My Ministry has worked tirelessly over the summer with the Building Control Unit to ensure that all requirements were met and, further, that the application for change of use is now with the Central Planning Authority. Madam Speaker, while we do not have the certificate of occupancy yet, due to the fact that the CPA will not hear the application until the 8 October [2008], we have been issued special permission to occupy the building.

Building Control Unit has approved all required renovations made by us to bring the building up to code for use as a training facility for persons with disabilities. These renovations now ensure that not only are we fully compliant with the Cayman Islands Building Code (CIBC), but also with the American National Standards Institute (ANSI).

Madam Speaker, this facility which we have just brought up to code is in no way—and I dare say never was—truly suitable for the adequate provision of the range of services which we as a country should be providing to the adult members of our society with disabilities.

Madam Speaker, my Government recognises that we must address this longstanding issue of the provision of a purpose built facility with some urgency. I am pleased to advise that preliminary work has already begun to work on identifying a suitable location for the construction of such a purpose built facility. And it is my intention, God willing, to ensure that funds for the design of such a facility are in next year's budget.

Work is also well underway in the area of improving the operating systems and programmes at the Sunrise Adult Training Centre to ensure that we bring additional value to our clients. In the area of administration, we are looking to revamp our recordkeeping systems and reporting structures and develop a closer working relationship with the parents and guardians of our clients. In the area of programming we are looking into two of the ASDAN schemes—Towards Independence and Workright.

Towards Independence provides a wide (and almost inexhaustible) array of modules that cater to the entire range of disability. The adult learners are assessed using a graduated level of response, such as gestural help or physical help, that enables even the most challenged individual to experience the learning environment.

Workright is a means of accrediting the less challenged adults in a working environment, again, focusing on life skills.

Madam Speaker, the journey towards transforming our education system, whether for those in mainstream education or for those who may be disabled, continues as we seek to bring equity in the provision of education and training services to all of our people of all ages, a commitment which I made at the outset of assuming this office.

In spite of obstacles, in spite of opposition, my commitment to improving services within this sector of our community—persons with disabilities—remains steadfast.

University College of the Cayman Islands Academic Year 2008/2009

Hon. Aiden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I also wish to make a statement on the University College of the Cayman Islands academic year 2008/2009.

I wish to update this honorable House on the various initiatives underway at UCCI thru which we are addressing improvements to the administrative operations of the College, as well as the new initiatives which mark the start of this academic year. As I share them with this honorable House these will give us all renewed confidence and hope as UCCI continues to build on its legacy of a solid academic standing—its trademark since its inception.

Madam Speaker, the past several months have presented us with a number of challenges arising from the series of events surrounding the departure of the former president just prior to the end of the last academic year. In the face of these challenges, my Ministry and the Board of Governors of UCCI have worked closely together keeping our focus on the following:

- The tremendous accomplishments achieved at UCCI in the last couple of years.
- The quality, dedication, and professionalism of the staff.
- The momentum that the institution has built and has committed to build on in the coming academic year.
- The continued delivery of quality education programmes.
- The continued development of new programmes and initiatives as dictated by the demonstrated human capital needs of the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, the critical importance of this institution to Cayman's education system and the opportunities it affords to all our people despite the challenges—indeed, because of them—gives us every reason to believe that UCCI will only grow from strength to strength as it fulfills its mandate as a prestigious tertiary institution in our region.

I am pleased to report that the Board of Governors has taken a very aggressive stance in formalizing financial and administrative policies and procedures to such an extent that will ensure that issues, which have in recent times given us all reason for grave concern in respect of the operations of the College, will not recur. At its most recent meeting last week, the Board of Governors considered the following procedure by which any new policy is to be implemented at UCCI as follows:

1. Any relevant party within the institution can now recommend a new topic to be covered by institutional policy, either through their own initiative or at the request of a member of the management team, and an individual or group of individuals can formulate and draft a policy statement.
2. Once drafted, the policy statement would be required to be presented internally to the Council of Chairs—an internal advisory council made up of academic department heads that meets weekly during the academic year.
3. Once the Council of Chairs is satisfied that the proposed policy meets a need of the institution, it is presented to the President for consideration with subsequent presentation to the Board of Governors.
4. Only policies that are ratified by the Board at a regularly scheduled Board Meeting will be adopted as institutional policies and these will become binding on all parties within the institution.
5. Over the next six months, the overarching theme at UCCI will be one of refinement and overall streamlining of programmes, projects, and operations.

6. During the coming months, all existing policies, both formal and ad hoc, will be streamlined, catalogued, centralized, and a policy manual for UCCI produced for formal acceptance by the Board of Governors. A concrete example of this is the recommendation now before the Board of Governors for the management of corporate credit cards.

Madam Speaker, I fully support the Board of Governors in its efforts to not rest until we have tightened up every loophole, formalized every policy and ensured that the necessary governance procedures are in place so that the Board can rest assured that only with their assent can any matter of significance take place at UCCI.

Without overlooking the importance of long-term objectives, our focus right now must be on the immediate future. We foresee significant progress being made on the short- and medium-term goals of the institution by the end of the 2008 calendar year. January 2009 has been tentatively set as a target date for establishing long-term goals in the form of a 3 - 5 year strategic plan for the institution. This, I believe, is a sensible and realistic approach which the Board has agreed to.

Madam Speaker, I wish to speak to the range of academic programmes which the College has on offer, the improvements planned, as well as the new academic programmes which will be introduced with the start of this new academic year. We hope to build on the range of Academic Partnerships now in place. These include:

- Partnership with the Portfolio of the Civil Service (Civil Service College). Negotiations are underway with the Portfolio of the Civil Service for the continued operation of the Civil Service College. The parameters are being established so that a Service Level Agreement between the two organisations may be signed.
- Rotman School of Business (Certificate in Executive MBA Studies). Last year's successful partnership with the Rotman School of Business will continue this year. A new contract with Rotman will be executed in September 2008. The parameters are consistent with last year's agreement.
- Department of Tourism (Tourism Apprenticeship Training Programme). UCCI has reached an agreement with the Department of Tourism for the continued offering of the CaribCert tourism apprenticeship training programme.

- American Management Association (MHRM). Last year's partnership with the AMA will continue as an integral component of the Master's in Human Resource Management.
- St. Matthew's University (SMU) (Pre-med courses). UCCI has had lengthy discussions with SMU regarding a BSc in science that would suitably qualify a student for medical studies. SMU is very interested in working with UCCI in the development of the degree and facilitating medical studies scholarships for UCCI students. Negotiations are ongoing and management of the two institutions is looking at other potential synergies.
- Tony's Toys (Automotive). The IMI Automotive Technician Light Vehicle level 1 training is scheduled to begin September 10 in partnership with Tony's Toys.
- Cayman Islands Investment Bureau (Business Consulting). Work with CIIB continues as senior UCCI students get real life experience by consulting with investment bureau clients.

Madam Speaker, today I am pleased to conclude these comments by sharing the achievements of our graduates at the July 2008 graduation ceremony where some 199 students received their qualifications among 5 programme areas. To put this in perspective, I will provide the results for the 2007 graduating class made up of 154 students as follows:

Certificate	53	65
Associate	57	61
Bachelor	12	13
Dip. Ed.	0	20
Professional	32	40
Total	154	199

Madam Speaker, the 2007/2008 academic year had an enrollment of: Fall semester, 1,377 students; Spring semester, 1,331 students; and Summer semester, 615 students.

While the Fall 2008 semester registration is still underway, numbers thus far indicate that they will be comparable to the same period last year.

Of note, Madam Speaker, is the Tourism Apprenticeship Training Programme, sponsored by Department of Tourism. This programme had 20 apprentices last year, with an increase to 34 apprentices this year.

Turning to the Cayman Brac UCCI Campus, which opened its doors in January 2008, I am pleased to advise that Spring 2008 semester (when the Civil Service College classes started) 44 students enrolled.

Summer 2008, UCCI launched the first Associate Degree classes with 7 students, and there were 10 students in the Civil Service College.

With the start of this new academic year the full range of Associate Degree classes being offered on this campus are 19 classes (13 by video link, 6 by live instruction).

The Civil Service classes will continue as well and these offerings are being finalized as I speak along with evening continuing education classes.

As of last week some 40 students registered for the UCCI Fall semester on the Cayman Brac campus, and registration continues.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to make this report on the current status of operations at UCCI. While there have been challenges over the past academic year, I am pleased to report that we have taken them on in stride and sought to move the College forward in a variety of ways. These developments, Madam Speaker, speak to brighter futures for all of us in many ways as my Ministry and the Board of Governors of UCCI work closely together with determination in ensuring that the people of these Islands are provided with a high quality tertiary education product. This, Madam Speaker, demonstrates my, and the Government's, overall commitment to transforming education at every level. I will continue to deliver on this promise.

Madam Speaker, we were thrown a major curveball in early Spring of this year, but despite that, despite disappointments from time to time, and despite opposition, I intend to continue to deliver on my promise to improve education in these Islands and to build a brighter future for all of our people, particularly the young.

Thank You.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, with your permission, may I ask a short question under Standing order 30(2)?

Short Questions—Standing Order 30(2)

The Speaker: First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Through you to the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, in the second of his statements, on page 4 he made reference to Cayman Brac UCCI campus saying that when the Civil Service College started 44 students were enrolled. I wonder whether he could inform this honourable House what the current enrollment is at the Cayman Brac UCCI? [Does] it remain at 44?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, in the last sentence on that page which I read, I noted that as of last week some 40 students registered for the UCCI Fall semester on the campus, and registration continues.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

QUESTION NO. 2

No. 2: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture to say if the Board of University College of the Cayman Islands (UCCI) has appointed a new President.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Board of Governors of UCCI has appointed an Acting President, Dr. Brian Chapell, to act for this academic year, 2008/2009.

Dr. Chapell has been with UCCI since 2003. In addition to lecturing in chemistry, mathematics and environmental science, he has served as the Department Chair for the Department of Mathematics and Science, and in 2007 was appointed as Dean of UCCI. Dr. Chapell was recruited from Mohawk College of Applied Arts and Technology in Canada where he was employed fulltime in the Department of Chemical and Environmental Technology from 1998 to 2003. He obtained his PhD in synthetic organic chemistry from the University of Waterloo, in Waterloo, Ontario, Canada.

The Board has set up a Recruitment Subcommittee to initiate the process of procuring a new president to take up office with effect for the 2009/2010 academic year.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries? If there are no supplementaries . . . Madam Clerk.

QUESTION NO. 3

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

No. 3: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture to say whether the former President of UCCI was ever paid personally for work done for other Government departments.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: The situation with the former President of UCCI is the subject of a yet unpublished Auditor General's report and a criminal investigation by the RCIPS. In those circumstances it is inappropriate for this House to discuss the issue raised in this question as it is likely to be sub judice.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Supplementaries

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, the Minister says that it is likely to be sub judice. I am sure it is not sub judice at the present time, and that is [the time] Standing Orders refer to. I do not want to do anything that might prejudice the report, or prejudice a case but, surely, this is a case, if it comes to that, if they can find him.

Madam Speaker, certainly, the Minister must know whether he was ever paid personally for work done in other government departments. That should not be the subject of a criminal investigation.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I know that the Leader of the Opposition has demonstrated, through Finance Committee and since, that he has far more intimate knowledge of what transpired at UCCI than I do as Minister. Perhaps that is why he can be certain it is not sub judice. But having practised law for 20 years, I am satisfied that this matter is likely to be sub judice and I will not be drawn to answer questions which are likely to prejudice a criminal prosecution.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I can say that this is an unpublished Auditor General's report; I can agree with that. But Standing Order 35 (1), dealing with sub judice reads as follows: "Reference shall not be made to any matter on which judicial decision is pending in such a way as might, in the opinion of the Chair, prejudice the interests of parties thereto."

[inaudible interjection]

The Speaker: But I can stand by the fact that this is coming from an unpublished Auditor General's report that has not been taken to the Public Account's Committee.

[inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, on two points: Firstly, there was talking on the floor so I did not quite hear all of what you were saying.

The second point is based on Standing Order 31(1), may I invite the Chair to issue an opinion whether or not it is a sub judice based on the ambit as set out in our Standing Orders as agreed by this honourable House?

The Speaker: Honourable First Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, I just said that. I'm sorry. I just told the Minister that it does not come under that Standing Order. I'm sorry. Are you hearing me now?

[inaudible interjection]

The Speaker: Okay.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Is there another reason why he does not want to answer, Madam Speaker?

The Speaker: First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Through you to the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, can the Honourable Minister confirm to this honourable House whether or not the only reason, defense and/or justification, preventing him from acknowledging an answer to this question is the fact that it is likely or is sub judice?

The Speaker: Honourable First Elected Member, I think he said that as a lawyer he is almost certain that this matter will be sub judice.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Now, Madam Speaker, you made a ruling.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You just made a ruling.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, with your indulgence. That statement, in my respectful submission, is contradictory. As a lawyer he should be much more specific. Besides, he is not here as a lawyer. Our lawyer is the Second Official Member. He is here as a Minister responsible for Education and he has to work within the framework of Standing Order 35 (1), which you have already ruled under.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, it seems like some of us need to get hearing aids or better glasses so that I don't have to keep repeating myself.

It is entirely a matter for the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac if she wishes to defer judgment on matters of such import to other people. I have constitutional responsibility for this Ministry and I am not going to do something that I am satisfied is likely to prejudice a criminal investigation. They can carry on as much as they want over there.

The Leader of the Opposition seems to have an inside conduit to what is going on in the investigation, so let him say whatever it is he wants to say.

The Speaker: I will allow one more supplementary.
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, the Minister has failed miserably in answering questions when it comes to UCCI. He did that in Finance Committee. We are not getting anywhere, so I am prepared to let it go. But I know the Standing Orders in this House should not allow him—and it does not allow him—to sidestep the question the way . . . and, in fact, the Speaker ruled. But the Speaker can't do anything, I know, unless she takes him and says go out of the House, and that is not about to happen either. So, I am willing to let it go, Madam Speaker. It will come out in due time. You may run but you won't hide.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Wha yuh gaw say now? [Caymanian dialect meaning "What you going to say now?"]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I am not sure how that is a question, but this Minister has no intention of running or hiding from anything because he has done nothing wrong.

The Leader of the Opposition knows all about the reasons for running and hiding.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: What is the point of order?

The Speaker: Madam Clerk, may I have the next question please?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I know when somebody is running, hiding and ducking, and nobody has done it as good as that Minister. And that is why he had long statements this morning. But you won't run—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, could you—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —you won't hide.

The Speaker: —ask the next question, please?

QUESTION NO. 4

No. 4: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture, to say who appointed the former President of UCCI.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, the former president was appointed by the then UCCI Board of Governors, pursuant to section 16 (1) of the University College Law.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Supplementaries

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, section 16 (1) of the University Law says, "There shall be a president of the College who shall be appointed by the Board with the prior approval of the Minister."
Did the Minister appoint this man?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: the Board appointed the President with the prior approval of the Minister, as the Law requires.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: So, the Minister is saying, Madam Speaker, that he gave the approval to the Board?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, Madam Speaker. The process is and was that the then Board, which was chaired by Mr. Danny Scott, made a recommendation to the Minister, having considered the applicants before it, and recommended that Dr. Hassan Syed, as he was then called, be appointed as the [President.] And this Minister, Alden McLaughlin, gave his approval based on the recommendations received.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, did the Minister or the Ministry go through any documentation, background checks, anything to do with the applicant or the then, whatever he was, the man they appointed [Mr. Hassan?] Did they check his background? Did the Ministry do that before the Board made their recommendation to the Minister? And did the Minister, himself, after he got recommendations from the Board, do those checks?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, the process is, or was: The position was advertised by the Board of Governors; they set out the parameters; they set out the requirements for the fulfilment of the position; they received the applications; they considered the applications; they made recommendations. I did not view it and the Ministry does not view it as our role to carry out background checks. The appointment was an appointment of the Board of Governors of a statutory authority charged with the responsibility for these matters. I was the Minister responsible at the time; I gave my approval. I don't know how much further we can take this, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I will allow one more supplementary, Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, the Ministry has its Chief Officer as a member of the Board (of the statutory authority, he calls it). Did she make any background checks or recommend to him that any background checks should have been done on Mr. [Hassan] or . . .

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Syed.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah. Whatever he was. Something like that, Mr. Syed.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: No, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, what needs to be appreciated in this case . . . and this is not making any excuses. I do not accept that it is my role or the Ministry's role to carry out those background checks. It is my role to approve or not approve based on recommendations I get, which I did, and I take responsibility for that. But I do not take responsibility for carrying out background checks.

But in fairness to the then Board, which was appointed by the Leader of the Opposition's Government, I should add, they—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Tell us what they should have done then.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr. Syed was hired as a lecturer at the Law School [sic]. This was not someone who had applied for the job out of country. He was, everyone thought, a known quantity, and so, no doubt what happened, as the press reports have said, and as others have said over the course of this affair, he represented to the then President that he was pursuing a doctorate degree. He was given time off by the then President to go away and pursue. He came back at some point and proclaimed himself as a doctor.

There is nothing in the records that we have been able, or the people there have been able to find, and this is what they have said to me, which indicates that he was never asked by the then Board to produce his doctorate. But everyone started calling him Dr. Syed. I'm not sure exactly what date that was; I think it was 2003 or something like that. So, when the post became vacant this was a man who was there, was a known quantity who had done amazing things as a lecturer and came highly recommended by all concerned. And so, it seems that what happened is the Board never inquired further into the degree aspect.

Now, that is not an excuse. That is an explanation as to what happened. But, of course, the Leader of the Opposition wants Alden McLaughlin to look bad, so he is trying to say that he should—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No, I don't want you to look bad, my son.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —have checked to see whether the man had a degree or not. It is not my responsibility. My responsibility is to approve on recommendation, and that I did. Whatever the consequences of that are I accept, but I do not accept that it is my responsibility to check these records.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I think you have said that this gentleman was a lecturer at the Law School. You meant a lecturer at the University College?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, Madam Speaker, at the University College, not at the Law School. He was never at the Law School.

The Speaker: Okay.
Madam Clerk.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: He was not known as no doctor though, was he?
Yes?

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

Private Member's Motion No. 7/08-09—Scientific Study to Ascertain Cancer in the Islands

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: The debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 7/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister responsible for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As we come back to a very serious and grave topic, that is, a health situation that affects us all, before I make my comments on the Motion, I would like to say that I . . . and this House would probably note with sadness the 7th Anniversary of 9/11 when terrorists snuffed out the lives of over 3,000 people in New York. We live, many of us, with families and connections to that.

And oh, Madam Speaker, I am gravely and frightfully reminded of our 9/11,12,13 Hurricane Ivan. And I pray that with the help of God, with still a number of months left in the season, we will be spared as we were so blessed in the recent weeks.

Madam Speaker, I will take a slightly different approach and take this opportunity to talk a little bit about what cancer is, what it is all about. And this is information similar to what the Leader of the Opposition spoke from—information from the WHO (World Health Organization).

Cancer is a generic term for a large group of diseases that can affect any part of the body. Other terms used are malignant tumor and neoplasm. One defining feature of cancer is the rapid creation of abnormal cells that grow beyond their usual boundaries, and which can then invade adjoining parts of the body and spread to other organs. This process is referred to as metastasis. Metastasis is the major cause of death from cancer (that means that when it is broken off it travels through the lymphatic system and goes to other parts or organs of the body).

Madam Speaker, what causes cancer? This is something we all question and wonder why in this day and age when the world out there can spend, I think it was six or seven billion dollars to knock together something to disprove creation, why don't they try to put more of that money on research? Because we are still searching for what causes cancer.

Cancer arises from one single cell, the transformation from a normal cell into a tumor cell is a multi-stage process, typically a progression from a precancerous lesion to malignant tumor. These changes are the result of the interaction between a person's genetic factors and three categories of external agents, including:

1) Physical carcinogens such as ultraviolet and ionizing radiation.

2) Chemical carcinogens such as asbestos. . . which I can relate to this, Madam Speaker because two of my brothers have suffered from this. It is a relatively new type of cancer, better known to the medical world as mesothelioma. There is an occurrence, as I understand from M. D. Anderson, of about three thousand new cases a year. I was surprised to know that the incubation period for this type of cancer can be from 10 to 30 to 40 years—as we are now seeing [happening to] many of our Caymanians who in the olden days went to sea and served as engineers in engine rooms.

And I will tie this back, Madam Speaker, to one of the perceptions that many of us, including myself, felt about the high degree of cancer here in the Cayman Islands. But I will go on to show that the vast majority of cancers trip in as we get older.

2) . . . Chemical carcinogens such as asbestos Components of tobacco smoke, aflatoxin (that is a food contaminant) and arsenic (a drinking water contaminant). I am made to understand that arsenic is just about banned and I know the asbestos compounds are also banned from being included in anything.

3) Biological carcinogens such as infections from certain viruses, bacteria or parasites. Some examples of infections associated with certain cancers. Viruses: Hepatitis B and Liver cancer, the Human Papilloma Virus (better known as HPV) and cervical cancer, and HIV, Human Immunodeficiency Virus and Kaposi sarcoma.

Other areas are bacteria, the Helicobacter pylori and gastric cancer. I have known a handful of cases here in the Cayman Islands in recent times, of what we would call the stomach cancer.

Interestingly, the next one is parasites, which comes from the Schistosomiasis, and bladder cancer.

Aging, Madam Speaker, as I just alluded to earlier, is another fundamental factor for the development of cancer. The incidence of cancer rises dramatically with age, most likely due to buildup of risks for specific cancers that increase with age. Though overall risk accumulation is combined with a tendency for cellular repair mechanisms to be less effective as a person grows older (I'm not saying this to frighten those of us that are getting up and starting to grow up).

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Tobacco use, alcohol use, low fruit and vegetable intake and infections, as I alluded to earlier, from Hepatitis B and C, and the Human Papilloma Viruses (HPV) are leading risk factors for cancer in low and middle-income countries. Cervical cancer, which is caused by HPV, is the leading cause of cancer death among women in low-income countries. In high-income countries, the one and only tobacco use, alcohol use and interestingly being overweight or obese are primarily causes of cancer.

World Health Organization asked how the burden of cancer can be reduced. And I know that the mover of the Motion, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, mentioned some of these. For the benefit of the listening audience and for the people out there I will repeat some of them.

Knowledge about the causes of cancer, interventions to prevent and manage the disease, is extensive. Cancer can be reduced and controlled by implementing evidence based strategies for cancer prevention. Early detection of cancer and management of patients with cancer—and, Madam Speaker, I will take my hat off to the Women's Lion Club of Tropical Garden. The effort they have put into this over many years I think is paying off because one of the philosophies they have is that early detection is one of the better, if not the best, prevention.

About 30 per cent of cancer could be prevented by modifying or avoiding key risk factors, according to a 2005 study by international cancer collaborators. Key risk factors for cancer: tobacco use, being overweight or obese, low fruit and vegetable intake, physical inactivity, alcohol use, sexually transmitted infections such as HIV and HPV, urban air pollution, indoor smoke from household use of solid fuels. I found that one quite interesting and almost disturbing.

Prevention strategies: increase avoidance of the risk factors listed above. Vaccinate against Human Papilloma Virus (HPV) and Hepatitis B Virus (HBV) infection). And I know that the vaccination for HPV is a relatively new thing. It is being used. A number of people have had (relatively speaking) some adverse reaction to the HPV injection. But I am made to understand that the long-term benefit of this inoculation is really worth it, and in collaboration with the Cancer Society and our Public Health Department, we are looking at providing that to our people.

Other prevention strategies are to control occupational hazards. And here in the Cayman Islands, especially in areas with a lot of sunlight, reduce exposure to sunlight.

Back to early detection, as I alluded to earlier, about one-third of the cancer burden could be decreased if cases were detected and treated early. Early detection of cancer is based on observation. The treatment is more effective when cancer is detected earlier. The aim is to detect the cancer when it is localised (that is before metastasis). There are two components of early detection efforts: Education to help people recognise early signs of cancer and seek prompt medical attention for symptoms, which might include lumps, sores, persistent indigestion, persistent coughing, and bleeding from the body's orifices. Screening programmes to identify early cancer or pre-cancer before signs are recognisable, including mammography for breast cancer and cytology, which is a pap smear for cervical cancer. This is being done routinely now here in the Cayman Islands.

Just this morning I was talking with one of the representatives from Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) who is visiting here, and he was indicating to me that cancer of the cervix, which is rare, can last up to 20 years. Some of these figures are mind boggling. And I know, Madam Speaker, as we talk about the great concern for cancer here in the Islands and looking at percentages and statistics—within my family, two parents, two brothers now, father-in-law and wife, almost 60 per cent of my immediate family. But the interesting thing about this, Madam Speaker, except for two, they were all different types of cancer and a number of these were at different ages which indicate that cancer is no respecter of persons.

As I look at my colleague, the Minister of Education, sitting on my right here, just incidentally—and I hope he does not mind—I wonder about the genetic connection between his mother and my father-in-law, my wife's father. One died from the colon cancer and I think his [mom's death] emanated from breast cancer. Once again, is it that the genes have something to do with it? I hope not for all of us. Of course, he has got one side of his family that lives on, and on, and on, and on. Hopefully, with the help of God, he will be in that percentage.

Madam Speaker, as I alluded to the lady Lions of Tropical Gardens and the wonderful job they are doing, I also must pay great tribute and thanks to the Cancer Society and Hospice Care. In collaboration with the Cancer Society we were able to raise funds and now have in place one of the most modern state of the art mammogram machines here in the Islands. All of this bodes well for our people as we go forward to early detection.

I move on now, Madam Speaker, to the treatment and care: Treatment aims to cure, prolong life and improve quality of life for patients. Some of the most common cancer types, such as breast cancer, cervical cancer and colorectal cancer, have high cure rates when detected early and treated according to best practice. Principal treatment methods are surgery, radiotherapy and chemotherapy. Fundamental for adequate treatment is an accurate diagnosis through imaging technology, ultrasound, endoscopy or radiography, and laboratory pathology investigations.

In this day and age relief from pain and other problems can thankfully be achieved for over 90 per cent of cancer patients through palliative care, which, as I alluded to earlier on, the Hospice Care has been very effective. What a wonderful and blessed organisation they are.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, is this a convenient time to take the luncheon break?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker, it is.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 1.02 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.47 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continuing on Private Member's Motion No. 7/08-09. The Honourable Minister of Health continuing his debate.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When we took the luncheon break I was sharing some information from the World Health Organization (WHO) that they pass out in regard to causes of cancer in a bit more detail, what happens and so on. I was speaking about one of the things that they do in helping to provide relief from pain and other problems. In this day and age, over 90 per cent of cancer patients [are helped] through palliative care and the effective ways that exist to provide this care for patients and their families, especially, Madam Speaker, those in lower resource settings. Those of us who have had any dealings with the Hospice Care have seen how effective they are. They have done a marvelous job here in the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, in 2007 the WHO launched its organisation wide action plan against cancer with goals. I will list a number of them: Prevent what is preventable; cure what is curable; provide palliative care for all cancer patients; and manage and monitor the results. A key purpose of the plan is to help member countries develop national cancer control programmes that are people centered, promote equity (that is, focus on marginalised people); secure ownership (that is, involve the stakeholders); include partnerships and multi-sectoral approaches which involve both the public and private sectors. Madam Speaker, this is certainly evidenced by the wonderful job by the Cayman Islands Cancer Society, the Hospice Care and the lady Lions of Tropical Gardens, in the partnership that we have been able to establish.

I know you, Madam Speaker, at one time paid an integral role in suggesting the Lady Lions take these initiatives to improve the quality of life we have here in the Cayman Islands in making sure that things are sustainable as it becomes self-reliant in the long term, that they are integrated with related public health efforts; take a step by step approach based on set priorities; follow evidence based practices (that is to say that good practices which have been found to benefit cancer patients, whether it is in Cayman or anywhere else in the world, and to use those practices).

World Health Organization and other United Nations organisations and partners collaborate on international cancer prevention and control to:

- increase political commitment for cancer prevention and control;
- generate new knowledge and disseminate existing knowledge to facilitate the delivery of evidence based approaches to cancer control;
- develop standards and tools to guide the planning and implementation of interventions for prevention, early detection, treatment and care;
- facilitate broad networks of cancer control partners at global, regional and national levels;
- strengthen health systems at national and local levels (which we are undertaking here in the Cayman Islands through the HSA and what we plan to do with the new approach to public health where greater focus will be placed on early detection, earlier intervention, and better diagnostic equipment when we acquire and we are in the process of a new MRI and other equipment for radiology);
- provide technical assistance for rapid effective transfer of best practice interventions to developing countries.

Madam Speaker, the Motion cites the high incidence of various cancers in our Islands. We have indeed been faced for some time with a perception of what the Honourable Member, the Leader of the Opposition describes. It is perhaps now time to change this misperception. We continue to monitor the situation and to collect the relevant data, and remain generally satisfied that any perception of high rates of cancer in Cayman is not quite so when compared to other regions. However, to some extent it seems the perception lingers and, accordingly, Government welcomes this Motion and I thank the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for it.

This Motion, Madam Speaker, provides an opportunity to give some clarity to the matter. The Hansard (as was alluded to earlier in the debate of the Leader of the Opposition) will show that an extensive report was done in 2002. Incidentally, Madam Speaker, in response to Motion 12 of 2000 moved by you, that report showed that there was not a sound connection between the use of insecticides and the incidence of cancer in the Cayman Islands. Madam Speaker, we will not rest on our laurels, as time has elapsed since that time period, and it is time that we once again take a closer look.

Some persons may say that they do not want to hear about data, but we can all see what is happening around us. I suspect these may be the same persons who have the perception of a high incidence of cancer and, as I drew the relationship with myself earlier this morning, it is not necessarily a perception but there are certain families where it has such great prevalence. I, myself, out of ten people . . . it was either 5 or 10 of them who had a touch of one version of cancer or the other. I am acutely aware, as Minister of Health, of the pain and suffering caused by this disease. I have been through it so many times. The way it wreaks havoc in people's lives.

I understand that it is a very emotive matter for many. Of course, it still remains that for there to be a high incidence of any kind of disease it would be a matter of the number of cases. I can offer a firm assurance to everyone who is listening to me, and they may repeat it to any who want or need to hear, that our cancer rates are not abnormally high. They are not even comparatively high. This is illustrated by data compiled. I will table the document, Madam Speaker.

In the 2007 Pan American Health Organization, which showed mortality rates due to cancer per 100,000 people as follows: Bahamas—82.5; United States—193.5; Cayman Islands—73.2; and Barbados—153.2; just to name a few.

Madam Speaker, to look more closely at our experience, our figures over the past 10 years roughly amount to one in every 4 deaths being due to cancer. This is very similar to the experience of the United States and others, or what are called the "Developed Nations".

Just this morning I was talking to the gentleman from PAHO and he said that we as a developing country (and you know most of our development has taken place in the last 30 or 40 years) have compared extremely well with other developing countries in the problems with cancer.

In addition, Madam Speaker, and it may be of interest to honourable Members and the public to note that the Cayman Islands crude incidence rate of male cancers per 100,000 population was 97.8, whereas the figures for the Caribbean, as a whole, were 167.2. And quite interestingly, the great United States and the United Kingdom figures are almost four times that amount. This is gathered from information that is fed into the offices of WHO and PAHO and this is why we deduced . . . and I know maybe the yardstick is not the way to go, but at this time this is the only yardstick that we can measure these problems with.

The Cayman Islands crude incidence rate of female cancers is 142.9 per population of 100,000. Also, lower than the Caribbean as a whole, at 172.9, again, the great United States and Canada figures are significantly more—almost four times as high. I would urge the community to be mindful of a few key facts concerning the nature of this most stubborn and frightening disease, as well as some well known key risk factors. And I beg, Madam Speaker, that you forgive me for once again repeating these risk factors.

Among the key risk factors are the following: Topping the list is tobacco use, being overweight or obese, low fruit and vegetable intake, physical inactivity, alcohol use, sexually transmitted infections such as HIV and HPV, and the urban air pollution. I think we are blessed in these Islands that we do not have too much problem with that.

Quite interestingly, in some of the figures that we researched locally, our population was about 20,000 in the early 80s; about 30,000 in the early 90s; 40,000 in the year 2000, and now probably close to 60,000. The deaths in the early 80s were about 100 per year, and now, approximately 160 deaths a year out of almost 60,000.

Madam Speaker, when you compare those figures you will see that the deaths from that [time] are not an abnormal jump from where they were twenty-something years ago. With some minor fluctuations the crude death rate in the Cayman Islands, in general, has gradually fallen from 5.3 per 1,000 population during 1984, to 3.4 in 1995 and remained around that with the latest being 2.8 in 2007.

Whatever we are doing here . . . I was so pleased to see and will table this "Health Situation in the Americas: Basic Indicators", and the figures will reflect that out of 56 territories in the Americas or in the Western Hemisphere that the Cayman Islands, these three little dots, the Northwestern Caribbean, ranked as tied for second with Canada in the Life Expectancy. Our life expectancy tied with Canada was 82.9 years of age. Canada was the same, and interestingly the US Virgin Islands was number one with life expectancy at 83.3 years, just a fraction more than us here in the Cayman Islands.

This evidence shows that because of the type of living we do here and the type of care provided, we are extending lives. And, as I said earlier, cancer is a degenerative disease associated with the aging process and occurs most frequently in individuals above 40 years old and is also more common as a cause of death after 60 years of age. As a matter of fact, such is the case in Cayman with 80 per cent of cancer deaths occurring after 60 years of age. Madam Speaker, the indication is that our people are living longer and longer, thus a reduction in premature deaths overall and the risk factor for cancer increases, as I indicated, as people get older.

We must note, though, that overall buildup of risk is combined with the tendency for the natural repair mechanisms of the body to be less effective as a person grows older. This is why it is said that cancer is a degenerative disease, and as I said earlier on, 80 per cent of cancer deaths occur after 60 years of age.

Madam Speaker, in closing I would like to stress a few points: First, just to note that this information is sourced both from our professional partner in health, the Pan American Health Organization, as well as from our own data collection, and it is a testament to our distinguished record in disease surveillance through public health. To that end, I was very pleased to note that one of our own young gentlemen, Timothy McLaughlin, was awarded excellent performance on communicable disease surveillance by PAHO through Caribbean Epidemiological Centre (CAREC). That keeps track of all of the different illnesses and percentages in the entire CARICOM (Caribbean Community area). We have done an outstanding job in recording this but there is still a long way to go.

Secondly, we are reminded again that it is, above all else, the lifestyle choices we make that can predispose us to contract some of these cancers. In this regard the most important thing to be said here is that people must take this more seriously and make changes where they need to. And I know it is quite—

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Oh! I would not say that about my colleagues.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Incidentally, Madam Speaker, I am pleased to note that after some delay, this week we have finally tabled the Tobacco Bill. And this will go a long way. But I do not think we need to tell our Caymanians what to do; they know the right thing. I must take this opportunity, Madam Speaker, to say how proud I am of you! You and I came in here sixteen years ago and you have made that decision. I know from your side you have some good longevity there and I am hoping you will get a couple of 100 more on to that. This is the way to go, Madam Speaker; a good life style!

And I know my two colleagues, the one from East End and my colleague from George Town, are trying their best and we are going to support them to make sure that they are here to represent their people for a good time ahead.

Madam Speaker, while much is being done in terms of early detection in case management, the real progress will come about here when we appoint a director of Public Health and establish a fully revamped Public Health Department. Much progress has already been made in that direction and, amongst other benefits, these changes will do much to keep the public, as well as this honourable House, informed on a timely basis, which up until this time we have not been able to do.

As to the state of health of the country, whether it is the incidence of cancer or gastroenteritis or other types of diseases, one of the things I know the Leader of the Opposition spoke about was a cancer registry. I am sure, in working in collaboration with the Cancer Society, that this will come. I am looking forward to it. Through this cancer registry, Madam Speaker, there will be significantly more detail, more pinpointing, as it is amazing the variety and the kinds of cancers we have here in the population of this little Island. I am sure this will go a long way in satisfying the request of the mover of this Motion to pinpoint and then be able to tie and see what may have caused some of these cancers, whether it was environmental or what.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I want to thank the mover for this Motion, and once again, to say that in meeting with the gentleman from PAHO who is visiting with us this week, he has committed that they would be willing to consider drawing on their vast expertise in providing technical assistance in doing research on this problem that none of us have been able to deal with in our lives.

Once again, I thank the mover for the Motion and I wish to note that our proposed plan of action is to prepare a report to start with for the benefit of the House, which follows the pattern of the previous effort in 2002 in using the resources to speak to local types and causes of cancer. The Government respectfully moves to accept the Motion on this basis, Madam Speaker, and I look forward to working at least for the next few months with my elected colleagues in making these Islands a better and healthier place. May God bless us all!

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, yesterday we were discussing the fate of our lives with hurricanes and how to prevent them from affecting our lives and we agreed with the spirit of the Motion. Today, we are talking about our lives again: something that has been afflicting mankind from a long time ago.

Way back in ancient Greece the Mummies were found with tumors which can be put to having had some form of cancer. Even the great philosophers way back in 400 BC—as a matter of fact, cancer looked like crabs, and the word cancer, which is “carcinoma”, came from the great philosophers.

I do not wish to go over the history as my colleague did very brilliantly to awaken us as to history, causes and factors of cancer. But I have personal experience, Madam Speaker, as a cancer survivor. And from that point I will speak.

I agree with the Minister on the different causes which research has said, in terms of the risk factors that we have. But I would like to spend a little time on a couple of points in terms of what I see in the Cayman Islands from my own experience.

Madam Speaker, this last month was exactly 10 years since I was diagnosed with a carcinoma. The first word I don't remember but I know it was one of the carcinomas. Cancer of the tongue. That was ten years ago. And when it was detected here it was almost strange. They immediately flew me off to Miami where I stayed for four months and had to go through treatment of chemotherapy and radiation. And, Madam Speaker, I am here to tell you that the treatment is worse than the illness. But we do not want our people to experience exactly what I have experienced. I agree with the learned Minister, we want to have our people live longer.

I must say that what I have seen here in the Cayman Islands, from the time that I was diagnosed as a cancer person, I believe that there has been a great progression of change for the better, in particular in the hospital. There is a consciousness, Madam Speaker, particularly with the Non-governmental Organisations (NGOs) like the Lions, Hospice Care, Bosom Buddies and the Cancer Society.

Every year there is great awareness by the Cancer Society and the education of cancer as a preventable disease. Most doctors will tell you today that cancer is a preventable disease, except for those which have had some genetic factor, but most of them are preventable. If you take colon cancer, it is preventable. Colon cancer is about eating a lot of high fats in your diet and it is about a diet issue. If you take lung cancer, in most cases it is about tobacco usage. Whatever cancer there is, it is preventable, with the exception of some of them, and that is what I would like to speak about today in terms of us.

I understand where the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is trying to go about ascertaining, but I believe that we have a good picture if we can go back to our records. We have a good picture of cancers in the Cayman Islands and the Minister has delineated a lot of it. But I believe what we really need to talk about, and I would ask the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in his summing up, if he would talk a little bit about the whole question of preventing cancer. We can. I know that. It was a little late but I can give that experience that I have.

Madam Speaker, it is the whole question of our lifestyles: how we live, what we eat, what we drink, what we do in terms of cohabitation, what we do in terms of even our pleasure in life, which is perhaps related to some sexual encounter. When you look at cervical cancer, Madam Speaker, people might say cervical cancer has a lot to do with prevention. From my knowledge that is a virus that is given to the female from intercourse. What I am saying is that because we know that we can prevent that big word that the Minister used a while ago (Human Papilloma Virus (HPV)) . . . that we know is preventable.

Madam Speaker, when we look at the Cayman Islands—and I think the Leader of the Opposition spoke about the Third World countries yesterday, having such a high incidence of cancer. And I believe that the Minister spoke about the viral diseases that we could get, and I would like to say that we, in the First World/Third world, do not look at our diet as closely as we should because diet has a lot to do with cancers.

What we eat and how we eat. High starch, high sugars, and high fats are all preventable.

I have become conscious, and I hate to be speaking here about myself, but I am an experienced person in this topic. I have made a consciousness, in particular in the last two to three months to look a little more at my health. I spent an inordinate amount of money for my vacation this year in order to get back into a healthy lifestyle: what I should eat, drink, and what I should consume, or where I should consume. And all of us may look at me and say 'but you should have known that a long time ago'. But, Madam Speaker, we do not take our own counsel. We can say whatever we wish—and I will be very personal here: Even in our dining room where we eat in this honourable House, there is no consciousness of what we eat and how it can affect us; the fat that we eat. Yes, it may taste good: everything that is good is bad for you. We know that from consumption to consumption. We know that it is bad for you.

I would ask also that whoever prepares the food for the legislators, that if they want us to live a long time like 83 and all of that, as the Minister is talking about—not in the House but afterwards, right—then I would ask that we look at our menu. How balanced it is in terms of good fats and good carbs? How balanced it is in terms of a lot of vegetables and meats that are not injected with a lot of hormones, et cetera?

I know we might all be saying, 'but I like my nice steak and I like this'. Fair enough! I think we can have a nice steak but it could be organic too; it must be grass fed. These are things that I believe the Cayman Islands, in addition to what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is saying about the incidence, must be cognizant about. It has to do a lot with our habits and lifestyles. So, we have to, Madam Speaker, look at the lifestyles that we have.

I am not a prude here, Madam Speaker. I don't pretend to be what I am not. I am not going to tell people that they must not drink or smoke. That is an individual decision that we make whether it is good for us or not. And a lot of things that we do, which are not seen to the naked eye, are not good for us either. But, I would say, in particular to us as legislators—and I am not here to dig out anyone's eyes or to be a prude—we could set the tone in our health, first of all by eating well in the legislature. If we do not eat another meal anywhere else that is balanced, we must try to have a good meal that is quite balanced in the legislature. Madam Speaker, that will make a difference in the preventable aspect of whether we get cancer or not.

Now, I am not here to say that my cancer will not return. Of course it will return; I just don't know when. However, I am trying to ensure that it returns slowly. The mutation is there already. Although I have gone through all of the different treatments, the cells have been changed up and I do have the potential to have cancer again. But if we screen ourselves well, and this is to encourage our people in the Cayman Islands to have an annual check up. Cancer comes on you, not because doctors see it, you know; they can come on you without a doctor seeing it.

As a matter of fact, a lot of times it is only when the cancer has come to such a stage that we go to the doctor and he says that we have cancer. But if we could prevent cancer from childhood by trying to prevent our children from being so obese; trying to make our children have a balanced meal ('balanced' meaning in terms of the pyramid); trying to prevent our children from having a lot of sugars; trying to have our children exercise, whether it is in or out of school; trying to have our mothers to have a good lifestyle and always remember what goes inside of them comes out in somebody. I know that, Madam Speaker. I know that from personal experience. What goes inside of mothers comes out in somebody else and I also think that there is some research now which says that what goes inside of fathers come out in somebody else.

At the end of the day we have to get the schools, parents, churches, legislation if need be—I know that is a tough one to put legislation to but the legislation perhaps can come from the Honourable Minister for Education, when it comes to his physical education in the schools. And we all know the Honourable Minister for Education is pro-health. He rides 50 miles a day. Well the Honourable Minister for Health is getting there as well. So, he is conscious, but I would like for that consciousness to go into what he does in terms of our physical education for our children. And even if it is legislation, Madam Speaker, and I am not here to say how it should go, but all of this that I am saying is not just chat, it has to do with how we prevent cancers, and most cancers can be prevented. I have always heard that.

You know when I found out that I had cancer the first thing I said to the specialist when I arrived at Baptist was, 'How did I get it?' You know what he said to me? He said, 'Let's not worry about how you got it, let's worry about how we can free you of it and you can live longer'. And that is true.

So, when our people, having been screened find out that they have cancer and they are treated in our hospital or in Baptist, one concern I have, Madam Speaker, and which I deal with on a regular basis, is the resources of those persons who have cancer. I think the Government is extremely good by sending people off to the hospitals in various parts of the US, either for an operation or treatment, but at the end of the day, we need to ensure that when a person has cancer they need some caregiver around them, whether it is family or a friend. So, when we take our people and send them to Cleveland [Hospital] or Baptist [Hospital] or wherever else we send them, we need to ensure that for the four, six or eight weeks they are there that they have close relationships.

Madam Speaker, I have seen in my time people. And one person now deceased. I was there at the same time he was there and not a soul was there with him except I would keep his company. I could not talk. My relationship with him was through writing. But I saw where he did not have the wherewithal to bring a family. And we need to extend, not necessarily our insurance but some sort of organization which is close to the Cancer Society to ensure that they raise funds to help people like these.

I have an incident now and this is not cancer: this is about a heart, where the only person that can go with this young child is an old aunt who does not have anything. She relies, as you know, on the politicians to give part of their salary. And so that is what you have to do.

So, I would say that we look also at the support that the cancer person gets through care giving, either here, Jamaica, or when we send them to the US . . . because, Madam Speaker, it is very, very, very important.

Madam Speaker, I too want to applaud the NGOs. I know what they do, especially the Lions of Tropical Gardens. I have attended many, many of their educational workshops. What I think is so good about them, is that they go around and collect money for people in this country, whether you come from Timbuktu or from wherever else, but it is anybody. And they are able to help women get a mammogram, a screening.

Now, Madam Speaker, if we do the screenings that we have to do—and forgive me, Madam Speaker, if I twist my words a little bit. Let's take the whole question of having colon cancer. If we know that after you've reached the age of 50 or 40 (I can't remember exactly what age group) we do a colonoscopy, it is expensive! That lasts for 10 years and when you look at the inside of your intestines they see polyps and right away if polyps are there they either snip them off and if not then they know what to do with it. Or, if it is that serious, they will have an operation which at that time is taking part of your intestine off and you are wearing a sack, or they have to stitch you in a different way. It is tough. It is a hard life. Not too many people live very long having had colon [cancer]. But that is preventable.

Imagine, Madam Speaker, it takes 10 years for a polyp to develop to a cancerous state. Ten years! And once you have ascertained through this screening process and you know you have a polyp, you have 10 years or less to treat it, prevent it, or change your lifestyle.

There is a little group called Bosom Buddies. Well it is implicit what it is, eh? They are a group of women who have had mastectomies and what they do is to bring each other [together], comfort each other and look after each other. There are a lot of women who have had breast cancer. And, of course, Madam Speaker, at the end when life seems to not be in your favour, there comes Hospice [Care] for whom I have a lot of respect. I saw them nurse my niece for a while until she passed on. But I would appeal to the listening audience that we need more NGOs; we need more concerned persons to be involved in this because this is an issue about the whole longevity of human beings. This is not just about cancer you know, this is about the longevity of human beings.

So, Madam Speaker, my final point is to say that I applaud the Government and successive governments too for what they have done to keep people alive. I know it is inordinately expensive, particularly when they make a conscious decision and send you off. Within one and a half days I was in Baptist Hospital—and I was not a politician—if you think back ten years ago. Within one and a half days I was in Baptist and I know that other people have had that experience. I hope it is not because I might have had some influence in my life or people think that I am some important person. I think it should also apply to the poorest of the poor, that we do not question whether they should stay here, or that it takes a lot of money.

It does, but if we can have a government that can take on the responsibility to send you overseas, then we should have conscious persons in this society through the business sector, through the people that have social responsibility, to put money in whatever fund it is to help the poor people take their families and help them out. Madam Speaker, I would say 90 per cent of healing is when you know that you have a good doctor and you believe in that doctor, and when you have friends and family, or caregiver by your side.

I want to thank the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for bringing this and I hope that he has listened to the tack that I have taken about screening and prevention. And yes, we have enough evidence to know, because cancer is not just a new phenomena, [cancer] is as old as mankind. But what we want to do is be able to preserve human beings in the Cayman Islands before they get the disease and, after they get the disease, they can have a longer life.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Honourable Minister for his acceptance of the Motion and his input thereto.

I also want to thank the Third Elected Member for George Town for her debate, being a person who has suffered this dreaded disease, she could speak from experience. Some of us can only read and perhaps we have experienced, as the Minister said, because family members have been affected.

I had a sister who was in her late twenties, twenty-nine, thirty, thereabouts, who died with it and I know the suffering, apart from seeing other family members. I just had a cousin, my best friend, one who actually made me say, 'I have to change my lifestyle' and that is when I decided that I was going to try to be a good Christian. He was 70 but he was a jovial person, loved life, had a good time, and to see him suffer the way he did . . .

I will never forget how Kerry, my wife, was in Baptist Hospital at the time and I was with her. I left to come home that Tuesday to attend the funeral on Wednesday, and I can never forget that at that point I said, 'You know what, all this fun we have, all the dancing and carousing we do, all of it affects your body, your health' and it was there on that plane that I said, 'I'm going to make a change'. I went from there to the parsonage, the Wesleyan [Holiness] Church, my mother's church, and decided I was going to try to walk the straight and narrow. No, seeing family suffer with this thing is not a good walk.

