate for Caymanians in the area of mortgage financing. Even the Bible tells us, if you ask you will receive, and if you don't ask then you have no reason to receive anything. I believe that those banks that are here, that have a genuine interest in our community and in assisting, will have no difficulty meeting with whatever government representatives may be designated in order to discuss this very important issue.

Madam Speaker, that's all I have to say in my opening remarks. I commend this motion, and I trust that government will see fit to accept it. I don't see a difficulty there, in that I recall just in our last Finance Committee meeting the issue of housing was discussed. I think in good faith the Finance Committee voted approximately $1 million for affordable housing in this country. So, I wait to see what government's position is on this motion. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There are four minutes left until the hour of 4.30 p.m., but before I entertain a motion for the adjournment, I have been asked by the Honourable Financial Secretary to request all members to attend a meeting tomorrow at 1.30 p.m. in the Committee Room. I like to practice what I preach. I like notice of meetings, and that is why I am giving honourable members notice of this meeting tomorrow at 1.30 p.m.

I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this honourable House until 10.00 tomorrow morning.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. This honourable House stands adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

AT 4.27 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM FRIDAY, 17 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
FRIDAY
17 MARCH 2000
11.09 AM

(Time spent in Chamber: 2.14)

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, I would like to apologise to you and Members of this House for the delay this morning. The Government had a meeting scheduled which was important. I apologise.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I have no apologies or messages, so we will move to Other Business: Private Members' Motions. Continuation of debate on Private Member's Motion No. 1/00, Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-Occupied Homes.

Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause)
Does any other member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 1/00

REDUCED COST OF MORTGAGE FINANCING FOR CAYMANIAN OWNER-OCCUPIED HOMES

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. Roy Bodden: You know, I have never seen such a eunuch of a government.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, on a point of order. The word "eunuch" we all know the expression has got to be unparliamentary.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, I do not know if "eunuch" would be considered . . . but for the benefit of a good relationship in Parliament, I would ask members to refrain from calling each other such names.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Perhaps you will allow me to say that I have never seen such an impotent government.

It should not be that a member from this side has to speak in order to save such an important motion when the motion was brought by honourable members from this side. Indeed, the government should now be speaking and replying as to whether they are accepting or rejecting the motion and giving reasons for so doing.

I rise to record my displeasure, and to also exercise my responsibility in that such an important motion like this should not be allowed to succumb to no debate or comment. I shall therefore make my contribution, although I am somewhat at a disadvantage because I would have preferred to have heard government's disposition towards this motion.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, if you will give me just one moment . . . I did forget, and I apologise, I received an apology from the Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment, and Natural Resources. He will be arriving later.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: It is hard to be charitable under these circumstances. I have to continue by saying that it really doesn't make much sense for me to continue to debate with any kind of effect if I am in a position where I do not know the government's disposition towards this motion. I would say that this is the only Parliament where this kind of debate would continue with the reticence and absence of government making any comment at this early and critical stage.

If the minister who holds responsibility found it impossible to be here, certainly it should have been discussed among his colleagues and someone assume responsibility to speak on his behalf and state government's position. Such is the nature of the society in which we now live.

The motion seeks to address a crying need in this society. In the recent past many attempts have been made to address this need—through motions brought by this side of the House, by proposals from government and attempts by government to arrive at some kind of solution to the problem. All, however, have fallen short because we have tried to address the problem unilaterally using only one element in society.

So, from the beginning let me say that I believe that if we are to effectively solve the problem of the cost of mortgage financing in this country, it has to be a problem to which various elements make a contribution. I see these elements being the government, which holds a natural and God-given responsibility to prepare its people. The second element has to be some of the institutions that continue to derive benefits from the social climate and congenial atmosphere found in the Cayman Islands. These entities need to cultivate a social conscience and exercise some social responsibility to the extent that they should be aware that they need to put something back. If this problem is not addressed soon, we cannot continue to guarantee the social stability we now have.

The third element concerns the stakeholders, the persons who need to have this matter addressed. Their responsibility is to set themselves in a position where they can be poised to take advantage of any mortgages or financial arrangements the government makes so they can realise their aspirations and dreams.

If the incident yesterday (so starkly narrated by the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture) is an indication of some of the problems we face in this country, then we had better beware that we are dealing with a culture of poverty.

That we are dealing with a culture of poverty shouldn't be a surprise to anyone, since, as far back as 1978, an article published in the Nor'Wester Magazine of September/October 1978 indicated that there were pockets of the Caymanian society which exhibited all the symptoms of developing into a poverty culture. I want to say more about this poverty culture because it is not uncommon in this part of the world.

The anthropologist Oscar Lewis in The Children of Sanchez narrates strikingly the conditions certain kinds of poverty and deprivation breeds when he tells the story of Jesus Sanchez, the Mexican, and his four children. Again, Oscar Lewis (in La Vita) tells the story of a Puerto Rican family that emigrated from Puerto Rico to New York and had to deal with certain deprivations—lack of marketable skills, lack of a proper base from which to propel themselves into society. He gives us an idea of the kinds of circumstances these people have to encounter in order to pull themselves up by the bootstraps.

It is a fundamental thesis that it is impossible for people to rise above a certain poverty level if they do not have assistance from society, be that the government or other elements in society, with the camaraderie to place materials, methods, and means in the way to help these people.

The basis of what we are talking about is land. I want to come back to what I wrote in 1978. Way back in 1978, I saw that we were going to get into the problems we are experiencing today. The Cayman Islands came from a history where all of the people were land rich and cash poor. When we took off on the threshold of our development in the late 1950s, early 1960s, land was the one common asset and commodity that every Caymanian had. We know the history: it was passed down by Wills and bequeathing.

When the Cayman Islands became attractive to outsiders the land was the appealing factor. First the beach land because that was a novelty to outsiders. Beach land had absolutely no commercial value to old Caymanians. We couldn't plant on it. The only thing it was used for was to build a boat shed and to haul a canoe up on. So, when these people came and fell in love with the beach land it was easy for us to part with that. We had no commercial attachment to that.

When that was gone, then other land became attractive. Now, there is absolutely nothing wrong with selling land. As a matter of fact, many people made their wealth off of that. But what is dangerous about what happened in the Cayman Islands is that when the Caymanian people sold their land, they were not encouraged to buy other properties. It was an absolute sale for which cash was the medium of transaction. The land was gone and then the cash was gone, hence we have the beginning of the problem.

I was so foolhardy, or bold or insightful, as to suggest that since we were a culture where land was the only asset along with the people, we should have thought about leasing the land rather than selling absolute titles. I ventured to substantiate that by saying that we were selling to persons outside of our culture who had a different notion of private property than we had, and also selling leaseholds was not strange to Europeans and even North Americans. So they would not have been turned off, or deterred.

I said in the third instance that we had the most fundamental example, namely, transactions that government did with Mr. Benson Greenal. All of that land that is now SafeHaven, and Galleon Beach, government leased on a 99-year lease. Many of these leases have subsequently been extended.

Ah ha! Madam Speaker, now comes the serious part. There were elements in the society that said what this man is proposing was anathema. It is contrary to any notion that we have. He is telling us that we can't sell our land. Madam Speaker, I did not say that. I am not an idiot!

So, I was vilified. I was castigated, I was subjected to official opprobrium, and there were some elements (who are still inside this Parliament) who said I was a Castro sympathiser and said it inside the Legislative Assembly!

Although that wound has still not healed, I don't want to dwell upon that at this time. Suffice it to say that no one came up with any alternative that would have allowed the Caymanian people to get some money, while at the same time retain some form of ultimate control. And, like I said, there is nothing wrong with selling if you can buy because many people make wealth off of speculation. And land speculating is one of the most common means by which people amass large sums of money.

Alas, we have a situation in the Cayman Islands now: the land is gone, the money is gone and we have a population that will have difficulties procuring an apartment or a house because their earning bracket will not allow them to meet the requirements one has to meet in order to obtain a commercial mortgage. Therefore, the onus is upon the government.

Now, what can the government do? The government has already made a move to address the problem by setting aside $1 million with which to buy land. I think that that is a move in the right direction. But government cannot do this alone. We have to shy away from the notion that the government can be all things to all people, particularly at a time when government is being called upon by greater and greater elements in the society to provide more and more amenities. So government needs help.

There is no shortage of ideas or notions as to how the government's efforts could be bolstered. But I would like to say that the efforts entered into thus far by government have been disappointing. It has been proven that the government is lacking in the capacity to meet satisfactorily all of the housing needs that exist in our society at present.

The government is required to guarantee the loans and the mortgages. In many cases that is problematic because we have failed thus far to outline clear, understandable and acceptable criterion for those people who are to access the finances. Every day—and this is no exaggeration—some young person comes up to me asking what he must do to qualify for the government financing. And what is alarming is that more often than not these are young people at the launching point of being vivacious and optimistic, people in their mid 20s and early 30s.

Sometimes it pains my heart. By the time I am finished explaining what the prerequisites are I can see them like a flower in the midday sun—the more I talk, the more they wilt—only to make the rueful admission, 'Man, that seems impossible.' It's a crying shame and it does not have to be. It's a crying shame that a country which boasts of being the fifth largest international financial centre in the world, a country which before yesterday one would have been led to believe had absolutely no poverty and deprivations in it, has so many people unable, although honest and hardworking, to realise their dream.

I want to say in all seriousness that one of the breakdowns we have with the family stems from this point. If you would hear some of the circumstances . . . and I will not try your patience by reciting any litany of these cases. But at a recent public meeting I held in my constituency, I heard a story . . . an absolute lack of privacy, people living in the most abject circumstances. And I have to admit a certain amount of inability to offer any lasting relief, because dipping your hand in your pocket and pulling out $100 or $500 does not solve the problem.

That is putting a Band-Aid on open-heart surgery. These people need land that they can afford to build on.

The point I wish to make is that if we want to help these people, it is incumbent upon the government to find some source of affordable financing. I am not by any means an advocate of government placing itself in a position where it is going to be ultimately liable for millions and millions of dollars when people default. I don't want anyone to think I am advocating any kind of experiment because I know there will be detractors who are quick to say that that is what I am preaching. But the onus is upon the government to do this.

Before we can do that, we need to be educated as to the number of people who fall into these categories. We need to know whether there are 2000 people, or 3000. We also need to know their level of earning because we cannot effectively help them unless we first know the number depending upon us for help and what position they are in in terms of earnings. That is where previous efforts have fallen short. I am weary now that the matter is coming up on the eve of an election because the matter should not be politicised either.

I recall a motion brought by the present First Elected Member for George Town, seconded by a gentleman who is not here at present, Mr. Gilbert McLean the former Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. These things were highlighted to the National Team Government as to what was a low-income housing proposal against a middle-income housing proposal. In the cut and thrust of politics the efforts, however well meaning they were, were destroyed. Accusations were made, names were called, and the poor who so deserve got no redress. Of course, I don't need to add that the motion failed.

Government professed then, as they profess now, to have all the answers. And yet, the need still exists. I have heard it preached from both sides of the House that the most stable societies are those with the greatest numbers of people with a vested interest, namely houses, apartments, or businesses. But the lesson is purely academic. It goes no further than the walls of this Chamber. Nobody who is in a position makes any attempt to concretise it. I have heard it repeated on that side numerous times by a certain minister. Talk is cheap!

Well, the government talks the talk, but they don't walk the walk. And now, on the eve of a general election, they think they are going to soothsaying their way back in saying, 'Oh yes. This is a need that should be addressed. We are going to endeavour to help . . .' Twelve years, Madam Speaker, . . . I am tired of pristine asseverations. I am tired of promises. Prayer is good. I encourage prayer. But prayers must come with a prescription for action.

I am in a downright irreverent mood because I am angry. I have been bottling this anger up since 1978. I have the original article. I am saving this because if the government intended to do something they would have said, 'Do you know something man? This article was written by a Caymanian about Cayman.'

I want to read what I said on page 25. “Previously the land was one of the few assets a Caymanian had. Now, the number of Caymanians with enough land for a small garden and a house is negligible. It seems fair to remark that in later years there will be an inability to procure reasonable housing and the society in some areas is rapidly showing signs of developing into a culture of poverty with substandard housing.”

They didn't like the message, so the Minister of Education then (as he is now) gave the order to shoot the messenger. Well they are still shooting the messengers. But do you know what? The chickens are now coming home to roost. So we have delinquency, we have a breakdown in law and order and they still don't understand these things.

That is why I like intellectuals, people who can see the problem in its whole perspective. That is why I like people who went through the discipline of graduate school. These things cannot be viewed in isolation. You cannot just treat here and put a patch there without knowing that the wound breaks out from the inside. You patch the skin, but the heart still hurts.

Time is going to show that if we keep wasting the opportunities the problems are going to grow worse. We should seize the opportunity now and deal with this. I say again that government can't do it alone. We have to find a way to incorporate all elements of society. I would be ill informed if I stood here and said that government must do it alone. But government has had several opportunities—false starts I call them.

What happened to the Housing Authority? It was sold to a commercial entity. So now we have to start all over again.

We can't continue to waste our efforts. To say that we are not as bad off as some other Caribbean islands is being a little like the Pharisees and Sadducees. 'Oh I am not like those other people. I am not like the publicans.' It doesn't matter. We have the problem here. Comparing us to Jamaica, Trinidad or Barbados is not helping us. We have the problems here, albeit on a smaller scale.

Do you know what is true? The problem in those jurisdictions did not start phenomenal and gigantic either. It started in little pockets, just like ours. And progressive governments did not attempt to address it in the right way and it just grew, and grew, and grew. So let's not resort to self-righteousness, and let's not indulge ourselves saying we are not so bad after all. The fact is that we have some here and that we need to address them. We also need to realise that it has to be done in such a way that there is a totality of efforts.

Lack of housing leads to antisocial behaviour. When you have three and four children sleeping in a room with absolutely no privacy . . . when my son doesn't have decent enough accommodations and surroundings so that he can invite his friends and his contemporaries from school to spend a day with him . . . it does not do anything for his self-confidence. It does not do anything for his self-esteem when he hears other people talking about “their room,” and he knows that he has a corner that he has to share with his mother and father, sisters and brothers, where he cannot practise proper hygiene. That is destructive.

The person from those surroundings is ripe for someone who says, 'Hey, listen man, there's a way to get some money, you know. There's some short cuts.' We have to see this deprivation in its totality. If we have a nation of people who are not properly housed, who don't have proper accommodation, it makes no sense to be self-righteous and say we are the fifth largest financial centre in the world. When you scratch the façade then you see the real problems.

I have been saying for years that we have been marking our progress on a faulty report card, and that we need to stop shooting the messengers when we don't like the message. We need to listen. We need to do like we do in church when the minister says repent. We need to repent.

How can we expect parents to cope when they don't have the most common amenities and facilities to make life comfortable and liveable? When you don't have a decent stove? When you don't have a sanitary bathroom? I am tired of trying to help people. I tell them, although I am moved sometimes, because the heart is not hard . . . when I give them money I say, “I am giving you this full well realising that this is not solving your problem—I am giving you an aspirin when you need brain surgery. This will only relive you for a short time.”

What can the government do? That is the seminal question. Well, the government ministers often say that we don't provide any alternative solutions. If government wants to address this in a sensible, scientific, and empirical way, is to first try to ascertain the number of families who are in dire need of housing—some form of survey. If they want to wait until the census is complete . . . I hope that it was filled out by a sufficient number of people so that we can get an accurate reading.

Having received that, along with the income bracket in which these people fall, government should take a topographical map and identify areas that would be suitable to establish housing or property that these people could buy. Then comes the important part, we have to find affordable financing.

Quite naturally, they will need some help. Government may wish to continue as it has by guaranteeing the loans and mortgages. I think the greatest and most effective efforts will be those in which there is a clear and understandable partnership. The people benefiting must have a vested interest. That is why when you go to the bank to borrow money you must meet certain prerequisites. If you are building a house, the bank likes to know that you have it up to the belting before going to them for a mortgage. If you are buying a car, the bank likes to know that you have 20%. The reason is that the bank wants you to know that you have a responsibility and an obligation to keep up your part of the bargain. If you don't, you won't just be losing the bank's money; you will be losing your own.

I think the most effective efforts will be those in which there is a partnership. When government identifies the areas and sets the financing up, persons benefiting should be called upon to make some sacrifices, be that coming up with an initial investment, or bringing the house up to a particular standard, whichever is easiest.

Where is government going to get the financing from? I haven't got a clue, only to say that we often boast that there are 500 banks in the Cayman Islands. Some bank shareholders must be so charitable and Christ-like that they will set aside some monies for these people to borrow for reasonable rates. I can't, but government can approach them.

I am sure that we have ministers over there who are suave, articulate, and influential. If they are so minded, they could seek to set up these kinds of arrangements. I am tired of hearing people talk the talk when they are not walking the walk. We, on this side, can only talk. We walk a little, but we can't walk as far as the government. They are more able, more energetic, have more authority, more influence. If they are minded, . . . I hope that when they get up they won't shoot the messenger, but will say if the proposals can work.

History has proven that if we don't address this, our society will cease to be as stable as it is. I don't want to point fingers; I don't want to dwell on the past anymore. I do not want to rehash . . . believe you me, I am still hurting, but I try as hard as I can to exorcise these old ghosts. But this should have been done a long time ago.

It makes absolutely no sense for us to say that we know that home ownership adds to the stability of society, and yet we do nothing about it. There are needs which should be addressed. I think we should get on with it. Based on my experience, I will be very surprised if anything comes out of this motion at this time, other than a lot of grandiose talk. This is an election year and I am not criticising anyone for political posturing, but I know a certain amount of that will take place. The signs are already there. But we can continue to delude and fool ourselves if we think that this problem is not going to come back to haunt us later.

There is an adage that I have tried to live by. I would prefer to be right than popular. One may get away saying things one thinks people wish to hear for some time, but time and posterity will be the judge of such persons. I would rather be right and unpopular than popular and proven wrong. That has always been the message I remind myself of, particularly since I have been blessed and chosen for a position of responsibility.

I could go on longer, but I will resist my ego that tells me to be mischievous. I have made my point. I am waiting to hear what the government will say regarding my comments. I would not be me if I did not end with this caveat: Just like time has proven my article written in 1978 correct, so too will time prove me correct if those persons in a position to rectify this problem continue to dither and procrastinate. They will be haunted to a greater extent by this problem than will the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: This motion has a good intent, and the government, as far as the resolve section goes, is happy to support it. The government has, over the past seven years, had in place policies that have assisted first time Caymanian homeowners. It has been of a lot of benefit to the people of this country, especially the young people who are starting out in life.

There are several initiatives that this government has put in place, which have been developed and increased over the years. First, there is the Housing Initiative for Affordable Housing in which the stamp duty in relation to first time Caymanian homeowners is waived up to $150,000. That was increased on 21 June 1999 by a private member's motion, which was moved and seconded—not by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town! The glory (if we must call it that) must go to someone else.

For many years, that scheme had been at $125,000 and it has helped many, many young people, mainly, in these islands. So that is one solution that government has that was improved on by increasing it to $150,000 by two other members through a private member's motion in the middle of last year.

The other initiative is where we have young people . . . well, not just young people, anyone, Caymanians who are buying land to build a home. In other words, a house lot. Then, if they are a first time homeowner and that lot is towards that first home, the stamp duty is waived on up to $35,000. The motion in mid-June last year brought by two members—and not by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town—increased that from $25,000 to $35,000. Solutions, Madam Speaker, solutions that government in partnership with two other elected members of the backbench who developed these, or increased them, rather, have assisted the people of this country and continue to assist mainly the young people of this country.

Throughout my time in here I have said that the most stable people in any country are homeowners. If a person has a home he is far more reluctant to do anything that would hurt the country and thus hurt his home. It is acknowledged worldwide that it is in the interest of a country to have as many people owning their own homes as possible.

The Cayman Islands with its long tradition of land and seamanship that has assisted with homebuilding in this country has remained stable because I believe a large percentage of our people are homeowners. The extent of that we will not know until the census is completed. But I think we can be assured that many, many more people in these islands own their homes than they do in many other islands.

The stability of this country depends upon this, and government regarded this critical. That is why it introduced between 1992 and 1996 a policy that brought into effect assistance to young people, mainly, to own their own homes.

The second initiative that has been brought into effect is the guaranteed home loan assistance where government guarantees up to 35% of a loan up to an amount of $150,000. There are many people out there that would not be able to get mortgages without the assistance of government. This has opened up a whole new horizon of hope for people that the mover of this motion, the Third Elected Member for West Bay, has raised at this time.

No matter what the other conditions of the mortgage are, the most important and most difficult one to fulfill is showing a bank that the owner is able to put sufficient equity into the House, i.e., that they own the land, or that they can put in 20% equivalent, either in land or cash, to get the loan. Traditionally, banks will not lend 100% on an asset being purchased.

That has produced a new horizon that has been a lot of light and hope to the young people of this country. Indeed, not everyone can fall within this bracket. That too has been increased recently, and has to be increased each year so that it keeps in line with the cost of housing.

I don't have the statistics, but I remember that one of the main banks in this (I think it was CIBC) provided $15 million for a lot of loans. I know that the ministry responsible for this . . . and, Madam Speaker, you did mention that the honourable minister responsible was not able to be here this morning. But I know that his ministry continues to improve the streamlining of the application and grant process for government guaranteed loans.

I believe that this should be extended to allow an even wider group of people to benefit. Earlier this year $1 million was appropriated in this honourable House for government to deal with housing for persons who cannot fully afford to build a house. That is merely an extension of what was started by me back in 1979 when housing, or social services, rather, was under my ministry, and what produced in the Watler's Road area—one free house that is still there. It would have produced another 11 houses had it not been stopped subsequently by a minister who came in, Mr. Ezzard Miller. It would have produced 11 houses in that area that could have been given and/or leased if necessary. But mainly I had planned that to really go to people who could not afford it.

I think this would have been good if it had continued. I see this $1 million as a continuation of that type of housing, because there are people in this country who cannot afford a mortgage, who cannot afford rental, and provided that they are trying as hard as they can to make ends meet (and God knows most do), then I think it's the duty of this legislature, not just this government, to provide houses for them.

I know that I did an in-depth study of the Watler's Road area, the Rock Hole area. I knew in detail and had maps relating to every parcel of land, every house, how many people were in the houses, the size of the land, whether they owned it, leased it . . . also those sharing whether or not they were family. That is important when planning. I believe that will be updated and continued at this stage. But the housing, or ownership of houses I repeat, is critical to the stability in any country.

Unfortunately, a lot of politics has been introduced into this motion by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. I ask, in reply to what that member has said, What solution has been put forward in all of that political talk to help the country? As a joke, all I would say about not shooting the messenger is that most messengers who have been shot have a lot of mouth and no action. Perhaps caution in that area . . . because actions speak louder than words. There is a saying, "I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day. I'd rather one should walk with me than merely show the way." Talk is cheap.

I believe that the mortgage interest given by the government guaranteed loan scheme is considerably better than if there was higher risk. We know interest increases with risk. While I have not been able to confirm that government's guaranteeing the 35% would undoubtedly give leverage for better interest rates. I hope that that is the position there.

Obviously, government is quite prepared to continue to assist. Indeed, what government has done in the area of housing is unprecedented in any other country compared to the Cayman Islands. What would have been far more constructive in that half-hour of talk we had there is if some solutions had been put forward. Actually in one half hour I believe the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town could have called every commercial bank here, the seven of them, and asked if they were prepared to give a better interest rate, and on what terms. That's constructive. That could have been done in a much shorter period than the time spent here.

To come here and consistently provide directives to government while there are no solutions going with it leads me to believe that in many instances the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and others from time to time have no solutions. They realise that because the calibre of government is so high they can ask us to find the solutions. Therefore, we are always happy to assist the backbenchers, such as the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, in things that seem so simple as picking up a phone and calling one's banker and asking for interest rates to be lowered.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Call your banker!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I believe that the same as proper rates can be lowered . . . and I think one area we can leverage this is where the government is giving guarantees. I think, if that has not been negotiated down to a minimum, that we can do that.

But really, the amount of time spent preparing this and talking on this, and really just at the end of the day saying we have no solutions for the government—find them . . . in this country the public knows that this government is responsible. The same as it found the solutions to housing in the several areas I just mentioned, areas that are working well, perhaps not perfect, and we have to improve on those and we continuously do that.

Then, by all means the government is prepared to accommodate the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, who has no solution to this problem by picking up the phone and calling the banks or meeting with the banks to ask them to reduce the interest rates.

I believe that when the census results are in we will be in a position . . . and in fairness to that member, he did say that perhaps a survey of housing is best dealt with after. I agree with him on that. I believe we will then have a better idea of housing in this country and also of the economic level of people in those houses. To do a comprehensive plan, we may find that the results of the census may show that we need to increase the value of the guaranteed loans from $150,000 because many people are in houses that may be near, or above that we could assist further. It obviously assists people up to that stage.

Or, we may find that that scheme has to be varied with a different layer in which a higher percentage of guarantee is given by government in some instances. I am saying this because I think it is very important that people in this country with the pride they have do not like to be given everything. If they can take out a loan for, say, 50% or 40% of what it costs, and government guarantees the balance, they will have pride in it. I think that variation to the present good schemes that government has is perhaps something that we can develop after we see the census.

People who preach doom and gloom finally get doom and gloom. I am an optimist. I have to live in a world where I look at things positively. I have to look at problems and find solutions. It's no use in my standing here saying yes, there's a problem in housing, and spend all my time on the problem. I would rather spend 1% of my time on the problem and 99% of my time on the solution.

Discussing problems doesn't put people in houses. To get people in houses, someone has to do something positive to solve the problem that one sees. But further than that, if one exaggerates the problem, then one worsens those people's positions because you are then basically putting in the minds of the public and the lending institutions that there's doom and gloom out there. We know that in other West Indian islands, large and small, when this has been preached they finally got the doom and gloom the people preached. Then those people said 'Ah, here's what I told you.' But in effect, they have helped cause the downfall of the country by taking negative approaches.

So with housing, unless the positive approach can be taken . . . and I would like to mention another positive approach that government has taken. There is something called a Civil Service Loan Scheme that is for civil servants, administered through the Civil Service Credit Union. That has quite recently been extended and developed. Civil servants, within the guidelines set out by government, can get loans. Not necessarily for housing, but for other areas as well, even though priority is given towards housing. I believe that has helped a lot of civil servants to be able to get more of the necessities they need from time to time.

So, I always believe in dealing with facts, which I have dealt with here. I have never shot the messengers, even when they have been messengers of no action and a lot of words. But every four years the public sometimes does shoot those messengers if in the four years there has been no action and just a lot of words.

I believe that the motion is good. I believe it extends into an area that the government is very happy to build on and discuss with the lending institutions that are not just banks. There are other important lending institutions that we should speak to as well.

In summary, the government does have a very helpful and viable guaranteed home loan scheme for Caymanians, it went up to $150,000 of which government guarantees 35%. I believe that after the census that has to be looked at because that 35% or the $150,000 may need to be adjusted upwards. Also, government, in its wisdom, has waived the stamp duty on land for houses up to $35,000 for first homes, as well as on homes and land up to $150,000 for Caymanian first homeowners. Also in place and being worked on now is the $1 million for housing for persons who can't afford it. And also the improvement to the civil service loan scheme. So, a lot is in place.

Government places the utmost importance on the youth of this country. It places the utmost importance on ensuring that those youth, indeed everyone, owns a home. We believe that the stability of this country has come from the hardworking people of this country who built their homes in stages many times, as our forefathers went to sea and sent money home. In partnership with government, will be able to say one day that everyone in this country, young and old, either outright owns a home or is in a home that their family owns. That will guarantee more stability than 20 years of talk in this House.

I believe that it will guarantee the stability when many other things will not do so. A homeowner is the most stable person in the country. They will never rock the boat. They will never do anything that causes their home to be lost. And we know that destroying the country destroys people's homes. I think to preserve that we must not only continue the very good education of our youth, but also afford them the opportunity to own their own homes. I support the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (pause) The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Anything that can be done to give people a chance to own a home, I am prepared to support. As we all recall, I brought a motion here in June last year that was debated over three days. The House accepted it. I took a lot of blame, and it was passed. But I don't know what has been done. That was in June last year.

Finding a solution is not easy. But I would have hoped that we could have had some answers as to what was happening with that motion and the various things people recommended. As I go through the Hansards of those three days, I find that there are some 20 recommendations coming from both sides of the House. In practically every contribution there was a recommendation. I don't know whether government has looked at the recommendations recorded in the Hansards to see whether or not they are workable.

We can only put forward recommendations. And government should look at those recommendations. Tell us what they agree with and what they don't agree with, but don't tell us we haven't made recommendations.

No one knows the need for housing like I do. When I got the responsibility for housing, I took it on as something that had to be done through various means. I know what people go through, living in my grandmother's house with two families, no running water, no inside toilet facilities. I know what it is to have a roof that leaks, a floor that is bad. I went through the stages of not being able to invite friends over. While there was a big beautiful yard, the house was very old. My family was poor like many others. I went through all that.

I had to study by lamplight. We had to scrub the floors ourselves as children. I knew about all those things. I know about sleeping with my sisters and brothers together on a floor bed. I know what that is. Nobody needs to preach that to McKeever Bush!

That is why I took on the housing portfolio with such fervour. I tried to get something done. We looked at various items. And, like I said, that debate in June was so long, I don't think I need to go back over that. But the scheme that we arrived at was not perfect. Up until I left Executive Council, 170 families had gotten homes. How many got since then, I don't know. That's what they got for the four years I was the minister.

I said then that housing needed to be looked at in various initiatives simply because our people were not going to live in homes cluttered up together like apartments. Everybody wanted a little piece of land. Land over the years, because people were selling their properties, has become much more expensive, even from when I was a child. We know that land prices have skyrocketed. So that was making it difficult for people to own.

I found that people did not particularly want to live in apartment-like homes. They wanted their own plot of land. Most people wanted to feel that they could contribute and that is because of our independent nature. We have pride. So, I found that we had to attack this housing situation on various fronts.

When I took over the responsibility, the Housing Development Corporation (HDC) was the only entity in government to get houses. The HDC, as Mr. Dan Scott, (the Chairman at the time) told members, was not able to fulfill its mandate because it could not attract the funds from the private sector. The rates were higher in most instances than what the private sector offered. By the time everything was done, the people were paying more than what they would have paid the private sector in some instances.

Government was not willing to put funds into it. I have looked at housing development corporations in various countries. I come back to Hong Kong's situation. The only way housing development corporations work is where the government is prepared to put in the money, or they get funds from private investment.

Previous governments couldn't get the money needed. The one I served in for four years couldn't get the money either, nor would they give me any to put into the Housing Development Corporation, anything of substance. I think they gave something like $240,000 a year. Government owned the HDC.

Thus we tried to get a scheme. I don't need to go through that because there were good ideas on both sides. But I think that if anybody took any licks for housing (and all you have to do is search the Hansards) it was me! All sorts of things were said—that I had a share in it because I had a real estate company, all sorts of things. Now we know that's not true.

I should also say that there was opposition in government at that time too. And the National Team at the time said that they would not go with that scheme, so we went to the banks. I believe, and I say here publicly, that the banks themselves put opposition into that scheme because that scheme would have given them some competition.

Nevertheless, we were able to sit down with the banks and discuss the ways and means of coming to something similar. Thus the scheme which was put forward by my ministry, and which I believe is still in operation, was more a credit enhancing scheme than anything else. I said then too that the scheme would not serve everybody, and that the problem needed and still needs to be dealt with by various initiatives.

I don't know if the banks have changed their minds, but I do know that my permanent secretary and I talked to them in various meetings and begged them to give lower interest rates. But what they told us was that the rates depended upon market forces, and on what people were putting into their deposits. I guess that's what they called market forces. But they certainly didn't do us any more favours than the present scheme. They would not go any lower. The ratio to income is the hindrance in that scheme, the 40% (or they may have gone down to 35% ratio of income to mortgage payment) was one of the greatest problems.

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town gave some statistics on income. I think I gave a good exposé myself on the type of income in this country. They can't come up to that mortgage level, the ratio is way too high. Interest rates plus the ratio is way too high.

As I said, if you go through the Hansards you will find some 20-odd recommendations. The First Elected Member for George Town and I moved to allow for homes to be built up to $200,000, instead of the $150,000. The rationale was that if a person went up to $155,000, he could not qualify for the $150,000. And we asked government to go up to $200,000, and if they have to pay on the extra $50,000, fine; but allow them that much more. They rejected that. It was voted against.

The waiver of stamp duty on land was accepted through the motion we brought. I don't remember whether it was the First Elected Member for George Town and I, or the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town who did that, but I think they allowed that. There were various recommendations from members of the House.

I believe that government made some mistakes if they bowed to anybody when they took out the aspect of the common law marriages. That hindered people in a big way because that's a fact of life in this country, and we are never going to see anything different.

They made another mistake when they took out the ability for parents and children to get a house together. Our first house, my mother's home, . . . my eldest brother went to sea and in those days it was $135 a month that he sent back. I was 13 years old. I can tell the world that one of the reasons why I left school, besides the educational system of the day, was to try to get a home. We simply had to get a home. And all of my earnings went to assist in building that home.

Do you know what? My mother and I could get a loan together. My mother and my sisters could get loans together. I believe that we should have that action in this scheme, and it should not have been taken out of the scheme. While the Cayman Islands has changed since the 1970s, I believe there are still children who respect their parents and who would assist. Right now, my two sisters qualify together, but not separately. They need a home. They can qualify together. They have children, but they can't qualify to get a home from the housing development in my constituency, the one put down by Mr. Heber Arch and others. They can't.

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a convenient time to take the luncheon break, as the honourable Financial Secretary requested that he would like to meet with us at 2.00. Is that okay?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.30.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.45 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.52 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I would like to say thanks to you and honourable members for the time taken this afternoon to allow for a select committee meeting on issues relating to the White Paper. This went on beyond the originally allocated time, and I would like to apologise for that delay. And, Madam Speaker, there were other very important issues connected to this. Once again, I thank you for the time allowed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The First Elected Member for West Bay, continuing his debate on Private Member's Motion No. 1/00.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you.

As I said, the housing problems in this country will have to be dealt with by various initiatives. As I said, the motion back in June dealing with housing—which government accepted—had some 20 suggestions. I don't know how many government has acted upon. It is obvious that in today's marketplace that various initiatives need to be looked at. It's obvious that we have people who are not making the kind of salary to be able to pay the kind of mortgage required to get a house built in today's marketplace.

It is obvious that we have people at the lower end that need to be assisted. When we look at their situation some assessment will have to be made as to what these people can pay, if anything at all, that is, the people at the very low end. Because we have a small landmass here, and while we prefer to have homes built on a piece of land as we were accustomed to, it could be that we might need to build the apartment-type housing in various areas so that some of these people can get homes at a minimal payment of $200, $400 per month, and own it. If government is going to do that, they will have to buy land and build.

In that instance, they will have to make sure and keep watch on the maintenance to see that it doesn't become a slum. Make sure there are agreements between each person owning so that they take care of the property. I have seen this done in Canada.

As I said, looking at the housing need as it is today in Cayman, various initiatives need to be done. We have the scheme that produced the 170 homes. And then, in social services, I know there were over 200 housing projects. So, on that end there were attempts to assist people and you are going to have to continue to do that. You are going to have to continue renovations on the old homes in these islands for people who don't have the wherewithal to do it, our elderly and handicapped.

As I said, there were various recommendations made in June. I would like to read four. “One way that could be introduced is for government to get more involved, do a rental agreement between the buyer and the owner and the bank with an up front commitment from the buyer that a portion of the rental payment goes to paying down the deposit. Once this has been achieved the bank would then roll this over into a mortgage. Government and the banks could be made to join a pool to fund these types of mortgages.

“Interest rates on these types of mortgages would need to be set at special rates, below what the norm now is in the guaranteed mortgage scheme . . .”

Another suggestion that was made was that “. . . government would put aside sufficient funds annually to provide soft loans up to a maximum of $100,000 for a period of 30 years. Then government would give a 5% interest rate for first time homeowners.”

And three, one of the ways we had discussed in the ministry when I was there, and we had the intention to carry the programme through, was “. . . looking at introducing a system that if the interest had to remain the same in the country that is being offered to people for mortgages, especially the lower income group, if the interest had to remain the same government with the banks would enter into another agreement. Government would be the 100% guarantor to the bank and the agreement would be structured so that government could pay the interest of the mortgage through a fund set up for such purposes and take back that payment from the borrower interest free but over a 30 year period so that the borrower's payment to government on that side of his commitment would be very minimal.”

And four, we made a recommendation for houses on the present scheme to go from $125,000 to $150,000 and to $200,000, and [waiver of] the stamp duty for first time owners to increase from $25,000 to $35,000. So government has not been short of ideas, although I don't see one in the House today.

They are all absent. I don't even know if I have a quorum. But . . . I am going to continue.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, once you have mentioned that there is no quorum, it has been brought to my attention and I would ask the Serjeant-at-Arms to summon some members to make a quorum.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Tell government to come in and listen to the recommendations they say we didn't make!

(Pause)

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Where's John? Can't you keep track of your leader?

(Pause)

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: If I was in charge, I'd know where they were.

(Pause)

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay, you may continue.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Truman, they sent you back in already? You'd just gone out.

As I was saying, there were recommendations made in June. Government needs to take note of the various recommendations, not only from me, but also from the various speakers on that motion. They need to move forward. What is under discussion now was talked about then. They need to move forward.

I was hoping to hear something concrete from them today. Nevertheless, so far we haven't heard. We hope that they will take all of those recommendations, coupled with this one, and move forward with it. In so saying, I support the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak?

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, what I have been experiencing since I have been in this House is that it is like playing with a puzzle—you just grab all of the pieces you find and think that if you have them all you somehow have the puzzle solved. But there needs to be a process of unravelling those pieces because they are not in themselves sufficient.

I support this motion because this is some attempt to find a solution to a problem that exists in our society. Many of our members here and outside recognise that a large number of our people are unable to afford to own their own homes. The part of the puzzle that does not seem clear is how to call government's attention to something and make sure that the attention is more than a debate.

In other words, none of us would not agree (especially with elections in November) that government should do something to bring to the attention of banks in this country the situation regarding interest on mortgages. But we all know that the banks are very aware of the situation, and that the government has been very aware of the situation, and that this honourable House is aware of the situation, and the general population is aware of the situation.

We are all aware that the way in which wealth is distributed in our society is not always creating conditions that would support or preserve the social fabric. We always say that housing is important in binding the community together in a common interest in the preservation of society. That is an acceptable premise. But what we seem to have difficulty with is how to get the finances and how to not just blame others for the fact that the finances are not in place.

We come back to the banks, and seeing them as ultimately responsible. Somehow, we are saying that interest is part of the problem. I would like to just talk a little about the interest. I believe that the interest rates in this country are at the root of the problems we have in regard to high prices for instance. Rent is high because the cost of borrowing money to create the premises for persons to live in is high. Construction of homes is high in many cases also because the cost of borrowing money to construct these homes is also high.

Then, there is the high price of land. Of course, we cannot blame the banks because our land cost is high. A lot of us have sold our land in such a way that we have disenfranchised many of our people. We have made many of our people unable to purchase land that would be the beginning of what is needed to have a home.

Where do we start? Where is the problem? Does the problem emanate from the price of land? Is it the import duties on material? Is it the cost of mortgages? Where is the high cost of a house created?

If we would look at the different ways in which cost is created, we would see that it is not solely by the interest rate. Therefore, the interest rate is only one approach in terms of dealing with it. We say let's deal with lower interest rates because we realise that if someone builds us a home for $125,000, there is the high cost of import duties on the materials. There is a tax on the labour in many cases by way of work permit fees. There is a cost to furnish the house and the tax on the furniture. In other circumstances the house might only cost $80,000. But because of taxes it costs $125,000. The value becomes inflated as a result of the specific economic policies of the government in regard to the collection of revenue for the general good.

I go to the bank and ask if they will lend me $125,000 for the house. The bank says, yes, we want a 13.5% mortgage. I say, okay. I will pay them $1,445 per month for 20 years. At the end of the 20 years, I would have paid the bank more than double that amount. Therefore the bank benefits from the high cost of the house in the first place because they earn more at the end of the day by lending a mortgage. They are going to make more if the house is $125,000 than if the house was $80,000. The bank has no interest in seeing the cost of the house decrease, because in decreasing the cost they would decrease their profits in providing the mortgage.

This seems to be a situation of what came first, the chicken or the egg. Which one do you change first? I believe that we need to create affordable mortgages. But we need to remember that part of the system that we live in is a system where profits are important. If profits are important, there also has to be a way of coercing people to participate as willing labourers in the system. In other words the theory goes, people have to have something to compel them to go and sell their labour at a low price to do jobs that are not necessarily empowering, and that you do this by withholding from them things they need until the time they have built up enough credit in the work system. The banks will ask how long you have been on the job, what money you have saved. So, that's part of the situation.

If government is going to adhere to the particular theory that a person should build up credit first, they shouldn't just be able to get a house, but they should get it in turn. We create a hierarchy of how we make available things that people need for their existence, and housing is part of the things distributed back to people because of their contribution to the productive process.

I don't want people to think that because it's election time I am spreading the gospel that we should all have a house, because this is not a socialist/communist society. We always find ourselves talking about the same thing at election time—housing. And we have to become a bit more specific. Since 1980 we have been talking about solving the housing problems in this country, and all we have done is cause the cost of land to go up. The same people who talk about that turn around and assist in the sale of the land.

If the land is being sold, the cost of the land goes up. So there are all kinds of reasons why I feel there has never been a serious attempt to control those factors responsible for preventing Caymanians from being able to achieve these necessities of life in an orderly fashion. Therefore, we need to take into consideration what our philosophy will be in regard to home ownership. Do we think it is a person's right to have a home? Or do we believe that just because it's election time it's good to talk to people? And who are we going to take something from in order to give someone something? If we are in a society where everything is already owned by somebody . . . in order for an exchange, somebody needs to give up something.

If everybody owns, and I need a house today, somebody will have to give up something for me to get the house. We are asking the banks to give something up if we are talking about a decrease in the interest rate in order for somebody to get something. So, if we are going to rectify and readjust the distribution process, we are talking about depriving one group in order for another group to have something since everything is owned at this moment by someone.

I think that people have to become more specific about where they are going to get this thing. I believe that every working Caymanian has an inherent right to a decent roof over his head. I believe that the Cayman Islands has accumulated sufficient wealth at this point for us to think about making this possible today. It might not have been possible 20 or 30 years ago, but it is possible today.

If government can say that the Cayman Islands can own an airline of national importance for pride, then when the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture made reference to the case of the woman with the five children living in conditions like we would find in Haiti . . . that's a question of national significance. The dignity of those children, the fact that they are natural assets of these islands, they are the future productive instruments of this country—not just consumers. If we can be concerned about the crisis created by the national airline and almost judicious in giving additional resources for the national airline, my question is, How come the government has not come to a point where it puts $5 million into a housing bank that would be able to give these low interest mortgages?

My support of this motion is that government itself should begin to do this. Government can do this. The $1 million we were able to get in Finance Committee to go towards this housing should be the first million that goes into this government housing trust, or loan association you could call it. Whatever we term it, it has to be an institution that has a mortgage system, not a giving away system, but a payback system. What we are saying is that we are giving people loans at a lower mortgage rate.

I think this would be a good thing for government to look into. I think that too often we put the responsibility on making hard decisions on how wealth should be distributed on the so-called corporations out there and government has not played an active enough role in understanding why governments are charged with the obligation of having to collect wealth occasionally in order to repair social damage.

Part of the assumption that is made in countries like the United States, England, and Germany—developed countries, successful countries—is that if it were left to the individual corporation to freely choose to deal with social problems they would never be dealt with. The question is a question of security. The internal security of your country is dependent upon the social balance in your country. Therefore, countries collect taxes in order to defend themselves from external enemies, to pay policemen, to defend the upright citizens. The government is really the institution that looks beyond the individual interest, the limited immediate interest, and has the right to collect money in order to preserve the general good.

The government is the one institution in society that has the power to do something about just about anything that is done. If there were a private company right now that had Cayman Airways, the company would probably have to file bankruptcy. But it survives because it's government. Well, how come if we have housing problems in this country we blame it only on the banks? We have to blame government and its lack of creative solutions.

Let government lead by showing us how it sees housing as important to the ongoing social harmony and stability in this society. Therefore, you invest money in it because of the tremendous importance it plays in maintaining social harmony.

I think that as we have spoken, we have all demonstrated our commitment to social harmony and peace in this society. We have all shown that we understand the important role that social services must play in rebuilding the social fabric, in giving people security again. But the First Elected Member for West Bay mentioned cases. The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture mentioned cases. I can mention cases where I know of persons working hard at the hotels, stable workers, single mothers, and there are all these kinds of contradictions that come into play.

But the banks are not going to change their policies by legislation or any discussion because we have been discussing with them for a very long time. They might be willing to participate in a scheme if we were able to create that scheme and show them that we believe in that scheme; that we, as the guardians of the general problems in our society, were willing to say this is what is needed to give the Cayman Islands the kind of stability, the kind of peace and harmony it had . . . and even if it doesn't give it all back, at least it would assist in preventing more drastic breakdowns in the social control mechanisms in this country. Give us $1 million.

The government itself goes out and borrows money cheaper than I can. It borrows money for itself, how can it not then borrow money for housing? We spend money on the jails, but they are not productive. We get nothing back. But if we spent money on housing we would get something back, even if it were only 1% interest. Even if we only earned enough to be able to keep our money from losing value, it could set the stage for housing development in this country.

Madam Speaker, I think it's that time now so . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this honourable House until 10.00 AM Monday.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Monday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 20 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
MONDAY
20 MARCH 2000
10.21 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item No. 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Honourable Speaker, the Honourable First Official Member, and the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture. I have also received apologies for late attendance from the Honourable Third Official Member and the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Other Business, Continuation of debate on Private Member's Motion No. 1/2000, Reduced cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-Occupied Homes. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 1/00

REDUCED COST OF MORTGAGE FINANCING FOR CAYMANIAN OWNER-OCCUPIED HOMES

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Dr. Frank McField: Thank you.

It's a new day, a new week since I started to debate this motion of which I am the seconder, calling to reduce the cost of mortgage financing for Caymanian owner-occupied homes. That very specific category can be seen as also relating to persons who have in the past been unable to get mortgage financing from the banks because their income has not been sufficient to qualify them.

It has been argued that one of the reasons why the income is not sufficient is because of the monthly repayment, and that the monthly repayment is due to the interest rates. If you could reduce the interest rates, you would reduce the monthly payments thereby allowing persons in lower income brackets to afford to own and occupy their own homes. But, as we discussed this, we would also note that the question of addressing housing in this country has been an ongoing one. It has surfaced mostly at election time. All campaigns that I know of since 1980 have included questions of affordable housing.

There have been situations in this country trying to make housing available to Caymanians. They have dealt with what I consider to be the young professionals, where government is guaranteeing the mortgage, meaning the person does not have to have a down payment. That is really the only thing that differs from a normal mortgage—the person applying does not have to have a down payment. But the person does have to be able to pay back the monthly requirement.

Because they do not have a down payment, the monthly requirements are increased. So, if you had a down payment in the beginning of 5%, 10% or whatever, you would not be paying back as much. The mere fact that government has guaranteed mortgage loans for Caymanians means that persons have felt that government is doing something in regard to the housing issues in this country, and government is helping. Quite a few people have been able to qualify. But the persons who have qualified are making above what we know is the average wage in this country today.

If we say that 53% of the people are earning $1500 per month and below. Then we know that many people will not qualify for a $125,000 house having to pay back a monthly fee of some $1,445. The disqualification of a large number of persons working in the Caymanian community, many being Caymanians, is apparent because of the workings of the economic system.

How can we change this? We have looked specifically how banks lend money. I have suggested that we also need to look at the way government helps to inflate the cost of materials and labour by government's need to tax a specific group of people in this country in order not to have to tax persons who in abundance hold the wealth.

It is not a question that we can easily correct without correcting government's approach to the social management of the country; without government realising that the social harmony that comes from social management has to do with people having access to things that are considered necessary for life and Godliness—like a roof over their heads.

Government has approached the banks over the years, and has tried to work along with the banks. But we find that in the country the banks are united in the restraint of trade. In other words, the banks work like unions do: they bargain collectively, they set up mortgage rates and other interest rates collectively, and they stick by that in order to preserve what they consider to be the profits they all can and should make.

So there is a collective bargaining process which the banks go through as members of the Banking Association in order to arrive at a fixed interest rate which they can maintain, because no one enters in breach of what they have collectively decided as being fair and necessary.

The government supports this by limiting the number of class A banks operating in this country. The government is in compliance with this situation. It's interesting that government has suggested that the housing problems can be solved in the country in many ways. But the housing question is a money question. If the housing question is a money question, then why is it that government has taken all the pension money it brags about having accumulated—some $79 million, or whatever the Leader of Government Business brags they have put in a pension fund for the civil service . . . where is that money?

Who has access to that money? People in Timbuktu? People in Hong Kong? People in America? At what rate are they borrowing our money? Are they borrowing our money in Timbuktu for less than we are borrowing money from the people in Timbuktu here in Cayman? What is happening when a country's government decides that its money for a specific group of its citizens would be safer invested outside the country rather than inside the country?

We know the reason why interest rates are low in certain countries is because of the question of supply and demand. There is a supply of money in America because Americans have spent the last 200 to 300 years in the process of accumulating wealth. So, if the supply is low here, the demand is high . . . therefore they can ask a higher mortgage rate because of limiting the supply.

Government, by its own economic strategy, limits the supply of money in the local market by exporting the money accumulated by Caymanians. Do you ask the banks to give you lower interest rates? I think that my interest in this particular motion is to show that the money politics in this country aggravates social development, prevents Caymanian people from affording homes because the government not only puts a tax on materials so that the house is taxed before it is built . . . long before it is built, government has its tax because it taxes the materials.

Government does not provide any money for its people. This is the first country in the world, probably, where government can exist without participating in the private sector, in the economy. So, whatever money government has, it selfishly—sel-fish-ly!—takes and sends it to other countries to develop other countries rather than letting it remain in the Cayman Islands to be put into a bank, a mortgage company where Caymanians can get mortgage rates at a competitive rate.

If government were to do that, it would be in conflict with the banks. So government deliberately takes its money and sends it away thereby depriving the working Caymanian of the possibility of owning a home. That's a crime.

We have to understand how we do things to our people. Sometimes a lot of us are not even conscious of what we are doing. But it is true, if government accepts the motion—because it's easier to accept something, but more difficult to practise something—they should practise what they preach. If government is not willing to set up a mortgage company and provide some of the tremendous funds existing in this country . . . we are now a country dealing with our own insurance and our own pension. It's collective resources.

I might seem to be repeating myself, but I am not making a speech here I am analysing. We are being deprived of the benefits of our collective energies. At this point government needs to establish a housing loan association, a bank, or some financial institution, that would make money available to the people at a commercial rate, but not necessarily a rate that has been derived at as a result of trade restriction.

I would ask government, if it doesn't want to use the people's money, to invite a mortgage company to this island. Just as we collect money, other people are collecting money all over the world. People are talking about the new economy. People are playing with money. We are in a period of financial capitalism where people speculate, and where money plays a very important role, where money operates as a money system rather than having to plough itself back into any industrial output.

People need places to invest money. We could get people willing to come here, if we are not willing to use our own pension money and health insurance money we are collecting. People from other countries could come in and provide Caymanians, and others who need homes in this country, with much better rates than the banks.

You need to put the banks on notice that there are alternative ways of dealing with the situation, that government has a responsibility to keep social stability, that government needs the money and needs to see that the money is flowing to the people unrestricted by its concept of collective bargaining. If there is a new government, or at least the possibility for me to influence a new government, it must pay attention to economics and how economics work.

We must put the money we collect from the people in this country to work for the people of this country, and we will not do that as long as the banks collectively have a monopoly over how money is distributed and at what cost it is distributed to the consumer, be he the Caymanian or the immigrant who has been living here desiring to have a house.

The high cost of apartments in this country is related to the high cost of mortgages. The high cost of living is related to the high cost of interest rates in this country. While the banks have been a blessing to Caymanians, they are at the same time the institution which has helped to impoverish Caymanians and put a lot of what we now want beyond our reach because of the way in which they stick with one another and the way the government of this country seems to do everything to protect its monopoly on the financial policies in this country. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause)

The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

I have noticed thus far, as others have debated the motion, that many ideas have stretched beyond the realm of the motion itself. On most occasions, one would not be so minded to stray beyond the ambit, but I believe that this matter is one which is the exception to the rule. I believe that if any serious inroads are to be made with the problem identified in the motion, we have to be looking at it from a broad perspective.

If we look at the resolve section of the motion, the thrust of the motion, it reads, “BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED that Government takes the necessary steps to meet with the commercial banks that offer mortgage financing with a view of negotiating preferred interest rates especially for Caymanian owner occupied homes.”

Now, the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, is the gentleman in here famous for taking a motion and not wanting to give justice to its intent tearing it apart. I am not picking a fight here, but it is a fact. He has that uncanny ability. When he gets up and talks about how so many of us preach gloom and doom, and we should be looking at the positive aspect of things, he should look at himself in the mirror every morning and remind himself of that.

Having said that, I will move into the gist of what I want to say. When I read the resolve section of the motion . . . if one wants to be technical, it is easy for government to accept the motion as worded. But, in my view, one has to go much deeper than simply talk about the government getting together with the banks to reduce the rates.

Let us get a clear understanding as to how this is presently done. Every so often we see an announcement in the media where the six or seven class A banks do a joint announcement saying that as a result of the US prime rate increasing—as announced by the great Alan Greenspan yesterday—the new prime rate for the Cayman Islands is so-and-so. I am not going to get into a long debate as to whether the fluctuations in US prime are directly responsible in truth and in fact for any fluctuations of the prime rate in the Cayman Islands because I think that’s a separate debate.

Suffice it to say that I don’t necessarily believe that when they use that as the yardstick they can justify it on every occasion. I don’t think it has the effect they say it does. I think it’s just taken for granted and easy to do.

We must also understand that we have a Monetary Authority here. We don’t have a central bank here. Yet, we have never talked about being able to use rational reasoning, at least not publicly, to be able to determine what the prime rate should be and the factors that affect the economy in this country. I am not suggesting that the US economy does not have a direct relation to ours. I am just saying that I am not too sure that it is all to do with that.

But as we have evolved into a Monetary Authority, we have never talked about having the mechanism in place to say what prime is. Of course, prime is basically what is used as the benchmark to set other rates, including mortgage rates. So you will hear the banks say that the new lending rates are three points above prime, depending on what it is. Of course, they have their own preferential rates too, depending upon who the good customer is. Unfortunately, that’s the way the whole world works, but a lot of the people who need those better rates are unable to acquire them.

Talking about rates, the point I am making is that if we really want to deal with this thing the way it should be dealt with, I don’t think government should continue to create a position where they have to go and talk to these people to negotiate. First of all, I don’t think that is going to bring any concrete long lasting results. I make no accusations, but if you were even to go to these banks in an ordinary fashion and say, ‘Listen we are having a lot of pressure. Some legislators are talking about the social ramifications and all of the various side effects that lending rates have. People are not able to acquire mortgages and, secondly, because of the rates they have to pay too much out of their fixed income towards their mortgages and they have no funds left for the other necessities. Let’s see what we can do about it’ . . . to placate the situation in the immediate term, you might have a grandstand and hear that rates are all of a sudden going to be dropped by two points, and yadda, yadda, yadda. But the truth is, it won’t be long before the situation reverts to what it was. That’s just the way it works.

As I have heard over the years that they use a formula where if the banks use that huge amount of money you have on fixed deposit at one of those commercial banks (and pay you 5%, they take that money and lend it out, some on long term, and some they keep maintaining their liquidity ratio. If they pay you 5%, they add 2% for their risk in lending money, they add 2% for the administrative costs of handling the paperwork, and then they normally add another 2% for profit. I have not spoken to any of them recently, but I know this to be a basic formula.

If we look at that unwritten rule, it tells you that nowadays there is probably a bit of straying from that formula because if you look at prime and you look at interest rates, you find that the difference in the spread is a bit more than that formula. The truth of the matter is that we have to accept that the interest rate set by the banks locally is based on the old formula of supply and demand. If there is a lot of money in supply, and they need to offload it to make more money, they start making rates more attractive.

If that shrinks then they automatically decide . . . and for the most part they will have more demand than supply or, with the greatest of respect to them, they are going to create that position. I have to deal with them daily myself, just like the vast majority of us. So, while I can't complain personally of anything untoward with the commercial banks, if we are looking at the global picture here, and we as representatives have a certain responsibility, then we really have to speak it as it is.

Having established that it's based on supply and demand, let us take a minute to fully understand the situation. This is not questioning the integrity of the banks, but the Fourth Elected Member for George Town mentioned how the class A banks work in unison. They decide on one set of rates. While one is not suggesting that that should not be the case, here's the reality: The banks set prime, they set the rates; they decide on the terms, and from A to Z in the whole picture they are in total control.

One might say that is stepping far into the argument. I don't see any reason why we can't talk about it. I don't feel threatened. And again, I am not suggesting anything untoward. All I am saying is that what prevails now is that there is no other mechanism outside of those banks to create a check and balance to say that it is fair. Now, if I were one of those banks I would want a circumstance like that because interest rates are so high they have a negative effect on a certain sector of the society.

The truth of the matter is that, because there is no check and balance from that end, anyone can still bring that argument and win it from the other side because they don't have anything to base the argument on that side about. If you are not minded to listen to what the banker is telling you, then there is no point about it. The side saying the rates are too high can convince themselves that they have won. The only way to ensure that there is fair play when it comes to reasonable returns from investments with the banks, including their capital expenditure, is to have a mechanism in place which can justify the interest rate at any time. I think it should happen.

If I were one of the banks, I would be inclined to buck against that because it really doesn't suit my line of operation. But if we compare the number of countries in the world that have such a mechanism in place and the number that do not, then the Cayman Islands is in one little pocket with a few others just languishing in it, saying to itself, 'There's nothing we can do about it.'

Look at Hong Kong. It does not have a central bank, but through their monetary authority, Hong Kong has a mechanism in place that deals with commercial lending rates. While we want to be sure that people are being treated fairly, given an earning power to be able to get the things in life that a wholesome society would call for, the truth is that it goes beyond just looking at the expectation.

We will find that some of the banks operating in the Cayman Islands, who have been allowed to lend money are not necessarily in the same position in the recognised A class institutions—The Royal Bank of Canada, The Bank of Nova Scotia, CIBC, The Bank of Butterfield, even our own Cayman National Bank. But we have other institutions that have been allowed to lend.

Let me give you just one little horror story to show that there are things we need to seriously look at. There's an institution that has now been put into liquidation. That institution lent a couple $155,000 US dollars for the completion of their home seven years ago. It took me a while to figure it out, because I couldn't believe it was true.

They looked at the couple's income and proportioned out what they thought would be a reasonable monthly payment. When the gentleman at the bank was dealing with the couple, he said to them "Which duration of payment do you want to engage in? A ten year mortgage or a 15 year mortgage?" He did not address the payment schedule. He simply asked that one question. They naturally said they would like to pay it off in ten years. He went no further with the money argument. He said "Good."

What happened when he went to his superiors seeking approval, and they looked at the income of the couple compared to what they wanted to borrow and what they could pay back, they realised that a ten-year amortisation would not work. So they must have said (I am assuming a few things, but I know I am not far off) to the gentleman, "Listen, if you want us to approve this thing you are going to have to deal with their income and extend the period so that the payments can be less."

He didn't say one word to the couple. He just called to give them the "wonderful news" that their mortgage was approved. Of course, immediately after that comes the question "what is the payment?" And it was $1800 (US) per month.

Now, seven years have gone by and they have been paying this $1800 (US) per month on the mortgage. Their initial borrowing was $155,000. Since this institution went into liquidation, another recognised entity has purchased their mortgage portfolio. This couple now goes into the new institution to understand if everything is going to continue the same. Do you know what they discovered? They discovered that seven years later, not missing one single payment, not refinancing from their initial amount, they owe exactly $400 less than when they started out.

Dr. Frank McField: That is so common in this country.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: That is a fact.

Using that example is not to suggest that every institution in this country works in the same manner. Of course, in the fine print it was right there. Do you know how long it was amortised? Twenty years!

For the love of me, I couldn't understand how they calculated the interest. God knows I can't understand that. They didn't tell them that was how long the amortisation period was. And, of course, as happens so often, when people want to get a house, they only want to hear "your mortgage is approved." They are not really interested in all of the other things at that time. That's what makes them say, "Thank God, we have a purpose now. The kids will have their own rooms."

That is not to paint a pathetic picture. And I am not suggesting that is the rule of thumb. But, it proves the point that there must be some mechanisms in place to ensure that that type of situation does not occur. It's like this: There are 15 of us in here, plus three official members. Because a threat on somebody's well-being has been made, as a security measure whenever we come through the door the security guard will check us. We don't know who the anonymous person who has threatened is. But because I know that I don't live like that, I get mighty offended that the security guard has to search me. I am saying, "Who do you think you are? treating me like a common criminal." That is how some of us react. But the fact is that we have to take precaution.

I use that as a parallel to show why we need a mechanism. If a mechanism were in place, we would not have to be here today debating the question of high interest rates. When a mechanism like that is in place, it allows for reasonable profits. It doesn't expect an institution to operate as a charity. So, we are not looking for something that should not exist.

We have long held that what is loosely termed the "laissez-faire" style that we have in our economy, where the laws of competition balance everything out doesn't work in these islands anymore. The mere fact that when the statistics are calculated we find the disparity in the wealth distribution in this country widening, dictates that the economy is not producing the desirable end results in our society. While it still allows anyone with a driving ambition to acquire some measure of success, it runs the risk of creating a society that is quite apt to explode.

Once people do what they believe is fair, most of us don't really spend too much time looking at the big picture to see how well or [ill] society is. They figure that's government's worry. Then, some of us find ourselves being representatives of the people looking at the big picture . . . then everybody says, 'Hey, wait a minute. We didn't put you there to look at those things, because that don't look so good for us.' But we need to ensure that every one of us understands the risk when we don't address certain issues, this being one of them.

We talk about immigration issues, and we talk about this. I am sure that what I have said this morning will bring about other arguments. If we do not have a society that is well, if we don't have a society that is in tact, then all the good things we keep talking about, and all of the great expectations we have, whether individually or on a corporate level, will be to no avail because we won't have a society that can succeed.

That message is one that we need to understand clearly. It is not the one the Minister of Education talks about—gloom and doom. But if he doesn't wish to address it, I feel an inherent responsibility to do so. And that's not preaching gloom and doom. I am just telling you to look out because you are going to buck your toe, fall down, and mash your mouth. Some of us can see it happening, and wait until somebody falls down and mashes his mouth, and then pick him up and carry him to the hospital and then be God to him. But that doesn't help when in truth and in fact we could have prevented him from bucking his toe. There's an old time saying, "Prevention is better than cure."

When the minister takes 45 minutes . . . first of all, he says how much time we waste in this House. And he is the ultimate waster of time, in my view! He talks about all of us, and in doing that he wastes the time that we should be doing other things with. When he gets up and talks about how the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town should have called the commercial banks . . . now hear me, the Minister of Education is a banker! He says so! He knows better than I do how this thing works.

That minister should be getting up and making the responsible statement I know he is not only capable of, but should be making. But he plays games. His yardstick is who is going to be offended. The election is coming up now, so he has to keep everybody happy even if he knows that keeping him or her happy in the short term makes everybody unhappy in the long term. He diverts attention from anything that makes sense to talk about who should call the bank to find out what they are going to do.

He talks about a private member's motion that was brought to try and increase the amount from $125,000 to $150,000 that first time homeowners would get relief with the 7.5% stamp duty, and he points out that the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town was not a part of that—just to divert attention again! The fact of the matter is that the motion was accepted unanimously, which means that the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town agreed with it. And in his mind, he knows full well that the vast majority of private members' motions are talked about before they are brought. And the fact is, we just spread them out amongst us.

So, I just took a minute to show the flimflam way debates go just to try and tit for tat . . . you know, that kind of way.

This business about interest rates with mortgages and the intent of the motion, in my view requires a look-see with a much wider perspective. But it serves the purpose of trying to look at this thing. The answer is not just to go and talk to the banks today to get some immediate relief to see who is going to get credit for that relief. That relief is not going to last long. There are other areas that have to be looked at.

It is one thing to talk about the rates, but there are many other things attached to what those rates are to ensure not only continuity, but that what we achieve is what we want to achieve.

I was going to go on to another topic, but if you are prepared to take the morning break . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.18 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.39 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing his debate on Private Member's Motion 1/00.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Delving into the area of interest rates just a little bit further, if we want to achieve the premise that the more homeowners a society has, the more harmonious and productive society will be, we have to look at the various income brackets within society and cater to the various levels of earning. We cannot ostracise any sector. Any sector of society at the biggest risk is usually where the most people are. Cayman in that respect is no different from anywhere else in the world.

So that the minister does not accuse me of doom and gloom again, our society presently has signs and rumblings of troubled areas, but is still in tact as a society. When we raise these issues, it's not to preach doom and gloom, but to simply bring the problem areas out so that we can address them before any doom and gloom occurs. It may suit him or others politically to speak like that, but we need to be factual with the country. If we say we do not have problems, we are not being truthful. But we can say we have problems with a view to addressing them while not necessarily preaching doom and gloom.

What I understand the intent of this motion to be is to look at certain areas so that persons having problems now, either with existing mortgages or those who cannot because of their earning level, acquire reasonable mortgages for a decent home. We need to look into ways and means to help them acquire the necessary mortgages. Of course, we immediately think of interest rates because if the rates were more reasonable the repayments would be more reasonable and there is a better chance to qualify.

I believe that one of the things we should be looking at is the banking institutions that exist around us. At this point in time they do not deal with these types of mortgages because automatically the risk becomes higher. It's simply a fact. Understanding that, we don't want to create a situation where we force these institutions to create schemes to cater to this. That, to me, is not the right approach. These institutions deal with a lot of foreign exchange besides lending, be it commercial, demand loans, car loans. We don't want to tell them they have to take the good and the bad.

But we want them to understand that our society is made up of everyone, and we have to now find a way to deal with the sector in our society that is more at risk than others. One idea could be . . . and I am sorry, I will have to explain that idea before I can get it out. Before I go into the idea . . . once they understand this I don't expect them to provide money for others to compete with them in the area of lending.

I remember years ago when the Housing Development Corporation was doing debentures, seeking capital to lend on mortgages. They were asking the institutions to participate in these debentures. I remember speaking to several bankers who told me that it was unfair for us to take funds that would effect their liquidity position and give that to a housing development corporation for mortgages. So, it's a bit difficult to expect to take that approach.

We have to convince these institutions—and government should do that through leading by example in my view—to create an institution to deal with that area, but they need to assist. So, we are not competing with them. We are taking away the big problems they have in that area, not that they won't have problems otherwise because there is always a risk when lending money. I believe that any meaningful attempt in this area would have to be a tiered situation when it comes to levels of income.

Within a certain level of income it is difficult to qualify for mortgages. But we want to create a circumstance where they can acquire a mortgage. Perhaps one way to deal with it is to create an institution that is tantamount to a statutory authority. While the Honourable Third Official Member does not like the terminology that I am going to use now (and I understand why), I would venture to say that looking at these institutions explaining what we are attempting, creating viable circumstances by way of saying to these institutions, 'Look, the government is going to float some bonds for a specific purpose (we are not talking about government borrowing) to create a capital base to engage in lending' . . . to satisfy these institutions, government is going to ensure that their money is safe.

But that would be almost similar to another statutory authority engaging in borrowing and government simply guaranteeing it. I think that is presently called a "contingent liability" and/or a "self-financing loan."

These are all hypothetical figures, but if you were to say let us have, say, $200,000 a year over a period of five years, you need two things—a fixed return for these people that will give that institution to lend at a more reasonable rate; and you need it for a longer term. Those are the two sacrifices. But it is not about giving anything. In return for that, you could have an institution that would not have to say, 'Oh, here comes that one. I wish they wouldn't come through the door' because it's a problem.

While you may wonder how can we create an institution that only deals with low income, which must mean the risk is higher, the advantage is that you run it like a business. But you have the two main ingredients that you don't have now: you are able to probably lend (and this is all hypothetical, I don't have the exact figures) at somewhere between 8% and 9% fixed interest on a decreasing balance, and you could extend 30 year loans to people with the minimum earning power who would then be able to deal with a simple but well planned out home, and have a $500 or a $600 per month payment. But you don't do it so that you and I can get a mortgage there. You have a checklist and due diligence that proves the person's income. To me, that's the answer we have to be seeking.

We go into all kinds of details in this Legislative Assembly talking about the problems we have. We keep coming back to this argument about people who own their homes tending to be more productive in society. It's an accepted fact. Throughout history all of the larger countries in the world had periods of depression where government had to step in and coerce financial institutions to participate.

We talk about the ambience in the Cayman Islands, the atmosphere, the political stability, or regulatory regime—all of those good reasons why commercial institutions want to do business in Cayman. Many of them have been established for many years, and some are still coming. But, if we don't maintain that stability, that ambience that is so attractive, then they are not going to want to do business here either. And we may think that if it doesn't work out here, they can just pick up and leave. But they know, just like we know, places like the Cayman Islands are not being created overnight. And as time goes on, they become fewer and fewer. Our job is to maintain what we have here for their sake and for the Caymanians' sake.

Everyone—individual and corporate—must accept a social responsibility to ensure continuation of all of these good things that create the atmosphere to do business. I am certain that if this were put together properly . . . and there are several of them around. As far back as the 1950s, after the second World War, things like I am talking about were done by the government of the United States to stimulate the economy, to give the people self worth and the drive to go on rather than throwing their hands up in the air.

Because of this tremendous growth, we pay a price. I don't believe that the people who head these institutions are unaware of these problems. But this stand-off attitude, no great willingness to create a dialogue . . . we really have not sat down together to deal with these social issues.

If we are truthful with ourselves, we have been concentrating on solving little individual problems not taking the time out to examine the big picture, fingering the problems and going to work bringing sensible solutions to them. I don't want to jump at the government, past or present, for not doing that. But the fact is that is what we have been dealing with. We are now talking about interest rates and mortgages and people getting their own homes. But it all ties into the big picture, and that's what we need to be looking at.

If our corporate citizens can see a government with a vision pointing out what we have to deal with, where we want to see ourselves tomorrow and moving in a direction to achieve the goals we set, they are going to participate because it's not a great sacrifice. We cannot expect them, from where they sit in their office doing their quarterly reports or their annual returns, to be worried about what I am talking about. But what we can expect is once we understand and accept what is going on, we can say to them: 'Fellows, we have a few problems here that we need to be looking at. This is our idea. From where you sit do you have any ideas you can add to this?' We can't leave this thing alone now. We need to accept that it's going to take all of us together to keep this good ship Cayman on the right course. Of course we can do it.

We will not do it if we see the storm coming and lay down in bed saying 'When it's over call me'—and hope for the best. We have the ability to take care of this country. We just have to be a little more innovative in our thinking. We have the ability to create the solutions. As I talk about solutions, I am really tempted to talk about the Minister's [of Education] continuous attack saying we provide no solutions. But I am not going to do that. I don't want to lose the effect of the points I am making here today.

Suffice to say that in what the motion attempts to achieve I have brought out some suggestions which might help. There are other ways. If it is not agreed to create a single institution to deal with this specific issue with a philosophy that does not go against the grain of the commercial institutions, there are also . . . I mean, in other countries the building societies were used as the machinery to get areas like this going. I know we don't have many of those in Cayman, so we might want to take a multifaceted approach.

We have the Credit Union. And I am not speaking for them because I don't know exactly what their thoughts are. But I know that for several years now the Credit Union has desired to deal with mortgages in a limited fashion, but they do not have the capital. If the Credit Union had depositors who might be willing to have their money there long term, the Credit Union could take care of a certain area when it comes to this type of lending, at a rate I am sure would be reasonable. I am not suggesting that is the answer, I am saying there are ways and means to look at this thing.

What we cannot do is allow it to come to the point where a certain sector of the society is turned against the commercial lending institutions because they are the culprits, when in truth and in fact the entire country becomes the culprit. You can't single out one area. It is not just "them" that cause the rates to be the way they are, it's just the way the economy has been fuelled. The truth of the matter is, the same way we talk about interest rates we can talk about the price of other things, the profits in other areas.

Not to take a stab at Cable & Wireless, but we see them juggling rates nowadays. No one can tell me that they have not been reaping a pile of money in this country. I am not saying that if I were them, and the situation allowed, that I would be any different. Here we have a government with a franchise with Cable & Wireless that when we looked in the last budget we were talking about an $11 million income into recurrent revenue from Cable & Wireless. And the way our budget process is, if we were less $11 million they would never have been able to have a balanced budget. So what does government say to Cable & Wireless? "Your rates are too high, but we need your $11 million"?

We have not been looking at the big picture. Another example is immigration. We talk about work permits. Look in your budget. Is it $17 million into recurrent revenue from work permits and other immigration fees?

How do you close down the immigration office and create a balanced budget?

I know it's not easy and I am not simply criticising. I am saying that we have to take a new approach to this whole affair. You simply cannot change all of that tomorrow, lose that level of income, and figure that you have another solution elsewhere: But we will all cry for Cable & Wireless to bring the rates down because it affects individuals.

Government finds itself in a situation where the orthodox methods of income have backed them into a corner. They are dependent upon those areas of income to provide the services the country demands, and then also to have balanced budgeting. But every time you look at what creates income for government, it brings a strain on society. It's difficult. I am saying that we should be looking at being innovative in our thinking.

The motion calls for the government to take the necessary steps. Those necessary steps may not be what the Minister of Education was talking about, picking up the phone and asking these people to arrange a meeting to bring the rates down. It's not going to be that simple. But we know what the motion wants to achieve, and government has accepted that.

I am saying that if we are going to accept the motion with a view to bringing about tangible results, then we have to look at the wider picture. Those results can be achieved. But we have a tendency where three or four years from now this motion, which was accepted by government, will be brought up, and we will have never heard another word about it. That is not an unfair statement because there are countless motions like that.

This is one where politically it would not be sensible for them not to accept. But, having accepted it is not the end of the story. So, I hope that in accepting the motion government is prepared to do what has to be done, or what should be done in regard to dealing with these banks.

The other point I wish to make is that the Minister of Education, in his pumping arguments about us not being able to provide solutions . . . how do I participate in a delegation to call all the bankers together to tell them we want to meet them on behalf of government? How do I do that? It's ludicrous. That is not the way the system works. Just because he wants the public to hear a certain message—and he's very good at that, Madam Speaker. He believes in saying something over and over and sooner or later they will believe it. He keeps talking about not providing solutions.

The truth of the matter is that our system only allows us to bring up the ideas. The First Elected Member for West Bay said that. We can only throw the ideas forward. That is why we have a government. That's why they are the Executive Council and not the backbench. If we on the backbench were on the Executive Council we would never put forward those arguments. I would want to be hung, drawn and quartered before I even uttered something like that. It's such a waste of time.

I hope we hear some positive results from this motion. I would like to believe that the lending institutions in this country are amenable to sitting down and looking at ways and means to be able to bring about what we can achieve in this area. This is tied into housing. Government was happy to direct $1 million from elsewhere in the budget to go towards low-cost housing. But I would like to hear how they plan to deal with that. Perhaps that $1 million should be the beginning of something sensible; something that is long-lasting that can be achieved along those lines.

There are people out there in the private sector without any hidden agenda who have good ideas, who are quite prepared to lend those ideas to bring about sensible results because they live in this country and they want what obtains in this country to remain so that they can continue to live in harmony in this country. That's what we all want. So we need to be looking for solutions together. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) If not, does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply? The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you.

Let me thank all members who made a contribution on this very important motion. I was deeply encouraged by the level of support that the motion received. This is a very important issue, one that we deal with on a daily basis in this country. It is an issue that is very dear to the hearts of many of our people, that is, the desire to own a home.

I did some quick calculations on the effect of decreased interest rates for mortgages. The reason why this is significant is because the banks have a percentage they look for as a benchmark for approvals. Let's say you make $3000 per month, and their benchmark is that your mortgage payment should not exceed 35% of your income. The lower the interest rate, and the longer the repayment term, the less of a percentage of your income that repayment becomes. Where a lot of people fall short is because that percentage exceeds what the banks regard as prudent for lending purposes and they are refused.

To give you an example, if you take the present rate, which is probably 13.5% on $120,000 over 15 years, on a combined income of young Caymanians of $3,000 per month, over 15 years that repayment on $120,000 is $1448.85 per month. That represents 48% of that couple's income. If that same $120,000 was borrowed at 9.5% over 25 years, the monthly repayment would be $1,048.44 per month, which represents 35% of that couple's income.

You can see the difference the reduced interest rate plus the extended term can have, with a greater number of persons qualifying.

If they borrow $120,000 over 25 years, at 9.5%, that monthly repayment is $873.70. That represents 29% of the couple's income. When compared to what people are paying today for a one-bedroom or two-bedroom apartment, it becomes very reasonable indeed.

I believe the banks would be receptive to sitting down for dialogue on this very important issue. What is important for the banks and government to recognise is that it is absolutely important for us to maintain the social harmony we enjoy in this country. We cannot have a mercenary attitude, meaning that we only come here to reap whatever we can without being willing to make some contributions back to society. That will not work. Pretty soon, that attitude will catch up with us.

I trust that this will not be one of those motions where government accepts it just for political or other reasons, and then we don't hear anything about it for another three or four years. I think that this is something that is very possible. I believe the sooner the initiation is made in regard to establishing some type of team for the purpose of sitting down with the banks, the better it will be for all parties involved. But, as the First Elected Member for George Town said, it must tie in with government's overall plan for the future of this country.

I heard a horror story over the weekend where a young couple had qualified for a mortgage. The young lady was so excited about the possibility that she and her husband could own their home. Because of a subsequent increase of interest rates, the mortgage was later denied. That type of thing should not be happening to Caymanians who are responsible, ambitious and who want the opportunity to own a home.

One thing that alarms me is the change in the attitude of our people. Caymanians have always been known as independent, proud, responsible people who are not prepared to live off of a handout from government or anybody else. We have sacrificed a lot to have what we do have. That tendency is changing in our society in that more Caymanians now sit down and rely on government for a home or other necessities.

Now, some people can't do otherwise. I think that is where government services come in. But for young Caymanians who have the ambition, the responsibility, and the desire to carry their own weight, every effort should be made to assist them.

I trust that government will move as quickly on this motion as it did on the e-commerce motion where within a couple of weeks there was a committee established, meetings held, and apparently that issue is moving ahead quite nicely. I thank government for that initiative. This is a very important issue, and I look forward to seeing what government will do in regard to making what is called for in this motion a reality to a larger number of our Caymanian people.

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes the debate on Private Member's Motion No. 1/00, entitled Reduced Cost of Mortgage Financing for Caymanian Owner-Occupied Homes. The question is "BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED that Government takes the necessary steps to meet with the commercial banks that offer mortgage financing with a view of negotiating preferred interest rates especially for Caymanian owner occupied homes." I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 1/00 PASSED.

The Deputy Speaker: The next item of business is Private Member's Motion No. 2/00 Public access to North Sound and Seven Mile Beach, to be moved by the Third Elected Member for West Bay.

I call to your attention that the seconder of this motion is the Fourth Elected Member for George Town and I note that he is absent from the Chamber. Do you have someone else?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Yes, Madam Speaker. I have spoken to the First Elected Member for West Bay.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 2/00

PUBLIC ACCESS TO NORTH SOUND AND SEVEN MILE BEACH

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I am pleased to move Private Member's Motion No. 2/00, Public Access to the North Sound and Seven Mile Beach, which reads:

"WHEREAS for many years Caymanians and the general public have enjoyed uninterrupted access to Seven Mile Beach and the North Sound;

"AND WHEREAS many of our fishermen, watersports operators and boat owners in general who operate in or from the north sound have depended on access to Salt Creek and other areas of the Island for docking for their boats and the loading and off loading of their passengers;

"AND WHEREAS many Caymanians, in particular West Bayers, depend on access to the North Sound for their livelihood;

"AND WHEREAS for many years the general public has had access to Seven Mile Beach between London House and the Public Beach through roads established over the years;

"AND WHEREAS access to the North Sound and Seven Mile Beach are now threatened by development and property owners who now want to deny the continued use of these roads;

"BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT Government now consider taking the appropriate action, by whatever means deemed necessary, to ensure that Caymanian boat owners and other members of the general public continue to have access to the North Sound and Seven Mile Beach area through established access roads that have been used for this purpose for so many years."

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: I beg to second the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 2/00 has been duly moved and seconded. Does the mover wish to speak to it?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, you couldn't sell beach property for many years in this country because no one wanted to live near the beach. For many years the general public in this country had un-denied access to the beach and to the waterways of this country. The people depended on this access for their livelihood.

One of the main reasons this motion being moved is because of a situation that arose late last year. I was in my office in West Bay and was approached by a number of West Bay boat owners who provided me with a copy of a letter they had received stating that as of 31 December 1999 they would no longer have access to the docking facilities they have used for so many years in the Salt Creek area because the access road was going to be closed.

In West Bay we have a lot of boat owners. In the Morgan's Harbour area, docking is very limited indeed. I recall previously that some of the boat owners used to utilise the docking facilities in the Governor's Sound area only to be run from that area by the same private land-owners. One might ask why not go to the Cayman Islands Yacht Club area where docking is available, and where you can pay a fee. Because business is so poor and so inconsistent, a lot of our boat owners really cannot afford the high fees charged for docking in these privately owned marinas.

Two experienced watersports operators from West Bay told me that they enjoyed uninterrupted access to this area since the days that Turtle Farm was in that area. That is, the Salt Creek area. I believe that the Turtle Farm was in that area up until the late 1960s and then moved to the present location in Northwest Point. Let's say they have been using this area since 1968.

For a private landowner to approach these boat owners and tell them they no longer have access to docking facilities because they are going to close the road is not very nice. I think it is unreasonable. I believe that if they develop that particular area, a better approach would have been to provide an access so as not to deprive them of their livelihood. But I understand that, subsequent to this motion being filed, some concessions were arrived at, or are being worked on. Some agreements are being put in place in regard to addressing this very important issue.

The First Elected Member for West Bay will expound on efforts and accomplishments that have taken place in that area.

The other area this motion deals with is the private roads that presently exist between Lacovia and the public beach area. There are probably four or five roads that the public has enjoyed for many years. I noticed that recently a part of that beach has been cleared. There is some notice in regard to the construction of exclusive condo units on that piece of property. I don't have a problem with development, but I believe that through the Planning Department the public access should be at least equal to what they are being deprived of through the development. They were able to drive their vehicles all the way to the edge of the beach on that particular road. I believe that the public access road should have the same width and capacity.

Another thing that was pointed out to me was that in the Seven Mile Beach area every new development has had to provide a public access road to the beach. But they are just little footpaths in most cases. If someone was swimming in one of these areas and became ill, it would be impossible for them to get an ambulance close enough to the water to pick that person up. I think this is a serious consideration.

It was also pointed out to me that a lot of private boat owners use these roads to launch their boats. If you were to allow the roads that were there to be replaced with pedestrian access to the beach, then the private boat owner will be deprived of access to the beach.

I have never been to the Bahamas, but I understand that when you walk on the beach you can run into fences. People have private property that includes the beach and the fence runs straight to the beach. But we have always been very careful not to allow that to happen here in that it is my understanding that the Crown owns the beach, at least up to the high water mark. Even that was tampered with by a previous government and has caused some very serious problems.

The Seven Mile Beach area has become very expensive. Land for sale is very limited. You probably pay $25 or $30 a foot for any land available. The owners want to own and control all the way to the water. That is causing some difficulties for people who have had the pleasure of uninterrupted access to our beaches.

So I am asking government that as a condition of any development along this area that public access, private roads that are there now, should be of the same size and calibre to allow an ambulance and also to allow the launching of a boat from the Seven Mile Beach area.

The advice of one of my legal advisors (and it didn't cost me anything either) was to look at the Prescription Law (1997 Revision). I believe that government can use this for the preventing of continued access to these roads by the general public. Under section 2 it says, "When (a) any profit or benefit; (b) any way or easement; (c) any water course; or (d) the use of any water, a claim to which may be lawfully made at the common law, by custom, prescription or grant, has been actually enjoyed or derived upon, over or from any land or water of Her Majesty the Queen, any person or any body corporate by any person claiming right thereto, without interruption for twenty years, the right thereto shall, subject to the provisos hereinafter contained be deemed absolute and indefeasible, unless it appears that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing.”

In all cases the roads I am dealing with along Seven Mile Beach, that is the road to the Salt Creek area, as well as the roads along Seven Mile Beach between Lascovia and the public beach, were there in excess of twenty years. The reason I didn't restrict the motion to just this particular area is because I am aware that difficulties have been experienced by boat owners in other district, like North Side for example and even in Bodden Town. I wanted to make it wide enough so that government could look at all areas in regard to this issue of public access to the beach, or waterways.

I referred to a letter we received from the boat owners. Let me just read that. It's dated 20th December 1999. It says “Attention Owner Yacht/Motor Vessel.”

“A final request is hereby given to remove your yacht or motor vessel from Salt Creek Marina or canal area, West Bay north, block 10E, parcel 29, no later than December 31, 1999, as the area will be closed after this time to public access.

“The entrance road to the Salt Creek area will be closing 31st December by the installation of new gates that will be locked. This will prevent any public access to the Salt Creek area. Should you have any questions, please call the number at the top of this notice. [signed] The Managers, Salt Creek Ventures, Ltd.”

Can you imagine being a boat owner who has used this area over all these years, and all of a sudden on the 20th December you get a notice stating that in ten days they are going to stop you from using this area for the purpose of North Sound trips or anything else? It created a huge concern among our Caymanian boat owners.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, is this a convenient time to take the luncheon break?

Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.44 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.36 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 2/00. The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you.

Allow me to read another paragraph of the Prescription Law, section 4(1), “When any beach has been used by the public or any class of the public for fishing, for purposes incidental to fishing or for bathing or recreation, and any road, track or pathway passing over any land adjoining or adjacent to such beach has been used by the public or any class of the public as a means of access to such beach, without interruption for twenty years, the public shall, subject to the provisos hereinafter contained have the absolute and indefeasible right to use such beach, land, road, track or pathway, unless it appears that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing.”

As I pointed out before, the roads in question have been there in excess of the required 20 years. The public has had uninterrupted access to the beach over that period of time. Caymanians are beginning to feel like the Indians of the United States. They are being pushed. You will recall that the Europeans came over and gradually pushed, and pushed the Indian people until today they are only allowed to settle on reservations that are not the most fertile pieces of property out in the middle of nowhere, so that they would not become a bother or a nuisance.

Caymanians are beginning to feel the same way. We are being pushed. Pretty soon, if we don't address what is happening we might find ourselves in the sea.

I believe that the requests in this motion are reasonable and fair. I believe that the landowners in these areas should be told that if they are going to close or replace the existing roads that our people have enjoyed for so long then they must replace them with public access to the beach of a similar size that would not only allow a person to walk to the beach, but if necessary a vehicle could access the beach in case of emergencies or in a case where a Caymanian or resident may have the need to launch a boat via a trailer.

Like the last motion we dealt with emphasised, it is important to maintain good social harmony in this country. I believe that all persons who live and work and own among us have to work together to see to it that our people continue to be treated fairly and that unnecessary pressure or inconveniences are not created that would pose a hardship to our people. So many of our boaters dock their boats in the North Sound Salt Creek area and they normally require access on a daily basis for snorkelling or deep sea fishing in an effort to earn an honest and a decent living in this country.

I recommend that government support this very important issue. To some of us it might not be important because we don't depend on operating a boat for our daily livelihood. But those persons who are engaged in that activity consider this a very important and urgent issue that has to be addressed. Thank you for your indulgence, and I look forward to hearing what government has to say on this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. D. Dalmain Ebanks: Thank you.

I rise to give this motion my support. Access to any waterfront is always needed. Caymanians enjoyed the access to the water for umpteen years, not just twenty—because I am over twenty, and I know when I used to use it!

I hope this matter can be straightened out and that the people will realise that Caymanians have to live and enjoy their lives in this island because we are Caymanians and we belong here. That water out there is for the public and we have to get to it.

I feel that once the owners of this property are approached in the right manner, they will see it with us. And I hope they do.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause)

The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you.

I stand to make a brief contribution to the motion presently before the House, a motion that speaks to public access to the North Sound and Seven Mile Beach, Private Member's Motion No. 2/00.

I remember as a young boy growing up in the Cayman Islands walking what we called then the iron shore, as well as walking along the surf on the beach and the access to just about everything on the seaside of this island. Government realises the significance of Caymanians and other residents having access to the beach or the shore in whatever district.

We know that the Planning Regulations require that developers leave a specific number of feet along the shore, and we have to ensure that those public accesses are free, clear and available for our local people. We have spent significant amounts of money in recent years to ensure that there are public beaches in the various districts. The public beach along Seven Mile Beach has been there for many, many years. There are public beaches in North Side, Colliers, Savannah, and West Bay in order to assure that access to the beach is available for our people.

In addition to that sort of justifiable expenditure, we know that some areas are not all what they are mocked up to be. I believe that as a government we need to ensure that access to the south side, or the north side, or to the North Sound is available to our people. When we say North Sound, we think of a number of our residents. And a number of them are from West Bay, providing watersports service to visitors and locals alike. We have to ensure that they have access to their boats, and that their boats are moored in a safe place.