Madam Speaker, as I said in the opening debate on the Motion, the Cancer Society and Hospice Care are doing magnificent work that we could never afford to pay for as a country. The NGOs, service clubs, Rotary, Lions Club, Lady Lions, as has been said, have all impacted the society by doing the kind of social work and exhibiting the kind of social care this country could never really pay for. And so, we thank them.

I will await the outcome of what we have asked for. Someone asked what we will get out of it and I said that what it means is that the hospital will have better knowledge and, of course, will be able to plan better. Cancer Society will be able to plan better as well. But, in particular, our hospitals would be able to plan and get the kind of medical programmes that will be able to impact and help us on the way.

The Third Elected Member for George Town said that we now have a lot of information. We now know different kinds of cancers that people get and we know that people have died from them. However, we do not have empirical knowledge and we hope that all of this will come.

And, Madam Speaker, on the whole, when we get scientific reports—this is what I was drawing reference to yesterday, not just someone getting up and saying, 'I believe this; I heard this', because we have a lot of that in this country and people take it for gospel and sometimes we lay it down the wrong way in believing things. So, it is better to have knowledge that is given by science. And I hope that the Minister will be able to get this done. I am not saying that this is going to take a month. It is going to take a while because of the type of study it is. But I believe that when we get it the country will be well served.

I am thankful and I am sure the country will be thankful to the Minister that he was able to get something like that done.

I too believe that the lifestyle we live, what we eat, and I guess we don't know exactly what, but we are told about some things, as the Member who debated said. We are told about the green vegetables and the various kinds of fruits that detoxify the body; that it is best for us to eat; and the exercise that we should have.

Eating is not the bad part, Madam Speaker, because we can somewhat control that by how we shop; how we go to the store and what we purchase. But getting that exercise, even to be able to get out of bed early enough to just ride a bicycle that I have in my room, is most difficult, much less ride 50 miles. But I know this (and can speak from experience), that when you start to get overweight it does affect your body; every aspect of your life. So, it is not an easy thing to be able to say I'm going to lose weight. You can do so in the extreme way and they now have medical services for that. I must tell you that that is something I would be thinking about too.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, there are things that we can do as individuals to help ourselves and families; even the old way of cooking so much and so many different things that our wives do because they have been used to it. 'Mama did it and showed me how to do it.'

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes, rundowns, pies, puddings; all those things that we love as Caymanians.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: And the bad part of it is, we say 'don't do it' and as soon as it is done we partake the same way.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Minister again. I truly appreciate the debate from the Third Elected Member for George Town. And I would hope, Madam Speaker, since I am running again, to be back here to see a report.

The Speaker: The question is BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government considers conducting a scientific study to ascertain and determine the possible causes of cancer in these Islands. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Private Member's Motion No. 7/08-09, as amended, is duly passed.

Agreed: Private Member's Motion No. 7/08-09, as amended, passed.

Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09—Cayman Cultural Tourism Programme

The Speaker: I recognise the Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I beg to move Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09 entitled, Cayman Cultural Tourism Programme. The Motion reads:

WHEREAS the Tourism industry is considered to be one of the twin pillars of our economy;

AND WHEREAS there are insufficient Cultural activities throughout our local Tourist establishments;

AND WHEREAS it is important to involve more Caymanians in the Tourism Industry;

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government in conjunction with the Cayman National Cultural Foundation and other related entities and individuals considers creating a cultural programme suitable for the wholesome entertainment of visitors and residents alike;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government considers the formation of a core group of cultural performers that will be made available to local tourism establishments on a regular basis;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government also considers working in collaboration with the relevant tourism associations to ensure the sustainability of this programme.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to second Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09—Cayman Cultural Tourism Programme.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the mover wish to speak thereto?

Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, this Motion, as [with] any that I have offered on the Floor of this honourable House, means a lot to me. I am extremely conscious of being a Caymanian and things Caymanian are very important to me. Many times my friends will kid me and tell me that they believe I am older than I say I am, not because of the way I look, but because of my memory of things that I can recall. Some of the individuals who are in my age group don't seem to remember the things that I guess I should not be able to remember. But I came from very humble beginnings—beginnings that I am extremely proud of and I brag about those things every day.

I twisted strand and laid rope with my grandmother. People might believe that I am too young for that, but I did.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, very much, Minister for Education. It is my East End heritage! And just so you know, my grandmother brought that to town and I twisted on Smith Road too.

Madam Speaker, many of these things that helped to build this country—which made us uniquely who we are—are gradually leaving us. Dying out with our older Caymanians are the things that we used to say, things we used to do, things that were important to us, the songs we used to sing, clothes we used to wear, the way we used to build our homes, our mode of transportation.

We have just been talking here about our diets—the way we live, the kind of food we eat, the things we provide for ourselves. All of that has been changing. I know that progress must come, and I will never stand in the way of that. I do understand that wholeheartedly. But, I believe that as a tourist destination—and there are many other reasons—but as a tourist destination, I believe that we are probably one of the only islands within this region that does not express itself in a cultural way as many of our neighbours do.

For some reason our development, our supposed success story in Cayman, we seem to simply disregard all those things that were important to us. Things like modern transportation, cars, the modern foods, the fast food restaurants and the advent of television coming ashore, internet and with everything else, Madam Speaker . . . we seem to not pay any attention to the things that made us uniquely who we are.

Unfortunately, we depend so much on tourism. But we, as Caymanians, seem to have forgotten what made Cayman such a sought-after tourist destination. It was the things people came here to see that they could not see anywhere else—the unique way that we talk, our hospitality, the way we treat people when they come to our shores. And we seem to have gradually moved away from that because we married the tourism industry with the financial industry and we somehow do not understand that they are two completely different things, and that it is necessary for us to maintain the two.

We pay a lot of attention and we spend a lot of money promoting the financial side of our economy to the world. I am not saying that we do not promote the tourism side of it, but we simply promote it as a destination with nice modern hotels, all the amenities in the world. But we seem to have forgotten about the things that are local—things that people really travel to other destinations to see—and nobody makes much of an effort in promoting those anymore.

Madam Speaker, when I travel to other countries, especially within the Caribbean, one of the first things I want to do is go where the locals go. I want to taste the local food. If I want to listen to music, I want to hear a local band. I don't want to go to Jamaica and listen to a band out of the US. I want to hear some local music. But that seems to have gotten lost for us here in the Cayman Islands.

We do not understand that when tourists come here, they hope to see the same thing. And it is a recurring cry, Where are the locals? And when they visit our tourist properties they find people who are speaking different languages from us and they leave without experiencing any of what I would consider local Caymanian culture.

Madam Speaker, there are many good stories, funny stories, about the days of old. I remember certain songs from my grandmother. I have a lot of pleasant memories of my maternal grandmother who did a whole lot of things that are still with me today, and the songs she used to sing. We know how difficult it was back then. A lot of times songs helped ease their burden and pain. And they had the habit of singing while they worked. That was the soothing calm for them in many instances and those songs became synonymous with struggle and their hope for a brighter future.

Those are the things that make us different from all the other jurisdictions, and things that we ought to bear in mind, preserve and, Madam Speaker, pass on. Although we will not go back to those days, it is important that we understand our history and our origins and always have a library of that somewhere.

Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands are extremely unique. I am sure this is the way it is with other countries as well, but the way we speak is different from district to district. And I dare say that even within those districts people can tell you, for instance, That person is from West Bay. But a West Bayer can tell you that person is from Northwest Point, simply by the way he speaks. It is the same thing with East End, North Side and Cayman Brac.

Cayman Brac is uniquely different in that I think there is more distinction with dialects than there is on Cayman itself. Spot Bay people speak completely different from West End, the Bight and so on.

I have said all of that, Madam Speaker, to say that it must mean something to somebody. It must be an important part of who we are. The mixing of nations that we have now is gradually slipping away and we do not have those unique accents and dialects anymore. And the other customs that we have been used to are continually slipping away.

This Motion speaks to try and somehow preserve [these things] in a unique way. It will also ensure that visitors to our shores—people we depend on to keep our economy going—will also be able to share in that and be encouraged to tell other people to come and look for us. At some point or the other we would be able to create a new type of industry for our local people, because this should include employment.

There are things, Madam Speaker, that we may laugh at. Things from my childhood. I'm sure all of us here would have heard about a rolling calf. Cayman Brackers would know about a May cow. We had different versions of Junkanoo and different types of ring games. These are things that I believe can be properly documented and put into songs and plays. While it may not seem too important to us because it is something we are used to, these are the kinds of things that tourists want to see when they come to our shores. These are things that [will] excite them. And I dare say that a [large number] of our local people who with some of the names that I have just called—rolling calf and May cow, in particular—have youngsters who may be hearing this for the first time. After hearing this, they will probably ask their parents what it is about.

These are the kinds of things that I would like to see us make an effort to record and share with our tourists. Indeed, it is also important that these tourism properties we are talking about do what they can to embrace this and help develop it, because right now not very many locals visit these tourism properties. I believe that is something they should have an interest in encouraging because that is another source of business for them.

There are many other things we can think about that are easily turned into songs and plays. We have a very strong Easter tradition in this country, kite flying, sailing, and all those things. Christmas is an extremely important time in this country. It used to be the time of the year that we all looked to when we were kids.

And as much of a nuisance as they were and still are, Madam Speaker, mosquitoes are a very tropical thing and an easy thing for us to develop into some sort of skit that can be [put on] at these establishments for months on end.

Plays all over the world: Fiddler on the Roof; Cats; Lion King. I can easily name off ten of them for you that run for decades. They keep going back into these locales and people still go and see them. They still pack theatres to this day, these plays that were put together decades ago. And I think it [would be] very easy for us if we become a little bit more innovative in our thought process here in the country to bring back some of these memories.

Things like 'backing water' may seem a distant thought to many of us, but right next door, the Town Hall, was one of the meeting places. In the evenings people from the George Town area would get together in caravans and walk down to the Town Hall and the old Court House because that was our source of what we then considered good drinking water because not everyone could afford a cistern. And those journeys were fun times. They were times when communities were together and everybody would get together on a daily basis just before sunset or just after the sun set and walk down to these establishments and draw water and take it back to their homes. That was a daily routine, and that was not just in George Town, there were other places as well. And I believe if everyone is following me here, Madam Speaker, these are the things that could easily be turned in to plays, skits, or songs.

Our traditions, Madam Speaker, turtling, sailing, even the horrible hurricanes, [all] make good stories. We still get some crabbing done. And there is this great story of the first car that ever came to this country and its first journey into West Bay that makes a very funny story. So, there is no end to the possibilities.

I already mentioned rope making. One of our favourite pastimes at Christmastime used to be the marching bands when people would walk the streets all night singing Christmas Carols and visiting homes at Christmastime. These are all things that lend themselves to helping us build this core group of entertainers that I am talking about here.

In addition to that, we have a beloved bunch of local characters within all of our local communities—West Bay, George Town. I laugh, Madam Speaker, at times until my head hurts when I listen to the Honourable Minister of Communications talk about the characters in his beloved East End, these older folks who brought much laughter to our people. Perhaps one of these days the Honourable Minister will publicly give us his 'sweet potato' joke. Those of us who have heard that story . . . I won't take the chance to tell it here this evening, but maybe if he replies he can speak to it.

That [story] alone, those of us who know it [know that it] is a wonderful story to be played out on stage!

Again, I am saying that we can make sure that all of our districts are represented in some way. Whoever is given the responsibility to produce this can reach out and get information from all of those districts so we can be sure that we all represent it at some point or the other. I know many of them (and I probably should not call names here today), but in each one of our districts any Member here can easily name off between five and ten people who they know stories about; an old joker, someone who did things a different way and some of the lines that they used back then.

So, my request here, Madam Speaker, is for us to take the time to organise ourselves in a way . . . and I must say that in recent years there have been some efforts in recording some of these stories in print form that we could turn into plays. Madam Speaker, I want to challenge our people. I want to challenge our youngsters when they get into music, when they talk about a new type of dance, to be able to look back and understand some of the things we did, some of the songs that we had, the way we played our music back then and be able to incorporate that into some of their modern stuff.

My daughter is a dancer and she gets into choreography at times, something that she likes to do and I have challenged her. I said, "You know, it is good that you can do all of this modern stuff. But I challenge you to incorporate some Quadrille into this stuff that you do now and test it and see how it works. See how it looks and see how it feels."

Well, she laughed at me, but I think it is something that I will not give up on and at some point in time I really do hope that she will make the effort to do that.

I am saying that these are the things that we are really rich in, in culture. We do have a good core group of kids, especially the George Town and Red Bay Primary Schools that I see on a regular basis, and I know that East End also has a very good group of kids at primary school level who do an excellent quadrille. I mean it is a pleasure to stand and watch those kids dance around a stage.

Madam Speaker, I was reminded of the "Gimme Story", those things that we do now, how enjoyable they are when we do make the effort to go out and see them. And I want to congratulate and thank those individuals who have gone so far with that. But I want us to expand on that and be able to take these things into our hotels, into our tourism properties.

I started off by saying that when we all travel we want to see local stuff and almost every time that I go anywhere in recent times on behalf of Government, the CPA (Commonwealth Parliamentary Association) or anything of that nature, usually some of these outings include a cultural evening. And we go to places where when you are considered a visitor or a dignitary in someone else's country. They want to show off. They want to show you the best of what they have to offer.

I have been exposed to so much local culture in other countries and I sit there and watch and get so involved while sitting there and I think, Why can't we do this too? We have similar traditions, similar culture, and similar background. This stuff is really easy if we put our minds to it.

Madam Speaker, I hope that we can rekindle this love of our culture because it seems to be something that people from other jurisdictions are proud of, and happy to speak about. It is a way of life for them. But for some reason we seem to . . . and I do not know if it is because of how fast we developed into a modern society, but we seem to be a little embarrassed of our culture, our history, and believe that people will look down on us because of the things that we may say or do that were important to us.

We seem to believe that we should not speak in our local dialect when we are around foreigners. Madam Speaker, that is what they want to hear! That wha they come ya fa. They want to experience how the locals do it, how the locals speak it. But we get into this changing up thing. If they are from America we try to sound like American; if they are from England we try to sound like the British; and if they come from Jamaica, all of a sudden we can speak Patois.

We need to recommit ourselves and understand exactly what it is we want; where we came from and who we are. And I hope, Madam Speaker, that this Motion can bring some of that back. We should not be ashamed of the way we speak. I have been criticised for calling you "Madam Speaka." But I na stop yet, and na ga stop needa!

Madam Speaker, some of the challenges will be for those who teach our children. We are fortunate in some respects and unfortunate in others. The bulk of our teachers . . . I don't think that we could ever produce enough teachers to be self-sufficient in this country, so we have to import teachers like we do in most of our other career areas. I am extremely grateful that we are able to employ teachers from the Caribbean. And as life would have it, most or all of the countries that we recruit from are very rich in heritage, and it is evident that those countries have a plan, a programme, because most of the Caribbean teachers who come here are able to involve themselves in cultural things.

A lot of what happens, however, is that they simply teach our kids what they learned, and this is where the challenge comes in. We need our teachers to understand that we write the curriculum. They need to understand that we need them to be innovative as well and learn the things that are important to us; learn our culture and the way we say things. I have always been told that one of the joys of teaching is that you continue to learn yourself.

So, this is one of the areas where my appeal needs to be understood, in that we need to make sure that our kids are taught the things that are Caymanian, in the way Caymanians did it. I know that they must also be taught how the other countries speak and so on, but I get a little tired of going to cultural places, going to the National Children's Festival of the Arts, and hearing Patois all the time on the stage and very little Caymanian dialect. So, this is my big challenge here, where we need to get our teachers to work with us.

No disrespect, Madam Speaker, I understand the importance of the role that teachers play. I have a tremendous amount of respect for them. But I need them to be able to help us in that area so that when our kids finish school, throughout their school life they grew up understanding the way that things happened in the country. We must also depend on parents, but we also understand that many times some of the parents do not know themselves. However, I believe that it is our responsibility as a government to do what is right within the school system and make sure that the things that the children learn are Caymanian based so that not only the adults . . . because what I am talking about here now, Madam Speaker, in putting this core group of performers together, would certainly more than likely be adults.

But we have to embed the cultural aspect of things in our kids from primary school or kindergarten, wherever they start, so that as they come up through the ranks that they will understand that cultural things—learning to speak well, learning the culture of your country—can be a full time job for you when you become an adult because of this organisation that we now have; and that you can become a dancer, a singer, or a performer of some sort and work for your cultural organisation and that can be a lifelong job. So, you are not learning it just because it is part of the curriculum, but you can settle in a career in the things that are Caymanian.

For instance, if what our teachers teach our children in the things that I am speaking about is considered extra curriculum, then we need to find a way to make it a normal part of the teaching day and made a part of a normal day in the life of our children.

Madam Speaker, I want to again take this opportunity to say how grateful I am to those teachers who do take time. I watch a lot of them and they do take a tremendous amount of time to help with the cultural things whenever the National Children's Festival of the Arts and other similar events are coming around. Teachers work doggone hard. A lot of the time they put in with our kids is personal time and I do not want them to think that it is not appreciated. I certainly do, and I am sure that all of us here do, as well.

Madam Speaker, we have a tremendous amount of people who are what I would consider heritage rich; people like the Minister for Communications and Works, because of a similar upbringing. Most of us here, for instance you, Madam Speaker, and Minister Eden. There are people who have a lot of history behind them and other individuals who we need to tap into and get them to be a part of this. Let them help us record the things that were important to them when they were young, and let us record it somewhere that we will always have a library of information that we can always go to where one year our theme is going to be this, and next year our theme is going to be that, and there's always a wealth of information to tap into to do our next set of plays or songs or whatever it is.

We have a good number of retired teachers, historians of all sorts. Let us embrace them. We have been talking in this country about finding employment for people who are over 60 who have been forced into retirement because of age, who still have a tremendous amount of energy and are able to contribute to this community, but simply because of age had to be retired. These are the people that we can turn to, to drive this type of thing for us. They are mature individuals who know exactly what it is all about.

I am saying that while we are creating cultural entertainment for people who come to our shores, we can also create a few jobs for people at the same time for people who still want to work. I hope that that is taken into consideration as well, Madam Speaker.

We must understand that this must be a partnership with the cultural side of our government and tourism. The private sector must also play their part. As I said before, I hope that our schools will be involved. We must understand that that is a crucial part of making all of this work. I will say, though, that that, in my opinion must be controlled by Government because the content is important to us. We must know what is going in and what is coming out so that we make sure that it is clean, that it is also pure in the sense that it is Caymanian culture. So, guidelines must be set where the Government must always know what is being done and however we farm that out on the other end is up to us.

I believe, however, that for what it is, Government should not bear the entire cost. The private sector must help to pay for it in some form or fashion. Again, that may be a challenge for us to work that out the right way. But my plan here is to see us organise this core group of entertainers, who the Ritz Carlton could contract with the National Cultural Foundation and say, "We want 'Rolling Calf' for three months and we are going to play them twice a week. You give us a price."

Madam Speaker, pensions and health insurance for these individuals must be considered. I believe that this may be one of the drawbacks that private properties find in organising things like this. However, if Government can organise that and simply rent or sell the product to these hotels, these entertainers can work a couple nights a week, maybe four or five nights a week. They can be at the Ritz one night, the Westin another night, the Marriott another night, and it could be the same play going on at the same time or it can be different plays, but this is how I envisage this happening. And the Government or tourism or the National Cultural Foundation, whoever it is, then pays a fee for that. But if somebody gets sick it is not the hotel's responsibility to replace them, the Cultural Foundation would have enough people trained in that group that they can slip somebody in one night and it goes on unnoticed that there was a problem.

Madam Speaker, I believe that this has to be good for our people. It will help them feel a lot better about themselves, if they are able to express themselves in things that are important to them. It is good for our image as a country. And I only hope that it finds favour. It does not have to work exactly the way I said it should, but I will sit and wait for other contributions. I do hope that the membership of this Legislative Assembly finds it possible to support this Motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: It is one minute to the hour of interruption. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this honourable House until 10 am tomorrow.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10 am tomorrow. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have. This honourable House now stands adjourned.

At 4.27 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Friday, 12 September 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
FRIDAY
12 SEPTEMBER 2008
10.22 AM
Fifth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

And Lord, we ask that you would especially continue to bless us in this hurricane season when the elements are ripe, and when your power is awesome.

We thank you, Lord, for the blessings you have already bestowed upon us and we ask that you will remember our friends elsewhere. Bless all our people, all that they do, all that they say, and all that they want.

Hear these, our prayers.

Let us say the Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.
 Proceedings are resumed.

Proceedings resumed at 10.24 am

READINGS BY THE HONOURABLE
 SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
 AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Speaker: I have no messages or announcements.

Madam Clerk, could I have an Order Paper, please? Thank you.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
 AND OF REPORTS

Maritime Authority of the Cayman Islands Year in Review 1 July 2006 – 30 June 2007

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Maritime Authority of the Cayman Islands Year in Review 1 July 2006 – 30 June 2007, and Madam Speaker, the term “year in review” actually refers to a clause to be called the Annual Report for that particular year.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I will outline the relevant highlights from the 2007 Annual Report.

In accordance with section 17 of the Maritime Authority of the Cayman Islands Law, and section 51 of the Public Management and Finance Law, a copy of the 2006/07 Annual Report of the Maritime Authority of the Cayman Islands has just been laid on the Table of the Legislative Assembly. The report covers the 12-month period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007.

The financial statements as at 30 June 2007 (which are part of the annual report) were prepared in accordance with International Public Sector Accounting Standards and have been certified by the Auditor General.

These statements represent the Authority's second year of operation as an Authority. MACI was formed 1 July 2005 following the reorganisation of the Cayman Islands Shipping Registry, which previously fell under the Portfolio of Finance & Economics.

In respect of the year 30 June 2007, total assets of MACI were CI$3.3 million and its total liabilities at that date amounted to CI$1 million, resulting in a net worth of CI$2.3 million.

MACI's financial statements for the period 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006 (that is, the previous year, which were laid earlier in this Meeting), have been restated to reflect the correct allocation of revenue. That restatement has resulted in total assets of CI$1.6 million, total liabilities of CI$1 million; resulting in a net worth of CI$558,000 in respect of the year to June 2006.

These adjustments have reduced the previously reported operating deficit of CI$181,000 to an even smaller overall deficit of just CI$47,000. As I said, Madam Speaker, this is in respect of the previous year that ended on 30 June 2006. These restatements are actually shown in the Annual Report for 2007, which has just been tabled.

In respect of the year to 30 June 2007 total fees collected for the year were CI$7.3 million and total expenses equaled CI$6.2 million, resulting in a surplus from operating activities of CI$1.1 million. When this amount is combined with a gain of CI$68,000 on foreign exchange transactions, the resulting overall net surplus for the year was CI$1.2 million.

The Auditor General has issued an unqualified, or "clean", opinion on the financial statements of MACI as at 30 June 2007.

The Cayman Islands Shipping Registry is a Category One British Registry and, as such, is able to register vessels of any size, age and type—from small yachts to super tankers—provided quality standards are met. During the reporting period, the Register increased by 8.9% as compared to the previous fiscal period of 2005/06. At 30 June 2007, there were a total of 1,600 vessels on the Register, of which some 350 were commercial (merchant) vessels. This represents an addition of some 300,000 gross tonnes to the Register bringing the total tonnage on the Register to 3.4 million tonnes at 30 June 2007.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to report that the year 2006/07 saw continued growth for MACI. Amongst its other achievements, MACI established technical (survey and audit) services in the Far East, based in Singapore, and vessel registration capability and commercial representation in Florida's preeminent boating capital, Ft. Lauderdale. MACI also added advisory services, including survey, crew compliance certification and safety and technical services within just one year of its first opening in its South Florida location.

MACI continued to exhibit a high global profile through its attendance at the prestigious Monaco Yacht Show and the very popular Ft. Lauderdale Boat Show, as well as other boating and shipping industry events to promote MACI's products and world-class value-for-money services.

MACI continued its dedication to service excellence and ensured the maintenance of first-class relationships with its valued clients. As a furtherance of that, the Authority became the first government-owned organisation to make available on-line payment facilities as well as shopping capabilities.

The Authority worked diligently to update and streamline its seven international Class agreements, as well as the Cayman Islands maritime legislation.

Concluding a successful year, which has included an overall net surplus of CI$1.2 million, MACI is eager and optimistic to face the challenges of continued expansion in the subsequent year, the 2007/08 year.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Civil Aviation Authority of the Cayman Islands Financial Statements for the year ended 30 June 2005, together with the Annual Report for the financial year 2004/2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Civil Aviation Authority of the Cayman Islands Financial Statements for the year ended 30 June 2005, together with the Annual Report for the financial year ending 30 June 2005.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable First Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Thank you, Madam Speaker, just a few brief comments.

Madam Speaker, this is the first set of financials and annual report being tabled since the new entity of the Civil Aviation Authority of the Cayman Islands commenced operation on 1 July 2004.

The Civil Aviation Authority of the Cayman Islands is a statutory body, as honourable Members are aware, and this body was established on 1 June 1987 under the Civil Aviation Authority of the Cayman Islands Law, as amended. On 1 July 2004, the regulatory and operational divisions were split into two separate authorities based on the Civil Aviation Authority Law of 2004 and the Airports Authority Law of 2004, respectively.

The Authority is principally engaged in the regulation of aircraft operations, airdromes air traffic control and air navigation services within the Cayman Islands. The Authority is also engaged in the registration and regulation of aircraft which are based and operated outside the Cayman Islands.

The financials will show, in terms of the split taking place . . . because we can see the significant change in the figures, particularly the balance sheet which shows the assets as at 1 July 2004 (this is for the combined operation) $11,527,780, and subsequent to the split taking place as at 30 June 2005 reducing to $3,114,794. So we now have two entities. We have the Airport Authority and the Civil Aviation Authority.

More updated figures and information will be provided when subsequent financials are tabled in this honourable House.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ended 30 June 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House, the 3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ended 30 June 2008.

The Speaker: That paper shall stand referred to the Finance Committee.

Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, as you have just said, the 3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates, just laid in accordance with Standing Order 67(1), shall stand referred to Finance Committee.

As the estimates that have just been laid will be considered in Finance Committee, I do not need to say much more at this point, except, with your permission, to move a motion in connection thereto.

The Speaker: Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Section 10 of the Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates just tabled, contains the proposals for supplementary appropriations in respect of the 2007/8 financial year. I therefore beg to move, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), that Finance Committee approves the Supplementary Appropriation proposals set out in section 10 of the 3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ended 30 June 2008, which has just been tabled.

The Speaker: That motion shall be considered in the Finance Committee.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

Suspension of Standing Order 23(6)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, I move the suspension of Standing Order 23(6) in order to allow a Member to ask more than three questions during the course of one day.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 23(6) be suspended. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 23(6) suspended to allow a Member to ask more than three questions during the course of one day.

Question No. 5

No. 5: Hon. W. McKeever Bush asked the Honourable First Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs and the Civil Service, what is being done to ensure that Government Departments and Authorities are complying with the Public Service Management Law.

The Speaker: Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: We have taken a very comprehensive approach to the implementation of the new Public Service Management Law to ensure compliance and support best practises. Firstly, each Chief Officer was provided with written delegated authority from His Excellency the Governor to take effect from 1 January 2007 (that was the date the Public Service Management Law was implemented). This delegation instructed all Chief Officers to ensure that all personnel decisions were in compliance with the Law and the Personnel Regulations, and that failure to do so could result in their delegation being revoked in whole or in part by His Excellency the Governor.

The Public Service Management Law establishes that the Head of the Civil Service is responsible for monitoring Human Resource policies and practices and all matters relating to the Civil Service. Section 24 (f) of the Public Service Management Law also establishes that the Portfolio of the Civil Service (PoCS) is responsible for "undertaking periodic audits ... to establish the extent of compliance with the provisions of this Law and the Personnel Regulations and advising the Head of the Civil Service and the Governor accordingly."

By way of background information, to monitor compliance with the Public Service Management Law, the Portfolio has developed a Human Resource Audit Unit. The unit is comprised of a unit manager and two additional auditors. They have been operating for 18 months and have carried out 51 routine audit visits to various Departments to date (67% of all government departments). These audits provide a basic 'health-check' against key areas in the Law and Regulations.

They have carried out 29 'continuous' audits as part of an ongoing monitoring programme. These included quality reviews on the content of recruitment advertising and checks to ensure all advertised posts had been properly evaluated by PoCS to ascertain the correct remuneration grade.

They have also carried out five 'special' HR Audits, commissioned by the Chief Officer of the Portfolio of the Civil Service. These included three equity reviews of candidate selection for specific vacancies, a review of the performance management process and a check for staff being paid outside of the payroll system.

By the end of the 07/08 financial year, 45 government departments had been audited, representing 59% of the entire Government. The audit programme for the 2008/09 financial year will cover the remainder of the civil service and introduce a second round of more detailed audit reviews. Staff questionnaires and interviews are also being introduced, to ensure that staff, as well as management, have an opportunity to provide feedback on compliance matters.

Encouragingly, the 07/08 Audit Report from the HR Audit Unit indicates that 44% of the areas reviewed were found to be in strong compliance, and a further 40% were found to be generally compliant. Sixteen per cent of the areas reviewed were, however, judged to be weak in compliance.

In general, it was noted that where instances of non-compliance were observed, the vast majority were considered to have resulted from a lack of knowledge of the new requirements under the new Human Resource management regime rather than any intentional abuse of the framework.

As part of the standard audit process, and contained within the individual detailed audit reports issued throughout the course of the year, recommendations have been made to correct all identified problem areas. Management have agreed action plans to address the problem areas identified. These action plans will be followed up by the HR Audit Unit after a suitable amount of time has elapsed.

Based upon the work undertaken to date by the HR Audit Unit within the Portfolio of the Civil Service, combined with management's declared intentions for dealing with the weaknesses identified, the overall audit opinion is that there is currently no compelling case for me, as Chief Secretary and Head of the Civil Service, to recommend to His Excellency the Governor to revoke or curtail the delegation of Chief Officers.

In addition to the HR Audit Unit reporting on non-compliance, every civil servant under the Public Service Management Law has the right to appeal to an independent body called the Civil Service Appeals Commission. This Commission is not subject to the control of any person or authority, so it is truly independent. It has the powers of the Grand Court in relation to summoning of witnesses and the production of documents. In addition to dealing with appeals, I believe that this body has acted in a deterrent capacity, as Chief Officers and Heads of Departments know their decisions can be subject to independent scrutiny.

In addition to these entities, each Ministry and Portfolio has its own detailed policy and procedure manual which provides a step by step approach on how to deal with human resource issues. Also, it should be pointed out that a great deal of training was carried out prior to the decentralisation of human resource management.

With regard to Statutory Authorities and Government companies, the Public Service Management Law does not apply to them apart from the Public Service Values and Public Servants Code of Conduct. However, when requested, the Portfolio of the Civil Service has provided advice and guidance to Public Authorities.

In summary, to ensure that Government Departments and Authorities are complying with the Public Service Management Law we have set clear expectations about the standards expected through the Public Service Management Law, identified clear repercussions for non-compliance, avenues for staff to address concerns and developed ways of monitoring compliance. We have also matched those high expectations with equally high levels of support for Chief Officers and other managers. So we have taken a very comprehensive approach to the implementation of the new legislation.

Undoubtedly as everyone can appreciate, things are not perfect. Ideally, we would hope that there would be no instances of non-compliance, such as the 16% I pointed out earlier. However, we must not underplay the significance and extent of the change that has occurred in the area of HR management within the Civil Service. The new Law has modernised and advanced HR management within the Cayman Islands Civil Service. This change will take time to imbed, for people to change attitudes and develop new skills and knowledge. I am encouraged by the level of compliance reported by the HR Audit Unit within the Portfolio of the Civil Service in the first 18 months of implementation. It tells me that we are making excellent progress. We will, however, continue to strive for further improvements.

To recapitulate, we have developed an Audit function, an independent Appeals Commission and detailed regulations, policies and procedures providing necessary guidance for Chief Officers to observe.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Supplementaries

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, can the Honourable First Official Member say if there is a system of paying personally for work done by other staff in such areas as authorities and/or government companies even though they are salaried officers of the relevant company or authority?

The Speaker: Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Madam Speaker, is the Honourable Leader of the Opposition raising the question as to whether staff within statutory authorities are being paid for work carried out by the Civil Service?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: By them for another department.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: If the Honourable Leader of the Opposition could give an example, Madam Speaker, it would be helpful to me.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I would be glad to give an example, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: If the head of UCCI did work for his department, even though he was paid as the head of the UCCI by that relevant authority, would he be personally paid to do that work for another government department?

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Madam Speaker, under normal circumstances the answer should be no, because the head of a statutory authority would be receiving a salary from that statutory authority. Unless some agreement or contractual arrangements were entered into with a separate entity, it is unlikely that that entity would have an obligation to be making a separate payment.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries?
Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Honourable First Official Member is saying that within the rules, once that individual got permission, I presume from his Ministry, that that is possible. In other words, a person who is working in a government company or statutory authority, if he went to his Ministry, to the chief officer, he could get permission to perform functions for another government agency and receive separate payment.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member, that is way outside the original question, which asked what is being done to ensure that Government Departments and Authorities are complying with the Public Service Management Law.

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition used an example, and I do not think we can continue the supplementaries in that vein. Would you ask your [supplementary] on the substantive question please?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Let me make sure that I am clear on what I am able or not able to do. Are you saying that the last question that was asked by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, to which I have asked a supplementary . . . because the First Official Member said that—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member [for the district of West Bay], the Leader of the Opposition asked a question related to the original [question]. The First Official Member wanted an example. He has given an example. But I am not going to allow the questioning to go down that vein, all right?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: All right.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Can the Honourable First Official Member say, given his prior answer, whether or not such an officer could get separate payment if he received the Ministry's permission?

The Speaker: Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Madam Speaker, for the benefit of clarity, in the Civil Service organisation, or within the public service, it becomes necessary at times for an entity to provide service to another entity.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Right.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: That is normally done by way of what is called a "service level agreement." That is a contractual arrangement.

If an officer or officers of one entity, say entity X, carry out work on behalf of another entity for which that entity should be charged, the monies to be paid out would not go to the officer in question directly. For example, the University College of the Cayman Islands, if it is going to bill the Portfolio of the Civil Service for work carried out, the payment would not be made to an individual person—be it the president or another officer. It would go directly into the coffers of the University College of the Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Official . . . Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, don't wish that on me.

The Speaker: Stranger things have happened.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But, Madam Speaker, if I could just follow on, then, on the last answer given, could the Honourable First Official Member say whether it is permissible under the rules of the law for an individual staff member to enter into an agreement where they would receive individual payment? Is that permissible?

The Speaker: Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Madam Speaker, that would be a very novel arrangement. I am not aware of any such arrangements being sanctioned under the regime we have in the civil service or with arrangements with any of the public authorities.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk, the next question.

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Question No. 6

No. 6: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce to provide the cost of the planned new cruise and cargo facility including the land.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: The actual cost of the planned new cruise and cargo facilities is not known at this time as assessments and design of the facilities have not reached the stage of costing.

In regard to the land, there is no present associated cost planned for land acquisition as we do not anticipate more land will be needed to complete the project.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Supplementaries

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Is there not a plan to have part of this project separate and apart from the present land that the Government owns at the Port Authority?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Yes, Madam Speaker. That is correct.

I have said publicly before that the plan is to separate the cruise and cargo operations. And in relation to the cargo operations which will be relocated to the north of the existing Port, those facilities are planned to be built on land that is currently owned by the investor.

Part of what I just said is essentially going to be answered under one of the other questions, but that is the plan and those are the types of issues that are currently the subject of negotiations under the Memorandum of Understanding.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, can the Minister say what cost is associated with the development of the project on that land? That land has to have some value to the property where it will be developed.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, as I said, this project is currently at the negotiating stage. What I have said before, and I will say again, is that during this negotiation phase we will be looking at issues such as financial modelling and making sure that the Government's revenue streams are protected and also that the investor gets a return on his investment.

We have a situation where we have land that is currently owned by the Port Authority, on which cargo and cruise operations co-exist, and the proposal is to separate the two—move the cargo to the north, on property that is owned by the investor, and as we move through this negotiating phase (and it is too early for us to tell at this point), we will look on the financial modelling and how we ensure that both the Government's and the investor's interests are protected.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: The property is not on some far distant ya-ya land. The property exists to the north, as he has just said, of the present docking and cruise facilities. So there is property there that he plans to utilise somehow. There has to be a value. If he tells me he does not know what that value is now, then fine. I would have thought that by now they would have reached that [far], but he says he does not know that. Well, fine, but that has a value. And I am trying to find out what value they have placed on it.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I think you have another question coming up relevant to the developer where you may have an answer that will give you . . . Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Of course the land has a value, and as we work through the financial modelling the value of that land will be taken into consideration. I cannot tell the Leader of the Opposition at this point what the value of the land is—but it clearly has a value, and it will be the subject of the negotiations as we progress. And we will look at that value. That value is obviously important to the investor, but so is the value of our own property. It is important to us and we have to make sure that we work through this so that we protect the interest of all parties, while at the same time securing for the country the necessary infrastructure to allow for growth in cargo as well as for the proper management of cruise tourism.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I will allow one more supplementary.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you kindly.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, can the Minister say what relevance the land down to the north has to what the Government owns to the south? What is the relevance, since he's talking about the two.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, the relevance is that the two projects, the cargo and cruise operations, are being addressed simultaneously during these negotiations. I will say again, as I have said so many other times before, that the Government owns a part of this property and the investor owns the other part, hence the reason why we have involved ourselves in this Memorandum of Understanding with the investor.

We cannot properly develop our cruise facilities on the current site without moving the cargo operations. And it makes sense for more reasons than one to get the cargo operations away from the centre of George Town where, even though we do exclusively night operations now for cargo, it does disrupt the commerce and activities of George Town at night, such as the many restaurants that have recently developed around George Town. Not to mention the fact that when the cargo operations (which, as I said, are conducted at night) cease at about 5 am in the morning, there is a big rush to clean up the Port to get rid of the spillage from the aggregate, et cetera, so that we can welcome the cruise passengers at 7 am. That is not a situation which is sustainable or desirable, so we need to separate the two.

If the Leader of the Opposition is expecting me to make guesses as to how the negotiations are ultimately going to end up, I cannot do that. But, clearly, there are reporting protocols within Government and with respect to the Legislative Assembly that will need to be followed in terms of reporting progress and reporting the final outcome of the negotiations. And those will take place at the appropriate time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

The Clerk: Question number seven.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I do not want anybody guessing at anything. And as far as reporting to this House, the truth is that the House does not know what happens until after it has happened. That is why, Madam Speaker, the question is coming now.

Question No. 7

No. 7: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce to say what kind of guarantee the Port Authority and/or central Government has given, or will give, to the developer for the use of his land.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

No guarantee has been given to the developer at this stage for the use of his land as the Government is currently in the negotiation phase under a Memorandum of Understanding. It is within this phase that discussions will take place, as I said earlier, regarding financial modelling. These discussions on financial modelling will include a return on investment for the developer. The Government does not plan to offer a guarantee to the developer for the use of his land, but, rather, through financial modelling come to an agreement that will allow for a return on his investment.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Supplementaries

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.
In the latter part of the Minister's previous answer, he said that there is not going to be any form of guarantee for the use of the land, but that it is going to be accommodated in the financial modelling. Can the Minister say what impact on the cost to the relevant statutory authority (i.e., the Port Authority) that non-guarantee but, rather, payment through a return is going to have?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister Responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, again, that is a premature question. We have not reached the stage where I can provide that level of information to the Member. As we progress with the negotiations, as I said, and at the appropriate stage, not only will the House be informed of the progress and results, but we also, as I said publicly, intend to go out to extensive public consultations on this project. As soon as we have reached that point, we will go public with the concept for public input.

Also, very importantly—perhaps more important than anything else—like I have said, and the Government's position has always been, that this project is subject to a proper and detailed environmental impact assessment. And we have commenced the process for that already.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries?
Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.
Can the Minister tell this House what information has been used, then, to make the decision to not give the guarantee but to go the route of providing a return in lieu?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister Responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As I said in my substantive answer, no guarantee has been given to the developer at this stage, and we certainly do not plan to at this point. But we are in the middle of negotiations at this stage, and it is not possible for me to say to the Member, or to anyone else for that matter, how those negotiations are going to ultimately end up.

But let me say this, because I believe this may be where the questioning is leading, and I have said this before as well. From our point of view, and I believe from the investor's point of view, all the investor is interested in, as any other investor would be, is a return on his/her investment. As far as the operational control of our key infrastructure in this country (that is, our cargo facilities and our cruise facilities) is concerned, the Government is keen to ensure that we remain in operational control of that key infrastructure.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.
Very early on in this Administration, there was much talk about any form of arrangement that this Government would come into would not be done under any, I think the term used at the time was, "funny business", but that everything was going to be done under traditional financing.

What has caused the Government to change its stance in regard to how it finances infrastructure projects?

The Speaker: Are you speaking specifically to this project?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Yes, Madam Speaker. This one is obviously some form of public/private partnership. The Government said at the beginning of its term that it was not going to go this route, and that it would use traditional financing.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay, I understood you clearly, but you said infrastructure projects. You just did not say this specific one.
Honourable Minister Responsible for Tourism.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [interjecting] If you want to answer that I will give you [inaudible].

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I am not sure what the Member means by "funny business". Perhaps he is familiar with that and those types of arrangements.

Madam Speaker, the Government has a lot of infrastructure projects to deal with. We have roads, we have schools, we have airports, seaports, and many programmes that we have to fund. It is not possible for the Government to fund all of these infrastructure projects at once. But what is clear to the Government, Madam Speaker, is that these infrastructure projects have been neglected for too long.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [laughter]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: We cannot afford to leave the airport redevelopment and to put that on hold any longer. It should have been built a long time ago.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Of course.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: We cannot afford to delay the port infrastructure.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: That's right.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: We cannot afford not to build our schools.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Right.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: We cannot afford not to ensure that this country has proper road infrastructure.

We have all of these things to do, Madam Speaker, and this Government is very well aware, as well as those who sit on the opposite side of this House, that this is no funny business. Public/private sector partnerships are common in many countries. Even large countries that have much larger budgets than we do have public/private partnerships. So, we have decided to go this route with the port redevelopment.

What I can assure this honourable House is that this is no funny business; this is going out to public consultation. This is not going to take place behind closed doors. And there are not going to be any funny deals, and the Minister himself is not going to be involved directly in any negotiations and any deals, because we do not operate that way.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjections]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: So, Madam Speaker, that is the rationale for going in this direction. Thank you.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: I will allow one final supplementary.

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, is the Minister then saying, because he seems to be labouring under some real false delusions . . . the funny business needs to be defined by him. It was his Government that said it.

Can he say whether the utterances made at the time by Members of his Cabinet were premature and inaccurate and, therefore, the Government has had to now change its course—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: —in regard to financing?

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for West Bay, that has nothing to do with the substantive question.

Madam Clerk, can we move on to the next—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I wonder if you would allow one last supplementary.

The Speaker: I have already allowed my last supplementary, Leader of the Opposition.

Madam Clerk.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You know Madam Speaker, I would really like to see some fairness in questions, especially when we have the magnitude of questions we have, you know. And when it gets so—

The Speaker: Madam Clerk, would you move on to the next question?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —spared in this House with questions.

The Clerk: Question number eight.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: What's the good of asking you anything, Madam Speaker?

Question number eight is to the same Minister . . . and perhaps he would care to tell us who is doing the impact study on the dock. Which company?

Question No. 8

No. 8: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce to say if the Florida Caribbean Cruise Association (FCCA), or any other cruise line companies have been involved in the negotiations or discussions of the proposal for the planned new cruise facility.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, for now I am going to ignore the first part of what the Leader of the Opposition said.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, that is not the question before the House. Would you answer the question that is before the House?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I am going to answer the question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: But he made reference to it.

Madam Speaker, the answer to the substantive question: The Florida Caribbean Cruise Association (FCCA) has been involved in the preliminary discussions regarding redevelopment of the Port facilities. Now that the Memorandum of Understanding has been signed by the vested parties and the design concept work is being developed, the FCCA will be invited into more detailed discussions regarding the Port redevelopment.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Supplementaries

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, about 10 supplementaries!

The Speaker: I make that decision.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, and you can't believe they are very many.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, would you please ask your supplementary?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes. I complain about the number of supplementaries we can get. I want it on record.

Can the Minister say what kind of discussions he had with the Florida Caribbean Cruise Association, (a)?

(b) Has the Government any idea, any ballpark figure of the amount of dollars the project will cost?

(c) Who is the company doing the impact study?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Tourism?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Let me take them one at a time.

What kind of discussions have I had with the FCCA? Madam Speaker, we have had discussions with the FCCA with respect to the overall concept of this project, that is, separating cruise and cargo, we have discussed with them the proposed location of the cruise facilities and the proposed location of the cargo facilities. We have talked to them extensively about the opportunities that this provides for the beautification and enhancement of the central George Town area and the fact that for the first time this presents a real opportunity for us to look in more detail at traffic patterns, that is, vehicular and pedestrian traffic within central George Town.

They are very keen, Madam Speaker (and they have expressed this to us both collectively and individually), to be involved in this project at a very minimum in the design of the facilities. They are going to be the primary users of the cargo facilities, and they are very keen to be involved in the design of the facilities. And we have had expressions of interest in the cruise facilities.

They have certainly also indicated to us that they (that is, the individual cruise lines) are also interested in becoming investors in this project. So, the Memorandum of Understanding, as I said during the press conference when we announced it, allows for those parallel discussions with key stakeholders, such as the cruise lines.

The second question was in relation to cost of the project, Madam Speaker, and we have already dealt with that extensively under the first question, so I won't bother to rehash that.

The third part of the question was in relation to the company that will do the environmental impact assessment, and just let me explain where we are with that.

We have agreed on the structure we will use to essentially bring about this study and how the study will be done in terms of what it will look at, who would select the company, who would be the applicant. Actually in relation to this project let me say that at this point the important consideration all have accepted is that the investor will have to produce the names of three companies that they suggest are capable of carrying out a detailed environmental impact assessment.

Those three companies, and the principals of those companies, will be vetted by the Department of Environment. It will be the Department of Environment that will be the agency to decide which of the three companies is most appropriate to carry out the study.

Having said that, Madam Speaker, it should be clear that we have not yet reached the point where a company has been selected.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries?

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In this arrangement that the Minister has included to in regard to performing an environmental impact assessment study, what happens if the Department of Environment is not happy with any of the three choices?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, if the Department of Environment is not happy with any of the three choices they will say so. The company will then have to come up with some additional names that would be acceptable to the Department of Environment.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries? Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, the Minister said that he will not have any input (I think was the word he used). He will not be involved in the negotiations. Can he say how much discussion he has had with the developer on the project?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When we were first approached by the developer (and this is all information that I provided in the press conference when we made the announcement and on other occasions) the original proposal from the investor was essentially to develop the cruise facilities on the site which they own on North Church Street. Because they came directly to the Minister on that, my initial response to them was that we needed to ensure that in this project—and this presents a good opportunity for us to do this—we can separate our cruise and cargo facilities. But I believe that the opportunity to do that is one where we leave the cruise facilities where they are now, and move the cargo facilities out of central George Town to the site that the developer and investor currently own.

The developer and investor went away and came back with a revised proposal that did just that, that is, properly establish cruise facilities on the current site in George Town and move the cargo facilities to the north.

We have had several discussions since that to see how that could possibly be done. We worked through a Memorandum of Understanding, which was approved by Cabinet and the public announcement was made. Within that Memorandum of Understanding it establishes the negotiating framework which includes a negotiating team from the Government side and a negotiating team from the developer/investor side.

The negotiations in terms of the details of the project and the financial modelling and all the other components of the project are the responsibility of the negotiating team, and those negotiations did not formally commence until the Memorandum of Understanding was signed.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I think we must be answering the last question, because the question before us is to say if the Florida Caribbean Cruise Association or any other cruise line company has been involved in the negotiation or discussion.

I will allow one more supplementary.

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Sorry, Madam Speaker, I was answering what I understood to be a supplementary from the Leader of the Opposition.

The Speaker: And the supplementary was supposed to have come from your last answer.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The reference to the FCCA being involved in the negotiations, can the Minister say, firstly, whether or not the . . . sorry, who are the parties, the other parties to the negotiating team that the question refers to and he referred to in his last answer? And, how many meetings has the Ministry held with the developer and the negotiating team?

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay, let me get your question clear in my mind. We are still dealing with the Florida Caribbean Cruise Association, and you are talking about—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Yes Ma'am.

The Speaker: —the FCCA and any other cruise line company?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Right.
Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, just to clarify. As I understand it, the supplementary question is in relation to which other parties are involved in the negotiation—

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I understand the Member to be saying that he understands that the FCCA would be a part of the negotiations.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No, who is.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: What I said is that under the Memorandum of Understanding it allows for the Government to have a negotiating team and for the developer and investor to have a negotiating team.

That is, the developer and investor (when I use those terms) is one and the same. But the Memorandum of Understanding also allows for parallel discussions and negotiations to be held with other stakeholders, such as the FCCA. But the FCCA does not have a negotiating team because we do not know at this point. They have simply been allowed to have discussions under the MOU. But we do not know at this point whether they will actually be involved.