We know the position of Morgan's Harbour and the availability of a government jetty in that area. We also know that at SafeHaven many people utilise the public docking area. We know too that many of our people utilise the Salt Creek area and that there is a specific development slated to be started in the not-too-distant future which is going to impact on those utilising that area. We, as a government are looking into their needs.

We have actually looked at the Salt Creek area. Government does own land in that area. We also see a road leading to that area. We have actually costed the road that would lead to that area. We hope that members would be supportive when we come to Finance Committee to find the funds to build the road that leads to government's property where our local people can establish a jetty. I know that many of them are committed to constructing a jetty for their boats from within their own means, and I think that is a laudable and commendable gesture on their part. In other words, they wish to work with government to establish their needs in that area.

We know there are many people who do significant fishing who need to be certain about their future. I certainly believe that the government is committed to doing whatever is necessary to ensure that they are able to maintain their livelihood. We also know that many people provide snorkelling services in the North Sound and other areas. We need to look specifically at their needs to see how government is able to help. And we commit ourselves to that process.

Government is willing to support this motion as I have described. We are already working on access to Salt Creek and believe that we all have a responsibility to ensure that the public access to the North Sound and the Seven Mile Beach is free and clear for our people.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I rise to offer my support to this motion and to say that it gives me a sense of déjà vu and places the government in a somewhat awkward position. Having accepted Private Member's Motion No. 9/96, entitled "Beach Access and use by the Public" government gave an undertaking and has seemingly been caught up by a lack of will, or intransigence, and has done nothing to effect the acceptance of that motion. In this light, I have to commend the present mover and seconder for being so tenacious as to bring the matter back to the government.

I don't want to be adversarial, but it is difficult not to remark. One has to question the government's sincerity since they had a very similar motion in 1996 and they sat on their haunches. All these years have passed, and they have done nothing to address the problem, only to have the matter come back now. Therefore, one has to wonder how much merit can be placed on the acceptance the second time around, since they saw fit to do nothing the first time. Anyway, it seems only fair that they be given a chance.

That we should address this matter is of the greatest importance. This business of access to the beach . . . and I am not restricting it to the North Sound. Access to beaches throughout this island is one area that has the potential of being problematic, causing a lot of unnecessary strife. There seems to be a basic misunderstanding between property owners as to their rights and obligations in terms of acknowledging covenants, practices, and traditions that have been longstanding in our country.

I listened to the mover and he said that many years ago beach land had no value to the Caymanians, except to use as a launching point for fishing expeditions or only when we saw fit to go to the beach for whatever reasons, recreational or otherwise. Since the development of these islands in the 1970s, beach land and access to the sea has taken on added and greater significance. We have also moved from a situation where many Caymanians who held land, and held these access have, through sale, leases or other transactions, not availed themselves of these access and of this property ownership.

We are placed in a position where we have to negotiate. And it is true that previous governments made some steps by delineating some access to the beach. But these are not vehicular and are purely footpaths. Even sometimes trying to access the beach through these areas gives some problems and rise to contention.

I think it is important and necessary to arrive at some understanding and accommodation between the persons who own property whereby Caymanians seek access through to the sea and the Caymanians who use the property. It has never been a question that Caymanians wish to repossess the land. We are not of that mentality and we full well understand commercial transactions of this nature. But it is understandable that we be concerned when access is denied.

I am reminded that about three months ago one of my constituents who has a charter boat business and keeps his boat moored in the South Sound area, came to me on two occasions very perturbed. I won't identify the property. Nevertheless, what I am going to report disturbed me greatly.

My constituent told me that he was concerned because to access his boat he had to pass through a property where access to the beach was denied. When he spoke to some of the principals they told him that they wanted to "keep niggers out." I mentioned this to my frequent passenger, the First Elected Member for George Town, and suggested we take a ride. It is always wise to have at least one witness.

The First Elected Member for George Town said he was aware of the problem because he saw some activity that would suggest that was the case. My constituent told me that the area was being patrolled by a rather vicious looking German Shepherd dog. Well, I drove across the area and was struck by the paradox because the same people who were trying to keep "niggers" out had a black security guard!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. Roy Boddén: Nevertheless these are some of the attitudes we often come up against. Some of our people are intimidated by these things. But even more than the intimidation, it carries the potential for confrontations. I think we should discourage that.

I want to reassure property owners that when their rights are trespassed, or there is abuse, I am sure that there are law enforcement agencies that would be happy to entertain their complaints. But the obverse is also true: they should not use as a pretext the protection of their property to deny law abiding citizens the right to traverse through the property to access the beach or their boats that are moored there.

In other jurisdictions, these attitudes breed contempt for one element of the population against the other. We have long prided ourselves in the Cayman Islands with congenial neighbourly living. I hope it does not come to the stage where we have to enforce all of these traditions which in years past we took for granted.

I believe that one of our problems is that our notion of private property was a lot different than that of North Americans and Europeans. Historically they guarded their property very sacredly. We have no such history in this country and I hope that that is the understanding that can be afforded us by persons who come in and buy our property. I hope that they can accommodate our traditions and ways of life and allow us to traverse and get access to the beach and the North Sound as and when we desire, provided that we respect their property and don't do anything to deface, vandalise or disregard in any way.

I would say to government that this is the second time that we have had to resort to asking them to do something about it. I find it rather ironic that both times was an election year. Maybe the government was preoccupied with getting re-elected in 1996. So I will forgive them for not doing anything about the motion they accepted at that time. This being an election year, I would think the same preoccupation exists. It will be difficult for government to expect the same excuse to carry twice. I am saying that this time the matter carries greater urgency and it is incumbent upon them to accede to the request and try to do something about the matter before a lawsuit, or worse.

It is difficult enough to have sold the land, but it is far worse to know that the persons to whom it has been sold are so uncharitable as to deny access to people who may need access purely for commercial reasons. I would say that it is our responsibility when faced with these kinds of circumstances to be as understanding as we possibly can. While we have an obligation to the people we represent, we also have an obligation to the landowners. This matter is one of the easiest matters to resolve if government is so minded.

As with the motion in 1996, I will leave it to their conscience to determine how much interest should be placed on this matter, with the caveat that it nothing is done between now and election it certainly will be a campaign issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause)

The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I seconded the motion in the absence of the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Public access must always exist for people to use the sea whether it's the beach for boating, or just fishing. I think one member mentioned that this matter arose in 1996. A motion was accepted. I can say that I heard of it in 1988, and I think I heard of it in 1992, and similar in election years before that. But this one I can say arose out of concern by some boat operators in the North Sound.

I can say that Capt. Eugene Ebanks and I were made aware that a group of watersports operators had received a letter from the owners of a portion of Salt Creek. They also own the property that the pathway leading to Salt Creek runs across. I think about 13 of them use that area.

Capt. Eugene, Mr. Cline Glidden, Jr. (CG), Mr. Rolstan Anglin, and I met with most of the group to hear their situation. Then we organised a meeting with the owners of the property. We talked through the situation with the owners. And the Caymanian Land and Sea Co-operative, which is formed for taxis and watersports operators, got an agreement through that entity for use of the area by the local watersport operators for another year. That was in January before the motion came to the House.

That agreement is for one year, and then on a monthly basis until such time that a proper area can be made for them on the property that government owns. In our discussion with the owners, I said that I didn't know whether government would be able to do much with the property it owns, but hopefully in the span of one year something could be done. And I heard the Minister of Tourism say that an access road is going to be built. That would help

Salt Creek presently has three owners. Government owns some 40 plus acres, plus two private owners. Government would need to negotiate an agreement, or purchase a right-of-way across the other two properties owned by private owners because government's property, while on the sea, is land locked. Some of the boat owners are willing to build their own jetty on government's property if they are able to get to government's property. Well, if government can build the road, that would bode well. We have negotiated an agreement for one year, so government should be able to negotiate something with the private landowners.

I believe that aspect is going to be looked at. We have some conditions to the agreement. The boat operators had to put a garbage bin on the property so they could put their garbage in after using the area. And there are some derelict boats that have to be removed from the water. Those are two of the conditions. I know that the garbage bin has been put there. And they are well underway to complying with the agreement.

I think that the 99.99% of that group using Salt Creek are satisfied with this arrangement, with the understanding that we get government to build the road. Well, we can see what happened. At least one or two that wanted to get things moving faster contacted the mover and I would suspect after hearing the minister's comments, that they contacted him as well.

That's all good and well for the use of Salt Creek. What needs to be done is that government needs to get the right-of-way across the two private properties and organise government's property in a way that the boat owners can utilise it.

In regard to Seven Mile Beach (and I would suspect other areas), what government should do, and it is probably late in the game to be doing so, but other countries have started on a similar suggestion. Government should move to purchase the smaller pieces of property on Seven Mile Beach which is left vacant, and seems not able to be built on. I think this is something they could look for throughout the country. I am not saying that government should take anybody's property. They could identify the property, make arrangements to purchase over a period of years.

As we go around the waterfront, there are several small pieces that are not hooked in to pieces across the road that is privately owned. Public access and public beach space would not be limited. People sold their property over the years. Therefore, new owners have various views as to what should be done, or can't be done on their property. We have grown up in this country to believe that we always had use of the iron shore for fishing or pulling up a boat, or the beach for bathing. I would hope that this would not be questioned now. But I don't think we can wait any longer without government purchasing more and more of these small pieces of property on the beach.

In some countries on the main road along the beach there is nothing built; everything is built on the opposite side of the road and the view of the sea is left open and the beach is left there for everybody to use. Our development took off differently and private landowners do as they pleased within guidelines I guess.

I don't think there is any more that I can add to this motion, but I think I needed to set the record straight on Salt Creek and exactly what the situation is.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) If not, would the mover like to exercise his right of reply? The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Let me thank the government for accepting the motion. I am very pleased to hear that action has been taken in an effort to address this very important issue of access to Salt Creek.

One of the suggestions made to me by one of my constituents was in order to ease the demand for docking facilities, especially in the North Sound area, that maybe government should look at the possibility of extending the present government dock in the Morgan's Harbour area another 100 feet or so, which would allow more boats to dock in that area. That would allow some additional space on both sides of the dock.

There was a channel dredged there. It means that if the jetty was extended, maybe larger boats used in the North Sound could moor in that particular area. As it extends out the water becomes deeper.

I believe that we need to look at the possibility of reinstating the high water mark along the access to the beach. I recall that the high water mark, before a previous government interfered with it, was defined as that point where vegetation actually met the sand. That prevented anyone from saying that people could not walk through their property to get to the beach because the Crown owned up to the point where the beach met the vegetation. In most cases that was way up and it prevented people from telling others that they could not pass through that property on their way to the beach.

The definition now, as I understand it, has the high water mark as high up as the water will extend, maybe during high tide. In this country, we don't have huge tides like in some countries. I recall in Costa Rica the shift can be as much as 12 feet between high and low tides. So the present definition of the high water mark only extend three or four feet beyond the water. For public access to the beach to be limited to that specific narrow piece, I don't think is fair.

I also believe that the long-term solution to the Salt Creek area is for government to build an access road as has been proposed and to maybe assist the boat owners to construct a jetty that runs north/south for 300 feet or so providing adequate docking space.

I believe that as representatives of the people we have to be conscious of the people's needs. When our people come to us with problems we should pool our efforts and come up with a solution. Our future success hinges on maintaining social harmony in this country.

One of the advantages we have in this country is that persons from all levels of society have been able to earn a decent living. We don't have a whole lot of have's and have not's, even though that situation is getting a bit critical at present. If we allow the situation we are addressing here today to continue, then this could go into even exaggerating that position further.

Many Caymanians, especially from my district, have saved a little money and have nice boats. And because of their knowledge of the North Sound they are able to use that boat to make a living. Because Caymanians are so hospitable anyway, they can sell their personality and experience. Most people enjoy their experience with the gentlemen offering those excursions to the North Sound.

We have to be very careful that we don't allow a few to control the whole. Especially in the watersports area this is becoming a problem. Our people are having a much more difficult time making an honest living. There are huge companies that go to the cruise ships for pre-bookings for a commission. Because of that, the cruise ships recommend those operators.

To give you an example, if a cruise ship passenger came ashore and booked a tour themselves, they would probably get that tour for $12 to $15 through an independent taxi operator. From the ship that same tour is sold for $35. The local operator gets maybe $10 and the cruise ship walks away with $20 on each ticked. I learned that the cruise directors have a lot of influence. Before they go into a port they have a briefing session and tell them whom to look for if they want to go on tour. They are told not to trust the others, they have no insurance . . . . All they have to do is say it, and it's gospel as far as those passengers are concerned. They have tremendous influence on who gets the business in this country.

In the North Sound I hear many tales of the poor little Caymanian sitting at the dock, even at Salt Creek, waiting for his two persons—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, if I can interrupt you . . . can you return to the motion or tie in what you are saying with the motion please?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I will, Madam Speaker.

And you see a boat going out by Beach Club with 150 passengers. It becomes very discouraging. The point I am trying to make is that we have to at least ensure that the playingfield remains level in order to allow our people to continue to earn a living in this area.

People come here, they buy land, and they don't care what it was being used for before they purchased it. They have no sensitivity to these matters.

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a convenient time to take the break?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I was about to wind up.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay, if you are just going to take a minute, we will let you wind up.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Let me thank my colleagues who spoke on behalf of the motion, I thank government for accepting it. I am very pleased to see that this matter is well in hand, according to government. And I look forward to a permanent solution to this very important issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The question on Private Member's Motion No. 2/00, entitled Public Access to the North Sound and Seven Mile Beach. "BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT Government now consider taking the appropriate action, by whatever means deemed necessary, to ensure that Caymanian boat owners and other members of the general public continue to have access to the North Sound and Seven Mile Beach area through established access roads that have been used for this purpose for so many years."

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 2/00 PASSED.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.36 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.58 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(3)

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I would like to move the suspension of Standing Order 14, only to the extent of moving Motion 3/00 to the end of the Order Paper, after Motion 5/00.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 14 (3) be suspended in order to move Private Member's Motion 3/00 to the end of the Order Paper, after Private Member's Motion 5/00. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14 (3) SUSPENDED TO ENABLE PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION 3/00 TO BE MOVED THE END OF THE ORDER PAPER AFTER PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION 5/00.

The Deputy Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 4/00, Investigation into the Practice of Health Insurance Providers, to be moved by the First Elected Member for West Bay.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 4/00

INVESTIGATION INTO THE PRACTICE OF HEALTH INSURANCE PROVIDERS

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I beg to move Private Member's Motion No. 22/00 (sic), standing in my name, which reads:

"WHEREAS the Insurance Law came into force in January 1999 mandating everyone to be covered;

"AND WHEREAS there are numerous complaints emanating from members of the public regarding coverage and non-coverage and various other aspects of health insurance;

"AND WHEREAS there are complaints from persons, including young Caymanians being denied coverage;

"BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT Government urgently conduct an investigation into the practice of providers;

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT such an investigation be completed within three months and tabled in this honourable Legislative Assembly along with the Government's strategy for addressing any weakness within the operations of the system."

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, you referred to this as motion 22, but the Order Paper refers to it as 4/00, can you make that amendment please?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, yes, Madam Speaker, that's because it's been on the Order Paper for that long.

The Deputy Speaker: I just thought I'd bring that to your attention.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I rise to second the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Private Member's Motion No. 4/00 has been duly moved and seconded, would the mover care to speak to it?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you.

I don't intend to be long because we have quite a few motions to be dealt with. I am hoping that we can get out of here pretty quick.

The subject of insurance is one that has been debated quite extensively in this House, over the airwaves, and with the ordinary man in the street. It is very topical because it is costly. The cost at private clinics is not cheap, nor are the services at the hospital. It is being debated because people are being denied coverage. People who had insurance are being denied coverage when they reach a certain age. And to a poor person, all of these things are insurmountable.

This does not take into account when a person has to seek overseas medical assistance. Without insurance it means a commitment for years that was not planned for and for which they have to pay what they don't have, or put their house and land into hock with government. In today's world, insurance is needed. A law has been passed, and is in force, mandating that everyone has insurance. According to law, those who cannot buy insurance are supposed to be covered by government.

I have had complaints from persons (as have other members of this House) that they had insurance, but have been told that the insurance company is no longer covering them. This needs to be rectified.

One of the biggest problems is the non-acceptance of the insurance card given to a person who buys a policy from the insurance company. The purpose of the card is so that people should not have to put up money when they go for medical attention, whether to the hospital, the dentist, or private clinic. But this is not the case. There are far too many cases where various clinics, the dental clinic included, are not accepting these insurance cards.

There are other situations I have heard about where a company took the premium from the person. The person got sick and went to the hospital, generated a bill of some $21,000 or more, and the insurance company still accepted the premium but refused to cover the person and tried to remove the person from the insurance policy. That was a group policy. It was not a pre-existing condition so they had no excuse there.

There are young Caymanians who have been denied coverage with certain companies. I must tell the truth. I believe the minister has been trying to get on top of this situation. He has talked to me on various occasions about it. I don't know how much of this has been cleared up, if any. I suspect that the minister will be able to tell us exactly what has been done since the tabling of the motion.

But I believe that these situations need to be dealt with from the inspector's office. Because the country is so young in this matter it should not be left for the person to get a lawyer to go and deal with the insurance company. I feel this is more or less a government responsibility, seeing that government mandated that everyone should have insurance.

I know that the minister has been trying to deal with this matter and hopefully he will tell us what has been done.

I know that other members have ideas, and I am sure that all of us have had the same complaints. I would just like to draw to the minister's attention that those people that insurance companies will not cover because of some pre-existing condition, who have to apply to the medical social worker, . . . one of the conditions now attached to that is if that person has a credit card they can't get the coverage. I don't understand that seeing that the law determines that those with pre-existing conditions who can't get insurance government will assist. But if a person has a credit card, they can't get government assistance.

In one case I know of the person (who is very independent), and government has never had any cause to assist him. He had a heart condition, bypass surgery. They had to get a credit card to assist them at that point. It's simple; they could take the time to pay back the card. Of course, it came in very handy for these responsible people.

Having been turned down after trying to get insurance afterward, they applied to the government social worker. This is one of the conditions attached to that benefit government offers. I would hope that the minister could rectify that situation somehow.

I don't think this motion will have any problem in passing. Therefore, I will give other members an opportunity to put their case forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

Hon. Anthony Eden: I rise to offer government's acceptance of Private Member's Motion No. 4/00. As the mover said, this motion was actually in the office of the Clerk from 1 June last year.

There have been a number of initiatives started on this, and I would just like to say that I have invited the Superintendent of Health Insurance from the Monetary Authority, and the Permanent Secretary from the Ministry of Health to hear the concerns as we try to go forward to address what honourable members' concerns are. I think that this is the best approach to solve the concerns not only of MLAs but also of the public.

This is a very recent piece of legislation and there are growing pains. The 1997 Health Insurance Law and Regulations came into force on the 1 January 1998 with a six-month deferral of penalties in order to provide time for all persons and employers to affect their health insurance coverage. This motion states that numerous complaints have come from the public regarding coverage and non-coverage, young Caymanians being denied coverage and various other aspects relating to health insurance.

I feel obliged to tell members of this honourable House that prior to August last year the number of complaints actually received by the Ministry of Health and the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority had not been many at all—as a matter of fact, far from it. There was only one at that time last year that we could trace, which was a written complaint concerning the negotiations for a health insurance contract. That single written complaint was forwarded by the mover of this motion.

During August last year, my Ministry undertook to inform the public that the Superintendent of Health Insurance at the Monetary Authority was available to investigate any complaints and answer any inquiries the public may have. Since that time, he has been approached by over 200 people, which bears out the importance of this motion coming at this time. Most of those inquires were also complaints. Not surprisingly, most complaints from the public relate to health insurance claims rather than to persons unable to obtain coverage.

I believe that the publicity campaign was successful in letting the public know that help is available and that we are prepared to help. It may well be, however, that even after inviting the public to contact us there are still persons out there who believe they are not being treated fairly by the providers of health insurance, but who have not actually asked us for help. It would be a lot easier for everyone concerned if these persons would come forward and tell us their concerns.

I would also like to ask the honourable member moving the motion, and all other honourable members, that they tell me how many complaints they have received and also that you tell us the nature of these complaints and pass each one on to me to investigate. I must emphasise that complaints be channelled to the Monetary Authority, my staff, or myself. I will endeavour to see that they are dealt with in an appropriate and timely manner.

I believe that with this experience, the Superintendent of Health Insurance will be able to resolve the majority of these issues. It is a fact of life that some persons are genuinely uninsurable. For those persons the government has systems in place to assist them. In fact, these were in place long before the Health Insurance Law was passed. The law itself fully recognises this situation and makes legal provision for these uninsurable persons.

In his motion, the honourable member emphasised that there are young Caymanians who have been denied medical insurance coverage. Regrettably, I must assume this is true since some young Caymanians will also have pre-existing medical conditions which could result in their being uninsurable. However, no evidence has been brought to my attention that young Caymanians have been singled out for denial of coverage, or discriminated against in any way whatsoever. I can only say, please let us know what the complaints are and we will investigate and do everything possible to effect a satisfactory solution.

Prior to the implementation of the Health Insurance Law, it was estimated that 10,000 people held health insurance coverage. Since implementation of the law, we have come a long way with this important piece of social legislation. The latest figures show that some 28,000 people outside the government service now have private health insurance. When this figure is taken together with the 10,500 or more people for whom government is responsible, then the total number of people with access to paid health benefits is upward of 38,500, or probably around 95% of the population. I believe we have made tremendous progress since the law was passed. We cannot deny that we have come a long way. But we will not rest on our laurels.

The motion resolves that government urgently conduct an investigation into the practices of providers regarding coverage and non-coverage, and further resolves that the investigation be completed within three months and tabled within this Legislative Assembly along with government's strategy for addressing any weaknesses in the operation of the system.

I recognise that to undertake an investigation of insurance providers as requested by the motion could involve the government in a long and bureaucratic process. After all, there are about 1600 companies employing people in the islands and this must mean that all those companies should each have a file in the offices of one of the insurance providers. In addition, there are all those people who have individual health insurance policies.

However, we can indeed undertake an investigation of the underwriting and acceptance criteria and guidelines of all the approved health insurance providers and possibly through a process of sampling individual acceptance and rejections report on the situation.

I am aware that those insurance providers operating agencies and branch offices in the islands may well retain their main records at their head office where the medical underwriting is carried out. So it might not be possible to achieve as broad an examination as the motion would wish. In addition, I would draw the attention of members to the highly important fact that medical information concerning any one person is extremely confidential. It is so confidential that most insurance companies will not release it to anyone but that person's medical advisor.

When the Health Insurance Law and Regulations were introduced, I made no secret of the fact that I believed we had made a good effort, but that I did not expect that we had it all right the first time around. With more experience under our belts, and a recent review of the working of the system, I am now pleased to announce that government has agreed to implement a series of measures to improve the workings of the Health Insurance Law.

I propose to amend the cover under the standard health insurance contract to extend to all the costs of outpatient surgery and to provide automatic coverage to a child as soon as it is born and for the first 30 days of its life. In addition, I intend to provide a statutory period of six months for people to make their claims with their insurance companies, and to set a reasonable maximum period for insurance providers to pay those claims.

The law also needs to be clarified to ensure that health insurance is the primary instrument for providing reimbursement for medical expenses so that the situation is avoided under which insurance companies argue whether, for example, a motor insurance third party insurer pays medical expenses. This sort of situation, which has regrettably occurred, is not acceptable.

Further, I intend to provide that private medical practitioners should provide a list of their standard charges in certain areas, and that these standard charges will be available to patients, the general public, and the insurance companies.

Also, dialogue has been taking place with the doctors and health insurance providers. A few weeks ago the Superintendent of Health Insurance, the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Health, a legislative counsel and I attended a meeting held by the Chamber of Commerce where many of these concerns were also aired. Additionally, I intend to undertake further publicity and education of the public on their rights under the Health Insurance Law, and the working of the health insurance system. As I said, we have come a long way. There will always be a few glitches, but the ministry is committed to arriving at a solution that will benefit all of our people here in the Cayman Islands.

The mover mentioned the assessment by the social worker. We can look at this, but this is an assessment we are hoping will come out in draft regulations as to how it is carried out so that there will be no political involvement. That will be coming to this House in due course.

These are the measures I intend to take in addition to accepting this motion. As I said, this is a very timely motion, there has been much concern expressed recently, not only by this House but by the public. I appreciate both and commend the mover and seconder of the motion for their diligence and their desire that the public be well served in this regard. That too is my overriding goal. I believe that together we can work this out.

I would like to thank the House for the opportunity to put this forward. There is still more work to do, but we are prepared within the Ministry, and with the help of the Superintendent of Health Insurance at the Monetary Authority to address whatever concerns or problems may arise.

I feel this is one of the most important pieces of legislation to ever come to this House. I see it not as a burden, but as an investment in our people. God forbid that any one of us should get into a serious accident and have to go overseas, where there's trauma or serious burns. If we don't have some health insurance coverage in place it does not take long for overseas medical costs to practically bankrupt the person involved. I hope that none of our people arrive at that.

I feel that this piece of legislation has gone a long way and we are prepared to assist and work on this. In just over two short years, we have done a lot. But there is still time and we are prepared to do what is necessary. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It is one minute before 4.30. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Anthony Eden: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM Wednesday.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Wednesday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 22 MARCH 2000.

EDITED
WEDNESDAY
22 MARCH 2000
10.15 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. There are no messages and announcements, so we will move to Other Business. I will ask for the suspension of Standing Order 14(2) to carry on Private Members' Motions.

The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(2)

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 14(2) to carry on the Private Members' Motions.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 14(2) be suspended in order to carry on Private Members' business. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14(2) SUSPENDED.

The Deputy Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 4/2000, Investigation into Practice of Health Insurance Providers, continuation of debate thereon.

Does any Member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 4/2000

INVESTIGATION INTO PRACTICE OF HEALTH INSURANCE PROVIDERS

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you Madam Speaker. I rise to offer my support of Private Member's Motion No. 4/2000 dealing with health insurance coverage.

Madam Speaker, I think it is probably about two years now since we implemented the National Health Insurance Law that requires that all persons in the Cayman Islands must be covered through health insurance. I believe that was a very necessary move for us as a country and as a government in that the issue of medical expenses and services is a very important one but a very expensive one indeed. The government, not only this government but previous governments, has done a lot to assist our people by way of providing free medical, by way of having in place a contract with a major facility in the US where if the issue cannot be handled here then we at least have an option to send that person abroad. It has worked well.

The problem we are faced with is that large bills have been incurred normally by people who can least afford to pay those bills. That is why health insurance coverage is so important at this time in the Cayman Islands. I believe that the general public welcomes that legislation and has moved forward with regard to not only individuals but employers as well as to put the programme in place.

I also believe that much has been done to arrive at a premium that most people find reasonable, that is, the basic coverage. A large percentage of the people opted for coverage that exceeds the basic requirements of the law. People have been faithful in making their premium payments, Madam Speaker, and they expect the programme to work.

Now, I recall probably about 15 or 20 years ago when my brother-in-law had a very serious accidents with some horses. He damaged his back and we had to fly him out to Miami for medical attention. He didn't have insurance coverage and the hospital would not even look at him until we had, at least $5,000 - $10,000 deposit in place. So, people expect the programme to work when they need it.

I also made it a point to make sure that I had coverage from a private company. Madam Speaker, if I go to the doctor I expect to present my card and I expect to get a service that I feel I am entitled to under that programme.

We cannot say that we have an insurance programme in place where [facilities] refuse to accept the card up-front for payment. Madam Speaker the majority of our people who have the health insurance coverage find it very difficult to make the monthly $50 payment towards the premium or whatever the required premium is. The average individual is not in a position financially to go to a private doctor or even to the hospital and have to pay up-front $200 - $300 just for a visit or if it is a much more serious situation, $2,000 - $3,000 and then hope or wait until they are reimbursed by the insurance company. To me that is not an acceptable practice or programme.

I can appreciate, Madam Speaker, that the service providers want to get paid immediately as they render a service. I really don't have a problem with that. This is where the system has to work because the service providers should not have to sit down and wait four to six weeks for a payment to be made. It should be almost automatic. The system should basically work along the same lines as a credit card. A lot of people don't carry cash these days, they carry credit cards and they use it for payments of all sorts. All the service providers really have to do is to present that slip to their banks and within a day or two days they have credit for those funds. I am not sure we can be that efficient, Madam Speaker, but we have to be in a position where we guarantee payment in a timely fashion as far as the service providers are concerned.

I have had to use my card on a number of occasions. I recall at one establishment they did accept the card up-front and they billed the insurance company. But in most instances I had to write a cheque or come up with cash and then hoped that the insurance company was going to reimburse me within a month to six weeks for the money that I spent.

The other day I think this situation reached a climax. I did report it to the Honourable Minister and I think it was the next day or so there was a press release from his office addressing the issue. Like I said, if there are companies here offering the coverage that, first of all, are not making the payments on a timely basis or where the service providers refuse to accept the card, then arrangements must be made to allow other companies who may wish to offer the service to the general public.

I know it is a new venture and it is an issue that we are dealing with right now as far as the Public Accounts Committee is concerned. I think, with the effect from 1st March, you have another 10,000 persons that basically represents the civil servants and their dependants. This is going to be another challenge for establishments like the hospitals and other medical service providers.

Madam Speaker, these particular establishments have to ensure that they do have the facilities in place, that is, computer programmes that will accommodate and will assist with an efficient and prompt handling of these claims for payments or otherwise.

Madam Speaker, I have had a number of my constituents come to me with the same complaint that when they went to the doctor and presented their cards they were not accepted up-front and they had to take $200 - $300 out of their own pockets. Madam Speaker, it would be bad enough if (like I said) all persons could afford that, but the reality is a lot of people who require medical services do not have the ability to pay $200 to $500 up-front.

It is important that this issue is addressed promptly and effectively. What you don't want is the general public losing confidence in the programme. By that I mean, the general public will start saying, 'This doesn't work so why should I pay a premium for health insurance coverage' which puts us back to where we were. If that particular individual has a problem medically then government is going to have to step in and insist or ensure that they get the medical attention that they desire or require in a lot of cases at a tremendous expense to Government. The Government has a lot of outstanding medical bills at the present time that there is very little hope of ever recovering.

Madam Speaker, I do have faith and confidence in the Minister for Health and his support staff. I must say that whenever an issue or challenge is brought to his attention he does his best to deal with it. I am quite sure that he and his staff will deal with this issue, but I believe that a very strong message has to be sent not only to the insurance providers but to the service providers insisting that they accept these insurance cards up-front for payment and they are reimbursed in a timely fashion.

Madam Speaker, I do give this motion my support and I look forward to this very important issue being addressed by the Minister and his team. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, the First Elected Member from West Bay and I brought this motion to the Honourable House because we had been approached individually, and in a few instances collectively, by members of the community expressing concern and sometimes bewilderment at the inability to understand the role and function of health insurance. Bewilderment and concern arising mostly from an inability to grasp and understand why coverage in some instances was denied and also with the process of payment.

Now, Madam Speaker, I have to be fair and candid in recognising the efforts of the Minister and his ministry staff in implementing what has to be a significant challenge. I must say that the few occasions in which I brought concerns to the Minister regarding complaints I had received from my constituents or from members of the wider community, the Minister reassured me and dealt with my concerns responsibly. I have reason to believe that those efforts and attitudes continue to this day.

What the motion is not doing is seeking to lay any blame or cast any aspersions upon the Minister or his staff while at the same time recognising that there are certain challenges that still need to be dealt with satisfactorily. I want to say that I don't want to personalise any comment or cast any aspersions having respect for the providers but there are some contradictions and paradoxes which arise out of the way some of the insurance companies operate. But I should say at the beginning, the insurance company I use (and have been using for years, even years before it became mandatory to have health insurance) . . . I have no cause for complaints. I get treated excellently even having young children and having to make frequent claims because both of my children were asthmatic. I have absolutely no problem with the support I get from the company, which carries the health insurance for my family.

Other members with whom I have spoken who share that same company expresses the same sentiments. Be that as it may, I do know that some people have serious problems with some of the companies that they are insured with.

I listened carefully to the Third Elected Member for West Bay when he expressed some concerns and some sentiments. I have to say that I must agree with him because Madam Speaker when I lived in Canada, being a subscriber to the Ontario Health Insurance Plan I had a health insurance card. That card was presented to my doctor for payment. That was used as a debit card. No monetary transaction passed between my doctor and I. When I went to my doctor to make the claim, I presented my card which was much like a credit card (or what I prefer to call a debit card). It had my name and an identification number which my doctor entered with the transaction.

I, therefore, cannot understand and this is especially onerous on poor people who have to pay the premiums at the end of the month and then upon visitations to the doctor have also to produce cash payment for medical attention received. Madam Speaker, in those cases, it is a paradox and it is a contradiction for you paying your monthly membership fees and then you also have to pay the doctor. Once could quite sensibly ask: what is the purpose then of having health insurance? Many people who come from the less affluent sectors of the society, particularly those with families and especially young children and those persons who suffer ill health, find this difficult and onerous. So, I would ask the Honourable Minister to look into this and see if he can work with the insurance companies to eliminate this contradiction (as I prefer to term it) to the point where if one is paying the monthly premiums then upon visitation one does not have to fork out cash to pay for medical attention received provided it falls within the coverage that one has.

Madam Speaker, I have heard of many of these circumstances, many of them frightening. Circumstances in which two of my constituents reported to me that they sort medical attention overseas and before leaving were ensured by the company carrying their insurance that they would honour the bills incurred, only to go access the medical service and upon presentation of the card and affirmation have coverage was denied. One of these persons was put out to the tune of $10,000 and one substantially more.

The danger in that is that when you are outside of this jurisdiction and nobody knows your family and nobody knows your circumstances, no one is sympathetic. Accessing medical care is a business and so these people in Miami, Florida, were seriously inconvenienced. One of them had to leave the jurisdiction, come to Cayman and negotiate a bank loan. What if they were not allowed to leave? What if the charge was laid that they were trying to receive the medical attention under false pretences or by fraudulent means? So, these are the kinds of contradictions and problems, Madam Speaker, which have to be ironed out.

From the information I have, some of these companies can be more accommodating. Madam Speaker, you will be aware of other concerns. The Elected Member for North Side and I discussed a peculiar case in which coverage is denied not only to indigent persons but to persons with an existing medical condition who are able to work. This again is a contradiction. Where do these people fall? They are not indigent and therefore cannot qualify for the indigent uninsurable because they are still healthy and some of them are still at the age where they are productive citizens and workers in the community. Yet, because of an existing condition they are denied coverage—period.

These kinds of concerns also have to be addressed and discussed with the insurance companies. I know of at least two cases that were brought to my attention by the Elected Member for North Side. I know in my constituency of another two cases. So, Madam Speaker, these are all challenges that have yet to be worked out and, again, I want to commend the Minister and his staff because they have done a great job and the fault does not, I am convinced, lie with the Minister and his staff.

What we have to overcome is the intransigence between some of the insurance companies and the clients that they insure. In this regard, Madam Speaker, the Minister has to be prepared to be a mediator, to use his staff to mediate. I would prefer to say mediate rather than regulate or legislate because I think we can get a better understanding if we go through it without it being an adversarial or without us having to divide into two camps on opposite and polar sides.

So, the Minister and his ministry has to be prepared to mediate and to shepherd the insurance companies along and to reassure them while at the same time bolstering the faith and the expectations of the clients and the community.

Madam Speaker, the insurance company should be happy because they have a wholly captive audience. They have monies for which they collect and they don't have to pay any taxes or anything on. So, they should be rushing to be as accommodating as they can especially when we consider that when the civil servants come on line there be another approximately 10,000 clients for the insurance companies to receive.

I believe that sound health insurance is a progressive step and I am happy that we could realise it. But I am also cognisant of the fact that there is a pool of people in our society who cannot qualify. It is to these people that we bear a great responsibility. And it is to these people that we have to give the assurance that they will not be forgotten. The indigent that cannot qualify because he is unable to meet the cost of the premiums, the uninsurable that cannot qualify because he may have some pre-existing condition which does not allow him to access coverage, these people have to be the responsibility of the Government. And there must be some mechanism in place.

I believe the Honourable Minister has already set in place such a mechanism where five dollars in one instance and ten dollars in other instances is collected to go towards a pool to ensure that these people have health insurance coverage. This is indeed a noble gesture.

I want to further burden the Minister by suggesting (and I raised this already) that it is my observation that more and more people are finding it difficult to meet funeral and burial costs. I would say to the Minister by virtue of a suggestion that he may see fit to explore the possibility of subscribers paying $1 or $2 more per month which would allow them to have burial insurance as it is called in some places. Thereby release family members who may find it difficult, and equally important, release the Government from the expectations and the obligation to provide monies for the burial of such persons.

Madam Speaker, I was a short time ago (upon the passing of my mother) surprised to find that even a relatively modest funeral costs upwards of $12,000. When someone is unprepared in the event of tragedy or a sudden death . . . that is not a paltry sum for persons of modest means to be expected to provide. So, I would say to the Minister, I am sorry for having to add more to his already loaded plate, but it would strike me that this may be something worth while pursuing since most persons who cannot meet these costs from family or person expenses look to the Government. I certainly know in other jurisdictions that it is possible to get this kind of coverage added on to one's health insurance policy.

Madam Speaker, that we are provided with successful health insurance is absolutely essential if the Government is to realise the cost of running its hospital. That's why I want to impress upon the Honourable Minister that if it is necessary he must bear down upon the health insurance providers so as to ensure that the Government is not unexpectedly or unrealistically burdened with costs that should be covered by the health insurance providers.

I note, Madam Speaker, the graciousness in the Honourable Minister's reply. I have every reason to believe that he is committed to what he has promised in his reply. And, I wish him well in his continued endeavours and would stress that he use the good offices of his ministry to pursue this matter so that the success we have realised thus far can be spread even wider. And, that the maximum number of our citizens can have reason to feel assured that they are ably covered and protected. I certainly give this motion and the ministry in its endeavours to provide health insurance to all members of our community my greatest support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, I don't really have too much to say with regard to this motion, since I feel that the Third Elected Member from Bodden Town just said a mouthful. But I think that I would like to make it abundantly clear that I am dissatisfied with any insurance company that requires that working people in particular pay for medical attention and then send their bills to the companies for collection.

If I have a credit card, I believe that the purpose of having a credit card is to have credit. Therefore, I shouldn't have cash if I have the credit card. I believe that if I am paying on a monthly basis that I am accumulating credit, I am accumulating value, and I shouldn't therefore have to have additional money to pay for what I need and then they use what I have paid them to pay for what I have received after I have paid for it.

The insurance companies are in the business of risk-taking. They have to take a certain amount of risk otherwise they have no legitimate moral claim to the profits that they are raking off. So, what is it that they are doing? They are doing it like, 'you come and pay us the money and then after you have paid us the money then we will pay for you.' Well, we don't need that kind of bureaucracy, so the insurance companies have to have a different function than they collect from me to pay the doctors after I have paid the doctors.

Why are we going through all of this? Why are we confusing the average person? Why are we frustrating the average person with a system that had very good intentions?

I think if the insurance companies really want to make this particular insurance requirement by Government successful they need to understand that a lot of people do not have savings. In today's world, we purchase everything on credit and that was the reason why the Government thought it would make good sense to force savings for health purposes. So, being insured is a kind of compulsory savings plan—in case you are sick you have the money to pay. So, if you are saving with the insurance companies to pay for medical attention you are not at the same time simultaneously saving in your own pocketbook to pay these costs.

I just hope that they can straighten this up and I think that part of the reason why the motion was brought was because there was a lot of complaints over the last nine months or so. I mean we don't hear as many complaints now as we were hearing in the beginning, Madam Speaker. But in the beginning when the motion was formulated there were tons of complaints, really a lot of complaints.

I am quite sure that the insurance companies listened also to what the public had to say and not just what the Government had to say and they have done some things to try to satisfy their customers a bit more. But the whole purpose of insurance, people would say to me, is that if this is what is required as to how much they can get as a result of being insured. Some persons felt that there were not enough benefits.

The Minister has addressed this question and he obviously has it under control. So, I would just like to lend my support to the endeavours that the Minister is involved with regarding improving that particular relationship between the customer and the insurance company which seems to have suffered greatly as a result of insurance companies requiring that people pay, first of all, the medical practitioners, and then made the relevant billing themselves to the insurance companies.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? Does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply? The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I don't intend to be long as members have rightly put the motion on all fours. By that, I mean they have talked about the things that need to be done.

I note the Minister said that I had only given him one written complaint and should bring complaints to the superintendent. That one, however, was serious enough because it was bill of over $25,000 and the people had paid for premium, something happened and the insurance company kept taking the premium but then refused to pay the bill. So, that one was serious enough.

There are various other complaints. People will come and talk to their representative and not find the time to sit down, and perhaps some of them cannot even verbalise what they are talking about. All they know is that they paid their insurance and they expect to be covered. So, they come to us and they don't put anything in writing most times. So, I think, that's why you find that so many members had so many complaints but that's part of our job in any event.

Madam Speaker, people now accept that they have to obtain insurance and that is something that is a milestone in this country because people just saw it in the past as a nuisance of paying out money and not needing it. But in today's world where medical costs are so high it's absolutely necessary.

The biggest complaint is the non-acceptance of certain insurance cards by doctors or some clinics. This is the biggest one. Someone rightly said, 'what is the use of having the card if they cannot use it?' That is the expectation people have—to get the card and not have to pay up front. Just yesterday someone went to the doctor in a private clinic with the Government's insurance card and had to pay up front, it was not accepted.

These are the kinds of things that will have to be dealt with. This has to be rectified. Madam Speaker, I offer my support and congratulations because as I said we have come far. This is laudable knowing the pressures. Over my sixteen years in the House various attempts have been made and so we have gotten this far by, I think by gentle persuasion more than anything else.

I would hope that the Minister would take my point on board to deal with the matter of the person who is not able to get insurance because of a pre-condition and if they have a credit card they don't qualify to get assistance from Government. I think this needs re-examination and I hope that the Minister would take that on board because the truth is credit cards in this country are a hindrance to a lot of things. People don't want to accept them; perhaps in this election year people don't even want to here it, but it is a fact. It is one of the reasons why a lot of people could not qualify for the housing scheme because they had two credit cards with so much balance and that prohibited them from qualifying.

I think that the banks needs to be absolutely sure when people apply that they know what they are getting into. It's easy, of course, you know you can spend anything and pay later but it does have an effect. It's a very good convenience but it does have an effect later on.

Madam Speaker, that's not part of the motion but I can understand that Government might feel that some people might just have a credit card just to have it but that's not the case in some instances. A lot of people just have them for certain things just like the case I mentioned, the person had to have the credit card, he didn't have any money to be able to fund the medical bills in Miami.

Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his acceptance of the motion and would ask him to look at the various things that members have identified and look forward to the amendments. I thank him and his staff for the continuing efforts in that direction. Thank you kindly.

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes debate on Private Member's Motion No. 4/2000, entitled, Investigation into the practice of Health Insurance Providers. The question is, "BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT Government urgently conduct an investigation into the practice of providers;

"AND BE IT FUTHER RESOLVED THAT such an investigation be completed within three months and tabled in this Honourable Legislative Assembly along with the Government's strategy for addressing any weakness within the operations of the system." Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 4/2000 PASSED.

The Deputy Speaker: The next item on the Order Paper is Government Business. But I would ask for the suspension of Standing Order 24(5) in order for this Government Motion to be debated.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 24 (5)

Hon. Truman M. Boddien: Madam Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 24(5) to allow the debate on Government Motion 1/2000.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, before you put the question, can I enquire as to what happened to the other motions that we had on the Order Paper?

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay, I will ask the Chairman of the Business Committee to provide you with an answer.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The Business Committee has set the two Private Members' Motions and the two Bills—the Bills because time hadn't run. The two Private Members' Motions for two reasons: Firstly, this coming week the United Nations and 50 or 60 different countries will be here for a UN Forum and, secondly, these are long motions and the Minister of Tourism will be out during next week. As a result, we have put those four pieces of business for the following Monday when they would then go on.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: So, is it expected then that the House will adjourn after the debate on this matter today?

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, according to the Order Paper provided for the procedure for today that is the next item after the debate on Government Motion No. 1/2000.