What they have said is that they are very keen to be involved in the design of the facilities.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: You do know that I have ruled that I have given my last supplementary, so go ahead.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I thank you for your indulgence, Madam Speaker.

The question I actually asked was who are the members of the negotiating team. I made an assumption (that is where I mentioned FCCA) that they would have been a part of the Government's negotiating team because the Minister did say they would be a part of the process to make sure that whatever the end result, it would be workable for them. So I was asking who the members are. Can the Minister name who the members are?

And then I also asked him how many meetings were held with the developer.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The members of the Government's negotiating team are the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry; the Chairman of the Port Authority, Mr. Wayne Panton; the Port Director, Mr. Paul Hurlston; and there is one financial expert on the team whose name escapes me right now. But I can certainly provide that information to the Member and to this House. But that person is a person who is not employed by the Port Authority, but those services have been secured by the Port Authority.

And just to reiterate, the FCCA is not a member of the negotiating team, but the MOU does allow for parallel discussions with the FCCA and for them to be involved. As I said, they are very keen to continue to be involved, at a very minimum, in the design phase.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I think the other part of his question was how many meetings has the negotiating team held. I do not know if you are in a position to answer.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: I am not, Madam Speaker. I am aware that they are having a meeting today. I think they may have had about three or four meetings so far, but I cannot say for sure exactly how many meetings were held with the negotiating team so far.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

The Clerk: Question number nine.

Question No. 9

No. 9: Hon. W. McKeever Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce to say if the Government has looked at any alternative site, excluding the North Sound, for the development of a cargo dock.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As the public is aware, the previous administration was considering East End as a possible location for a cargo port. To date, no detailed study has been done at this location to suggest it as a preferred location over George Town. But preliminary investigations suggest the development of cargo port facilities at this location would involve significantly higher capital expenditures than the redevelopment of the George Town Port.

The 1994 Master Port Development Plan did include an analysis of developing a port in the North Sound or South Sound, and at that time concluded that George Town was the best location for a port. The George Town area is the best area for a cargo port based on the infrastructure that has been developed to date at the cargo distribution centre.

It is significant, too, that our forefathers decided to develop the port in George Town, because they knew that this was the safest natural harbour on Grand Cayman.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Supplementaries

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Can the Honourable Minister say what time these preliminary investigations were done and who did them?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As I understand it the Port Authority did these preliminary investigations. This information came from them, and I have to assume that it was during the administration of the Leader of the Opposition because we certainly did not ask for it.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, that cannot be so because the project at East End was much more than a cargo facility. So, when we are just considering the cargo facility as against a cargo facility cannot be so. I do not know, because I have not seen any figures from the Port Authority to suggest that, nor did you get that far.

Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: That is the last question on that. I do not know if . . .

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The third sentence of the Minister's answer reads, ". . . but preliminary investigations suggest the development of cargo port facilities at this location [that is, the East End location] would involve significantly higher capital expenditures than the redevelopment of the George Town Port."

He then just said in his last answer that he did not commission this, that the information has come from the Port Authority and he is not quite sure how they arrived at it.

Now, I am puzzled, Madam Speaker.

Can the Minister say what a redevelopment of the cargo port facility has to do with a brand new development? Because, as I understand it, this Government is proposing a development of a port facility, not a redevelopment.

The Speaker: So what is your question?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: My question is, Madam Speaker, can the Minister give this House any support for the third sentence in his answer? It is his answer.

I am not sure what else it says, but this is his answer.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, the term "redevelopment of the George Town Port" obviously involves the redevelopment of not just our cruise facilities, but our cargo facilities as well. I am sure the Member is aware of that.

The point I made was that the preliminary investigations the Port Authority referred to, that have been used in this answer must have occurred during their administration—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh no!

Hon. Charles E. Clifford:—because we did not ask for it. They were the ones that were proposing a port and I believe some other type of facility in the district of East End.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjections] You need a good spanking!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, can the Minister say whether or not, in the answer that he has just provided to this House, he has any knowledge to support the answer?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, as I said, I am relying on information that was provided to me by the Port Authority. That is what Ministers do.

I do not understand where the Member is going with this question. If he thinks that digging a hole in East End is going to be cheaper than redevelopment of our current facilities in George Town, then perhaps he can give us some additional information on that. But [neither] this Minister [nor] this Government is going to be digging any hole in East End, making that community more vulnerable to things like hurricanes. We have a different plan—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [Laughter]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford:—and we have indicated very clearly what that plan is.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I will allow one more supplementary.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, the Minister digs a lot of holes, and he usually digs holes any time he opens his mouth. I am asking through you, Madam Speaker, for the Minister to tell this House whether or not he can support the answer he is giving. He gave this House an answer, and then he turned right around and said he does not know the veracity of the answer. That is all I am asking.

Why he got all in a bundle there and had to start talking about digging holes—

The Speaker: Second Elected Member—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I was not asking him. I did not make any suggestions. He said that he does not know where it came from. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I think that part of his answer should be struck.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether that is a question or not. But, clearly, Ministers refer to and rely on information that is provided by their agencies.

Now, if the Member is asking me to go to the Port Authority and look through their files so that I can ensure that they have the report or the preliminary investigations that are referred to in this answer, then . . . What is he suggesting? Is he suggesting that Ministers should involve themselves in that every time there is an answer that comes to this House, that we should go and look through those files to make sure that that information is there?

And as far as holes are concerned, it is that side of the House that is expert on that, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: There are no holes in that question.
Madam Clerk.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker!

Hon. V. Arden McLean: [inaudible] East End.

The Clerk: Question number 10.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No, we don't plan to dig East End; you already did that, my son.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Yeah, I wish we'd buried you.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah, yeah, yeah, you just walked into this House. You are going to bury me? You and many like you won't do it!

[Gavel struck by the Speaker]

The Speaker: Would you all please address the Chair as mature representatives of this country?

Honourable Leader of the Opposition, please, would you continue with your question?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: If the Minister, who just walked in to open his yabber had not done that, then I would not have a call to reply.

And if the Speaker had stopped him, we would not have heard him.

Question number 10 . . . he should answer questions about Matrix! Not about Government docks!

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker . . .
I get rich?
Come and check my accounts.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: [inaudible]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You heard what I said?

The Speaker: Would the Minister for Communications and Works and the Honourable Leader of the Opposition . . . please could we have some decorum in this, the highest office of the country?

Honourable Leader of the Opposition, would you continue with your question?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Decorum has to start in many places, Madam Speaker. And not because we say it, that it is so.

Question No. 10

No. 10: Hon. W. McKeeva Bush asked the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce to say when will all outstanding annual accounts of Cayman Airways Ltd. be tabled in this honourable House.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Ministry is currently awaiting the issuance of the financial statements of Cayman Airways Ltd from the Auditors. Currently Cayman Airways Ltd has completed the 2004 and 2005 audit.

The 2004 audited financial statements have been issued by the Auditor and will be submitted to Cabinet shortly for onward submission to the Legislative Assembly.

The 2005 audited financial statements have not yet been issued by Auditors, but we are expecting that to take place shortly.

Madam Speaker, the 2006 and 2007 audits are currently being conducted. Once the audited financial statements are issued they will be tabled in this honourable House.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?
[pause]

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

[inaudible interjections]

[pause]

The Speaker: If there are no supplementaries, Madam Clerk.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister of Health and Human Services.

Caribbean Wellness Day 2008

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Madam Speaker, I rise to make a brief statement on Caribbean Wellness Day.

The Observance of Caribbean Wellness Day, which will be observed tomorrow, 13 September, was one of the decisions taken when the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) Heads of Government, met in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, last year on September 15 2007, to design a plan of action to tackle the epidemic of Chronic Non-communicable Diseases.

Madam Speaker, there is deep concern in this region over the physical, economic and social burdens caused by lifestyle-related diseases such as diabetes, hypertension (better known as high blood pressure), stroke, heart disease, obesity, and certain cancers.

The outcome of the Heads of Government summit was a Declaration calling for the passage of tobacco legislation, a mandate for the re-introduction of physical education in our schools and a comprehensive public education programme in support of wellness, healthy lifestyle changes, and the improved self management of non-communicable diseases. These are a few of the key initiatives agreed to in the Declaration.

Madam Speaker, what also followed from this meeting is that the Caribbean Community, through the first observance of Caribbean Wellness Day, will jointly, on September 13, 2008, seek to send a message to its citizens—young and old—about the growing epidemic in non-communicable diseases, and the critical importance of adopting healthy lifestyles.

I wish to advise this honourable House and the general public that the Cayman Islands joins our Caribbean neighbours in observing this day, under the theme “Love that body”.

Tomorrow (Saturday, 13 September) there will be free health checks at all District Health Centres, the George Town Hospital, Faith Hospital and Foster’s Food Fair at the Strand. Health checks will include, body mass index, blood sugar and blood pressure. I urge the public to take a few minutes and avail themselves of this service. It will do your body good.

Madam Speaker, I can only hope that Caribbean Wellness Day will provide an added impetus to change behaviours. But we have already begun to act vigorously on this problem. With my colleague, the Minister of Education, we have already begun to make significant adjustments to protect the health of the next generation. In respect of school curricula, increased emphasis has been placed on physical education. I anticipate increased partnership with the Ministry of Education in promoting physical activity in schools and to see how best positive dietary habits can be incorporated in the diets of school children.

Madam Speaker, we must hope for the best results from these efforts, knowing that the adults in the community are not so easy to reach. It is a sad reality that we as human beings so often drag our feet when it comes to changing things in our lives, even when we know full well they are bad for us. For most people, it is well known that the keys to healthier living are simple—eat well, get regular exercise, and, of course, avoid tobacco use.

Yet, knowing this, we suffer through repeated illnesses in our families, we tremble to watch our friends and colleagues fall by the wayside with chronic complaints, yet still we carry on with our risky behaviours. Madam Speaker, you would think people preferred to be dependent on drugs and machines to keep them alive—yet we know it is not so. We know the horrors and heartache sickness can cause.

Madam Speaker, as we strive to turn this situation around, I must acknowledge the work of the Non-Governmental Organisations, such as the Cancer Society, the Lions Club and others, who seek to both prevent diseases and support the sick. They will soon have a strengthened partnership with Government in these areas, led by our revamped Public Health Department, and through our new Primary Health Care Initiative.

We also look forward to new partnerships, for example, between sports and Public Health; as well as dynamic new relationships with employers in support of employee wellness.

Chronic non-communicable diseases (lifestyle diseases) are characterised as one of the major causes of mortality in the world, representing 60 per cent of all deaths according to the World Health Organization. Throughout the region there is increasing focus on the alarming increase in lifestyle related diseases and its effect on our economic wellbeing.

Madam Speaker, more than half of the expenditure on health in the region is related to the cost of treating non-communicable diseases. These costs are projected to spiral, at a time when we face competing claims for our limited resources. Here in our own Cayman Islands the costs of treating these conditions is mounting rapidly, putting serious strain on public and private resources.

The Region is, in fact, reputed to have the worst prevalence of deaths in the Americas, resulting from chronic non-communicable diseases.

Madam Speaker, it should be clear that this is a subject of urgent importance. I urge our community's full support. If we hope to sustain a high quality of life we must make some real changes, and we need to start now.

Thank you.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

Private Member's Motion No 3/08-09—Cayman Cultural Tourism Programme

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to offer my support to the Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09, brought by my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, in relation to Cultural Tourism.

Madam Speaker, this Motion, like many motions brought by this Administration and, indeed, by the Opposition as well, is a timely motion. It is to do with one of the things that is very near and dear to all of us in here and that is "Things Caymanian".

Madam Speaker, we are under threat in this country from many outside influences. I think the one thing that is [eroding] the most on a daily basis, is what we call "Things Caymanian", and that is our Caymanian culture.

As long as we continue to evolve as a society, continue to import foreign labour, [continue] primarily as a tourist destination where we are constantly in touch with people from the outside world . . . we are not living in a bubble or living in isolation. Certainly, we need to hold on to what we know as our Caymanian traditions and values. Valid attempts have been made by many organisations—the Cultural Foundation, the National Trust, and other groups in our society—to ensure that we hold on to that last little bit of Caymanian heritage and culture that is so near and dear to us and our people.

I would like at this time to pay tribute to many of the people who have worked in this area for many years, and who many times come in for stick. Over the years people like Mr. Dave Martins and Mr. Henry Muttoo—in particular those two individuals from other islands in the Caribbean who have made the Cayman Islands their home . . . if it were not for those two individuals in particular, Madam Speaker, I dare say we would be a lot further behind when it comes to recognising our own "Things Caymanian". And I would like to pay tribute to those [two] individuals here today.

I would also like to pay tribute to our own people who have worked with those individuals over the years. For instance, there is a couple who started a business in West Bay. I think it is called "Cayman Traditional Crafts-Arts". Again, a very, very important job that these young people are doing. And throughout the districts all of the various groups who have held on to . . . whether it is looking after the senior citizens and ensuring that their values and traditions are passed on. I know I can speak firsthand for the group in Bodden Town. They have worked with our senior citizens and have done so much to maintain and keep alive our traditions in our district.

They continue to provide an outlet for seniors to showcase their talents. We do this weekly at the Nurse Josie Senior Centre on a Saturday afternoon where people can come and see these people at work with their crafts and handiwork and listen to them joke around and tell their stories of old.

This is so important, Madam Speaker, because we get caught up in the big hustle and bustle of the financial industry and making a dollar in Cayman, with everyone running wild and trying to keep up with the pace of life and at the end of the day dropping down with a heart attack. But you know, Madam Speaker, if we took a little time to smell the roses, a lot of times we would be better off.

There is nothing wrong with laughing at ourselves. Again, I come back to Mr. Dave Martins. Although a lot of people may criticise Rundown, over the years it has provided an outlet for us to have a laugh at ourselves. And our old people were very, very good at that. I will never forget the old timers in my district listening to the Fourth Elected Member for George Town talk about his experiences. It was a joy to sit and listen to the Duppy stories, and all of the other ones poked fun at one another. I would just sit there and gobble it up as a youngster. I dare say that was a privilege because the young people these days, in many ways do not have the advantage we had since a lot of those old folks have passed on.

Madam Speaker, this Motion is very near and dear. I guess that is why I jumped up so quickly. Perhaps I should have let the Ministers of Culture and Tourism go [ahead and make] their comments on it, but I am sure that they will have even more to say once I have said what I have to say.

Madam Speaker, I have traveled a fair amount. It was during some of my travels as a youngster that I realised that other nations do so much more to maintain their cultural identity than we do. I, like the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, said that when I travel I want to experience what a country has to offer. I want to see what the locals do, what they eat, how they hang out, and learn about the history and culture of that particular country.

The reason for traveling is to have a good time and experience another destination. The way you can experience that is not by sitting in the hotel room or on the beach in that destination (if there is one), but by going out and embracing what is on display. Usually one of my first questions is, 'Well, what is going on? What can I do to find out about the place?'

I have a couple of examples, in fact. I think it was during one of my return trips that the Fourth Elected Member and I were discussing this type of thing—because we both share the same passion for it—and I was giving him an example of what I had experienced. I think this Motion was born somewhere around that time.

My wife and I went to Cuba a couple of years ago, checked into the hotel and immediately we hooked up with the concierge. I had been to Cuba before, but my wife [had not and she] was quite anxious to learn about some of the history and culture of Cuba. We asked them to recommend where we should go. Of course, one of the things recommended highly was a particular show by the name of Tropicana, which, I am sure is familiar to many people who have been to Cuba. Off we went to this show and it was wonderful. In fact, it was the highlight of our trip to Cuba. It was a wonderful, cultural evening where we enjoyed a nice meal and we watched the Cubans perform their local dance and we experienced a lot of what they had to offer music-wise and everything.

Madam Speaker, that was one example that came to mind. There was another trip where we accompanied the Minister of Tourism to Panama for the Trade Exchange. We went out one night for dinner and right in a very comfy little setting, in a nice little restaurant in an old part of Panama—Old Panama City—we had a lovely meal with a very intimate setting. There, right next to us (we could reach out and touch) a nice cultural performance was put on. This was not something put on just for us; it was something that happens on a regular basis.

So, what my good friend, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, is advocating here, where we come up with a cultural group that can take the show on the road, as it were, to our hotels and to our tourists to experience “Things Caymanian” is right on target with what we are talking about here. This group could be split up into smaller components, it could act as a big group, whatever the occasion calls for. But the key to it, Madam Speaker, is that we are going to give our tourists the opportunity to come in contact with our people once again.

My background is the financial industry, as everyone knows. And one of the most common complaints by my clients over the years, and of course, tourists I have met otherwise, is that, 'we come to Cayman, we don't experience things Caymanian and we do not meet any local people apart from a few. Where are the locals?' That is the big cry—'Where are the locals?' So, we want to be able to say, 'Here are the locals, here are some of our traditions'. And we want to put on a good show and at the same time provide employment opportunities for the people who perform in these various venues.

Madam Speaker, we all know that things have changed so much. In the early days the tourists who came here did meet and mix with our locals. In fact, I dare say North Side is probably the one district where it still happens almost the way it used to, where you go into a local watering hole or you go on the beach and you will find the mix of the locals with the foreigners. The Galleon Beach and Royal Palms days, and all of the other things that used to happen was the way that our tourists got to mix with our locals and, as I have been reminded, all of the cookouts and outside kitchens. There were tourists who came and lived within the districts away from the Seven Mile strip.

Before the development of the Seven Mile strip, we had tourists who eventually bought properties and employed Caymanians to maintain those properties, so they got to know those locals really well. I know in Bodden Town we had a lot of that, but it has died off unfortunately as well. We have lost this close camaraderie with our tourist product, and this is what the tourists want.

I keep saying that when I leave these Islands I am a tourist. And when I go as a tourist, yes, I don't mind bucking up with the odd Caymanian now and again, but I don't want to see my people over there. I want to meet and greet the people that I have gone to look for. So, when the tourists come here, I can't get into their heads, but I would imagine that they want to see us. They want a chance to meet Caymanians and eat Caymanian [foods], and do things Caymanian.

This is a no-brainer to me, Madam Speaker, to be quite honest. I am very passionate about it but I see no reason why this cannot be done successfully. It would enhance our tourism product and our destination, big time.

Madam Speaker, before I wrap up my contribution, I want to speak to the fact that we have to bear in mind the type of visitor that we have marketed to for these shores. We have always said that the higher-end of the market type visitors are the ones we try to attract to these shores: the more affluent and a certain market segment that we target. This is well known. DOT (Department of Tourism) makes no bones about that. We are looking people to come here spend money and have a good time. Usually, that means a family involvement; that type of visitor usually comes with his family.

Madam Speaker, it is natural then that when these people come to the Cayman Islands they want to do wholesome activities. They want to enjoy, as I said, “Things Caymanian”.

A lot of them come and they do not get any sort of incentive to leave the properties where they are [staying]. They are simply fed and looked after in that environment. Nothing really Caymanian is promoted by those hotels or wherever, and that tourist can come here and spend five days and the chances are that that tourist does not even see the other districts. Now, it varies: some tourists are adventurous and will take it upon themselves to make sure that they do, and some do. Lately, with the increase in stay over tourism, thank God, and thanks to the Minister of Tourism and all the hard work that DOT and everyone has put in, we can see stay over tourism starting to bounce back. We have seen the air arrival figures go up and the cruise numbers go down. People are still screaming, yet, they were complaining a couple of years ago that there were too many cruise tourists. I am not sure, exactly, what people want in this country.

I would think, however, that we are now at the point where we are starting to get it right. We are not being smothered by cruise, we are managing cruise and at the same time we have a good boost in our stay over tourism. These people are here spending money renting cars, eating out at nights, buying locally and spending time with our local people. And I have seen an increase in them coming east. You see more rentals, you can usually look at the amount of rentals you see on the road and you can see—of course, with our lovely roads that the Minister of Communications, Works and Infrastructure has provided for us now—people can get east much easier and quicker.

I see them coming east and you know, there is hope that with the “Go East” initiative . . . In fact, Madam Speaker, this is all part of the plan to pull the people from the western end, where we are overloaded and burdened to some extent, to bring them out to experience the other side of the Island and “Things Caymanian”.

Madam Speaker, I think that this Motion is indeed very relevant, very timely, and with that I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, for bringing it to this honourable House and congratulate the Third Elected Member for George Town, for seconding the Motion. I would also like to plead with our Administration to ensure that this is not just given lip service, but that action is taken on this. If we put this in place as quickly as possible, it will, as I said, enhance our tourism product. It will provide employment opportunities for our locals and it will allow us to showcase our wonderful, wonderful Caymanian culture.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Government to accept [Private Member's] Motion No. 3 of 2008/09, “Cayman Cultural Tourism Programme”. I wish to commend the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, as well as the seconder of the Motion, the Third Elected Member for the district of George Town, on bringing this Motion to this honourable House. It is a very good motion and it is a very timely motion. It is timely because within the Department of Tourism . . . In fact, for the first time in the history of the Department of Tourism we now have a dedicated focus on Tourism product development which is essentially what this Motion is about—the tourism product and our culture. Our culture is very much a part of our tourism product.

Madam Speaker, not only do we have now for the first time in the history of the Department of Tourism, a fully staffed product development unit, but we also have a deputy director of Tourism, specifically responsible for this subject.

Madam Speaker, in terms of the Government's strategy in establishing this particular unit within the Department of Tourism, we had to look at what components of the product we would address first, because there are several components to the tourism product. We decided that it was best for us to start with human capital development.

The physical part of the product is important, and I will certainly speak to that as well. But, Madam Speaker, in terms of the human capital development we have established a tourism apprenticeship training programme. I am very pleased to report that the first apprentices will be graduating on the 20th of this month, that is, next Saturday. Fifteen tourism apprentices will graduate from that first class.

I am equally pleased to announce that the demand for this programme has significantly increased. Just last week we had the orientation session for the new intake of apprentices, and it was very satisfying to see 34 new apprentices entering the programme.

The Government decided that the programme was so successful and so useful that we would essentially double the budget from 20 apprentices to 40, and that was funded in this year's budget. Having gone through the process, Madam Speaker, we have selected 34 new tourism apprentices that have just started their year of study.

While I am on this subject, and before I move on, I want to take this opportunity to commend the Tourism Apprenticeship Training Council for their hard work on this programme. This Council consists of public and private sector individuals and they spend a tremendous amount of time on this programme. They offer mentoring services to the apprentices. And, of course, the private sector in the third semester of this programme offers employment to the tourism apprentices.

In terms of product development, Madam Speaker, the other part of the product that we have invested and commenced significant work on is the Customer Service Programme. This is a programme that we have named “PRIDE”, which stands for “Personal Responsibility in Delivering Excellence”. This programme is not just another one-off customer service programme. This is a very robust and sustained customer service programme that will live with us for many years to come. It involves, not just the training of employees to certain established benchmarks, but there are other components of the programme which involve monitoring and auditing the various agencies and establishments to ensure that they are complying with those benchmarks. Where there is non-compliance, additional training is put in place to correct those issues. Of course, where people exceed expectations, there are opportunities for them to be properly recognised.

Madam Speaker, the missing component all along, and the next phase of the product development is, in fact, on the cultural tourism side. The Motion speaks specifically to this issue and I want to say that this is going to require the collaboration of the Ministries of Tourism and Culture, the Cayman Islands Tourism Association, and the Cayman National Cultural Foundation. I do not have any doubt that all of the agencies I just mentioned will embrace the spirit and intent of the Motion and will move it forward because, as I said, it is timely.

The Minister of Culture and I have already had discussions on this subject and we have essentially worked out the next steps.

Madam Speaker, where we have fallen down on this in the past—and just let me say that people ask the question all the time, Why is it that when we travel to other regional countries we see a lot more of their culture manifesting itself? I do not think I am wrong in believing that the reason is that when we look back on our history, the Cayman Islands have developed a lot more rapidly than most of our Caribbean neighbours. In the last 35 to 40 years we have come from the “Islands that Time Forgot” to one of the premier destinations in the Caribbean.

We have not only done that using tourism, we have done it based on two key economic pillars: the tourism industry and the financial services industry. That is what is unique with respect to the Cayman Islands. Not many other Caribbean countries built their economies on those two industries. We know (I know from my own experience) when we were youngsters that our parents essentially pushed us in the direction of the business side of the economy. They preferred if we were working in the financial institutions such as banks, and wearing ties, et cetera. We were not encouraged—as we should have been—to enter the tourism industry.

Madam Speaker, because of that and because of the way financial services developed and because of what it represents, there really was not any demand for the cultural component in the financial services industry. So, here we are at this point.

I am very pleased to say that through programmes like the Tourism Scholarship Programme and the Tourism Apprenticeship Training Programme there is a renewed emphasis on the tourism product and a renewed interest. And I mentioned specifically the Tourism Apprenticeship Training Programme because when I attended that induction ceremony I mentioned a few minutes ago, Madam Speaker, not only were the new apprentices there—the young Caymanians who are interested in the tourism industry—but more importantly, or as importantly, their parents were there with them to support and encourage them. I was very, very pleased to see that turn in the way that we think about the tourism industry. It certainly bodes well for the future.

Now, Madam Speaker, there are those who will say that because we developed so rapidly over the last 35 to 40 years there is some confusion about Caymanian culture. I am here to say, and I am sure that every Member of this House can say, that we are not confused about our culture. We understand what our culture is. We live it. It is our culture because we practise it. Every time I talk about culture and mention that, I remember some years ago attending a Miss Teen Pageant and one of the contestants doing her talent on stage. Her talent was essentially structured around what it is that she experiences and does as a young Caymanian in this country, and how some people continue to tell her—and she was explaining this on stage—that is not Caymanian culture. And she was making the point that, of course it is Caymanian culture because I am a Caymanian and I am doing it and doing it based on what I know about my country, what I have been told by my parents. So don't tell me it is not Caymanian culture because I am a Caymanian, this is my culture and this is what I do. She made that point, Madam Speaker, very, very clear. I always remember that night when I heard her saying that on stage.

Certainly when we know we have young Caymanians thinking like that, it is good and gives you a very good feeling.

The other thing we did recently which tells us and the country—both residents and visitors alike—that our culture is alive and well, is that when we hosted the annual FCCA (Florida Caribbean Cruise Association) Conference here in this country with some 1,200 delegates, every night during that Conference there was a different cultural show or demonstration by our people in this country.

Madam Speaker, the talent is here. We know the people and we know that we have these people in every district. The missing component over the years is that we have not really, until now, focused on our product. And, as I said, our culture is a very important part of that product. In order for us to ensure that our people are involved and committed to this and that we are able to achieve the objectives that are set out in this Motion we have to put some funding behind it. This requires a lot of investment in terms of time and resources.

It is not possible for individuals to have full-time jobs and also be expected to be at hotel establishments for three and four hours every night. We have to make sure that we put the funding behind this programme. It would allow individuals to see it not only as a part-time job, but as a career. They can use it to promote not only their culture, feeling proud of 'what it is to be Caymanian' and representing the Cayman Islands, they would understand at the end of the day, at the end of the night when they are finished with their performances, that they do not have any worries about where their salaries are coming from. They would not have to worry about how to support their families or pay their utility bills.

That is the missing component, Madam Speaker, and we as a Government must now, under this focus—this first real focus on our product—be prepared to put the necessary funding behind this programme.

Madam Speaker, I am not going to read the entire Motion, but I am going to read one of the resolve sections because I believe this really is the key component of the Motion. It says: “AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government considers the formation of a core group of cultural performers that will be made available to local tourism establishments on a regular basis.”

That is the objective. That is what we want to achieve with this Motion. I am saying again that we cannot achieve that unless we are prepared to put the funding behind it, and I know that this Government is committed to doing that.

Madam Speaker, the other thing that we need to consider is when we travel overseas. As you know, I have traveled to many countries on various tourism activities. We can promote our culture not just here at home to the people who visit this country, but we can export that and take it overseas and be proud to put it on display when we go to the various conferences and meetings overseas, just as many Caribbean countries do already. And so in establishing this, I do not believe that it is something we should have strictly focused on performances in our own country, but that we should also understand the value of taking that culture overseas and helping people understand what it is to be Caymanian and what they can experience when they visit our shores.

Madam Speaker, the Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town, my colleague, mentioned the “Go East” initiative. This is another important initiative in relation to helping facilitate the objectives that are contained in this Motion. I have said from the time I launched that initiative that the “Go East” initiative was about the development of our people in the eastern districts. It was about giving them the opportunity to showcase their culture and what it means to have that eastern district experience, because it is quite different from the experience that you get on the western end of the Island.

Of course, I have been criticized for the “Go East” initiative because people have said, ‘We don’t see anything happening. We don’t see any hotels going up’. It’s not about hotels, Madam Speaker. We are not saying ‘no’ to hotels and we are not saying ‘no’ to condominiums, but what we are saying is that when those developments come into our districts in the east we want them to be developed along the lines of sustainable tourism development. We do not want any skyscrapers in the eastern districts.

It is a complete disconnect with the experience that we have there now. People value that experience and we do not want to do anything in the eastern districts that is going to change that experience. We understand the tranquil nature of the eastern districts. That is something very attractive and we do not want to lose that. So, if people believe—and I do not think many people believe this but I know that some of the detractors do, because we have said very clearly that the initiative is not about the development of hotels all over the eastern districts. It is about the development of our people, as I said.

Madam Speaker, we have taken quite a bit of time to talk about the “Go East” initiative. We have had consultations in North Side, East End and Bodden Town. We have committees established and we are about to merge those three committees to one steering committee for the eastern districts to support the “Go East” initiative. Although we have not made certain decisions yet, as soon as we are back in this House to debate some of the legislation that is outstanding I will table the National Tourism Management Policy which will take us and manage tourism over the next five years.

Importantly, Madam Speaker, appended to that policy will be the formal “Go East” initiative policy. What I believe, and have always believed, is that the “Go East” initiative and the policies that are going to be contained in that document are going to require some changes to legislation, whether that is planning legislation, the Tourism Law or some other form of legislation, or all of the above. I think we are going to have to look at the amendments to some of those policies to ensure that our tourism is developed along the lines of sustainability. That is a concept that we have fully embraced.

Madam Speaker, the mover of the Motion, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, also put forward some excellent ideas with respect to how we can achieve the objectives under this Motion. He mentioned, as an example, some performances that would be structured around certain seasons, such as, Christmas and Easter and things such as that. I think that is an excellent idea. I think once we get this up and running that is something that should be a key component of the performances that emanate from this new initiative.

Madam Speaker, I do not think that it would be right for me, in addressing this Motion, to not talk about the physical part of the product. I think that the human capital development component of the tourism product is important, but it cannot be viewed and discussed to the exclusion of the physical development part of the product.

I just wanted to mention that, at least briefly, to say that when we talk about the physical tourism product we are talking about everything from our air to our sea ports, to our attractions, hotels, restaurants, and our culinary offerings. Cayman Airways, our National Flag Carrier is a very, very important part of our tourism product. We have to look at all of these components globally and understand how one interacts with the other, and how one affects the other.

You will remember my mentioning in the very early part of my debate, the "PRIDE" programme. I am very pleased to say that Cayman Airways is one of the first agencies to undergo that Customer Service programme. They have not finished the training yet, but Cayman Airways is one of the first government agencies to go through that programme. Of course, there are private sector organisations that have also embraced that.

Madam Speaker, when we talk about our tourism product, cultural performances and the physical part of our product, all of that has to be considered in the context of our environment. We need to protect not just our natural environment but [we need] to ensure that our built environment develops in such a way that it is sustainable, and that the whole concept of not just sustainable tourism development but sustainable development generally is fully embraced by this country.

It is always rather dangerous to mention names because you cannot possibly mention everyone. But, Madam Speaker, we already have people in this country. I know, for example, that the group supporting the cultural activities at the seniors home in Bodden Town meets quite frequently (the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town mentioned this) and they are very, very engaged in this whole concept of embracing our culture. It is very good to see the activities that they have on weekends. It is also very pleasing and satisfying for us to see so many local Caymanians coming out and trying to learn more about the Cayman of yesteryear so that those memories are not lost.

We know who the key people are. We know people who have performed in various ways in plays, comedy shows, and various cultural demonstrations. We can draw them from every district in this country. Those are the people we need to begin to talk to at this point so that they can help us build this programme.

In summary, I will simply say that I again commend the mover and seconder of the Motion. Madam Speaker, the passion with which the mover of the Motion spoke, I understand where his heart is. We understand as Caymanians that we all embrace our culture. We understand our culture, and I thank the mover of the Motion for bringing it. It is a very timely Motion, as I have said, and I look forward to working with him and the other Members of this honourable House and, indeed, the Department of Tourism, the Ministry of Tourism, the Ministry of Culture and the Cayman Islands Cultural Foundation, and, of course, the many other individuals to progress this initiative.

Madam Speaker, this is very exciting. I am going to close on this note—we have for the first time in the history of the Department of Tourism, had a real focus on tourism product development and enhancements and we cannot go down that road without fully embracing our Caymanian culture.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 1.45 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.25 pm

Proceedings resumed at 1.52 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continues on Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to debate the Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09, Cayman Cultural Tourism Programme. This whole week we have been talking about the destiny of the Caymanian people. First, we talked about their life's savings in terms of the hurricane. Yesterday we talked about the whole prevention of diseases. And today we are talking about the culture of the Caymanian people resulting in an economic impact.

Madam Speaker, culture is a powerful human tool for survival. I am very glad that the Fourth Elected Member for George Town brought this Motion. If I could reflect for a moment to tell you that when I was a teacher, about 20 years ago, I witnessed where the word "Caymanian" could not be said or written even in a document. I remember when we [spoke] about the curriculum and we were talking about Caymanians, we got a lot of opposition from some of the other persons there because we wanted to use the word "Caymanian". That was about 20 years ago.

We have come a long way, and this is great. But, if you listen to the talk shows and you can take away all the nay-saying, what they are saying is, 'Look, we have a culture; we want to nation build; we are Caymanians; we want to be identified; we want our culture to be highlighted'. And that is what they are saying despite some of the nay-saying that will be interspersed in there.

Madam Speaker, we know that culture and tourism are inextricably linked. As a matter of fact, it is like a shoe and a foot or a hand and a glove. Tourism cannot go anywhere without culture development. But the culture that we want to personify today is our own. And if I can also reflect, Madam Speaker, when I was a young girl—and, of course, I speak with experience since I am the Minister of Dance—the dances of Quadrille, Polka and Cha-cha I think was the dance, Madam Speaker) we exhibited. And I can also reflect that Caymanians showcased their culture through kitchen dances, poetry and stories.

But today it would seem that something has happened. I do not know what it is that has happened, but, like our culture has . . . there is something in terms of highlighting it. And it is not that we do not do a lot in our schools. I mean, I can attest to that. I spent a lot of my lifetime in education where we developed the schools in terms of understanding the culture. But as soon as we become adults it appears as if something happens; something just happens and we do not manifest it.

I will draw a parallel. One of the things you can say about other nationalities [is that] when they come here they crave for their own culture. They crave for their dance. We see every weekend something advertised at the Lions Centre—this play, that performance, whatever. It is because they are so embedded that they want to see it. Well, that is exactly how it must be for us here. That is exactly how it must be for the tourism, for us to subsume the people that come here as visitors and as residents, into our culture. In other words, acculturate them into our culture.

Madam Speaker, you and I went to Fiji. When we had breakfast we were subsumed with their culture. They had poetry, songs, dance, whatever it was. By the time we left there after 10 days we ourselves were humming it. It was [another] language but we understood their dance, their dialect, we heard everything. They ensured that they impinged upon us what their culture was.

This is what the spirit of the Motion is saying. It is saying that what we want to do with the tourists that come here, or the residents that come here, is to expose them to our culture so they will understand where we have come from, what we are, and in so doing, it will impact our economy.

I heard the Honourable Minister speak about it today, and he said that it is going to cost at first, the upfront, yes, in the Ministry of Tourism and perhaps in the Ministry of Education also. But at the end of the day it will pay for itself, Madam Speaker. At the end of the day we would have developed the business people because this is business we are talking about, we are not talking about some little willy-nilly thing; we are talking about developing businesslike people who will organise themselves in the arts to make money from the arts. And this is a different dimension that we are moving forward to.

We are moving into a dimension where our own people can see that their culture can make money for them. I am sure you laugh, Madam Speaker, when we reflect on the different artifacts that the Fijians made in order to make money.

Madam Speaker, when I was a young girl going to school in Jamaica, Saturday was a free day for us and I liked to go down by the tourist boat in the craft market. Perhaps you yourself may remember that. I would love to hear Sugar Belly. I'm dating myself, but I'm sure the Honourable Minister of Communications would perhaps remember that.

Sugar Belly. I loved to hear him play the music and we would dance. This is in the tourist area where the boats came in, and we would go there not every Saturday and we would enjoy ourselves and eat curried lobster. I do not remember having that in the Cayman Islands (not curried), because curry was foreign to us at that time. We would dance and enjoy ourselves and by four o'clock in the evening, we were back to the college.

Madam Speaker, I also went to Barbados to a place called Plantation, where they had the different exhibitions of dances in the various Caribbean areas. It was all-inclusive. You paid like $80 which included drinks, food and everything, and you watched the dancers come on, maybe not every country, but I know they had the Rumba, the Cha-cha, whatever, and you learnt — that was in Barbados.

Madam Speaker, when you take a cruise to the Caribbean and go to a tourist area, wherever a tourist area is in the Caribbean it is either music, craft, poetry, or some literary thing. And people make their money from this!

I know that the Caymanian people have talent. Every day in this honourable House in the dining room we have three characters who act out for us. We have our Minister of Communications, who tells us about a lot of the East End heritage; we have the Minister of Education, who dramatizes what happened in the old days; and sometimes we have our own Leader of Government Business, who reflects on what happened in Cayman Brac. So, I know that we have a lot of talent. And this is free for us, which means, Madam Speaker, in this honourable House we too have our own culture. It is free, but at least we are able to laugh and take away from some of the sourness that happens when we are in the well.

Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, is very passionate about this. He has talked about this. He has developed it, done a lot of research, called people all over the place; put a lot of work into this, brought it to caucus. And here he is. This is the time for it. Nothing happens before time, and it is right because the Caymanian people want their culture to shine. I hear that every day.

We talk about being a Caymanian, but we must not be a Caymanian in some nebulous form. We must understand our traditions, our beliefs, our dance, our songs; we must know our stories, and in doing so we can also make some money off it. In doing what we are doing here, we will be able to block the cultural penetration that is taking place at this moment.

Madam Speaker, if the Cayman Islands, in particular the legislators, do not take a handle on cultural penetration the traditional culture of the Cayman Islands will be subsumed. You do not want that, although what you want to do is have the layer of the subset of the culture that comes in. Because at the end of the day, Madam Speaker, culture is changing. They bringing their culture, and added to our culture, it changes. We don't mind that. We don't mind taking a bit of other people's culture and mixing it with ours. And it can be better, or much better I would say. But what we don't want to happen is for our culture to be subsumed.

Madam Speaker, I know that the Leader of the Opposition in his jest tries to mock me and call me the Minister of Dance because I like to dance. If I would come again in this lifetime, I would want to be a dancer. But I don't think in my time growing up there was anything for me to be able to do that. But I know myself how I am creative and what I do with my feet and my arms and my head and how I dance, I know I could be a dancer, I know that.

So, Madam Speaker, just like Jamaica has its dance group led by the Honourable Rex Nettleford—and that came from just the same way the Fourth Elected Member wants it to come—and where that makes money now for itself is dancing to the tourists. They go and see it, just like it happens in England, the United States, the Haley Group. It happens in Africa, in India. It happens all over the world where people use their culture to raise funds, to raise money, to extend jobs, to get jobs; to be entrepreneurs, to have businesses, and at the same time to allow the tourists that come to understand the way we were, who we are, and to enjoy our culture and come back.

Madam Speaker, you have just gone to Austria, a European country. I do not know if you have been there before, but you came back all ablaze on the culture of Austria. Notwithstanding, you still like your own culture, but their dances are different. Their dress is different. And you go there and enjoy it. You had to pay for it. It is the same thing here in the Cayman Islands. When the tourists come by boat, by plane, or by whatever means they come, we want them to enjoy our culture, and also pay for it because that is the way it goes. Culture is inextricably linked to Tourism.

Madam Speaker, I know that my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, is wise in bringing this Motion at this time. But, Madam Speaker, before I leave I want to say that I believe that this is going to revolutionise the whole culture dimension in the Cayman Islands. When I think of Caymanians who have the talent but they do not have the wherewithal to put it together . . . but the guide is going to come from the Government. And I am sure in another five years' time the Government will sort of move away a little bit so that it takes its own colour, own dimension, and this will be a great phenomenon for us. Our culture will be alive and our Caymanians will be happy, not only that our culture will be alive, but that we will also have an economic impact from it.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I take this opportunity to add my views to what has been said in relation to this important Motion brought by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, regarding the development of a core group of cultural performers being made available to local tourism establishments, and calling also for the Government to consider working in collaboration with the relevant tourism associations to ensure the sustainability of this programme.

This Motion, Madam Speaker, is being brought, as the Motion says, to ensure that our tourism product is enhanced and that there is greater value placed on and greater development of our culture.

Madam Speaker, the Minister for Tourism spoke at some length about the importance of culture and cultural programmes to the tourism product. I don't propose to go into much detail in that regard. My other colleagues on the Backbench have spoken eloquently about the vibrancy of the Cayman culture and how important it is to us as a people, and how important it has always been to those who come here and truly want to understand what life is like in Cayman for those of us who live here.

The Government has given this Motion very careful consideration. My Ministry has had discussions with the Cayman National Cultural Foundation about what could be done fairly quickly to ensure that we meet the objectives of the Motion. And I am happy to say, Madam Speaker, that we have now devised in broad terms a programme. I am going to go through in some detail the way we see this working. I should also say that, after consultation with the Leader of Government Business, I am proposing to bring the necessary Cabinet paper to Cabinet (in conjunction with the Minister for Tourism) over the course of the next few weeks, to establish this formally as a government policy and to underpin it with the necessary funding required to make this happen.

Madam Speaker, what is contemplated is that the Cayman Islands Government in conjunction with the Cayman National Cultural Foundation and other related entities and individuals will develop a company of Cayman Islands' talent to create a programme of cultural entertainment that combines music, dance, storytelling, and theatre for presentation to the general public, including residents of the Cayman Islands and visitors.

Madam Speaker, it is expected that this will enhance Cayman's tourism product by offering regularly scheduled live entertainment that showcases Cayman's unique and vibrant brand of culture, that it will provide wholesome entertainment for residents and visitors alike; that these efforts will support learning initiatives aimed at cultural education within the school system and cultural understanding in the corporate sphere. It will also raise the profile within the Cayman Islands, as well as regionally and internationally, of Cayman's history, cultural heritage and arts. It will promote professionalism amongst its members, and by their example, among those desirous of entering the field. Finally, we believe it will provide gainful employment for Caymanians who are qualified for a career in the arts.

Madam Speaker, a bit more detail: The company will comprise, at least initially, 8 to 10 fulltime members (although we are not suggesting that that number could not be increased if there were suitable additional persons willing to become involved), and that this would comprise a number of performers, actors, dancers and musicians. In addition to that, we would need creative and administrative personnel including a stage director, company manager, choreographer, and a stage manager.

The Cultural Foundation has spent quite some time working out how this would actually be structured and staffed. The company would offer ongoing internships for two high school or college students so as to provide additional training for youth who have the requisite interest, discipline and talent in the arts. As the need arises, on a part-time basis the company would co-opt additional personnel in relevant areas, such as instructors of specific disciplines, musicians or dancers.

The programme, as we envision it, will exemplify Cayman's strength in the area of entertainment and promote an appreciation for Caymanian culture and arts in order to give support to Cayman's tourism product with regularly scheduled performances as well as a repertory suitable for presentations at special events. It will give support, we believe, to the educational system by enlivening social studies and other set texts. It will do likewise with the workplace environment, both public and private, by offering cultural awareness training.

Among the production elements being envisioned are folklore and storytelling, fiddling and drumming, Quadrille and Maypole dancing; enacting traditional pastimes such as fishing, kitchen dances and weddings; contemporary Caymanian music and dance such as steel pan, jazz and reggae fusion and lyrical dance, and Batabano-type costumes and spectacle.

What is contemplated, Madam Speaker, is that the programme would be fully implemented within 10 months of final approval by Cabinet. This would allow for advertising for and contracting members who are already qualified, or who demonstrate unmistakable talent in these areas.

There would be an additional eight-month training period for members, involving four two-month long modules that would prepare members to perform the various disciplines and, at the same time, immerse them in Caymanian cultural heritage and arts. This would give time for the commission and completion of appropriate scripts, choreography and music arrangements that will form the basis of the company's repertoire. [It would] also allow sufficient rehearsal and set and costume construction time in order to premier the company by a target date of the opening of the next tourist season, which is November 2009. This is what we have in mind.

The company would operate under the auspices of Cayman National Cultural Foundation and report, as you would expect, to the Cayman Islands Government.

So, Madam Speaker, as I have said, we have had a careful look at what is being sought in this programme. We believe that the Fourth Elected Member for George Town ought to be highly commended for bringing this Motion to the House, bringing to national attention what is actually a well-known need, a well-known void that has existed in our tourism product for many a year. While others have recognised that need for a long time, Madam Speaker, the reason the void has never been filled is because there has never been the funding to make it happen.

What is going to be required if this is to work, is that we have to have local people come to regard this as part of their work. If not full time work, certainly, a significant part of what they do to earn a living and that they are able to look forward at the end of the month to a regular pay cheque for what they do. Most people do this sort of activity and performance out of love for what they do. And we have never taken the additional step as a country and as a government to say, What you do is really and truly valued in terms of what you can spend at Foster's.

And what this Government is doing on the initiative of the Fourth Elected member for George Town and his seconder, the Third Elected Member for George Town, is to say, We are going to put our money where 'your' [mouths are.] As I said, for the first time what is being proposed is a programme, a company that is funded by the Cayman Islands Government to ensure that there is continuity, adequate resources allocated to doing a professional job at these various performances.

So, Madam Speaker, I am happy to join with my colleague Minister, the Minister of Tourism, and the other Backbench Members of this House, to support this Motion.

Could I have just a moment, Madam Speaker, before I wind up? [pause]

Madam Speaker, as I said before, this is a very commendable Motion. It is one that demonstrates some vision; one that demonstrates an awareness of what is transpiring—or, indeed, not transpiring in the Cayman society and economy. And the only disappointment I think those of us on this side of the House have is that the Opposition has not indicated their support for this Motion.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, they appear to have deserted this Chamber on this occasion—particularly the Leader of the Opposition, who was former Minister of Tourism and who did nothing about matters such as this. I would have hoped, and I believe my colleagues would have hoped—I know the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, in particular, was looking forward to hearing what he would have said about this Motion of such importance. So, we shall have to press on without the Opposition in this case.

We may have to do that in relation to the constitutional talks as well, but . . .

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, could we get back to the Motion before the House?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin: But, Madam Speaker, this Government has gotten used to knowing that we have to do what has to be done without the support of the Opposition. This is but another sad example of their dereliction of duty.

Madam Speaker, with those remarks I want to offer my support to this Motion and, I believe, we can assure safe passage.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I only have a few comments to make and to say that I am extremely grateful for the contributions made. I thank the Third Elected Member for George Town for seconding the Motion and for her contribution. I also thank the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town for his passionate contribution.

Madam Speaker, I am a bit overwhelmed, to say the least, by the response from the two Ministers that are connected to this Motion—firstly, that of the Minister of Tourism, who [expressed] his commitment to the Motion; and then to listen to the actual Minister of Culture speak to how he sees this and the fact that he has already gone ahead and had his staff work on proposals to set this Motion in motion . . . Madam Speaker, if there ever was a time since I was elected that I felt like crying, I can tell you it is today!

I will not do that, but I must tell you that the Government's response in recognising the merits of the Motion does evoke a lot of emotion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government in conjunction with the Cayman National Cultural Foundation and other related entities and individuals considers creating a cultural programme suitable for the wholesome entertainment of visitors and residents alike;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government considers the formation of a core group of cultural performers that will be made available to local tourism establishments on a regular basis;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government also considers working in collaboration with the relevant tourism associations to ensure the sustainability of this programme.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Private Member's Motion Number—

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, can we have a division please?

Division No. 4/08-09

Noes: 0

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.
 Hon. Anthony S. Eden

*Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Present and Aye.

[inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: Honourable Deputy Speaker, would you give the Speaker an opportunity to deal with the division please? Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Oooh.

The Speaker: Twelve Ayes; No noes.

Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09 is duly passed.

Agreed: Private Member's Motion No. 3/08-09 passed.

Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09—Man Power Survey

The Speaker: I recognise the Fourth Elected Member for the District of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I beg to move Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09, entitled Manpower Survey. The Motion reads:

WHEREAS the Cayman Islands currently have on record in excess of 25,000 work permits;

AND WHEREAS a significant number of qualified Caymanians continue to experience difficulty in finding employment in their area of expertise;

AND WHEREAS the office of Employment Relations, the Education Department and the Immigration Department would benefit from access to a register of qualified Caymanians;

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government considers conducting a Man Power Survey throughout the Cayman Islands and establishing a robust system for the maintenance of the records.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Madam Speaker, I beg to second the Motion.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

My very first time out of the blocks as a candidate for the district of George Town, at our very first meeting in the courthouse parking lot, this idea of a manpower survey was a major part of my maiden campaign speech.