The question is that Standing Order 24(5) be suspended in order to allow debate on Government Motion No. 1/2000 entitled, Amendments to the Development Plan 1997. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 24 (5) TO ALLOW DEBATE ON GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/2000.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

GOVERNMENT MOTION 1/2000

AMENDMENTS TO THE DEVELOPMENT PLAN 1997

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I would like to just read this motion and to mention that this is brought under Section 13 of the Development and Planning Law under which the Central Planning Authority has the right and the power to send to this House variations or alterations to the plan and obvious I must bring these amendments here. It says,

“WHEREAS:

1 In April and May 1999 the Central Planning Authority received applications for re-zoning of:

- ♦ registration section, Spotts, Block 24B, Parcels 4, 143 and 144, from Low Density Residential to Neighbourhood Commercial and

Parcel 2 from Low Density Residential to Marine Commercial;

- ♦ registration section, West Bay North West, Block 1D, Parcels 52, 53 and 54, from Low Density Residential to High Density Residential;
- ♦ registration section, Prospect, Block 22E, Parcel 237, from Low Density Residential to Neighbourhood Commercial;

2 At meetings of the Central Planning Authority in June and July 1999, the Authority resolved to proceed with amendments to the Plan, to wit:

- ♦ to change the zoning of Block 24B, Parcels 4, 143 and 144 from Low Density Residential to Neighbourhood Commercial and Parcel 2 from Low Density Residential to Marine Commercial;
- ♦ to change the zoning of Block 1D, Parcels 52, 53 and 54 from Low Density Residential to High Density Residential;
- ♦ to change the zoning of Block 22E, Parcel 237 from Low Density Residential to Neighbourhood Commercial;

3 Public Notices of the Authority's intention to amend the Plan, for the first and second application, were published on 21, 23, 28 and 30 July 1999 in accordance with section 14(2) of the Development and Planning Law. With regard to the last application, the notices were published on 9, 11, 16 and 18 June 1999;

4 No objections were received within the statutory period of two months;

“NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT in accordance with section 13 of the Development and Planning Law (1999 Revision), the Central Planning Authority hereby recommends and submits to the Legislative Assembly the following proposals for alterations to the Development Plan 1997, a summary and map for each is attached hereto and the Legislative Assembly hereby makes the following alterations, additions and amendments to the Development Plan 1997 which shall come into force seven days after the passing of this resolution:

- ♦ that registration section, Spotts, Block 24B, Parcels 4, 143 and 144, be re-zoned from Low Density Residential to Neighbourhood Commercial and Parcel 2 be re-zoned from Low Density Residential to Marine Commercial;
- ♦ that registration section, West Bay North West, Block 1D, Parcels 52, 53 and 54, be re-zoned from Low Density Residential to High Density Residential;
- ♦ that registration section, Prospect, Block 22E, Parcel 237, be re-zoned from Low Density Residential to Neighbourhood Commercial.”

The motion and the plans are attached to the motion as well as the summaries. Really I have nothing further to add. I would just like to point out that the proper procedure has been carried out with the accordance with the law. It's a very long process, a very democratic process, and there were no objections to it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Government Motion No. 1/2000 has been duly moved. Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak to it?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, this is self-explanatory. I would leave it.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is opened for debate. Does any Honourable Member wish to speak?

The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I note that the motion has to do with an area in West Bay. I would inquire of the Minister if the rezoning on what seems to be the Frank Hall Homes sub-division, the new one, is this so that they can get more lots out of the property?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Elected Member I would think he would answer you in his right of reply.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes!

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: It's just a matter of enquiring because it didn't say.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.11 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.33 AM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on Government Motion 1/2000. Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, would the mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: No, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I shall put the question on Government Motion No. 1/2000. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/2000 APPROVED.

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes all the business before the House today. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Monday, 3 April at 10.00 a.m.

The Deputy Speaker: I have granted permission to the Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

RAISING OF MATTERS FOR WHICH GOVERNMENT HAS RESPONSIBILITY STANDING ORDER 11(6)

ESCAPED PRISONER

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Under the provision of Standing Order 11(6) I, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, wish to raise a matter for which the Government has responsibility in order to elicit a reply from the Honourable First Official Member who is constitutionally responsible to reply to such matters in the Parliament.

Madam Speaker, I find it disconcerting and disturbing to once again have to raise the matter of the Government's inability to securely imprison dangerous prisoners. To have to mention such matters at this level in the Legislative Assembly so shortly after having brought the matter earlier, shows that the Government is unable or incapable to securely imprison such persons.

These events do not bode well in bolstering public confidence in the ability of both Elected and Official arm of Government to offer the society at large security and peace of mind.

In the aftermath of the previous escape, the Commissioner of Police announced through the news media that an investigation would take place to ascertain the facts surrounding that escape.

It is my information that no public statement has been made to-date regarding such an investigation. This being the case, one is left to wonder if this reticence is further evidence of an inherent inability to deal with such persons.

Democracy and civil society demands that citizens live without fear, apprehension and intimidation. This being the case it is intolerable and unacceptable to expect the law-abiding citizens of the Cayman Islands to inconvenience themselves by altering their lifestyles purely because the social control agencies are incapable of performing their jobs.

In a society, which hitherto prided itself on social stability, the maintenance of law and order and respect, this deterioration must now be cause for alarm and send the signal that Government's inability to protect law-abiding citizens signals a failure of Government.

There is too a sense in which the state must also be held liable for the safe re-apprehension of the escaped prisoners. In light of the frequent escapes, responsible parties must call into question the state's ability to recapture escapes without injury to either the escapees or those persons authorised to capture them.

It is unfortunate and regrettable that so much valuable time and effort is lost in trying to avert blame rather than constructively analysing the breakdown on these occasions.

I call upon the Government to acquire the services of a suitable professional to analyse the appropriateness of the facilities at the Central Police Lock-up regarding housing dangerous prisoners at this site. Further, I request that Government take greater precautions to protect the law-abiding community from the threat of dangerous prisoners.

The prosperity of the Cayman Islands is inextricably linked to the maintenance of law and order as much as it is to a progressive economy. Government by its failure to successively house these dangerous persons must accept responsibility for placing civil society at risk.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I had proposed to make a public statement this morning, but the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town had already submitted to you. I will, however, read that statement.

It is captioned, "Escape by McAndy Thomas, Steve Manderson, and Gary Hurlston on 21 March 2000."

Central Police Station has two cellblocks. The new external block and an internal block which usually houses female prisoners. The former has six cells, the latter twelve.

Since the previous escape the more troublesome Northward Prisoners have been housed in the internal block. Troublesome is certainly the word. These prisoners are constantly agitating, shouting, complaining about their conditions and rattling cell bars. Only yesterday afternoon, they threw urine over a police guard.

At 6.40 yesterday evening, a fire was discovered in the internal cellblock. I should say at this point that matches, lighters or anything else that can start a fire is not allowed and something either a cigarette lighter or a match had to have been smuggled into that cell for them to be able to start a fire.

Police officers evacuated all prisoners including Thomas, Manderson and Hurlston. Each was shackled by the legs and handcuffed then transferred to the outer cellblock. On being placed in the cells, the handcuffs and shackles were removed.

Around 9.00 p.m., Thomas requested the use of the bathroom. There are no such facilities in the cell and every time such a request is made the prisoner has to be escorted to bathroom nearby—this was done by a prisoner officer, as is usual for Northward prisoners in Central Police Station. On return from the bathroom, Thomas produced a butcher knife 8 inches long, and threatened the Prison officer who refused to release the keys. The Prison officer's shirt was damaged by slashing movements of the knife. Whilst his hands were held high, Thomas removed the cell door keys from the Prison officer's pocket and released Manderson and Hurlston from their cell.

A prison cell guard near to the exit door, out of site of the prison officer and the cells, heard the cell doors shut and incorrectly assumed that it was the final closing. He caused the door to be opened from the other side by another police cell guard. The prison officer made a dash through the door but caught by surprise the two cell guards were unable to supply sufficient pressure to the door to prevent the three prisoners gaining access to the guardhouse. A cell guard was then threatened with a knife and the keys to the external door were seized and used to effect their escape into the police yard and then to the public area. Teams of police officers were formed and off-duty officers were called to duty. A search is now on the way to capture them.

These determined escapees are held at Central Police Station as facilities for such persons still does not exist at Her Majesty's Prison at Northward. The new cellblock at Northward is scheduled to be completed on the 26th of this month and the badly needed improved security fence will take another three to four months.

The enquiry into previous escapes at Central Police Station is still on going and the outcome is expected soon. I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Because of the importance of this matter, and if the Honourable First Official Member is prepared, I will allow some questions.

The First Official Member has indicated he will answer questions.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I am wondering whether the Honourable Chief Secretary could say how they came into contact with a butcher knife?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: That's the same question I asked when the Commissioner informed me of this. He is investigating that.

We believe that the knife must have been planted in the restroom facility by someone who may have visited one of these prisoners at Central Police Station and then they were informed. That's the only explanation I can give, but we are investigating it.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I heard what the Honourable Chief Secretary said. Isn't there some procedure for checking visitors to the lock-up or the prison wherever? If there is none then I think this needs to . . . as much as they might hate to do it, they certainly will have to start to put some searches in place.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: There is definitely a search made but as that Honourable Member will appreciate, short of a complete strip search, things can be concealed on one's body that may not necessarily be found.

The Deputy Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, Manderson has escaped several times. Could the Chief Secretary say if the Police have any knowledge or if they have inquired of him to explain why he continues to escape lawful custody?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Madam Speaker, Manderson has said publicly . . . in fact, I think the Fourth Elected Member for George Town may have had a publication recently in which a letter of Manderson was included. He has said he is not guilty. The fact is the matter has gone through both the Grand Court and was appealed to the Court of Appeals. The decision was upheld, as this Honourable House will appreciate the judiciary must also be immediate of the executive arm of Government. I can only say that the matter has been dealt with through the courts.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Madam Speaker, my major concern is, in view of this suspicious fire that started in the cellblock and in view of the prisoners involved, why was only one guard allowed to escort one of the prisoners back to the urinal? Wasn't there enough suspicion there to have raised the red flag that something was up?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Madam Speaker, the request to go to the bathroom took place an hour and a half or more after the incident with the fire. Because of the fact that we are stretched very thin with prison officers having to cover Northward Prison, East End, Tent City and Central Police Station, the temporary director does his best to spare what he can by way of staff. He and the Commissioner of Police work together, but there was no reason to suspect that there was anything untoward at that time.

The fact is, had there even been say two officers, the man producing an 8-inch knife and making cutting motions at them . . . it would have been difficult for two or even three people to have done very much about it.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: In light of the fact that both Manderson and Thomas recently escaped, and are both convicted murderers, can the First Official Member say whether or not they are still entitled to personal visits by friends or others while being held at Central Police Station?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Madam Speaker, perhaps there should have been no visits for them. In fact, there should be no visits for any prisoners, but Honourable Members will appreciate that families of these people do want to visit them and do want to find out about their wellbeing. As far I am aware, there is nothing to currently stop visits for any inmates by their relatives.

The Deputy Speaker: I will allow two more questions.

The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town followed by the first elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the Honourable First Official Member tell the House if the 8-inch knife which he stated was produced by one of those prisoners was taken by the prisoners on their escape? Is it likely that these prisoners are still armed with this 8-inch knife?

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: I am unable to answer that question, but the Commissioner of Police scheduled a press conference that should be taking place about now. I am sure that the press will ask that question, so no doubt that information will be available, I will certainly inquire into it.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, in regard to the searches, I would not deny anybody in prison a visit. That is my opinion. But I am wondering whether rules and regulations could be put in place for proper searches to ensure that no dangerous weapon is taken into the prison or the lock-up or anywhere a prisoner could get hold of it.

I would say this as just an opinion, that this whole situation is not good. And it is time now that Government assures the populace of their safety. This does not look good on this country.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The Honourable Member can be assured, yes, that every effort will be made. And I will personally be speaking with the Commissioner on this. I totally agree with him that this is not good enough. When I was informed of it last night, you could rest assured you weren't half as concerned and upset as I was. His Excellency I am sure is equally upset. I haven't spoken to him yet, he was due back in Grand Cayman this morning.

I believe that once we have those 24 cells ready at Northward, we will be able to deal with this. One of the problems I should explain at Central Police Station, we have a number of people there on remand. And as Honourable Members will appreciate, those persons on remand are innocent until proven guilty. It is unfortunate that we have to mix convicted criminals with persons who are there on remand that may not be criminals, they may be innocent.

We will be doing everything in our power to bring the conclusion of holding convicted criminal at Central Police Station to an end very shortly.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 Monday, April 3rd. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. This Honourable House is now accordingly adjourned until April 3rd at 10.00 a.m.

AT 11.55 AM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 3 APRIL 2000.

EDITED
MONDAY
3 APRIL 2000
10.29 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation, and Planning]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Moving on to Item 2 on the Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have received apologies from the Honourable Speaker who will not be here today but hopes to be back with us shortly.

The next item on the Order Paper is Other Business, Private Members' Motions, Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000, Concerns with the Occurrences at Northward Prison, to be moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 5/2000

CONCERNS WITH THE OCCURRENCES AT NORTHWARD PRISON

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, I respectfully beg to move Private Member's Motion No 5/2000 (originally 28/1999), standing in my name, which reads as follows:

"BE IT RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly record its concerns with the occurrences at Northward Prison which led up to the events of Thursday 30th September, 1999 and Friday 1st October, 1999;

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly register its concern over the lack of coherent policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation, the administration at Northward Prison and the development of secure and effective facilities of incarceration in the Cayman Islands."

Madam Speaker, there was also an amendment to the motion adding a third resolve clause. I do not know how the House would like that matter to be dealt with, whether we would wish to debate the motion as it was read, or whether we should read also the third resolve in the amendment to the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member I have no amendment other than one that is being moved by the Honourable First Official Member. Can the Clerk tell me if there is a second amendment to the motion?

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, the motion was amended thus:

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government lay on the Table of this Honourable House within 90 days, its plans for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of Her Majesty's Prison at Northward, including the timetable for the implementation of such reforms."

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member I think that the motion has been rewritten because it has been brought to 2000 and it is included in the motion that I have before me.

Is there a seconder for Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000? The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to second the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 has been duly moved and seconded. Does the mover wish to speak to it?

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town . . . if I may, the First Official Member.

AMENDMENT

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(1) and (2), I, the Honourable First Official Member, seek to move the following amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000: "by amending the second operative part (resolve clause) by deleting the words 'register its concern over the lack of coherent' and substituting therefor 'recommends that there be a review of the.'"

Madam Speaker, if I could then read what it would say, with your permission. The second resolve would then say:

"AND BE IT ALSO FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly recommends that there be a review of the policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation, the administration at Northward Prison and the development of secure and effective facilities of incarceration in the Cayman Islands."

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 be amended as in the notice provided to members. Would the proposer wish to speak?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, can I make an inquiry as to whether that amendment has been circulated?

The Deputy Speaker: It has been for some time, Honourable Member.

Would the First Elected Member for the district of West Bay like me to ask the Clerk to let you have a copy of that amendment?

The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The resolve section as moved by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and seconded by the First Elected Member for West Bay speaks about the lack of coherent policies. I would like to point out, first of all, that the Concise Oxford Dictionary defines the word 'coherent' as "consistent, easily followed, not rambling or inconsistent." So, the motion as moved would speak to having policies that would be inconsistent, not easily followed, rambling and inconsistent.

Madam Speaker, I would like to point out why I believe that there are consistent policies at Northward Prison. I would like to speak to a few of these.

First of all, following the riots at Northward Prison on 30th September and 1st October last, His Excellency the Governor, on my advice, appointed an independent investigator in the person of Sir Stephen Tumin to carry out an investigation and to do a report on the situation at Northward.

Members would recall that I laid that report on the Table of this honourable House earlier this year. There were a number or recommendations that came out of that report. Additionally, I took the decision on 1st October to send the director on leave and put the prison in the hands of the Commissioner of Police as called for in our contingency plans in the event of serious trouble.

Following that, a temporary director was recruited from the UK and he began, with my assistance and with the assistance of a number of other people, to look at policies at Northward Prison and, in particular, the policy on prisoner rehabilitation.

A review of the patrol system has been ongoing, is nearing completion, and will shortly be announced by His Excellency the Governor (once he accepts this); the outcome of which should make the system more readily understood, more effective for inmates released under supervision and will provide individual targets for an inmate's performance. And for those who are refused parole, there will be a review of the case.

The prison rules have been under review for some time and these are progressing. Once completed, this will bring the rules that govern the day to day operations of the prison in line with the times.

Other policies that have been introduced are the whole range of educational facilities at Northward. These include basic education as well as academics and there are social education programmes ongoing. Counselling had been started for quite some time and this has been beefed up and is ongoing. This covers areas such as drug abuse, alcohol and anger management.

Staffing levels have been re-examined and we have put in place a new structure at Northward that will allow the senior management team to deal more effectively with the prison, with inmates, and with the whole operation.

On 26th March, we introduced the white tunic for all prison officers and this has already raised the morale of the staff. All inmates have now been put back in prison uniform and we have gone back to the 8-hour system of shifts that had been suspended (we had to go to 12-hour shifts).

Madam Speaker, later on in the debate, I will have an opportunity to go into issues in more detail, but I contend that the policies at Northward Prison are coherent. They are in place and are working. We are steadily making progress in this area and, accordingly, I ask for members' support to amend the private member's motion as I proposed. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak to the amendment? The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I have listened intently to the Honourable First Official Member state his case why his amendment should carry. However, I have to say that I am not convinced that the amendment would serve any useful purpose from the mere fact that we have had a significant number of reviews emanating out of various circumstances which have occurred at Northward Prison, in addition to regularly scheduled and ongoing reviews. It would seem that these reviews have done little more than become the subject of someone's reading and shelving, as is often the case in the bureaucracy.

As I will go on to show when I am debating the substantive motion, recommendations were made in some of these reviews that seem not to have been implemented for whatever reason. Therefore, I contend that another review of this nature would serve no other purpose than to be purely academic.

Madam Speaker, I stand by the position that what we need is some form of programme for implementing what needs to be done. There is also the added reason that often we are caught up with these reviews where we import outside experts and sometimes what could be best achieved is taking a commonsensical layman's position. We have arrived at a point now where we all agree that we need to take a hands-on approach because the events of 30th September and 1st October serve to let us know that we have a simmering problem that needs to be arrested and addressed.

Consequently, Madam Speaker, I cannot give my support to another review where we will have to set up terms of reference, craft a job description for the reviewer, and we don't know how long the review would go on wasting precious time when we could draft a programme with a proper implementation schedule as to what needs to be done.

Madam Speaker, you know that I have the greatest respect for democracy. And, of course, I will always honour people's democratic right to take their positions. On the other hand, I am asking honourable members who are aware of this position, to support the motion as we moved it and not to support the amendment because we are going to be wasting precious time treading water. Thank you, Madam.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, the importance of actually having a motion define a concern or a position cannot be underestimated. Therefore, when a member brings a private member's motion that expresses the concerned view, the perspective of the member, it seems to me that the Government should be very cautious as to try to take control of perception by re-defining the parameters of the motion.

The fact that the First Official Member has rebutted statements in the motion without debating the motion and refusing to allow certain accusations to succeed in debate, I believe short-changes this process. I think it is quite obvious that what the Government will do is vote collectively as a block to insist that the framing of the debate be such as is now being proposed by the First Official Member. The framing of the debate creates the perception and, therefore, what we have done is move from one possibility of perception to another.

He is saying that from the very beginning we are going to take out the fact that we are registering our concern. He believes that recommends or the whole idea of the Legislative Assembly recommending is more significant than registering its concerns.

[The Honourable First Official Member rose]

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

POINT OF CLARIFICATION

Hon. James M. Ryan: Madam Speaker, on a point of clarification, my amendment did not ask that we remove the concerns—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Official Member, you will have that right in your right of reply to answer those questions.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Okay. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: You're welcome. The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I am suggesting here that what the First Official Member is seeking to achieve by way of the amendment could be achieved in the debate on the motion as it was brought by the two private members.

I have seen many times in this House, Madam Speaker, that the entire framework of the motion has been totally reconstructed, to the point where sometimes it is not even recognised that we are talking about the same thing as the movers of the motions intended us to talk about. But the First Official Member went into the definition of "coherent" saying, in fact, that he is amending the motion because he disagrees with the interpretation of the movers of the motion that the policies with regard to Northward Prison are incoherent. So, the debate would really be registering our concern about the lack of coherent policies. He is saying, let us say that the policies are coherent—so that finishes part of the debate.

We can still perhaps talk about that, but to remove it from the motion means that when it comes to voting on the motion we will not be voting and saying yes or no to the lack of coherent policies—which I believe is an important position to take up. Either the policies have been coherent or the policies lack coherence.

I believe that this amendment defuses a very important charge, and I maintain that it would be best for us to debate the motion as it was brought to us by the two movers rather than to have the Government defuse the policy ramifications of a positive vote on this private member's motion, which would in fact call to register a serious concern. By it being a positive vote, it would mean that the Government policies have not been coherent and this would be a significant charge that the Government would have to answer to.

So, let me say that I do not support this amendment. I do not believe that the First Official Member has made any significant case as to why that position, which he maintains could not be brought as the position in his rebuttal of these particular assumptions by the movers of this motion, has to be amended in order to eliminate such coming to the vote.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I feel that the amendment, however, well meaning ultra vires the motion. It certainly changes the intent of the motion, and I don't believe an amendment to any bill or motion can do that. Why I say that, Madam Speaker, the Honourable Chief Secretary is changing that first resolution and asking that we recommend that there be a review.

Now if you do that, how, then, would we reach the second resolution where it asks that Government lay on the Table of this House within 90 days its plan for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms? It would seem that we would be jumping the gun—putting the cart before the horse, as it were. So, I cannot see how this amendment can be allowed, and I am sure that if you check it (if you haven't as yet) maybe you will find what I am saying is correct.

He is changing the intent of the motion. While the motion has two operative parts, if we do his amendment and change the first resolve section, it will do away, I believe, with the second resolve where we are asking them to lay plans on the Table for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of the prison. So, I think it changes the motion completely.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, I understood what you said. I have no way of knowing why the Honourable Speaker accepted the amendment to the motion. I have no way of knowing if the amendment came before the third resolve was included in the motion. If it is the wish of this House when the proposer has completed his rebuttal, and before I put the question, I am prepared to suspend proceedings and research before we take the vote on the amendment.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I think it is a procedural matter and I merely rise on that aspect of it. I feel it's a procedural matter that needs to be dealt with.

The Deputy Speaker: The Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My comments on this amendment will be brief. Its only to comment on what seems to be the troubling phrase here, where there has been a change from the wording "register its concern over the lack of coherent policies" and substituting, 'therefore recommends that there be a review of those policies.'

Madam Speaker, the third resolve to the motion, I think, is consistent with the amendment to the motion. I say that because in suggesting that the Legislative Assembly recommends that there be a review of the policies it would seem only logical that in order to lay on the Table of the Honourable House within 90 days plans for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of Her Majesty's Prison at Northward, that it would be necessary to have a review of the process and a review of the policies.

The troubling word that is being amended is "coherent." And I really cannot see why it was fully necessary to have amended this. But, in the same way I cannot see where the amendment is inconsistent or ultra vires the intent of the substantive motion. The major emphasis here seems to be requesting that this Honourable House lay on the Table within 90 days plans for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of Her Majesty's Prison at Northward including the timetable for the implementation of such reforms. Whilst, I am not here debating the substantive motion, it is difficult to deal with the amendment without making reference to what the amendment is referring to.

Madam Speaker, coherent means intelligible and articulate, consistent and easily followed. It is against this meaning that I cannot see why it was really necessary to have brought the amendment. But I cannot at the same time see how the amendment is inconsistent or ultra vires, or that it in any way offends the meaning and intent of the substantive motion. Accordingly, Madam Speaker, I cannot see where the Chair may have erred in any way in accepting the amendment to this motion. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I rise on a procedural matter.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: My submission was that an amendment to a bill or motion cannot change the intent. Now, we have been very specific in that resolve section by saying that we raise our concerns over the lack of coherent policies. And we are not asking for any review, then we say that Government must do something.

Now, if they ask for a review, Madam Speaker, that is changing the intent of the motion. I submit that there is cause for the Chair to review this, whether presently or immediately following the Chief Secretary's rebuttal, but I certainly feel that it is ultra vires the motion because it changes the intent.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Elected Member for the district of West Bay are you speaking on the amendment or just the procedural matter?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I rose, as I said earlier, to draw the Chair's attention to what I thought was a procedural matter.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak to the amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000? The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This amendment merely removes the words, "register its concern over the lack of coherent" and replaces it with 'recommends that there be a review of.' So, the full motion would really then read—and the balance of the motion is untouched—"BE IT RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly record its concerns [which is the first part and the second would say] AND BE IT ALSO FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly recommends that there be a review of the policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation, the administration at Northward Prison and the development of secure and effective facilities of incarceration in the Cayman Islands."

And the third would remain the same.

Madam Speaker, what appears to be a logical approach in this is that if these policies and plans are going to be laid on the Table within 90 days, it seems to me that is the time to try to make such a very general statement in relation to registering its concern over the lack of coherent policies. Therefore, it seems to me that the motion can easily, procedurally and otherwise, be amended as is being proposed because the amendment is now in line with the last operative part of the motion which is within the 90 days that plans be laid on the Table.

It is not negating the motion, which is really the procedural points that are borne out, at least in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice at page 343 and 344. Obviously, you can amend a motion (and you can amend it quite easily in this situation because it flows much better). Rather than taking a judgment on something that is to happen, it's better for that thing to happen and then a decision be made.

In fact, the second operative resolve part is really anticipating the third one, which is when these policies and plans are laid on the Table. Then it's a time when a decision, whether they are coherent policies or not, can be made. At this stage, there are no policies before this House. The Honourable Chief Secretary has mentioned that policies are there.

The motion in its present form is expressing an opinion that there is a lack of coherence. And all the Government is saying is that the policies be reviewed, be laid on the Table of this House and then fairly and logically is the time when a decision can be made at what is lacking or what is coherent or otherwise in those policies.

So, I would submit that the motion could easily be amended, that there is no procedural problem. But, secondly, the amendment is in line with the motion and it is a much fairer way so that when we have policies laid on the Table, a decision can then be made as to what needs to be done with those and what's lacking in the quality of those policies. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? The First Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. Madam Speaker, the backbench on occasion has been known to bring private member's motions to this honourable House and on occasion the government has been known to bring government motions.

Now, I have listened to what the members have been saying taking the various positions on this said motion. I listened very carefully to what the Minister of Education just said about the motion. I want to make a few comments.

Madam Speaker, the question on this amendment is not whether the government agrees with the motion or not. The question is whether what the motion is calling for is changed in its operative sense. You see, the motion, in its second resolve section, says, "AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly register its concern over the lack of coherent policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation . . ." That is what the motion is calling for.

Now, if the government and/or other members disagree with that, then they don't agree with the motion.

That's my view, because the point that I am making with it is if you agree to the amendment (and I understand what is happening with it), the amendment will then call for it to read, "AND BE IT ALSO FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly recommends that there be a review . . ."

Now, at this point in time, I am not suggesting that you cannot recommend a review. But if we are going to delete registering concern over the lack of coherent policies, what the motion will now say is that there is no cause to register that concern, let's simply do a review. Madam Speaker, that is not the intent of the motion.

So, if the government's position is that it be reworded to recommend that there be a review of the policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation et cetera, then let the government bring a motion.

Now, with regard to what the Minister of Education just said, you know Madam Speaker, sometimes I truly believe that he honestly goes to bed believing that he has total control over intelligence and understanding. He just said (and I not quoting him verbatim) that now is not the time to form conclusions. Let us get the plans (when he refers to the last resolve section) for both a physical and rehabilitative form of Her Majesty's Prison at Northward and then we can decide on what's coherent and what's not coherent.

When you bring forward, you are not talking about what's not coherent; you are talking about what you are going to do tomorrow. There is no logic to what he just said. None whatsoever! So, if we don't want an argument, let us examine the motion, Madam Speaker.

The motion in its first resolve section simply says, "BE IT RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly record its concerns with the occurrences at Northward Prison which led up to the events of Thursday 30th September, 1999 and Friday 1st October, 1999." That's a general statement and it moves on. What the movers of the motion are saying is, whether I agree or whosoever agrees, after we register these concerns, we also want for the Legislative Assembly to register its concern over the lack of coherent policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation, administration of Northward Prison, and development of secure and effective facilities of incarceration in the Cayman Islands. They follow one right after the other.

Now, if I don't agree with it then let me say that. But it is obvious what the mover and the seconder are saying with the motion. So, if they are in the minority in the House then what they are saying doesn't pass. But to simply say that you want to change . . . I have to also argue the intent of the motion by deleting "register its concern over the lack of coherent" and replacing it by 'recommending that there be a review of.' Madam Speaker, in my view, you are changing the intent of the motion. So, what we are faced with here is simply a question. If the government does not agree with what the mover and the seconder are intending to have debated and agreed upon in the motion then they simply don't agree with it.

To put something (and I am assuming here) to change that intent and replace it with the words that the amendment proposes is changing what they want to say in the motion. If the government wants to say that then my view is, let the government say that with their motion. But what the government is doing at this point in time is taking away what the motion is intending to say, reconfiguring it to say what the government seemingly (and that's an assumption) will accept.

The question is not whether the motion is current, ill advised, ill informed or whatever. The question is, what does the motion intend to achieve? I am saying that what the motion intends to achieve is clearly obvious. If it cannot achieve that, so be it. But I cannot see the reasoning to change the intent to what may be considered to be a more palatable circumstance as to do justice to the motion itself. That's the point I wish to make and it is not a question of which one is right or wrong. The question is the intent of the motion.

So, Madam Speaker, from where I sit, if the government's position is let us do a review, let us within 90 days prepare definitive plans to show that we are trying to take a grip on the problems that exist and we wish to move forward, that is fine. On a personal basis, I would hope that's the direction in which we are moving. But confining the argument to the motion at hand and the amendment at hand, I hold the view that the amendment takes away the intent of the motion. The truth of the matter is regardless of what words are used, it is not up to the government or me to decide what the mover and the seconder want in the motion. Where that counts is when I cast my vote or whoever else casts his vote.

That's the way I see it, Madam Speaker, unless I am reading the whole picture wrong. I have not been around as long as everybody else, but I believe I understand it. I cannot agree with the way it is coming forward because I understand what has been said and I understand what the intentions are. But confining the argument to the position of the motion and how it will end up if the amendment is agreed upon, then, certainly, if that was the intention of the mover and the seconder of the motion then they would be amenable to it. Obviously, they are not amenable to it because they do not agree with changing the motion to say what it says.

It will have to go to the vote. I simply have tried to apply some logic to the arguments that have been put forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak to the amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000? (Pause)

If no other Member wishes to speak, before I call on the proposer to wind-up, I think this will be a convenient time to take the morning break. Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.19 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.39 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Before I call upon the Honourable First Official Member to reply, honourable members, Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 and the amendment were approved by the Honourable Speaker on 25th February and have been circulated for some length of time.

Amendments and amendments to amendments can be made in accordance with the provisions of Standing Orders. Therefore, if no other Member wishes to speak at this time to the amendment, I will now call upon the Honourable First Official Member to exercise his right of reply.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

There have been a number of speakers to the proposed amendment which I circulated and moved this morning on Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 as captioned, Concerns with the occurrences at Northward Prison.

One speaker mentioned that there is the need for a plan for Northward Prison, not a need for a review but there is a need for a plan. I have already called for a 3-year business plan for Northward Prison, which I have previously promised I would Table in this Honourable House. I believe that there is a need for such a plan. I do not believe this Honourable House has had any real plan on what is proposed for Northward Prison and I believe such a plan is timely.

My amendment calling for a review of the policies will tie closely with the third resolve section, which will require the Government to Table in this Honourable House within 90 days its plans for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of Her Majesty's Prison at Northward including the timetable for the implementation of such reforms.

Madam Speaker, the first resolve section of this Private Member's Motion (and I will read it just for clarity): "BE IT RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly record its concerns with the occurrences at Northward Prison which led up to the events of Thursday 30th September, 1999 and Friday 1st October, 1999."

This gives members a chance to express their concerns over these occurrences and matters that resulted from those occurrences. I do not believe that the second resolve section which calls the Legislative Assembly to register its concern over the lack of coherent policies is serving any useful purpose. There is no proof that the policies were incoherent or lacking in coherence. The problems at Northward Prison, in my opinion, did not stem from a lack of policies.

The report by Sir Stephen Tumin recognised that the main cause of the problem was over-crowding and that it is not the lack of policy, that it's simply the lack of providing of physical space at Northward Prison.

It was also raised that my proposed amendment was ultra vires the motion. Madam Speaker, I do not accept that as the case. I believe that my amendment will allow and will dovetail straight into the third resolve section, that is, the call for the tabling of plans, both physical and rehabilitative reforms of Northward Prison. I believe, therefore, that it will accomplish what the motion is setting out to do, to ultimately get a plan on the Table and to the public showing what we are going to do and, in fact, what is now being done at Northward Prison.

Madam Speaker, while I regret the occurrences that took place at Northward Prison on 30th September and 1st October, the fact is, they happened. The only thing to do when such things happen is to try to learn from the mistakes of the past and not to let them happen again. I believe that lessons have been learned at all levels and many innovations have taken place at Northward since those occurrences (30th September and 1st October). As I said earlier, a business plan is now being worked on.

It's in the draft stages and will be coming to this House to be laid on the Table in the not too distant future. This will give members of this Honourable House, the picture of what Northward Prison is about, what is going to be done this year and for the next three years. It will also give members a chance to express views on things that they may feel need to be amended in that. And there will be that opportunity, I believe, to draw on the various individuals and their experience in this House to make that business plan the very best we can provide for the facility.

So, Madam Speaker, I believe that my proposed amendment will make this motion a better motion and in the interest of this country in the long term I believe that it will accomplish at the end of the day what this House really wants—that is, to have a penal facility in this country that works and will keep inmates locked up and will rehabilitate them.

I ask for all Honourable members support for my amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that the amendment be made. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES and NOES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, can we have a division, please?

The Deputy Speaker: Certainly, Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town. Madam Clerk.

The Clerk:

DIVISION NO. 1/2000

AYES: 9

Hon. James M. Ryan
Hon. David F. Ballantyne
Hon. George A. McCarthy
Hon. Truman M. Bodden
Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson
Hon. John B. McLean
Hon. Anthony Eden
Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly
Mr. Linford A. Pierson

NOES: 5

Mr. W. McKeever Bush
Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.
Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts
Dr. Frank McField
Mr. Roy Bodden

ABSENT

Mr. D. Dalmain Ebanks
Miss Heather D. Bodden

The Clerk: Nine Ayes; Five Noes.

The Deputy Speaker: The results of the division: Nine Ayes, five Noes. The amendment is carried. The motion stands amended accordingly.

AGREED BY MAJORITY: AMENDMENT TO PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 5/2000 PASSED.

The Deputy Speaker: Debate now continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000, as amended. The Third Elected Member for district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, sometimes it is difficult to be a democrat. I would like to now try to make some sense out of the motion as it has been changed and amended. I wish to begin by saying that anyone who believes that the events at Northward Prison, which occurred on 30th September and 1st October 1999, can be viewed in isolation, is ill informed and certainly unwise.

Madam Speaker, those events had their genesis in matters that occurred a long time before the culmination in what has come to be widely accepted as a prison riot. I vividly recall spending much effort in conjunction with other honourable members trying to impress upon the government and government in the widest sense of the world that we needed to take stock of what was and indeed still is happening in the society.

Our society is undergoing a transformation and numerous questions have been brought by myself and other members as well as a number of motions that I will have reason to briefly refer to as I develop my position. That the society is changing is clearly evident when we see the kinds of offences being committed. As a result of that, it is necessary for the authorities to modify their position in dealing with incarceration because that is what the motion is focusing upon.

There are those of us who have been trying for some years, using the mediums and the forums we are able to access, to let the government know that these matters were matters which needed not only attention but needed addressing. One of the reasons why I was reluctant to go towards the review is that we have had a catalogue of reviews concerning Northward Prison. Perhaps the most outstanding to-date is the report to His Excellency the Governor of an inspection of Her Majesty's Prison, Northward, Grand Cayman in April 1994 by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for England and Wales—a report to which I will find it necessary to make comparative references.

I have found from my position that one of the fundamental shortcomings in this whole business of Northward Prison is that there was clearly a lack of a definitive role as to what purpose Northward Prison should serve. I want to draw reference to a mission statement of 1990. That mission statement reads, “To comply with the written instructions of the courts or executive orders relating to persons 17 years or older to protect the general public and to provide rehabilitative and vocational training of inmates to return these persons back into society so that they will abide by society's code of conduct and social standards and also contribute meaningful manpower skills."

Madam Speaker, I want to say that since that time there has been no significant variation of the mission statement. I want to use this as a starting point to say that what has not happened is that there has been no realisation, no following of the trends which have brought people to prison and which cause an inordinate amount of recidivism.

The first point I wish to make is that there should have been some revision of the mission statement because clearly the trends are changing. We are being faced with a growing number of younger inmates, who are more intelligent, more street-smart, and who seem intent on introducing a culture of hatred and violence.

Now, it is interesting to compare a document from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office publications, entitled, Justice and the Law. This document was prepared in 1993. In Britain, there is a clear and distinctive categorisation in the mission statement of what the prison services are supposed to achieve in the United Kingdom—firstly, by categorising prisoners.

I have said on numerous occasions in this very Legislative Assembly that we have been making a serious error by housing juveniles in the same facility that we house older prisoners; that we have been making a serious mistake in housing people who are young drug offenders on the same compound that we house persons who have a criminal record of violence. That is a college campus where the young are taught things that they don't know and things which are inimical to the interest of peace and good order in the society.

"In England, Scotland and Wales [and I am quoting from page 35 of this document] sentenced prisoners are classified into four groups for security purposes [and this is in the mission statement]. Category A, for those whose escape would be highly dangerous to the public, the police or the security of the state. Category B, for those for who escape must be made very difficult. Category C, for prisoners who cannot be trusted in open conditions, but who do not have the will or resource to make a determined escape attempt; or Category D, for those who can be trusted to serve their sentence in open conditions."

And it goes on, Madam Speaker, "The government's main priorities are to: improve necessary security measures, recognise the status and particular requirements of convicted prisoners, provide active and relevant programmes for all prisoners, provide a code of standards for prison conditions and the activities, improve relationships with prisoners including a statement of facilities for each prisoner sentence plan, consultations and reasons for decision and in overcrowding." There, Madam Speaker, I end my reference for now.

Now, I want to make it crystal clear from the beginning that this motion really is not about levelling any blame. But I want to say that when the prison was constructed, Caymanian society was ill prepared for the kind of prisoners that we would be housing. As a consequence of that, the prison is constructed with no wall because one could hardly classify a transparent chainlink fence as a wall, and no observation towers. Now, Madam Speaker, it is virtually impossible to find any prison (except, of course, those prisons falling under the category of minimum security or no security at all) without a containing wall and without guard towers or observations, as we call them.

Add to that the fact that the prison was in the centre of a growing and striving community. So we made the first error by constructing a prison—which was really not a prison—in the midst of a growing and striving community. I suppose it could be classified more as a prison/farm. But that was not wrong at that time. What was lacking was the vision that we would have come to this point now where we have a different breed of prisoner necessitating different physical surroundings and conditions. So, we have failed to keep up with the times and then we have compounded that by housing among these prisoners the mentally incompetent and the mentally incapable—those persons who by virtue of some kind of mental problem are incapable of dealing with themselves.

If I wanted to embarrass the government I could embarrass them because all I would have to do is get on the internet and tell the United Nations that we in the Cayman Islands are housing mentally incapacitated people where we have hardened criminals and lifers. Believe you me, it would be an embarrassment of significant proportions because nowhere else in the civilised world is that done.

And then to further compound the situation, for years we have held female prisoners on the same compound—a formula for disaster. Somebody should have seen that. Whether we are going to accept the collective blame, or whether it is an individual shortcoming, I am not here to say. But the events of 30th September and 1st October 1999 tell me that history and posterity have recorded it negatively.

Now, I agree with the First Official Member that we have to learn from these things. I am all in favour of learning. But let us be sure that we learn, that we are not like Sisyphus, and have to continue to roll the stone up the hill only to have it get out of our control and roll back down to the foot and we have to struggle.

Recent prison breaks do not exactly instil confidence in the public. It does not! I hear what people are saying. And it is a good thing that the prisoners really are not bad, are not violent, because with the spate of escapes who knows what the state might be. But, by the same token, the state must accept that it has a responsibility to safely and securely contain the wards so that the wider society does not in any way have to be inconvenienced or feel insecure; while at the same time, treating the wards and the prisoners in a way that does not strip them of their dignity but reminds them that they have to pay a debt to society. Therein is the crux of the motion because that is what is lacking.

I have said, Madam Speaker (and it's on record), that the prison is nothing but a warehouse where they go and serve their time—no sense of purpose, and a lack of positive rehabilitation programme. Some people in the past went there when they should have been in some counselling institution environment. They are lost! because the purpose for them being there was not necessarily punitive but should have been of a medical or psychological nature. So, these are things that I am talking about and this is what I want to highlight and draw to the government's attention so that this matter can be corrected sooner rather than later.

Madam Speaker, in researching this, I spent the better part of yesterday afternoon reading and re-reading old motions and old debates, and reviewing questions. There were umpteenth questions raised by me, plus those raised by other members, which should have served to let the government know that something needed to be done.

Do you know what disappoints me about this whole business of us coming to the Legislative Assembly, backbenchers moving motions and the government replying? What is disappointing is that too often, what happens is appeasing. Too often what happens is that we are so concerned about being made to look bad that we cannot accept the efficacy and the grounds on which the efforts were being made in the first place. It is not made, Madam Speaker, to make me look good. I have no ego to stroke—absolutely none, believe you me. And I will be the first one to tell you that I am trying to be a politician, but it is not about ego, Madam Speaker. I do not have to come here to know that I can perform.

I have been here now twelve years stuck in one position on the backbench. So, it is not about ego and about me trying to outshine or let anybody else look bad. It is because I have an interest and a responsibility to represent the people who put me here to the best of my ability and by doing things like this, I am taking care of their interests.

Madam Speaker, I have to tell you that for the first time in my life . . . I am not someone who scares easily, but I have been scared on a number of occasions with events and occurrences as a result of prison breaks. I can recall nights I didn't sleep well because I have a family to protect. I have a responsibility to my community, I hear people saying things. I sometimes have to call people to say, 'please be careful, I know you like to walk, I know you like to jog, this may not be the time to do that.' That is the reason I am doing this, Madam Speaker. If I wanted to get into the business of making people look bad, I would start up a newspaper.

So, Madam Speaker, these are the things that we need to address. I want also to say that I feel hurt because suggestions are made with the best of intentions, pledges are given but nothing happens. I asked the government to try to organise some little survey to find out, particularly among younger prisoners, what kind of marketable skills they have, where we need to go because we have to find a way to curb the recidivism.

The government said they were going to do it but nothing has happened yet. That was a long time ago. I remember these things, you know. I want to say something too: I don't drink liquor so anything I say up here is not drunk talk. I remember what I say, I have a very good memory. And I remember the government's position and I have to say, barring none, there is no greater researcher in here than Roy Bodden. I can go back and tell honourable members what they said from the time I came in here in 1988, when the necessity arises. I mean nothing has been done!

So, now I cannot have any confidence in another review—I cannot! because I have a catalogue of them inside here and some of them are complaining that they made recommendations in the last review that were not implemented. The problem as I see it, is that we have to come to grips that the society has changed and is changing. If we want to effectively address the problem of the prison rehabilitation, we have first to decide what purpose is our prison going to serve. Is it going to be purely punitive, where we punish the inmates? Is it going to be rehabilitative, where we concentrate on restoring them to a position where they can be productive members of the society, or is it going to be a combination of the two, or none of those mentioned? That's the first thing we have to do.

And in order to do that we have now to come to the position where we have to categorise our prisoners because . . . I am not a judge, Madam Speaker. I don't want to set myself up as any judge. I have to struggle enough with trying to contain myself. But it seems to me that there are people bordering on what I would call incorrigible—unable to be reformed. Well, if we have those, then we have to decide how we are going to contain them and what kind of social parameters are we going to set for them. Is it right for them then to mix with those we are trying to rehabilitate and reform? Irrespective of whatever category they fall in, we have to give them an opportunity to rehabilitate and to come to terms and to come to grips with their failings. So, we have to strike up some kind of philosophy behind what our prison is supposed to do.

Now, I don't want to rehash any old debates, but I have to this is an arena in which people who philosophise and who try to apply social knowledge and sociology and social experience get laughed at. Their ideas get shot down and seem to be of little or no worth. But I say that those are the very people that we have to learn from because you cannot take away from someone what they have learned under those circumstances and conditions. The least we can do is be courteous to what they are suggesting. But it goes further than that.

Recently, the First Official Member went to visit a prison but he didn't ask the Fourth Elected Member for George Town—who is a sociologist—to go. I don't want to say that he didn't ask me because I have no axe to grind. I don't care. I was glad he didn't ask me. But I find it difficult to see that we have this kind of knowledge and idea . . . let me put it this way: I am not in the business of having people agree with me. I relish disagreement. But if someone disagrees with me they had better be prepared to defend to the umpteenth degree their position because I am not going to wilt up, cave in, and yield to them. So, I would welcome a divergent thinking. I would welcome someone who's ideas are different from mine because I would take their position, use it to bolster my own position, and if I thought that my position was weak I would be the first person to say, 'you know, I would like to take on board some of your ideas'.