This is an idea given to me by Mr. Uriel Scott who spoke to me about the benefits of it and explained how it could work. Right away, it was something that stuck with me and I saw great merit in it.

I spoke to it throughout the campaign and I have mentioned it in this House on a few occasions. I want to say again that this idea is one that we have talked about for quite some time, Madam Speaker. The way I work with things that I want to bring to the Legislative Assembly is that I live it; it becomes a part of me. I weigh the pros and cons for some time until I can get a proper handle on it, because not every idea that comes to mind ends up being one that you should move forward with. A lot of times you do not see the negative side of it, and it is through talking about it on a regular basis that those things are pointed out to you.

This Government has had many things to focus on. We have had a tremendous amount of fixing to do and not everything could be done at the same time.

We gave schools our number one priority, the education system, there is evidence that we are doing something about that. That took some time for us to get our hands properly around. Roads were another major issue of neglect in this country over the years. Housing was another major issue. Social services, health care, tourism—Madam Speaker, still a topic that we are dealing with. Human capital, Madam Speaker, again, another area of great concern for us.

As we have gone along, we have taken on projects that others only dreamed about but never dared to touch. Many of them gave lip service to our human capital, to schools, roads, housing, but it is only since the PPM Administration took office that we have seen any real work done on all of these topical areas.

Madam Speaker, my idea of a manpower survey is one of extensive research and development of live data. Right now, at the stroke of a pen, the click of a button, anybody can get from the Immigration Department statistics on every foreign worker in this country. It can tell you where they are supposed to be working, what they were employed as (as far as profession), but so far we are not able to adequately pinpoint those exact figures. We are not able to give anyone the same or similar statistics about the Cayman population. We have no legitimate register of our Caymanian human capital, the workforce of our Caymanian people.

I believe it is difficult for us to plan the lives of our people and, indeed, the development of this country, to ensure that the people are receiving the economic benefits of the development of the country. We [need to] put ourselves in a position where we understand the labour dynamics and understand what our people are capable of doing, what they are qualified to do, and make sure that as a Government we assist in making sure that they get placed in those particular areas. We must know how many jobs there are in the various sectors of this community. We must have an idea of what the labour force should be to satisfy that demand. My job here in this Legislative Assembly is a simple one—to improve the lives of my people.

Madam Speaker, in the days of old Caymanians were the powerbrokers, so to speak, in this country. They owned the majority of the land, if not all of it. They had very little debt. We have seen that power shift from our traditional wealthy families to foreign investors. While this country has always been considered a very progressive and developing country, Madam Speaker, the natives, the local people, are not as big a part of the success story as they ought to be.

Foreign investors come, and we are happy for them, extremely happy for them, Madam Speaker. But we have somehow failed to put the necessary laws or networks in place to ensure that our people share in the wealth, share in the development and continue to own property and be the major owners of businesses in this country. Most of us now work for someone else, not even Caymanian-owned companies.

The economic base is no longer in the hands of Caymanians. The best jobs in this country are not going to Caymanians. The best business opportunities are not going to Caymanians. It is time for us as a nation to pull ourselves up by the bootstraps to ensure that the country we are building will benefit us.

My idea of a manpower survey is . . . I know there is some information held by the Employment Relations Office, but the majority of that information will come from people who go there to register, or to see what they may be able to garner from companies that they speak to. I believe that in order for us to genuinely help ourselves, in order for us to connect the dots and help develop our people and help them to take their rightful place in the workplace, we as a Government need to be a little bit more proactive.

We have talked until we are blue in the face to company HR managers, to managing directors about training in this country, about the importance of making sure that they help to qualify Caymanians to take the place of some of our work permit holders. By and large, some of the companies have taken the initiative. Some should be commended for their efforts. But, for the most part, Madam Speaker, the majority of them have ignored that and continue to force their way through and continue to apply for work permits and develop ways to justify why their businesses are going to fail unless they get another work permit, another work permit, another work permit.

Madam Speaker, I believe that with the proper information in place we can be in a much better position to make sure that the people of this country get the necessary training to be able to fill the jobs, and that we can start this process through our curriculum and career guidance counselors.

Because we have no way of knowing exactly what our labour force is or what our people are capable of doing in the various categories, we do not have much ability to defer or turn down work permits when they come before the Immigration Board. If we knew exactly how many Caymanians were qualified to do the jobs that people continue to apply for work permits for, we would be in a much better situation when making decisions on whether or not to issue a work permit.

Madam Speaker, we know that stories of qualified Caymanians not finding work in their desired field are rampant. We hear these heartrending stories all the time of people who have qualified themselves . . . we keep talking to them about making sure they have the necessary qualifications to fill the positions. Many of them do that, and they are still unable to land the job they are qualified for.

Madam Speaker, what I would like to see happen is once we get to the stage where we can have this survey conducted and we put our database in place, if somebody comes to the Labour Office and registers and says that he is out of a job, and your database now tells you that the person is qualified in a respective area . . . Right now the Labour Office will only have information on whoever comes in to register. That only tells them what that person can do. And some of the companies the Labour Office works with will say that they use 10 mechanics, 3 secretaries, 5 drivers, 10 cleaners, 1 supervisor and 2 accountants and so on. But, what the Labour Office also needs to know is the overall picture of exactly where every Caymanian in this country is placed and what they are capable of.

If we had this database, the Immigration Department would be able to look at this database (that it should have access to along with the Labour Office), and be able to say that for, let us say a work permit application for a carpenter . . . the Immigration Department can easily look in their database right now and see that there are 20 carpenters here on work permits. Neither the Immigration Department nor the Labour Office knows how many qualified Caymanian carpenters there are in the community. Also, they would not know how many of them are out of work unless they registered at the Labour Office.

The other side of this, Madam Speaker, is that if they had that database and we had these 20 carpenters on work permits, and here is another application for another carpenter, this database would be able to tell the Immigration Department that there are 10 Caymanian carpenters who are out of work. The decision would then have to be made as to whether or not this particular application for a carpenter is a specialty carpenter and does not fill the role of any of these other 10 Caymanian carpenters, for instance.

Let us say that the database says there are no Caymanian carpenters out of work. But there may be 10 Caymanian carpenters who are doing other jobs because they could not find work as a carpenter. This database should be able to tell the Immigration Department or the Labour Office where these 10 carpenters are, what they are doing, and make contact with them.

Madam Speaker, in this country we continue to witness an exchange of wealth where money is generated in this country and people are earning good money, but because [we have] expatriate workers the funds are leaving the country. If a qualified carpenter is working in a mechanic shop as a driver because he had to take what was available to him, and he was making $5 an hour—whereas he could be making $15 an hour in his area of qualification—these are the things we need to understand about what is happening in the local community.

Our Caymanian people, because of the ad hoc way we have always issued work permits, and because we have no database to depend on, these individuals who may be side-lined and who have gone into other professions . . . and most people have even forgotten that that person was a qualified carpenter. He will forever be stuck driving taxis or returning people to their jobs when they drop off their cars at a mechanic's shop and so on. He simply had to find something to do, but he is not experiencing his true earning potential. Whereas, the work permit holders are filling those jobs.

The Labour Office is handicapped because they do not know how many Caymanians are out there qualified to do that job. When someone comes to the Labour Office and asks if they have anybody qualified, they say no, and give the exemption letter for the Immigration Department to issue a work permit. As far as they are concerned, they do not have anyone registered. It is only because no one came in to register. Not all people are going to do that.

I am saying, Madam Speaker, that somewhere along the line wed as a country, we as a Government, need to understand what is happening here and try to resolve this matter and look out for our Caymanians. We cannot spoon-feed everyone, Madam Speaker. That's not really what I am saying.

This has gone on for so long that it has become the norm. People do not even fight any more. They do not argue or go with that impetus any more that there really is a job here for them. They simply go to a place and ask if there are any vacancies and they are told "no". But there are people on work permits in those areas that are occupying positions that Caymanians should be able to fill.

The development, the lifestyle of the Caymanian, Madam Speaker, continues to degrade. They continue to have problems with their loans, their mortgages. They have problems financing the simple things in life. They have problems sending their kids to school, buying uniforms, the simplest of things. But there are so many people in this country who are working here and enjoying the things the Caymanian cannot. And it is only because we have not sat down and carved out what is truly Caymanian to make sure that we take part in that.

Madam Speaker, I will never be so naïve as to believe that we can do without foreign labour. As of about 11 o'clock this morning there were 25,688 work permits on record in this country. I understand that we will always have people on work permits. However, what I want to make sure of is that the work permits must be genuinely for positions that Caymanians are not qualified for. The work permits must go to the jobs that Caymanians cannot fill, not the other way around.

We have made it too easy for the work permit regime to continue. It is time that we stood up as a Government, as a nation, and did something about this.

Madam Speaker, the psyche of our people who see all this prosperity around them, is not very good. They understand. They see work going on. They see people prospering, [yet] for some reason or another they have been unable to break through and find their rightful place.

I have also spoken about the curriculum side of things where we must understand that if . . . and Madam Speaker, I am going to give a few other statistics here that might shock some of us.

In this country right now, there are 696 work permits for accountants. Now, I am saying that obviously these are areas that Caymanians should be encouraged to qualify in because there are jobs available here that people are filling with work permits. So our tertiary education side of things will connect, once we get this database.

Madam Speaker, I have said before that in my mind what I am proposing here is the missing piece of the puzzle because we have done what we had to do. We have started the ball rolling with education. The Minister has placed a tremendous amount of emphasis on training. But we have to connect the labour issues here now.

Our career counselors must be directed to tell our students who may want to be something else . . . and you cannot force people to be what they do not want to be. But career counseling is about directing. It is about advising and opening up options to people. And many times people have been redirected. It makes very little sense, Madam Speaker, to go into a particular area where you already know there is going to be difficulty finding a job. We must make our children aware of where their best opportunities are. So, 696 accountants as of this morning.

Madam Speaker, lawyers, I am not sure about this figure but the number I have here is 275. I guess there are different levels of this, but professional managers: 786.

Quantity surveyors: 7. That is a small number, and one of the professions that I continue to mention because the point I am trying to make is that the higher-paying jobs are the ones that are mostly controlled by expatriate workers. We need to have our people step up. Prepare them to step up to take those positions.

Trainer, nonprofessional (how is this one, Madam Speaker?): 20.

Trainer, professional: 20. I am not sure exactly what they are doing. Are they training our people or are they training the expatriate workers? I do not know.

Air conditioning mechanic: 139. Here is an area, Madam Speaker. We have a lot of industrious people in this country, a lot of people who may not want to go the academic route.

There are really not many of us when you look at other world populations. There are about 55,000 of us. So, if we can qualify 139 of our people to take these 139 jobs that expatriates are holding, that is a major difference. That changes the whole dynamics of this country in something as simple as air conditioning mechanics. It does not take 10 years to qualify for that.

Auto body painter: 17.
Auto body repairman: 49.
Bartender: 111.

Earlier on the Minister of Tourism spoke to that (in another Motion). Some parents directing kids away from that area, but there is a tremendous amount of money in the service industry.

Barber: There are 70 work permits for barbers in this country. Now, that's one that we do not even have to go to school for. Madam Speaker, I am just saying that these are all areas where our people can further develop themselves.

Cabinetmaker: a very noble profession, very skilled. There are 37 people on work permits.

Computer technician, there are 43.

In a country where there is usually always a building boom going on, we have 919 work permits in place for carpenters. Nine hundred and nineteen!

Now, Madam Speaker, a simple thing: Cosmetologists: 180 work permits.

Computer programmer: 17.

Now, this may be a small number, but 56 work permits are in place for boat captain. A country that is surrounded by water! A country that prides itself in a seafaring heritage. Boat captain: 56.

Dive instructor/Dive master: 240. We were all born in the sea, literally speaking.

I am using these statistics so that we can all understand where we are going wrong and where we have sold ourselves short in this country over the last couple of decades. I am not going to go the route and blame anybody in particular with this because this is a long time in the making. But I want to say that I am confident that my Government in recognising this situation will be the first to really make a difference to do something about it.

Food and beverage servers: 1,143. There seems to be . . . I guess they put them in different categories.

Another area that we have some of the best in the world is heavy equipment operators: 248 work permits. There are some professions in this country that need to be protected totally for Caymanians where we just do not issue work permits. I believe that there are things we ought to sit down and consider. Boat captain is one that I would like to see reserved for Caymanians.

Dive instructors. We need to qualify our people and make sure they can do the job. The jobs pay well. The expatriates would not come here and stay and make a living for themselves and not want to leave if the jobs were not paying very well.

A simple thing like a truck driver, 130 work permits.

Welder: 93.

Madam Speaker, there is even a job here listed as beach attendant: 44.

Carpenter's helper—

The Speaker: Honourable Member, is this a convenient point to take the afternoon break?

Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 3.03 pm

Proceedings resumed at 3.33 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. Continuation of debate on Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09.

The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town continuing his introduction of the Motion.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As I was saying before, our inability to make sure that our Caymanian population gets their fair share of opportunities also relates to the wellbeing of a nation, of people being able to share in the prosperity because it is all around us. There is always some major project, some new company starting up. There are always signs of prosperity in this country and it is obvious that the country is doing well.

I believe that many of our people are having difficulty making ends meet. It is not that the opportunities are not here, it is just that they are not finding themselves in positions where they can take advantage of those opportunities.

We are speaking to how the HR officers, managing directors and owners of these places do not do enough to make sure that Caymanians are trained in the right way and available to take on the responsibilities with these jobs that make them a better living. It speaks to a [people] who are extremely disappointed in the system that runs their country. The majority of it is centered around their ability to earn an honest day's work.

We hear the talk all the time about Caymanians being lazy and so on, but that is really not true. We do have some, I will admit. There are some Caymanians who are simply not employable. But I believe that is true anywhere you go. We have our fair share. But the majority of our Caymanian people are willing to work.

I have seen too many able-bodied individuals in this country who talk to us, and some of them cry because they want so much to be able to provide for themselves and their families. For one reason or another, they are not able to land a decent job. Some of them will take anything and they cannot get anything. So, the psyche of our people right now is not very high. We are not feeling very good about ourselves, and we need to be able to do something about that, otherwise, this goose that's laying all these golden eggs . . . at some point in time it is all going to fall apart if Caymanians are not able to share in the prosperity that this country is experiencing.

Madam Speaker, I have a little routine. I try to do a little bit of healthy exercise in the morning. One of the ways I ignore the pain in the limbs when I am going through that little routine is . . . Madam Speaker, I do not know if you can hear me, but I talk to you in the mornings. Whatever it is that I have to do in the Legislative Assembly, I rehearse it while I am on the machine. I speak as if I am contributing to a debate or making a speech in this Legislative Assembly. I don't do it when anybody else is at home, Madam Speaker.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I rehearse the things I want to say because I was told during the campaign process, especially by the Honourable Minister of Communications, who . . .

You have to be careful with him, Madam Speaker, because whatever speech you had prepared, if he gets his hand on it you would stand in front of the microphone with nothing because he believes that we should come here without anything prepared. But he learned over time as well, and I needed that time to develop myself as well, Madam Speaker.

I believe I have gotten pretty near to where I can make a coherent contribution from bullet points. That is the way I operate now. I do not come to this podium with a prepared speech. I do not have anything to hand to the reporters when I sit down. But I do rehearse the things that I want to say.

Madam Speaker, I had just finished one day (I think it was Monday), and Susan Watson of Radio Cayman was on the radio. As I stepped off, Susan had a 'thought of the day' that she lends us at times. I was dealing with this particular Motion at the time, and this very point where I was talking about our Caymanians needing to feel good and know that they can take their right place in the community, their right place in the job market and earn the decent salaries so that they can have their nice homes and their nice cars and take proper care of their families and have no worries about sending their kids off to school. As I stepped off, Susan said, "Your thought for today." And it said, "If you don't respect what you have today, how can you value what lies ahead?"

I said, "Oh my, she is speaking to me" because it fit right into the point in my mind where I was at the time that unless we can get our people to a stage where they are proud to be Caymanian, and understand that this country works for them, and they in turn for their country, and that they benefit from it, their outlook on life is bleak.

We need to understand that as a country and work towards making sure that every Caymanian who has ambition, who has a desire to succeed, does so. The opportunities are in this country for them to do so.

Madam Speaker, I want to complete. . . We talked about needing to understand how the numbers work and how the Labour Office, the Immigration Department, and the educational and training side of things are supposed to come together. We [must be] able to understand that whenever [young people] get to the stage where they are thinking about tertiary education—and many times they have their minds made up about what they think they want to do. Many times they have to be coerced or pointed into a certain direction.

We must be able to understand that if our database tells us that there are 20 mechanics in this country on work permits and there are 40 jobs for mechanics, and only 15 of them are filled by Caymanians, that tells us that there is room for 5 more people to be employed and that we do not have enough mechanics in the country.

Once we understand the dynamics of that, our career counselors should be able to explain to [young people] that this is an area that they could possibly work because we do not have enough; that we have 20 work permits, so this would be a sure area for them if they qualify. There is a job here that they must be able to get as Caymanians, and we must be able to follow that through. When that [young person] qualifies, that job must be waiting. That [young person] must not be forced to go into another profession because room cannot be found for him in the workplace.

I want to also say that I am not just talking private sector here. I am also talking public sector. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, I am especially talking to the public sector.

Madam Speaker, we have had too many stories of [young people] going through tertiary education, whether overseas or local, and when they come back home we are in shock. We did not know that we had an architect coming back home. We gave exempted employee status to another architect just last week. Unless someone gets fired, this [young person] has to be placed in some backroom somewhere earning probably half what he was supposed to earn. He is not able to practise the thing he just came out of school able to do.

He sits there and he becomes despondent. He gets by. All of his learning, all the things he was taught in school are for naught. In 5 or 10 years he is still there in some area because he has become so disillusioned by the system that he really does not have much impetus to do something with himself or his life.

That is what I want us to stop. When that application for exempted employee comes before the Board, the information from this database must be made available to whoever makes that decision. They will know that six months from now we will have a Caymanian coming back home who can fill this position, so there is no need to grant the exempted employee application. This is the kind of thing I am talking about, where we understand it from the bottom up.

I also want us to understand that we must find ourselves in a position in this country where we can forecast what our labour needs are going to be. That is done throughout the world scientifically. We must be able to know by the economic trends in this country whether we are going to need 20 mutual funds officers in the next 10 or 15 years, and start preparing for that. These are the things that, if done right, this database will be able to help us prepare for.

Again, I am not going to be too naïve to believe that this is not going to cost some money. Everything that is good costs money. Most things I should say, not everything. Plain old fashioned love and affection does not cost a penny. Well, maybe eventually it does. But, Madam Speaker, it has to be done right.

I commend the Labour Relations Office because I believe from what I have heard and seen that they have started along the right track. With the right kind of support, I believe that we can get this done in very short order.

I need everybody to understand that this is a battle we all need to fight—every one of us in here. This is key to the economic survival of our people. We cannot allow our people to continue to be second class citizens in their own country.

Maybe natural evolution should have taken care of this, Madam Speaker, but it did not. Being the passive individuals we are, we kind of sat back and allowed things to go on. People understand that right away and they begin to take advantage of us.

It is disheartening to have a Caymanian employee come to you as a legislator, because most of them have nowhere else to turn. So they come to us and tell us their problems. One of the things they usually say before we can say anything to them is that 'You can't make them know I came to you.' But we understand that. And I have seen it happen so many times.

Madam Speaker, when they do come to us, anything that we can do to help them usually makes it worse for them. The majority of the HR officers in this country have set themselves up so that anybody who complains, especially Caymanians, are harassed to death until they eventually leave their place of work. It is usually somebody else, some other expatriate individual that they have in mind to fill the job.

I feel like a criminal at times when they come to me and I have to go through all kinds of positions to find out information about exactly what is going on. You cannot make this feared HR officer know that this person has complained. The way things are now, Madam Speaker, there is nothing you can do about it. There is nothing anybody can do. And these are the things that we have to put in place; these are the things that we have to fix before something really bad happens in these beloved Isles Cayman.

Madam Speaker, I will allow others to make their contributions and I look forward to wrapping up.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

My good friend, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, is on a roll today! He has brought two blockbusters to the Floor of the House, I would say on this Friday, 12 September 2008. But I think this Private Member's Motion is even more important in some ways than the earlier one on Cultural Tourism. Everything hinges and rides on the back of this very important Motion and if we can get it right, as Mr. Wright says (that is, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town). Pardon the pun, Madam Speaker!

Madam Speaker, this Motion is all about ensuring that our local people get a share of the economic miracle, the success story called the Cayman Islands. We campaigned heavily on this, and I am glad that we are finally getting to where these motions and policies are taking shape for us to address some of these very important issues. As the Fourth Elected Member for George Town rightly said, we had a lot on our plates. Not everything could be addressed right up front, but this has been on our minds from the get go.

I too remember the conversations we had with the gentleman the Fourth Elected Member spoke [about] in relation to this very important matter. I was privy to some of those. I remember the Member coming to me and discussing it. Ever since then it has been something that he and I have discussed at every opportunity in caucus or whenever we are just chatting.

Madam Speaker, it is a very, very serious matter. Yes, the Motion is one of those that, if accepted and actioned, will cause additional expenditure on the Government because a survey of this nature is not going to be cheap or easy to do. But, I think that once done it is something we need to refresh every so often. I would say we should look at refreshing it at a maximum of every five years because it will get stale. The labour force changes constantly and people's development changes as well as new people coming into the market and so on and so forth. It will take a serious effort by all concerned to really make this work.

Our people need to understand that they have to find their rightful place in society. Opportunities on the education front will provided, but they have to take those up. Too often we make these opportunities available and we find that others come to this country and jump at the chance quicker than our own people. Our own people have to be prepared to grasp the opportunities given to them.

Immigration will have to work hand in hand with the Labour Office, the Employment Services Department, and before I go any further I would like to pay kudos to that group of individuals who work there, who on a daily basis are constantly trying to place people in the work force. We have some of them here with us today, Madam Speaker. The new director has taken on the challenge with both hands. I know he has a lot of ideas and he brings a lot to the table because he has been on both sides of the fence.

He knows what it is to be an employer, he knows what it is to be an employee, and he has also been in the financial industry in this country. So, he knows where we are coming from. I know we are increasing the workload of his staff, but I am sure he shares our concerns with this very, very important area.

Madam Speaker, it is disheartening the number of people who say these days that they are having difficulty finding work. Just during the break I got a text [message] and [a lady] is on her way now to my office for assistance. The lady claims she cannot feed her kids. Her mother, this is the grandmother of the kids . . . often times the people who are suffering are older people who are still working day in and day out trying to keep these families afloat. We have a lot of single parents. They get themselves with a number of kids who, often times, have different fathers. The fathers are not doing for the kids and the story goes on and on. The person cannot hold down a job having all of this burden. It is a vicious cycle, and we have to break it. We will have to break it by making hard decisions.

Madam Speaker, this is the reality of what we face. As my colleague mentioned, the amount of individuals in the workforce working below where they should rightly be placed, and often times training permit holders who come into this country on top of them. Training them! And they stay there and suffer at a lower pay scale without benefits, and see these people gallivant, do whatever, and make a lot of money in this country and they are being suppressed. And if they open their mouths, well woe be unto them: they are either out of a job or they are so frustrated that in short order they leave.

I know, because these people come to us. They talk to us. This is not hearsay: this is reality. I worked for a long time in the financial industry myself—20 years—and I saw it. I started photocopying until my eyes were green. I worked my way up until I resigned as a VP. I know what it is, because I encountered it. But I stuck it out until the day I could say, 'bye—I don't need you anymore.'

How many people get that opportunity, Madam Speaker? How many people? How many people really have the ability to stick it out? Each of us has a different breaking point. Sometimes we hear that people get in trouble because they have been pushed to the limit in the workforce. Yes, at the end of the day they are in court or whatever, and then they are written off as a reprobate or whatever. Often times it is the system that causes people to react the way they do.

Madam Speaker, this is a very, very serious matter we are talking about. I hope the entire House understands that this is not political posturing or grandstanding. This is a serious matter. It will be to the benefit of all to get this right, whichever side of the House we sit on. If, at the end of the day our people are not properly placed, we will have social discontent in this country.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, I think it is the wish of the House to adjourn at this hour. Is this a convenient point for you?

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Just to explain to everyone, the plan is to come back on Monday morning to finish this Motion. Then we will adjourn until 6 October to resume this Meeting to deal with the Tobacco Bill and the Immigration (Amendment) Bill.

I accordingly move the adjournment of this honourable Legislative Assembly until Monday at 10 am.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until Monday at 10 am. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 4.02 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Monday, 15 September 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
MONDAY
15 SEPTEMBER 2008
10.24 AM
Sixth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say the Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09—Manpower Survey

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town continuing his debate.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, continuing my debate from Friday afternoon on Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09, Manpower Survey, as was said on Friday, we have an excess of 25,000 work permits in this country. For a country this size, that is a very significant amount. In fact, it is very close to our resident population.

Madam Speaker, we have to do everything in our power to ensure that we are employing people we need and in the right areas. We all understand the need for foreign labour in this country. We have an economy driven by finance and tourism, the two main pillars, and they do require a lot of imported labour. At the same time, I have always said that we are a small enough country to know exactly what our needs are, and we should be able to project quite accurately where we are trying to get.

I am very concerned that a number of our own people are not gainfully employed for various reasons. There are those out there who are still finding it difficult to get good jobs. I believe that with a resident population of 35,000 in the Cayman Islands (subtracting seniors, young ones and the others who work in the country) it is ideal for those of us who are in the workforce to ensure that everyone who is capable and able to work should be working in the best job an individual can hold. On top of that, we supplement with foreign labour. That is the ideal we should strive for.

The goal for any administration or for the country as a whole should be to ensure that our people are reaping the benefits of development in this country and we are not just developing for others.

Madam Speaker, if we could attain that goal, then I have no problem with whatever else is needed in terms of permits to keep the economy going. But I do have a concern when we are constantly increasing the number of permits in the country and we still have some of our own people who are not gainfully employed. As I said, there are a number of reasons. No matter how hard you try, you are going to have some people who are simply unemployable. That is the reality the world over. But we have to ensure that those who can be employed are given the tools, education and whatever retooling, to ensure that they are making a contribution in this country.

The manpower survey we are speaking to in this Motion will allow us to understand our local workforce. As the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said, we have a good handle on what we have here in terms of work permit holders; but we do not have a comprehensive list or database that can show us exactly where our locals are employed.

Madam Speaker, it speaks to being able to tie in our immigration (that is, the work permit side of things) with our educational provisions along with the work related requirements in the economy. It is [of] no use as it is now. It is basically a random thing. A young person comes out of school feeling this is his strength academically or vocationally, and that is the way he goes. There is nothing to say that we really need to channel people in a certain direction because we need more of these.

It may be happening to some extent. But that is what we are speaking to here, Madam Speaker. For instance, there is a worldwide shortage of accountants right now. Everyone knows that. Cayman is no different. We are part of the world, so we have a shortage of accountants here for our industry. That is an area [of work] that we should encourage our young people to go into.

Now, you have to have an aptitude to do anything you are going to take up, so we are not saying that we are going to take someone who is no good at numbers at all and try to make them into an accountant. But those that can, we certainly would like to channel them in that direction.

At the same time, if you have a bunch of people using the same accountant, for example. If you had a surplus of accountants in Cayman you would certainly want to channel the young people away from that area and into vocational areas, doctors or lawyers, other areas that are needed. This is what the manpower survey would do for us. It will highlight areas where we have a shortage and a surplus. We will have a better handle on how to move forward.

At the moment employers, especially large employers, get just about what permits they need. They have business plans (they should) if they have more than 15 employees. But let us not make any bones about it. The employers, especially the large employers in this country, know how to manipulate the system as it were. They know how to get what they want, and they know how not to push to hire a local if they so desire.

There are people in the large corporations that look out for one another. A lot of them do not look out for Caymanians. Some do, but a lot do not. If they are [of] a certain nationality, they look out for their own. That is no secret, Madam Speaker. We get the complaints all the time. We know what's happening. Therefore, these employers continue to get permits at will. They do not make the extra effort to invest in the Caymanian who many times ends up having to train that same employee brought in from another country, and continue to work under them. The expatriate worker reaps the benefits and eventually frustrates the Caymanian out of a job.

Madam Speaker, this is not an area to be taken lightly. It is a very serious time in our development, a serious time for our people. We have a lot of people who are hurting out there, who feel that they are being forced to be second best, or take second best. We need to ensure that our people are placed where their skills are best served [so they] can reap the maximum economic reward for their hard work.

We have a lot of hardworking Caymanians who take a lot of stick. People often say they do not want to work or they are lazy. We have Caymanians who are holding three jobs and still have a family at home to worry about trying to make ends meet. That could well be because in the first place they are not in the right job, which would pay them a greater reward for their services and maybe the need would not be there to have to work two or three jobs. It speaks to the whole social development of the country and the social impact on families. When parents are out there and [children] are left in the care of helpers or relatives, whatever, then the children in the family certainly suffer because of the lack of parental guidance.

That is a whole other side of it, but it is a spin off of what we are talking about here in terms of ensuring that we have our people getting the best out of the workforce that they can.

The other thing we hear too often are the complaints of returning graduates—some with first degrees, some with Masters, Doctorates and some who are doctors. They continue to not get the type of employment they deserve or were promised. There are doctors who have qualified for this country and have gone to work in other countries because they just could not get their foot into the system when they came back here. You have to wonder about that because, certainly, we do not have any great surplus of local doctors.

There has to be something that is not quite right when you see things like that. Those are telltale signs that things are not the way they should be.

Madam Speaker, as I was speaking earlier to larger employers knowing how to manipulate the system, one can check with the employment services.

They can say first hand where they have examples of employers who send out hundreds of referrals for job applications and, at the end of the day, a handful are hired. If you are sending hundreds and a handful are hired, do not tell me that there cannot be a better success ratio in that. Something has to be wrong. That is an example of what I was talking about with larger employers knowing how to manipulate the system in keeping the type of staff that they want and prefer, rather than the local worker.

I am not sure, because as a small employer myself, I certainly wish that I had a full Caymanian workforce. I do not enjoy working with immigration on work permits. I do not know the thought process these employers have, but if I had all of my people working and I did not have to deal with immigration on a work permit, I would be a very, very happy man. Because when you have to deal with that, it is a whole other issue. It speaks to the people in the position who, as I said before, are basically looking out for one another and not for the best interest of our local people.

Madam Speaker, I do not want to go on and on with this. I think the point on the importance of having this survey completed has been made quite clearly by the mover of the Motion. For the first time, it will give us a real handle on what we have in terms of our local workforce as to where and how they are placed. Certainly, it will allow all of our educational components—schools, college, and career advisors—to be able to channel students from an early age into areas we really need them to focus on. It certainly will give the Departments, Employment Services and Immigration, a handle on where they can place their efforts and where restrictions can be put in place.

Madam Speaker, we may not be far off from the point where, for instance with certain permits, we may have to say enough is enough for the time being. Let's find people within to do these jobs.

Last week, or the week before, I read that Spain (I think it was) actually said no more foreign labour. They felt that they needed to utilise what they had there at the time because they had so many of their own people out of work. We do not want to reach that point. We want to ensure that we deal with this sensibly from the beginning. As I said, we may have one or two segments that we can look at, and there may be other areas (who knows?) where proper analysis can be done and we can say no more permits in those areas for the time being, a moratorium or whatever.

Sometimes you have to force people to do what you want them to do because if you leave it up to their own volition, no matter how many immigration restrictions there are, they keep finding ways and means of jumping through the hoops, over the hurdles, and getting what they want in their various businesses. This is the truth, Madam Speaker. I am not making this up. This is the reality of what we are facing.

As I said, I do not want to make anyone believe that we are anti-foreign labour or expatriate because nothing could be further from the truth. But we have to ensure that our locals are properly utilised in our workforce—that those who are willing and able, those who are trained properly are put in the right jobs and those who need re-tooling [will be] moved to other areas. Again, it all has to work together as one smooth unit, otherwise we are throwing darts in the dark and we are not sure exactly who is going to get stuck.

Madam Speaker, having said that, I would like to conclude my debate and once again give kudos to my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, for bringing another very important Private Member's Motion. This is one deserving serious consideration by all agencies and those involved to make sure that at the end of the day we have a proper assessment done. I would also like to thank the Member for allowing me to second this Motion because I certainly feel as strongly as he does [about] the need for such a survey in this country.

Madam Speaker, I thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes . . .

The Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to support the Motion brought by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town on the manpower survey, and to give my brief comments on the rationale for the Motion which he has presented to the House today.

Madam Speaker, for the past week and a half every motion brought in this House, whether by the Opposition or the Government, has been to enable the people of the Cayman Islands in some way or the other. Today we bring a motion on the whole development of human capital. Nothing happens before its time. And this is perhaps the best time for us to look at manpower planning, because in the last six years a lot of things have been done to our population.

We have increased our population by thousands. I do not believe we have done much of a scientific study to have empirical evidence to say how our own Caymanians, who were either born here or have acquired status, are distributed in the labour market. And whether or not they are round pegs in square holes and have the skill set to manage the labour that we are surveying.

Madam Speaker, it is the duty of any Government in a legislature to look at the destiny of its people. At this time that is exactly what the Motion is trying to do. The Motion is trying to ascertain whether or not Caymanians are benefiting from this economic miracle that has been beset upon us for the past 30 years. That's a long time, Madam Speaker; yet it is a short time.

In our hustle and bustle to build this country from a financial perspective, I believe that we were not able to put the manpower in place. As a result, we have an issue with 25,000 work permits. Notwithstanding, we do need persons to work for us. Our economy is based on that to get more labour. But, Madam Speaker, what we need is to ensure that the population we have here is fit into the high skill sets where they can accrue an economic base and they eat of the fat of the land and are happy. And this is the Island that everybody wishes to come to because everybody wants to be happy.

Madam Speaker, you yourself go to the bank on a Friday. And I do that myself many, many times. When I go into the banks—and anybody can do this on a Friday—in particular the larger ones, they are inundated with people who are going to cash cheques or receive money. And I will bet you (although I am not a betting person, as such) that the majority of those persons in those banks are work permit holders.

Madam Speaker, may I be excused a moment?

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, my own assessment tells me something. It tells me that a lot of people are working and making money here. But, without trying to be crass or anything like that, if you follow those same people, you will see them go to various MoneyGram operations because they have their families that they have to look after and they send their remittance over to their family. And that is one happy family on a Friday evening.

But, Madam Speaker, let us look at the locals to see whether they are happy on a Friday evening, whether they are placed in those artisan jobs. They have the skill set and they can make that kind of money. I have stood behind persons who are dressed in ordinary work clothes. I have stood behind them in the bank and I have seen the teller count out—we call the orange money $100 bills, right? I have sometimes seen 15, sometimes 20 counted out to ordinary people, young men, younger than me.

They laugh, they fold their money and put it in their pockets and off they go to send it to their family. And that's good, Madam Speaker. But, at the same time, you want that same feeling distributed amongst all the people in this country on Friday evenings, particularly those who work in the labour force for them to be happy so they can go home, feed their families, send their children to school and if they want to send them to a private school they have the wherewithal to do it, and give them enough money to live.

Over the years that position has been imbalanced, so to speak. I believe this Motion, brought by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, wants us to look at that in a way to ensure that there is balance, equity, and justice in terms of distribution of labour when it comes to the Caymanian vis a vis the work permit holder.

Can we have a blame game for that, Madam Speaker? Perhaps not. Perhaps we can stand here and say that others should have done it. Maybe in the thrust of trying to do so much for this country in such a short time that was forgotten. But this Government in its whole preparation to move as a Government of the Cayman Islands had people first. It started with education. If we want our people to be in the higher skill sets, we have to start with education. That's a long time, you know. That does not come over night. But we have seen the revolution in the education system and the transformation, as the Minister would say, of the education system.

As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, quite recently the Minister issued a statement about extending the education of our young people in this country so that instead of them leaving at the age of 15 or 16, where they have very little skill set, they will be given that extra year. That is an important part of manpower survey, you know. Because in all of this you will find who is highly skilled, who is semi-skilled and who is not skilled.

Part of his statement was to ensure that when young people leave high school they do not just go out into the world of work, they go to different areas of education. If there was a fault in this country, and I stand here today and say it is because we allowed our entrance level to be too low to work. And [the reason] I say that, Madam Speaker, is . . . what is a 15 year old doing going to work in a bank? Or a 16 or 17 year old? When we put them in there we are, in a sense, keeping them from moving forward.

But, Madam Speaker, people may say when they hear this that I am not fair. I think I am fair. If years ago we had looked at the entrance level of our people going into the financial industry, in particular, we would not be in this situation today. We have some brilliant people in the financial industry. But do you know what, Madam Speaker? They are not qualified with the papers. They are smart! Very intelligent people! They are running the show, but they do not have that piece of paper. And if I get the intent of the Motion from my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, it intends to do that.

I know the Opposition might get up and say, well, you had four years to do so. But, Madam Speaker, four years is a short time to what has happened in thirty years. Four years is a short time. This Government would need at least another three terms in order to ameliorate and remedy the situation that faces us. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town cited labour! The number of persons who . . . let's take for example, carpenters.

Madam Speaker, you come from a family of carpenters. A lot of the people who sit in this House come from a family of carpenters. Yet, do we have a master carpenter in the Cayman Islands? Who is the master carpenter? Who is the master plumber? And who is the master electrician in the Cayman Islands? It is certainly not a Caymanian. At least [not] a Caymanian who was born here.

Those are the issues, and that is why we need a survey to see where our people are. Also, in particular over the last six years, we have extended the Caymanian population. We have to include those people. We certainly have to. We cannot go around and say we are not going to look at those and see what their skill sets are and whether they are round pegs in square holes. We have to. This has to be an inclusive thing.

We must have (and I stand to be corrected here) given over 6,000, 7,000 Caymanian Status in the past six or seven years, Madam Speaker. Maybe more than that. And do we know what they do? Do we know their skill sets? Do we know whether they are in the right jobs? Do we know whether they are accruing the benefit of the economic miracle?

Let us go to our own Caymanians that we meet on a daily basis (let's take a carpenter) who say, 'You know, they want to pay me $5.00 or $6.00 less than what I am worth.' Now, I am not a carpenter, but I know it is a noble profession. I know it should make good money. I know that. But, Madam Speaker, some years ago we allowed . . . and this is not digressing, but I want to show you something. Some years ago in the construction boom, we allowed people to debate on what our carpenters were worth. What our construction people were worth. I think it was during the building of the Ritz Carlton. I stand to be corrected, and I am sure somebody will come behind and perhaps correct me. We allowed that imbalance there and we have not really recovered from it, you know, Madam Speaker.

You know how Caymanians are. We are very proud people. So, imagine you have taken my job and you have brought it down to the level, taking off three-quarters of it. And what did some people do? They went off into different things. And they left their lovely occupation that they used to make money from. They built their homes, their families, and it was denigrated to a lower level.

Madam Speaker, we have to do the manpower survey. This may sound funny when I say this, but we have to do it to avoid brain drain. I would venture to say that if we do not do something in terms of this now, that the people who are qualified, the Caymanians who are qualified and cannot fit into this economic miracle that we have, are going to leave. Perhaps they are leaving now. We cannot afford that. We have too few as it is. We cannot afford our people leaving. That is what we call brain drain—the indigenous people leaving their own country to go elsewhere to find work.

So, we have to ensure . . . and, Madam Speaker, the time is now. And it works. I feel sorry, sometimes for the Minister of Education because so much is entrusted upon him in terms of re-engineering this country to an educated country where we can eat of the fat of the land. I feel sorry for him. He has a big job ahead of him. But, I dare say he has done it well, and he has big shoulders also to carry it with.

I know that the nay-sayers may say that we are spending far too much on our schools. Madam Speaker, you know I was in education. When people tell me—me, in particular—that we are spending far too much on our schools, Madam Speaker, if I were a Cassius Clay or even the Minister of Communications, Madam Speaker, do you know what I would do? I [would] look at them. These are supposed to be intelligent people. "You're spending too much money on schools." I'd say, "You know, we are about development of human capital."

Madam Speaker, the Government decided that we had to look at high school education and change it. But at the same time we have also changed the primary because this year we have changed the curriculum of our primary schools so that our children can be working in the same curriculum as anyone international. So we will build up to our high school system. I would venture to say that in another 10 or 15 years we will see the results of this.

Education is not an overnight thing, you know. You do not just become Euclid over night. Education is something you build on. I think the Government has done the right thing in terms of looking at education first, which is a part of human capital development, but now we are going to look at bodies.

We also have to look at the manpower planning because the Cayman Islands is kind of an ageing population. This year and for the next six years we are going to have a lot of people retiring. So, we have to have a great succession plan. How can you do a great succession plan . . . and this is not just for the private sector, this is also for the public sector, to ensure that no one is waiting on dead men's shoes. No one, no young person waits on dead men's shoes. We are preparing them so they can have their rightful place in the ascendancy of their work.

This is important, and I hope that the manpower planning will not just be extended to the private sector but [that] we will also look at everything; how it works in the public sector as well.

Madam Speaker, in my final point, the whole question of the manpower planning survey is to ensure that each one of our Caymanians gets a good slice of the cake; that each one of them gets a part of this economic miracle. There is loads of money in this country. It is coming in daily.

If you want to know how much money is in this country, simply put, if we ever have a brush of anything called a hurricane coming, you know . . . and I will tell you something, Madam Speaker. They do not take cheques in the supermarket. And not everybody has a credit card or a debit card. It is pure unadulterated cash. Therefore, somewhere our people find that money. I do not know where it comes from. Maybe because we are so blessed it comes falling, like manna, from heaven.

Madam Speaker, we want to ensure that what we call the indigenous Caymanian is highly skilled, can carry his own to compete with any outsider that comes in for a job so that in the long run it is not just about "I'm a Caymanian" it is about "I am a qualified Caymanian. I have the skill sets, I can handle this job." And you get it. At the end of the day our economic base within the middle class will be higher so that there is space for those who have fallen at the bottom of the ladder to rise up.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise first to commend the Fourth Elected Member for George Town for bringing another motion of substance, another motion that causes us all to focus and concentrate on an area that has always been an issue in this country, at least for as long as I can recall.

In many ways we are a very unique jurisdiction in that we almost always had, since I have been around, more jobs than local people to do them. At the same time, perhaps because of that, we have always had tensions, concerns, and even resentment over the fact that while there is this profusion of jobs, there is always a certain percentage of local people who cannot seem to get a job. Or many, while employed, are not employed as they would like and they feel they are qualified to be.

Then, there is the other issue of upward mobility for those who are employed, particularly in more skilled or professional jobs.

We have struggled, and we continue to struggle to deal with this complex set of issues. We try to resolve it principally through immigration controls and work permit controls. I dare say at best we have had a sort of mixed result in that regard. On the one hand, we have, and we continue to have, those in the country who would rather there were no immigration controls at all, and who bleat and mourn about the requirement that they have to satisfy a Caymanian board that there is a need for the particular work permit for which they have applied. Perhaps it is not weekly any more, but I think I can safely say that no month passes that there is not some complaint in some media about difficulty in getting work permits or complaints about attitudes to work permits. And there's always the complaint about the rollover policy.

Madam Speaker, I believe it will always be a difficult exercise to balance the various interests that are involved in this area—the interest of the employer to obtain the best possible employee skill set, attitude and all of the things that make up a good employee, at the lowest possible price. Also, the desire on the part of the employee for work, the willingness, certainly at the middle and lower levels of the employment hierarchy, of expatriate employees to work for less than Caymanians are willing to. And they do so, obviously, because of the fact that they are expatriate. They have migrated because they want to better themselves, and they find their lot in the Cayman Islands—even at salaries below that which Caymanians are willing to work for—still better than where they came from.

And they are prepared in many instances to live in conditions which most Caymanians would find unacceptable, living three and four to a room, sharing communal facilities—kitchens, bathrooms, and the like—eating communally, cooking as one family, one group, doing whatever they can to lower their overall living costs, which are significant in these Islands. We have those kinds of strains, as I said, at the lower and middle order.

Then at the upper echelon of the employment chain, we have on the part of many employers a willingness, a desire, an attraction to employ the sort of people with whom they are familiar, that come from the countries and jurisdictions from which the upper management of these organisations originate. The reality, even 40 years down the road since the financial services industry actually commenced in these Islands, [is that] the big businesses, big firms, and big organisations are still largely controlled by persons who come from somewhere other than the Cayman Islands. I am not speculating in this instance or basing what I say on what other people have told me. I did not spend 20-plus years there not to understand that particular culture.

Then, Madam Speaker, we have on our part, from the downside in many instances, unreasonable expectations on the part of many of our people in the desire to reach the top in very short order. And, in some cases, an unwillingness to put in the time, develop the experience and develop the work ethic necessary to obtain in the first place so as to hold on to those top positions in business, law firms, accounting firms, banks and trust companies and the like. So, all of these factors are operating in this little place that make tension in the workplace, tension in the economy inevitable. And Government, whoever the Government happens to be, is the one that is expected to make everything right.

It is a difficult, and perhaps an impossible exercise. Over the years every government that has been and every board—protection board, immigration board, work permit board, or business and staffing plan board—that has existed, has always come under major criticism for its immigration policy, for its work permit and, consequently, its labour policy in trying to find ways to deal with these issues.

We must—and every government that has been has recognised this—create, support, and encourage an environment for businesses to flourish, for the economy to expand. And that necessarily requires an assurance to employers that they are going to be able to get the skills set that they need to build their businesses.

And then, Madam Speaker, there is the need to assure our own people that their interests are being looked after, that employers are not going to be able to push them to one side and say, Yes, that's fine. You may have all of these qualifications and experience, but there are people whom I can get to work for me who will work for significantly less than you are willing to earn.

That is one of the major shifts that occurred in recent years. The competition did not use to be about how much people were prepared to work for; it used to be about other things—prejudices based on other things. But increasingly we are hearing and seeing that that is a major factor; that is, how much the expat employee is prepared to work for. Not so much at the upper echelons but, certainly, at the middle and lower echelons. It is starting to become a factor even at the upper echelons in the mid-management areas of business in Cayman. I am hearing more often now than I once did, that there are people prepared to come and work as middle managers, people who are prepared to come and work as sort of basic accountants who are prepared to work for less than we thought the market used to bear.

Again, Madam Speaker, this in itself is not an easy issue to resolve either, because the businessman will say to you, If I can get labour more cheaply, why is that an issue? The cheaper I can get labour, the more I can keep my prices down. And everybody talks about the cost of living and the cost of services in the Cayman Islands. Again, there is this very difficult area to resolve because the Caymanian will say, But I can't live in Cayman at that salary you are proposing to pay. But if you pay the Caymanian what the market used to bear, or what he says he needs to live, that then increases the operational cost of the particular business involved and reduces the bottom line for that particular business.

All of these factors have to be taken into account when one tries to address this complex area. It is not an easy exercise. Whatever you do, it is going to involve criticism or dissatisfaction from one quarter or the other.

Madam Speaker, I have said for now nigh on to three years that we must make some amendments to our present employment legislation. Over the course of the past few months, in particular, I have met with some of the stakeholders to talk to them about labour and employment issues. These discussions were to try to reach some middle ground to bring some sense of equity and, hopefully, satisfaction to some areas of the economy and some particular industries perceived as being dominated by the expa-triate workforce because of salaries, working conditions and so forth.

Today I will not go into the exercise of calling the names of various associations, but that will come. I have to say that I have been less than happy with some of the responses to some of the issues. It seems that just about everybody is reasonably happy with the introduction of a minimum wage because the minimum wage this Government contemplates is just that, the minimum salary, the minimum hourly rate for which any person can be lawfully employed in these Islands. The reality is that that is not going to be a huge sum. By and large, it is not going to be a factor in most areas of the economy because most would be paying above any such minimum wage. It seems like we will have general support for that.

Some of the critical areas I believe must be dealt with absolutely to address many of the issues the mover of this Motion, the seconder and the Third Elected Member for George Town raised are areas that apply to the conditions of service. This is not unique to the Cayman Islands. In many instances, expat workers, particularly at the lower end, but not entirely so, are willing to work in conditions and work for longer hours than the local people are prepared to do. Where this creates particular aggravation is where it is principally expatriate workers who work longer than the standard workweek of 45 hours at straight salary or wage.

They get (or in some cases do not) what's called an overtime waiver that allows the employer to continue paying them at their standard hourly rate for hours well in excess of the 45 hour workweek.

Of course, employers will say to you, Well, the employee wants to work. I need the work done. I'm getting the work done for whoever it is I am doing the work for, so they are happy. My client, my customer is happy, so where is the issue?