There is a word in sociology called "co-opting" because when you do that to those kinds of people, it neutralises their position. If you take them on board then what can they say? They certainly cannot come and say, 'well, sir, your position was indefensible, it didn't make sense, it was illogical. Well, you are talking about yourself, sir, because remember you were a part of this exercise, so what now?' This is the weakness in the government where things could go a lot smoother, where they could benefit from ideas from persons on this side of the Honourable Legislative Assembly on many occasions. But I suppose adversarial politics and the necessity to one-up people makes that kind of position impossible.

I look forward, Madam Speaker, to the day when members are sufficiently mature as to realise that even on this side there are people with ideas that can be used. I hope, Madam Speaker, that day comes on 8th November 2000, because if I am among that group, I will remind them that it is time to change the modus operandi—to change the operating style and to recognise and listen and to pay respect and credence to good ideas irrespective of what circles they emanate from.

So, we have an opportunity when occasions like this arise to take people who have some ideas to offer. But you know what happens? I will tell you what happens, I have it recorded right here in these Hansards. There is a certain gentleman who gets up and says when your ideas differ, that you are bashing the prison and the police service. Let me read it. I even have them in chronological order.

From the Hansard of 2 December 1993, "Madam Speaker, one other area that I would just like to mention is that what would probably help is, rather than, for example, the First elected Member for Bodden Town constantly questioning and nearly, sometimes, harassing the prison establishment and the police, that if there were some kind words of some sort that there are good people within the different areas of these departments and perhaps assisting them and assisting the Members of this Honourable House with trying to deal with problems of crime."

On 11th November 1994, "What would be more helpful, instead of the constant criticism of the police and the prison, which seem to be pet subjects of the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and the First Elected Member for Bodden Town, is if they would spend their time construc- tively trying to help the police and trying to help the prison officers."

Madam Speaker, when you bring motions like this, what are you constructively trying to do? Tell me! When you bring motions like this, what are you constructively trying to do? When you ask questions about the operations, when you try to find out reasons why decisions were made, what are you constructively trying to do? Certainly, if you wanted to be destructive, you could have been libellous by levelling all kinds of charges and participating in all kinds of unlicensed accusations and doing all kinds of stupidity.

Madam Speaker, it seems to me that some people misguided their sense of democracy. I, Madam Speaker, can only speak for myself. I, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, was not elected to agree with anyone; I was elected to represent my constituents. And if that means expressing disagreement on positions taken by the government, by Jove, that means that is what I have to do. And I have never flinched from doing that. So, much so that people tried to castigate me by saying that I opposed for the sake of opposition. Be that as it may, I survived that election. I am still here. I don't believe that I have been unreasonable.

I brought a motion here in 1994 calling for a debate on the report of Her Majesty's Prison Inspector. The government chose to have the then Honourable Attorney General get up and say that they were not debating the motion. Now, I want to find out if that was constructive? I want to find out if they had no comments to make on a report that was handed to them? I would like to find out if that was constructive? Democracy and the essence of democracy—Madam Speaker, I have studied it from its emphasis empirically on Athens.

The essence of democracy is that people hold positions based on what they can defend and based on what they believe is right. It has nothing to do with persons agreeing for the sake of agreement. I contend it is not healthy if persons just accept all the time without trying to question, without trying to reason, without trying to derive the logic for certain actions. Certainly, Madam Speaker, it goes against the grain of all that I was taught and it goes against the grain of all that I think about.

But, you know, I am reminded of the Roman Council, Marcus Cicero, who in his fifth book in the Tusculam Disputations said that "in the face of talent, public opinion is scornful and can be summarised as, 'let those among us who wish to excel, excel somewhere else.'" So, instead of recognising people's contribution, often the people get put down.

I believe that had we been more understanding, had we taken a different approach, we would not now have come to this position. That it is necessary for us to vigorously pursue this position is demonstrated in the fact that there have been too many failures following one upon the other. This motion is not about levelling criticism individually or collectively. The motion is about getting to the crux of the problem and collectively trying to solve it for the benefit of the country, present and future.

Madam Speaker, many people are going to try to argue that the problem stems from overcrowding. Well, I suppose that is a problem that cannot be completely refuted, but I want to say that there is not a functioning prison anywhere in the civilised world which does not suffer some degree of overcrowding, for prisons are not meant to be hotels or private dwelling houses. One of the deterrents is the fact that you are stripped of certain privacy. That is one of the deterrents. You cannot expect to go to prison and have a bathroom completely to yourself or a bedroom or a livingroom. One of the deterrents is that your space has to be cramped because prison should serve . . . at every moment of your thinking you should come to the realisation 'I do not belong here.'

That is the message successful prisons send from the time you pass the first gate that is clanked shut, you are jolted—'I have left freedom behind.'

Madam Speaker, honourable members would do well to watch The Shawshank Redemption, The Green Mile, and Hurricane. You want to know what prison life is? Watch those three movies. If you think prison life is any picnic, watch those three movies especially The Green Mile and The Shawshank Redemption. That gives an idea of what prison is. It certainly is no picnic.

So, I am not an advocate of overcrowding. I certainly would not advocate a prison system like they have in Brazil, where prisons that are built for 1,200 people have 5,000 to 6,000. But I am saying that one of the shortcomings is that you have to share your space.

Madam Speaker, I had the unpleasant opportunity (in a course called "A Sociology of Deviance") to visit a prison in Montreal, Archambault, an infamous prison built in 19th century Montreal—dark, grey, depressing, discouraging. I talked with some inmates, people doing hard time, real criminals. Madam Speaker, that was years ago in the seventies. I am sure that conditions have not significantly improved. That was not a good life because if you can imagine Montreal and prisoners who had to get by in the cold Canadian winters with a minimum of heat . . . there wasn't any of this business about please assemble its meal time. Burr—one push of the buzzer and everybody smartened up because the next move was they heard the click and the electronic gate unlock. They had to stand out in front of their cell because when the wardens passed, it wasn't any business about gentlemen its mealtime. I was jolted, Madam Speaker, because the only operations I had seen like that is how people herd cattle.

These people were conditioned—they move on signals, because if they lagged behind, and especially if it could be any interpretation of obstinacy, ah, believe you me, you did not wish to be caught in such an unenviable position.

So, Madam Speaker, there is need for some kind of philosophy. I am not saying that I condone that, but one has to understand that there has to be a system. From the time you get in you are stripped of any civilian identity. Anything that reminds you that you had the dignity of a free person—no watches, no rings, no excessive jewellery, no civilian clothes.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to the time when we can have established clearly set out, rehabilitative programmes, where we can stream prisoners. We can identify their strengths and route them for training and re-education, which will be of benefit to them when they come out to the wider society. But we have a lot of work to do. And I want to say this: one of the things we have to work at in tandem with this proper rehabilitation and re-education is we have to change the attitudes of persons and businesses on the outside to the point where they are willing to give those whom the state has deemed to be rehabilitated and reformed a chance to recoup their dignity, pride, and their sense of self-worth. That is a serious problem; a serious handicap that we have.

So I am also saying to the government that any effective rehabilitation must also be in tandem with efforts to change the thinking of the society, so that these people can be given a chance to redeem and rehabilitate themselves. When someone pays their debt to society, when they are released from prison they come out with a clean slate, they should be given every chance. I have said this in here before from as far back as 1994 when I outlined successful programmes operated by the state of Massachusetts and also one in California. We have to get into the halfway house business because you cannot have people locked away for five to ten years and then put out cold turkey on the streets—they cannot function especially if they come from an environment where they were strictly and rigidly supervised.

We have to begin by ensuring that they can walk without wobbling or falling. We have to lay certain conditions on them in preparation for full freedom; otherwise, we have the problems that we have now with an outrageous rate of recidivism. It's a psychologically and sociologically proven fact that people who have been locked away for a long time develop a dependence on that kind of environment, outside of which they cannot function independently. I asked them why they go back to prison and they said that they couldn't function out here because at least in there they knew what time was mealtime. They knew what they had to do; they knew when they had to get up when it was shower time and they had developed a dependence on that kind of existence and when put to fend for themselves they cannot make it.

But, Madam Speaker, I am inclined to be hard because . . . I have my old Hansard here. I said all these things in a debate. I talked about programmes where people earned degrees. I talked about a programme in California based on an Editorial that I got out of The New York Times. Madam Speaker, it must have been as far back as 1994, but I will tell you the exact date—March 20, 1994, a programme called "Delancey Street" operated in California, a halfway house where convicted and violent felons had successfully been reformed. But I am not surprised, because there seems to be little or no interest in what some people have to offer.

That is one of the reasons why I am disillusioned with politics and sometimes I am inclined to say that I am almost wasting my time. I suppose the same could go for other honourable members as well. I sometimes wonder if it makes sense to be conscientious and diligent in this forum.

Madam Speaker, I would want to say a couple of other things . . . and one of the shortcomings that I see is that there needs to be more open communication in terms of what the government plans to do, the direction in which the government is going, generally. But specifically in this case, and particularly as it affects something as important as the security of the state and members of the society having a sense of well-being, the Cayman Compass in an Editorial on Wednesday, 2 February, captures the problem. The Editorial was entitled "Information for the Public," and I will read the last two paragraphs.

The penultimate paragraph begins, "There is a high level of legitimate public interest in developments at the prison. There could have been a press conference to make the announcement that decisions had been made following last year's riots and the subsequent experts' review."

"When members of Finance Committee came to deal with future expenditures of the prison, they and the public at large should already have been familiar with what the current thinking was among those responsible for operating the prison. The MLAs might even have had time to think about it before giving the nod to the proposed expenditures."

And the following day, which was Thursday, 3rd February, the Editorial went on to say, in the fifth paragraph from the end, entitled "Prisoner Rehabilitation," "Low self esteem and an accompanying sense of being rejected by mainstream society is common among prisoners. The accomplishment of successful acquisition of knowledge and the mastering of skills is likely to improve their self-image."

"Education and skills training should help prisoners better understand how society functions and how they can find a legitimate place in it."

"Skills that will help them find employment after they are released will, at least, give them the option to scuff at illegal activity. Social skills will ameliorate the feeling of being outcast."

"The aim of imprisonment is far more than punishment for a wrong committed. It is more than taking a criminal out of circulation for a while. Imprisonment must encourage inmates to change and to seek to become useful members of society."

"Programmes and policies designed to lead towards rehabilitation must receive the unstinting and tangible support from the whole community."

So, Madam Speaker, the Caymanian Compass is substantiating the position I took earlier that for the programmes to be successful there has to be community wide support and acceptance. But there also is a need for the government to be more consistent and to be more forthcoming with the moves it plans to make. Therein lies one of the basic shortcomings of how we operate the system and run the country because often, whether it is real or imaginary, government for whatever reason seeks to keep and make certain moves and take certain decisions in strict secrecy and privacy.

Madam Speaker, I have always contended that that does not bode well for democracy and certainly it goes against the grain of freedom of information. I take this opportunity to remind the government that they have accepted that motion. I think it bodes well for one and all when decisions are taken and made public. We are not unreasonable, Madam Speaker, certainly not honourable members in the House. We don't expect the government to be able to tell us everything because we recognise that there are certain matters which, for matters of security, have to be kept confidential. But certainly the broad outlines or reasons why a position is taken or is going to be taken . . . it is reasonable to publicise that and it is understandable when people question. To do otherwise is to invite suspicion, innuendo, or worse. And heaven knows, although there has been a lot of road paving, there is still a significant amount of marl road.

So these are improvements which the government can take to make the system more understandable and, by the same token, gain the confidence and the support of the public, who, when they are apprised of what is happening, will be convinced of the rightness and the soundness of such policies and will go along. And, it gives the government reason to take credit for being transparent and accountable.

Madam Speaker, I believe that it is high time, some would say it's past the time, that the government arrived at the position where it tells us what the expected developments regarding Northward Prison in as practical and concrete terms as possible is going to be. It would be interesting to see what figures the census is going to bring as to our total population in these islands. But the fact that there are those people who believe that crime is on the increase certainly places the government in a position where it must, if it is going to sensibly manage and maintain peace and good order in the society, arrive at some kind of philosophy as to how the prison system is going to evolve.

I would be happy to see the kind of system where the persons who are returned to the society, return with skills they can use, including social skills because a lot of young offenders especially suffer shortcomings in their literacy skills, and skills which can be marketed constructively. I also believe (and this was the strength in what was proposed some years ago when there was a proposal to have a national commission on crime and violence) that we also need to come to grips with what are the causes of crime. Is it a social cause? An economic cause? Is it caused by a breakdown of the family? Is it caused by a failure of some other societal institution? We need to know these things in order to effectively address and craft the kind of rehabilitation programmes that are going to help.

If it is caused from a breakdown of the family or some other important social institution then at the same time we are offering rehabilitation programmes we have to strengthen these institutions which demonstrate inherent weaknesses.

That brings me to the point, Madam Speaker, of why we have failed in the past. We have not taken a holistic approach. We are trying to address only one area, that is, the area of imprisonment. But we need to take a broader view of what is happening, because if you are going to rehabilitate people and then put them back in the same environment—the same family, the same institutions . . . that begs for recidivism, and we have to be prepared for that. So, you cannot treat imprisonment in isolation to all these other factors.

We have a significant (in my view) shortcoming and disadvantage because the Cayman Islands is small. In areas of much larger and wider geographic jurisdiction, it's easy, they can transplant persons. We can transplant them to get them out of old company, old haunts, but we have significant limitations here, people usually have to return to the same neighbourhood. So the government has to find a way to take a holistic approach and work with those social agencies in the society, including the churches, when persons are rehabilitated. That is why, Madam Speaker, I have argued in this house time and time again that we have to bolster, and we have to support, and we have to strengthen other social agencies in the community.

I don't necessarily believe that the burden should be on the state. So, if the state is in the business of imprisonment and rehabilitation, when the persons come, there must be other agencies working in tandem with the state to ensure that they continue on the road to rehabilitation. The halfway house and the other social agencies must get active, job placement agencies, the churches—otherwise if we take an isolationist approach the problem will not be effectively addressed.

Finally, Madam Speaker, we have to bite the bullet. We have to realise that our society has changed in a way where our incarceration facilities as they now exist cannot offer adequate protection and security for some elements of the prison population and the society. It is unfortunate but it is true. We have to build a "real" prison. We have to contain it within a wall with a perimeter, maybe even with towers for some people because we don't want to convey the impression that people can get out as and when they wish; that they can exploit the environment, that they can exploit the physical surroundings and put the rest of the society at risk.

It is as much for the safety of the inmates as it is for the safety of persons in the wider community because illegal escape is fraught with risks for all parties because people can lose their lives in the escape attempt. They can come to a confrontational situation where there are misunderstandings and people have to defend themselves or people think that they are at risk. It's in the interest of the state to realise this because ultimately the state is responsible for the persons whom the court has deemed wards of the state.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member is this a convenient point to take the luncheon break?

Mr. Roy Boddén: Yes, Madam.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.50 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.45 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 as amended. The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town continuing his debate.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to bolster my argument for societal support and assistance to the government by referring to an article I read in the Caymanian Compass of some days ago, in which Magistrate Margaret Ramsay-Hale was addressing an association of businesspersons. She called upon them to display some, what I would term, social responsibility and a sense of social obligation by providing opportunities for rehabilitated persons released from prison to find gainful occupation. Madam Speaker, this is important when viewed in concert with the other efforts that have to be made, as I remarked prior to the luncheon suspension.

I would like to move on now and touch on a few other matters. We have (the government, that is) has proposed that it wishes to build a $10 million juvenile remand centre. I have some problems with this because I have to query: If you are going to spend $10 million on a juvenile detention, how much are you going to spend to prevent matters from reaching this stage? I am not saying that there is anything basically wrong with building a juvenile detention centre, but I am saying that I for one would be happy to see simple efforts being made to prevent and to contain the problem before it reaches the level where we have to spend $10 million to build such a facility. On these occasions I am always drawn to refer to Gresham's Law, where work expands to fill the time. Similarly too, prison space and detention space will expand to fill the number of young people. So, we have to be careful that we don't be getting into a cycle out of which we cannot easily come.

I reiterate my position that we have to treat the problem holistically, that is, look at all aspects of it from the societal breakdowns to the failure of the family, to the failure of other institutions in the society rather than seeking to address just the top. So, to this I add that the best efforts will be concerted efforts that will not only involve one ministry or one department, but span the spectrum perhaps of the whole government, the relevant government ministries and departments as well as the private sector down to and including the churches and other such organisations in the society.

Madam Speaker, before I conclude, I want to return to some current operations which are in need of improvement at the prison. I want to reiterate the necessity for adequate and specifically constructed physical space so that these operations can be carried out as they should be carried out. One has to do with this whole business of prison visits and the association, the mixture, and the meeting of elements inside the prison, namely, the prisoners and those persons held on remand and visitors from the outside, whether those visitors are their family or merely well-wishers.

It is of crucial importance that we have physical facilities in which such meetings can take place that are secure, which offers some modicum of social control and which allows for the prison authorities to easily come to grips with any situation that may occur. But even more important than that, there is a need to have an area where prisoners and their visitors separately and exclusively can be thoroughly screened and searched.

It seems to me, Madam Speaker, one of the problems we have at our facility here (and it's a universal problem) is . . . we have to successfully prevent contraband from passing between those who are incarcerated and from those who come to visit them. So, this is sometimes unpalatable, but it is difficult and it is a way of life because when one has put oneself in the position where one is deprived of his freedom because of a crime against the society, one has to prepare for this. I have to say that it is rather unfortunate, but it is a fact of life. Prisoners have to be prepared to subject themselves to a loss of privacy because they have to be thoroughly searched before they can mix with their visitors. Similarly, the visitors must be prepared to go through some screening process.

In some institutions, Madam Speaker, I can assure you it is most humiliating and sometimes dehumanising. But that is the price to pay when you commit some crimes, because the government, the state, the authorities, have to be concerned that absolutely no contraband, whether it be in the form of cigarettes or whatever, or it be in the form of—worse yet—weapons, can pass from one element to the other and threaten the social order and the institutional peace. We need a facility that offers the authorities and the staff that kind of scope for that kind of comprehensive screening.

Madam Speaker, I am sure that there are those who will find this objectionable, but in the interest of security it is reasonable to expect these kinds of occurrences and in the long run it will work out for the safety of all concerned.

The final point I wish to make on this is that we also have to keep abreast of trends that are happening in other societies, particularly those societies with which we have close links. In this case, I am speaking of Britain. I read in my contribution to the Throne Speech recently that the Home Secretary, Jack Straw, has been approached by a semi-official agency of the government towards taking a softer line on what they called soft drugs, such as marijuana. Well, in this week's The Economist magazine, Jack Straw, while not declaring any official position, was again approached about arriving at a position of depenalisation, where conviction for the drugs (marijuana and ecstasy, that is, simple possession of these drugs) is called into focus.

I am sometimes fearful that what is happening in the Caymanian society can lead to what the sociologists call the criminalisation of the society, by placing people in prison for offences that may better be served as community service orders or this type of service, or custodial sentence particularly where young people are involved and where our facility is not such that we can keep these persons adequately secluded from persons who may be older, more hard-lined and more experienced in the criminal subculture.

I want to say that I hope with the announced intention of the development of different if not new physical facilities comes a different philosophy and approach—an enlightened approach that takes into consideration the whole spectrum and treat not only the symptoms but make an attempt to address the problems.

The government has got what it wants and what it is comfortable with by virtue of the amendment brought by the Honourable First Official Member. I believe that I have done my part by outlining what I see are the weaknesses, making some suggestions as to what could be done to remedy the situation. The ball is entirely in the court of the government. I shall, Madam Speaker, continue to exercise my responsibility by saying that we on the backbench have an obligation to bring shortcomings to the attention of the government and, where possible, suggest alternatives or suggest improvements.

We have done this. We are not in any position to articulate policy, to define the direction in which the government should go or must go, but we are merely purveyors and promoters of what we see should be improvements and alternatives to paths currently taken.

I hope, Madam Speaker, that my contribution is accepted as impersonal, intended mainly for the edification of the government. It is rather unfortunate that we are at the level where there is no sophisticated machinery that such ideas could be articulated from the position of a party platform because I think it would carry much more weight than by an agglomeration of individuals. But, Madam Speaker, you know, I live in hope, and perhaps in my political lifetime (as limited as that may be) we will come to that point of sophistication in Caymanian politics where we have an organised opposition rather than an agglomeration of individuals. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak on behalf of the government to Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 as amended. I would like to begin by reading the motion for clarity. It says:

“BE IT RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly record its concerns with the occurrences at Northward Prison which led up to the events of Thursday 30th September, 1999 and Friday 1st October, 1999;

“AND BE IT ALSO FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly recommends that there be a review of the policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation, the administration at Northward Prison and the development of secure and effective facilities of incarceration in the Cayman Islands;

“AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government lay on the Table of this Honourable House, within 90 days, its plans for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of Her Majesty’s Prison at Northward, including the timetable for the implementation of such reforms.”

Madam Speaker, the disturbances at Northward which led eventually to riots and major destruction by fire on 30th September and 1st October 1999 is not something that anyone can be proud of. While there are those of us who from time to time express the view that there was the potential for a substantial unrest, I believe the majority of persons in this country were totally taken aback and stood in absolute shock as we watched either by looking out our windows or watching CITN what transpired.

I went to Northward Prison a little before 5.00 on the evening of 30th September, after the laundry, the mechanics workshop, and a number of other places including one or two cellblocks, had been burned. It was a nightmare that I hope I never have to go through again; and one that I hope this country never has to go through again.

Madam Speaker, in the aftermath of that the Commissioner of Police was put in charge and the Director was sent on administrative leave. We moved from hour to hour in trying to deal with the crisis. As soon as a little bit of normality was restored, I advised His Excellency the Governor to appoint someone to carry out an investigation of the matter and Sir Stephen Tumin, who is no stranger to Cayman. He came down and did an investigation and the report was tabled in this House.

Sir Tumin said, and I would like to read a little from his report as to why it happened, he said. “The fundamental reason for the trouble has been overcrowding, a major prison evil wherever it occurs.” He goes on to say, “The Courts have been sending the prison roughly double the numbers that the prison can take and there are often above 300, when there should be a limit of about 150. The dormitory on Phase 1 held about 60 prisoners. This is gross overcrowding and it should be divided into cells for no more than two men each.”

“Increasing the numbers of prisoners without increasing the numbers of staff is greatly damaging to morale, and upsets attempts at rehabilitation, allows prisoners to plot against the authorities and makes it almost impossible for prison staff to maintain proper control.”

Madam Speaker, as the mover of this motion stated a little earlier, Northward Prison was okay in the early 1970s when it was constructed. Crime at that time in this country was very low, and serious crime was almost unheard of. A double chainlink fence around Northward Prison was considered excellent security, as the cells and the facility in general when it was built, were no doubt considered state of the art. Madam Speaker, time moved on in Cayman, but advances in the security and keeping up-to-date in the security at Northward Prison did not happen. I believe that collectively former and present members of this House all have to share a bit of the blame in this.

Madam Speaker, my first introduction to Northward Prison was in the summer of 1990 when I came over from Cayman Brac for two months to act for the Administrative Secretary (the post is now called Chief Secretary.) While here I visited Northward and I never forget, as I arrived there, the prison officer keeping the records. He said, “There are 175 inmates at Northward. It was built for approximately 170.” Since that time, numbers have steadily increased until it reached 308 in September of last year—almost double the capacity of the facility.

My predecessor, Mr. Lemuel Hurlston, tried for about four years to get capital funds approved for Northward. Two of the projects that funds were being requested for were an administrative block and a visitor’s centre. The mover of the motion spoke just awhile ago about the dire need for a visitor’s centre, and he is very right.

Madam Speaker, in late 1994 when I took over as Chief Secretary, I began the annual submission of requests for funds for Northward Prison. Apart from small amounts and a significant amount for the 24 cells, which will go into service next weekend, there has been very little money approved for capital improvements for Northward prior to the riots at the end of September and the first of October last.

The Prison Director (now the former Prison Director), his staff and inmates built a classroom roughly about three years ago. It was not funded by government, contributions were collected publicly, and labour was carried out by inmates to construct this classroom. But sadly when it was finished, because of the dire need for accommodation, it had to be taken over and it has never been used for a classroom until about a month ago, it has finally been put in service for the first time as a classroom.

Madam Speaker, last November I visited the Turks and Caicos, it was one of the suggestions that Sir Stephen Tumin made in his report that there was a new facility and it would certainly be worthwhile visiting there and seeing that. The Honourable Minister for Health and I had been in discussion around that time, as he has been working very hard on getting plans for a juvenile rehabilitation facility. And in discussions we thought it was useful, in fact wise, for both of us to visit Turks and Caicos. He and I met and agreed on a team to visit, and we agreed that we would invite a backbench member of this House to attend. Invitation was extended and the individual was quite enthusiastic about joining our team but just before the visit was to take place, he had a medical commitment that came up and he had to advise that he could not go.

At that time, it was too late to try to select someone else and the team therefore consisted of the Honourable Minister for Health, Mr. John Retson from the Probation Services and I.

The visit went very well and the information we gleaned was very enlightening—an opportunity to see a new concept in prison development and one that works very well. It works similar to a wheel in the sense that the hub is the area where prisoner officers operate from and blocks go off like the spokes of a wheel and a prison officer can stand and look down the corridors of four or five blocks and see if there is anything going on in the corridors. The concept works very well in the countries that have adopted its use and it is something for Cayman to consider when we go into construction of a maximum-security facility.

Madam Speaker, Sir Stephen Tumin made a number of recommendations for Northward Prison, and we have set about to implement as many of those as we can. He has recommended that the administration of the prison be strengthened by having two or three Assistant Directors, and we are now in that process. Informally, we do have the persons in place and so we at the top, immediately below the Director there is a Deputy Director and then there are two Assistant Directors that are responsible for specific areas of the prison. This was something that legislators called for perhaps in a different form. But for two years or more there has been the call for seeing more done on rehabilitation of inmates. This is one of the areas of responsibility and someone has been recruited with those specific skills to work on rehabilitation.

Sir Tumin paid tribute to the Director (now the former Director) Mr. Eric Smith, but felt that the facility had expanded to the extent that it was beyond his grasp and he has been retired. A temporary Director was recruited from the United Kingdom for six months. Mr. Nicholas Brooke came in very well experienced, having had experience in prison riots previously. He also has experience in the physical planning and development of facilities and we were very fortunate to be able to borrow him from Her Majesty's Prison Service.

Regrettably, we cannot keep him because he was only on loan to us and the UK Prison Service had a job for him.

I will be going to London the week after next to recruit a Director for Northward. I believe I can say at this point we have six applicants, all experienced prison governors and I am hopeful that we will find a good person to take the reins of Northward Prison in the longer term.

In Sir Tumin's recommendations, he said one of the first things to make the prison secure was to obtain what he called a lock-down, to move from prisoners being able to move around inside the prison without being controlled to a position where they were locked in cells. That was the most difficult task, and with the assistance of the Finance Committee, we were able to get funds to rebuild, rehabilitate the facilities, and we moved to that position as soon as cells were available and were lockable.

Sir Tumin has also recommended that we build a secure prison elsewhere for prisoners, a facility that would be a maximum-security facility and Northward would be retained as a lower security facility. Madam

Speaker, plans are moving straight ahead on the design of a maximum-security facility for this country.

Going hand in hand with that will be the need for a female facility. There was a time when female inmates were reasonably safe at Northward, but the riots last year showed that that is no longer the case. A number of members of this honourable House called for that facility and it is something that we simply have to do.

I want to itemise a few of the improvements that have been carried out since the rebuilding process has begun. One of the first things that we had to do (which I mentioned earlier) was to try to reduce the number of inmates in Northward. We now have within that facility, 223 inmates compared to 308 at the end of September. This has been accomplished by removing the female inmates. They are still housed at the East End Civic Centre. A number of others have been housed at the Central Police Station lock-up. Occasionally, there are one or two other facilities in Grand Cayman and six have been relocated to the United Kingdom.

By way of improvements, all cell locks have now been fitted with what is known as Chubb locks—in the prison world, the Rolls Royce of locks. Originally, the Folger Adams locks were there and they served their time but for those of you and a few of you have visited the facility since we began rehabilitation of it and the locks are much more substantial and secure, and will certainly serve for a very long time. They have now been keyed with a common locking system, which was one of the requests made in reports in the past, but it was a very costly exercise. It has now been completed.

All cellblocks now have proper secured outer doors. Many of you will have seen when you were there, the substantial doors that had been put on that are much more secure than the great type doors that were there originally.

The gate lodge at the front of the prison has two gates, an inner one and an outer one. The inner gate, the one on the prison side, has been replaced with a much more substantial structure and the outer one will be replaced shortly with a similar design.

All damaged accommodation has been repaired. There are a few minor things still going on, the occasional pipe or something, but by and large the accommodation has now been repaired.

The woodwork shop is in the process of being restored and reopened. The classroom, which I mentioned earlier, has been put in service for the first time and that is going very well. The entire prison buildings have now been repainted and they have a nice, fresh look about them.

A new regime has been put in place, which allows inmates who are drug free, well behaved and in employment, to be located in the former female wing which has been renamed the enhanced block with a higher level of privileges which they have earned. Anyone who does not meet the standards of this unit is returned to the main prison immediately.

We have introduced offending behaviour courses, social skills courses, and the drug rehabilitation courses have restarted at the prison. Religious services now take place on three days per week as opposed to being limited generally to a Sunday afternoon.

I want to take this opportunity to thank the Minister's Association for their proactive stance. They contacted His Excellency the Governor and said, "We feel we need to be doing more," and they have regular meetings with the Governor. I attend whenever possible. We have been able to increase the number of religious services that are taking place and this is going very well.

Late last Friday afternoon we closed Tent City as a temporary facility for men, and relocated the inmates there into Northward. Tent City will now be set up for females. There is a bit of work that has to be done including having a separate cell or two for those less than well-behaved individuals. As soon as that is completed, and I am told it would take about three weeks, we will be relocating the females there. At that time, we will be able to allow the people of East End to finally have their civic centre back, and I again thank the people of that district for their tolerance and patience while we have had to use it.

I visited there last week and I was pleased to see that the civic centre (while converted to a temporary prison) appears to have been taken care of, from what I could see superficially. Yet it was made comfortable for the females, and I believe that females should have a better standard of accommodation (because they are females). Those facilities have been adapted for use as a temporary prison facility and seem to work well. We hope that Tent City will be set up in such a way that it can be reasonably comfortable for those individuals.

Nineteen of the seconded staff from the UK have arrived and most of them are already at work. Sir Stephen Tumin recommended that we look to the UK initially for trained and experienced prison officers, and to ensure that those officers pass on to their local counterparts as many of the skills they have acquired as possible. I have passed those instructions on and this is being done. I hope that we will be able to generally raise the standards of the local officers, some of whom may not have had a lot of formal training in the management of prisoners.

I mentioned earlier the reorganisation of the management system and the two assistant directors are in place. One is responsible for inmate activity, and will deal with the whole aspect of rehabilitation. Lead officers have now been based primarily in the cellblocks, in the living units, to provide better supervision and support for inmates and, of course, for staff as well.

When the riots took place at Northward, we had to put staff on 12-hour shifts. That is physically draining and it also becomes very costly in terms of overtime. Yesterday, we reintroduced the 8-hour shift system in which staff will be on ten 8-hour shifts in a 14-day period. I hope that they will be able to appreciate the fact that this will make life a little easier for them and at the same time, it will be a little less costly to the country.

We have now put all prison officers in a white shirt. Previously, only senior staff wore the white shirt. But all prisoner officers are now in a white shirt. This might seem a small thing, but a number of them have favourably commented on this. I think it is a bit of a morale booster. It looks very good, and for those of you who may have seen the officers around, I believe they appreciate this.

We now have all inmates back in prison uniform with the exception of those in the enhanced block who are allowed to wear their own clothes as long as they are within the enhanced block.

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a convenient time to take the afternoon break?

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.35 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.00 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/2000 as amended.

The Honourable First Official Member continuing his debate thereon.

Hon. James M. Ryan: When we took the afternoon suspension I was going through a list of improvements that had been carried out at Northward since late last year. I just referred to the shift system that has been put back in operation and I hope that will prove popular and at the same time work well.

Madam Speaker, the 24 cells that have been under construction are nearing completion. I toured them last Wednesday and they are just a few finishing bits to be done and it is anticipated that they will be handed over next weekend. Once they are tested, they will be put into service.

One of the things that the temporary director at Northward Prison is proposing (and I agree with him, and it will be done) is to use those cells for remand prisoners. Repeatedly, there has been a call in this House and from the public to try to keep persons on remand separate and apart from convicted inmates. This we intend to do and so those cells will serve for the remand prisoners and we will endeavour as far as is humanly possible to keep them separate and apart from convicted inmates.

There is a small exercise yard as part of the facility and that is now being readied. We hope that this can be done because for too long we have thrown everybody together and that is no good for rehabilitation purposes and, of course, persons on remand are persons who have been charged but are not convicted. Until a person has been convicted, he is not guilty under the law. So, I think it is only right that they should be kept separate. So, just to let honourable members and the public know what our plans are in that regard.

Madam Speaker, the temporary director is re-starting staff training. In fact, I think it is true to say that it will be a start because there are changes being made in staff training. In the past, a certain amount of staff training was done but there was never the opportunity to do as much as we wanted, and this is beginning later this month and we are hope that this is another step in the right direction.

Madam Speaker, during the last deliberations in Finance Committee, when I came for funds I pointed out the need for what I would call a proper perimeter barrier or a proper fence for Northward Prison. As I mentioned earlier, there is 10-foot double chainlink fence with razor ribbon wire around it and that served well in its time but we must have a proper fence there if we are going to keep inmates within Northward. This was one of the things that the Honourable Minister of Health and I were able to view when we visited Turks and Caicos, that is, a strong prison fence, a proper barrier.

At that Finance Committee meeting when I raised it, a number of members of the Finance Committee gave what I would call a resounding commitment to this item being given high priority. I want to say this afternoon that it has been given high priority. First of all, we had to find out where the materials were available from. It took a little bit of time and all this has been done. I recently got approval through Executive Council having had a verbal nod from members of the Finance Committee to move ahead with it. Of course, it will come back to the Finance Committee in due course, but we are now moving ahead with this perimeter fence. We have, in fact, today invited tenders for this barrier and as quickly as possible the Central Tenders Committee will deal with tenders and we will move straight ahead.

The new prison fence is going to be some 17 feet high. It is a steel fence and, unlike chainlink fence, I am told it is virtually unscalable—even for inmates like Steve Manderson and company. I look forward within the near future to seeing that barrier go up and I know the people around Northward Prison and indeed all of the people here in Cayman will be able to breathe a sigh of relief when we have a fence that can control the inmates in Northward.

It is proposed to include a fence around the workshops that will have to be reconstructed and this will be separated from the main prison so that we can control the inmates when they are in the workshop, and yet the workshops will not be in the same area as the accommodations as they were before the riots.

Madam Speaker, one of the recommendations of Sir Stephen Tumin was for a review of the parole system to be carried out. This review has been done. I expect that very shortly His Excellency will be accepting the new parole guidelines and making a public announcement on them. I believe that the new guidelines will improve greatly the system that we have had up to now. I am not going to go into deal because they have not yet been accepted and formally released by His Excellency.

I can say that the eligibility period for parole for Caymanians is expected to remain the same as it has been and currently is but the system for remission for non-Caymanians has been reviewed and we expect that announcement to come fairly soon.

Madam Speaker, I believe that if this motion brings out ideas and views from members of this honourable House, as already we have heard some ideas coming out from the mover of this motion, I believe that if these ideas come out they can be incorporated and at the end of the day we will all benefit. I want honourable members of this House to know that I am prepared to listen and accept suggestions and recommendations that can improve the facility at Northward.

I believe that there will be other comments coming forward as we go along with this motion that will be to the benefit of Northward Prison and the country as a whole. I will be listening intently and making notes with a view to try to adopt and implement suggestions put forward where possible. So, Madam Speaker, I accept the motion on behalf of the Government. I thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, thank you. I am not sure where we are at, simply because I think the motion is a bit late coming to debate. The Government has had time to mend its ways, repair the fences and, of course, give the impression that even if something was wrong, nothing is wrong at the moment that will not be fixed by their attention to the situation.

The idea that nothing that happens in this country has to have consequences, that somehow things can happen and you can just push them away, and that there are no consequences, no cost, is almost like a fairy tale notion. What has happened at Northward, and what continues to happen at Northward, is not as much on the mind of the public today as it was in September and October. For this reason, the urgency to find coherent solutions and policies with regard to our attempts to rehabilitate our fallen brothers and sisters might not have the urgency it had when they were misbehaving to the extent where they were burning and looting.

It would appear that the member responsible to this House for . . . or perhaps he is not responsible to the House perhaps he is only responsible to the Governor because I am not sure how this thing really works. But something went wrong on 30th September 1999. If we are going to say that the blame should be borne by past members as well as present members of this House then we certainly are going to find that we are dividing blame a little bit differently than we divide power and responsibility. I, for certain, had no power to influence the decisions as they were made with regard to the administration at Northward Prison, with regard to the rehabilitation policies at Northward Prison with regard to incarceration and with regard to whatever.

I came here in Finance Committee on several occasions and insisted that a rehabilitation director be hired for Northward because I felt that the whole goal of a prison system is to rehabilitate and that this main purpose had been lost within Northward in that the administration had become more concerned with incarceration than with rehabilitation.

I believe it could be seen why that was so because if the Director of Prison was not trained in the social services or the social sciences in the first instance. The Director came from a police background going into the prison as a mere institution which enforced the will of the society by incarcerating inmates, rather than by rehabilitating inmates, and providing programmes for the rehabilitation of inmates.

I felt that to be truthful. What I knew of the qualifications of that person and the persons working next to him would mean in fact that there would be certain types of weaknesses. Therefore, I was asking that a rehabilitation director be added in order to complement his qualities and his role. That kind of perspective, of course, would have meant that we would have been more aware of the social grievances within the prison system in the first place. In other words, the first failure of the prison administration and those persons responsible for the incarceration and the rehabilitation of offenders was that they did not have the capacity to recognise the problems as they began to develop within the prison culture.

Now, I have been talking to persons over a period of time, just like the Third Elected Member from Bodden Town has been talking to persons over a period of time. It was my impression from talking to these individuals (prisoners and prison officers) that they had arrived sometime ago at a point whereby they were just waiting for things to move to a physical level. In other words, the confrontation was already there and had existed for a long time. The conflicts were there and had existed for a very long time. All that was needed was for this confrontation and this conflict to be moved to the level of physical confrontation.

Now, the fact that we are showing concern after the physical confrontation is part of our political culture, it's the part that says we are reactionaries rather than being proactive. We don't fix the problem before the problem gets bad; we wait until the problem gets so bad that every person in the society could see that there is a problem. If we are going to social manage on that level, whereby we begin to pay specific attention to problems when everybody can see that there is a problem, then there is no reason why we should hire a First Official Member to look after this particular interest. There is no reason why we should hire a director to look after this particular interest because this particular interest can be generally looked after by the general society since the general society and those people have reacted to the problem at the same time. In other words, the level of reaction, the time of the reaction was identical. The general public called for these changes at the same time that we became aware of the fact that the Chief Secretary's Office was calling for these changes.

So, it is interesting now that we can equally divide blame, but when it came to the point where the Chief Secretary's Office, the First Official Member, was going to the Turks and Caicos, we could not equally divide responsibility by saying to another member of the backbench that that person could be invited to go along as well.

In other words, that type of decision-making smacks of favouritism and prejudice because it was not open to the backbench as a whole. It seemed to have been just one selected person that we know about that was asked to go. When that person could not go, there was no serious attempt to contact other members to say, 'well, I asked this person to go but this person could not go, would you be interested in going?' To say that I would have been interested in going is an understatement! Of course I would have been interested and having the people's money being spent in order to give me at least some kind of comparative ability with regard to the establishment of prisons in the British Dependent Territories.

If I had another situation to compare this one with, I would certainly be in a much better position to make more creative and long-lasting suggestions to the Honourable Chief Secretary—who now seems to be quite interested in what we all have to say. But I would have been in a much better position to say something of substance had that opportunity been given to me to go to the Turks and Caicos Island and look also. But I realise that I am not one of the chosen few—

Mr. Roy Bodden: Neither am I!

Dr. Frank McField: I realise, Madam Speaker, that when I speak it is, take your car out of my parking spot, rather than what I have to say.

I realise that there are people in here who believe that they are the only ones (as the Third Elected Member from Bodden Town said) who have the solutions, who have the need to see law and order preserved in the society.

It is now interesting that what is being called for here is another study. We have not gotten to the point of how to encourage Caymanians to become jailers. We have not gotten to the point to even understand that the personnel within the prison plays a very important role in determining the outcome of the interaction between the jail and the jailers.

Now, there are interesting physiological and sociological theories about that kind of dominance and that type of situation, the role that class, race, nationality and all of those things play in determining the outcome of rehabilitation. We are still looking at this situation from just this very limited perspective—we have a problem, we have people who are offending, we have to put them in jail, they have become unruly, we have to bring somebody else in from the superior country to give us an idea as how we should resolve these problems. We don't ask Frank McField. We don't ask Roy Bodden. We don't ask the guy down the street that might have spent some time himself in prison and has a little bit of experience because those people who are participating in incarceration might be sometimes the most beneficial contributors to some type of solution.

I do believe that it is a situation with the National Team Government that has been in power since 1992 to somehow blame the overcrowding on members of the backbench as well as the members in that government and that support that government. That is misleading the general public. The Chief Secretary, the First Official Member, is a Member of the Executive Council. They come here with collective responsibility. If they have not made the case for the improvement in the physical conditions at Northward Prison convincingly enough to get support for the improvements in those conditions, its them to blame—not me!

So, they cannot come here today and expect that they will whitewash the entire situation, broaden the blame and still keep the power in their hands to tell us that we cannot go on trips to Turks and Caicos to see how the prisons are run there.

Madam Speaker, I know it's late so I shall sit down.

The Deputy Speaker: You will be continuing your debate on Wednesday?

Dr. Frank McField: Certainly, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4.30 p.m., I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, I wish to move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 a.m. Wednesday morning.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 a.m. on Wednesday, April 5. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. This Honourable House is accordingly adjourned until 10.00 a.m. on Wednesday.

AT 4.31 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 5 APRIL 2000.

EDITED
WEDNESDAY
5 APRIL 2000
10.15 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have apologies for absence from The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, who is in Cayman Brac dealing with official business.

The Deputy Speaker: Item 3, Other Business, Private Members' Motions. Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. Debate continues thereon, with the Fourth Elected Member for George Town continuing his debate.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 5/00
AS AMENDED

CONCERNS WITH THE OCCURRENCES AT NORTHWARD PRISON

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Dr. Frank McField: Thank you.

The central responsibility of any government is to ensure the safety and security of its citizens as far as possible. Not only do citizens have the right to live in a society in which they feel free from a high rate of crime, but citizens also have a right to live in a society in which they feel relatively safe from the threat of crime.

On August 2, 1999, I brought Private Member's Motion No. 20/99 entitled, Development of a Strategic Approach to Crime and Recidivism. Recidivism is when people go back to the crimes they committed. They go back to jail in fact. These are repeat offenders. We knew that our prison was made up of a lot of repeat offenders, and some type of strategic approach was necessary in dealing with this issue. If this issue was dealt with we would have not have had so rapid an increase in the prison population causing overcrowding.

It's interesting that the report done by Sir Stephen Tumin, gives as one of the main causes for the occurrences—the riots at Northward on 25, 30 September, and the 1 October—is overcrowding. The government has said that there was no lack of a coherent strategy or policy. They have gone as far as to blame past and present members of the Legislative Assembly for the problems at Northward Prison. I have disassociated myself with this since I don't believe it would be fair for me to accept any blame for the occurrences at Northward Prison, since I brought a private member's motion that was discussed in here on 2 August and government did not even find the courtesy to reply to the debate.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Dr. Frank McField: I don't intend to resurrect the debate and the points I made, but it is important that government approach the problems at Northward Prison as being the end result of a series of problems which already exist in the society. Crime is the end result of deviant and anti-social behaviour. Punishment is the end result of society trying to curtail and prevent this type of behaviour.

The point that we are discussing punishment rather than preventative measures has to do with the fact that our governments have in the past, as well as in the present, adopted a hindsight approach to problem solving, not a proactive approach. Once they have fire and brimstone, they know the problem is bad and how to correct it. But until they are scared to the point of being forced to deal with the problems, they ignore them, they chastise people who speak of them, they discredit people, they ostracise people, they exile people for bringing to their attention the weaknesses in our social order, and that these weaknesses need to be socially managed so that we can find lasting solutions.