Well, the issue is, Madam Speaker, the expat workers, by and large, do not have family strains, family obligations and responsibilities in the majority of instances that local people do. So it is really not that great of a sacrifice for them to continue to work 60, 65, 70 hours in the week. It just means that there is less time to hang out at O Bar, or wherever the in-place is at that moment.

But if our local people are going to work overtime, and quite rightly so, they feel that they ought to be paid overtime at overtime rates. So, you find in many instances, particularly in relation to the supermarkets and in some instances construction, that Caymanians do not work or, if they work, they do not get the overtime because they are not prepared to work the overtime at the standard wage.

This creates issues and resentment. Sometimes it causes, if not loss of employment, unemployment because, particularly at lower levels, the Caymanians will not work in many instances for standard rates doing more than the 45 hours normally required. That has been a consistent complaint we have received. As consistent as that complaint is, we have an equally consistent position taken by many employers—a real resistance to paying overtime rates over and above the standard 45-hour workweek.

So, Madam Speaker, that is one of the areas I am still focusing on. I have a few more meetings. I have another one with the Chamber of Commerce, and one with the Contractor's Association coming up very shortly. I am still determined for us to address some of these aggravating issues (as I call them), which help create some of the underlying tension and some of the employment issues that have been spoken about by my colleagues in this matter.

I have been around long enough to understand that we will never get the perfect situation where everybody is happy. And unless we ensure that local people feel they are treated fairly, have opportunities, that when they finish work at the end of a work period what they take home is sufficient to be able to support their families and live a decent life, this country is going to have major, major problems.

There have always been tensions, and over the years these tensions have increased. Madam Speaker, I know there is a constituency out there who thinks the rollover policy, the limited term permit policy, is a bad idea—although, all evidence seems to indicate otherwise. I will say this, Madam Speaker, and this is not the time to go into any long debate about the benefits or otherwise of the rollover policy. But it will be a brave government—in fact, the government who decides they only want one term—who will remove the rollover policy. What the rollover policy actually does from a positive standpoint, which I think is often overlooked, is that it has helped to lessen the tension and the concern of Caymanians. I am not saying there is not still real tension and concern. We hear it all the time. But we who have been around, know that it has been much worse.

What Caymanians fear most is a loss of control of this country. One of the major objectives—in fact the major objective to the rollover policy—was not to reduce the number of employees here. And we have seen from the evidence that, in fact, it has not had that effect, that in fact work permits have increased appreciably every year since the policy was first introduced in 2004. We are now at 25,000. We were at about 16,000 when the policy was introduced. The nay-sayers said it was going to create an environment where people did not want to come to the Cayman Islands to work. That has not happened. And those of us who were involved in its development and introduction did not believe that would be the case.

So, it was not about trying to stop the growth of businesses and the growth of immigrant labour; it was about reducing the number of persons who qualified to be able to stay here long term and get added to our permanent population base. Not to shut them out entirely—which it has not—through the key employee process those who get through the gate to year eight are almost guaranteed permanent residence and then, in due course, on to getting British Overseas Territory citizenship and ultimately Caymanian Status.

That is a deliberate process developed so that the number of people allowed to stay long term was reduced. Therefore, there would be less worry about the number of persons who got Caymanian status, which I perceive is the case. And never again would we wind up in a situation where we had thousands of people here for 10 or 15 years with no form of tenure whatsoever. And the pressures would build, as they have in the past, where something radical would be done, such as what the last government wound up doing—granting roughly 3,000 persons status in one fell swoop.

The rollover policy prevents the likelihood of that sort of thing happening, because it is a process (while not terribly popular in some quarters) that is reasonably predictable. People know that after year seven they are going to move on unless they have key employee status. If they get beyond that point, they are virtually guaranteed to be able to stay as long as they wish if they are good citizens and so forth.

Madam Speaker, I point these out as areas where different governments . . . because the rollover policy was actually introduced under the UDP Government—but with the support of this Government—and we have continued it. I should say, we've taken the licks for it as well! So be it. There is at least one Member on the other side, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, who I know firmly supports the rollover policy still.

Madam Speaker, coming back to this particular issue about how we resolve these labour issues: For as long as I can recall, before I had any designs on being in this honourable House, I said that we as a people, and Cayman as a nation, were going to be in big trouble unless we found ways to broaden opportunities for more and more of our own people to take advantage of the tremendous possibilities available in a jurisdiction like Cayman, unlike most places in the world. The harmony that exists and, despite the issues I have spoken about, the continued relative friendly nature of our people and willingness to accept others from elsewhere is going to slowly disappear. We cannot expect people to stand quietly by and continue to smile if they see people coming from elsewhere to their country and in relatively short order living in nice homes, driving nice cars, holding down all the best jobs, and the local people generally do not have those opportunities.

So, aside from the sort of immigration controls, legislation and so forth, we have to ensure that our people in this country have every opportunity, every facility, every possibility to obtain the best possible education, the best skill sets available to make them marketable and attractive to those who do business in these Islands.

You see, Madam Speaker, we can develop as much legislation, as many policies as we want, but the reality of the workplace, the reality of the economy—and Cayman is part of a global economy these days, certainly—is that they want the best. Some places have done all sorts of things that may be regarded as crazy things to ensure that their local people are employed, even when they do not have the wherewithal to do the job. I am not going to name any countries, because I do not want to get into trouble. But we have seen that in some places employers are prepared—because the numbers are relatively small—to make accommodations and pay local people, even though they do not have the various skills and abilities to do the job, just to keep them and the government quiet.

That is not what I and my Government advocate. What we are seeking to do with the vision we have and the plans we developed which are being implemented is to aim at giving local people in these Islands the best education that we can possibly afford and the best skill sets. Therefore, the best possible opportunity of employment at the upper echelon of whatever their particular discipline or interest is. Therein, I believe, lays at least a partial answer to many issues we have.

We will never, never, Madam Speaker—and if we dreamed that we can do it in Cayman, then dream on because it has never been done anywhere else. We will never ever rid the country of the prejudices and the attitudes that come with being human. Because that's what it is. It is not unique to Cayman. People come with their own preconceived ideas and notions about people from elsewhere. It has been since time began, certainly, since humankind has been around. We all have to find some reason why we are better than other people, or why other people are less than we are. If it is not nationality, it is colour. If it is not colour, it is religion. If it is not religion, then it is language. It's something. That is just how humans are unfortunately.

Madam Speaker, we have to get to a point where no one can objectively look at the education, the qualifications, the abilities of a Caymanian worker and say that they are any less than they are anywhere else in the world, and that they are as good as they are anywhere else in the world. Not everybody is going to be a rocket scientist or a cardiac surgeon. And I am not suggesting that. But our education system must give everyone the basics to be able to realise his or her potential at whatever their particular interest, discipline or vocation is.

We have to have an education system which encourages, which sets expectations for every one of the people who come through it, that does not discard them simply because they are not “academically inclined”, that values all different types of abilities and intelligences. That is what we have been driving at ever since this Government was elected, ever since I took this office.

I have taken my share of licks, and I will take some more—particularly from the Leader of the Opposition who does not believe in this particular approach to education, who does not believe that education is the most important area, and that it deserves the priority this Government is giving. But that is in large part what distinguishes this Government from the last.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, is this a convenient place to take the morning break, or are you going to wind up shortly?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Not any time soon, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 11.46 am

Proceedings resumed at 12.11 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Honourable Minister of Education continuing his debate on Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When we took the suspension, I was talking about the critical importance of providing to all our people—but particularly the young people—the best possible opportunities, environment and facilities to allow them to achieve their full potential in our education and training system thereby allowing them to have the basics on which to build successful careers.

Madam Speaker, I said that this was a key component in ensuring that all of our people are able to make the best of the tremendous opportunities these Islands and this economy present. I also spoke about how important that is to societal harmony and the sense of welcoming, which we as a people in these Islands have always provided to those who come to live here, work, do business and to invest.

Over the course of the past few years and going forward over the course of the next couple of years, that is, over five years, this Government would have invested the best part of $200 million in improving, creating facilities and opportunities for the people of these Islands, particularly for the young people. As I said before, not everyone agrees with this investment.

The Leader of the Opposition, in particular, has made it quite clear that he believes that such expenditure is an extravagance. I pointed out before that that is one of the key factors that distinguishes this Administration from his.

One of the great concerns that the country must have is ensuring in years to come that this investment in educational facilities—the tremendous strides we have made in improving outcomes from the educational process—does not falter, but that it continues and improves. We are just beginning to see, three years down the line, some of the possibilities, some of the tremendous capabilities and potential that is there as the new system, the new governance model, the new approach to teaching and learning and, starting this year, the new curriculum that has been developed locally is put in place. It is going to take many years, Madam Speaker, until the true dividends are paid on this huge investment in our young people.

Madam Speaker, there has been and continues to be great concern about the level of interest that the private sector has in developing our people. It is something of a mixed bag. There are some areas of the industry and some firms, in particular, who spend huge amounts of money and commit tremendous amounts of resources to the development of our people. I want to publicly thank them and encourage them to continue to do so.

Last Saturday evening, I had the privilege of attending a gala dinner hosted by CISPA (Cayman Islands Society of Professional Accountants), in which they honoured 23 of our young people who had achieved significant milestones in accountancy. It was an occasion of great pride. As I said that evening, this job as Minister of Education (Minister generally, but Minister of Education in particular) has a huge downside. As we say, we take a lot of licks for things that we do, things we don't do, and things that other people do. However, it is on occasions such as this weekend . . . and this really has been a banner weekend, Madam Speaker, when you can look with pride at the achievements of our people, but our young people in particular.

On Friday night, I had the occasion of hosting our Olympians. [It was a] wonderful, wonderful evening where we could celebrate the achievements of our young people.

On Saturday evening we had 16 of our young people who had obtained degrees in accounting and finance, or some other related subject, and 7 who had achieved their CPAs (Certified Public Accountant) or ACCA (Association of Chartered Certified Accountants), a professional qualification in accounting enabling them to practice as professional accountants. One of the things that really warmed my heart even more, was that the 16 degrees were all obtained locally either from the University College or from the International College of the Cayman Islands. It is when you attend these sorts of events, Madam Speaker, that you see the achievements of our young people and you get the evidence of not just what is possible but what they have done. And with what they have done how bright their futures are; and, consequently, how much brighter the future of this wonderful little place we call the Cayman Islands actually is.

I said on Saturday evening that we spend so much time living in negativity. And in many instances I say to myself we have become reduced to a nation of whiners because those who have . . . and I don't really think that is true, but it feels that way. Those who have complaints are those who speak the loudest, those who are the most vocal, those who are the most consistent—everywhere! You hear them on the talk shows and other media. You hear them at the bars, restaurants and wherever people congregate.

And I am talking about negativity for the Government. I am talking about negativity generally, but particularly about, Oh there is no hope, and our young people are failing, and our young people are not the way we were when we were young. You hear so much of that negativity particularly about young people. But we do not as a nation, I believe, spend enough time celebrating the achievements and the possibilities of our young people. So, I commended CISPA for the gala event at which they celebrated achievements of these wonderful young people on Saturday night.

I have to say, Madam Speaker, that there are now 833 professional accountants who are members of CISPA. I do not know if there are other professional accountants out there, but CISPA accounts for 833. That is an amazing number! But, the most amazing bit to me was sitting at the table with some of the CISPA executives, including the Secretary, Mr. Rohan Small. I learned that they estimate a need for another 100 accountants every year for the foreseeable future.

Now, if we consider that, there is no end of opportunity for our own people in Cayman to aspire who have the wherewithal, I have to say, because not everybody can be an accountant. I certainly could not be. I would not make much of an accountant, I do not believe. But for those who have that interest and that aptitude, there are huge opportunities out there because of the demand for accountants locally and the demand for accountants globally.

I have not talked to the lawyers in a long time about these sorts of issues. Although the numbers of lawyers are significantly less, and, therefore, I think the demand is significantly less, the demand continues to grow year on year.

I remember when the law school was being formed. I went into the second year of the law school in 1983 and I remember one of the things that was said regularly. One senior person said to me, "Well, I do not know how long law school is going to be around because where are you going to put all these young lawyers when they come out? There must be some end to the need for them."

But the Cayman Islands economy and the demand for people with training, experience, attitude, aptitude, ability, all of those things right across the board, continues to grow and to expand.

Certainly, for this generation and the next I see no need whatsoever for us to be concerned about the opportunities that are out there, the availability of jobs. The concern has to be, must be, making those opportunities and those jobs available to our young people in particular, but our people generally, equipping our people both with the attitude and with the necessary education and training to be able to take advantage of these tremendous opportunities.

Madam Speaker, I know (and I alluded to this a while ago) there are other factors at work aside from the strict "Is there a job?" and "Is there a Caymanian who could do that job?" If it were simply an exercise of 'Well, we have one Caymanian and three jobs, therefore he/she should be slotted into them,' it would be an easy exercise, but it is not that.

There are prejudices. There are issues. There are attitudes. There are salaries. There is a whole range of things on the employer side. On the employee side, it is a question of whether they have the wherewithal, even at the basic level. I am not now talking about skilled jobs. I am talking about jobs at the very entry level and whether they have the wherewithal to do even entry-level jobs. That is why I speak about the importance of equipping our young people with the basic education (and I have said this many times) and attitude to be able to enter the workforce.

Madam Speaker, the Government and I have been looking and working on a range of things, which are now in the process of implementation. One is that I hope to bring the new Education Bill to this House in November. Indeed, I hope to lay a draft on the Table of this honourable House when the House resumes from the suspension that will follow today.

One of the things that Bill will do when it becomes law is to raise the mandatory age of education to 17. That additional year post-external exams will allow a range of possibilities for our young people. Those who have not done as well as they could or should have will have the opportunity to re-sit examinations thereby building their qualification portfolio as they move on. There will be an opportunity for those who wish to go on and do A levels, thereby doing another two years. We will use the same system we have now. We are not going to go and reinvent the wheel. We have worked to essentially provide an 80 per cent scholarship for those who want to do 'A Levels' to pursue them at St. Ignatius Prep [School] and Cayman Prep and High School. We will continue that process.

We are developing a programme to implement and make available the AP programme to our students. That is an American programme called Advanced Placement, which is very, very highly regarded.

We will be introducing the IB (International Baccalaureate) Diploma, which is a two-year programme as well. We will also be focusing on technical and vocational courses in conjunction with the University College and a work placement programme. This will allow young people to spend part of the time in school, and part of the time in the workplace as they develop their skills and get hands-on experience to go along with the theoretical end of what is being taught at the school.

Madam Speaker, the plan is that when the new John Gray High School (which is actually under construction now) and the other two high schools, the Beulah Smith in West Bay, and the Clifton Hunter in Frank Sound, open in September 2010, the George Hicks campus, as we know it, will cease to operate as a middle or high school. This will then provide the physical plant we need to implement a number of these additional courses on the tech/voc side in particular.

So, Madam Speaker, there is a carefully thought through plan to make sure that our young people stay in school longer and leave the mandatory system of education better equipped than has been the case for many, many years. As I said, not just the 25 per cent or 30 per cent who are going to get 5 or better good passes at external level in academic subjects. We have been working on developing some technical and vocational CXC and O level courses so that our young people who are not going to come out with great passes in maths, biology and history can come out with good passes in tourism-related subjects and construction-related subjects and the like. So, their portfolio will still show that they have five or six good external passes, albeit not those that one would consider to be traditional academic subjects.

A great deal of thought, effort, resources, and planning have gone in and continue to go into how we can better improve the manpower of these Islands (and the womanpower too, I should say, for fear of being criticised!) to make it more attractive to employers, thereby presenting all of our people, particularly the young people, with greater opportunities in the workforce.

Madam Speaker, to underpin my case for what is necessary in terms of equipping our young people, I would like to mention, with your permission, a few of the statistics provided by the Department of Employment Relations. We can see the correlation between education—or the lack of education—and unemployment. I have spoken before in this House and in Finance Committee about the development and implementation of a job placement database and how that has helped the Department of Employment Relations to better find employment for our people. I am going to talk a little bit about how that works in relation to the whole work permit scenario. I found this bit of information given to me to be quite revealing.

The number of people who have been successfully hired since the inception of the job placement database in June of last year to date is 313. The average number of persons to be placed on a monthly basis since then has been 22, which is up from 6 people a month before we had the database. So, it does appear to be helping considerably.

The number of people who registered up until now in the job placement database is 1355. But what I found particularly revealing was the level of education of the job seekers: 75 per cent of the job seekers (or 791) had a high school diploma or less as their highest level of education. Three quarters of those who sought the services of the Department of Employment Relations to get a job are persons who had high school education or less.

Sixty per cent were female, which suggests that there are more young women unemployed than young men, although I think we need to be careful interpreting that because perhaps young women have more initiative in going and seeking employment, or at least going to the Department of Employment Relations. It may well be that, so I will proceed to interpret that bit of data with some caution.

Madam Speaker, of the 1355 I mentioned earlier, 94 of those are under 18 years of age. Between the age of 19-25, there are 346; between 26-35, there is a similar amount, 346; between 36-45, 283; between 46-55, 196; and 55 and over, 90.

Sharing a bit more of the analysis of the department on this sort of data, these are some of the conclusions they have come to: Job seekers are having difficulty in obtaining decent work as a result of lack of skills, low levels of education and experience. Holders of high school diplomas with little experience and no technical or vocational education constitute the predominant group of job seekers. These findings demonstrate the proven correlation between level of education and employability.

There is a gender imbalance with reference to ease with which Caymanians are employed. Females are faced with more challenges than their male counterparts are in securing productive and decent work. In such a scenario, general analysis in terms of education, training and employment needs to be done, and efforts made to facilitate the training and upskilling of women. Overall the Cayman Islands economy continues to produce higher paying, decent and productive jobs that require highly skilled professionals more than those that require low levels of skill and education.

So, that is where we are in that regard, Madam Speaker. I do not think that much of that would come as any great surprise to any of us here. Nor, do I believe that even my fiercest detractors—including the Leader of the Opposition on the other side—would at least publicly argue that we ought not to be doing everything that we can to improve educational opportunities, training opportunities, improvement of skill sets among our young people in particular. And not just the young people because there are many who have come up through the system that have missed the opportunities available now in school, and would need to go back to school, back into the system to acquire these skills if they are to improve their marketability, their employability and their upward mobility as employees.

Madam Speaker, the Motion asks the Government to consider conducting a manpower survey throughout the Cayman Islands, establishing a robust system for the maintenance of the records. The last manpower survey was carried out in 1995. Since then, the Department of Employment Relations has carried out a number of what are called occupational wage surveys. There are plans to conduct one of those during the course of this year.

The Occupational Wage survey summarises existing situations in the Cayman Islands labour market by providing a detailed analysis of the distribution of employees by immigration status, employment contract, industry and gender. The survey also provides an analysis of wages, salaries, allowances and benefits and compensation by the abovementioned variables.

Madam Speaker, I suppose the way it is most distinguished from a manpower survey, at least as far as I understand it, is that a manpower survey is something akin to a census in the sense that they actually go from workplace to workplace and actually count people, [speak on] what they do, what the benefits and salaries are and so forth. Whereas, the Occupational Wage survey is a sampling exercise that is done.

The Government does not have difficulty in considering carrying out a manpower survey at this stage, but I should warn that it is a very extensive national exercise that will take considerable time to plan and implement. The results would not be forthcoming in a few short months. As a Government, we will look carefully at the logistics and viability of doing this at this stage. There is a census to be carried out; I think it is in 2010. I think we would want to look at it in the context of that to come.

We will accept the Motion, Madam Speaker. There is no question about that. I believe that perhaps as importantly as what the Motion actually calls on Government to do—that is, consider a manpower survey—what I hope it will fuel in the broader community is to bring focus and awareness on what is an important issue that has been around for a long time. And that is, how we best make sure that all local people get a fair shake at the tremendous opportunities available in these Islands and how we can improve the various systems and agencies we have to ensure that all employers do everything that they can to improve the lot of Caymanians.

Madam Speaker, it has also provided me, as the Minister for Education with responsibility for employment, with the opportunity to again articulate what I see as the issues and what it is we are doing, what it is that my Ministry and the Departments with responsibility for employment and education are doing, to make our people more employable.

Madam Speaker, the other aspect of this (which I have mentioned but have not gone into any great deal of discussion about) is how the work permit end of this is handled by the various boards that have responsibility for approving permits.

This Government has adopted a policy which basically says that if you can demonstrate that there is a need for a work permit, the work permit is granted or ought to be granted. In other words, there is no quota. We have not said, as I think has been the case in the past on occasions, although it has rarely ever lasted, that we should cap the number of work permits at a certain amount. That is because we believe that the economy must be allowed to grow, that people must be allowed to develop their businesses and they cannot do that if they do not have the necessary manpower.

The challenge continues to be to ensure that only those who really need a work permit are granted a work permit; that Caymanians are not overlooked in the process of making that happen. What we are striving to do is improve the relationship that has always existed between the Department of Employment Relations, the Work Permit Board, and the Business Staffing Plan Board. Therefore, when considering these applications the boards are armed with as much good, current information as possible, so that in their consideration on whether or not to grant the work permit, they are able to say with some certainty that there is not a suitable Caymanian available for this particular job.

That exercise has been underway for some time. I spoke today and before about the development of this job placement database. The challenge now, which is underway, is making this database available, accessible, and having it utilised by Immigration so they can see in real time in real numbers the various individuals who are available to do particular jobs when they are considering applications.

Madam Speaker, as I said, the level of involvement of the Department of Employment Relations with the Department of Immigration, particularly these boards, has improved, is continuing to improve. Based on the feedback that I have been given, the board now has better access to current information than has ever been the case before. In the past, there was often a lag between what the information said and what the actual situation is. There are still improvements to be made. Efforts are underway on the part of both the Director of Employment Relations and the Chief Immigration Officer to improve that situation.

The big issue that I think we still have to consider, actually, is are we getting the bulk of Caymanians who are, in fact, looking for employment registered at the Department of Employment Relations job placement unit or not. Indications that I have, Madam Speaker, are that it is doing a fair job in attracting people to it and the stigma that I think haunted it for a while, that it was not a terribly effective unit, has pretty much gone away because they are achieving real results.

More and more of those people who are having difficulty getting employment or employment they want are seeing it as a viable place to come to, to have their needs addressed. So, as its function and popularity improves we will be able to look at it as a better barometer for what the true employment or unemployment situation is in these Islands.

Madam Speaker, I simply want to conclude now by commending the mover of the Motion, the seconder, and my colleagues on this side who have spoken to this matter and for having brought this Motion to the House, and to say to them that the Government will carefully consider what is being sought. In any event, I believe it has already served a most useful purpose in highlighting this critical issue to the general public. I hope that broader public discussion will ensue.

Thank you.

Continuation of debate on Private Member's Motion No. 4/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that any government needs information to better plan and make laws in the kind of economy that we have in these Islands but, more so, where there are so many work permits.

When I was the Minister of Labour in 1993 (well, from 1992 actually, but I'm speaking specifically about manpower development between 1993 and 1995) I put in place a manpower development advisory committee to plan for training and long range career development of able and willing Caymanians. I believed then, as I do now, that the articulation of well defined and workable manpower development policies and strategies are essential tools for achieving those important objectives.

That committee . . . Madam Speaker, you would remember it. You were part of the government then, Madam Speaker. The committee then consisted of a broad section of 20 individuals with varied expertise. Even the Chamber of Commerce was part of it. That committee made a report, which I presented to the Executive Council at that time in 1995.

I cannot forget that day in Council when Mr. Truman Bodden wrote in red the word "Socialist" all over it—"Socialist, Socialist, Socialist." And I was not able to present the report to the honourable House. I believe the Minister of Health would remember that because he remembers the struggles that I had, and ought to remember the struggles I had with labour legislation. I could not make that report to the House. I had to make a report, which they doctored in Executive Council.

Madam Speaker, I resigned my seat in 1997. Labour and training, which was manpower development (they called it), was split up. Training and culture, part of my ministry at the time, went to Mr. Bodden, who was the Minister of Education.

I guess, Madam Speaker, they are saying, Well, why did you not do it? Why did you not do some- thing about it? As every one of us well knows, if we do not have responsibility for a subject we cannot carry it to Cabinet. But when I had responsibility that report . . . even though it was doctored I still had to come here because that was the sanction of Cabinet, to come here and read it and it said the right things. But we have not gotten very far except we have an Immigration Law, which I will come to.

Madam Speaker, the Motion before the House is something in spirit that I support. It does not really address the main areas that are affecting our qualified Caymanians today. Definitely, creating the register the Member is speaking about will do some good, I hope. But what it will not do is help Caymanians get jobs. And that is the main problem today. It is not that they do not know so much who has the qualifications, who is a carpenter, or who is an accountant; but the upward mobility is stymied for many, many varied reasons. Some of them have already been expounded on by Members.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Education—while he gets up and tries to blame me for the colour jacket he wears—should be doing that. But I will come to him in a short minute.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the Minister should ensure that the laws currently in place are properly implemented and adhered to. The Business Staffing Plan already provides the framework to allow the Government to monitor activities in the workplace. That is what it is all about. The problem is that they have failed to give the Immigration Department and the Employment Relations Department the resources to enforce the current Law. A manpower survey will not fix that.

It is very important, Madam Speaker, that that survey be done. It is very important also that Government create an environment that will attract and retain business. Yes. But it is equally important that qualified Caymanians are given the opportunity to be promoted and gain the benefits that are available within the private sector as is.

The Government must ensure that qualified Caymanians are not victimised, or unduly affected negatively in the workplace. That is what the Minister needs to be doing. That is what he should be doing instead of getting up and blaming me. But this Motion will not achieve that.

The Government must ensure that the laws passed by this honourable House are properly implemented, including the labour legislation, to allow our young Caymanian professionals to get through the proverbial glass ceiling. And when I stood here in 2003 and moved that Bill, that was part of it. It is still part of it. There is no excuse!

There is no excuse, other than to say that business is booming and we need the work permits. But it is not an excuse that Caymanians are being set aside. And never in my time in this House have I seen so many qualified Caymanians that are not moving up the ladder. It has happened for a long time. I know, Madam Speaker. My daughter took one year after she left the Monetary Authority because the doctor said she could not do that work any longer. It took one year.

I know that qualified people are not moving up, and I had the position back then. Give the permits to any business that needs them; but, by God, ensure when you are doing that, that at the same time Caymanians are getting the jobs. That has not been happening simply because of lip service.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: The board is not doing its job. Simple as that! You cannot have the board doing its job when you have somebody on the board who is only looking out to see what kind of business they can get for staffing plans. Then they set up the business to do that and get into that business! Cannot do its job!

The Motion—good in thought, good in spirit, and needed—cannot fix those things.

Madam Speaker, the archives of this honourable House will bear witness to my numerous efforts throughout my tenure. The records of this House will show from 1985, throughout my tenure as a legislator, to improve conditions and opportunities for Caymanians in the workplace, and yet the Minister of dress-up, functions and parties, has the audacity to talk about what I did not do? When I had responsibility just for that one aspect, by God, I tried, and I took the licks. And the records of this House will bear it out.

When I came to this honourable House, all we had for labour legislation was the Masters and Servants Law of 1845 or 1855. All the Masters and Servants Law did was just that—you are the servant, and you deserve to be treated as such. And when the people who worked their lifeline out for them left, they held a hand behind them and maybe got a little pat on the shoulder—but nothing in the hand. Maybe they gave them a little Timex watch. Maybe. But track the human resource development from 1985 straight to now and you will see tremendous improvement in this country.

You will see Caymanians are now heading up various corporations. Just saw one the other day. A Caymanian left the office, but at least another one went at Cable & Wireless. Look out through the financial industry and you will see companies like Ernst & Young, KPMG, Julius Bear Bank; a whole heap of them. But I know what it took to get that, Madam Speaker. And they are not going to say that McKeeva fought that kind of battle, you know. What they want to say is that McKeeva is not any good, and he is something else. They do not want to say that!

I will relate that this afternoon, since everybody else walked all over the globe, Madam Speaker. Give me the opportunity just to recount a little bit of history.

Madam Speaker, it was a battle to get that labour legislation here. One major contribution to this end was the call for the labour legislation brought into being by Mr. Norman Bodden. But it did not go far enough. Perhaps people say it is still not far enough. When I got responsibility in the 1990s, I amended it. I gave working mothers who got into their pregnancy . . . you will remember, Madam Speaker, because you debated it.

The Speaker: I am the only one that stood with you.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You remember that they had to beg for pregnancy leave. But that law mandated it in their expectancy and gave them more time.

And you will remember that they did not have any compassionate leave when the parents or a loved one died. But that law created it.

Check what we had, and check where we are today, and see if the Minister of Education can get up and open his yabber and try to blame anybody.

We made a lot of progress. It was not easy within government because there were some that did not want it. Others wanted it. But we stood together. And they like to talk about why we do not stand together. Over the years we stood together to get it.

There are some today, Madam Speaker, who fought to get partnerships in law firms and they could not get it. Perhaps they might even hate my guts today. I believe at least one does, but for no reason at all other than I am on the wrong side politically. But when they had need, and I was the Minister responsible for labour, they came to me and laid out their case.

I can think of three young Caymanian barristers, and I said simply, "If you do not get those boys a partnership, you simply will not get any work permits." That's all. That's what I said; that's what I meant. As Minister of Labour, I was prepared to go to the board and put my case to them. But they got it. They got it.

Madam Speaker, we can look back . . . I simply told the Chamber of Commerce, "You want to fight me on labour legislation? If your companies do not give people jobs and scholarships in this country, you will not get any work permits." That's what I said as Labour Minister.

And do you know what, Madam Speaker? Look back. Think back on the companies that did not give any scholarships in this country. Think back from the 1990s how many companies started to give two, one, and then another one. Look back now and see how many companies are doing it. We simply said to the commerce in this country, we will support it, we will do all that is necessary to help it grow, but if you do not give our people scholarships to get training, because that was the cry sometimes: Oh, you don't have the training. And then, when you went and got the training, it was, Oh, you don't have the experience. So, we simply said, if you do not, you do not get any permits, and, boy, I was not liked for a long time. I think I am better liked today. I am glad too.

But I was not liked for a long time. And some of them still hold it against me because I made them do their duty to this country because that is really nation building. You pull everybody along, and as many as are willing, capable and able to get trained you help them get trained. So, when the Minister talks about me not supporting education, he is talking nonsense!

Much work went into that exercise and it would interest all of you . . .

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I hope you listen because I have a few more words for you, my son.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You?

You have not done anything yet. I hope you know that! I do not know what you have done.

Much work went into that exercise and I would commend to all who are genuinely interested in manpower development to read the Hansard of 14 September 1995 when I laid that report. Maybe they have already.

Madam Speaker, as I said, it is my view that while the spirit of this Motion is right and what the Member is doing is right, it does not go far enough to bring about the desired outcome that I think is needed. Information derived from surveys and what is currently available will comprise one component of the needed system. But, an overarching mechanism that brings together the information from the survey, the Immigration business plans, the efforts of the Employment Relations Department and the education system, is needed.

All of the components are in place, but effective leadership—has he gone out? He should have stayed—and adequate resources for the implementing agency will be needed to ensure that a comprehensive and equitable system is in place.

In our service-based economy, yes the management of manpower is crucial. The right balance is needed to ensure opportunities for Caymanians, while not stifling businesses that rely on sufficiently trained employees to service their clients. As I said a while ago, the nature of our economy is one that the true and tangible benefits of our economic growth must be through employment and training of our people. This income is circulated and creates lasting economic benefits allowing Caymanians to be the beneficiaries of our economic prosperity and allows for a greater sense of belonging and commitment to the development of our Islands.

Similarly, if our people feel that they are appreciated by employers and are given the opportunity to prove that they are capable of upward mobility, they will be more productive employees and citizens making a positive contribution to continued labour tranquility as well.

That is why, Madam Speaker, while I was [courted] and advised and had supporters who supported a labour union, I said no. I said, let government work the training programme, be the mediator and we will keep out a lot of strife. I still believe that today. And while there are others who believe that the people would be more protected through labour unions, I do not. I believe that Government doing what it should do with the right kind of mechanisms in place can get our people better trained.

Madam Speaker, from 1995 I pointed out the need to have the private sector involved in attempting to fill the qualitative gap in the labour market. That is, Government needs to develop a conducive environment to encourage the private sector to help alleviate identified skill deficiencies in the labour market. The Manpower Development Committee reported that, although such policies would be costly initially, if they are properly designed and supported they will pay for themselves in the long term with a more qualified, skilled and productive workforce. The end product is to achieve a greater balanced overall demand and supply of Caymanian skills.

Madam Speaker, the numbers of people, carpenters and so on, and other skilled people we have that was outlined earlier by some of the Members, shows that over the years we have had a buoyant economy. Because we did not have enough people, we simply brought these people in. We must accept that the problem we face today was not created over night, and will not be solved over night.

The Member or somebody gave an example of how many boat captains we have. But one of the things going back to the 1970s, our parents preferred their children in commerce. "Go to work in the banks", I was told. "Leave the hotel, that's where I work. I don't want you there. Get a white shirt and a tie."

Which parent wanted their child not in CIBC, but out in a boat in the North Sound? None! But not even that.

When these so-called boat captains come here, they have probably been through some programme in England or one of the metropolitan cities, and they go to work for these people and they—

[inaudible]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I am not going to be tested like that. But, if the Minister has something to tell me, maybe he can write it on a paper and pass it to me.

[inaudible]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: All right.

And so, Madam Speaker, those companies get them because the kind of economy we had—I do not know how much we still have—we found those young people (because that's what they were, the vast majority of them) getting together, three or four of them renting a house so they saved money together that way. Caymanians are not going to do that. Let's face it! We were brought up different.

It is hard for our children to now go abroad and stay together in one room. They do not. Ha! They want separate rooms when they go to college, boy. So, much less if you think you are going to get any of them . . . and who wants to encourage them to do that?

Not everybody is going to go there. There are some Caymanians, and I know some good young men in the district of West Bay who have done this sort of living. They are now creating their own business. That's good. But what we are talking about is commerce, if I understand correctly. Of course, I think the lower levels were mentioned.

Madam Speaker, this has been a long time problem, as far as where people wanted to go to work. The Cayman Islands' rapid development has outpaced the growth and development of our people. Government's approach to this end must be from an informed perspective and in a reasonable timeframe.

I believe that the comments I made in 1995 are as equally relevant today as they were then. Government's policy to Caymanianise the workforce both in the private sector and the public sector is for competent Caymanians. We keep hearing that and more and more we believe that. People should never be promoted simply because they are Caymanian, but because they are competent. As I said, we are getting more and more willing and able Caymanians who work hard to develop themselves and their careers trained in order to make a positive contribution to their employer and the community in general.

Madam Speaker, I believe the intent of this Motion is good. It will encourage the Government to consider the spirit of the Motion and bring about the full and desired outcome by enforcing, strengthening and improving the functioning of the provisions in the Immigration Law regarding employees' training and human resource development to resource the Employment Relations Department, so as to better match training to the needs of the labour force and lead through their action.

I would encourage the Government to re-establish a manpower development committee representing a broad cross-section of knowledge and expertise from the private and public sectors. The mandate of the committee would be somewhat as it was then, to develop a long-term, comprehensive and balanced human resource development strategy and policy for these Islands, identifying the skill gaps, consistent training policies, programmes and career development paths for willing and able Caymanians.

Madam Speaker, in closing I once more remind all of us that you can point fingers as much as you like. There are people who have worked hard in the past to get this country where it is—including you, [Madam Speaker] and some of the older ones here. Some of the newer ones coming in want to make you believe that nothing was done, and that they are doing it all. I am glad for every effort that they are making. I am glad for every fresh effort that they are making.

But, do you know what, Madam Speaker? I get a little bit peeved when I hear them saying that nothing was done. A lot has been done, and much more could be done if the electorate had been consistent.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for George Town, the Minister of Education, cannot seem to resist telling lies, and does so every chance he gets. Any time he brought anything to this House for education he got the 'yes' vote from me and my Opposition colleagues. So I do not know what he is talking about that I do not support education. As I said, it is a lie. Every time he gets the chance, he repeats it.

If anybody in this honourable House does not support education it must be him! He is the one who hired a doctor of education who had no degree to be such to lead the college, and who spent somehow, somewhere on somebody, maybe on a couple of some-bodies, $500,000, probably on all kinds of other matter that was not an education matter. If anyone here does not support education it must be the Minister of Education, because we do not have one single classroom in nearly four years built by him.

Madam Speaker, if anyone here does not support education, it must be him. When he signed us up to that European Convention—which I would not sign, Madam Speaker . . . the day that [Governor] Dinwiddie brought it to me I said I left my pen home.

The case in Bermuda is going to test us. And no constitution is going to help us unless we do some radical stuff that we will not get away with in any event. But he is to blame for it, nobody else. Him!

And when they come and test you and say, This job is mine, I want it, and you do not give it to them under the local law, they are going to the Privy Council, and the Privy Council gives it to them. What are you going to do then? Who are you going to blame? Me? No man! Blame the pretty boy! Blame Pretty Boy Floyd.

Madam Speaker, if they are trying to say that I do not have education . . . well, maybe I did not get the college education I wanted. I wanted to be a lawyer or a teacher but the system of the day did not allow that, and my poor mama could not afford it. But I match their degrees with my commonsense, my granny-wit and my drive and ambition to do things for this country for the good of this country.

If they are saying I do not do anything or have not done anything for education . . . Madam Speaker, I do not expect them to know about the many students—more like $1 million that I personally guaranteed in 24 years so that somebody's child could go abroad and get a degree, get qualified. They would not know about that.

Then, Madam Speaker, they would not know—they should—about those who the government system says after that person has been working for them for years, We'll give you the job, but we cannot give you the support to go abroad to get trained to be able to hold that job. I guaranteed such people. And I am glad I was able to do it. I am glad that I have been able simply [because] I see it as part of my contribution to my not being able to get the college education or the university education that I wanted. I have ensured that others do, and I did for my children—not government.

Madam Speaker, I get peeved a little bit when they make that kind of reference that I do not see the value of education. I do not see the value of education? They would not know. Let them go ahead in their folly because there are those out there who matter who know what I have done and have attempted to do. And nothing that the PPM does can wipe that out.

They can talk about me, cuss me, and get up behind me and say all sorts of things now. It does not matter because the records are there. I have done what I could.

Madam Speaker, as I said, if you do not have responsibility for a subject, you cannot take it to Cabinet.

Madam Speaker, I support getting a survey, but I support more the provision in this Immigration Law, which is a driving force and a means by which the Government can help remove that proverbial glass ceiling. Give businesses the permits they need, but ensure that our people are trained, and in so doing are moved up the ladder of success in these Islands.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to offer a few comments on the Motion at hand. Before delving into my contribution, let me reflect back upon the many contributions on a national level that previous legislators and classes of legislators have achieved in this whole area of labour.

Whilst I have not been in this Legislative Assembly that long, one thing I have learned is that to be a legislator or a statesperson (versus just a politician), one has to have honesty, maturity and candor and pay credence to those who toiled and got us to where we are, and got the country to where it is at a particular juncture. In my humble submission, thus far the Government bench has done its usual thing with its usual style—create history and ignore history.

How can you, in 2008, stand on this Floor as a duly elected representative and not reflect back about where we have come from in such a short period of time and not really give the credit that should be given?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I hear them mumbling that I was not up in here. There is a speaker system throughout this Legislative Assembly.

They may believe they have done it, but in my humble submission, mission failed. Mission failed is going to be the theme of my submission because labour has been an unadulterated failure under this current Government. I will give the House all the evidence it needs to recognise that fact in a few short minutes.

Madam Speaker, we have come a long way in a short period of time as it relates to labour and the development of our people. I am not going to be one who simply jumps on the bandwagon to complain and not give the whole perspective required on this subject, but I will also talk about the gaps and areas for improvement. There is no doubt that there are gaps and areas for improvement.

Madam Speaker, I did some research through the Hansards, which we all get copies of these days—not only the hard copies, but we also get the electronic CDs. As you search through [the Hansards] you see the toil by former Members who brought labour legislation in the late 1980s against vehement opposition in this country.

As referred to by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, we can look at the work done by him in the mid 1990s to build upon the work done a short two decades ago. Yet we have Members running around here who would make you believe somehow that nothing had been done, and that all the plight of any individual Caymanian ought to be heaped at the doorstep of that lovely phrase that they like to use, “expatriate” and “expatriate worker”; many of whom have been allowed to stay in this country for decades. I wonder where some of them were when all of this was happening and yet they were supposed to be the adults at the time that should have been making some sort of change.

Madam Speaker, manpower is defined as human effort or labour as opposed to machine or animal power. If we go back to some of the more textbook definitions, we will see that the term “manpower” has many meanings for different people in this day and age, but, certainly, from a historical perspective initially the economists shied away from how you would even label human effort. We know that throughout history there have been many, many different forms. Certainly, it is only in the last couple of centuries that we have really seen human labour start to attract the type of reward it deserves. Certainly, every country has had to come up with its own model as to how to allow human labour to reap its greatest reward.

Madam Speaker, I am going to use a few terms that I think are relatively common these days in this subject area. Human capital refers to the stock of skills and knowledge embodied in the ability to perform labour to produce economic value. As I said earlier, many early economic theories refer to it simply as labour. It is one of the three factors of production, and considered a fungible resource, homogeneous and easily interchangeable.

However, there have been other conceptions of labour that dispense of these early assumptions. The great economist, Adam Smith, defined four types of fixed capital. One was useful machines, or instruments of trade. The second was buildings as a means of procuring revenue. The third was improvements to land. And the fourth was human capital.

Madam Speaker, I offer up a quote that really took us to the next level in this regard. And it reads: “Fourthly, of the acquired and useful abilities of all inhabitants or members of the society. The acquisition of such talents by the maintenance of the acquirer during his education, study or apprenticeship, always costs a real expense, which is a capital fixed and realized as it were, in his person. Those talents, as they make part of his fortune, so do they likewise of that of the society to which he belongs. The improved dexterity of a workman may be considered in the same light as a machine or instrument of trade which facilitates and abridges labour, and which, though it costs a certain expense, repays that expense with a profit.” That is from An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, do you think you could give us a copy of that to lay on the Table?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: When I am finished, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I have no problem in doing that because it is good for all of us to learn new subject matter and learn the history surrounding it because often times it can inform, not only our debate, but also our view as to solutions to some of the common problems that we face.

In short, Smith saw human capital as skills, dexterity (that is, physical, intellectual, psychological, et cetera), and judgment. Life, they say, helps a lot. “On a national level a country’s ability to learn from the leader is a function of its stock of human capital. Furthermore, human capital can be acquired through formal schooling and on the job training.”

Madam Speaker, when we look at this whole issue of surveys and national manpower, or human capital surveys, we see that these are data collection exercises. What this Motion is asking for is a national data collection exercise to ascertain our national human capital position, which should also give insight into what weakness and strengths we have. It is by building upon those strengths and filling those gaps that we will be able to build the type of Cayman from a human perspective that all of us would want to see.

I presume that the goal of such a survey would be to project our future personnel and training needs by occupation. This would have to be worked in conjunction with our current manpower capabilities, but it should also inform and drive our scholarship and training regimes in the future. That is a point that I can agree very readily upon with the mover of the Motion and those who spoke after him.

The Minister has quite rightly pointed out that such an exercise is not an insignificant undertaking. This is a mammoth undertaking if you are going to do a true national manpower survey. The Minister has alluded to the fact that perhaps it could be done (that was my interpretation from what he said) in conjunction with the next census, which I believe is due in the year 2010. That, for many reasons, would make a lot of sense because this exercise is not only going to costly, but the workers that you need to execute it will be significant.

Certainly, Madam Speaker, if the country is going to go through a census exercise in a few short months, it would seem to make sense to enhance the census in such a way as to satisfy the needs this particular Motion aspires to. As we know, a national census does obtain certain critical data that surrounds labour in the first instance. It is not simply a head count. Our national census has always produced significant information and there is a reason why it is attempted every ten years. People generally see decades, or ten-year blocks, as the length of time that you can meaningfully compare information to see trends and know exactly what is going on, or have a better idea and better opportunity to understand what is happening within your population.

I believe the overall spirit of the Motion will find favour with the collective membership of this Legislative Assembly. However, I believe that we also ought to be a little more careful with some of the concepts that we try to push in this House because sometimes they can run contrary or counterproductive to the national good.

On one hand, we hear the Minister get up and point to the fact that we do have in this country an agitation that has existed, and I dare say that is not unique to Cayman. But it is an agitation that has existed between the permanent and established members of the community, that is, the Caymanians who have been here for a long period of time, multi generations, and the relative newcomers, that is, the immigrant workers.

However, it never ceases to amaze me that whilst we know that, [we keep] fanning the fire, not trying to nation build to ensure that we get the best possible labour relations there can be in the country. And, we still continue to go down that road talking, Oh well, we get non-Caymanians who come here to work, but at the end of the month they send their money back home. I find it hard to believe, as a very young

Member of this House, that some of the older Members would have forgotten that when our men went to sea, and when they were the expats somewhere, that it was them sending their allotments home. They were earning money outside of this country and sending it home. And that is what helped to build this country.

I hear the Fourth Elected Member asking did they take anybody's job.

Well, since the Member wants to engage in crosstalk, let me ask the Member—

The Speaker: Honourable Member, I do not think we should engage in crosstalk, he said something—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Well, then, Madam Speaker, I suggest that—

The Speaker: Would you stop shouting at me for one minute please?

Thank you.

I am saying let us not get into crosstalk. So continue your debate please, sir. Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I presume then, that those who believe that Caymanians going somewhere to work were not occupying a job that could have been done by someone else must also believe in UFOs, that they were going to come down and do the job.

Madam Speaker, whenever humans move it is for a reason. Yes, there could have been some other nationality and someone from somewhere else that could have done that job. However, we did the job, and we sent the money home to build our country.

You see, Madam Speaker, in the modern times in which we live, we have to look carefully at how we expect to build this country and the expectations and realities that we as legislators are going to impart upon our people. That is what representative democracy is. The people elect us to tackle tough issues, but in many instances, to [also] offer leadership and leadership often times require us to say it as it is, to call a spade a spade.

This rhetoric that we continue to hear in these chambers, which can do nothing at all, Madam Speaker, to help these Cayman Islands. Nothing! It cannot help. That sort of rhetoric can only hurt. Every Member in this House knows that we have a unique economy in the sense that we have close to 100 per cent more jobs—a little more actually—than we have people to fill them. So, people are going to come to Cayman to work, and they are going to have their being. One of the things that's natural to immigration is the building up of the global place.

So, because a person works and lives in Cayman and sends their money to their place of origin to build it up . . . is that a bad thing? Where is the Godliness and Christianity that we are supposed to have?

Naturally, Madam Speaker, we want to ensure that every able-bodied, employable Caymanian is given every opportunity to maximise his or her potential. I am going to come to that further in a minute in terms of some of the strategic points that we have to follow through on to ensure that Caymanians are given that ability. But, to continue to get up with that rhetoric is wholly irresponsible of any elected Member in this country. This is 2008, and we should be past that. We should be well beyond it. I personally disassociate myself from any of those sorts of comments.

Madam Speaker, all of the quotes I am offering come from the same document. Let me offer another one. This, thank God, we have been the beneficiary of and not been subjected to.

"Educated individuals who often migrate from poor countries to rich countries seeking opportunity, this movement has positive effects on both countries. Capital rich countries gain an influx of labour and labour rich countries receive capital when migrants remit money home. The loss of labour in the old country also increases the wage rate for those who do not immigrate."

So, Madam Speaker, there is a win/win situation from an economic standpoint when people, human capital, move around the globe. In Cayman, as small as we are, nobody can say that we have not played our part in this region and hemisphere in providing an economy and a sense of hospitality that has allowed not only Caymanians to benefit, but other people as well. Should we become so begrudging that we are going to create animosity and hatred in our hearts because of that fact? I do not think that is wise, Madam Speaker. I do not think it is wise on a number of fronts.

Firstly, I do not believe it is right as a human being to live that way. Secondly, when we look at the economy we have built, the Caymanians who have businesses and benefit greatly from this economy have benefited because this population has increased so rapidly. Has there been a great price to pay in some respects? Yes, there has been. Could we have done a better job over the years in some instances to have managed and mitigated some of those impacts on culture, lifestyles, et cetera? Yes, we could have.

We are where we are, though. It is 2008, let us pull up our bootstraps and do something about it now. Let us work from the base that we have today. We cannot talk about what existed in 1998 or what existed in 1988. Those days are gone. The only day that we have right now is this day—15 September 2008—and going forward for however many more days God is going to grant us.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Education made another point that I have to agree with him on. I disagree slightly.

This whole point of the thankfulness and how many unthankful and ungrateful people we have in our community is a real troubling aspect for me as a legislator. When people are using their energies to tear down other nationalities and their own Caymanians, that energy is not being spent productively. We ought to be more productive in being a part of the solution versus spreading venom throughout our community and causing others to also catch that complaining fever. Should we not fight to ensure that every able bodied and willing Caymanian gets a fair shake and the opportunity he deserves? Of course! We need to fight in that vein. That is part of where we as legislators come in.