Northward Prison is not a solution to the breakdown in social order in our society. The responsibility for the general safety and security of citizens in our society falls on the portfolio of Internal and External Affairs. The security and safety of our citizens can, I believe, be more permanently provided by an approach to crime and punishment that is multidisciplinary. I believe it is short-sighted on the part of the persons responsible to believe they should only deal with the breach in social order once it reaches the serious stage of criminal behaviour or activity. My security should not have to wait until somebody assaults me or steals from my property.

In guaranteeing the safety and security of its citizens, government must begin in the socialisation institutions. It must begin in the homes, the schools, the civic centres, the community centres, the boy scouts, the girl scouts, the different things. So, social control has to be not only by gentle persuasion, but a form of not so gentle persuasion. But before we have invested in the gentle means of persuasion, we should not take so much pride in talking about how we are solving the problem by investing more money in the not so gentle means of persuasion, the more violent means.

The honourable First Official Member has talked extensively about the physical properties of Northward Prison, and has said very little about the social and rehabilitative infrastructure within the prison. The fact that his portfolio is so incapable of comprehending these aspects of human relationships, or the human condition, is of no surprise. If we were to look in the Gibbard Report, if we were to look in the Sir Stephen Tumin report, we see that the argument between the Chief Secretary's office and the persons who did the reports is based on two distinctively different approaches to the management of our corrective institution.

The mere fact that we have conceived the process of incarceration as physical endeavour rather than seeing the social value, the idea part of incarceration as also important, has to do with the fact that the persons who have been put in charge of being responsible for the safety and security of the citizens of this country have very little knowledge of these important human features.

This is not necessarily a personal accusation. This is something that has also been admitted by that office. At some particular point I will refer to the words of the Deputy Chief Secretary in regard to the criticisms or suggestions made by the Gibbard Report and the way in which the merits of that report were devalued by what I consider to be very subjective evaluations of the very report. We have invited persons into our country to do reports. And once they have done the report we turn around and criticise the report from a purely subjective position, without any exercise of our objective qualities.

The Chief Secretary is calling for another report. Why? To create policy? If the policies were coherent in the first place, why would they want to amend the motion asking that that portfolio bring to this honourable House the policies or strategies for the improved management at Northward Prison. Why?

I recall that the attempt made in the amendment was to say that there were coherent policies, therefore we should not say there were not. But in Sir Tumin's report he said that "increasing the number of prisoners without increasing the number of staff is greatly damaging to morale and upsets attempts at rehabilitation; allows prisoners to plot against the authorities and make it almost impossible for prison staff to maintain proper control."

This is a lack of policy. Or this is a specific policy that is a bad policy—the policy of increasing the number of prisoners without increasing the number of staff. How can a responsible member of government tell us that the very report that was done by their authority does not suggest that there was a lack of coherent policy? A coherent policy would have recognised the fact that you cannot increase the number of prisoners without increasing the number of staff. It should not have taken a PhD to see that this would create a problem.

How long has this type of situation been allowed to exist? Why do you need someone to come in and do a study in order to correct the problem if the people responsible for managing the problem had the ability to manage the problem in the first place? If they said that they had the ability and they did not recognise these problems, then they are telling us that they were not concerned.

One interesting point the honourable Chief Secretary seems compelled to talk about was the fact that the political government was not as receptive to these difficulties which express a lack of coherent policies. This was not taken seriously by government. Well, whom can he blame for that? He has to blame the Leader of Government Business, Madam Speaker—the Leader of Government Business, the Minister of Tourism, and other ministers that comprise the Executive Council. If the Chief Secretary is talking about the lack of direction, or the lack of resolve, then he is talking about the lack of resolve of the National Team Government—the government that has been in power in this country since the first report was made by Mr. Gibbard, the government in power since 1992; the government in power in 1999 when the riots took place!

He must be talking about them. He certainly is not talking about the First Elected Member for George Town who voted in Finance Committee for additional money so that they could build additional cellblocks, although I realised that that type of policy (believing that incarceration is the solution to the problem) is ludicrous. Unless there is a serious attempt to minimise the numbers that go to prison and the numbers that return to prison we will always have an overcrowded prison.

Where are we going to get the money to continue to build all these prisons to hold all these people so that his prisons are not over crowded? so that he can say when there is a problem it was not caused by overcrowding? It's very easy to say the problem was caused by overcrowding. And we can understand the role overcrowding has played. But why did the government that controls Public Works Department, that has voted so much money for capital expenditure in this country, that has built so many roads, spent so little money on prisons?

Why has the government that is responsible, that has a central responsibility to ensure the safety and security of its citizens as far as possible, spent money on roads but not on prisons? Because it's politically popular to deal with that which is more popular—that, being roads. When you have a few thousand people complaining about the roads, spend some money on the roads and the people will love you.

But, hey, you have 300 prisoners and nobody cares about what happens to those prisoners until they break out and burn the prison down. Then government jumps up to say we can now spend money and be politically expedient still. That is what the First Official Member has exposed. He has exposed the hypocrisy of the government! Government knew that the policies at Northward Prison were incoherent. Government knew all along it was playing with fire.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Preach brother!

Dr. Frank McField: They knew! He told them. He brought people in here to suggest that the fire would burn the buildings: yet, that government paid no attention to the warning. He cannot protect them by sharing the blame. I refuse to take any part of the blame for what happened at Northward Prison.

In the Tumin report it says, "The dormitory on phase 1 held about 60 prisoners. This is gross overcrowding and should be divided into cells for no more than two men each." This is a policy.

What is a policy? Maybe we need to get the dictionary and look up the word "policy." Policy is procedure, the way of doing things. The policy doesn't necessarily have to be a written policy; it is also what you do. Are you going to tell me that putting people in this kind of condition, knowing that under any normal circumstance it would lead to riots, was a coherent policy? Huh? What are you telling me?

I have information that speaks to overcrowding. I got it off the Internet. It's called "Brand New Prison, Same old Problem." Okay? Now, if this is so, wouldn't the Chief Secretary's office have had access to this one or two years ago? Do we need to have a riot for someone to come here and tell us that overcrowding would cause a riot? What I am saying is basic, Madam Speaker.

The policy of overcrowding was a policy of the National Team Government. The policy of keeping prisoners in that kind of condition is part of the prison policies of the National Team Government, which led to riots at the prison. Now, how are you going to deal with that? You can blame the prisoners, of course. But they are incarcerated. You can blame members of the Legislative Assembly for not voting money, but, like I said, government has come here and done boiler-room politics to achieve everything for Cayman Airways and for this and that, how come the government couldn't come here and do some boiler-room politics and achieve some money for Northward Prison?

Northward Prison became what Northward Prison is because of the lack of concern!

Mr. Roy Bodden: You sound like a true Pentecostal now!

Dr. Frank McField: And now, we are going to tell members of this House that when they debate a motion on Northward Prison they should not, in framing that debate, bring into that debate the fact that government lacks coherent policies in regard to Northward Prison, meaning policies that would have prevented such occurrences.

It's good that this country is called wealthy. But at a time when we are talking about wages, the role which low wages and bad housing plays in creating juvenile crime, we are talking about overcrowding in our communities and in the homes of our communities. And we have no solution to this problem. But we are expected to find a solution to overcrowding at Northward Prison.

Maybe the overcrowding at Northward Prison would not have happened in the first place if we had taken care of the housing problems in our communities—at least from 1992 onwards since the National Team Government has been in power. The way of addressing the housing problems has gotten worse since then. We can also blame juvenile delinquency on overcrowding in the homes, just like the good First Official Member has blamed the problems of riots and overcrowding at Northward Prison. What is being done to address the problem of overcrowding in our community?

The prison is a reflection of our society, whether or not we like it. If we study the persons in our prison, we will understand some of the things that are wrong with us also. The mere fact that the majority of us never end up in prison does not necessarily mean there is nothing wrong with us. Because many of us are parents, the fact that there is something wrong with us could assist in making something drastically wrong with our children who grow up to be adults in Northward Prison.

As I look at the kids coming from the Marine Institute to the Juvenile Court, . . . a few Friday's ago I was out there and had some conversations with some of the young people. Where are they going? The lock-up in West Bay is filled with these juveniles. These juveniles are being socialised to accept these conditions as normal. They are candidates for Northward. You need to build more cellblocks still, and you will keep building cell blocks—

Mr. Roy Bodden: True! It's like Gresham's Law.

Dr. Frank McField: —until you come to realise why these kids are being produced.

We cannot have a government that says this part is the official part, no accountability, no integration with the so-called accountable political non-official part. There has to be some kind of communication between education and the question of national security.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True, but they can't see that.

Dr. Frank McField: How can you say the educational system is successful if you have national security questions resulting from the breakdown of social order in your society? The education institution makes sure that if the parents haven't done their job the state will now do its job. How can you have a country . . . only God's blessing has allowed us to survive this long.

But I see that young people are becoming more aggressive.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Militant!

Dr. Frank McField: More militant. And this frightens me.

I asked one of the young men, "Don't you all have respect for anyone or anything?"

"No sir! Why should we respect you or anybody else? You never helped us."

One of them said that he could never have had as hard a life as he has had. I tried to convince him that I had a hard time in my life. But as far as he was concerned, his life is hard. This is where we go wrong.

We try to tell young people that their lives are good, and our life was hard. It's all subjective. Because I went and had to pull grass, and walk barefooted on iron shore, and fought the mosquitoes . . . I might want to say that was hard. But the child today believes that his life is hard too, relatively speaking, with him comparing his life with better off children and people in this society. They are not comparing their lives with my grandfather's life. They are comparing their lives with their better off, middle-class, and upper-middleclass peers.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Tell it, man. Tell it!

Dr. Frank McField: If we cannot see that we cannot have coherent policies in the prison without coherent policies in education, social rehabilitation and so forth and so on . . . the whole system has to work together, has to rely on each other.

The mere fact that we are discussing Northward Prison means that we are discussing the problem at a particular stage of manifestation. But the useful discussion (although the honourable Speaker is not fond of my rambling all over the place, as he calls it) the useful way of looking at every problem is to see the interconnections. This is how I was taught—the interdisciplinary approach—from the time I went to college. They started back in the 1960s because it was fashionable talking about the interdisciplinary approach because we realised that everything influences everything.

If the school fails, the police have to take over. When the police get involved, the judicial system will have to take over. And we hear people preaching that we know the judiciary is independent. Well, sure they are, but they are not living in space someplace. Right? Although they are independent, you can still talk to independent people. Independence does not mean that they do not recognise the interdependency between the police system, the community system, the judicial system and the prison system.

I am quite sure that the judiciary in this country has done more to put forward coherent policies in regard to incarceration and rehabilitation than has been put forward by the portfolio responsible for that, or by the government that surrounds that portfolio.

There was some talk about Magistrate Ramsey-Hale's suggestions. And I had the opportunity to speak to her on the street. I more or less said that I thought it was good what she had to say. It's always refreshing. And she wanted me to know that it wasn't political. I said that I knew it wasn't political because it is very often in this country that we regard anything that might seem critical to be political. But I just wanted to say that the judiciary can be independent but can still contribute to the general development of principles that will enhance the safety and security of the community.

What she was saying was (as I understand it) that we always want government to get involved in solutions. But we need to have people solutions. We need to have people empowered to believe that they can make solutions. But we are not going to have people empowered without teaching them how to become empowered. We cannot have this arrogant attitude that they should know. We are living in a different world and we need to help people come into this world and be empowered.

The Cayman Islands has made a transition. Things have changed. The way we do things has changed. And there are some people who feel very powerless. Therefore, involving them is an art in patience itself. We have to look on all fronts for solutions to this problem.

Certainly, we have to realise that we are not going to go backwards with social problems. The social problems in this country have now developed to the degree where they will perpetuate themselves. Criminals will beget criminals, who will beget criminals. The cycle of crime has begun. It will not go away. Therefore, the state has to face the awesome responsibility of dealing with this problem in a not-so-gentle manner.

The gentle arm of the state must continue, that is, education, social welfare assistance where necessary. But the more violent arm of the state must begin to show that the state is omnipotent and willing to go to the final extreme in order to guarantee the safety and security of its citizens. We need a prison system that shows that persons can be locked down, deprived of all power, and that the only way they can get that power is to cooperate. In other words, incarceration has to be the act of taking away all that the individual has been given by society. We cannot take away what God has given the individual because we are not that kind of Omnipotent. We dare not do that. But we can take away everything that has been bestowed on that individual by the society, and only when that individual shows that he or she is going to cooperate do we begin to restore these things.

They said there were coherent policies at Northward Prison. Why is it now that this director of prisons has come here? And he has what I consider to be coherent policies, sensible policies. If he is going to talk about a wing in the prison where he is going to begin restoring privileges, that's basically what I am talking about. You take all the privileges away because the rights come from the society, and you restore those rights as they restore back their cooperation. Break it down. It's not all that difficulty.

If they were so aware of these things, how come we didn't have people at least expounding on those things? It's not that difficult to organise a prison. It's not. We go back to Hobbes, I think it is, and talk about the pleasure and the pain principle.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Leviathan.

Dr. Frank McField: Yes, we go back to that.

The person who is in jail wants to minimise pain. He doesn't commit a crime because he loves pain; he commits a crime because he thinks he can get away with it. So, when you catch him and put him in jail, that's a pain. It hurts when somebody locks you up, puts handcuffs on you, and takes away all your physical strength. They bind you, they hold you down; they do to you what they could do to a horse. They come back and ask if you are ready to cooperate. And it's up to you. If you don't cooperate, you get more of that.

When you start to respond to them, they start to respond to you. It's the old psychological trapped rat experiment—stimulus and response.

Hey! We could develop a rehabilitative programme. I haven't heard anyone talk about it on that particular level. But I am speaking about it to show that it's not far away from Caymanians to conceive of how to rehabilitate Caymanians. We don't have to get them from the UK. Our problem is that we never look towards our own people. That is why I am so hurt by the fact that the Chief Secretary would go over to Turks and Caicos and not invite one of his Caymanians on this side to go along.

It would have been useful to have the opportunity. We do work for the people too. We might not be official-dom, but we are some kind of "dom."

[laughter]

Dr. Frank McField: We shouldn't get to that level and then turn around and try to put blame on me too for what happened. I have been writing about prisons and talking about prisons and suggesting things all along.

You can tell by the way I am talking that the Chief Secretary wasn't really serious when he wrote me that letter after my Public Eye programme dealing with Northward Prison, saying that he would like me to give him my rehabilitative programme for Northward Prison. The Chief Secretary actually wrote me a letter like that, Madam Speaker, and I felt that he was being sarcastic. And I didn't take it as a genuine letter because he comes here in this Legislative Assembly and he could have followed up on that letter if he so wanted to. He was being fresh because he didn't feel it was right for me to be making remarks about Northward Prison.

Mr. Roy Boddan: What's that old Jamaican term?

Dr. Frank McField: That is why we have no rehabilitative development because it needs to be a collective thing. And that is what my motion was asking for in its resolve on 2 August. It was asking that government make available plans for addressing the matter of crime in the society, "AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that any such plan evolve out of dialogue with elected members of the Legislative Assembly." It evolves out of the dialogue just like he is now wishing that this motion will help to evolve some type of solution to this thing. Yet, government never spoke to the motion I brought on 2 August.

I brought it on 2 August and the riot started in September. What a coincidence! If the riots had happened before I brought that motion, government would have spoken. But it goes to show that only when the fire starts do they start moving. They are not going to move before the fire and the brimstone. Why? They're comfortable. Nobody is doing anything to them. They are making their money. They are doing their business.

If something happens with the police or the prison it means that's another government—not their government, another government. So, we have the so-called official government and we have the political government, and the official government . . . I don't know.

No, no, no. If something happens on the streets of this country, the Minister of Tourism and the Minister of Education are as much to answer to the public as anyone else because government is a collective Institution. It's not an individual thing. They have collective responsibility for what happens at the prison. It's not just the Chief Secretary; it's the Chief Minister too. It's the Leader of Government Business. He's responsible too.

So, when we come to discuss this thing with Northward Prison, because we feel that we are now settled down and there are those who say everything is back to normal . . . well I know what has happened. We have a director who is extremely articulate and versed in the modern rehabilitative sciences. He's businesslike and gets things done. He's a no nonsense person, obviously. He comes in here and says if we want him to do it, this is what we have to do, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. Things move along.

When they get another director, they have to ensure he has some of the abilities of this director. Communication is important in any institution. Because people are prisoners doesn't mean that you don't have to give them explanations. And that's another thing mentioned in the report in regard to parole. People are asking about their parole. Nobody had any answers for them. It's the Chief Secretary's office again. Look in the Gibbard Report. It talks about the fact that the communication process—not just between that office and the persons in charge of the prison, but with the prisoners themselves, the parole board . . . the people responsible for the parole system did not even feel it necessary to give certain prisoners explanations as to why they could not be paroled.

I have a letter here about the discrepancies in the parole system. Somebody brought it to me before the riots, asking why certain people were being given parole and some were not. See? It's all on Northward Prison paper.

I am not going to get involved in that, but I think it shows that there were people who were dissatisfied with the way in which parole was granted by the lack of explanation as to why certain people were not given parole. If the policies were so well developed, how come they did not find a way of letting these people know what the parole board's standards or policies were? If any.

The idea that we needed a riot at Northward Prison, we needed somebody to come in and do a study, and we needed to get a new director in order to know that if you keep people from foreign countries, like Jamaica for instance, on long sentences where they feel they do not have the same right to parole as local persons, they will feel discriminated against and become resentful and agitate in order to create a very unhealthy environment . . . we don't need people with PhD's or people from superior countries to tell us, I think we all know that when we are treated unfairly, or have the perception that we are treated unfairly, we don't think nice things about the people we believe are responsible for that treatment.

The lack of a coherent policy in regard to parole was one of the main reasons why the occurrences took place at Northward Prison. It is now being addressed. But the reason it is being addressed is because it was recommended before the riots that it be addressed. It took the riots to create the urgency in order for those persons to get their answer.

In the May 13 1999 report by Mr. Gibbard, he talks about “the five hostage takers had apparently reached the end of their tether trying to get some explanation for the parole system including letters to government officials which were not answered.” They were not answered. It's in the report.

How can government come here and amend this motion? How can they do that? It's almost like corruption to even dare to do something like that when the very confidential report—confidential until some member of this House found a way to flush it out (otherwise we would have no basis to say the policies lacked coherency)—stated the policies lacked coherency. Give an explanation of the parole system, please, to the five hostage takers. Five people took two hostages, I believe to get an explanation. You calmed the situation, got the hostages back, said you put the situation back to normal and you gave no explanation even to the people who demanded an explanation and went so far as to take hostages. You don't think an explanation is important to them?

You don't think the fire will blaze again? You are not prepared for a riot when all of the signs and signals were that they were willing to use extreme measures to get the attention of the general public in regard to these incoherent, unacceptable ways of behaving by the prison authorities in this country? Of course you know, if you know human behaviour. Of course you know, if you know some of the psychology and sociology of the particular group you are dealing with that you are going to have riot and rebellion.

There should have been people who had the ability to assess individuals and their potential to be disruptive. If you can't even do that, how can you assess whether or not someone should be paroled? What kind of assessment system do we have? We have to have a scientific approach to these situations and only when we have a scientific approach would we call it good management.

The first report was done in 1994—two years after the National Team took power. And while on their watch, the prison was burned. The country will be paying for that for years. When November comes and people vote, I hope they remember the price that bad management, or the lack of coherent management at Northward Prison has cost them.

Already in 1996 there were 242 males, 80 over the certified accommodation of 162. The riots happened in 1999. How can somebody now say that the cause of the riots was overcrowding? Of course it was overcrowding! But the fact is they should have seen that the overcrowding was significant enough to create the disorder.

In the Gibbard Report it says, “The Chief Secretary's office needs to offer more constructive support and encouragement, not to constantly give the impression that they are merely looking for a scapegoat when things go wrong.”

I am not saying this, Madam Speaker. I am reading from a report.

We can say that the person who did this report has something personally wrong with him. But I think they hired that person and they should at least, because they spent the people's money, make sure they give some type of attention to this. When a professional studies a problem and gives it to somebody who is not professional in the same field it's like throwing pearls to swine—it's a waste! That's what happened here. If you look at this report, the person has told you this is what is going to happen.

If there was no money directed toward the prison, are we being told then that Executive Council does not take the suggestions of the Chief Secretary seriously when supported by a professional report, are you saying that he did all he could to get the Leader of Government Business to spend more money at the prison, yet they did not come here with their budget in order to do so? And even if they did come with some little things that they were so incapable of giving the proper explanation for why they were doing it that they couldn't get the support they needed in this particular case?

They were not concerned about Northward Prison. They were not concerned about developing coherent policies that would have prevented the situation from occurring.

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a convenient time to take the morning break? Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.18 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.45 AM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town continuing.

Dr. Frank McField: In a speech by the honourable Chief Secretary on 16 March, he said there was no use in the Third Elected Member for West Bay calling for his resignation because the Governor would not be interested in entertaining that motion. I remember that when I went up to Northward Prison when the prison was still burning (30 September/1 October), and I did a live TV interview with the Third Elected Member for West Bay, I said that I believed the Chief Secretary should (at that time) consider resigning his position with the Cayman Islands Government because he was ultimately responsible for what ever had taken place.

Now, that doesn't mean that I was suggesting that he was responsible in the sense that he actively participated in doing the wrong that was done. It is quite obvious that the wrong had been done by the inmates at Northward Prison. What I was saying was that it appeared to me that the Chief Secretary's office was not interested in receiving creative suggestions from the backbench in regard to the management at Northward Prison. And in having that approach, that we should not meddle. And the many times I suggested they have a rehabilitative officer, I understand that might be coming into play now. But that was based upon the fact that I as a member of the public and as a Member of the LA was shocked, and felt that I had been made impotent by that sight.

I guess I had to have some kind of reaction to the situation. And it was, who should have given us the warning that something like this would happen? And who carried out the negotiation with the hostage takers? Therefore, who, by virtue of how that situation was resolved, set up the conditions for subsequent disobedience with the whole idea that first felt could be successful? If we are going to say that government is responsible for these institutions, then we must find some individual in government who is responsible. We just can't say "the government," we are talking about the individual who heads that particular responsibility.

I could have said that the National Team Government should resign, but I know they wouldn't because they feel they were elected and that no one other than the people should make the decision as to whether or not they continue to occupy that privilege. Whereas in the case of the honourable Chief Secretary, I felt that because he was appointed to that position that that appointment should be terminated because the end result was obviously not pleasant, and very costly to the country and lives could have been lost as a result. We were just fortunate that no lives were lost.

But that person cannot then very arrogantly stand in this Legislative Assembly and boast that the Governor is giving him full support. If the Governor is giving him full support . . . and we have not heard of anyone being cautioned or counseled in regard to what has happened. The people, although they don't vote for that office, still should have some say in what happens in that office simply because that office is responsible for the most central responsibilities, that of taking care of the security and safety of our citizens. That was why I said that, not because of any personal reason.

I did not continue to elaborate on that request over a certain amount of time because I felt that if the Governor was going to respond to what I said, I would not have to say it ten times and politicize it. I said it because I felt that it was correct at the time. But I was not going to make politics out of it forever and ever. So I didn't mention it again in here.

As I saw the way the honourable First Official Member behaved toward the Third Elected Member for West Bay in regard to the fact that the voters in West Bay had already decided what they were going to do with that member—as far as I am concerned mixing up politics. I felt that was related to the call by the Third Elected Member for West Bay calling for the First Official Member's resignation. Since I had been one of the original parties who called for that as well, I felt like some kind of traitor.

I have shown that he is part of a collective institution and it's their job to see that the safety and security of the citizens is well taken care of. When you have people rioting and burning the prison, and breaking out of prison, we cannot be assured that that safety and security is being taken care of. Therefore, the person who has responsibility for it has to be replaced by someone we think would be better capable of doing that. That was the general idea, because that's what happens in the private sector.

If my company lost $2 million just like that, then we would want the chief executive officer of that company to hand in his resignation. People in the private sector have to pay penalties when on their watch these types of errors occur. The fact that they are not answerable to anyone, the fact that not even a member of the Legislative Assembly can get up and say something without being criticised by them and mixing up in the politics of this country . . . and nobody chastises them? Nobody says it's not right?

I know that on the streets right now a lot of people are talking about the Third Elected Member for West Bay in a negative way because of what that member said.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, can we move on from that discussion which took place prior to today? Thank you.

Dr. Frank McField: I will move on because politics is best done outside this House. But, I need to remind certain people that they are not beyond the scrutiny and criticism of the people because of officialdom. When we get into that kind of dictatorship, where the very people that are responsible for our safety and security cannot be questioned about the way in which they are handling it, then we are in dangerous state. We are in a dangerous situation when I cannot question the person responsible for my protection. Nonsense!

I felt that I had to deal with that particular issue. And I thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing the emotions to flow.

I would like to read the conclusion of a report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, to consolidate my position:

"Frequently am asked whether I am optimistic or pessimistic about the future as far as treatment and conditions of prisoners are concerned. I always reply that I am optimistic for three reasons, two of which I mentioned in my last report as priceless advantages which gave the British Prison Service a head start in the laudable and imminent achievable end set by the previous home secretary as being regarded as the best in the world.

“The first remains the quality and dedication of so many of its staff, and the thousands of volunteers who devote so much of their time and effort to a whole host of tasks without which the many good things in prison would not happen. In survey after survey the job that is deemed to involve the highest level of stress is that of prison officer. And I can see why, faced with the rise in the numbers and cuts in resources with which to work with, I am amazed at what they continue to achieve and their determination to go on doing it. This is not the moment we might say that we can do better, this is the time to pay public tribute to them for the way in which they carry out the immensely difficult and demanding task on behalf of the public.

“The second remains the programme set out in custody care and justice designed to take the prison service into the next century which if actioned and resourced could improve the current situation out of all recognition. This plus exciting developments such as the introduction of service level agreements could transform the ability of the prison service to carry out the second part of its statement of purpose, namely, to prepare prisoners to live a law abiding life on release.

“The third is the evidence of growing recognition that the prisons must not be considered in isolation, but in relation to the remaining criminal justice system. This is not just for reasons of cost, but of greater efficiency. It simply does not make sense for those who have a part to play in influencing the treatment and conditions of prisoners to keep their part to themselves and not share it with those who are also involved. I believe that the trend will be set by the government’s drive on improving youth justice, because the improvements outlined not only demand a multidisciplinary approach, but simply will not come about unless all involved genuinely share their responsibilities and work together. From that beginning the principle of joint working can be spread to other areas.

“Of course, there are problems. And the prison system remains overcrowded and under resourced. I believe that the efforts of this can be mitigated by different management structures and procedures. But that is because I have had a lifetime’s experience in such a structure, using such procedures and know that they work. To me the principle problem facing not just prisons nor the criminal justice system alone, but the nation as a whole is a nature of society from which all too many of those committed to our prisons come and to which they will return. The level of unemployment and lack of job experience, the numbers evicted, truancy from schools leading to appalling lack of basic literary and numeracy, let alone for the educational skills; the numbers of drug and other substance abusers; chaotic home conditions characterised by the break-up of families and the dreadful amount of sexual and physical abuse inflicted on children by parents and close relatives. All these are statistics about which we should be alarmed and ashamed.

“Prisons cannot do anything about the cause except hope that the standards they are able to impart on prisoners by the way they are treated during their time inside will contribute to stemming, if not reversing the tides. Conditions that encompass the sort of chaotic life that all too many adopt are conditions that encourage lawbreaking and antisocial behaviour which in turn are the conditions giving rise to the increased numbers being committed to our prisons which makes such huge demand on public purse. Only the public can stop them.

“My frustration as Chief Inspector of the treatment and conditions of prisoners is that I know how much more prison staff could do to protect the public by tackling re-offending if they had the right level of resources. On their behalf, on behalf of the public they serve, I hope that these will soon be estimated and granted so that their service to the nation can be enhanced.”

Madam Speaker, many of the issues the Inspector of Prisons in Great Britain has highlighted . . . and this was actually taken off the Internet on 30 September 1999 about the time in which we were having the riots. The philosophy in here, which I guess will be the philosophy of a new prison director if he comes from England, is that the job of a prison officer is a very stressful job. If that is so, we should recognise that here also.

The lack of attention by the Chief Secretary’s office created the depreciation of morale at the prison. We understand that the treatment of the prison system in isolation is also not going to do us any good. We need the criminal justice system involved; we need commitment from the education system and other systems. These are points I have been trying to make.

The Inspector also mentioned the chaotic home conditions characterised by the breakup of families and the “dreadful amount of sexual and physical abuse inflicted on children by parents and close relatives.” Domestic violence is an important issue in terms of preparing the foundation for the genesis of the criminal.

If overcrowding is a problem, and they all speak to it, we also see how we will not just be able to solve that overcrowding from the rehabilitation programme in prison, we will have to have rehabilitation programmes in society as a whole. I hope that will be borne in mind when I ask for a complete government strategy and not just a prison strategy because as the Inspector said it has to be an integrated multidisciplinary approach.

You cannot have a successful prison programme without it being a multidisciplinary approach. We have to have the justice system, the youth justice system, the government and everything involved. We don’t just want a report outlining what should be done at Northward Prison and says nothing about what should be done at John Gray High School or in Windsor Park where I live, and gangs are beginning to grow ever so rapidly.

I hope that I have brought to the attention of those concerned the fact that government should be accountable, that government is accountable to the people for what happens in the country at least in regard to the management procedures. Therefore, it is not good enough for persons to try to make it as if this is not a political issue. This is a political issue. We are dealing with the policies of the country. We are dealing in this particular instance with a very important central responsibility of government.

When I come into a situation, I like to speak my mind about it. I know that a lot of people feel that our constitutional instrument is perfect as is. But somehow there has to be a relationship between the breakdown in social control in this country and constitutional responsibility of government as defined by the Constitution.

I think that the Immigration Department, the Police Department, and the Prison Department should come under the direction of an elected member who is responsible to the public for whatever failures or successes. I think that security and safety is too important to be in the hands of someone who has no responsibility to the general public. I think it is time that we looked at this. It's like the old argument that we can't have a Caymanian head of the Police Department because if we did, we very childish Caymanians will do our families favours and be worse off than if we have someone totally different.

I love the Commissioner of Police we have. I think he's a very good person. But that doesn't mean a Caymanian could not be good at the job and we cannot have a Caymanian for the job unless we give the Caymanian the idea that he or she needs to develop for the job. If there's no job there, no one will aspire to develop to the position of that job.

But that old thing that if we had control of internal security in this country we would do such a bad job, that we poor subjects should not be given responsibility for our own security because we are not civilised and responsible or mature enough to be trusted with internal security. I can't in good conscience support that ideology which makes me inferior to somebody else. The fact that I challenge the idea has to do with the basic ideological reasons for its existence in the first place is no longer sound in the 21st century when we talk about being the fifth largest financial centre in the world, where we have a Financial Secretary who is a Caymanian, but we can't have a person responsible for the internal security of the country by way of the police [commissioner] being Caymanian.

I would like the prison to end up with a Caymanian director of prison. I would like to see an attempt made to encourage and train Caymanians to be prison officers. I believe that at the end of it all we are going to have certain problems at the prison as a result of importing prison officers from Britain. I believe that the job of social control can be done much better when people can't use differences in race or culture or nationality to point at and say it's been unfair discrimination. We know how people are. They use every difference in order to prove that point when they feel they did not get the best of the situation.

We are playing into the hands of these kinds of situations. We are going to ask prisoners to accept somebody from England coming to be their jailers. A lot of these prisoners already believe that they are in jail because of injustices. They will tell you the reason they believe those injustices exist. We won't help the rehabilitation process by intensifying the conflicts. They are too visual, too obvious. And if those UK officers are not handpicked and come here with any of the racial and national prejudice that we know exist in the UK—I know, I lived there. Most intelligent British people will tell you that racial and national prejudice exists in their society. We might then be putting them in a situation that will only intensify the conflicts, the grievances. At the end of the day we might not only have riots, we might have people getting physically hurt. We don't want that.

There has been no proof that the cultural dynamics have been mitigated. The same cultural dynamics that created the organisation to deal with grievances is still there. The prisoners from Jamaica helped to organise the Caymanians, and the fact we are dealing with gangs going to prison and coming back from prison means that we already have an organisational structure in the prison resisting certain types of policies and programmes. All of these things must be borne in mind when making these decisions.

If they are going to resist these people coming into their country, into their jail and taking over, and if there is any support from the other prison officers it will divide the prison staff again and will put the prisoners in a position to take advantage of this division. It will undermine the system.

We are so quick to run off to find solutions to our problems, to import them. We import everything including ideas. I wrote that in a little story a long time ago. Why is it that we haven't increased the prison officers' pay? The Inspector of Prisons said what a stressful job it is. Nobody really wants to work in a prison. What if we paid the prison officers more? Increase the incentive to become a prison officer. Help Caymanians take over the job of being jailers because it's only when Caymanians become their own jailers that Caymanians will feel justified.

If you are punished and you do not accept your punishment . . . that's why confession is important. We confess to Christ because in confessing we accept the fact that there is a penalty. But for the person who feels it's not worthwhile confessing—because the people to whom he is confessing are the people he is confessing against—we are going to create a problem with a psychological transition of acceptance of what you have done wrong in order to improve what you are and who you are.

I say that it could be a very dangerous move to bring in these prison officers from the UK. It could be. The UK has problems with West Indians in their prisons. Serious problems in Brixton Prison and other prisons.

Once people get into that situation they see race as significant. When they begin to use their gang mentality and culture in order to take advantage of that situation and gain sympathy from people on the outside with a similar resentment, the two combine. The prison becomes something very different. I am trying to paint the picture because some people do not want to accept certain social realities in this society and they need to be more careful about who they choose.

If we could find a way to evolve a Caymanian to take over the prison system as quickly as possible, it would be cheaper. They are getting to the point where they are going to try to do the same thing with the prison system that they do with the police system. We are going backwards. We are going backwards because the people responsible for making these decisions are not politicians, and don't feel they should be accountable to the public. I believe it's time the public had some say in how the security and safety of the citizens is dealt with. I believe it is time that those functions became accountable to the public as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you.

I rise to offer my contribution on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, entitled Concerns with Occurrences at Northward Prison. Let me start by saying that I listened intently to the honourable First Official Member in regard to the new initiatives that are in the works to address the issues at Northward Prison. I listened to his attempt to pour oil on troubled waters, to defuse the volatile situation in this country that has been created by the incidents at Northward Prison on 30 September and 1 October last year.

If you want to see a perfect example of crisis management, this is one. I will support my argument as I go along. We have had reports by experts on the prison. We have had recommendations from these experts. We have had numerous questions and debates expressing concern relating to Northward Prison. Like so many other things in this country, we really don't take any note until we have a crisis. A crisis in this case that not only cost us a great deal of money, but a great deal of unnecessary concern in regard to personal safety.

Action is now in the process of being taken to appoint a new prison director. Why now? Because they burned down the prison and cost us over $2 million? We are talking about bringing in 12 (maybe it was 24) new prison officers from the UK. I am corrected, Madam Speaker, it's 20. We are now talking about putting provisions in place for the proper training of prison staff. We are now talking about a revision of the parole system. Why now, after it cost us over $2 million?

The incidents on 30 September and 1 October last year at Northward Prison greatly damaged our reputation as a safe, non-violent destination where residents and visitors alike can boast of being and feeling safe. This same issue was raised by one of the experts in his report dated April 1994. It's the report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for England and Wales. Let me just read an excerpt of what he had to say.

"Concerns are with finance and tourism. It has become one of the leading offshore financial centres of the world. More than 500 banks and trust companies are registered here. Most tourists come from the US. There are now large international hotels, restaurants and shops, expensive condominiums and in season enormous cruise ships calling in. We need to remind ourselves of these facts because they effect decisively the need for law and order and security coupled with humanity." That was back in 1994.

Like the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, I felt very angry. I felt impotent because I never, in my wildest imagination, ever though that I would witness that type of incident in this country as I did on 1 October last year. Never! Maybe in Jamaica or one of the other islands it would be no big deal, but here in the Cayman Islands?

I am the same elected representative who called for the reinstatement of capital punishment. One of the comments I heard after the incident was 'thank God nobody got hurt.' Because we allowed it to happen once, do you know what the prisoners are saying now? 'If I don't get what I want, I am going to burn it down again.'

The Police were in place waiting for the order to really take control. That order has to come from the Chief Secretary. That's the officer they were waiting confirmation from. It didn't come. The prison was burned down, and now when we need so many other services and facilities in our respective districts, we have to put aside at least $2 million to replace what was destroyed. The physical destruction is bad enough. But that incident created in this country a reality that we are not practising what we preach. We are not prepared to protect our safety at any cost.

The impression of safety was our greatest asset. If it happened once and had not been repeated, I would say it was an isolated incident. But since that we have had numerous subsequent escapes of convicted murders. You can't blame that on the legislators. When they came here for funds to do renovations at central police station, we gave them the funds to put in place the cells needed. Hopefully they would have taken advice from someone who knew what he was talking about in regard to security and safety. The issue of law and order has become a joke in this country.

If the honourable Chief Secretary had read the reports and taken into consideration what was recommended, I think we could have headed off that particular incident at Northward Prison. When I read the report of His Honour Sir Stephen Tumin on October 1999, and I just want to read under "What Happened." It says: [Please see attached Appendix]

There was evidence of a problem there from April 1999. But no actions were taken. Let me deal with a couple of recommendations made by the expert in his report. On page 5 of the Report of April 1994 it says, "There is inadequate drug counselling, especially for a prison where the majority of inmates have been involved with drugs. Reasons were not given for refusal of parole." This is 1994, Madam Speaker! "Very little staff training has taken place here for a number of years."

"We believe that education has not been given the prominence it deserves in this regime. We believe there should be an education grant in the budget." This was in 1994, Madam Speaker!

"At least one more classroom should be built or otherwise provided. Prison teachers should be paid on a regular scale. They are as qualified as outside teachers and work longer hours without regular holidays and work under conditions of some stress." This was in 1994, Madam Speaker!

I remember speaking to Mr. McIntyre. Because of his concern for assisting those prisoners who didn't have the academics he thought they needed to survive in society he attempted on his own . . . and that situation existed for a number of years with very little support from the Education Department, the Chief Secretary's office, or any other related office in government.

On page 11 it says, "We were not impressed by the range of work or opportunities for exercise. Apart from the farm, the kitchen, the laundry, and education, we were not impressed by the level of activities available and recommend more vocational training and education courses." I would like to ask the honourable First Official Member if he took that into consideration. Has there been a provision in the budget for education at the prison since 1994? I don't think so.

We had problems identified over the years, but nothing was really done. Staff training was not a high priority. In the report of October 28 1999 it says, "Staff training should be given a much higher priority. Since my first visit in 1994, there are many recommendations that I made that still have not been implemented by line management or government. The staff at Northward Prison lack motivation and do not feel supported by the Chief Secretary's office or by government. The Chief Secretary's office needs to offer more constructive support and encouragement and not to constantly give the impression they are merely looking for scapegoats when things go wrong." Now, this is an expert on prisons, not John Jefferson, Jr. from West Bay.

The sad part is, this gentleman was paid for his services. He said, "I think it's time that prison needs are taken more seriously and that money is directed towards the institution. However, carrying out investigations is a waste of time if recommendations are not implemented." We have had no shortage of expert advice in this country. What have we done with it?

And now the First Official Member comes here and tries to share blame? Humph! I know one member who's not going to take any blame, and that's me! I am not taking any blame because as an elected representative I have always supported things I felt were necessary.

Like the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said, as far as the Finance Committee was concerned, that was not the direction we wanted to go. We needed the whole system, including the courts, to look at alternatives to prison for our young people. We are talking about them now—probation, community service. Let's create a society of convicted criminals. Do you know what that does? When one pays for his crime at Northward Prison, when he gets out he attempts to get on with living an honest, upright life in the community. In most instances, there are very few opportunities to do that. This is why a lot of our prisoners at Northward Prison—and the majority are young Caymanians—are repeat offenders.

I am not taking the blame. That gentleman was given the responsibility for prisons. If anything goes wrong, he's the man who needs to be held responsible.

Madam Speaker, I am going on to another area, and I will be a little while. I don't know if you want to take the lunch break now, and I can continue when we resume.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.47 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.40 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. The Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I mentioned in my opening remarks that the present dealings at Northward Prison by the Chief Secretary is a perfect example of crisis management. I also feel that the incident on 30 September and 1 October could have been prevented if the honourable member had taken appropriate action when he was warned that there were signs of pending trouble.

One thing I have never been accused of is of being personal with anything I do. I call things as I see them. You might not like it, but that's how I am. Over the 12 years that I have been here, I have been able to successfully separate the personal from the political. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town and I are good friends, but I can tell him politically that I don't agree with certain things he says. But that doesn't mean that I am going to come to that conclusion because he did something to me personally.

Some people in this world believe they are above criticism, reproach, and correction. In my debate on the Throne Speech, I called for the responsibilities such as prison and police to be put under an elected minister of government. The reason is because if an elected minister messes up the general public can deal with him in four years' time. The same situation does not hold true for official members. But they have responsibilities that affect you and I on a daily basis. But they don't have to answer to anyone. They don't go to the polls every four years. We do.

On 1 October 1999, the incident that took place damaged this country to what extent only time will tell. The impact that incident will have on our survival [remains to be seen]. It was nothing personal. For example, as you are aware I am a shareholder in two fairly successful businesses in this country. I have general managers who are appointed or employed to take care of running those operations. I enjoy a good relationship with my staff. Socially, anything I can do to assist them, all they have to do is ask, and I do it if it's within my capacity. But they all know that if they mess up I will fire them. They understand that. And because of that we have a very good working relationship. I don't have to go in every morning and check with them, they understand that I am holding them personally accountable for their responsibilities.

On 1 October, I was one of two elected representatives (the other being the Fourth Elected Member for George Town) who felt that the right call was the resignation of the Chief Secretary who was personally responsible for the administration of the prison and the police. It was nothing personal. I think we need a system in this country that allows that kind of action to take place when we have these problems. None of us are infallible. We must all be man enough to be responsible for our actions, or inaction. And be prepared to deal with the consequences.

I called for that resignation based on what I saw take place at Northward Prison, also recognising the impact that would have on our social and economic and financial activities in this country. Nothing personal. I called for it again during my debate on the Throne Speech. I have not changed my mind after reading the expert's reports. I know the efforts and concerns of this Legislative Assembly in regard to what was going on at Northward Prison. It was just a matter of time. But it was caused by the Chief Secretary's office not taking the appropriate recommendations and implementing them to head off what happened.

I still feel the right course of action is . . . if I were in that position, I would have resigned. Nobody would have had to ask me to resign. What I resent, and I trust you will allow me to make a few references . . . what I resent—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, I will allow you to make a few references, once you tie them in with the motion.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I will.

I am calling again for the resignation of the Chief Secretary in this motion. The issue is still Northward Prison.

The Deputy Speaker: How does this tie in with the motion, is my question.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: As part of the policy development. As part of looking at the overall leadership position.

I don't take things personally. But if anyone attempts, by allegations or otherwise, to damage my reputation personally, I take that very seriously indeed. But my calling for the resignation has nothing to do with personality, it has to do with what I see has not happened in regard to Northward Prison by that honourable member.

I resent any reference to the fact that challenges my integrity. I was surprised when that honourable member was debating the Throne Speech, and dealing with Northward Prison, I sat here and listened . . . and he was allowed to do so. I listened to that gentleman attempt to twist the facts concerning the reason why I called for his resignation. I called for it because of exactly what I mentioned in my debate here—he did not address the issue; it cost us over $2 million. Somebody has to pay.

I listened because I couldn't believe what I was hearing when he stated the reasons why I called for his resignation. For him to put forward even the slightest idea that I called for it because he chastised me is the furthest thing from the fact. I made my first call on 1 October. I got a letter from him dated 7 January. One had nothing to do with the other.

Despite his resentment of my being here, I have been here for 12 years as an elected representative of the people. When I deal with an issue from this floor, I am dealing with it from the standpoint of what I believe is in the best interests of the country and people of these islands. It's nothing personal. But for him to attempt to make you or anybody else believe that I called for it other than dealing with the incident at Northward Prison is not correct. I have never under any circumstance ever been associated with anything that I felt—

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Madam Speaker, may I just take a point of order please?

POINT OF ORDER

The Deputy Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I would like to refer you to Standing Order 35 (7) "The conduct of Her Majesty, members of the Royal Family, the Governor, the Presiding Officer, Members, Judges and other persons engaged in the administration of justice or of Officers of the Crown may not be raised or impugned except upon a substantive motion; and in any amendment, question to a Member of the Government or debate on a motion dealing with any other subject any reference to the conduct of any such person is out of order."

I would submit that the Chief Secretary is an officer of the Crown.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, I thank you for pointing out that Standing Order. I was just about to ask the honourable member . . . I had allowed him a few minutes and he was going to combine what he was debating with the motion before us. I am not going to allow debate that has already taken place to be revived. I would ask the Third Elected Member for West Bay to continue his debate on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended.