If we see policy and legislative gaps, we ought to work diligently to fill, fix and remedy them. If we achieve nothing else as legislators, that should be the one thing that we all work together on; that we all work together to try to achieve. Maximisation of opportunity for every human being, every Caymanian getting the opportunity to maximise his or her God-given potential is of paramount importance.

But not only from a legislative standpoint, because you know you get some people who if life is not perfect and life is not exactly how they want it, then they have to blame something and somebody. That something and somebody so often blamed is the Government. That loose phrase, "the Government." Oh, it's the elected Members. For the last decade, they have not done what they should have done and that's why I'm struggling. That's why I have the problems I have today' That is how a lot of people look at life, Madam Speaker. Whereas, nobody wants to be held accountable for what they could have done to assist.

One thing that has been a real hallmark for Caymanians, unfortunately, certainly in the last good while, has been that crab-in-a-barrel syndrome. We are so busy trying to tear down the nearest pant leg we perceive is slightly ahead of us, that we are not working and doing what we need to do to ensure we are building ourselves and our communities so as to avert some of the situations we have gotten ourselves into.

Also, as a community we have made some inadvertent mistakes. When I was a teenager, my parents made me understand that they wanted better for me. But, more importantly, they used themselves as an example. While they would say, "An honest day's work is an honest day's work I do not want you to have to do what I do." And so we come to the situation we are in these days where most people who are going through the process of getting their high school education, do not even consider certain sectors of our economy, especially the service industries.

They do not consider the hospitality field anymore. They look at it and say, Well, my parents told me I want you to do better than I did. Therefore, you have the scenario where a young Caymanian (and we have seen and talked about this for many years) will always choose a job where they put on a shirt and tie, or a nice suit if a young lady. They would rather make less money for an entry-level job than go into the service sector and try to become a Maitre d', a Food and Beverage manager, or one of those hospitality industry posts which pays superior to a lot of the skilled level equivalent positions in the financial services industry.

That whole cultural shift (because that is what it has become now) that we have had in our community, we are now starting to pay the price for that. So Caymanians are left scratching their heads not understanding how the waiter or chef at a nice restaurant can afford the nice town home that they cannot afford, yet they work in a very nice office. They may work for a branch of one of the biggest banks on Wall Street. They may work for one of the biggest mutual funds administrators, they may work for one of the big four accounting firms in an administrative position, but not be able to earn as much as people who have been brought into Cayman because a lot of Caymanians have simply said they are not getting into that area. We cannot then connect the dots and figure out why life is the way it is.

Madam Speaker, the mover of the Motion spoke at great length more about the workings and necessity for a manpower database than necessarily the survey itself. He spent a lot of time talking about the database and how a national manpower database could work and the benefits it would have. That is a point that we all agree with him on. In fact, Members of this House before us called for such a database, such a system for managing human capital.

After I saw the Motion come out on one of the Business Papers, I decided to look back and see some of the . . . because I know that this is an area that over the years I have stringently advocated for more attention from Government.

I am looking at the Official Hansard Report from Wednesday, 27 February 2002. This was part of my contribution to the Budget Address at that point. I quote, Madam Speaker, with your permission.

“During the boom, things were relatively good here in the Cayman Islands. A lot of the fundamental infrastructure that was necessary—for example a national database of employment—were never developed. So we find ourselves in quite a quandary. On the one hand we have thousands of persons in these Islands on work permits; on the other hand you have Caymanians being displaced from jobs. Many times the Caymanian has a skill set that they could take to another company and be able to replace someone who is here on work permit. However, when one speaks to the persons who are in Immigration, the system and the processes that the person has to go through are not quite so simple or seamless, and so it is important as we go forward, that those fundamentals start getting urgent attention.

“I understand from the Department of Employment Services that this is exactly what they are embarking upon. They are embarking upon equipping themselves along with the Immigration Board with the information that would allow them ready access to employment statistics and to employment information. In other words, the vision is to have one main database of all persons living and employed here in the Cayman Islands. That is indeed a massive undertaking but one that is critical to the way forward.” [2002 Official Hansard Report, p. 120]

I said other things on other occasions. But the other one that caught my eye was when we were debating the motion brought down here by the Minister of Education where he sought to have the House endorse, and did receive such endorsement, his education conference to be the blueprint for the way forward for the development of education.

Madam Speaker, just to be clear, we not only debated the motion, we also debated an amendment to the motion, as you may recall, because the Opposition offered an amendment to the original motion to make it what we believed a little more clear and succinct and in line with what the legislative arm of government should have been endorsing.

I quote my comments on 12 October 2005. “It would also have been good if some of what he discussed in his contribution to this Motion was tied, even in snapshot form, to give us a glimpse of how he envisages tying this to labour policies. Again, I will try to assist in that regard.

“You see, Madam Speaker, one of the most frustrating things for a human being is to achieve and obtain skills and not be able to use them to their fullest potential. Education has very little meaning to achieving potential if one does not have the ability to use it and if one does not have the opportunity to use it. How many countries suffer from the “brain drain”? Just think about the names of some of the doctors you encounter when you travel to the United States and you look at their last name and you meet them and talk to them and find out where they are from.” [2005 Official Hansard Report, p. 230]

“One of the things that will obviously be critical is that we develop some sort of national manpower database in this country. I find it frightening, and I have said this in a debate before—if I remember correctly I have said it twice on two different debates and Throne Speeches. How can we manage the labour situation in Cayman where you continually hear Caymanians say, ‘Well, I am not going back to the Labour Department because I do not get results.’ Whether that is true or whether that is a perception I do not know, but quite frankly, any of us who have been MLAs, if you have not heard that complaint then I would be astounded. However, it is difficult to blame the Department if it is not tooled and equipped properly.

“One of the things that we would like to see is a holistic position of where we are. There is some tracking of people and trying to keep up with them after they have completed their education. I say that is not taking it far enough in this technological age. We have very useful tools in technology, one of which is databases. Someone would have to convince me that this cannot be done.” [IBID p. 231-2]

I was alluding to the fact to develop a national manpower database.

Madam Speaker, during that debate I went on to make numerous points in this regard. That was 12 October 2005—two years and 11 months ago. At the time, the Minister in his winding up made the promise, oh yes, he would take into consideration the points raised by the Opposition during that debate because he did acknowledge in his response that there were some very valid points raised by the Opposition.

Madam Speaker, a couple of short months later, on 19 May 2006, in finance committee, I also tackled the same Minister on the same issue.

During the deliberations on that occasion, I asked the Minister, and perhaps I will need to quote for it to be as clear as possible. This was a question that I was asking. I quote: “Mr. Chairman, let me then ask the question: Does the Ministry and or the Department [that is, the Department of Employment Relations] see a need to have something that is more akin to a national manpower database that captures . . . And you will never ever have it accurate; completely accurate, because firstly, you have to get people registered, people change jobs, people retire, et cetera. We understand that. But, is there going to be a database that will have all persons who are residents in this country . . . , registered in that database when any department of Government, in particular Immigration and the Department of Labour, needs to understand what is happening in the local market place? Say the Minister wants a briefing, for example, and he wants to know how many people are in hospitality. He may want to know what the age make up is, he may want to know what the gender make up is. Is there a view taken that eventually we need to have that sort of information?” [Unedited transcript of Finance Committee, 19 May 2006]

And this was the response from the Honourable Minister, the Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: “Mr. Chairman, Mr. Anglin makes a very valid point.

“I think right across Government there has not been a sufficient emphasis on the collection and use of data so that more strategic decisions that the Government takes are based on—to use my expression—empirical data, as opposed to sort of we have a feel for what it is that has to be done.

“In the Ministry, generally, not just in relation to employment, in relations matters, we have started to focus on, as I said, not just the collection of data, but the application of data as strategic decisions are taken.

“The whole question to the development of a manpower database, I think, is a very valid suggestion or recommendation, and it is certainly something that I will take under advisement and discuss at length with Mr. Whittaker [who was the director of Employment Relations at the time] and the other persons in the Ministry, in particular the Department of Employment Relations, to see what needs to be done or if something can be done to the system that is being developed now to take it to that additional level, because I think that is very, very critical information as we plan for the continued development of Cayman. I mean from everything, roads and schools, and all of those things are impacted by the number of people that you have in the workforce and the kind of people you have in the workforce. So, it is a very valuable suggestion.” [Unedited transcript of Finance Committee, 19 May 2006]

Some other questioning went on, Madam Speaker, and other Members interjected with other questions. At that point, I was not sufficiently satisfied so I came back some time later and said: “Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence sir, we covered a very important matter just before we took the break, and I think it was left hanging a bit, and I would just like to ask of the Honourable Minister if he could give the finance committee a commitment that when they have looked more in depth at the whole issue of a national manpower database, whether or not he would give consideration to reporting back to Members of the House in that regard in terms of the way in which the Ministry is going to move and what findings they have uncovered in that area.” [Unedited transcript of Finance Committee, 19 May 2006]

And the response: “Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr. Chairman, the whole question of a manpower survey is a matter that was raised by us on the campaign trail, particularly, Mr. Alfonso Wright and Mr. Osbourne Bodden, both articulated that position of the PPM repeatedly, and so I’m being pressed also by them and by other Members of the Backbench to move this aspect of it forward. So, I don’t really have any difficulty at all in giving Mr. Anglin the undertaking he wishes.” [Unedited transcript of Finance Committee, 19 May 2006]

Now, Madam Speaker, I have heard Members of this current class of legislators absolutely rip to shreds any Minister prior—but in particular, any Minister who was part of the previous UDP Administration—for anything that they did not do. I always hear them jumping up, thumping their chests and saying, “Well, you had three-plus years to do it.”

So, Madam Speaker, I find it quite alarming that in 2008 we get what, in my humble submission, seems to be one of those feel-good private member’s motions, one that one would want to ensure was included on a resume that is called a manifesto so that you can get up and say, Well you see, I moved this motion. Yet, Madam Speaker, I see three-plus years and the Minister has the audacity to use his favourite phrase, "Oh how loud the thunder; but how little it rains." I think that's what he likes to say a lot.

Madam Speaker, in this regard, as it relates to labour, because no one can convince me . . . because I heard them when they first started off the debate. I heard the excuses being formed at the very outset by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, talking about, Oh well, this one has been busy. That one has been busy

' Madam Speaker, all legislators are busy. How can you be too busy to have not moved forward one of the most important initiatives in trying to get to some of the root causes and information as it relates to our labour market?

In my humble submission, this one has been around for quite some time—certainly, as I pointed out in my first quote, from February 2002 (and I know there was an earlier reference in my first Throne Speech [debate] as well), to how important it is for us to effectively manage our labour pool. In fact, I recall on another occasion in the House, I made the point that I hoped nobody would use the excuse that this was too mammoth an exercise (that is, creating a national manpower database) when you have countries the size of the United States where the Internal Revenue Service has created a massive database to track hundreds of millions of people and their income tax filings.

Madam Speaker, I like to see and believe the best about everybody. I think that I am fair across the board in my analysis. I critique myself better than anyone else. I say that because I believe that before one criticizes, one should look inside and say, what else could I have done? In looking at the records of this honourable House, I can only say that the mumbling I am hearing from across the Floor is because the Government now realises that on this occasion they are being exposed because they have come with a motion that the whole House is going to support. Why would the whole House not support it? All of us understand the necessity of it.

The Government has not done anything to move this forward. Nothing tangible to move forward this position. Yet we are talking about 12 October 2005. I clearly remember at the time that when the Minister wound up the debate on the results of the National Education Conference, he clearly said that the good points raised by the Opposition—and there were many—would be moved forward as part of the future development in the area of education and labour.

Madam Speaker, one thing that I have learned is that you can make as many good points as you want from this Opposition bench, this Government takes on board none of them. They will accept motions. And only if you can really box them in to get to a point where it is hard to have any wiggle room at all, do any of the points of the Opposition get any real redress.

Madam Speaker, I personally believe that what happened in this instance was that it was raised before any other Member moved a private member's motion. If you remember, Madam Speaker, the election was in May 2005. The debate that I spoke about was October 2005. So, no Member had moved the motion. No Member had brought it forward, yet as they have said, this was a big point for them on the campaign trail. I am not quite sure why they did not, but that is not for me to judge.

Nothing happened. It did not move forward. We mentioned it in a debate. A Minister of the Government said he was going to take it on board and eight months later in Finance Committee, we pressed the same Minister again. He said, yes, we are going to move this forward.

Now, two and a half years later we hear members of the Government and the same said Minister get up and talk about how important this area is, and have the audacity to say that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition does not support education. Well, certainly, his track record has unequivocally proven that he does not meaningfully support labour in this country.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: True!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: How can three years pass, right? It is three and a half years since he was elected. So, let us assume that all this talk about the campaign trail was just fluff and they did not really mean to do anything about it. October 2005 rolls around. They were pressed by the Opposition. Commitment was made; yet nothing was done.

Let us hear that saying again, "Oh how loud the thunder; but how little it rains" as it relates to labour!

I hope the Minister of Works is listening as it relates to labour. It is a parched wasteland on his side because nothing has been done and nothing was going to be done because they know—even after passing this Motion—nothing of substance is going to be done to achieve the outcome of this Motion before the next general election. They already know that.

That is why the Minister has already said that the national manpower survey is a massive national undertaking, and he alluded to the census. And we would have to agree with him on that. But in regard to the national manpower database . . . September 2008. Elections soon rolling around. House is going to be prorogued soon. A feel good motion to get up and say to the public You see? I moved the motion. I care about labour. I care about you. I will try and do something for you.

Now, Madam Speaker, as I said, I try to see the best in all people in all things.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Hold on!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But, Madam Speaker, that one really, really, really baffles me. How could it have taken this long?

How could it take this long?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, some history needs to be corrected because we cannot have debate that is going to form part of the Official Hansard Report that takes history and completely rewrites it.

I have stood up on the Floor of this House and talked since 2000 about the depression of wages in this country. In fact, if you look at the record of the motions moved, we see that going way back we have many, many motions that impact this particular subject matter. Minimum Wage by Category—study done. We had all sorts of good stuff: Minimum Wage motion again in 1998. Training initiatives. Public Education System. I even moved a motion down here about Review of the Labour Law.

Madam Speaker, we have had some movements in the last while. But the reality is that you are going to get up and say that you care about all of these things, are doing all these things, but you just have to get up sometimes and give the position as it is. You dropped the ball. You did not do anything, but you're hoping to make amends. That's what the Government should have done.

Now, getting back to history: I heard the Third Elected Member for George Town who, I must say, whenever I debate she always seems to take great interest in what I am saying. But I must tell her the depression on wages in the construction industry and in other industries, in particular tourism, did not start with the Ritz Carlton. Madam Speaker, I stood on the Floor of this House and gave evidence that from 1984—the Ritz Carlton did not start building until 1999—the stagnation of labour in the construction industry . . . if you go into the specific areas. When we saw the Westin built, and if I remember correctly, Hadsphaltic was the company that built the Westin.

Let us get back to a little economic theory here. The reality is that labour is very much like any commodity. The Minister of Education spoke to this point, and I agree with him. When there is a cheaper alternative, and that cheaper alternative can move with minimal restriction, then the price in whatever domestic economy importing that commodity has to be impacted. So, we saw a large influx in certain sectors of the construction industry that caused cheaper foreign alternatives to the Caymanian labour. And that did depress the wage in that area. But it had nothing to do with the Ritz Carlton!

The reason she had to mention the Ritz Carlton is because she wants to also tie that to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. Everything in the world! We stopped the constitutional talks, we did this, we did that, anything that goes wrong, this Government blames us!

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You were not blaming me?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But to say that the depression of wages in the construction industry started in 1999 is a complete misrepresentation of history —

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Of course!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: —it started a decade before that.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: A decade? More.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Easily a decade before that.

Madam Speaker, what surprises me is that I know that these Members know better.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Oh yeah.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Every one of them is older than me, Madam Speaker. Every one of them.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Ashamed?

Well, as I would check my records, my darling, in 1988 I was 16. I do not know how old you were, but I know you were not 16! You were not doing anything about it.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay and Third Elected Member for George Town, can I have this crosstalk stopped so that the Second Elected Member for West Bay can complete his debate?

Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I know, Madam Speaker, you do try to defend me, and you do try to defend my rights.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [laughter]

The Speaker: You always put your foot in your mouth, don't you?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I do not know what I did wrong.

The Speaker: Would you please continue your debate?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But I thank you for defending me, Madam Speaker, because the Government just does not like to hear any of the truth.

Whenever the other side is told on any story they have to get in this chatter and try to distract you. But I am not going to be distracted, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, if I listened to my good friend, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, I would believe that—

[Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr., Deputy Speaker, in the Chair]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I would believe, Mr. Speaker, that everything has gone amuck and awry in Cayman. Again, this gets back, in my humble submission, to fueling that anti-foreigner sentiment, which is negative and bad for this country.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Right!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Member say that the best jobs are not going to Caymanians. The best opportunities are not going to Caymanians. The companies are not owned by Caymanians. But, Mr. Speaker, we have certain industries that we need to do a lot of work with, and we need to take some hard decisions on, in my opinion. Let me use an example of a hard decision and line that was taken, and the positive results that were gleaned.

In my profession, accountancy, accounting firms were not allowed to bring in on a work permit a staff accountant. A staff accountant is the entry-level professional position in an accounting firm. What did that make the firms do? A scholarship programme to send Caymanians off to get educated. They came back, became the staff accountants and worked their way up. It is a good positive result.

Sitting on the IRT, I can tell this House that a natural follow on, in terms of initial legislation passed, was to look at two other aspects: One was to have a complete review of the Trade & Business Licensing Law done; and, secondly, to take a hard look at industries in this country and decide if there were any others that we needed to take such a hard line position on. And, Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is, if you follow the logic, other than a company that has been given a specific exemption (that is, a big bank, other areas in the financial industry, major multi-million dollar firms), or you obtained a local controlled companies license, an LCCL, every company is supposed to be a Caymanian company.

So, there are Caymanian companies that have given certain semi-skilled and skilled positions to cheaper foreign labour alternatives, even having to pay the work permit. They would much prefer that than to take a young Caymanian in, train him and get him there. If anybody was listening to my early comments, they spoke to the expense involved in developing human capital. All of us know that. When you hear of somebody fresh and green, depending on the industry, it can take anywhere from 12 to 24 months, sometimes longer, before that person is of the skill and competence that you, as the employer, can make a return versus a trained experienced person in the same area.

I am going to use an example. I said this on national radio a few weeks ago, and I will say it here again. Heavy equipment—it grieves me to see non-Caymanians in that area on work permits. It grieves me. The spirit of our legislation is that we first try to make sure that we strengthen the areas that are highly technical in terms of scholarships—engineers, architect, lawyers, doctors, accountants. Those are the areas where we naturally have huge gaps between economic needs and demands of the economy, the availability and number of Caymanians going into those professions. We have to be realistic about our size.

Of the 300 or so graduates that we get a year, only X per cent is going to go on to university. Of those an even smaller number is going to go into each of the specific professions.

The Minister spoke to the growth in the accountancy field, the growth of around 100 professionals needed each year. I do not care which government is there, there is no government that is going to be able to produce from our natural population 100 accountants per year. We do not have the numbers to support it. Just do not!

However, one of the key things that was supposed to come out of the new immigration regime, was to look at the economy, see the areas where there is a shorter timeframe between a person starting off green and becoming competent and able to make a decent living.

[Hon. Edna M. Moyle, Speaker, in the Chair]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: In other words, we were supposed to look at the key areas, skilled carpenters, et cetera, because even though we talk about depression in wages I still know skilled carpenters, Madam Speaker, who make CI$60,000 a year. Skilled carpenter. That's good money.

We were supposed to look at the areas that were not necessarily professional areas that we knew would involve a four-year degree, sitting exams afterwards, getting experience, and then becoming fully qualified. The average person who is going to become a qualified accountant is still going to take somewhere between six to eight years, depending on how quickly they pass the exams before they are fully qualified.

A lawyer has to go through his law degree, pass his professional practice exams, get articulated, then get called to the bar; a similar type of timeline. Again, a much smaller percentage of any population, not just Cayman, any population, that will have the skills, necessary acumen and desire to get to the end of the road.

However, where we have dropped the ball since that new Immigration Law came into effect, has been on the labour front in terms of our detailed analysis. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town quite accurately said when it comes to work permits the numbers, company, nationality, you can slice it and dice it any way you want to. The information is there at the Immigration Department. We know the areas that we have huge shortages in. We do not need any manpower survey to prove some of those. We just know the raw numbers that are there.

So, a lot of those areas where we need to sit down with industry and the private sector should have been looked at to say (and it's a very difficult conversation) . . . but we need to say, Look, you have an area you need to fill with Caymanians. You need to go and find . . . This whole business about advertising in the paper and if someone does or does not apply . . . Madam Speaker, I got my scholarship in 1990. At that point, PriceWaterhouse had been granting scholarships from the 1970s. So, [that was] over a decade. If previous administrations had simply said to them, Well, you know, advertise and if you can't find a staff accountant locally, if no one applies, then you go ahead and we will give you a work permit. If they had taken that approach, certainly, a lot of the opportunities that have been accrued to many Caymanians would not have existed.

But how did they go about it? I cannot tell you precisely what each firm does these days, but back in those days they came into the high schools and directly recruited and found someone. They made sure that each year they found someone to give a scholarship to by coming in. We may be small, but Caymanians—who are driven and desirous—are as good or better than any, in any profession. I have no apologies to make with that statement. We can compete with the best in the world, as small as we are.

But the reality is, if you are still going to keep a very hands-off approach with some of the critical areas of our economy, then naturally you are going to continue to get some of the complaints that the Fourth Elected Member for George Town has complained about, and complaints that we get in our MLA offices every day.

We need at all stages, in my opinion, to monitor where your economy is, monitor where the labour market is, and make sure . . . we know the areas that pay well. A lot of our kids do not get exposed to it. No one is going to convince me that if X employer went into the high schools and into the relevant class, just as the accountant firms used to do with their accounts and business class teachers and say to them, show me a good student. So, they go into your woodwork, electrical studies class, "Show me a good student." And that person is directly recruited.

I understand some of that is happening. I was pleasantly surprised when a young man that I was talking to sometime over the last few months told me how he happened to get his job. It was not an application process. It was someone coming to find him. We have to shift the paradigm in specific areas that we as a country need to Caymanianise, because we know the opportunities are there for our people. And Caymanians will rise to the challenge. They will rise to the challenge. But, Madam Speaker, I have certainly not seen, in my opinion, the type of emphasis and effort emanating from Government to make this happen.

What is very interesting is that we are debating this and we are going to be breaking to come back to take up another very interesting debate, which is, a change in the work permit approval system.

Vision 2008 envisioned that there would be some sort of national manpower authority that would be responsible for this whole process of approving in and out those who would be able to live and work in Cayman. So, over the next year or two in this country (because this is not going to happen tomorrow) we have to decide whether or not to take a big step back to see if immigration should or should not be responsible for one of the most critical aspects of management in our economy, that is, the approval of work permits. Or, if perhaps that task would be better vested with people who have more in-depth knowledge, skills and expertise in this area, and immigration is left up to the technical aspect of simply granting the actual visa.

I will stop there on that point, but suffice it to say that I think this manpower motion could be extended in the sense that perhaps we need to think long and hard about which area of government is truly going to manage it. You have one area—Department of Employment Relations—trying to get jobs for people and that sort of thing. However, there is a crucial aspect of the whole process removed from them, which is the approval in and out of who should be allowed to get a job within a particular company (that is, the grant of a work permit). Perhaps we need to think long and hard about whether or not that area of responsibility should be extended to them.

Certainly, from a logistic standpoint, once you have built a proper system, and by proper system I mean a proper information technology system, this whole process could be seamless. This is not rocket science. This whole area could be seamless in terms of application to a human resource authority. That authority would house the manpower database this Motion envisions. In my opinion, they would then be able to better judge the need, applicability and relevance of that application, approve or disapprove and electronically send the approval to the Immigration Department where the work permit would be then be generated into their computer database, which would allow the person to come in with a stamp in their passport. Remember the work permit aspect of it is simply a technical generation.

These are the sorts of things that as a country we have been talking about since 1998 in terms of this whole issue of the national manpower authority. But I do not see the strategic direction; I do not see the strategic leadership that is needed in the most critical component of our economy and our society—our people. We need to ensure that our people are given the best opportunity for success.

Madam Speaker, whilst there are employers that take advantage of the current system (and we know that) we cannot take a broad brush and paint everybody a spade. There are many, many good employers in this country. Over the last 15 years or so, there has been much investment in the human capital in Cayman. Do I want to see every Caymanian that ever got into any profession make it to the top of their profession? Yes, I do. Yes, I do, Madam Speaker. All of us want to see that.

I will say this: The rhetoric that emanates and is encouraged sometimes from these chambers has caused people who are here currently, particularly in the finance industry where they have exemptions from the Trade and Business License regime, to really think long and hard about what they do here. When you start making people feel not welcome . . . because, let us just do the math, Madam Speaker.

Take one institution that has a managing director. Let's say he makes $250,000, but he employs 10 accountants. Those 10 accountants average $70,000. Throw in the support staff and the knock off benefits in the whole economy. Yes, I want to see a Caymanian as that managing director, but I want to see a Caymanian there when he is ready so he can do a great job. Hopefully, he will not forget where he came from and he will pull other Caymanians in too.

But at the same time, we cannot be running around with all this anti-foreigner rhetoric that is going to start to make people feel uncomfortable, start to make people ask, 'Do I need to stay here or should we move this to San Francisco? Should we move this to Boston? Should we move back to Dublin?' We cannot kill the goose that is laying the golden egg. For every company that we chase away, there go opportunities for Caymanians.

I have said before in this House and on the radio, I have said it on the campaign trail, and I will say it here, I want to see Caymanians reach the top. But I will say this: I would much rather have people coming to me to talk about their particular situation and how we can help them move forward if, in the institution or organisation they work in, they are hitting a glass ceiling. I would much rather that than to have them coming to me because their entities have picked up roots and left Cayman.

Obviously, in this instance it is not an easy task because you have your people on one end, private sector on the other end, and government is in the middle. It is not an easy match to referee. None of us can downplay it and make it seem as though it is a piece of cake, because we know it is not. However, we need to make sure that we are moving motions, putting policies in place, talking to our people in meaningful ways and making sure that we are keeping the business we have and building upon it. That is what is going to fuel the growth; that is what is going to make life better for all of us, our children and our grandchildren—not companies picking up roots and leaving.

I have looked at some of these blogs. I have looked at some of the rhetoric that you hear people calling the talk shows with. And this is heard all over the world now. Last time I was at Radio Cayman they said that they were getting hits online . . . I don't remember the number of countries, Madam Speaker, but a staggering number of countries are listening in. In retrospect, it is not surprising in the sense that we have a lot of nationalities here. Therefore, a lot would have come and gone. So, there would be some who still have an interest and keep up with what's happening in Cayman.

The bottom line is that we need to be getting out a clear message about who we are, what we do, and how we want to do it. Do we have to be firm? Yes, we have to be firm. We cannot let any Caymanian get railroaded; whether it is a Caymanian who is in business, a Caymanian who is working, and that could be working from the dishwasher right up to the managing director. Every single Caymanian needs and ought to have whatever protective mechanisms we can have in legislation and government policy.

Madam Speaker, this Motion—

Moment of interruption—4.30 pm

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay, it is the hour of interruption. Is it the intention of the House to carry on to completion of this Motion? If so, I would entertain a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 10 to continue beyond 4.30.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Suspension of Standing Order 10(2)

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I move the suspension of the relevant Standing Order so that we may continue beyond the hour of 4.30.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 10 be suspended in order that we may continue beyond the hour of 4.30. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 10(2) suspended to allow proceedings to continue beyond the hour of 4.30 pm.

The Speaker: The relevant Standing Order has been suspended.

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, much work has been done in the area of labour. I understand that there is some good work happening within the Department of Employment Relations. I have no problem giving my support to the Motion.

But, Madam Speaker, in my humble submission there is a lot of talk a little bit too late in regard to meaningfully helping the people of this country during the term of this legislative class, which runs from May 2005 to May 2009. However, we are where we are, and I know that the good people of Cayman will recognise it for what it is in terms of the timing of the Motion.

I just hope and pray the real work that needs to be done . . . and it is a lot of work. Developing a national manpower database is not a small undertaking. The real hard work that is necessary is in the overall economy to better manage it and better manage opportunities for Caymanians. That is where the rubber meets the road. That is where our people live. It needs to be done, Madam Speaker. We have a duty.

I know, Madam Speaker, that they will come behind and say all sorts of good things like, Well, he (that is, me) spoke about the contributions he made in the House but why didn't he move a motion?

I know they will come behind (I already hear them grumbling), Oh well, the last Minister of Labour did not do this, and did not do that.

The reality, Madam Speaker, is this: it is September 2008. We were elected in May 2005. And to be talking about absolutely, positively, one of the most important aspects of human existence in the twilight of this term is, quite frankly, just not good enough.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to thank each honourable Member for their contribution to this debate. I would also like to thank the seconder who came along with me in seconding this Motion.

At no point in my contribution did I turn to the bashing of expats in this country. As a matter of fact, the Hansards will prove that I made it quite clear that I was not going to lay the blame for this on any particular regime, government or entity at all.

Madam Speaker, I really cannot tell you how disappointed I am, how flabbergasted I am by the pronouncements made by the Second Elected Member for West Bay, who did his best to make this look like a bashing of expats motion.

On the one hand, he spoke about how we have to be careful how we speak to the expats because they will pick up their companies and leave. No one said anything connected or related to that at all. On the other hand, you have to do what you must in legislation to protect Caymanians.

We are talking about jobs in this country. At one end of the spectrum are Caymanians who were born or otherwise naturalised here. At the other end of the spectrum are expat workers who come here looking for jobs. How do you protect and preserve jobs for Caymanians unless it has an effect on the expatriate workforce? How do you separate those two things and make sure one does not intertwine or mix with the other?

I say, Madam Speaker, this is a dark day in this country when a Caymanian Member of Parliament with qualifications stands up in this House and tries to set one community against another and encourage expatriates to look at what the government is trying to do as bashing them.

Right now, the Opposition is doing what they do best. They sit down on the other side of the House and they giggle all day. They have nothing better to do, no positive contribution to make in this country. They seem to be able to do that all day, all the time.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay spoke about how there is no point in going back and talking about things that happened previously. But that's all he did! He talked out of both sides of his mouth all afternoon. Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will, as usual, get up and speak about all of the things he did, while the Second Elected Member for West Bay says that there is no need for that. It just shows you how synchronised they are and how they think alike.

We listened to them talk about all the things the Leader of the Opposition did from 1984, and on, and on, and on. Had the Leader of the Opposition done the things for this country that he should have done, we would not be here right now debating a motion on a manpower database.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No?

I did it. [inaudible]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, the amount of things that should have been done in this country are the amount of things that people try to take credit for. You know, Madam Speaker, I am a little upset, but I am okay.

I will readily admit that there are times in this country when things piloted and initiated by the Leader of the Opposition have been good for this country. I will readily admit that. But, all that he did, and all that his government of 2002 to 2005 had accomplished . . . in one fell swoop of the pen, Madam Speaker, they negated every piece of good will that they ever did for this country by their status grants in 2003.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: How many has your Government done? And how much did you put in? And ask who was putting in for you.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: That's what you need to tell the people.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Better not get me started on that.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: The Leader of the Opposition can say whatever he wants. I sleep good at night. I have done no one wrong in this country.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You?

You had your hands in those status grants like everybody else.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I am afraid of no man.

The Speaker: Could we stop the crosstalk so that the Fourth Elected Member can continue his debate?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Well, you make him state correct things.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: What the Opposition continues to do, and the people need to understand this . . . The Second Elected Member for West Bay stood up and tried to give the impression that this Government is anti-expatriate.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You're worse than that.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: And he continued, Madam Speaker, to make sure that the expatriate supporters—the people they have helped to get Cayman status in this country—understand, by way of his debate, that they are still looking out for them over their own Caymanian people. People need to understand that, Madam Speaker, because that is whom they are protecting.

Now, Madam Speaker, I have not differentiated between born Caymanians and those who have acquired status in this country. We are all equal. I accept that.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Oh boy.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I accept that, Madam Speaker.

So, when I bat for Caymanians, when I talk about Caymanians, that we need to protect them, their positions, their job opportunities, the business opportunities, I am talking about even the naturalised Cay-manians. I am not separating anybody. I made no distinction.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You mean the ones that Kurt goes around looking, saying, Bobo you know we still support you. Them?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I am not anti-expat, Madam Speaker. I never have been, never will be—but I am pro-Caymanian.

Now, Madam Speaker, instead, the Opposition (when they were the government) [should have been] looking out for the welfare of the people of this country. Now all the talk they have is about all they did for employment in this country. When they had the opportunity . . . and if you listen to the Second Elected Member for West Bay, he was never part of a government. Never, ever had the opportunity to do anything about the stuff we are trying to do now.

They were more interested in adding numbers to the database of voters in this country than looking out for the welfare of the people who are rightly Caymanian and deserve to be protected. That was their interest, to add to their ability to get re-elected!

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: And what are you doing?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: That's where their interest lies.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: And you are trying to stop them. Yet, unnah allow them.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: The Leader of the Opposition spoke about his goal. His wish in life was to be . . . what? A lawyer. What was the other one? Teacher?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: What was yours?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, UCCI and the International College of the Cayman Islands are still here. I suggest that he enroll.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [laughter]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: The Deputy Speaker, is currently going to law school.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I have too much work to do.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: And I admire him and I congratulate him every day for that, Madam Speaker.

If the Leader of the Opposition really wants to improve his education base, he still has the opportunity. He is not too old. Like anything else, Madam Speaker, let him stop talking and do something about improving his lot and the lot of the people in this country.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [laughter]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: And stop his hyena giggling on the other side of the Floor.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I do not have to be a lawyer to do good. I have proven that. I have done the good without being a lawyer or a teacher.

What are you?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You think lawyers are the only ones who get anything done? [laughter]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright:—rightly said that there are more jobs in this country than we can fill. I acknowledge that. We acknowledge that. I do not know what area of the world you have to be from if you do not understand that. And I made it very clear in my contribution that I would not be so naïve as to believe that we could rid ourselves of work permits. That is here to stay with us, at least for the foreseeable future.

What I went on to say was that my goal was not just to make sure that Caymanians get work in this country, but I said I would take it further. I want to see Caymanians get the jobs they are qualified to do and that are rightly theirs, and for training programmes to come into this country to help qualify them to take the better paying jobs.

Now, the Second Elected Member for West Bay criticised me for saying that Caymanians do not hold the best jobs, they do not hold the highest paying jobs, they do not own the companies . . . Madam Speaker, is that not what we want for our people?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Is that what you said?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, what I said was that I not only want to see Caymanians get jobs in this country, but I went on to explain that the jobs the work permits are issued for must be the jobs that Caymanians cannot do, and the jobs that we do not have enough Caymanians to fill. But it is wrong in every sense of the word, Madam Speaker, for Caymanians to be getting the jobs that are left over from what the expatriates do not want.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: We do not want the crumbs from the table. Now, if that is what the Opposition wants, Madam Speaker, then they can get up and pound there chests—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oye.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright:—if that is how they think about their Caymanian people.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You wouldn't live long to do as I have done [inaudible]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: My goal, Madam Speaker, is to make sure our Caymanian people are assisted by being given opportunities in the learning facilities of this country to better themselves. Therefore, [for] the jobs the work permit holders are holding, our people can uplift themselves to be better and not simply accept jobs at the lower end of the ladder just to say they have a job. And many of them are doing that now. They are simply accepting jobs just to make sure that they have a way of making ends meet. Many of them cannot do it because they are not earning enough money.

So, if the public and Opposition believe that what I am saying is that if a job is being held by an expatriate work permit holder and there is a Caymanian in a lower paying job qualified to do that job, that he should have preference to that job over that work permit holder, then they are right. That is exactly what I am saying. That is exactly what I am saying!

Perhaps this whole concept escapes the Opposition. Perhaps this whole thing escapes them.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: The Second Elected Member for West Bay said we dropped the ball. The ball they were playing with got soft!

[laughter]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Do you know why a ball gets soft, Madam Speaker? Because it sits in a corner somewhere and nobody uses it. And the heat sucks the air out of the ball. Their ball was not used.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, the Department of Employment Relations has been working on a programme called "Job Placement Database" since June 2007. They have done a tremendous amount of work. And what they have done so far has paid off. Even the Second Elected Member for West Bay had to admit that.

You know, Madam Speaker, one of my greatest qualities that people do not understand is that I love to observe people—their facial expressions, the way they walk. That is a hobby of mine. And when the Second Elected Member for West Bay walked into the chamber this afternoon, I said to him that he was walking with a reluctant gait.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I said to him that is usually the way you behave when you are about to do something that you really do not want to do.

I said that to him before we started back this afternoon. You can tell by his mannerisms when he is being put in a position that he really does not want to be in. But until he is man enough, Madam Speaker, to stand on his own two feet, and not be influenced by all of the negatives around him—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Get back to [inaudible]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: —this country will never receive the full benefit of his potential.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Fool-fool.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: And the sooner he realises that and understands that he is being kept down by those around him, Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town, give me one moment please.

I would like to advise Members that all comments being made are picked up and broadcasted.

Someone just called the Fourth Elected Member a word that should not even be in this Parliament. So, would you desist and stop the crosstalk? It is being recorded, and it is sounding bad on the future of this country when Parliament is behaving like this.

Fourth Elected Member for George Town, continue please.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I am used to the names that come from that side of the House, especially from the Leader of the Opposition. That is childish, so I do not resort to that. There are many things I could call him. Many things!

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town, just continue your debate please.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay also went on to talk about too little too late for this Motion because this is in the “twilight” of the term.

Madam Speaker, somebody of his learning, training and intelligence . . . is he saying that there comes a point in an elected term when you stop doing good? Because you know it may not make legislation by the end of your term you should not propose it?

This Government knows that we will be here for the next term! This is something that we are going to continue. The people of this country have good sense, Madam Speaker. You believe that we are going to get to a point where the people of this country are going to give the reins of this country back to the likes of the Leader of the Opposition? That will never happen, Madam Speaker!

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Who says so?

You?

You're likely to lose your seat, my son.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: The Leader of the Opposition just said that I might lose my seat. I have also heard that he has said that if it causes him to lose his, he is going to make sure that I do not get re-elected.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I don't love you that much!

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: But, Madam Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition takes on somebody like me as a project—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Ooooh.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: —the world knows that I am doing something good. So, proceed on!

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [laughter]
You got more jokes to tell?

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has many things about me that he does not like, but I will say what I have to say. Madam Speaker, I was born of the Negro persuasion and I will die like that, whether he likes it or not.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, one of my chief concerns for this country is, whether the Opposition accepts it or not, that for every work permit that we import we in turn export wealth. Until we come to grips with that as a small nation . . . the Second Elected Member for West Bay spoke about our seafarers, about them going off to sea to make a living. Madam Speaker, we all understand how that happened. Obviously, the way that Caymanian seamen were sought after, it must mean they were doing jobs that other people could not do and that we were not taking jobs, we were not affecting economies.

If we want to do the numbers on that as far as percentages are concerned, a great percentage of our population went to sea. It was a drop in the bucket to the foreign labour market that they were immersing themselves into, so it had no negative effect on those economies. I would trust that an accountant of the qualifications of the Second Elected Member for West Bay would understand that and not try to make that a negative point.

Madam Speaker, I am wholly satisfied with the accomplishments of my Government. I have no apologies to make for us bringing a manpower survey motion at this stage of the term. When I started, I said there were many things we had given priority to. Education had to be one of them. And we have done that—with a lot of resistance in all areas. But we have gone ahead with it. Madam Speaker, our schools are underway. Construction has been started on all of them. There are more to come. We have done much work in immigration reform, all connected to this whole idea of a manpower survey.

We have challenged ourselves to look at how we work our curriculum and how we employ people to do career counseling so that everyone understands how this whole thing comes together. The Immigration Department understands how it works, and what their part is in making sure that Caymanians are properly looked after.

I accept that the manpower survey is a long drawn out process. But if I follow the line that the Second Elected Member for West Bay has taken on this, we would never bring it because it's expensive and it's a tremendous amount of work and it involves a tremendous amount of personnel to get it done. So, at what point do we make the decision that we are actually going to bring a Bill to tackle the manpower survey? At what point?

Madam Speaker, I am convinced that we have done the right thing. We have discussed this at length in our caucuses. The Minister is quite aware of what needs to be done and he has his plans. And if we know our Minister for Labour, he does not do anything until he has all his ducks in a row. I am very comfortable with that.

It matters not to me at what point in the term the bill comes, provided we get it in the system and we understand it is something that we need to do. The Minister is fully aware, he had great involvement even before he was a Minister with immigration workings by sitting on one of the immigration review teams in this country. He is also the Minister for Education, so he understands the whole concept. If there is anybody perfect for this job in seeing this through, it is the current Minister of Education and Labour—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh-oh.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: —and I have the utmost confidence in him. As do all of his colleagues.

Madam Speaker, I could say a whole lot more, but I believe I have said enough.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, you have.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I ask Members for their support—even the Opposition. And I want the Second Elected Member for West Bay to understand that I and this country still have very high hopes for him.

[inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government considers conducting a Manpower Survey throughout the Cayman Islands and establishing a robust system for the maintenance of the records.

10.24 AM
Seventh Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

AND OF REPORTS

Second Annual Report of the Office of the Complaints Commissioner of the Cayman Islands Addressing the Fiscal Year July 2005 to June 2006
(Deferred)

The Speaker: As the Chairman of the Committee of the Legislative Assembly responsible for overseeing the Office of the Complaints Commissioner, the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, is not here, Honourable Leader of Government Business could we just move that we come back to these reports once he arrives? If not, until a later time in this meeting.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Minister is unavoidably late, so I move that the first three items under Presentation of Papers and of Reports be put to the end of Presentation of Papers and of Reports, and if he is not here by then, to be at a later session.

The Speaker: The question is that the first three reports appearing under the item Presentation of Papers and of Reports be placed at the end of this item. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The first three reports appearing under the item Presentation of Papers and of Reports placed at the end of this item.

Health Insurance Commission – In Review 1 July 2006 – 30 June 2007

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House, the Health Insurance Commission—In Review 1 July 2006 – 30 June 2007.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to briefly speak on this.

As you are aware, since 2004 it has been mandatory for the Health Insurance Commission to sensitise and educate employers and the general public.

The Health Insurance Commission has acknowledged and conducted an Island-wide campaign through radio, television and print, seeking to bring about awareness. It has also partnered with the Immigration Department and the Monetary Authority to ensure compliance with the requirements of the Health Insurance Law.

The Public Education Campaign. In August 2005 the Health Insurance Commission launched a website that provides information on standard health insurance fees, frequently asked questions, details of the Health Insurance Law and the Regulations, role and function of the Health Insurance Commission.

In May 2007 the Government Information Services (GIS) Spotlight Programme (which aired also on CITN) featured the Health Insurance Commission showcasing the benefits of having health insurance, as well as holding group discussions with the expatriate community.

Standard Health Insurance Fees (SHIF). The SHIF covers nearly 7,500 Current Procedural Terminology, that is, the CPT code. The CPT is a uniform language used internationally by health care providers and health insurance companies for reporting, billing and claims processing for medical services and procedures. Each fee represents the amount of money an approved health insurer will reimburse a health care provider for healthcare services delivered to compulsorily insured patients. Patients may actually be charged higher fees by the provider. However, approved health insurers will only pay those fees in the publicized Gazette.

Kroll Cayman Limited and Mercer Oliver Wyman were employed as consultants in April 2006 to review the SHIF and compare to fees utilised in Florida. The Report found that the current system overvalues some types of services and undervalues others resulting in the Health Insurance Commission implementing changes and initiating a further study with a review to making recommendations

Standard Health Insurance Contracts (SHIC). The SHIC available at the present time is the basic minimum plan allowed under the law. The level of coverage it provides is found to be inadequate. A working group was established, and has now made recommendations that an additional SHIC plan should be established to provide a mid-range contract of benefits to respond to the average employee's current needs. These recommendations are currently being reviewed by the Health Insurance Commission in collaboration with the Ministry of Health and Human Services.

Segregated Insurance Fund (SIF). In accordance with the Health Insurance Regulations (2005 Revision) all fees collected by the Health Insurance Commission from approved insurers must be paid into the Segregated Insurance Fund. The primary function of this fund, Madam Speaker, is to assist the Ministry to defray costs incurred for providing treatment to indigent persons. Approved health insurers in accordance with the Health Insurance Regulations (2005 Revision) and Public Management and Finance Law, 2005, submit collections to the Health Insurance Commission which are deposited into the Ministry of Health and Human Services executive revenue bank account. For the period ending 30 June 2006, a deposit of $2,216,551 was made.

Complaints. Five hundred and thirty one complaints were received in 2006/07. Four hundred and fifty-six were resolved, five prosecuted, two referred and they are still working on seventy-three.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Superintendent of Health Insurance and his staff for a useful report and their continued good work.

Thank you.

Annual Report of the Cabinet Office for the year ended 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business, Minister responsible for the Ministry of District Administration, Planning, Agriculture, and Housing.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report of the Cabinet Office for the year ended 30 June 2005

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: No, Madam Speaker.

Annual Report of the Portfolio of Legal Affairs for the 2004/05 Financial Year

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Second Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Legal Affairs.

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I seek leave of this House to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report of the Portfolio of Legal Affairs for the 2004/05 Financial Year.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Madam Speaker, just briefly to point out that . . . and I will just direct my attention to the concluding paragraph of the certificate from the Auditor General where he states, "In my opinion, except for the effects of such adjustments [as outlined in the Report itself], if any, as might have been determined to be necessary had we been able to satisfy ourselves as to the accuracy of the property, plant and equipment, the related depreciation expense and extraordinary items, and the opening net worth amount, the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Portfolio of Legal Affairs as of 30 June 2005 and of its financial performance and its cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with International Public Sector Accounting Standards."

Thank you.

Annual Report of the Judicial Administration for the 2004/05 Financial Year

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Second Official Member.

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Madam Speaker, I seek leave of this House to lay on the Table the Annual Report of the Judicial Administration for the 2004/05 Financial Year.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Second Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Madam Speaker, as I did previously, I would again direct honourable Members and the public's mind to page 9 of the report which contains the qualified opinion of the Auditor General where he says, "In my opinion, except for the effects of such adjustments, if any, as might have been determined to be necessary had we been able to satisfy ourselves as to the accuracy of the opening net worth amount, inventory, property, plant and equipment, the related depreciation, and the related party note disclosure, the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Judicial Administration as of 30 June 2005, and of its financial performance and its cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with International Public Sector Accounting Standards."

Thank you.

Annual Report of the Ministry of Health Services, Agriculture, Aviation and Works for the year ended 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report of the then Ministry of Health Services, Agriculture, Aviation and Works (which was the name when we took over at that time), for the year ended 30 June 2005.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: No, Madam Speaker.

Annual Report of the Ministry of Planning, Communications, District Administration and Information Technology for the year ended 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business, Minister responsible for the Ministry of District Administration, Planning, Agriculture and Housing.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report of the Ministry of Planning, Communications, District Administration and Information Technology for the year ended 30 June 2005.

As that time period indicates, Madam Speaker, that was the name of the Ministry then.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: No, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

Annual Report of the Portfolio of Finance and Economics for the year ended 30 June 2005

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the audited Annual Report of the Portfolio of Finance and Economics for the fiscal year ended 30 June 2005.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the contribution I will now make can be applied in general terms to the other Ministries and Portfolios' reports that have preceded the one which has just been tabled.

The Annual Report that has just been tabled represents the result of operations for the 2004/5 fiscal year—which ended on 30th June 2005.

An Annual Report is required for each Ministry, Portfolio, the Audit Office and the Office of the Complaints Commissioner (collectively referred to as Agencies), in accordance with section 44 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision), better known as the PMFL.

The PMFL requires that an Annual Report set out the actual performance of an agency being reported upon in comparison with expected performance set out in the Annual Budget Statement.

The Annual Report of an agency is required to have:

1. An audited statement of the outputs delivered—such a Statement summarises the outputs required by the Cabinet and delivered by the Agency during the particular fiscal year.
2. It also requires that a summary of the nature and scope of the activities during the year be set out in the Annual Report.
3. A summary that outlines the extent to which the strategic goals and objectives of the agency for the fiscal year, as described in the annual budget statement, were actually achieved.
4. The Annual Report also requires that ownership performance actually achieved to be detailed in the Report.
5. It requires that a set of audited financial statements be prepared in accordance with the requirements set out in the 4th Schedule of the PMSL.

Madam Speaker, I will proceed by highlighting the performance of the Portfolio of Finance & Economics during the 2004/5 fiscal year under each of the above five categories.

1. Statement of Outputs Delivered: The Portfolio of Finance budgeted for the provision of some 58 outputs for the 2004/5 fiscal year. The performance results of these budgeted outputs are reported under section 2 entitled "Statement of Outputs Delivered" and are outlined from pages 6 through 65 of the Annual Report. The Report shows a picture of mixed performance for the provision of outputs. There were several areas where the Portfolio met or exceeded budgeted output performance expectations, but it also fell short in many areas.

This position can be attributed to various factors that occurred during that fiscal year:

The 2004/5 fiscal year began with great expectations as it hailed the first year of the implementation of the then new Financial Management Initiative. However, less than three months into the fiscal year, these Islands experienced the passage of Hurricane Ivan. To say that this affected the plans and ability for the Portfolio of Finance to deliver all of its planned performance objectives would be a gross understatement.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan, the Customs Department worked feverishly without any additional staff in processing a huge volume of imports. The Portfolio of Finance's Administration section processed over 3,000 waivers of duty under Government concession schemes as well as over $2.5 million in grants under the District Assistance Program to help people effect repairs to their homes.

The Budget Management Unit handled the insurance claims and settlement issues for the entire Government. That Unit also prepared the pre-election and financial update statement prior to the General Election in May 2005. It also prepared the pre-appropriation exercises and two supplementary budget processes.

The Treasury Department also performed well under extremely adverse conditions and was able to prepare the monthly payroll for the Government ahead of schedule immediately following the storm. It was done deliberately ahead of schedule so that Civil Servants could receive their wages and salaries early so that their difficulties and needs could be addressed as quickly as possible.

Another department significantly affected was General Registry. Prior to the hurricane, that department occupied the Tower Building. In the aftermath, their operations were split into five different locations, and for a period of time records had to be stored in rented containers parked outside their various locations.

Reprioritization is the key when faced with any state of emergency. A significant portion of the Portfolio's resources were spent ensuring the continuation of basic Government functions. As a result, the level of recordkeeping necessary to provide the delivery of the various outputs during an annual audit fell short of the required standards.

In some instances, the Portfolio delivered greater quantities of outputs than reported in the Annual Report; however, due to the absence of the required evidence, the Portfolio was only able to properly record quantities of outputs that it could prove had actually been delivered.

The conclusion of the audit in relation to the Output statement is an adverse opinion.

Madam Speaker, whilst the Portfolio may not have been able to prove everything it did to the satisfaction of the Cayman Islands Audit Office, I can unequivocally state that the Portfolio's staff rose to the occasion in an extremely difficult time and did whatever it took to play their part in continuing the operations of our Government in the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan, and, further, that Cabinet received good value for the funding provided to the Portfolio.

2. Nature and Scope of Activities: The general nature and scope of the Portfolio of Finance & Economics is to provide the Government with sound financial and economic advice, accounting, and registry services. The Portfolio is also responsible for the inspection and clearance of people and goods entering and exiting the country and other border control activities.

Notwithstanding the conditions and events described earlier, the Portfolio operated within its approved nature and scope of activities during the fiscal year.

3. Strategic Goals: The strategic goals for the Portfolio for the 2004/5 fiscal year included:

- Continued implementation of a major public relations campaign to heighten awareness within the global financial services marketplace of the significance of the Cayman Islands as an international financial services centre and to demonstrate the relevance of its contribution to commerce within the global financial community;
- management of the continued implementation of the Public Management and Finance Law and the Financial Management Initiative;
- provision of training for the Economics and Statistics Office staff in aspects of statistical concepts, methodology, international standards, data processing and the policy and legislative framework for statistics;
- development of internal audit methodologies to guide auditors in reviewing strategic planning and budgeting, output and ownership performance, financial and input acquisition management systems;
- continued work in ensuring the Cayman Islands gains full international recognition from bodies like the International Monetary Fund (IMF), Organisation for Economic Corporation & Development, the OECD, the G7 group of nations, and European Union for its regulatory and international cooperative regime;
- development of capabilities for staff in the area of accrual-based budgeting, reporting and other financial management skills;
- improving the organizational structure for the Portfolio with a view to improving greater cohesion and establishing clear reporting lines between the various units and sections;

- the continued improvement of the storage and retrieval of information for births, deaths, marriages and public records through the use of microfilm and a web-based system; and
- continued establishment of the Management Support Unit, the Revenue Unit and the Cayman Islands Maritime Authority.

I am pleased to report that whilst goals such as those relating to training and staff development are continuing efforts, the Portfolio of Finance was able to substantially achieve all its planned strategic goals for the 2004/5 fiscal year.

4. Ownership Performance: The ownership performance outlines the performance of the Portfolio in the areas of physical and human Capital Maintenance, Risk Management and Financial Performance.

In the area of Physical Capital, significant changes were made to the planned performance due to the passage of Hurricane Ivan. The Portfolio's original plans were for the addition or expansion to certain physical assets, however, it was necessary to change our focus to one of repair, replacements and renovations of existing assets in response to the destruction caused by Hurricane Ivan. To this end, the Portfolio expended $191,850 in replacing vehicles at the Customs Department, $215,488 for a new generator (also at the Customs Department), and $139,285 towards fitting out the new Public Relations Unit in the Cayman Corporate Centre.

In relation to the maintenance of Human Capital, I am happy to report, that the Portfolio was able to achieve approximately 97% of its target.

In the area of Risk Management, several areas were identified to be in need of assessment at the beginning of the 2004/5 fiscal year. These included: loss or absence of critical staff, loss of important data, inadequate office space, inefficient data management and the potential failure of the IRIS system amongst others.

To address these risks, the Portfolio made concerted efforts in the areas of cross training and improvement of the organizational structure. Work on an effective data management and backup plan was also undertaken.

5. Financial Performance: Madam Speaker, the financial statements and the supporting notes thereto are shown on pages 77 through 89 of the Annual Report.

During the fiscal year to 30 June 2005, the Portfolio of Finance earned a total of $33.6 million in operating revenues. This amount consisted of $16.8 million for outputs provided to Cabinet, $14.9 million for outputs to third parties, $1.9 million for outputs to other Government agencies and $124,000 in other operating revenues.

In earning these revenues, the Annual Report shows that the Portfolio of Finance also incurred some $24.5 million in operating expenses. This comprises of $14.5 million in personnel costs, $9.4 million in supplies and consumables, $277,000 in depreciation expense, $276,000 in capital charge expense and $28,000 in other operating expenses.

In addition to the operating expenses, the Portfolio also recorded $165,000 in extraordinary expenses. These figures culminated in a net surplus of $8.9 million for the fiscal year ended 30 June 2005.

Madam Speaker, in looking at the Balance Sheet, on page 79, you will note an accounts receivable figure of some $10.9 million. That is $8.5 million higher than planned. The vast majority of the $10.9 million accounts receivable figure (approximately $9 million) comes from the provision of outputs to Cabinet. This receivable arose from a delay in billings sent to Cabinet by the Portfolio.

Another figure of significance is the $9.4 million in other current liabilities.

The Portfolio, in the absence of a directive to the contrary from the Financial Secretary, is required to repay its annual surplus to Cabinet. The Portfolio has accrued the surplus amount of $8.9 million to show it as owing to Cabinet.

Turning to the Statement of Cash Flows on page 80 of the Annual Report, it shows that the Portfolio realised a net increase in cash balances of $2.4 million.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to report that the audit opinion on the financial statements of the Portfolio of Finance and Economics is an unqualified (or "clean") one.

An unqualified audit opinion means that the financial statements present fairly in all material respects the financial position of the Portfolio as at 30 June 2005, and the results of operations for the year then ended.

Madam Speaker, the presentation of this Annual Report represents the final leg in the reporting cycle for the 2004/5 fiscal year.

Many lessons were learned in this maiden year. I believe we have grown from the experiences and have gotten better because of them. I firmly believe that our annual performance results will continue to improve going forward as we continue to work toward raising the standard of our financial and performance management systems for the Cayman Islands Government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Annual Report of the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs for the year ended 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Acting First Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs and the Civil Service.

Question No. 11

No. 11: Mr. Rolston M. Anglin asked the Honourable First Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs and the Civil Service if (a) there is a policy regarding the rollover of non-Caymanian members of the Royal Cayman Islands Police Service and, if so, (b) were Caymanian police officers consulted regarding such a policy.

The Speaker: Honourable Acting First Official Member.

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: The answer to part (a) of the question is no, however, there is a Civil Service term-limit policy which is now being formulated for consideration and consultation.

In addressing part (b) of the question, discussions have been held with the senior command of the RCIPS who were invited to make submissions as to how this policy, when approved for implementation, would impact the RCIPS. They have submitted a report. The report indicates that, as part of the research undertaken for the report, non-Caymanian police officers and civil support staff that would be affected by the policy were surveyed.

By way of context, the proposed term-limit policy for the Civil Service is intended to mirror the term-limit policy for the private sector in every respect apart from the fact that there will be a separate body called "The Civil Service Term-Limits Advisory Committee" to decide on key employees.

No date has been agreed for the implementation of the term-limits for the Civil Service. We are currently reviewing a comprehensive report that has been prepared by the Portfolio of the Civil Service which assesses the operational impact of the intended term-limit policy and advises on implementation. The report draws on data from the Government's HR Integrated Resource Information System (IRIS) and information provided by Portfolios and Ministries which has been cross-checked against information held by the Immigration Department's data base.

The proposed term-limit policy for non-Caymanian Civil Servants has brought about a need to evaluate the potential effect of such a policy on Government's human capital. As we will all appreciate, the Civil Service must be prepared for the impact this policy will have on the workforce and plan accordingly in order to maintain the high quality of essential services provided.

Therefore, in preparation of the implementation of the term-limit policy, the focus will be on business continuity. Each Chief Officer and Head of Department will be asked to undertake a detailed business continuity exercise in relation to the potential impact of the term-limit policy on their business to enable them to maintain their current standards of service to the community.

In summary, there is no term-limit policy in place for police officers. However, a term-limit policy for the Civil Service is being developed. No date has been agreed for implementation. The RCIPS has been proactive in researching the possible impacts of such a policy. That is a good thing.

As has been stated before, all agencies will be encouraged to undertake a similar exercise as cases for Key Employees will need to be made. I would expect that any such case would provide a balanced perspective in that the possible impacts on all employees will have been considered.

The Speaker: Are there any supplementaries?

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Supplementaries

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In the last sentence of the second paragraph of the substantive answer, reference was made to non-Caymanian police officers and civil support staff that would be affected by the policy were surveyed. Could the Honourable Acting First Official Member say who determined which ones of these particular staff members would be affected? Who came up with that formulation?

The Speaker: Honourable Acting First Official Member.

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Madam Speaker, I think I understand the phrase that the Member is referring to and, unfortunately, I cannot tell him what sieve was used to determine which officers warranted being surveyed or whether all officers were surveyed.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Given the last answer, that would then preclude me from asking my next question, which was how they went about the particular survey.

I wonder if the Acting First Official Member could give an undertaking to provide an answer in writing to the previous question that I asked, and also who developed the survey and decided to whom the survey would be applied, because I have received complaints from within the RCIPS from officers at various levels who were not satisfied that they were consulted on this exercise.

The Speaker: Honourable Acting First Official Member.

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Madam Speaker, I have no problem with giving an undertaking to seek that information and provide that to the Member.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries?

The Third Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I wonder if the Acting First Official Member could give us some understanding [as to] whether the current staff complement at the police is up to the desired number and, if it is not, whether he could give us the reasons, specifically in answer to this question about the rollover, whether that has been the effective cause.

The Speaker: Honourable Third Elected Member for the district of West Bay, that is totally outside this original question. But if the Honourable Acting First Official Member will undertake to supply that to the Member, it would be most appreciated.

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any pressing shortfalls in police staff complement. Having said that, obviously, the recruitment of the uniformed officers is not a matter the Portfolio of Internal and External Affairs is involved in.

What I can say is in relation to any impact of the potential introduction of a rollover policy to the civil service and, in turn, to the police, according to the Acting Commissioner . . . and some Members may have seen this recently in a statement that was made to the media. I think six or eight non-Caymanian officers had left since he took up the temporary tenure. His survey indicated that none of those officers were leaving as a result of the impending introduction of a rollover policy.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries? Madam Clerk, we will move to the next item.

SECOND READINGS

Justice Protection Bill, 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Second Official Member.

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I seek leave of the House to move the Second Reading of A Bill for a Law to establish a programme to give protection to witnesses and certain other persons; and for incidental and connected purposes.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate.

Does the Honourable mover wish to speak thereto? Honourable Second Official Member.

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Yes, Madam Speaker, thank you.

I rise to present to this House the Justice Protection Bill, 2008, and to point out by way of background that the reason for witness protection is that the proper functioning of any criminal justice system and for the proper adjudication and disposal of criminal cases depends on the availability and willingness of witnesses to testify in a court freely and without fear of harm to themselves and their family.

For years now there has been a growing trend where witnesses are reluctant or have become increasingly reluctant to testify in court. In some instances they have flatly refused to because they are not convinced, Madam Speaker, that the state can or will protect them.

Madam Speaker, it is common knowledge that witnesses have been shot and killed, intimidated or otherwise threatened. And, of course, their families as well, persons close to them. This has impacted the delivery of criminal justice throughout the world, including the Cayman Islands. Indeed, such action has led to collapse of major criminal trials because witnesses have flatly refused to testify. In some instances they prefer to face the consequences of contempt of court rather than risk their lives to testify.

Case Law throughout Europe has shown that a state has a legal obligation to protect witnesses whose lives have been threatened, and failure to do so, if harm should (God forbid) occur to these witnesses, the state can and will be held liable by way of damages.

Madam Speaker, to put this in perspective, I wish to point out that the issue of witness protection and the intimidation, threat, harm and so on, that has given rise to it is not unique to the Cayman Islands. We are having, as we speak, similar problems in other Caribbean Overseas Territories, and, indeed, a much wider sphere in places like some of our Caribbean neighbours as well as the United States, United Kingdom and elsewhere.

I recall some time last year (I think it was) reading an article in the newspaper from Trinidad, where the director of prosecution was extremely concerned and warned that the criminal justice system in Trinidad was on the verge of collapsing because of the problems that they were having with witnesses refusing to testify out of fear of being killed and/or otherwise intimidated.

Madam Speaker, we saw some time this year, where there was a major problem with a ruling in the United Kingdom because of the problem in getting witnesses to testify. England and Wales have resorted to what is called "anonymous witnesses", where the identity is not disclosed when they testify. That has been a practice in place for a while so as to 'shore up'

(for want of a better word) the criminal justice system there.

There was a recent ruling from the court in the UK which questioned the legitimacy of such a practice and the fairness of such a practice where persons were accused and not given the opportunity to confront face to face, or at least learn about the identity of the witnesses. The court literally struck down the provision, and the UK Parliament had to move in emergency session to pass legislation to prevent the major trials pending that depended on similar arrangements from collapsing.

So, Madam Speaker, the point I am making is that it is a worldwide problem, and one which we, as a country, are obliged to tackle. If we fail to do so, it could very well be to our peril where we will have anarchy and other social falling out from such a state of affairs. And so, Madam Speaker, this Bill seeks to put in place legislative framework to hopefully give effect to a proposal for the Caribbean Overseas Territories and Bermuda to establish a scheme for witness protection.

Following the hosting of the Annual Overseas Territories Attorneys General Conference in Bermuda in April 2006, chaired by Lord Goldsmith, QC, the then Attorney General for England and Wales, an attorneys general working group was formed. This working group, Madam Speaker, was tasked with looking at a number of criminal justice initiatives, including the feasibility of establishing a witness protection programme between the OTs as well as Bermuda; the provision of timely and cost effective forensic services including DNA; the issue of training for prosecutors and the possibility of relocating or transferring, as it were, of dangerous and disruptive prisoners, as well as other related issues.

This working group had several meetings over the last two years and consisted of all the AGs in the Caribbean Overseas Territories and Bermuda. At its most recent meeting in June of this year the group met in Miami and pored over a finalized draft justice protection Bill and a memorandum of agreement as set out in the Bill itself (on page 28), which is there as Schedule 4.

The intention of the draft Bill is that it contains what is hoped to be harmonized provisions to allow for an effective and efficient witness protection programme for witnesses and for various other persons to be implemented uniformly across the Caribbean Overseas Territories and Bermuda if it is the wish of the other territories to follow through on their commitment to participate in this proposed scheme.

Speaking about commitment, Madam Speaker, at the last two Overseas Territories Consultative Committee (OTCC) meetings in London, our Honourable Leader of Government Business took the lead and proposed this scheme, and was able to get significant political binds and commitments from his colleagues in the Overseas Territories, including Bermuda.

He was also able to secure the necessary UK support for this scheme. He, on occasion, has also been able to get them to throw up their commitments, certainly at pre-OTCC meetings, that were held both here and the Turks and Caicos Islands. We are therefore confident, Madam Speaker, that the other OTs are on board and will soon be enacting similar enabling legislation and, thereafter, will sign the Memorandum of Agreement.

Madam Speaker, giving that background I would like to touch on some of the main features of this Bill.

Part I of the Bill deals with the definition of various expressions.

Part II of the Bill details the establishment of the Justice Protection Programme, which would provide to participants protection and assistance, and would be administered by three units, namely, the Justice Protection Administration Centre, the Justice Investigative Agency, and the Justice Protection Protective Agency. These can be seen, Madam Speaker, in clause 3 (1) and (2) of the Bill itself.

Part III of the Bill deals with the Justice Protection Administrative Centre, its composition, functions and powers. It also deals with the responsibility developing, managing and administering the programme and deciding whether a prospective participant is to be afforded protection or assistance under the programme as set out in the various categories of prospective participants prescribed in Schedule 1.

This part, Madam Speaker, also deals with the procedure for the submission of an application for entry into the programme prescribing the offences which may give rise to protection and the requirement of a prospective participant to disclose certain matters such as details of all their outstanding legal obligations including debts.

Madam Speaker, it further stipulates that a participant in the programme would be required to sign a memorandum of understanding containing the various matters specified in Schedule 3. And if Members look at the Bill they will see examples in clauses 2, 4 and 5, and clause 5(1) and (2) which sets out the eligibility criteria.

Parts IV, V and VI of the Bill make provision in respect of the Constitution, functions and powers of the Justice Protection Investigative Agency, and the Justice Protection Protective Agency. These parts together with Schedule 3 make provision in respect of the Memorandum of Understanding to be signed, as I said, by the participant in the programme.

Madam Speaker, Part VII of the Bill together with Schedule 4 would, in respect of the Memorandum of Agreement, be the basis of cooperation between the various countries in relation to the objectives outlined in the Memorandum of Agreement itself.

Part VIII the Bill seeks to impose on the Centre the duty of maintaining a register to include details of the matter giving rise to a participant's entry into the Justice Protection Programme and regulations of access to the register.

Part IX of the Bill seeks to prescribe the procedure for ensuring that a participant in the programme is able to exercise his legal rights and carry out his legal obligations. These are more particularized in clause 15 (1) and (2), Madam Speaker. It also seeks to impose on a participant who has been provided with the new identity under the programme a duty not to disclose his former identity unless he has obtained the prior approval of the Centre (that is the Administrative Centre). This part also prescribes a circumstance under which protection or assistance under the programme would be terminated and the restoration of the former participant's former identity, if his protection is so terminated. The disclosure by the Centre of Information of a new identity of a participant under investigation or who has been arrested or charged with an offence also deals with the maximum penalty for any transgressions under this scheme.

Part X together with Schedule 5 would make provision for the external enforcement for the Justice Protection Programme in certain territories.

Part XI of the Bill deals a number of miscellaneous matters set out as follows: It deals with the protection of officers of the Centre, the Investigative Agency and the Protective Agency, from civil suits for any actions taken by them in the course of their duty. It sets out the creation of offences under the legislation. It deals with provision for confidentiality in respect of any participation under the programme and it also deals with a case where a participant who has a new identity is to appear as a witness in a criminal proceeding.

It seeks to protect disclosure of a participant's new identity where in court proceedings a new identity becomes an issue. It deals with requiring a submission of annual reports by the Centre in respect of the general operation of performance and effectiveness of the programme. And it deals with enabling the making of regulations to give effect to the legislation itself, certain provisions of the legislation. It also touches on enabling the designation of approved authorities for the purposes of the legislation and also, understandably, it would contain certain savings provisions.

Madam Speaker, as I explained earlier, this Bill, if approved and becomes law, is aimed at enabling the establishment in each participating territory of relevant frameworks, including institutional, for the development and implementation of a proper witness protection scheme with any other territories if they so wish.

The Law would also put in place a mechanism for cooperation between the participating territories, including facilitating the sharing of information as it relates to the protection of witnesses and related criminal justice issues. In this latter regard, let me also inform this House that the other OTs will also be looking at amending their evidence laws to provide for the reception and admissibility of testimony by way of video link. If a witness is located in one territory he does not physically have to travel to another territory to testify in court. His evidence can be given by way of video link. And so the provisions in all our respective evidence laws will be harmonized to facilitate this ongoing arrangement.

Let me also explain that the mere passage of this Bill by this House does not in any way establish such a witness protection scheme as it does not bind any of the other Overseas Territories or Bermuda. The wish is that each territory will eventually enact a similar enabling legislation and then sign the Memorandum of Agreement. Only then will the Agreement come into force as between the territories that have actually signed the Agreement. What this Bill is seeking to establish is the legislative framework that will eventually pave the way, hopefully, for a formal agreement between the Overseas Territories and Bermuda.

This initiative enjoys the full support of not only the Governor and the Cabinet, but also the police, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Honourable Attorney General of England and Wales, as well as the UK Overseas Territory Law Enforcement Advisor, Mr. Larry Covington, who has partnered the Attorneys General and this initiative over the last two and a half years.

Madam Speaker, finally, like any other initiative, there is the issue of expenses. Territories have expressed concerns about funding the programme and there were various suggestions as to how the funding would be addressed. There was one school of thought that said maybe a common pool of funds could be identified and kept somewhere and the expenses to administer the programme could be drawn from that common pool. However, after much discussion, it was agreed that the best way to deal with this is that each territory appropriate money in their domestic budget. The programme would then be funded from that because, even though it is likely to be a recurring expenditure, the truth is that sometimes there are instances where for an entire year there is really no need for any funds to be used if there are no witnesses or anyone who wants to participate in the programme.

So, it was agreed (subject to, of course, the Legislative Assembly passing this Bill) that the appropriate way to address this issue of expenses is for each domestic legislature to appropriate funds to address the needs as they do arise.

Madam Speaker, I have endeavoured to outline what I consider to be a fairly detailed background to this Bill and I cannot overemphasize the need. I know that Members are aware of the problems surrounding witnesses and the fear that they have. And so I am confident that I have the support of certainly Members on this side. It is a perennial problem. It is a difficult one; one that we have to face, and one that requires urgent attention. I am not here advocating that this is going to be the panacea to all the problems surrounding witness protection and giving up the evidence, but certainly this is a major step in the right direction to address this ongoing concern.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, we welcome the Bill before the House. This is a Justice Protection Bill for the protection of people, witnesses, but also those involved, or I am hoping it will be for those persons involved, in the administration of justice.

The question I have is: How much will the scheme protect Justices of the Peace, people who sign a search warrant? As we know, how that operates is that the police need a search warrant and they go to a Justice of the Peace who signs that warrant. The police then hand that warrant to the person who is a suspect or a culprit and we do not know how far he is a criminal, but what we do know is that what this Bill envisions and how it came about is because of the problems we have had with criminals and witnesses and interference thereof.

The concern is that this Bill will offer protection, but we want to find out about the exposure of Justices. Therefore, while we welcome it, hopefully in the end or at the Committee stage the Honourable mover of the Bill could explain. I checked and read but could not find where it will take that into consideration, but I think it does.

In today's paper, in fact, we see where a judge is questioning, I guess the veracity of the . . . or even the judgment of the Justices of the Peace Association now. I know that the Justices of the Peace Association is vigilant and they have been holding for many years various seminars that tell you what you need to do as a Justice of the Peace. This brings in a whole different scenario of possibilities and, therefore, I am concerned about that. But perhaps the Honourable Attorney General will clear it up during the course of his closing or during the course of the Committee stage.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to express my support for the Bill and simply want to highlight what may be, as far as I am concerned right now, an omission. I will ask the mover to clarify in the wrap up.

I searched but I do not see much, if any, information based on what would happen with the involvement of minors who are under the age of 18 who may be under this programme. What would we do in terms of education and simple development of a child after being a witness in such a programme? Would that be part of companion legislation somewhere else? I would like the Honourable Member to speak to that in his wrap up. But the Bill does have my support, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the short answer to the concerns raised by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is that the Bill does in fact cover such eventualities, such persons. On page 29 of the green Bill, if honourable Members do have a copy, it speaks to participants, and it says, “‘participants’ means witnesses, jurors, judicial and legal officers, law enforcement personnel, their associates and any other person to whom assistance and/or protection is given in accordance with this agreement, and ‘participant’ shall have a corresponding meaning.”

It is really all encompassing in that regard. It does cover the scope of concerns raised by the [Honourable Leader of the Opposition.]

Madam Speaker, in respect to the point raised by the [Fourth Elected] Member for George Town, the Bill contemplates that persons under 18 who participate in the programme will be covered by the programme, and it contemplates that they would do so with the authority of the parent or guardian. There is a provision there for them to sign so as to agree to participate in the programme. And whilst the Bill itself does not set out all the operations of the programme, Madam Speaker, regulations are going to be made there under.

But to address his point, the programme will be designed and structured in such a way that there will be minimum disruption to the normal lives of persons who participate, even though they would have to be relocated. Issues, such as any legal obligations they might have to attend court . . . one of the examples used at one of the seminars we had was that persons, for instance, who have a case of maintenance in court and are required to attend court, would be escorted to ensure that that is done in a structured way.

Persons who have educational needs and special needs and other matters that require their physical presence, the programme is designed in such a way that they would be facilitated as much as possible provided their identification is not unmasked.

There will be a memorandum of understanding that is going to have to be signed before persons participate in the programme whereby they basically undertake to abide by the terms and conditions of the programme.

There will also be training for them, Madam Speaker. There will be a psychiatrist, psychologist, and other resource persons who will be involved at the very early stages to help people make the transition into the programme. There will be an ongoing assessment review, and so on, whilst the person is in the programme to ensure that there are really no psychological problems or a falling out.

So, while understandably not all the details can be spelt out in legislation, because of the very nature of the programme itself, the understanding is that all of those issues will be addressed in regulations as well as in other manuals that will be developed to set out how the programme is going to be administered.

The persons who are supposed to administer the programme will be persons who work in the administrative agencies, the protective agencies and the investigative agencies. They will undergo significant training as well by personnel from the UK and USA, and that aspect of it will be coordinated by the Overseas Law Enforcement Advisor, Mr. Covington. He has already done significant work in trying to craft the manual and identify resource persons—some of whom we have spoken to at some of these meetings, and who have given us elaborate demonstrations and so on about how it will work.

So, all these concerns, Madam Speaker, have been factored into where we are now. It is the hope that, with all things being equal, we can have the programme in place and address all of those needs as we go along.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled The Justice Protection Bill, 2008, be given a second reading.

All those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Justice Protection Bill, 2008, has been given a second reading.

Agreed: The Justice Protection Bill, 2008, given a second reading.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 11.46 am

Proceedings resumed at 12.07 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

SECOND READINGS

Immigration (Amendment) Bill, 2008

The Deputy Clerk: The Immigration (Amendment) Bill, 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, since this Government took office we have made our commitment to putting in place an effective and efficient approach for managing migration very clear. In 2005 the Cabinet commissioned a comprehensive review of the Immigration Law 2003, which came into effect on 1 January 2004. The purpose of the review was both to address a number of anomalies and technical deficiencies that had come to light since the coming into effect of that law, and also to create more stringent provisions in relation to immigration offences. This led to major amendments being made to the Law in December 2006.

When I stood here to introduce that Bill I remarked that, although the changes that were then being made would significantly strengthen our immigration legislation, the process of review would not stop there.

In November 2007, my colleagues and I announced the next phase of development—a radical new approach that would greatly improve efficiency in the way work permit applications are processed. I am referring to a system where certain categories of work permit applications are decided upon administratively rather than by the Work Permit Board or the Business Staffing Plan Board. The necessary changes to the Law to give effect to this important initiative are contained in the Bill that I am now introducing.

At the same time, Madam Speaker, the Bill also addresses several anomalies and makes changes where weaknesses have come to light. Let me forewarn Members that during the course of the passage of the Bill I will be seeking a few Committee stage amendments, which I will speak to as we come to them.

Madam Speaker, given the importance of the proposed changes that relate to the processing of work permit applications by administrative personnel, I want to begin by spending a few minutes explaining the rationale for this change and how it will work in practice. I speak first of all, Madam Speaker, to the administrative granting of work permits.

In the past decade the Cayman Islands have experienced unprecedented growth. As a result, the associated need for foreign workers to meet the shortfall in Caymanian workers has placed a significant burden on the work permit system. The responsibility for the granting of annual work permits has always been vested in a Board comprising members appointed by the Cabinet (or Executive Council before the change of name). For many years this was the Caymanian Protection Board which then became the Immigration Board. These Boards were responsible for not just work permit applications, but also for processing applications for Permanent Residence and Caymanian Status.

In 2004 the Immigration Board was divided into three separate Boards:

- ▶ the Work Permit Board;
- ▶ the Business Staffing Plan Board; and
- ▶ the Caymanian Status & Permanent Residency Board.

This heralded and reflected the huge growth in recent years in the number of applications being received in all three categories, the complexities of a much more modern and sophisticated society, and, for that matter, labour market.

The growth in work permit applications can be illustrated by the following statistics. Madam Speaker, in 1994, the number of work permits in force was 6,400. By 2004, 10 years later, that number had escalated to 19,004. By last month (September of this year 2008), the number stood at 25,772. So that in itself shows us the tremendous growth, and the tremendous increase in the workload that these Boards face.

Madam Speaker, although these changes made a considerable difference—that is, moving from one Board to three—the numbers of work permit applications received continued to increase at a pace which the Work Permit Board and the Business Staffing Plan Board could not keep up with, without having to work unacceptably long hours.

In this regard we must remember that Board members are not employees of the Immigration Department, but, rather, they are private individuals who take time away from their professions and businesses to serve the community in this important function.

As a result, Madam Speaker, the Immigration Law was amended to increase the number of members on each of these Boards so that they could split into sub-committees and still be quorate in order to hold additional meetings each week. We knew it then, Madam Speaker, and we say it again. We recognised at that time that this was not a perfect solution, but a stop-gap measure to assist. The 'processes' remained unchanged, even then, and until now the efficiencies remain unacceptable. We recognised that adding more Boards and more employees and increasing the numbers on the Boards was no longer the answer; real gains in efficiencies required real changes in the processes.

Now to the new system: With that in mind, Madam Speaker, the Governor-in-Cabinet instructed the Immigration Department to proceed with the development of a system where certain straightforward categories of work permit applications are processed administratively by Immigration Department personnel against a carefully chosen checklist of criteria rather than by a Board. Research has shown that such a system operates effectively in the United Kingdom, New Zealand and Australia.

Madam Speaker, I will pause for a minute because I do believe that I forgot to do something that I should have done before I actually started to speak to this Bill. If you would ask me, I would be very happy to do so.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, I appreciate that. I do not think that you moved the motion. You just went into the debate. So, if you will move the motion, I will call on you and you can pick up your debate from where you were. You will move the motion that you 'wish to move the motion for the Second Reading of the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, 2008.'

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you very much Madam Speaker.

I move the Second Reading of the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, [2008].

The Speaker: The motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will continue.

And, Madam Speaker, so that I do not have to repeat all that I have said thus far, I certainly would want to ensure that you allow the entire House to adopt all that I have said thus far as part of my initial contribution.

The Speaker: Most certainly.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: We do. We are human.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Absolutely.

Madam Speaker, earlier this year the Cabinet approved the proposals put forward by the Immigration Department and these have now been translated into the requisite legislative changes.

This system will significantly reduce the number of work permit applications going before the Work Permit Board and Business Staffing Plan Board. As a result, backlogs on applications for annual work permits will not arise and the turnaround time on these applications will be greatly improved. Madam Speaker I am certain that this is a consequence that will no doubt be well received by the business community and by individuals. This will mean that the Boards will now be able to focus closely on difficult or sensitive applications and the critical issue of Key Employee designation.

I want to emphasise that the Boards will retain decision-making control of all applications where a Caymanian applies for the position. I want to reiterate that: The Boards will retain decision-making control of all applications where a Caymanian applied for the position so that there will be careful consideration of those specific applications; or, where there is a signed complaint against a prospective employee on file; or where the Department of Employment Relations identifies that there is a Caymanian who is capable and who is available for that position for which the work permit is being applied.

The Boards will also retain responsibility for determining applications involving the promotion and re-designation of an employee; the revocation of work permits; applications for the grant, renewal or amendment of a Business Staffing Plan, and requests for the waiver of the requirement to advertise a position.

Madam Speaker, I want what I just outlined to be made very clear: The Board will still have total control over those sensitive areas where serious and lengthy deliberations may be needed. I do not want people to get the impression that the Department will just gloss over applications and deal with them one way or the other by way of a decision. People need to have a clear understanding, because I have heard . . . This is not something new. We announced this quite a while [ago], and I have heard a lot of concerns. But as I go through the introduction of the Bill, for those who will listen it will be made clear that careful consideration has been given to moving this new system.

At the same time, Madam Speaker, careful consideration has been given to ensure that this system of administrative grants is not open to abuse. To this end, the Immigration Department has implemented a series of measures designed to ensure quality and consistency of decision-making among those persons involved, and randomness in the allocation of applications. These systems will be supported by regular internal and external audits. Checks and balances are being put in place, Madam Speaker.

I want to say here and now that the personnel who will be able to deal with the devolved authority to be able to make decisions will be working under strict regimes. They will be trained properly and will be continuously under the oversight of the Chief Immigration Officer. And as I just said, there will be a system of regular internal and external audits to ensure the consistency in dealing with these applications.

Madam Speaker, I dare say that these systems will provide as much—I will not go so far as to say, if not more—but as much of a check and balance of the system that exists with the Board. The difference between the Boards and these trained—and I want to say handpicked—employees is that one is getting paid and the other only receives a stipend for attending Board meetings. Madam Speaker, I for one am not going to for one minute allow the thought to stay in my mind that we can trust the Board but we cannot trust the individuals. And it is wrong for those who may think that.

Madam Speaker, I would now like to go through the other changes that are outlined in the Bill.

The right to be Caymanian: The Law is being amended to correct an anomaly with respect to the granting of permanent residence to the surviving spouse of a Caymanian. As it presently stands, where the Chief Immigration Officer grants permanent residence to such a person, this does not include the right to work. It was never intended that they should not enjoy the right to work, and this is now being addressed. As with persons granted permanent residence on the basis of being eight years' ordinarily resident in the country, however, this right to work will be limited to working in a particular occupation. So, both of these categories will enjoy the same rights, or for that matter, the lack thereof.

Another important amendment reinstates the power to revoke the right to be Caymanian where the holder is convicted of a serious offence. This provision existed in the previous legislation, but during the overhaul of 2006 it was inadvertently omitted. So, the Law is being amended to the effect that the right to be Caymanian (or Caymanian Status as it was known previously) may be revoked—and I stress may, not shall—may be revoked where the holder is convicted of an offence for which he is sentenced to a term of imprisonment of twelve months or more, other than for a non-payment of a fine. This provision relates not only to the grant of the right to be Caymanian by the Caymanian Status & Permanent Residency Board, but also to grants made by the Governor-in-Cabinet.

As we know, the Law was amended in 2006. Part of the overhaul of that Law allows the Governor in Cabinet to grant Caymanian status to four individuals during every calendar year, unlike the provisions that once existed which had no limitation on numbers. So, instead of possibly 4,000 or 40,000, that is now down to four. The only reason that is there now, Madam Speaker, is (because we could not envisage any special circumstance) as a catch-all section in case a circumstance arose where it was the right thing to do, but there was no other recourse for that reason alone.

With regard to Permanent Residence, Madam Speaker, the Law is being clarified with respect to persons applying for permanent residence on the basis of their being ordinarily resident here in the Islands for eight years. Where an applicant receives a minimum of one hundred points under the Points System, after deductions have been made on grounds of character, health and other mitigating factors, the Caymanian Status & Permanent Residency Board must approve the application. With respect to the latter, the Governor-in-Cabinet has also, through an amendment to the Immigration Regulations, clarified that 'other mitigating factors' will include proven ill-treatment of Caymanians in the workplace. Madam Speaker, that was very vague prior to this.

With respect to the deductible components, speaking generally, the Regulations have been amended to require the Caymanian Status & Permanent Residency Board to provide a full explanation in writing justifying any deduction made and showing that the number of points deducted was reasonable in the circumstances.

So, Madam Speaker, this is another check and balance to prevent the possibility of prejudices causing an application (shall I say) to go wrong—or the results of that application. What it simply means is that with that provision in place, and the Board knowing full well that if deductions are made justification has to be in writing, that ensures that the consideration is careful and as objective as it possibly can be, which is what the desired objective is.

Madam Speaker, an amendment to the Law is also being made to remove the existing—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, I have to interrupt you there. If you are going to go into the amendments you are going to move, I have not seen them. And until that time, if you would like to take the lunch break now and we can get these amendments so that I can waive the two days' notice—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker that will be very kind of you and that is exactly what we need. I know that you are a good Speaker and would see through that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 1.45 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.33 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.47 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

The Honourable Leader of Government Business continuing his debate on the Immigration (Amendment) Bill.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I intimated I would ask your permission to allow for two Committee stage amendments which are ready to be circulated. If you will allow me, I would just like to quickly explain the two amendments.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: That is, if you have given us permission.

The Speaker: I have waived the two days' notice, Honourable Leader, and accepted the amendments, so you can continue.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, in clause 13(b) of the Bill, where it speaks to "the principal Law is amended in section 38" . . . The first amendment being proposed is that, in clause 13(b), subparagraph (i) be substituted [with] the following: "(i) he fails to maintain the level of financial investment stated in his application for permission to remain permanently in the Islands."

That simply is a tidying up exercise because as the Law reads now, 13(b)(i) . . . or forgive me, 38(i) rather, simply reads, "he fails to maintain the required prescribed minimum level of financial standing." So, the addition is (in his application for permission to remain permanently in the Islands) simply to make it very clear what that subsection refers to.

The second amendment is to add a paragraph (and this is in clause 19 of the amending Bill) . . . this is to add a subsection in section 48, adding subsection (k), which will read: "(k) that the applicant failed to give the written undertaking referred to in section 42(4)(b)."

As I continue the debate, I will explain that specific amendment when I get to that stage of the contribution.

To continue on, an amendment to the Law is also being made to [prevent] a person whose application for permanent residence has been refused and who has not appealed against that decision from re-applying for permanent residence during the currency of the final one-year work permit to which he is entitled. It is obvious that it was not the intention for someone to be able to continue to reapply for permanent residence without ever having to leave the Islands.

As the Law reads now it is not clear when an application for permanent residence is refused, and when a person does not appeal that application, that the final one-year work permit which he or she is granted . . . as it stands in some instances that final one year work permit gives a period of more than a year since his last application was refused. Therefore, that person thinks he or she is entitled, because a year has passed, to be able to reapply, when, in fact, that was certainly not the intention. It is just that the way it was drafted was not absolutely clear.

The process as it was intended, Madam Speaker, was that if someone applied for permanent residence, and if that application were refused, once the person does not appeal that decision that person would get a final year, and his employer would get the final year for that person, which would give the person time to get his affairs in order during that time to prepare to leave the Islands. The employer would have ample time to find someone else to replace him, whether it is a Caymanian or not.

That is not to deny anyone the ability to return to the Islands after the one year is up; it is simply to create the break in stay. So that is the way it was intended. The section which will make the amendment in the amending Bill before us today will make that very clear as to what that procedure will be.

Madam Speaker, again with respect to permanent residence, it has become necessary to amend the Law regarding persons who buy property solely for the purposes of their application for permanent residence. An important consideration in deciding whether or not to grant a person permanent residence is their degree of long-term commitment to the Islands. One of the ways this is assessed is by the extent to which they have invested in property or business in the Islands relative to their income.

Meaning, to be fair and to have a level playing field for all individuals, the way the point system works . . . the level of investment that is looked at is all in relation to the level of income. So, a person on the Island earning $500,000 a year who has a $100,000 investment in the Islands, and someone who earns $50,000 a year (which is one-tenth of the first person), and that person has a $50,000 or a $60,000 investment, perhaps a piece of property, then that person is considered to actually have more of an investment relative to their income than the person with the higher income.

This is reflected in the point system by there being up to 20 points available for investments out of the total 100 points needed. This actually amounts to 20 per cent of the total needed for the grant of permanent residence.

Where a person has clearly made an investment solely for the purpose of their permanent residence application, as evidenced by the fact that they liquidate some or all of their assets immediately upon being granted permanent residence, then it becomes obvious that they are seeking to gain advantage over the system rather than demonstrating a genuine commitment to the Islands.

For example, if a person purchases a piece of property just before making an application so that he can say on his application that he has an investment, or perhaps he makes the purchase after his application and sends in an update on his application, then, while we cannot know before the application is granted (if it is granted) what that person is going to do, after the fact is what we are speaking about here. In such cases, the Board should have the ability to revoke the permanent residence and the Law is being amended to allow for this.

It is recognised that a person cannot be compelled to retain investments, and he must be free to choose what he does with his money. But, unless there are exceptional reasons for not doing so, a person should be expected to maintain as a minimum the value of assets or property that he stated on his application form simply because 20 per cent of the points he gained is based on that level of investment as reported on the application form.

This does not really mean that the assets need to be the same as those listed on the application form; but the value of those assets as stated on the application form must be maintained unless that person has very good reasons why that is not possible.

For instance, a person may have $30,000 in the bank and a piece of property worth $70,000, which speaks to his assets here in the Cayman Islands being $100,000. Based on his income and based on those assets, the person may have gained full points (that is, 20 points for that section of the point system under which they are marked) and that person is granted permanent residence. Twenty points out of the 100 needed were for this $100,000 worth of investment.

What the new amendment is simply going to deal with is to say that the person may well sell the piece of property, for instance, and use that as the down payment on a home or apartment, or whatever, and his assets might remain the same when you take away whatever mortgage the person gets. The fact that he does not have the same piece of land any more would not affect the person because his total investment would be the same.

But if the person liquidates that asset by selling the piece of property (if it is a piece of property) and the money no longer remains in the Cayman Islands, then we are saying the Law needs to be amended so that the Board may revoke that permanent residence because 20 per cent of the points were granted based on that investment. That is the intention of that one.

Madam Speaker, with regard to spouses of Caymanians, I am certain you will recall that spouses of Caymanians were removed from the work permit system. Under the new Law they are now granted a Residency and Employment Rights Certificate, popularly known to everyone as an RERC. The intention of this previous change in policy was to allow such persons, out of recognition of their connection to a Caymanian (the spouse of a Caymanian), to be granted employment rights very quickly and with fewer restrictions than are attached to work permits.

So when a person is married to a Caymanian, he no longer applies for a regular work permit, he simply applies for an RERC (Residency Employment Rights Certificate) which is granted with the ability to work under that RERC for a period of seven years. This change in policy has certainly achieved its goal and it has made life easier for many spouses of Caymanians.

I might just pause here to say that the reason for that seven-year period is because within that seven years, assuming the marriage is intact, that person would then have the ability to apply for Caymanian status being the spouse of a Caymanian and, all things being equal, there would be no impediment why that person would not be granted Caymanian status.

But while this has achieved its goal, as I said, a problem arises where the parties subsequently separate but do not immediately divorce. That happens. I do not have to go into all of the possible circumstances under which a marriage can take place. But if we use our imagination, we can think of many circumstances that might cause some difficulty. In such a situation, it would not be appropriate to allow the non-Caymanian spouse to continue to enjoy the full rights afforded by the Residency and Employment Rights Certificate.

In other words, there have been occasions where people do get married. Once they get the RERC there are problems at home and the non-Caymanian separates from the Caymanian spouse. But they leave it at that. They are simply separated. They do not go the full end of the road to actually get a divorce. Once you are married, and you are still married, then that person can enjoy the RERC for its full tenure.

It is proposed, Madam Speaker, to allow a work permit to be granted to the spouse of a Caymanian in exceptional circumstances for a period not exceeding three years, after which no further work permits may be granted or renewed in respect of that person. Meaning . . . for practical purposes, let us say that I am a Caymanian and I marry a foreign national. That foreign national, by way of marriage to me, gets a RERC, and there is a separation. This amendment will allow in exceptional circumstances for that person to get a work permit for a maximum three-year period. If during that three-year period the marriage becomes intact again, or the person goes through the process of acquiring a divorce, once that person gets divorced he is not eligible for a RERC any more. But being divorced, he can still get an ordinary work permit because he would no longer be the spouse of a Caymanian.

This amendment allows a three-year window for the situation to be regularised one way or the other. It is not penalising the individual from acquiring a work permit; it is simply saying to that individual that he/she cannot continue indefinitely under the guise of being married to a Caymanian and to have a RERC, when, in fact, you are really not married. Legally you are still married, but you are not living together, you are not operating the institution of marriage, and the union is (to put it bluntly) mashed up.

That is what this is saying, because there are people who take advantage of the system. We are saying that we are not going to disenfranchise anyone, but you are going to have to be decisive about your actions. You either have to be fish or fowl in the institution of marriage. That is all this is doing.

Much consideration has been given to this and we find this is fair and equitable and sort of closing the loophole that some people have used.

With work permits, the Immigration Law presently allows a person who has submitted an application for permanent residence to work by operation of Law either on the same terms and conditions as applied to his last work permit or to work for a different employer. The Law at this point in time does not clearly state that the person cannot change occupations.

We consider that to allow a person to change occupations at will would provide him with a benefit that he would not enjoy if simply granted permanent residence, because the grant of permanent residence does not give you the luxury of changing occupations at will. So, the person who has not been granted permanent residence and is awaiting the result of his application should really not have more of an advantage than a person who has been granted permanent residence. And as of now, it is not very clear: the fact that they can go to a new employer but that that employment has to be in the same field as allowed in the previous work permit.

Additionally, this freedom (if it were to be allowed to continue) could prejudice Caymanians. We are proposing, therefore, to limit the person under such conditions (that is, working by operation of Law) to working for any employer—but in the same occupation that he was working as previously when he held a work permit. So the person would still be able to change employers, but it still has to be in the same field as before.

From here on in it will be an offence where a person intending to work by operation of Law fails to submit his passport to his employer, and fails to pay annually all fees that would have been paid had the worker continued to be working on a work permit.

Really, what that is saying, Madam Speaker, is that if a person has applied for permanent residence and that person is awaiting the result of that application, that person is granted the ability to continue to work by operation of Law in the same job that he or she held before. What will happen now is that it will clearly be an offence if the fees are not continued to be paid during the same period of time that he would have normally paid had he been working with a regular work permit.

Another amendment relates to the processing of work permit applications for professional employees. At present, the Law prescribes specific requirements that the Work Permit Board and the Business Staffing Plan Board must take into account with respect to professional workers. For example, the Board must consult with the appropriate regulatory authority prior to approving an application. At present these requirements do not extend to the Chief Immigration Officer or the persons designated by him to process temporary work permit applications and annual work permits that will in future (once this Bill is passed) be dealt with administratively.

Given that many companies apply to the Chief Immigration Officer for temporary work permits for professional employees prior to the application for an annual work permit, it follows that he should have the same responsibility as the Boards.

In a nutshell, what that amendment will simply do is . . . the fact that an application can be made to the Chief Immigration Officer for a temporary work permit in the professional category, and the Chief Immigration Officer becomes the sole person responsible for either granting or not granting that application, and the fact that when this Bill is passed and becomes Law, the Chief Immigration Officer or his designate will be able to deal with some of these applications administratively . . . we are simply saying that under those conditions the Chief Immigration Officer and whoever his designate becomes will have the same responsibility as the Boards.

Madam Speaker, the Law is also being amended with respect to what is known as the 'job-hopping' provisions. At present, an employee may only change employer during the currency of a work permit where the Board accepts that there are special circumstances. This provision only applies to the Work Permit Board and the Business Staffing Plan Board. It does not presently apply to the Cayman Brac and Little Cayman Immigration Board, or to the Chief Immigration Officer, or those who will, in future grant, work permits administratively.

Madam Speaker, these important 'job hopping' provisions must be applied by all who are making these decisions on work permit applications, including temporary work permits. That is simply to allow all of those individuals and Cayman Brac and Little Cayman Immigration Board to do the same thing as a regular Work Permit Board and the Business Staffing Plan Board.

Madam Speaker, with respect to the designation of key employee status, and speaking to the designation of key employees, the Law is being amended to enable the Cayman Brac and Little Cayman Immigration Board to process applications for key employee grants. That is simply because it is acknowledged that that Board is better suited to determine whether a person meets the criteria for key employee status, given their knowledge of the specific needs and circumstances of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

So, as of now, applications for key employee status in the islands of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman have to be sent to Grand Cayman to be dealt with. We are saying that that Board is quite capable of handling those applications. So the amendment to the Law will give them the authority to do that.

Speaking to temporary work permits. Madam Speaker, there are several amendments being made with respect to temporary work permits. First, the Law is to be changed to allow a temporary work permit that was issued for up to 90 days to be extended for a further and final period of 90 days. That is, a three month work permit will be allowed to be extended for a further three months and that is final. This brings the Law in line with the Regulations where there are two fees—one for a temporary work permit, for a period of up to 90 days, and another fee for a period of 90 to 180 days.