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker—

The Deputy Speaker: I am not going to entertain any argument on the Standing Orders of Parliament. I appreciate the concern of Fourth Elected Member for George Town. I would ask the Third Elected Member for West Bay to continue his debate, please, dealing with the motion before the House.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: You know, Madam Speaker, why is it that that same honourable minister sat here like everybody else when I was being chastised?

Dr. Frank McField: Exactly!

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, would you take your seat for a minute please?

It is not the intention of this Chair to prolong this argument. I know I must listen to members' reasons, but it is not expected when one member is speaking against what one member has said for another member to get up to protect that member. It is the right of that member who is being chastised, or otherwise, to rise at that time on a point of order and tell the House that this is not the way the situation went.

I now ask the Third Elected Member for West Bay to continue his debate.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I respect your ruling. I don't agree with it, but I respect it. One thing God gave me is patience. I believe in such a thing as justice. Justice will rightly take its course.

Can I talk about myself, Madam Speaker? Or is somebody prepared to rise on a point of order to protect me from talking about myself? Madam Speaker, I really resent . . . I honestly really resent that the same rules do not apply to everybody. Okay? Like I said, I respect your ruling—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, if you would sit for a minute, I have not ruled under the Hon Minister's point of order. I ruled under the Standing Order that does not allow debate to be revived. Can we now drop this and move on with the debate on the motion before us please?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Well, thank you for that clarification Madam Speaker, because I got the impression that you had ruled I couldn't say what I was saying. I think I've said enough. Like I said, time will take care of a lot of things.

Let me point out that I have been wronged wrongfully by people before. As long as I know what I am doing is right, and in the best interest of the people, justice will prevail. I will continue to fight the cause on behalf of the people of this country. It doesn't matter to me who is offended by what I say, or what position I have to take. It doesn't matter if I have to take the position by myself. It really doesn't matter as long as I know that I am doing it in the best interest of this country. What I am doing is right. That's important to me—that I believe what I am doing is right.

I hope that we see the changes necessary in regard to Northward Prison, but I resent the idea that we have to wait . . . and I have been here 12 years. We don't deal with issues until it's a crisis situation and it's going to cost us money or something else. Once it gets everybody's attention, we deal with it. This is a perfect example of that situation.

I trust that the issue of law and safety in this country will be given the seriousness I attach to it by those who are responsible for it. I look forward to seeing what positive changes will be implemented in regard to Northward Prison. But I have other forums available to me to deal with these issues. As I said, I resent any attempt by anyone to cast me in a bad light, especially if it's not true. And that's what has happened to me in this case.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (pause) Does any other member wish to speak? (pause) The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Thank you.

This motion as amended deals with what is a very topical and political matter in the Cayman Islands. It is one that is very important to the Cayman Islands. It is important that we look at the facts of the situation and that we analyse those properly and that we then look at the debate that has been put forward. A lot has been said as to what has caused these problems in the motion and the amending motion and as to what should be done.

If we first look at the report that was done by Sir Stephen Tumin in October 1999, paragraph 11, which says, "Why it happened: The fundamental reason for the trouble has been overcrowding—a major prison evil wherever it occurs." That sets out the fact that the prison itself is overcrowded and one that once it arises is a major prison evil. Therefore, these reports have clearly borne out what the problem is, the major reason being overcrowding.

That is a decision made by a person who is an expert in prison matters. Sir Stephen Tumin was one of the UK Chief Prison Inspectors and he, in my opinion, is in the best position having done a report on this that was called for by the government, by the Legislative Assembly, on the matter, and he has referred in what is not really a very long report to what he regards as the main reason. Therefore, if the problem was overcrowding, as I think everyone has to accept, and a lot has been said about the social aspects or philosophical aspects, the theories relating to this, but this is the fact coming from the person who did the inquiry into these problems at the prison. I think everyone in here needs to accept that as the main reason.

What was government's duty if it was overcrowding? Government's duty was to build more accommodation to house the prisoners. It matters not at this stage how many theories are advanced at why prisoners are in prison. They were there when this government came in, many of them, and they are going to be there are future governments go on. So there is no use in taking the approach that I submit was taken by some members of the opposition, saying that prison accommodation should not be built because the prison should not have had so many prisoners in it.

It has been overcrowded for some time. Government's duty is clearly therefore to build new accommodation. Government has been trying to do this for a very long time. We have put forward on several occasions in Finance Committee votes to build the male cellblock to upgrade the present prison, to extend the prison, and more recently, we have been able to get a decision at looking at acquiring adjoining land. So government clearly is to provide more facilities to avoid the overcrowding.

We brought that to this House on several occasions. I don't expect to go back into every time it was done, but it is recorded that we brought votes for this several times. These were either whittled down by the opposition. And in Finance Committee, the backbench is ten out of 15 members, government becomes five members.

To quote the support of what I am referring to, I want to begin with the debate on Private Member's Motion No. 1/94, Support for Government's Announced Inspection of Northward Prison, the [unedited] Official Hansard Report. An inspection was called for quite awhile back. This is found under a statement . . . (Pause) I had better come back to this to make sure I have the right date. (Pause) It seems to be a Hansard with no page numbers.

[Members' laughter]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Let's go on to see when we put this up much later on in the Standing Finance Committee of 20 April 1998, and really see who supported the prison getting extra accommodation, which is the solution government put forward and those who did not support it.

At page 25, we find where Mr. Roy Bodden said, "So, I have no apologies to make. I am not voting for this $400,000 to go to any cellblock extension at Northward when it could be better spent providing Caymanian school children appropriate and much-needed facilities." Very clearly, that shows no support.

Another quotation on the following page from Mr. John Jefferson, Jr., "I also respect the idea of the Chief Secretary coming here to defend his position and this money for the cellblocks. However, even with that, I am not prepared to support this."

The position at the end, page 44, is Dr. Frank McField (who is asking me to name a few more) voting No on this vote, as well as Mr. McKeever Bush. What ultimately happened on this, from what I remember, is that we attempted to strike some compromise in an effort to get something through. On the division that clearly shows.

The problem therefore, in very simple terms, is that despite what the opposition has tried to say there has been a clear opposition to building more cells at Northward. Therefore, I submit that the problem arises from the fact that there has not been support from the opposition to build further cells at Northward Prison. If we had been permitted back many years ago to put forward and build the necessary cells at Northward Prison to hold the prisoners, the prison riots would not have occurred. The problems at the prison would not have arisen because the expert on this—and he is the expert who did the inquiry in October 1999—stated that the fundamental reason for the trouble was overcrowding which is a major prison evil wherever it occurs.

That, in a very concise way, puts the record straight. The government advanced time and again votes that were either reduced, as in the case of the reference I made earlier, or refused on the basis that the money should go somewhere else. In the end, the cost for that was very heavy on the public in terms of money and worry during that very trying stage when the prison was burned and we had rioting.

Much has been said about whom should be blamed for this. It's easy after the fact (hindsight is 20/20) to point fingers and say that things should have happened. I will give the clearest one: If the male cellblock had been built, then this problem would not have arisen. Throughout the report of the review as well as the Gibbard Report, we find references to the Chief Secretary's office. That is throughout, right from the beginning of the report. It clearly brings out at the end of paragraph 1, at four places to what should be done by the Chief Secretary's office.

The reason for that is once again clear, in that the responsibility as I understand it for prisons had been delegated to the Deputy Chief Secretary who had responsibility for it. In this House obviously the Chief Secretary, or the person acting is the person who would have to answer in the House. Very clearly brought out and actually laid on the Table of this House was a confidential memo from the Deputy Chief Secretary to the Chief Secretary dated 21 May 1999 in which the Deputy Chief Secretary, over quite a few pages, has dealt with the report and with the criticism in that report. In effect, in many ways we find that he too had frustrations about what was happening because he too obviously realised that funds were needed to expand the prison.

In fact, at page 6, in the conclusion he says, "I accept that Northward Prison has not received the level of financial support that increase in level of demands within the institution justifies." So, really, the person with responsibility, the Deputy Chief Secretary himself, in his memo to his superior, the Chief Secretary, has also brought this out. This was back in May 1999, so this would have been about the earlier problems.

In fact, at paragraph (c) . . . (pause) . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, would this be a convenient time to take the afternoon break?

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Thank you, Ma'am.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.30 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.51 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: The position has really been reached where I accept, obviously, that many of the programmes they have in place, the Chief Secretary and Deputy Chief Secretary, are important. Members on the other side of the House obviously have concerns there, and I think everyone does. But a lot has been done in many of these areas. I don't intend to get into them because the Chief Secretary has outlined these. In fact, they have been fully reported in the paper today.

Matters such as education are important. As has been said, the education building is now being put to use for classes. Better security is obviously needed. The reviews being looked at in relation to periods that prisoners remain in, and along with this are the inducements the new prison director has put in place such as a special block in which prisoners who behave and do things can earn the opportunity to go into that block where there is less security and a lot more harmony, I would think, and less crowding.

Like other members here, I have been up to look at the prison. Undoubtedly, it is no good to say that other measures are going to solve the problems of prisoners who are already in prison or who, under the sentencing system, are being sent there. The harsh fact is that there were nearly twice as many prisoners in the prison as it was built to accommodate. My message, because I note that several members talked about other things that should be done, is that that's all well and good. But the reality of the situation was and continues to be that there has to be an extension to avoid the overcrowding.

All of the other things that go along with that are important. But we have had a period here of finger pointing both at people and at government as to where the problem arose. I would say that after we have seen the damage that resulted, which cost far more than it would to have built another cellblock. In fact, I understand that what is planned is a maximum security cellblock that will be going (subject to planning and whatnot) on property adjoining.

But in these reports you will see that I actually tried to get the money through for the male cellblock at that meeting that I read from earlier, 20 April 1998. I tried to get a lot of other things at the time mainly because Finance Committee doesn't have the Chief Secretary in here. I think that's what the Third Elected Member for West Bay was commending the Chief Secretary for—for coming to Finance Committee to deal with it. It was not a subject for either of us here. Some very small things, such as the upgrading of electrical, and some blocks needed exhaust fans to make them more humane . . . in fact, I think that was a vote of only $20,000 for some electrical and fans. That hit resistance in the House.

I guess my message is simply this: It's all right to put forward solutions to problems. But unless you fix the main area of the problem that exists, if that problem of overcrowding had not existed, I could have understood members saying no money for the male cellblock. But it did exist. That was a fact of life. That was undoubtedly what caused the riots.

The House has now appropriated a large part of the funds with the last supplementary appropriation. That should have been done a long time ago. At least now two things have become very clear. First, the Legislative Assembly as a whole has now gone ahead and done what the government over many years has urged be done—build the new male cellblock, upgrade the fencing, upgrade the facilities.

[Inaudible comment by the First Elected Member for George Town]

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: There was money last year to start it, but the riots were—

The Deputy Speaker: Can we stop debating across the floor please?

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Sorry, I was just trying to accommodate the honourable member.

The Deputy Speaker: I am speaking to both members.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Thank you.

The problems arose before that, from the time the first problem started nearly two years back it became obvious what the main problem was. And that problem was clearly borne out, with all due respect, by the Chief Secretary time and time again. I bore it out in the minutes I read from because I was in the House at the time trying to defend government's budget. That vote was slashed.

I don't intend to spend a lot of time on this because I think the simple answer is, first, it is no good to try to blame the government or the chief secretary or the deputy chief secretary when the solution to the problem was clearly put to this House a very long time ago, which was that there was overcrowding and more accommodation was necessary. Rather than members trying to point fingers at government, indeed, this is one time that that finger has turned and clearly pointed to them.

However, pointing fingers doesn't solve the problem. Happily, we have now gotten on to the solution, which is to build more accommodation while trying to reform the sentencing system, reform the community service orders, the many areas of alternative sentencing, and to progress with education and rehabilitation. I think we are now on the right path. We cannot take the view that with the large amount of prisoners in there, and that have always been in there, that overcrowding didn't just start when the riots came. Overcrowding came about a very long time ago. In fact, probably for the last ten years or so, I would estimate, there has been overcrowding.

Each government has seen it. I don't know what course the previous government took, or what problems they may have hit with it, but I know that this government has tried to rectify that problem for many years. The public knows that there is no way to point blame on this government or the chief secretary by saying we should have solved the problem when we all know that the solution was very clear as the expert, Judge Tumin, said it was overcrowding. Secondly, I really think the time has come when we have on this very important subject to try to stand behind the policies and the director of prisons and the staff and the government department relating to the prison and just try to support and go forward.

Obviously, as I said it's easy to point fingers. But sometimes those fingers point right back at one's self. That is sometimes the self-imposed punishment of that kind of attack. My message to the people of this country is that we have had problems. I think it's our duty in the Legislative Assembly to pull together and continue to vote the necessary funds needed and support the necessary reforms that have been put in place or that are coming, and move forward with a positive attitude and hope that we do not ever see this type of problem again.

I think we have to thank the good Lord that this did not get much worse than it did. It could have gotten considerably worse. We must be grateful that things did not get any worse. I don't think that type of matter is one that is to be taken lightly, but I believe our duty is to produce the solutions to it and to assist everyone in ensuring the security of the prison. It is a place that is strict yet it has to be fair, providing the basic necessities of life. That's why I pushed for the exhaust fans at the time and I support the extension of the prison. I believe it would have been the solution back four or five years ago. I believe it is the solution now. It's going to be the solution for some time to come.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I really did not intend to speak, because other members covered the areas I was thinking about. However, I think after listening to the Minister of Education that I have to say a few words.

First of all, the government has an awful habit of amending private member's motions when the motion puts them in a spot. I say it's awful because all that happens is that government gets what it wants, has its way, whether or not it's a waste of time, money or human resources, or whether or not it gets the job done. It's an awful habit and not much has come out of it.

I am happy to know that matters that led to the chaos at Northward Prison are being taken in hand. I have already said that the burning of the prison is an indictment on the manner in which the country is being run. I will submit that for an Executive Council to sit back and allow law and order to break down without doing anything is an indictment on the government. And that's what happened: They sat here and watched in on TV.

I agree with the honourable Chief Secretary, that one must learn from mistakes made. I agree. All that the Minister of Education did was keep repeating about the few cellblocks, how that was the main problem and that's what caused the entire problem, according to him. He did nothing for the last three-quarters of an hour. I can't see how the burning of the prison stems solely from the lack of space. Maybe that was part of the problem, but certainly not the root cause of the problem.

For how long have members asked for new sentencing options? For years! For how long have we asked for better sentencing options that would have been the main agent to stop overcrowding? From the time I entered this House in 1984, we were asking from them. When I was in Executive Council we were asking for them and members of the backbench and of the opposition were asking for better sentencing options. As I said, this would have been the main agent to stop overcrowding. But were they worried about overcrowding?

If the many crimes had a different sentence, rather than locking them up by the dozens, rather than making the sentence to pave the roads or paint the schools and town halls, civic centres and such jobs, they lock them up in prison then they come here and say let's build a bigger prison, let's pack 'em in by the dozens, that's where the problem lies.

What is causing such a large number of inmates in such a small country? That is the question that should be answered from a policy position. Are we just going to continue putting up buildings? Are we going to continue building more cellblocks to house more and more people who burglarise, rape and kill? Is that what they want? Is that the solution the Minister of Education was talking about?

Mr. Roy Boddén: That was it!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Was the overcrowding limited to physical overcrowding, or overcrowding without corresponding staff complement, according to Judge Tumin? I submit that is the kind of problem that caused the chaos, the riot, and the refusal to act when they heard that certain things were happening. Yet, we have the Minister of Education get up here and say "It is my belief . . ." We heard him say that for the last three-quarters of an hour. This all had to do with a few cellblocks, that's what caused the problem and the country has to hear that.

Oh, if we could sell them for what they think they are worth and buy them for what they are actually worth when they come with such rot!

I contend that the main problem at Northward Prison in regard to the burning and other criminal acts is that the kind of policies to deal with ongoing and increasing criminality in prison was not put in place. That is the problem. The criminals control the prison! You tell me that cellblocks is the reason we have more cocaine in prison than you can buy on the streets; more ganja in prison than you can get on the streets. Was it because of the absence of cellblocks that people were not put on special programmes to bring them out better than when they went in?

The Minister of Education should run and hide. That's exactly what he's done!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, I was in Executive Council. But my five years are well documented. If I had had support . . . because I contend that what this country should be about is prevention—stopping them from going in! And that is what McKeeva Bush was attempting while in Executive Council. I was about putting the social programmes in place that impacted upon our young people. I was about putting Cadet Corps in place. I went to Bermuda to look at theirs. I brought back the idea and gave it to government and they couldn't support it. Why? It was going to cost too much money.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Preach, McKeeva, preach!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: It might have been a stop-gap measure, but I tried to put a day care centre for the mentally handicapped at the Thompson Apartments by Jose's Esso on Crewe Road. For six years, seven years now, they would have been better off because they would have been treated properly. They would have had their own centre. And it was well planned by the hospital staff and the mental division there. Did I get support for that? Yes, I got support all right: I got a paper to council and had to take it back

I can tell the world that I tried to get things done as far as my responsibilities were concerned. What happened to Project Prepare? Was any emphasis put on that after I left? Or did they just have a party when they kicked me out? What happened to it? That was supposed to help them get jobs and see that they were doing the right things. What happened to that?

When you come to space at Northward Prison, there was sufficient space to eat. And for recreation, one of the main things for those incarcerated, they had sufficient space for recreation. But I come back to the point about the ongoing criminal behaviour. What about the absence of programmes to bring them back into the community as persons who can live according to norms in a law abiding community? Are they given sufficient changes to rehabilitate while in prison? You have to deal with the elements causing the problems.

Don't talk about space being the root cause for a number of years. They heard the various problems. Those things are not new. Let me ask what about the death at Northward Prison? Was that because of space? What about all the other things that went on there—ongoing criminal activity? Was that because of space? Or was it because of a lack of policy dealing with criminality in the prison? Our national security was threatened because of the lack of a few cellblocks? I don't think so.

I am happy for the initiatives that have been taken. And I agree with the Chief Secretary that things happen and you could stand here and point fingers all day long. What has to be done is to get the problems fixed. Let me tell you something about expenditure, because I heard the Minister of Education say the prison went down just because of the need for more space, and that space was the solution.

The dishonesty in that speech was borne out when he read part of what members said from the Hansard, and when he read part of who voted for the $400,000, or didn't vote for the $400,000. There were more members than the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and I. He would not read the reasons we gave. We said give us the programmes. And beside that, I would like him to tell me whether the $400,000 could have built the cellblocks. We know that could not have built it. And where did the budget come from? Executive Council. It came here with insufficient money.

Don't get up and read part of a Hansard to make people believe that some people did some things when he well knows there were others who raised questions. But had he—who was an Executive Council member—put sufficient funds in there to build the cellblocks, plus state the programmes, it might have gone through.

Dr. Frank McField: Two civic centres in East End.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah! Two civic centres in East End, five in Cayman Brac! A limousine here, a limousine there; a trip over here, a trip over there; one today and one tomorrow, and we are all having a joyful time while Northward Prison burned. Nero fiddled while Rome burned also, Madam Speaker.

But when they come and talk about expenditure, when they come here to say that members would not vote funds for the prison . . . let no one in this House or this country believe that the error ever was a shortage of funds by this country on prison and police. Because in the last 12 years, including this year, we spent over $160 million on the two, and well over $50 million on prisons.

When a country as small as ours spends that kind of money, and we still end up with the ongoing criminality, it means that policies are not in place. It means that the Cayman Islands—and this is fundamental—is not dealing with criminals the way they ought to. That is the problem. If we had the force to sufficiently deter them, and the programmes in place for prevention and then sufficient weight of the law to scare them, it would be a different thing.

Since they say they are so bad off, in what country can an inmate sit in the prison and call members of the House of Representatives by cell phone? Where, other than Cayman, is that happening? There were enormous telephone bills at the prison emanating from cell phones that the country has to pay. What kind of policy is that? Are you afraid to deal with criminals?

There's a whole basketful of reasons and things that happened in there that should not happen. And this country is soft in certain areas. That is why this kind of thing is going on. Either we are going to decide that we have a prison tough enough to deter people from wanting to go there, but human enough to bring them back into the community as law abiding citizens . . . we need both.

I don't have much more to add. But I don't think that anybody can get up and say that it was the lack of a few cellblocks why the prison got burned down. By God, the police force stood by and watched it. Ministers watched it on television. I often ask why Her Majesty's Navy not brought here, the one that circles the region. I didn't ask officially, but it always comes to mind that here we were in the midst of a riot, and we have no assistance of our own, why were they not called in? Maybe someone can give me a reason why, but had I been in Executive Council I would have tried because we needed something to quell the problem before everything was demolished. It went on for a period of days.

All of this amounts to one thing: and indictment on the way the country is being run. I say that they either deal with criminals as criminals, and deal with those who have minor crimes differently, or we are going to come back to the same problems we had. There are elements there who can control and get it to the point where it's mashed up. How long have they been talking about dealing with the foreign elements? And then they took hostages? Was that because of a lack of space?

No! It was the parole policy. Madam Speaker, we go right down the line—deaths, hostages, suicide. Was that because of a lack of space, Mr. Minister of Education?

Mr. Roy Boddén: Ask him again, he didn't hear.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: No! It is a lack of policy to deal sufficiently with the criminal elements and other underlying social elements in the prison that have gone wrong.

They built not a prison but a prison farm. Don't let the Minister of Education blame anybody because he's been responsible for social policy longer than any single individual in this Legislative Assembly. And the things that were necessary to stop some of this were not put in place but hindered when somebody else tried to do it.

I hope that this review that government has amended to call for will tell us something other than what all the other reviews and studies and investigations have. I hope. Can they get it to us in 90 days? I see they didn't amend that part of the motion. Can they get it to us in that time, since they have amended it? I don't know. I would hope. I see the Chief Secretary shaking his head, saying he hopes he can.

I trust the Chief Secretary will get the review and that it will be one of policies, not just to point out the need for more space. Dig deep to find out why we have the kind of criminality ongoing in Northward Prison. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It is one minute before the hour of 4.30. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 AM tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM tomorrow. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.29 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 6 APRIL 2000.

EDITED
THURSDAY
6 APRIL 2000
10.35 AM

[Mrs. Edna M. Moyle, JP, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Deputy Speaker: I have apologies for late arrival of the honourable Second and Third Official Members. I have also received apologies for absence from the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town.

The Deputy Speaker: Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause)

If no other member wishes to speak, does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply? The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 5/00
AS AMENDED

CONCERNS WITH THE OCCURRENCES AT NORTHWARD PRISON

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. Roy Bodden: I am happy that this motion has evoked the sentiment and debate that it has. I would like to express my appreciation for the support received from my colleagues on the backbench who have all demonstrated an understanding of the problem and who empathise with the crises that we are now faced with regarding imprisonment and the role Northward Prison should play in our society.

As I listened to the government, I could not help but reflect on the original position of the motion. It was not only relevant, but also crystal clear: There is not only an absence of any coherent policy, but an absence of policy period! I wonder why, when members of the backbench bring motions casting government in a light where it has to justify its lack of certain actions, government always insists on changing the motion—as if what the motion called for was a personal reflection.

Since asking questions concerning the operation of the prison, and to a lesser extent the operation of the police, I notice that the honourable members responsible for answering those questions take the attitude that it was a personal affront, as if to try to intimidate me from carrying out my democratic right. Well, I am not intimidated! And the day that I do not wish to carry out my duties as the representative of the people of Bodden Town, and by inference the wider community, I will either relinquish my post by resigning, or, if it's near election, I will not contest the election. Otherwise, as long as God gives me the breath, and I hold the authority to represent the people, I shall do so to the best of my ability.

I am civil. I am polite and understanding. But I will not flinch from raising questions and criticism when I think it should be raised. I make no apology if people take umbrage. I am not doing anything personal to them. I don't give a hoot! And while I am stopping short of steps that other honourable members took (that is their democratic right to exercise), calling for someone's resignation is par for the course. People call for mine. People threaten to vote me out. I try to justify why I should be kept in my position.

I am disappointed that on both the elected and official sides this attitude prevails. That is why we need a different breed of people in government. We need people in government who when put to these kinds of tests, will get up and state the reason why they should be kept in their positions and state what they are doing, or trying to do.

It is critical that we understand that prisons play an integral part of any society. But the role goes beyond warehousing people. I have to commend the speakers that rose earlier for the maturity of their comments and the insight they offered. I want to begin by hitching up with something offered by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town. That honourable gentleman put it in more eloquent terms than I ever could when he said that we have to find out where the underlying causes are.

I heard the Minister of Education poke a little fun at theorists. I hold contempt for people who frown on knowledge. And, quite frankly, I am disappointed. The Minister of Education should be ashamed of himself if that is the attitude he takes toward intellectual and educated people. How can education progress, prosper and move forward in this country?

Some people seem to believe that the only criterion for success is millions of dollars. Well, Madam Speaker, more power to those who have millions of dollars. I want to be surrounded by my books, by discourse; I want to be surrounded by knowledgeable people, by intellectuals. I hope that's the kind of funeral I have. I don't want to be buried with a casket full of money!

Let me get back to my point. I am saying it is futile for us to continue, and it's a bankrupt solution if we think that every year we should be adding on more prison cells. Do you know what will happen? The numbers will increase to fill the cells. And soon the whole Cayman Islands will be one huge prison. That is why credence must be paid to the argument given by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town. We have to find out where this cause lies.

Is it breakdown in the family? Is it breakdown in the educational system? Is it breakdown in the social structure? Maybe it emanates from a breakdown in here, Madam Speaker, as is obvious when we don't understand and say that the solution is to build more prison cells. You can laugh at the theorists, but anyone who has read Francis Fukuyama's The Great Disruption, talking about the United States, . . . this whole change towards crime and social behaviour and social expectations in society made a rapid transformation from the time they went from the agricultural to an industrial society. And then when technology came in, different demands were made upon society crafting and breeding a different breed of human being. That is where the breakdown began.

Emanating out of that was a discipline called sociology, which has to do with the study of man's behaviour in society. You can put the sociologists down, but you can't solve the problems adequately without them. So, not only lawyers are important, sociologists are important too, just like teachers are important and doctors are important. Out of that came a whole slew of commentators, some more famous than any of us will ever be—Émile Durkheim, Max Weber, George Simell, Robert Nesbit, all these people.

What we are talking about is not isolated to the Cayman Islands because other countries face these problems as well. When we say the solution is to build more prison cells, we don't understand the root cause of the breakdown—human behaviour. We have an increase in young people who feel alienated. Anyone who walks the streets can tell you that. Do you think the way to deal with that problem is to build more prison cells?

Yesterday I heard about a breakdown at the middle school. A whole class had some problems. This is where it begins. And it even begins earlier than that in the homes. So, if we want to find effective solutions to what's happening at Northward Prison—and what happened on September 30 and October 1—we have to begin our investigation there.

The whole Cayman Islands society is the laboratory. We are not going to understand what happened at Northward Prison unless we understand the whole societal functioning and see the interrelation.

But they laugh.

I know those leaders are dinosaurs. They have to go! They have to become extinct! I am calling for a new breed of leaders. And these leaders don't all need to be intellectuals like the Fourth Elected Member for George Town. They can be people like the First Elected Member for West Bay who has a tremendous practical sense.

Where is Project Prepare, to prepare prisoners to fit into mainstream society by equipping them with marketable skills that can help them realise a sense of dignity and self-worth? It was scuttled by his colleagues!

We haven't made any progress. We are in the same spot we were 15 years ago. And they are talking about being kept in their positions because they are the only ones who can lead? Well, you show me the clause in Adam's will that states that.

In 1992, the National Team (of which, regrettably, I was a part) had this to say in its manifesto about crime and corruption: "5. To support programmes for the compulsory education of prisoners and a defined work programme for prisoners."

In 1996 (when I was, happily, conspicuous by my absence), here is what they said, "Fight Against Crime, 7. The future 1997 to 2000: Continue programmes for the compulsory education of prisoners and a defined work programme for rehabilitation of prisoners."

Madam Speaker, if I sit down for 30 seconds, I wonder if someone from the National Team would tell me where their "defined" work programme for rehabilitating prisoners is?

(Pause)

Mr. Roy Boddén: Madam Speaker, there is a roaring silence—a scathing indictment of them!

Do you know what happened? They can't walk the walk, but they can talk the talk! I heard the Minister of Education—the Leader of Government Business—say on a number of occasions: "I'd rather live a sermon than hear one any day." Ha! It is a poem. It is no more significant than when you are reciting it. And he's good at that—talking the talk but not walking the walk!

Prison was never meant to be a country club. Here is what prison was meant to be: A humane institution, the motive and objective of which is to prepare persons who owe debts to society to return to that society in improved ways so they can function as not only law abiding but as productive citizens. That is why I have to draw reference to the mission statement of Northward Prison. You can't have a live, functioning organisation with a mission statement that has been stagnant from its birth. Ask the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

It demonstrates no growth, no transformation. The whole society is growing and changing. Therefore, the mission statement of Northward Prison should be doing the same. The lawyer can't see that? People who have 25 years in high finance can't see that? We can see it! Maybe it will be our turn to lead. I hope so. I look forward to that.

I am going to go back in history. I knew a long time ago that there was a limitation of ideas on that side. Some years ago I read in a newspaper where the Leader of Government Business went into a section of his community and was meeting the people. Do you know what he told them? In what I call a "challenged" section of the community, he told them that he was increasing the numbers of the task force. He said that in an area I would have already thought was sensitive to that kind of thing.

Here is what I would have addressed. What any sensible, well-meaning and empathetic leader should have said was 'This area is going to be earmarked for a model community. We are going to set up some townhouses and an outdoor community park with some basketball courts and day care. We will see how that works. And if that model works, we are going to transpose that model to some other sections.' But he told the people—some of whom have brothers and sons at Northward Prison—that he was going to send in more numbers to crack their heads. Give me a break!

That is why Northward Prison is in the state it is in. And that is why the country is in the state it is in today. We have leaders whose ideas are bankrupt! They can't see the problem because they are too busy amending motions so there's no personal reflection cast! I say that when you are in leadership positions you must expect criticism. You must prepare to defend your policies. And you can't be right all of the time because men are not angles. But men can defend their positions, and when they make mistakes, they can admit that they made mistakes.

My powers of observation are very keen. Yesterday, there was some snickering, bantering, and bickering over there. I know the source. But I would be incredibly stupid if my friendships did not expand to where people with whom I had differences with years ago have now become my friends. That's politics. And I read Machiavelli. I would be stupid to go around making unnecessary enemies in an election year.

There's another point that falls into this general category that I want to comment on. One of the things we have to learn as members of this parliament is that there are certain parameters in which we operate. I see how allegiances change, and what I call symbiotic relationships, and situations which provoke what the sociologists call situational ethics, but I could never be so cannibalistic that I would sacrifice my elected colleagues and let them suffer what I saw happen here some days ago.

By the same token, I could never encourage any elected candidate to embarrass an official candidate. I have always said that in spite of all the differences we have this is a fraternity. We have to operate on the basis of mutual respect. But what I saw happen some days ago was circus behaviour, gladiators right out of the days of Rome where humans were thrown to flesh-eating lions and people laughed. That goes beyond dignity and does not speak well of any of us inhabiting these hallowed halls. Certain things should never be subject to outside exposure.

So, when it suited some people they jettisoned their colleagues. Pirate behaviour! It's no wonder that our prisoners cannot be rehabilitated.

Back to the business at hand, now that I have vented my spleen sufficiently.

Right now, there is a big furore in New York because there is a senatorial race being contested by two well-known personalities. One is a man named Rudolph Giuliani, the Mayor of New York City. Prior to that, he was a very famous prosecutor for the State of New York.

One of the things Giuliani is campaigning on is that he has drastically reduced crime in the City of New York. He has brought order and security to the streets. Also, he has made sense out of the prison system that was far worse than anything we have in the Cayman Islands where violence was a way of life.

Certainly, when you think of certain institutions like Riker's Island and Attica, and all these other places . . . According to The New York Times, of Monday, November 8, 1999, . . . and if the Serjeant would be so kind, I have a copy for you and one to be laid on the Table.

The people of New York had worse problems in their prisons than we have. What did they decide to do? They decided to adopt a systematic approach to violence and disorder in the prison. According to The New York Times, they adopted an iron hand. The article reads, "Behind Bars, an Iron Hand Drastically Cuts Violence."

One of the things they did was identify and isolate those prisoners who were violence prone. They decided to treat them in different and special ways. One of the methods they adopted for those prisoners who had a habit of slashing, cutting, and striking other prisoners was to use a special mitt that they handcuffed their hands into. It handcuffed their hands together so that they were unable to strike at guards and cut their fellow prisoners.

Another thing they did was to design a special chair for searching prisoners. When they sit in that chair, which has a metal detector, they can detect metal hidden in the most secretive orifices of the human body.

They used other methods for confrontation. They have a special shield that disables those unruly and rowdy prisoners by stunning and temporarily disabling them. They adopted significantly more sophisticated methods of screening visitors and prisoners prior to and after their visits. And, they were quick to withdraw and deny privileges to prisoners who failed to live within the rules of the prison system.

The system is not ideal. But if one were to read this article, it certainly is a lot better than it was. That is even by the account of present as well as ex-prisoners. Their system is a little bit different from our system, and that is what I want to talk about. Personally, I do not believe that all of the shortcomings in our system should be borne by the honourable First Official Member. It would be unfair to lay all the blame at his feet. But I want to be candid and constructive in my analysis.

In jurisdictions like New York, they have what is called a commissioner. His sole responsibility is the running of the prisons. Of course, it's a larger area with more money in the budget, but that person has only one job. Therefore, he is able to concentrate on that one particular aspect. Although there are numerous prisons, he only has one job. He has a big office and a big budget. So we cannot compare our situation to that, except to say that the responsibilities and the assignment of the responsibilities are a little different.

In our case, the primary responsibility for the prison lies with His Excellency the Governor who assigns responsibility to the honourable First Official Member who answers to Parliament. In his absence, he delegates responsibility to his deputy. So, we have a system where responsibility filters down. But, in addition to this responsibility, these officeholders have other responsibilities. Our system being the way it is, they are physically separated from the prison relying on telephone communication, or visits by themselves or by high-ranking officers of the prison.

Unfortunately, our system is constructed so that when something goes wrong it might take hours before the persons with responsibility to Parliament know. Certainly, they are not expected to dip into the day-to-day running of the prison, they are mainly concerned with the policies. But those policies should emanate from the governors of the prison as much as from those legally and constitutionally responsible because the persons who run the prison are the technical advisors of the persons holding constitutional and legal responsibility. Our system has a weakness in that those persons, because of their other responsibilities, cannot justifiably be expected to concentrate only on the prison. They have to share their time equally. And they realise the problem.

But that does not exonerate the elected government, whom I believe has some responsibility to help out in the arrival of objective policies by communicating and keeping in touch with the official arm of government, letting them know what the people on the street expect and say so that when budget time comes the proper fiscal allocations can be made.

Now, for anyone to attempt to blame me for the fact that money was not voted . . . well, I am going to do with that what Pilate did when our Lord was brought before him at the trial—I am going to wash my hands of that responsibility. I cannot take that responsibility. Certainly, it is not playing upon my conscience. Yes, I was one (and I will never deny it) who was not prepared to vote that money. What the Minister of Education read yesterday stopped short of why. I said it was because I wanted to see programmes and rehabilitation policies put in place before I voted the money. I suggested, as he accurately read, that we use the $400,000 on education!

I believe that the reason we have increasing numbers of prisoners at Northward is a fundamental failure in our education system. I will go to my grave believing that!

Dr. Frank McField: And recidivism!

Mr. Roy Boddén: And recidivism.

We are turning people out of our schools who cannot read and write. Not only can they not read and write, but they have no marketable skills. They already come from environments that are physically deprived of certain things. So they have to look to the schools, and when the schools fail, what can they do? That is why, honestly, I cannot even blame some of these people. They are ill prepared. They have no alternative. As much as I want to see justice done, sometimes I have to be sympathetic.

Were I to call for any resignation, I would have to include the Minister of Education.

Dr. Frank McField: The Leader of Government Business!

Mr. Roy Boddén: It's more his failure than it is the failure of the First Official Member. It's a political failure.

Dr. Frank McField: He had it in his political programme and it was not manifested.

Mr. Roy Boddén: He had it in his political programme and it was not manifested. No interest, you see.

I hate to say this, but do you know why I believe there was no interest? These people are not the important people; they are not the movers and the shakers of this society. They don't give you political mileage. They are significant numbers, but they are not the people you read about in newspaper columns—except when they get into trouble. They are not the people whose faces come on the television.

The majority of them don't vote. So they are played down, ignored, until opportunities like this—when the Leader of Government Business gets up and says the backbench has no solutions and all we do is criticise. What about the Cadet Corp? How many times did I ask him to look about that? I related my experiences at the Wilma's Boy's School. But there's no Cadet Corp yet.

What about an instrument which measures the ability of young prisoners at Northward to read and write? That hasn't been done yet. There are even attempts to stifle Adam McIntyre's programme where he tries to educate prisoners at Northward.

The elected government is quick to say that all we do is criticise, and that no solutions come from this side. What about all the programmes from 1994? And I am dealing with 1994 because that is significant. Since 1994, I read about programmes in the United States in various prison systems. I vividly recall one in Boston Massachusetts. They had long-term prisoners earning doctorates. I don't believe that our Caymanian prisoners have any less ability.

I told them about a programme in California called Delancy Street where convicted felons are rehabilitated and turned into productive citizens. Anyone who was interested would try to find out about this stuff. Do you know where I get a lot of it? Off the Worldwide Web. I surf the Net!

They don't have to do that, Madam Speaker. They are the wealthy! They don't have to broaden their intellect. All they have to do is come inside here and say that people are defunct, have no solutions, and are theorists.

Even when I am dead, Madam Speaker, I will be smarter than they are!

This whole business of Northward Prison had its genesis long before September 30 and October 1 1999. It goes way back to 1988. I mean, I have read reports on top of reports that all say the same thing. That is why I cannot support another review. We will be reviewing from now until the world ends, and all we will have is reviews! That is fine, if we are building up archives for scholars to study, but if we are trying to seek solutions to remedy the problems confronting us then we are doing the wrong thing. We already know where the solutions lie. We already know they lie in certain social breakdowns and homes that deprive youngsters of certain things. We already know it lies in the halls of the schools where young people find worth and importance by joining gangs. We know that. That's what we need to address. We don't need another review. We don't need another imported solution.

The only way to manage the future is for us here to invent it. I have said before that when we import people, we import problems. They are not without their problems. We cannot continue to rely on bringing in more prison officers from England.

I heard the Fourth Elected Member for George Town speaking about that. I read about it in The Economist magazine. Some of the most racist, militant, and hateful prison officers are found in England. I have The Economist magazine here which documents their problems. Are you telling me that you are going to bring in these people who come from different ethnic backgrounds with linguistic nuances whose colour is different to crack our heads, and then expect that we are going to be able to rehabilitate and reform these people?

Do you know what's going to happen? We are going to create a culture of hatred. When they get out, they are going to want to manifest their treatment on persons of like colour. Ask the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, he's a sociologist. Ask him! Or read and see if those behaviours are not logical. Read any book on psychology or sociology and see if that's not the case. We have to find our own people. 'Boy, as bad as it is, at least he's my cousin.' But you get someone who has no relation to whip him . . . Oh yeah? Do you know what will happen? 'I'll deal with you.' Only the theorists can see that.

This is a democracy and the majority rules. But I don't think I was elected to re-colonise the Cayman Islands. I said before that I was never an apologist for colonialism. And at age 53 I am not about to be either. But it goes beyond what is practicable and what can work. I believe that what the reviewers said by and large reflects the situation. But in many cases the recommendations were not followed because there have been blatant attempts by persons—including persons inside this Parliament, like the Leader of Government Business—to stifle debate when it comes to things like Northward Prison.

In 1994 I brought a motion calling for a debate on the Prison Report to His Excellency the Governor of an Inspection of Her Majesty's Prison Northward, Grand Cayman, April 1994, by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for England and Wales. The Leader of Government Business got up to say that the Speaker should not have accepted the motion because it was sub judice.

Well, he did not succeed. But the former Attorney General said that the government would not be participating in the debate—and they did not. So how can the Leader of Government Business now say that no solutions come from this side of the House? They gagged themselves. It was a self-imposed gag! They didn't contribute to the debate. They ignored it! They didn't even listen. Such hypocrisy must come to an end! Shame on the people who take such attitudes, believing no worthy suggestions emanate from this side.

In 1993, I brought a motion calling for the setting up of a National Commission on Crime and Violence. That same minister got up and described the method as unorthodox and unusual. Well, crime is unorthodox and unusual too! And he used as an excuse that they were doing something about it, and proceeded . . . that's when my falling out with the National Team was in its gestation period. I am glad that that relationship didn't last as long as Ernest Borgnine's and Ethel Merman's marriage! That broke up on the way from the wedding ceremony to the honeymoon.

[Members' laughter]

Mr. Roy Boddén: So, when they have all these things coming from us, how can they in good conscience say that we offer no constructive solutions?

The minister gets up and says this is unusual and unorthodox. And then they . . . well, not they, the present First Elected Member for West Bay . . . by a criminologist from Cambridge University. When the study was done, they decided it was not Kosher because it would be bad for tourism! So, they buried it. I just hope that one of these days some legal entity can make an edict that it has to be exhumed and a thorough postmortem carried out.

How can we address what is happening if, when we commission a study, we bury the study? That doesn't surprise me. If you don't like the message kill the messenger, burn the message. We cannot address the problems at Northward if we don't address these problems. The prisoners are not just going up to Northward and imprisoning themselves, they have done things in society. That leads me to another point.

That is why I have reservations about the juvenile detention centre. I said before, $10 million on the juvenile detention centre . . . well, I will grant you a hearing. But now tell me how much you are going to spend on prevention. If you are going to spend $10 million on prevention I will grant you the $10 million on the detention centre too.

That is what I call the criminalisation of the society. I don't want to be part of that. Do you know why? I will be a prisoner myself. When these people get out they are going to say, 'Roy Boddén? Do you think he's smart?'

Wait until I get out. And my wife can't go to the supermarket and my little boy can't play football and there's someone waiting to trouble my daughter. If I wanted to live in a military complex, I would have joined the armed forces when I lived in Canada. I want to live in freedom.

These problems cannot be treated in isolation. It has to have an interdisciplinary approach. When we talk about problems at Northward Prison, we have to include community affairs, education, and the social services. That is why we have not been successful. We are taking a disjointed approach. In order to have successful policies, all the members involved have to sit down. It's just like the human body: Do you believe the heart operates independently of the brain? You wouldn't last long.

If we want to successfully address these problems we can't just throw them into the lap of the First Official Member. That's a copout. That is why we haven't been more successful. And it shouldn't take a rocket scientist to see that. Successful managers of the 21st century take this kind of approach. Ask Peter Drucker. Read Management Challenges for the 21st Century, and see how successful managers tackle these challenges.

The futurist, Alvin Toffler, said that the illiterate of the 21st century wouldn't only be people who can't read and write, but those who can't learn, unlearn, and re-learn.

We need many things—but we don't need another review of Northward Prison! We need action now, and plenty of it. Unfortunately, prisons are a necessary evil. But they don't have to be catastrophic. We are lucky. Do you know why? The public purse has had to cough up $2 million and nobody has been identified for blame, responsibility, or compensation. We are lucky. In some civilised democracies, it would not have gone like that I can assure you.

I don't want to go through these reports individually. But the underlying thread in all of them is a lack of support. In the report by His Honour Sir Steven Tumin, of October 1999, he said that the Prison Director has not had enough support from some of his subordinates or from his superiors. What is there to convince me that another review is going to meet with a similar fate?

Another reason I am reluctant to pin blame on anyone—but I do want to blame the system—is that the Cayman Islands were ill prepared for a prison. Prior to that we were a staid, slumbering society. We were still in that period someone described as The Islands that Time Forgot. We didn't have television. We didn't have all this business about rampant drugs and the communication, the boats, planes, and all that stuff. Somebody should have seen that. That is what elected politicians should see, not necessarily the Official Members, although some responsibility lies with them too. The elected leaders should have seen that society was changing.

I said inside here that that was one of the things television was going to do. I remember saying repeatedly in debate that television was a good servant, but a bad master. And we still have stations that do nothing but glorify violence and show disruptive behaviour encouraging our youngsters to dress in ways not Kosher in our society. All of these things lead up to it. Someone should have seen that.

I am not saying that we should stifle freedoms, but freedom must have its responsibilities. Because you are free to do something does not mean you should do it. So, this is the vision that the elected leaders must take up. That is why it is time for a new leadership, a leadership by people who can see these things, who are grounded intellectually, who can understand that it has a domino effect—if you get this, you must prepare for these results.

And then, you have to mix that with persons who can get the things done. Action people. Many times I think I am out of place here, where people try to put other people down. 'They shouldn't be here because they are not millionaires. They shouldn't be here because they are defunct. They shouldn't be here because they are not successful in their profession. They shouldn't be here because they are not members of the lodge.' Well, success is relative you know.

In my field, I will challenge anyone to an intellectual debate. Anyone! I am not interested in amassing millions. But I will tell you that I would put myself on par with anyone in Cayman on any intellectual debate, and I wouldn't come out second. So more power to those people with other aspirations. I don't want to join any secret society. I guess we have to find ways to put one another down. But there's one thing I won't do: I won't be a pirate. I will not!

The ball is in our court. We have the ability to learn from the incident at Northward Prison. We have the ability to cut our losses at this point. We have the ability to make the Caymanian society a better society. But we have to stop being hypocritical. We have to stop being exclusive. We have to stop being prejudiced, and we have to begin being considerate, open and transparent, forthright and candid. If we don't do that, we will never learn. The lessons of history are there for us to learn from.

I am saying these things as much for my own edification as for others. We have to stop laying blame. Stop trying to one-up one another and make one another look bad. We are here for the good of the people and the good of the country.

Years ago someone said that a whole generation would have to be written off. Well, saying it is one thing; but by our actions—or lack thereof—we are perhaps writing off more than one generation. These people can be salvaged. They must be salvaged!

I am not idealistic. I am not telling you that we don't need a prison. Far from that. I am saying that we have to exercise effort to save as many as can be saved. We have to begin by constantly examining our education policies, our community objectives, our social service policies, and working in tandem with that person who has official responsibility.

Here's another reason why I am reluctant to call for anyone's resignation. Our system is an antiquated system. We have a system of ministers, and people who are the equivalent of ministers, but technically no one who can galvanize them and say 'Well, you know, this should be our priority. This should be our objective.'

I read in today's paper where the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said the prison should be under an elected member. Well, I don't take any umbrage with that, but I want to say that I am not advocating any kind of constitutional advancement where people can come and use against me saying I want independence. Heaven knows I suffered from that long enough in my political career. I would like to shake that bogeyman off my back now.

I am saying that we should have the kind of system where when a member makes a plea that he is genuinely listened to. I know that quite frequently officialdom puts forward a request, but political expediency in Executive Council doesn't allow it to reach here. If we had a different system, that might not be the case. Then it would be easy to identify where the breakdown came.

I have a reluctance to blame the honourable First Official Member. I am not saying he could not have done better. We can all do better. We are not angles. But all of the blame cannot be placed on him, in spite of the fact I have differences with him. He doesn't like me asking him questions sometimes, but that's not going to stop me from having a good relationship with him and from speaking the truth.

In all seriousness, we need to look because this is as much a systemic failure as an individual failure. And some of us have been saying that.

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a convenient point to take the morning break?

Mr. Roy Bodden: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.30 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.57 AM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, continuing.

Mr. Roy Bodden: It is critical that we arrive at some constructive solutions, and that we try to ensure that the government complies with the request of the motion. We have manifested in our society the potential for a complete breakdown. I am speaking about the manifestation of gangs.

Gangs are going to manifest themselves based on many things. Some are based on ethnic origin, some on neighbourhoods, some on a particular interest; some are based on other subculture ideals. If we don't address these problems before they reach the prison, we are going to have a compounding when they reach the prison. One has to only read what happened to the prison system in Los Angeles where gangs run some prisons. Not only that, but they run activities outside the prison.

So, the occurrence at Northward is not something for us to joke around with, take lightly or attempt to say when solutions are being offered from this side of the House that the backbench has no solutions and take umbrage when questions are asked and issues are raised. In other societies, these phenomena are detrimental. And enormous resources are being spent just containing them—not even addressing the problem with any ability to eliminate it—just to contain the problem. That is the reason I am saying, from the information we have, that we have such situations occurring right now in our own backyard.

There is a need to derive sensible and coherent policies. This whole business of two different standards of parole is the cause of the hostage taking incident. You can't have that or a lack of any coherent career parole policy, period.

I call on the government for the umpteenth time to begin building a halfway house. Maybe we need two—one for males and one for females. They have to begin doing that. There is talk of the eminent release of certain long-term prisoners. It would be unfair to drop them cold turkey back into society which in the first instance is and was uncaring. They have to be spoon-fed. Someone has to help them get gainful employment. Someone has to help them to restore their dignity.

This is a good point to interject that prison is a political place. I have to thank the Fourth Elected Member for George Town for reminding me of that. So I hope that we are not labouring under the delusion that one of the things people do not think about while in prison is who put them there, who is taking care of them, why they are there and what they are going to do when they get out. I hope we do not believe that these thoughts don't cross the prisoners' mind. That is another perspective.

We have to ensure that they understand the circumstances. If I had it my way, it would be even more political. I would make it mandatory for every prisoner who can read, to read Frantz Fanon's, Richard of the Earth. I would make them read Albert Memmi, The Colonizer and the Colonized. I would make them understand what has happened to them, and I would make them realise that they have to work at rehabilitating themselves.

But we are not doing these things. So they come out and they go back with no sense of purpose. We have to do that. It's as much a political institution as anything else. And prisoners think about these things. I hear the arguments. We have to take a holistic approach.

While the prisoners are in prison paying a debt to society, the state has an obligation to the prisoners to ensure that the prisoners are protected, that they have certain opportunities available to them. One of the things I am concerned about in this transformation is that some human rights issues as they apply to the prisoners may get swept away. You can't deny these people visitation rights. So the physical facilities have to be kept up, where they have access to these rights, where they have availability of certain information, but at the same time, they have to understand their responsibilities as prisoners. So I commend the carrot gesture of the special privileges block for prisoners who have demonstrated sufficient maturity to earn the right to reside in that block.

But now you have to be really careful that that is not so discriminatory that it causes a rivalry between prisoners. One has to keep an eye to ensure that at the first manifestation of serious change in behaviour you have space to accommodate those. That's a carrot. And the stick must not be far away so that they know it is not automatic. If there is any recidivism, plunk, you are out. A regime. That is what we have been lacking, a regime.

If you read these reports, the prison has been unstructured. I said years ago that we may have done ourselves an injustice because in the 21st century you can't take untrained ill-educated people and plunk them in these positions of responsibility where in other countries people are given special training. I want to caution that I am not saying that as a licence to import outsiders. I said we have to prepare our own people. It's bad enough to be incarcerated. But to be incarcerated in a system where the warden and officers are foreign to your culture, . . . that kind of mentality is found in war where you have prison camps. But in a civilian prison, that spawns far more problems than it solves. I hope the intention to import foreign officers is but a temporary one.

I keep coming back to the fact that we are a small society, and a small country is not an excuse for saying that we cannot find people to train. Maybe not in the numbers we need in every case, but not to have any persons? Can you imagine that our education system is so poor that we can't find a few prison officers? Explain that to me. How is it that the chief fire officer has many more applicants than he could ever entertain? And yet, the prison service and police service goes begging.

Check the paradox. Who heads the Fire Service? A Caymanian. You don't have to be Albert Einstein to know what that says. You don't have to be a rocket scientist to learn the lesson that gives. I don't buy this excuse about Caymanians. We have the whole system incorrect. We have the emphasis placed in the wrong section of the sentence anyway. Having institutions that produce people to fill these mundane but important sectors of our community we go and begin to fill the top, most prestigious white-collar position. Do you know what someone called that? Cultural imperialism. That's part of the problem. We are conveying the impression to people that they are only important if they can wear robes and wigs! They are not important if they push pencil and pens, or wheelbarrows, or handle wrenches or use tools.

That's all part of the prison psychology, the mentality that leads our people to imprisonment. We have to take that into consideration if we are going to rehabilitate them successfully. They think they are not important because they are not lawyers, or accountants. They are not important because they are not bankers. Of course, they are important, even if they are mechanics, or cooks, or waiters, or bellhops. It takes all of us to make the Caymanian society. That is why I am saying that it is a failure of the education system. That is why I am saying that it would be wrong to place all the blame on the First Official Member. That is why I am leaning on the elected government, they have a role to play which they have not successfully played.

I don't have much more to say other than to say from the time I have been here these problems have been with us begging for solutions. From the time I have been here, I understand why they are not solved. You have to come from a certain sector of society to be heard and listened to. You have to please the establishment. You may even have to be a certain colour. And God knows that no one can kill me for my thoughts. Sometimes I believe that, I get that kind of signal and vibes.

When you come from a certain section of town and you are a certain colour, you are written off, no matter how many PhDs and Masters you have, no matter how many Queens and Syracuses you went to, Bremen's and all the other places. And I am reminded that it's worse if you didn't.

Sometimes the mere fact that you are the son or daughter of so-and-so, . . . well, those people who perpetrate those positions are living in a false society. They are lulled into a false sense of security and their position may allow them to be arrogant, but it does not guarantee their safety. They'd better listen to the messenger. The Cayman Islands are changing. It can be a change for the better if we work at it. But if we, as Edmund Burke said, insist on lingering smug and apathetic, we shall come to no servitude of mind and body. We shall be prisoners in a society we have created. We will have created a population of predators. We are creating a population of predators. That is why we have to be intellectually capable of analysing these problems.

I would like to share a quotation that I read in the latest version of New Vision. It's from a person who I admire and respect greatly, Professor Rex Nettleford, Vice Chancellor of the University of the West Indies. He said, "Leadership must rest in the hands of persons who are appropriately prepared through education and training to think, to comprehend the world around them, identify problems and find and implement solutions. Nothing less than intelligence rooted in some degree of formal education can qualify political leaders to take decisions impacting on the lives of our people."

To that I would add another very famous person whom I like to read. If I were a contemporary, I would certainly have admired him. None other than the Chinese philosopher and military strategist called Sun Tzu. He said that a leader must be intelligent, must be crafty, honest, sincere, sympathetic, but he must also be stern.

Lest I exclude any of my worthy colleagues on this side, let me say that successful leadership in my book does not have as a prerequisite a university degree. I have seen good leaders inside here with heart and soul and with the people's interests at heart, who propose policies and programmes like Project Prepare, who for all the flack being given (and heaven knows I have given him some, and will continue to) . . . like the First Elected Member for West Bay, you have to have heart. He has heart.

I don't like him sometimes, and we will continue to have disagreements, but I can't deny that he has heart. That's what government lacks.

If we want to solve the problems at Northward Prison we have to have heart. We have people with heart on this side. The only thing I am sorry about is that we can't come together as a phalanx with some from the outside. But the old pirate system that Bob Marley sings about won't allow us to do that. If we did, maybe we'd be too much of a threat to those persons I last spoke about.

Like the old Negro Spiritual says, there's a change a'coming. Oh yes. We just have to hang around. The emotion is in the government's hand. I give them all of my support because I am concerned with the prisoners at Northward. They are wards of the state. They are our brothers and sisters. It is incumbent upon us, the representatives of the people, to craft policies and plans that will help them find their productive law abiding places in the society.

I want to end with this: The time has also come in the life of the Cayman Islands that we have victim's rights legislation. I look forward in the not too distant future to bringing a private member's motion calling for that because I think that is one way we can get people to realise that they can't go cutting up and stabbing and clubbing people. They should be made to work and personally pay when those people are disabled. I think that can complement our legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes debate on Private Member's Motion No. 5/00, as amended. The question is: "BE IT RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly register its concerns over occurrences at Northward Prison which led to the events of Thursday, 30 September 1999 and Friday 1 October 1999;

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly recommends there be a review of the policies regarding prisoner rehabilitation, the administration at Northward Prison and the development of secure and effective facilities of incarceration in the Cayman Islands;

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government lay on the Table of this Honourable House, within 90 days, its plans for both the physical and rehabilitative reforms of Her Majesty's Prison at Northward, including the timetable for the implementation of such reforms."

I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 5/00 AS AMENDED PASSED.

The Deputy Speaker: Perhaps it is the wish of the House—the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I was going to suggest, since this motion has finished, that it may be the wish of honourable members to take the luncheon suspension at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: I was about to suggest that. Proceedings will be suspended until 2.00. And can we try to be back by 2.00 PM sharp?

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.20 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.11 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000, Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account, to be moved by the First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I rise to move Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000, standing in my name. Madam Speaker, should I move the motion? as I see there is an amendment coming forward. Do we have to move that and get it seconded before we . . . Okay. I just wanted to make sure.

Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000, Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account, reads as follows.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 6/00

INVESTIGATION INTO THE PEDRO ST JAMES CONSTRUCTION PROJECT ACCOUNT

"WHEREAS there is much public concern over the development costs of the Pedro St James project;

"AND WHEREAS many members of the public have approached some Legislators expressing concerns over these costs;

"AND WHEREAS the Honourable Minister bears ultimate responsibility to the Legislative Assembly for the development and management of this project;

"AND WHEREAS this said project up until July 1997 was managed directly by the Ministry of Tourism;

"AND WHEREAS all reports thus far indicate mismanagement;

"BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT this Honourable House records its lack of confidence in the Minister's handling of the project;

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT upon completion of the technical audit of the landscaping contract for this project, any parties responsible for fraud, misappropriation, or any other illegal action be identified and be the subject of appropriate legal action and that this Honourable Legislative Assembly be apprised of the proposed course of action."

The Deputy Speaker: Is there a seconder? The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I beg to second the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000 has been duly moved and seconded. Does the mover wish to speak to it?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am sorry if I seem a bit confused, but I certainly will speak to the motion. My only question is, seeing that there is an amendment, should we debate the motion as is, or allow for debate on the amendment to take place so that the end result will allow for one entire debate of that motion.

The Deputy Speaker: I was trying to catch the eye of the honourable minister moving the amendment. But . . . if you would care to move your amendment at this time Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

AMENDMENT TO PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 6/00

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you for catching my eye. Notice of motion to Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000, Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account.

"In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(1) and (2), I, the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, seek to move the following amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000: (a) by adding to the fourth Whereas clause, at the end thereof, 'with project management being carried out by Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Limited, and accounting being provided by the government Treasury'; and (b) by deleting in the fifth Whereas clause the words 'indicate mismanagement' and substitute the following: 'are self explanatory.'"

The Deputy Speaker: The amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 6/2000, Investigation into the Pedro St. James Construction Project Account, has been duly moved. Would the proposer like to speak to this amendment?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you.

The motion as originally put (in the summer of last year and brought forward to this meeting by agreement), in the fourth Whereas reads: "AND WHEREAS this said project up until July 1997 was managed directly by the Ministry of Tourism. . . ." I believe it is helpful in that particular clause to clarify how the project was managed by the ministry. That's the reason for moving this amendment to the said clause.

The [amended clause] would then read: "AND WHEREAS this said project up until July 1997 was man- aged directly by the Ministry of Tourism with project management being carried out by Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Limited and accounting being provided by the government Treasury;" I believe would clarify how the project was managed by the ministry.

And when I say "accounting" I am not talking about accrual type of accounting. The accounting system within Treasury is a cash accounting system. So what the Treasury is accounting for is the cash paid out on the construction of this project on an annual basis. We know that if we examine the budgets of, say, 1997, we would find that the project is identified in that budget and a particular allocation is made to Pedro St. James, as well as when you examine the financial accounts for that year. You would find that there is an actual expenditure within the account that spells this out.

If I wanted to be more specific in my example, when we look at the 1997 Budget, for example, we find on page 484 (and I am happy to share this with members or lay it on the Table), the allocation for the development of Pedro St. James Heritage Site, Grand Cayman, is $1.5 million. And when we examine the Cayman Islands Government Accounts for year ended 31 December 1997, we find on page 35 item 53-129 (being a numerical system of capital expenditure), Pedro Castle "Approved estimate $1.5 million. Actual expenditure $1,219,863."

So, that is the accounting I am talking about. I am trying deliberately not to mislead members or the public into believing that the Treasury is responsible for doing financial accounts for the Tourism and Attractions Board which speaks to the cost of the total assets of accounts. We know that in all of our activities in Statutory Authorities it was not many years ago when even the Water Authority came under a certain amount of scrutiny by the Auditor General and he was also not satisfied that they did not at the time of his audit have a proper set of accounts done. I think I can bear that out, and I will when we come to the motion itself.

My only point is that the ministry relied on the project manager, Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Limited (CHRM), like any other project manager. And in conjunction with the Accountant General of that day the agreed procedure was to cause the Treasury to accept payments. The agreement was that the ministry would have a stamp made in accordance with the wishes of the Accountant General so that the project officer, once satisfied that construction had been carried out and a bill received for it, he would stamp it and authorise payment which was passed on to the ministry and the ministry checked the correctness of it and passed it on to the Treasury.

That's my explanation for the amendment to the fourth Whereas clause.

I believe in the fifth Whereas clause, while the reports indicate some managerial difficulties in the operation, I don't believe the report itself indicate mismanagement of the total project. That's why I am saying that the reports are self-explanatory. They point to this little problem, or that little problem. But I don't think it points to mismanagement of the entire project because CHRM was only responsible for one portion of the project and that was mainly the restoration of what we used to call Pedro Castle and the landscaping. Public Works Department was responsible for the visitor's centre, which came out with a cost in the range of $2.5 or $3 million of a total project cost of $6.9 million. I am just trying to show the relevance of the statements embodied in the fifth Whereas clause.

I think amending it to read "AND WHEREAS all reports thus far are self-explanatory" is a better way of addressing this matter. Then we can go into the final debate on it.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I would just like to say that in looking at the two amendments being proposed by the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, understanding his explanation, and understanding that it does not change the substance or intent of the motion, I have no difficulty in accepting the amendment.

However, his second proposed amendment, where he is asking for the words "indicate mismanagement" to be replaced with "are self-explanatory" while I heard his explanation, as the mover of the motion, I hold the view that all reports thus far indicate mismanagement. It is not a wide-swiping statement that says there has been total mismanagement. The statement is simply saying that all reports received thus far indicate some type of mismanagement.

If we take the minister's view, and accept the change from "indicate mismanagement" to "are self-explanatory" it takes away the entire concept of mismanagement. To say they are self-explanatory is not, in my view, a correct statement. All reports that have been provided thus far in my view are not self-explanatory. The reason I say they are not is because many of the points raised in those reports are not conclusive. In fact, they are inconclusive. Documentation, evidence and other papers, which would have been required to say that these reports are self-explanatory, are not there.

I cannot accept that change, saying they are self-explanatory. As far as I am concerned, there is just cause to retain the original context in that Whereas clause. If government disputes that statement, let them prove it. To agree with that second amendment is to say that we erred in the statement. And, Madam Speaker, I am not prepared to do that because I do not sincerely believe that the statement is an erroneous one.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: As I said yesterday, it seems that government's ploy these days is to amend motions to where it suits them, even when the amendment is foreign to the substance of the motion. I have always submitted, and the Standing Orders say that you cannot change or amend a motion or a bill to where the substance is changed. If you change that last Whereas clause to say "self-explanatory" then it is taking an operative part of the motion away.

If you don't prove mismanagement, then there is no need for the two Resolve sections.

Secondly, I am more in line on the first amendment with the mover of the motion. But I would say what this is saying is 'don't blame the ministry, blame the treasury.' That's what that is doing, passing the buck! 'Let's get the treasury involved. You know they collected all the money, did all the accounts. So lets put them in it too.' That would make the public believe that everything was above board because the Treasury did it.

Sure, the Treasury paid out. The question is, why didn't someone ensure proper billing before it went to Treasury so that what went to the Treasury was accounted for by the project? But as you go through the Auditor General's Report you find the billings could not be accounted for. The accounts could not be reconciled. So, how they are going to blame the Treasury, I do not know. But this is an attempt to blame the Treasury.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I really rise to voice my concern in regard to this method of dealing with private members' motions. If the minister is of the opinion that there was no mismanagement, I believe that is what should be suggested in the debate. The facts that he offers will be the relevant moves that will have to do with deciding whether or not mismanagement took place. But the motion is saying that mismanagement took place, or at least there is indication that it took place, and the debate can be about whether or not the mismanagement took place, which can be in the body of the motion rather than coming as an amendment having two debates.

Again, it's to change perception. If you say that the books are "self-explanatory," that the records do not show mismanagement but are self-explanatory, what do you mean? What does it explain and make clear? Does it make clear that records were kept? Yes, of course. It makes that clear. But it does not make clear that anything else happened without interpretation. The facts need to be interpreted. It's what can be assumed that the facts are saying is relevant.

The mover of this motion has said that if the facts were to be looked at it would indicate mismanagement. That is an assumption that can only be proved or disproved by way of the exercise of someone competent examining the records. To say that the records are self-explanatory is ludicrous. It doesn't mean anything. What does it explain?

If I asked you how old you were, and you said to me, 'if you look at me then my age is self-explanatory' . . . You cannot have an explanation without a question. For there to be an explanation, you must have a question. Something cannot just be self-explanatory without there being a question.

I think that this playing with words confuses the issue. I am not assuming there was mismanagement. I am waiting to hear the debate. I am waiting to hear the arguments that will be put forward by the mover of this motion and I would like to hear the government's side and the minister's side.

But for government to indulge in attacking the motion before it comes to debate, trying to change the meaning of the motion using semantics . . . we know that even in common jargon that leads to confusion. Nothing is self-explanatory, especially not in science. And accounting is a science. Therefore, there is nothing in accounting that is self-explanatory. It must be explained. All facts are subject to interpretation. If you are interpreting bookkeeping, you have a certified accountant who has the ability to interpret it and has credibility.

There is nothing self-explanatory about my books. You have to have a professional come in and look at my books to decide whether or not I manage the union properly. You cannot say that because books are there that they are self-explanatory.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The right to put an amendment to a motion is a right of any member of this House. Standing Order 25(1) is very clear. If the Fourth Elected Member for George Town had taken the time to look at it, it says "Any Member may propose an amendment to any motion to be considered by the House or a Committee." It is wrong to put it on the basis that it is not right to put an amendment to a motion before the House. That is a right. In fact, it's probably one of the earliest procedural rights that exists in Parliament.

Therefore—

Dr. Frank McField: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER
(misleading)

The Deputy Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Dr. Frank McField: I feel that the minister is misleading because I did not say it was not a right for any member to amend a motion before this House. I am quite aware of that Standing Order. I have brought amendments myself. I was not speaking about the right; I was speaking about the motive for so doing, and the substance of that.

The Deputy Speaker: You do have a point of order in that you did not say it was not a right.

Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, will you continue?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Yes, I will withdraw that.

It is a right under the Standing Orders for a member to put an amendment to a motion. That is perhaps one of the most basic rights one has.

It matters not to the procedural aspect of the amendment whether or not people in the House like it. That ultimately goes to the vote and then the motion as amended goes on to be debated. What has been done here is that the amendment itself is very relevant because the first amendment carries on and finishes one of the Whereas clauses, and states that this was carried out by the Commonwealth Historic Resource Management and accounting was provided by the government Treasury. And that is a fact. That amendment can obviously . . . well, there's no problem to any of these amendments.

The second one . . . if we try to look at this and when we read that and it says "AND WHEREAS all reports thus far indicate mismanagement" that is a judgment in any event. We know that presumably the reports being referred to would include the report of the Auditor General, which as we know is before the Public Accounts Committee now. That has not even been laid on the Table of this House. So it is quite proper to deal with the report by saying it is self-explanatory. Those that we can look at will be looked at. But to form a judgment at this stage on it, and attempt with one swipe of the pen to indicate that there is mismanagement is undoubtedly quite correctly amended to what the honourable minister has put forward.

If the House is not afraid of the truth, then why not look at the reports and take the opinion from those reports rather than producing a motion that has an opinion in it?

And talking about "self-explanatory," to take—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER
(misleading)

The Deputy Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The minister just said that the motion was based on opinions formed, making sweeping statements, and not based on reports. This motion was brought in June of 1999, and that statement in the motion was based on the reports available thus far. So, he cannot mislead to say that the wording of the motion was not based on reports. That is what he just said.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable First Elected Member for George Town, unless I stop proceedings and get the Hansard, I cannot quote verbatim. But I understood the honourable minister to say something to the effect of making sweeping judgment.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I don't wish to stop proceedings, but I am sure of what I heard, and I would prefer that you get the Hansard and make your ruling.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, would you explain to the House, for my benefit? And if the member is not satisfied, I will suspend proceedings to get the Hansard.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: As you rule, Madam Speaker.

What I am saying is that the Whereas clause that says, “AND WHEREAS all reports thus far indicate mismanagement” is a sweeping clause. Basically, with the stroke of a pen a very general statement is made that has serious indications to it. What I said on reports is that there are still some reports that as I understand it are before the Public Accounts Committee. I referred to that because in fairness those reports which are relevant to this should also be considered. That’s basically what I was saying.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you satisfied with that explanation, First Elected Member for George Town? Or do you require me to suspend proceedings to have the Hansard?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: As far as my being satisfied with anything coming from the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, that’s a tall order. However, I just wish to say that I heard what he said both the first and the second time. I want to just clarify something quickly.

He just said about this report in front of the Public Accounts Committee, and that it should also be considered. Is he saying that we should make that part and parcel of this debate? If that is what he is saying, and that is acceptable, I will forget about anything I said before.

The Deputy Speaker: Now that you have accepted what the honourable minister said, as the presiding officer, the section of the Auditor General’s Report dealing with Pedro’s Castle has been dealt with in an open forum, therefore I see no reason why the Auditor General’s Report on just Pedro’s Castle cannot be debated. It was held in an open forum of Public Accounts Committee.

Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning, would you proceed with your debate please?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you.

A bit of fun was poked at the question of self-explanatory. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town said that if you come to a person and ask them their age and they say ‘Well, here I am, tell me my age’ that that wouldn’t be self-explanatory, or words to that effect. A school child would figure out better than that because self-explanatory would be when you ask someone their age, they give you a birth certificate and say ‘here it is, it’s self-explanatory.’ That’s all we are saying here.

[A Member’s laughter]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Obviously, the meaning of self-explanatory is not too well understood. I didn’t choose the question of the birth certificate, but I am explaining to the laughing opposition member exactly how it can be done. The difference between self-explanatory, and being told something is that when you have a report that’s self-explanatory, then these opinions have no place in it. And I submit that is why the pressure is on to leave that the way it is because a lot of damage can be done from that opinion which is obviously in the motion whereas the facts and the truth sit in the report. If one reads them and they would in my view be self-explanatory. I haven’t read the Public Accounts Committee report, but . . .

I submit that the motion as amended, or the amendments to the motion are very relevant. Also, that it now removes any possibility of any opinion as to the truth on what is mismanagement, and in fact if you look at the reports they will have the facts in them. I support the amendments and I submit they are good procedurally and good all around.

The Deputy Speaker: the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Madam Speaker, if you listen to the honourable Leader of Government Business you would be convinced that the business of the persons on the backbench, and I am happy that I fall under that rubric because I oppose much of what he is trying to do most of the time . . . if you follow him you would believe that the only purpose of the backbench is to besmirch the character of the ministers. But our motives are not like his motives. Far from that.

I too agree with most of my colleagues that we can accept the first amendment because that is fair and proper. But the second amendment significantly changes what the motion is asking for.

I would like to ask the Leader of Government Business and the Minister of Tourism if they are saying that we on this side of the House lack the intelligence to put together a motion to say what we want it to say. We don’t have to rely on them to change it. The motion is saying exactly what we want it to say and we believe there is just cause for saying it.

I am happy, Madam Speaker, that you gave the green light to use that portion of the Auditor General’s Report that has to do with Pedro Castle. I was going to make that point myself, that since it was debated publicly no harm could be done in referring to it now.

Do you know what the problem of the elected ministers is? They have to protect what is left of their reputations. This is an election year and the first time they are being seriously challenged by a credible number of people whom they know can replace them. If we get up here and kow-tow to them and sanction everything they are saying . . . if we left it to them, there would be no election. But we want to replace them, and this motion is one of the tools we are using to do it with.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (pause) Does any other member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: The first amendment says with project management being carried out by Commonwealth Resources Management Limited and accounting being provided by the government Treasury. I agree with the first part of that statement in that CHRM did act as the project manager. But to say the Treasury did the accounting, I think is a little misleading. It is my understanding that once the invoices came to the ministry they just put a stamp on it and sent it down. All the Treasury did was make the payments. They didn't account for anything. This is one of the weaknesses in this whole system as far as I am concerned.

The ministry was relying on the integrity of CHRM who was the project manager, the contractor, the sub-contractor, and everything else. So I really don't agree with that part of the amendment that says "accounting being done by the Treasury." I think that is an attempt to shift blame from the Ministry to the Treasury Department.

In regard to the second resolve, about replacing "mismanagement" with "self-explanatory" even when you go to court you lay a charge. You have to prove the charge. For us to say that there are no charges to answer to and it's all self-explanatory, or can be explained away by the documents, I think is misleading. I am not prepared to support that amendment to this motion.

It changes the whole intent of the motion. I am aware of Standing Order 25 too, but I don't think an amendment that changes the intent of the motion is in order. I personally cannot support these two amendments to the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? (pause) If not, does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply? The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: It would have been wishful thinking for me to expect that all members on the opposition side would agree with these amendments. But I tried my best to explain what I meant when I said accounting being provided by the government treasury. I have been around in government for quite some time, I understand the system, and I understand what they are doing. The government's accounting system is based on a cash system. Therefore, all it accounts for is the cash that is expended.

Far be it from me to blame the Treasury for anything. I don't think they are guilty of anything. All I was trying to establish was the procedure of dealing with this project, similar to how they deal with any other project. No matter who the project manager would be, the system is the same.

Some members made comments about accounts not being reconciled. I think that's an erroneous statement, and we will come to that in due course.

What we are dealing with is also the construction period of Pedro St. James that began in the summer of 1995 leading on to 1997. The visitor's centre aspect of Pedro St. James began in 1997 and the cost of that was in the area of $2.5 to $3 million of a total project construction cost of $6.9 million. So that is another reason I am saying that the reports are self-explanatory, as it relates to Commonwealth Historic Management's handling and the ministry's handling.

I think I stand by what I have said on that account.

[The First Elected Member for George Town rose]

The Deputy Speaker: Is this a point of order, or—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Just a point of clarification please, if you will allow me.

The Deputy Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

POINT OF CLARIFICATION

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I just want to know, and I have to seek your guidance here . . . obviously, as I spoke to these two amendments—I said that I agreed with one and disagreed with the other—is it possible to put the question on the amendments separately, or do we have to vote on both of them together? I just wanted to know.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable member, the Standing Orders give the presiding officer the right to propose two separate propositions within a motion can be put as separate questions. I do not think the Standing Orders give me the right to ask two separate questions. If any member knows otherwise, I will be happy to learn. But I don't know how I can ask two separate questions on one amendment. So I have no choice but to put the question—

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, maybe the Chair would consider that the amendment consists of two parts, (a) and (b), and it's two . . . I would think that it is two separate questions, two propositions. Maybe the Chair would be happy to consider that.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair would be happy to consider that, but if we are going to follow proper procedure, these are Whereas clauses that are being amended and not the propositions being proposed in question form. If it is the wish of the House that I propose these in two separate questions, I will be happy to do it.

The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I think we would like to just keep it together.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that Private Member's Motion No. 6/00 be amended as in the notice provided to members. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES and Noes.

The Deputy Speaker: From the sound of it the Noes have it.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Madam Speaker, can we have a division?

The Deputy Speaker: Certainly.

Madam Clerk. And I think the Ayes need to shout a little bit louder.

The Clerk:

DIVISION 2/00

AYES: 7

Hon. James M. Ryan
Hon. David Ballantyne
Hon. George A. McCarthy
Hon. Truman M. Bodden
Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson
Hon. Anthony Eden
Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly

NOES: 5

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush
Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr
Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts
*Dr. Frank McField
Mr. Roy Bodden

ABSTENTION: 1

Mr. Linford A. Pierson:

ABSENT: 3

Hon. John B. McLean
Mr. D. Dalmain Ebanks
Miss Heather D. Bodden

**Dr. Frank McField: I am confused.*

The Clerk: Seven Ayes, five Noes and one Abstention.

The Deputy Speaker: The result of the division is Seven Ayes, five Noes and one Abstention. The amendment has been carried.

AGREED BY MAJORITY: PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION 6/00 AMENDED.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.05 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.48 PM

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on Private Member's Motion 6/00 as amended. The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, in bringing this motion which was initially put on the Business Paper in June of last year, we sought to use this avenue to determine factually some of the cloudy areas in regard to the phases of construction of the Pedro St. James Project.

To bring perspective to the motion we perhaps should go back in time. As I move along I crave your indulgence to quote from various documents that have been tabled in this Legislative Assembly. I will try not to overdo this, but I need to quote from some of those to make my case.

First, I would like to go to the Government Minute on the Report of the Standing PAC, 23 April 1999. Under the heading of Pedro St. James, it refers to paragraph 16 of the PAC report. The Government reads as follows: "In 1991 the Government purchased the Pedro property with the intent of restoring and developing the site as a heritage tourism attraction and as a historic pride to the Caymanian people. Under the guidance of the Historic Sites Committee, a three-phase process was established to achieve this objective.

- Phase 1 Historic research
- Phase 2 Planning and feasibility advice
- Phase 3 Implementation

"In 1992, Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Limited was retained through the process of international competitive bidding to research and provide technical services and advice to the committee. Following the acceptance of commonwealth's recommendation for the development concept the Ministry on the advice of the Historic Sites Committee made a request to Executive Council and was given approval to waive the Financial and Stores Regulations allowing CHRM to be contacted as project manager for both Pedro St. James and the Queen Elizabeth Botanic Park Projects during the implementation phase."

First of all, let us address this area. I notice that in the Government Minute that as they start in that paragraph "In 1992, Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Limited was retained through the process of international competitive bidding to research and provide technical services . . ." to the Historic Sites Committee. My understanding is that in 1991 government purchased the Pedro St. James site with what I just read as the way forward in mind for its future development. In 1992, CHRM was retained through the normal bidding process to provide the technical advice to create the concept of what the end product would look like which was what everybody was in vogue with and that was what was supposed to happen.

After they created this development concept, and this concept was accepted, I seem to remember (as both you and I, Madam Speaker, were elected in the same year) that it was not very long after our election, in fact it was the following year that a presentation was made here in the Legislative Assembly to outline that concept with various pictures and graphic illustrations of what the entire project was going to look like.

Let us clearly get past the point that there is no question in anyone's mind regarding the concept and what was being sought as the eventual end product being what everybody wanted, not just legislators but the people of the country. So while we are debating this issue there is no question at any time of whether or not the concept was one that was agreeable to the people of the Cayman Islands. No one is questioning that.

But immediately, as we move into the Government Minute, after reaching that stage it seemed obvious that the Historic Sites Committee and perhaps the National Trust that was involved in the conceptual stage of this project seemed content and actually based on what the Minute says gave advice to the ministry to retain CHRM beyond the conceptual stage they had won the bid to create. The next move was for them to be contracted as project manager for the implementation stage of the project.

From the Government Minute (and I have read it) it is my understanding that the Historic Sites Committee recommended to the ministry that these people be retained. The ministry then, as they say, based on this advice, made a request. I am assuming that a paper was prepared and taken to Executive Council. That request was to waive the Financial and Stores Regulations allowing these people to be contracted without the tendering process taking place.

If we are simply looking at what seems to be right, what everyone feels is the right thing to do there is no problem. But what we need to examine is that we have the Historic Sites Committee, and there's a bit of assumption on my part, but I think the assumption is fair, who have obviously developed a relationship with CHRM whereby they are satisfied not only of their commitment but of their technical expertise to see this project through beyond the conceptual stage and actually engage themselves as project manager during the implementation phase of the project to see it to completion.

There comes a problem immediately. In that Government Minute is an Appendix I dated 16 November 1994. It has a reference number, and the heading of it is "Phased Implementation of Pedro St. James National Historic Site and Queen Elizabeth II Botanic Park." Obviously, this is a copy of something from Executive Council.

It says "Council advised that approval should be given to waive the Financial and Stores Regulations section 8(1) and for CHRM to be contracted as project manager of both Pedro St. James and the Botanic Park Projects."

Section 8(1) of the Financial and Stores Regulations, and I am reading from a copy of the Clerk's office which is the only copy in the building so I had to borrow that one, the marginal note is "General principles." Section 8(1) reads: "The principle governing the purchase of goods, works and services for government departments and offices is that they must be acquired by the most economical means commensurate with quality and efficiency so as to obtain the maximum value for the public monies expended. Moreover, they must be obtained openly and competitively so that not only do all potential suppliers of the goods, works and services have an equal opportunity to bid for public contracts, but the award of such contracts is seen by the community at large to be fair and equitable. To this end, except for the purchase of minor goods, works and services, not exceeding $1,000 in value, all goods, works and services required locally by government will be obtained by contract after public tender. In no circumstances may a purchase or project be broken down into smaller components for the purpose of evading tender of contract requirements."

That is the section that the ministry brought a paper to Executive Council asking to be waived which would then allow for these people to enter into a contract without having to go to tender the purpose being that everyone directly involved seemed to be satisfied that these were the people for the job.

But if we go to the PAC Report, on page 22, under Pedro St. James, the report reads: "Based on the recommendations of the National Trust and the Historic Sites Committee, the Ministry of Tourism made a request to the Financial Secretary to allow the existing consultant to continue as project manager for both Pedro St James and the Botanic Park projects without going out to tender. The matter was taken to Executive Council [that is the same paper I am talking about now] who waived the requirement for tendering through the Central Tenders Committee."

The only post that has the right to waive that requirement is the post of Honourable Financial Secretary. I am making a certain amount of assumptions here, which I think are fair. Whoever has knowledge that I am wrong will have to say so afterwards.

I just quoted from documents that the ministry prepared a paper for Council—not to the FS. But I read from the PAC report on the 1997 Auditor General's Report that it was requested by the ministry to the Financial Secretary to waive this process. Yet, the Government Minute says it went to council who waived it. I am assuming that while a system is in place the honourable Financial Secretary would probably have upon receipt of the request suggested input from Council. No problem up to that point.

But, the Government Minute says it was Council that waived it. Council does not have the right to waive that procedure. First mistake!

I am going by the Government Minute, the excerpt from Executive Council, which is very brief and to the point. "Council advised that approval should be given to waive." That could allow that Council gave advice and then the Financial Secretary waived it. I am being as open-ended as I can be.

To this point in time I am going to contend that when Council made the decision everything went from there. Somebody is going to have to refute that contention. But based on the information I have in front of me, the decision was made by Council. In the euphoria of wanting to see this project go, and wanting to see the ball get rolling, so as not to have to go through the tedious and possibly cumbersome procedure of putting out tendering documents for other professional firms of that nature, and really wanting CHRM to do the project, that was the method employed.

I am going to go as far as to say that to that point I will readily accept and truly believe that everything was being done with the best of intention. But you see, as the old saying goes, the way to hell is paved with the best of intentions. Things can happen. One of the basic problems created with that is that you ended up with this firm, CHRM, being employed as the project manager for the implementation phase of Pedro St. James restoration project, being directly contracted by the Ministry of Tourism at the time and having the ability (and I will get into that a little later on) to do their own contracting and subcontracting with all phases of the implementation phase of the project.

You have the ministry who the project manager is responsible to and I think that what happened at that time, while it seemed like the right thing to do, the ministry was certainly ill prepared to deal with the magnitude of the project. It's as simple as that.

I am going to go on to prove that from the very beginning when this paper was brought to Council and that decision made, and subsequent to that all of the problems that arose since then were as a direct result of that cardinal mistake, in my view, at that time, having this project manager hired. No so much because it wasn't done by tender, but the way it ended up in that you had a project manager who was directly responsible for all of the other areas that were going to put the whole show together who were then responsible to the ministry. And the ministry was not equipped to utilise a system of checks and balances to ensure that there was value received for the money spent on the project through the project manager.

That is going to be the whole crux of my argument. In whatever direction I take during the debate I am going to come back to the fact that correct checks and balances were not in place.

If we just pause for a minute and try to picture this scenario, in your ministry my understanding is that you have the minister, who is directly responsible for policy. In the chain of command is the permanent secretary who is the controlling officer and then you have the other staff coming down that chain who will be delegated tasks at various levels for various things, including this project during the ministry's tenure of handling this project.

In my view here is what the ministry found itself saddled with. The project manager who they totally had to depend upon . . . now, granted the project manager was hired because of a perceived level of expertise. That was the whole reason for waiving the Financial and Stores Regulations section (8)1. But the difficulty during that whole procedure, which is not the way government works, which is exactly why you have such procedures as section (8) 1 of the Financial and Stores Regulations, is that you must have checks and balances to satisfy at every level in your chain of command that you are getting value for your money. In my view the ministry did not have that ability.

I would be very curious at this point in time to see the contract that was issued by government to CHRM for the implementation phase. When the minister mentions that Treasury was doing the accounting for the project, I understood what he said, and I understood what he meant. At no point in time was the Treasury deciding how the money was being spent, or how much of it was being spent, and what it was being spent on. Treasury was simply receiving the bills and the batch headers justifying their cutting a cheque, and justifying not from the point of view of value for money but just from a purely mathematical point of view that this is a valid bill, this is what the supporting documentation comes to and that is how much the cheque should be cut for. That's as far as their duty is concerned.

When it comes to deciding on whether you are getting value for money you need to understand clearly the roles that are to be played.

I want to refer to the Public Finance and Audit Law (1997 Revision), Law 23 of 1985. Section 13(1) says, "Estimates of expenditure laid before the Legislative Assembly shall designate the controlling officer in respect of each head and subhead."

It goes on to say, "Subject to section 15(5) a controlling officer shall be responsible and accountable for all expenditure from any head or subhead for which he is the controlling officer and for all public monies and public property in respect of the government department, office or service for which he's responsible. Every controlling officer shall obey all regulations made and directions or instructions given by the Financial Secretary under section 12, and shall if so required account to the Financial Secretary for the performance of his duties as controlling officer. Subject to any regulations made or directions or instructions given by the Financial Secretary under subsection (3) a controlling officer may in accordance with this law incur expenditure and authorise expenditure to be incurred against any provision shown in any subhead for which he is the controlling officer."

It caps it all off by saying, "No expenditure [NO EXPENDITURE!] shall be incurred against any provision shown in any subhead except by or under the authority of the controlling officer."

Now, in case anyone is making the mistake to think that I am trying to say that whatever may have gone wrong is totally the fault of the controlling officer, that is not what I am saying. I am creating a profile to show how the whole thing works. And as I go on further, I am going to explain from my perspective where things went wrong.

We talk about the controlling officer in the project. So what we have before us now is the fact that whatever this CHRM was doing . . . and I am not trying to cast doubt on the integrity of them or anyone else thus far. I am not afraid to do so if that is what I feel like I should do, but I want to make it clear that that is not what I am doing. But you have a controlling officer who answers to the minister, who, in turn, has to delegate tasks to his staff and agree on payments to be made for works or services that are done.

The project manager (which is CHRM) will then provide bills to be paid. But you have nobody in between that circumstance which is again where I say it went wrong. You have no entity in between there with the professional and technical expertise that the controlling officer can rely on except the same project manager. What that means is that you are totally dependent on the project manager that you have hired to ensure that you are getting money for value.

I want to pause here to show the problem. In this day and age if I go to a bank and say 'Well, I've just purchased a piece of land. I want to build four apartments and this is the cost given by my proposed contractor so this is how much I have invested in the property and I have come to negotiate with your bank to loan me this amount of money so that I can get four apartments built.'

The first thing the bank asks is 'Do you have a quantity surveyor who will sign off and certify your various payments to your contractor so that what your contractor collects for was done?'

Do you see the parallel? That was not in place. The reason why the bank does that is not for me to spend more money by hiring a quantity surveyor, but the banks have had enough experience where if the project is supposed to be $90,000, $90,000 is spent and the project is not completed and the people are in a mess. The banks either have to turn around to lend them more money to get it finished, or the people end up with an unfinished product and have to try to sell it because they have no more funds to finish it.

I am giving my views, and they can do however they see fit when they reply, but as far as I can gather this is where the problem was at the beginning. On many occasions you will end up with a project being completed by the contractor and avoid the use of a quantity surveyor to certify payments making sure you are paying for work that has been completed, but the truth of the matter is, the larger the project, the more important that procedure becomes. This was not a small project.

A quantity surveyor will create both a technical and financial profile which sees a project from A to Z. That qualified person can segment the phases of that project and say that if you have completed up to this amount this is how much money you should get. I dare say that the ministry and the personnel in the ministry found themselves in dire straights on many occasions not being sure of what they were doing. In some instances, I am quite sure they were afraid of what they were doing, but had to go with the flow because they couldn't stop it there.

But that is not to say that there is incompetence or anything wrong with the individuals involved in that process within the ministry. The fact is that they were not equipped. They did not have access to the right advice.

Where doubt comes into play, and again I will go through all of that as I go along, with the expenditure incurred is that you had amounts that you had variations to during the process. You had increases in various areas and the only justifications for those increases were given by the people who told you that you had to pay them for the increases. That's the problem.