Secondly, two new categories of temporary work permits are being created with this amending piece of legislation. The first of these is called a 'Seasonal Temporary Work Permit' which will be for workers employed in the tourism hospitality or water sports industry during the peak tourism season. This category of temporary work permit has been introduced in direct response to representations from employers in those industries who find that a six-month temporary work permit is simply too short to cover the peak tourism season. [It is necessary], then, to apply for a one-year work permit which is burdensome, given the fact that the person concerned would in most cases be released only two or three months after the grant of a full year permit, having received up to a six-month temporary work permit.

The new seasonal work permit allows for a temporary work permit to be issued in respect of a person employed in those three sub-industries for a non-renewable period of 8 months in any 12 month period after which the worker must leave the Islands. Employment under a Seasonal Temporary Work Permit will also activate the work permit holder's term limit.

So, Madam Speaker, again in a nutshell, what that means is the individual who now can get up to six months of temporary work permits, in those categories that I spoke to earlier, and the employer needs that person for another two months, because after six months you have to apply for a one year permit it means the employer would be forced to apply for a full one-year permit with that person only working two months out of that one year. What will happen now (and the representation has been genuine and it is accepted in those sub-industries) is that they can apply for an eight-month, seasonal temporary work permit specifically for those categories so that will take the individual employees through the peak season. Then the person would depart the Islands.

The key to that, however, is that the period of time of that work permit, even though the person will leave the Islands, does not mean that he could do this and, after receiving eight of those eight-month work permits, apply for permanent residence. That would simply not be the normal circumstance. This is taken into consideration. It does not allow that individual to count each of those work permits as a year of ordinary residence here without a break of stay.

The second new category of temporary work permits relates to entertainers coming to the Islands to perform. Under this new category the Chief Immigration Officer, or the person processing a temporary work permit application, will be required (in addition to the normal requirements for work permits) to take into account the nature and content of the proposed act as well as the views of the Cayman Islands Music Association, the Cayman National Cultural Foundation and other Government Departments which are relevant.

Another important factor that will also be taken into account is whether or not a local artist or act has been engaged to participate in the event.

On to Business Staffing Plans: Madam Speaker, with respect to business staffing plans the Law presently prohibits the granting or renewing of work permits for an employer who is required by law to have submitted a Business Staffing Plan application but has failed to comply with this requirement.

The original thinking of that, Madam Speaker, was simply because there were (should I say) no teeth which forced these applications to be forthcoming. When deadlines were set, if the employer did not meet the deadline, did not consider it important, there were no sanctions. So, when we did the change and said that we gave an extension for when these applications needed to come in (those pending), and we said until the application is received by such and such a date we are not going to be dealing with renewals or any new applications for that person, the whole idea behind that was to spur the applications on to get them all caught up and dealt with.

Having said that, and understanding that it is not a perfect world, we are now seeking to amend the Law to the effect that where an employer submits a Business Staffing Plan application after the deadline they must pay a fee amounting to double that which would otherwise have been paid if the application had been submitted on time. We are saying that you are going to feel it in your pocket. Pay attention! Make sure that your applications come in on time.

The Law is also being amended to allow the Boards and the Chief Immigration Officer to resume granting or renewing work permits as soon as the Business Staffing Plan application is received, notwithstanding that it was submitted late. So, the fact that it is submitted late will not prevent the process; it is just that that application must be accompanied with a cheque for double the normal amount.

Madam Speaker, in regard to Immigration Crime, in order to combat immigration and identity crime the Law is being amended to allow the Immigration Department to take and record the fingerprints of all persons over the age of eighteen who are granted a work permit. In future, by signing a work permit application form the prospective worker is giving an undertaking that he will consent to his fingerprints being taken and recorded. If he refuses to give this undertaking, this will be a ground for refusal of the work permit application.

I am also pleased to inform this honourable House that the provisions allowing for the imposition of administrative fines and forfeiture of assets introduced in the previous amendments have already proven their effectiveness. To date, the Immigration Department has acquired approximately $90,000 in fines and a boat that will be sold under tender.

Madam Speaker, the reason for all work permit holders being asked to allow their fingerprints to be taken is very simple. Many of the countries that the Cayman Islands has certain treaties with, or certain understandings or certain levels of cooperation with, have their own database with fingerprints. From time to time, the interdiction authorities in the Cayman Islands have been able to utilise the databases in other countries to identify individuals.

Work permit holders are considered to be transient. When it comes to immigration crime, it is something already in the works but the department feels very strongly, and the Government agrees with the department wholeheartedly, that no one who comes here with the desire to acquire a work permit should be afraid to have his fingerprints taken.

What we do not want to happen (and why this amendment is part and parcel of the amending Bill), is for there not to be enough teeth in the Law so that if a person simply refuses or just does not bother to do so, that it is not a big deal and there is no enforcement. This is simply saying that if you do not agree to have your fingerprints taken, then you are very liable to have your work permit cancelled.

What we are saying is that we understand the possible difficulties. Because the application for a work permit has to be done while a person is overseas it may not be easy for fingerprints to be supplied and may not be practical for the local system, because the truth is that you want the fingerprints to be taken locally so that it gets into the system immediately and you begin to create and add to your database.

So your application can be granted, but the fact that your application is granted [means] that once you have signed (as you have to) the application form as the employee, the application form includes a section which says that in signing you agree to have your fingerprints taken. If you refuse and do not allow it to happen, then Immigration has the right to revoke that work permit. That is simply a check and balance to make sure that once the system is instituted it can be done in an efficient manner and persons will not simply be able to not do it.

In fact, the second amendment that I am proposing (where we are adding subsection (k) to section 48), where it reads "that the applicant failed to give the written undertaking referred to in section 42(4)(b) . . ." that is to cover the way the Law reads to ensure that the necessary action can be taken if the individual does not comply.

Madam Speaker, as I have mentioned on a number of occasions, the process of creating an immigration system that ensures the protection of our borders and, at the same time, provides a solid framework for managing migration both now and for the future is an ongoing one. The amendments contained in the Bill that I have described represent the latest stage of this development.

Again, the process will not stop here. In November 2007 I also announced that as a means to combat work permit abuse by unscrupulous employers, new measures would be introduced that would require employers to pre-qualify before being able to apply for and obtain any work permits. This pre-qualification process will ensure that employers are complying with health insurance and pension requirements in respect of their employees and that they have adequate programmes in place to ensure that Caymanians are given every opportunity through on-the-job-training, mentoring or further education to advance in their careers.

I am pleased to say, Madam Speaker, that the Immigration Department has almost completed preparations to introduce these new requirements. A further amendment will be brought before this honourable House in short order. As part of this initiative, mechanisms will also be introduced to reward those employers who show that they are good corporate citizens.

I will not expand on that yet, Madam Speaker. Suffice it to say that those amendments which are forthcoming will simply be part of the ongoing process to cause our regime to be robust and as relevant to the times as possible.

Madam Speaker, I certainly commend this Bill to this honourable House. I believe that all of the amendments proposed are not only necessary, but good. They will serve to create the efficiencies that are sought in our system [while], at the same time, protecting all parties who need to be protected in the manner that they should be protected.

I await the Members' contributions. If there are questions I will certainly make every attempt to respond to them in my winding up. I wait to hear how much support this Bill receives in the House.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise [to make] a short contribution to the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, 2008. In particular, I want to mention that the Government has taken under consideration and brought an amendment to section 2 of the Immigration Law (2007 Revision). I am extremely pleased, and I want to spend a few minutes speaking about it because I believe it is a very important amendment. It entitles the Board in Cayman Brac by having a redefinition of "Boards" in this section, and it includes the words "44(4)(b), 49 and 52."

[Section] 52 will continue to be in effect as it is now for the Board in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman which will allow them to continue to issue permits (term limit permits as they know it) as they do today. It is a very capable Board. It has added another part of the puzzle that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman need in the vision and direction for a sustainable economic development plan for the citizens of both Islands. It is a Board that has vision and local knowledge.

Madam Speaker, section 49 [of the Immigration Law (2007 Revision)] allows this Board to function in the granting of key employee status. It says, "An employer may make an application pursuant to subsection (4) to the Board to nominate a worker as a key employee . . ." Why I believe this brings a much needed economic boost and a much needed boost to the confidence of the Board itself is, if you look at the Law and you see some of the criteria for the Board to look at in granting key employee [status], and clearly understand that we are removed by 65 miles of water between East End and Little Cayman and that we need the ability to draw on local expertise and local knowledge as we make those decisions to that Board, it says, "[49(4) (a)] he is recognised as having particular expertise in his field of practice, trade or employment and the Board recognises that there is difficulty in attracting such persons to the Islands or retaining such persons within the Islands . . ."

The key is the Board.

"[49(4) (b)] he is or will be directly involved in training Caymanians or developing their skills in the field in which he is employed or practises and his expertise in this regard is important to the effective continuation of such training or development;

(c) he is a professional employee whose expertise and skills are in short supply globally and are not available in adequate measure in the Islands and it is of economic and social benefit to the business or the Islands to attract such skills to the Islands;

(d) his absence from the Islands will cause serious hardship to his employer, to Caymanians, or be detrimental to the Islands;

(e) his business contacts are, or will be, of importance to the continued success of the business or its contribution to the Islands;

(f) there exist other economic or social benefits to the Islands by virtue of securing or retaining his specialist skills or expertise; or

(g) the circumstances of his particular case are considered by the Board to be exceptional and to justify a special reason to employ him or to allow him to be designated as key employee."

Madam Speaker, I think it was virtually impossible for the Board here to be able to take under consideration because of their lack of local knowledge and expertise needed to make judgments on key employees for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. So it is with that that I commend this amendment.

I believe it will add quite a bit to the Board and to the work situation as far as it has to be realised that the local knowledge of a key employee in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, knowing what those two Islands need, may well be quite different than the criteria needed for a key employee in Grand Cayman. Again, I go back to the local knowledge.

Madam Speaker, the Residential Certificate was mentioned earlier by the Leader of Government Business. "Required financial standing of applicant required for residential certificate for persons of independent means." This is a Regulation, not a Bill. But it will be looked at as this Bill is brought. I am just asking the Immigration Department and the Leader of Government Business to take into consideration that, as this stands, the criteria for Grand Cayman is a $250,000 investment in real estate to be considered for a residential certificate with independent means.

In Cayman Brac or Little Cayman, it has to be an investment of $125,000 in developed real estate.

You have to show proof that you have an annual source of income of $150,000 in Grand Cayman. In Cayman Brac and Little Cayman you show proof of an annual source of income of $75,000.

Madam Speaker, the precedent and pattern being set is that to spur on the development of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman the fee is half of the established fee in Grand Cayman. The only thing that is different, and this is where I ask for consideration, is that the residential grant fee itself is $15,000. I ask Immigration and the Leader of Government Business to consider looking at a regulation that would reduce that to be consistent with the other parts of the Law for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Reduce that, again, being consistent, to $7,500.

Madam Speaker, it is with those short comments that I stand to support the Bill.

Thank you.

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

This amending Bill is one that I believe will go a long way to tidying up and rectifying a number of the complaints that we get from time to time in regard to a number of Immigration matters.

The principal tenets as outlined under the new regime, as it would relate to the administrative processing of work permits, is one that I can say the Opposition does not have any objection to. Indeed, we believe that many of the reasons that have already been stated are valid, and ones that would cause us to believe that good will accrue to the Cayman Islands as a result of these changes being made.

Madam Speaker, one of the points that I think would bear some emphasis and repeating is this whole notion that whilst the administrative processing for matters that are not contentious will be a new paradigm shift as it were in the Cayman Islands, the process that would be gone through by an employer should not prejudice the ability of Caymanians to get jobs. Indeed, once the process runs as envisioned in conjunction with some of the work that is being undertaken at the Employment Services Department it could indeed enhance those abilities of Caymanians who are perhaps changing jobs and seeking employment.

Madam Speaker, in regard to a number of the other points and issues being addressed by this Bill, those surrounding the application for permanent residency, I am happy to see some of that work because we have also had representation of different abuses of the system as it relates to a person's portfolio of assets.

As the Leader of Government Business outlined in his presentation of the Bill, this is an area that is not necessarily easily resolved. As he pointed out, striking that balance of a person being able to live life, as it were, as he sees fit versus the law's restriction on what a person does with his portfolio of assets is one that is not easily dealt with or solved. However, in looking at provisions and how that is designed to work, I think this is probably as good as we are going to get it.

Obviously, there would be matters that would be outside a person's control, such as the depreciation or decline in value of his assets subsequent to the acquisition where the person does not have any control over those circumstances. For example, if [an applicant] had a piece of property worth $150,000 prior to the application and during the time of grant that asset subsequently declined in value, naturally those are circumstances that the successful applicant would have no control [over]. However, in looking at the provisions I believe that those circumstances are contemplated and should be dealt with in a manner that is not prejudicial towards the person. In those circumstances the person has not necessarily used his assets simply for the acquisition, pretending to make a commitment to the country and then, after acquisition of permanent residency, simply liquidating those assets no longer having the commitment that his application suggested he would have.

Madam Speaker, there are other areas that will cause some to perhaps have concern or contention, in particular the whole issue of a person on a work permit having to give a written undertaking that he will submit himself to being fingerprinted. At the end of the day as a country we have to decide what we believe is best for us to be able to most effectively and efficiently manage ourselves, our society, and our borders. While we never want to overstep bounds unnecessarily where the Government or State has cause and will derive a benefit that is much better than the perceived invasion (I guess is the word I want to use) . . . causes invasion into some people's rights and particular matters of privacy, et cetera. I believe that all governments are duty bound to do what they need to do.

As I said, if the benefit outweighs the costs, or the perceived costs, then one has to do what one has to do. Certainly, in that regard we all have our particular choices we can exercise.

Madam Speaker, getting back to the administrative processing provisions, there will be those who will have suspicions and will see the change as in some way not having the capabilities to process and deal with applications as they believe would be most beneficial to Caymanians as being impaired upon. But

I dare say [that with] any change made to this system, there will be those who could come up with varying arguments and resistance.

However, in the main, given the circumstances that obtain, given the costs to the country and to employers overall, and the fact that the whole system of temporary permits has now grown into one of necessity where their use is certainly not within the spirit of the Immigration regime . . . that is, a temporary was certainly, in spirit, for those circumstances where a person was going to be employed and in the country for a temporary period of time (and typically people would have tied that to less than one year). We know that that is what that regime was intended to deal with. But now we see this deal with a whole raft of permits where they go from someone applying for a domestic helper right up to hiring a chief executive. People go through this process because it is the quickest and most efficient way to get someone on the ground working.

We have long heard complaints from our constituents in regard to their perception about some of the processes that a person goes through as it relates to a full work permit, and people feeling somehow that if everyone had that full work permit test applied to them, that that in some way is more beneficial and fairer to society and to Caymanians who are in the workforce. We see that those sorts of complaints would basically go out the door.

This system, though, is one that is going to require scrutiny that will allow the public to more fully embrace it. By that I mean that once it is given a chance and it is up and running and all of the work envisioned to scrutinise and ensure that the result at the end of the day is one that Caymanians believe does not compromise or inhibit their employability, but—even going to a higher point in principle—is one that is fair to society in terms of the particular applications being granted, are the ones that meet all of the hallmark requirements and, more fundamentally, meet the needs test.

I know that for a long time the system and the department struggled to keep up and deal with the whole issue of frivolous applications—people simply taking out a work permit for someone in order to get them on the Island. In most of those types of instances there is no work for them, and those people basically wander about. In some instances they do go back and try to legally get some sort of variation. But in a lot of instances they simply work outside the terms and conditions of their work permit and work elsewhere.

Those are the sorts of issues that I believe having the system uncovered will become more transparent and more ably dealt with. However, by uncluttering the system the penchant for someone even trying it declines greatly because they themselves would understand, and word would get around that we do not have this bogged down, inefficient system any longer in Cayman. So, trying that particular trick may be unwise.

Madam Speaker, I know that we will always have detractors and those who complain about the work surrounding Immigration. But as I looked through all of the provisions being brought in this amendment Bill, I see a vast number of them being dealt with, or attempted to be dealt with. There are a few that I have not seen here that I would like to highlight. I am not sure if any of them are simple enough, or non-contentious enough—simple from a drafting standpoint and non-contentious from a principle standpoint—that perhaps Government could look at if not now at some time in the not-too-distant future.

We have a real problem as it relates to certain persons who are born to Caymanians. In other words, at the time of their birth, they were born to a person who was a Caymanian at that point in time. But the parent and child moved outside the Cayman Islands and the child is now an adult. Having sat on the IRT (Immigration Review Team), I know one of the [reasons] behind a lot of the changes we made was [to] try to build Cayman and the Cayman population, society and workforce as far as possible from persons who were Caymanian or of Caymanian descent. That is one of the reasons why at the time, Members may recall, that we went back a generation when we started dealing with Caymanian as a right, and did not just deal with parents. We also went back to grandparents.

What is happening to a lot of those people is that the test for the person to acquire status, or have access to acquisition of Caymanian status in those instances, has caused them to fulfill a legal and ordinary residency requirement test.

Let me take one quick step back. In these instances, Madam Speaker, I am speaking of the person born to a Caymanian but born outside the Islands. I think I said earlier that the parents moved away. I made a slight mistake there.

So, a Caymanian who has moved away from Cayman has a child. Let us say the person moved to the United States. The spirit of the legislation would have been that that person would have had automatic acquisition of status pretty much irrespective of where he now resides. In a lot of instances, these people are persons whose parents are Caymanian, their grandparents are Caymanian, their great-grandparents may have been Caymanian, but to exercise their right they now have to go through the process of applying for a work permit to become legally and ordinarily resident here because if they come to Cayman, they would normally just be landed as tourists.

I would ask the Government to look at that situation and see what can be done to ensure that those persons can have access to their right to be Caymanian in a much more efficient manner.

The case was highlighted to me in an instance where a person who was trying to return here was a qualified teacher. This is the type of person we want to ensure gets to Cayman and exercises that right to be a Caymanian as easily as possible.

As I said, as far as I know, on her mother's side she goes back at least four generations of Caymanians. She has always visited her grandmother here, and has always stayed in tune with the community and the society.

In our work on the IRT we certainly stopped at the grandparent stage as it related to any form of more automatic acquisition. But we know . . . and I had another case recently that highlighted another weakness in the system where a person who is of Caymanian descent on both sides (both of her great-grandparents were born in the Islands) was being rolled over, and that is why she called me. She wanted to find out . . . in her mind she could not understand why she would be rolled over when both sides of her family were born Caymanians. The reality was that in the type of semi-skilled work she was engaged in, more likely than not she would be replaced in the jurisdiction by a work permit holder.

The truth of the matter is that, certainly, given our current and projected needs from a human resource perspective as a country, we are simply not, from a birthrate standpoint, having enough Caymanians born to fill our needs.

I think it would be helpful if Government looked at the regime as it relates to persons of Caymanian descent who have come back to see if there is anything that can be done to give some form of preferential treatment to individuals in that category. As was said to me recently, some people find it rather frustrating when they see Powerys and . . . I do not want to start calling all sorts of last names, but a lot of persons with Caymanian last names being caught in the rollover regime.

We know why we put that system in place. And while it has its detractors, I believe that by and large all of us as legislators recognise the necessity that it serves, especially given the wholesale change that we made in 2003 and the numbers of people that our society would have absorbed on a permanent basis from 1 January 2004 to the present. Certainly, there would still be people in the system to be dealt with.

Madam Speaker, I think if Government looked at that situation and spoke to the folks at Immigration they certainly would have seen these types of cases that have come through the system and be able to deal with them effectively. I believe that the society would not . . . and we are not suggesting that they be given any form of automatic acquisition to rights. In other words, we are not suggesting going back yet another generation. I believe that most Caymanians would agree that we have basically gone back two generations and that is far enough. But if they are given some preferential treatment within the system, you could easily see a scenario where the society would have adequate time to have them live and move within the community and be able to weed out, for whatever reason, any that it may not be desirous to [let] remain in the society on a long term basis. I think that could wind up being a win/win scenario.

For those of us who sat on the original IRT, the spirit behind what we tried to put in place was to first and foremost try to build Cayman from Caymanians and persons of Caymanian descent who looked to return to Cayman. We know persons who, historically, have moved to Texas, New York, Jacksonville, different places in the States. We know in the 1990s the then administration took a cognisant view of persons who were in Isle of Pines in Cuba. We know that a lot of Caymanians moved to the Bay Islands. So, I would recommend that the Government take a hard look at those two situations because I believe they would find that they are two areas that could be helpful to us as a society as we continue to evolve.

Madam Speaker, let me just reiterate that, certainly as we look at the new system that surrounds the granting of work permits—and that is what a lot of people will talk about coming out of this Bill—we believe that as the system gets un-cluttered and as the Immigration Department works a lot closer with the Department of Employment Services, that this system, once up and running the way we envision it to run, will go a long way to help the economy, but [it will] also help Caymanians who are out there either seeking a job for the first time or perhaps out of a job, or looking to change jobs.

Madam Speaker, I believe that overall the tenets and principles in this Immigration Bill are supportable by the Opposition. I think the community, once given a chance, will say it is something that was for the best interests of the Islands.

With those few words I recommend support of the Bill.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Mover . . . Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise in support of this Bill, this very necessary piece of legislation.

One thing that has been constant throughout the world from the time that mankind was placed on the Earth is migration of people. For that reason and the ever-changing trends the world finds itself in we have to pay very special attention to our immigration policies. We realise and understand that there will never be a time when we will be able to say this is it, we no longer need to make any changes.

We know that the Law governing Immigration in our country has been left unchanged, or without upgrading for too long a period of time. But in recent times, we have all come to terms with the dynamics of migration and the way immigration affects the way we do business and the lives of our citizens.

I would like to mention the rollover policy, for instance. That had its share of support but it has also had its many detractors. In spite of the gloom and doom when this piece of legislation was being circulated, by all indications from all walks of life it has done the country well. I believe that as we go along we will find it necessary to fine tune that as well. But for all intents and purposes, legislation such as the rollover policy has done this country well.

What I have come to understand and appreciate is the level of commitment and the intelligence of the Chief Immigration Officer who has refused to simply remain static. He constantly looks for ways to improve his department. Whenever legislation comes to this House, and the Chief Immigration Officer and his staff have a hand in it, it is usually well thought out. I can only say that I commend him and his staff for the tremendous amount of work that they put into it and I would like to say that this department is extremely well run. I am so proud of him being a Caymanian who continues to improve himself and also of those in his department who work with him.

Madam Speaker, there are a few things that come to mind with the Bill. I am in full support of the fingerprinting issue. I believe it is something that is long overdue. We may find that fingerprinting in itself may become a very normal part of our everyday lives in a short time to come. Criminals are becoming more and more intelligent, finding ways to beat the system. Even for our own law-abiding Caymanian people, fingerprinting may be one of the things we come to accept as a norm. So I am in favour of introducing fingerprinting to work permits.

While I understand the point made by the Leader of Government Business about new applications, that we introduce the fingerprinting at that stage, we did not hear too much of anything about how we would handle renewals. I am sure that must be part of the thinking of how we would deal with renewals as far as fingerprinting is concerned. So I would ask that during the wrap up there be some mention as to how we plan to deal with renewal. I understand that we will not be able to do everybody at one time; but I hope that even those who are in the system will be captured somewhere and we do not just deal with new grants.

Madam Speaker, by and large, as I have said before, this Government has recognised that Immigration must be taken very seriously. We continue to look for ways to improve, although it was said on the radio today by Members of the Opposition that all we are doing is messing up a good piece of legislation. Madam Speaker, we would not be doing our jobs as legislators if we thought that areas like immigration should simply be left alone. Immigration affects every thing and every one, from the way we do business, to the people who work in our gardens, our homes, our businesses, people who work in law offices, in doctors' offices. We also have to balance immigration with the livelihood of our people and make sure that opportunities are not taken away by the willy-nilly issuing of work permits.

I believe that the changes in this legislation will go a long way in assisting Caymanians, people who are in business, with processing their applications more quickly and also help them to understand what is happening with their applications. It will relieve the Boards of these long agendas and things that never seem to come to an end.

I must commend the Chief Immigration Officer again for deciding that the best way to handle this is for the employees of the Immigration Department to take on more responsibility. These are the people who deal with work permits every day. Not taking away anything from the members of the Boards who have done this for so long, but I believe these are things that can be handled a whole lot better administratively. I support our going in that direction.

The point made about assets placed in somebody's personal holdings and used as an investment to satisfy the investment section of an application for permanent residency . . . Madam Speaker. I am extremely happy that steps are being taken to look at this. This is one of the areas where people have taken advantage of us, transferring funds or property in people's names. As soon as the applications are granted, they move the assets somewhere else.

At times, some are led to believe that the assets could be borrowed. I would like to take it a step further: rather than simply saying that the assets should stay in place for a period of time, have the ability to monitor the assets so that if they disappear we are able to track, for instance, cash. If [an asset] were sold, we should be able to track where the cash went. If you recently bought the property, [you] be able to show where the funds came from. It has been rumoured, and there are cases where you know full well that people were helping out buddies at times in the transfer of funds or property.

I am asking that Government take a second look at that portion to see if there are any other areas within that that we can tighten up.

I am also mindful that the workings of these new amendments will also assist some of the things that we have been fighting for a long time and continue to fight—that of enhancing the ability of Caymanians to get jobs. This is a primary concern of this Government and any well-thinking government. The new system of the administration dealing with work permits will apparently assist in this area to ensure that Caymanians are looked after and that we can make sure that none of our people who can fill these positions are overlooked.

Nothing is mentioned in the amendments, and maybe it is a trivial matter, but there is a lot of talk about the Language test and how useful it is. I know that one of the things we use to explain why it is necessary is, for instance, the probability of a helper having to deal with medication for an elderly person or someone she is taking care of and she cannot read the instructions properly because the instructions are in English and she does not speak English very well. While I will say that I agree with the test, I do wonder at times if maybe it could be explained what triggers the test.

For instance, if somebody applies for a work permit from an English-speaking country and, as far as Immigration officials are concerned, they speak proper English, is there a system that can prove that although one can speak English, one can read and write English? That could be worse than somebody not being able to speak English. It could be more detrimental, I believe.

It may be taken care of, Madam Speaker. So if we can see if that has been addressed and if there is a way for us to ensure that somebody else could not have simply filled out an application form for somebody else and sent it in, it may be something that is easily explained. I will be happy to hear that.

Madam Speaker, the section on—

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

Lord, you have said in your word that you know the plans you have for us. Even so, Lord, let it be.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: I recognise the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, continuing his debate.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When we had the hour of interruption on Monday evening, I was dealing with the topic of the language test and whether or not we ought to be considering a literacy aspect as well. I do not know where that fits, exactly, within the department and whether or not human rights issues will come into play at some point, but it is something that I believe we should get some answers on as to whether or not we are allowing people into our country who may not be able to read and write, putting them in positions as helpers.

For instance they may have difficulty reading medication of people they are caring for. So, I asked that somehow we have some reply on that during the wrap up.

Madam Speaker, one of the complaints we continue to hear from members of boards as to the reason they are backed up in processing and issuing work permits has been that when the application comes to the board, there is a checklist of documents and items that are supposed to accompany the application. This is one of the areas I have had a number of complaints about over time. Board members speak to the fact that these are some of the reasons why applications are delayed or put back to the next week's agenda. I am just wondering if the new administrative process will fix any of these same issues. If they are now being dealt with internally by administrative staff, perhaps that same checklist comes into play.

Is there a system in place to make sure we are not experiencing the same problems? The absence of these applications going before the board may not allow members of the board to know whether or not those issues are still a problem. I said earlier that I have all the confidence in the world in the Chief Immigration Officer and in the system he sets up. But he is only one person and he cannot sit and watch everybody and process these applications in every board meeting.

This is a major concern for members of the board who are saying they are fearful that in taking the process out of the hands of the board, some of these inadequacies may be hidden and we may never know what the real reasons are for delays.

This new system is supposed to make things work better, issue work permits faster, or at least give answers to those who apply a lot quicker. I am asking the Leader of Government Business if, in his wrapping up, he could speak to that.

The Residency and Employment Rights Certificate has been one of the more important changes. This is not new to this set of amendments. But it is one of the more beneficial changes that has been made in recent times to the Immigration Law. It is part of the new system that I believe the department could benefit from if it did a little more PR. When someone applies for a work permit they are then advised there is a new system. But there is a lot of fear and uncertainty out there for people who are married to Caymanians who may not know of this. I believe that the department could benefit greatly from some form of PR in this area.

Madam Speaker, that concludes any contribution that I can make at this point. I want to say that I am in support of the amendments. I trust that my other colleagues will show their support for these very important amendments to the Immigration Law.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to endorse the amendment and to make a few points about the Bill for a Law to amend the Immigration Law (2007 Revision).

Any aspect of immigration in the Cayman Islands is important to all of us. It is important, because as a well established country that provides a lot of employment for people, we should spend an inordinate amount of time looking at our immigration laws, policies, et cetera. Writing one law today is not going to be sufficient in four years' time. I will just quote from the Leader's speech where he said that in 1994 we had 6,400 persons on work permits here. In 2004, we had 19,004. Madam Speaker, it has quadrupled in 2008 to 25,772.

It shows that every so often the legislators and persons in the Immigration Department have to look analytically at what is happening and adjust the policies and laws as we go on. This is not because we are a frivolous government or do not know what we are doing. But when we look at those statistics and see how those work permits have quadrupled, it is right for us, because it is a dynamic process, to look at what is happening every so often.

As the Leader said, we have to look at protecting our borders and Caymanians. Therefore, we have to be able to manage migration. In all of this are people in their thousands called Caymanians, who do not need a work permit, who can work anywhere; but because of the demands of the private sector in terms of employment, it is this House of legislators that has to ensure that Caymanians benefit from the very thing that the employers (i.e., the private sector and others) are seeking. And that is, a better return on their dollar, their business improves, that is, they make money. And the Caymanian must also wish to be part of the Caymanian dream.

Madam Speaker, it is important that every so often we adjust things, particularly for those thousands of Caymanians who we call indigenous. And I say "who we call indigenous" to ensure that they benefit from the fat of the land. If the legislators of this country cannot come to this honourable House in a bipartisan way to work out things so that the Caymanians can benefit, then something is wrong.

It is not about being anti-foreigner, as we often hear that we are against this nationality and that nationality. But any country, whether independent or otherwise, seeks first to look after the benefit of its people. The Cayman Islands is no different. The Cayman Islands is no different, particularly at this time, in ensuring that the people it is educating—its young people—whether here or a foreign [country] to see that when they come back they are placed in the positions to match what they read at the university.

So, Madam Speaker, it behoves this Legislative Assembly to look carefully to see that there is no disenfranchisement where our Caymanians are concerned. I know that certain nay-sayers may say that this Government does not like certain nationalities and they make certain aspersions. But, Madam Speaker, like yourself and the Honourable Leader, I went to Jamaica to get my education. I have lived in that country. I just want to tell you something, Madam Speaker.

When I finished my teacher's training, I volunteered to work in Jamaica for a year, much to the consternation of the college and my people here in the Cayman Islands. But because I said I wanted to do it, they gave me an agreement.

We went to a place and opened a school called Baxter's Mountain, way in the woods of St. Mary in Jamaica, four of us. Incidentally, Madam Speaker, of the four of us, three of us became politicians. So it must have done some good for us.

At that time the Minister of Education came there and he was proud of what we had done. He wrote to the Ministry of Education and said these four ladies shall be awarded with a scholarship to go to the University of the West Indies. So, before I decided to come home, I went to the Ministry of Education to find out about the scholarship. They thanked me and were very cordial and diplomatic and said, "We thank you very much for volunteering from the Cayman Islands, but our scholarships are for Jamaicans. You are not a Jamaican."

I say that, Madam Speaker, just to make a reference that our policies and our legislation and the things that improve the Caymanian must always be first in our minds. Notwithstanding we need workers here.

The Cayman Islands is flourishing. It must be flourishing to have 25,000 work permits. People are not coming here just to sit on our shores and put on bathing suits and walk about and ya, ya, ya, ya. They are not doing that. They come here for a purpose. They come here to drink milk. And there's nothing wrong with that, once they do not touch our cows!

Madam Speaker, I see you smiling. Perhaps I should not have said that.

The legislation that is before us, as the mover of this Bill said, is to protect Caymanians. Every day of my life as a legislator, someone, whether old or young, tells me that we are not looking after our Caymanians. That is hard, Madam Speaker, when your people come up to you and say that you are looking after the foreigners. All I can see are foreigners getting the best jobs. All I can see is that you are making them get employment. They are enjoying the Cayman Islands. Not us.

That hurts, Madam Speaker. That really hurts.

I know all of my colleagues in here, at least the elected colleagues, tell me that it happens to them. So it is not that the legislators are trying to be anti-foreigner. What we are trying to do is ensure that people who get work permits, it is necessary. We are also trying to ensure that this work permit does not debar a Caymanian from getting a sensible job, getting a job that can get them good money so that they can be part of the Caymanian dream.

The mover of the Bill also spoke about the amendment improving the efficiency and effectiveness. That is important for us, Madam Speaker. We are a business. We are part of this global dispensation that everybody comes [to]. So we must be international. We must be on task. When our work permits come in we must do them properly. We must do them expeditiously, but we must do them correctly.

I just want to make a point about the last part of the Bill, to extend the powers of the Chief Immigration Officer. I think this is a wonderful thing. I have always said and my colleagues have always said that we needed an administrative arm in the Immigration Department to process our work permits like they do in other parts of the world.

Madam Speaker, what is so important here today is that in a growing and progressive Cayman, we must continually bestow upon our people decision making abilities. Give them responsibilities of authority and accountability. I have every confidence in the Chief Immigration Officer. I have watched him grow from a little boy. Somewhere he is kindred to me. That's not to say he would do anything for me, Madam Speaker, but I have watched him grow and I know his heart.

As a matter of fact, if you read what he said on the Cayman Islands Government website he talks about 'Caymanians must benefit too.' So that is important. But Caymanians must benefit too because we have empowered him, Madam Speaker, to make decisions that most times would have been made by a board.

Now, I am not sure (I did not do the research) that this is done in other parts of the world, where you use boards to do this kind of work. With the volume of work that we have, there is no way that we can use boards only. But the mover of the Bill said the boards would be overarching and in charge. But bestowing this empowerment on the Chief Immigration Officer is not a beginning, but an important step in trying to progress Cayman forward. It has been said that we are not capable of handling our own affairs; we do not have the ability, we do not have the educational ability nor the other ability to handle our own affairs. This is the beginning, when you bestow upon the Chief Immigration Officer this kind of empowerment, this is important. This is a very, very important aspect that we have done here. It will teach and train our Caymanians so that they can be in charge.

This empowerment is also in other aspects of the Civil Service, functions of taking on accountability and responsibility. Human people work in the Immigration Department. If they default on anything I am sure there are measures in place to deal with them. I am sure that the Chief Immigration Officer has brought this up already.

What happens if somebody overlooks one aspect of the checklist, and deliberately so?

I am sure, knowing the person that I know, he has already sat down and said, Look. What would be the consequences, if we see this getting out of hand? They have entrusted this to me. And he has delegated it downwards to some of his staff to ensure that the work permits are looked after so they can be expeditiously done and the business of the country will not come to a standstill.

I want to spend a little time on this because it irks me at the age I am . . . and Madam Speaker I am way above south. I am not a kid anymore. But it irks me, Madam Speaker, when people who are supposed to know better get up and say, Boy, we can't give that to him you know. He is either too young, too fool or too whatever. That's a Caymanian we are talking about.

Madam Speaker, I am a Caymanian. I know that I am not a Euclid, like the Honourable Minister of Education. I am not a Euclid like him, but I know I am smart. And I know that in my lifetime I have met some of the smartest young people we call Caymanian. As a matter of fact, they boggle my mind sometimes with what they know for the short time they have been on this earth.

It behoves us as legislators not to fall into the same trap as people did with us. Not to fall in that same trap where we did not trust "us" to be in charge. We should not, as legislators on both sides, fall into the trap of saying in this life we are in that we do not have Caymanians who can run this country, whether it is the economic aspect of it or the political aspect of it.

I believe that I could go to sleep tonight and go on to wherever I have to go and know in my heart that there are educated people of, not so much of my generation, but the generation after me and below that would take this country on the right course. They would steer it well. They have good hindsight, they are smart, they are intelligent, they are analytical and they know all sorts of things. Therefore, Madam Speaker, this aspect of this Bill, where we are giving the extent of powers of the Chief Immigration Officer, enralls me.

I am a proponent of ensuring that Caymanians are in charge of the destiny of Cayman. I congratulate the mover of the Bill. I also congratulate the Chief Immigration Officer. I know he understands the economics of this. We depend on this, but we have to depend on it not at the expense of our own Caymanians. We depend on it on terms of fairness to ensure that there is no work permit, regardless of what it is—particularly if it is in a high scale and accrues a lot of money—that there are Caymanians . . . that the Immigration Department is not going to let a work permit slide once they know there is a Caymanian that can fit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to offer my support to a Bill for a Law to amend the Immigration Law (2007 Revision).

It is important that we as legislators continue to streamline and improve legislation that we have in existence. Often times we have been criticised in this country for leaving legislation until it is way too outdated, way too ineffective to be of any use to anyone, and then we have to make wide sweeping, large scale changes that have dramatic impact on the country.

What we have here is a recently approved piece of legislation, in the Immigration Law (2007), but as we work with a law such as the Immigration Law, because of the dynamic nature of Immigration itself, it is not a piece of legislation that we can leave alone for long periods of time. We will certainly run into difficulty.

There are many things that change in a country such as ours, which is very dependent on migration and immigration policies. Economics and other factors dictate that we keep up to date, keep on the cutting edge, as it were, of our times to ensure that we have the best law on the books that will allow our own people to survive in their country, as well as facilitate those that come here to work in an orderly and clear manner.

Madam Speaker, I heard the Leader of the Opposition on the radio a couple of days ago saying that we are messing with a good piece of legislation until we make it, I guess, not good. Until we destroy it. But, Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition knows better than that. He knows that this is a strengthening of the legislative process, a strengthening of that Law that is very much needed and is being proposed by the Chief Immigration Officer and his staff along with being tabled here by the Leader of Government Business. Amendments that have been well thought out will hopefully alleviate some of the concerns and some of the issues that plague us.

I would like for the Leader of the Opposition to reconsider that statement and to show his support for such a worthy effort on so many people's parts.

Madam Speaker, I would like to touch on a few—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Can I hear your point of order, Honourable Leader of the Opposition?

Point of Order

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: If the Member heard me talking it was in connection with some other matters in regard to other legislation in connection with the Immigration Law. But he never heard me talking about this piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: I heard what the Leader of the Opposition said. I guess it was not clear when he said what he said, and I can only assume that he spoke about any amendment that we were making to the Immigration Law.

Moving on, I would like to look a little bit closer at some of the amendments. I will start off with amendment 4 which goes on to designate the post of a Director of Boards and Work Permits.

This is an important step for us to designate someone, although we may have had someone acting in this position previously. But it is important that the public understands that we do. This person will have a very important role. This amendment is seeking to make this quite clear.

I quote from amendment 4(c), which says that “(2) The duties of the Director of Boards and Work Permits shall include (a) the planning and coordination of the activities of (i) the Boards; and (ii) the Work Permit Administration section. . .” That in itself is, to my mind, a large role because he is planning and coordinating the activities of the Board. This is a very important function because we need to ensure that our boards are not working at cross purposes. We need to ensure that our boards are working under proper terms of reference, under proper scheduling and such, and there are a number of boards—the Work Permit Board, the Business Staffing Board and others—that will be impacted significantly by the work of this individual. So that is very crucial.

It also says “the Work Permit Administration section.” Again, the Work Permit Administration Section is going to be enhanced with the amendment that we are going to talk about a bit later. But as we move to a more administrative system of granting work permits, in some cases this person has a large role to play in making sure this is a smooth process. And you have someone you can go to who will assist the public in terms of questions and directions.

The other role that person will play will be to develop and implement strategies and systems to promote efficiency. I guess this is an elaboration of what I was basically saying (I probably jumped the gun!) in the processing of applications by the Boards and by Work Permit Administration Section and also to meet with the public at their discretion and to tend to administrative matters assigned to them by the Chief Immigration Officer. That is a big job and a very important one. I think that formalising that into legislation is certainly a good move.

Another very important area is marriage and persons married to Caymanians, and the granting of Resident and Employment Rights Certificates. This is referred to under amendment 6, where someone married to a Caymanian no longer has the handicap of struggling and trying to get a work permit and finding employment. Once you are married you are granted an RERC, as it is commonly known [Residency Employment Rights Certificate], which allows that individual to work for seven years. At that time then, all being well, that individual will go on to receive Caymanian status.

There are a couple of other important areas in that. Often times working within the Law, the department has found difficulty where marriages no longer function as marriages, where one individual got married, whether for convenience or it just did not work out, and then you have the difficult scenario of what do you do with this person.

Now the proposed amendment will allow the Chief Immigration Officer or his designate to grant a final three-year permit under amendment 9(6) . . . not necessarily a final, but it will be a three-year permit that will be granted that will allow the whole scenario to be cleaned up, whether there is a divorce or there is reconciliation, it will allow things to settle, dust to clear. If the divorce is processed at that time, that individual will then have the ability to seek a further work permit on his or her own. At least there will be this steady period, as it were, to allow some surety during this period of turmoil.

So that gives people some clarity and some sense of surety to know that everything is not going haywire once the marriage is on the rocks as it were.

Another important area is under amendment 7. [If] the Chief Immigration Officer or the board has granted status to an individual, [and] that individual is found guilty of an offence and sentenced to a period of twelve months or more, that individual can have that status revoked. Also, where it is found that an offence was facilitated by or connected to the granting of that status, again, that status may be revoked by the grantor of it.

Madam Speaker, this is a very important provision to have in the Law because often times we grant status to individuals and I guess they do not turn out to be what they seemed to be in the original case. We need to be able to deal with those individuals and not have them as a part of our permanent society. So, again, there is another very important strengthening provision for the boards and the Chief Immigration Officer and, indeed, the Cabinet of the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, just going back to what I was speaking to earlier in relation to the administrative role that the department will now play under these new proposals. This will allow for non-contentious work permit applications to be dealt with by a small group of administrative staff, rather than by a volunteer board as we have. However, our contentious applications will still be dealt with by the board where more time is needed to fully research what is going on in the application.

It is very important to note at this stage too that we are not talking about removing the power of the board; we are talking about freeing them up from some of the workload that they currently have. They will still be able to consider routine applications if the need arises. That power is not being taken away from the board. But, certainly, we would hope that the majority of this would be handled in-house under the auspices of the Chief Immigration Officer and his staff.

There are a number of items under amendment 14 (6). They are listed (a) through (f). These are all very important areas that the boards will spend the majority of their time dealing with. I would like to just go down through them because it is important to understand that the board will still have a lot of work on its plate. In fact, as I said, the powers of the board are still there.

Amendment 14(6) says “. . . the Boards to process applications of the types referred to in subsection (5) [which are the routine ones I spoke to earlier] and those in respect of-

(a) the grant or renewal of work permits where-

- (i) a Caymanian had applied and was rejected for the post;
- (ii) there is a signed complaint against a prospective employee on file; or
- (iii) the data base of the Department of Employment Relations identifies a Caymanian as being capable and available for the position;”

Madam Speaker, we know the amount of work involved in that area. Too often we hear and know of these situations where Caymanians apply for a job and are turned down and a foreign worker is hired. Or there is a foreign worker in that post and there may be complaints against that individual and for some reason that individual continues on and on while the Caymanian, quite capable of doing the work, is subject to the abuse or otherwise of this individual.

These areas take a lot of time to research and, certainly, the board will find its time best served looking into these to ensure that we cut out some of the violations that are going on in this area.

Of course, we are working hand-in-hand with the Department of Employment Relations and they, as the process stands, recommend and identify Caymanians for posts while a permit application is being processed. Often times, the employer will find a reason why the people that are sent cannot be hired—sometimes with just reason, but certainly there are times when we know that there are shenanigans at work and the board will have the ability and the time to better spend in looking carefully at these applications.

Amendment 14(6)(b) speaks to the whole area of key employees. Again, this is an area that needs thorough research [because once an employer has fallen in love with an employee's work he wishes to keep him] in his employ and does not want to see that worker leave. In some cases it may be a helper, in some cases a senior office worker. But there are cases where you have genuine requirements for key employees. That is why this provision was put in the Law. But each one has to be dealt with on its merit.

That is why you have an application process, and an area where the board can spend a lot of its time ensuring that we have proper applications and not just willy-nilly key employees designations where at the end of the day everyone gets through and beats the system, as it were. Then they are here until permanent residence, status and the like.

Also under amendment 14(6), (c) refers to promotions and re-designations, that is, in the work place; (d) the revocation of work permits; (e) the grant, renewal or amendment of a Business Staffing Plan; and (f) the waiver of the requirement to advertise a position. These are all areas that are subject to abuse and areas that have often been loopholes for those smart enough to jump through.

Under this proposal we are tightening up these areas to ensure that when we have designations, they are proper; where we have Caymanians able and willing, they get the job; and where we have proper business plans, the adherence to those plans. So, Madam Speaker, I see that as a very crucial strengthening of the Immigration Law (2007 Revision).

Madam Speaker, amendment 8 refers to the point system, as we know it under the granting of permanent residence, bringing into legislation the 100 point system which has been devised and proven to be quite useful in designating when someone has gained the right to become a permanent resident.

In order for the term limit provisions of the Immigration Law to work, some persons must be granted permanent residence after being judged against the point system set out in the regulations. As I said, the point system states that a person needs 100 points or more in order to be granted permanent residence. What this amendment is seeking to do is ensure that all persons who attain the 100 points after any deduction will be granted permanent residence.

It takes away a lot of subjective discretion, Madam Speaker, a lot of claims that a person did not get [residency] because someone did not like that person. When you have a system that makes it quite clear how you attain the points, and I think it goes up to a maximum of 200 points but you can pass the grade once you hit 100, then the applicants for permanent residence are under no illusion what they need to get. As if it were an exam, they need to hit the passing mark—100 points. Once they get that, no one can say they cannot get PR. They will be granted permanent residence. This gives confidence in the system, Madam Speaker.

All that I have been talking about thus far are provisions that give confidence in the Immigration Law to business persons and employees, and serves to strengthen everyone's understanding of where they are, who they need to go to, who has the power to do this, who has the power to do that. It is very important. It is a tidying up exercise, as it were, of the Law.

I referred earlier to the Resident and Employment Rights Certificate. Just to mention something that I omitted. Often times not just the person in the marriage may be out of that relationship. For any number of reasons that relationship might go south and we often find that [for those] persons who are victims of domestic abuse there are children involved. Therefore, speaking to that three-year permit that can be granted to those individuals, just to say that this is another aspect where the new amendment seeks to give those individuals who are the victims in such cases—the foreign spouse in many cases—the ability to have at least this part of their life steady to allow them to get through all of the other tough issues they are dealing with and to either reconcile or finalise a divorce. But it certainly works both ways in allowing the parties to know where they stand when such situations occur.

It stops abuse in terms of marriages of convenience because they can no longer go on and on pretending to be married when in truth and in fact they are not. They will know that this is going to come to an end sooner or later and they are going to have to justify why they should be given any more permits in this country. So there is protection on both sides—protection for us as a country and protection for the persons in a bad marriage who needs to be looked after until he or she can look after their own self again.

Madam Speaker, to my mind another important amendment that is being proposed, and I know the Chief Immigration Officer knows that I have been a proponent of this one for some time, is amendment 14 which is going to allow us to fingerprint work permit holders.

Before I go any further into that, there was a letter this week (either yesterday or the day before) in the Caymanian Compass. I am sorry that I do not have a copy with me. It was a letter written by a foreign national who is obviously on a work permit here and who had heard about this provision. It was speaking to what a nonsense it was and who are we, a small little country like us, to ask for people to fingerprint and it's a violation of this right and that right and I never heard more. Madam Speaker, why is it that every time we in the Cayman Islands try to do something to help ourselves, we have people from the outside telling us to do something else, and it's wrong and we don't have any sense, because it does not suit their purposes?

I am tired of it Madam Speaker.

The gentleman went on at the end of the letter to say that if he has to do this then he will not be renewing his permit. Well, I say, bon voyage! It must be something in his dark, distant past that he's worried about that he cannot have his fingerprints taken. Since when has the Cayman Islands been so reckless and stupid to take people's fingerprints and use them against them? He spoke in his letter about some of what it would be used for, as if it would be abused. This country was built on good firm commonsense with good people, Madam Speaker, long before I was here. I take great umbrage and great insult . . . I wish I could remember his name so I could call it. But it was a letter, I don't remember if it was in the Caymanian Compass or the Cayman Net News, but this gentleman obviously, whoever he is . . . I say to him, when it comes time for fingerprinting and he does not want it, then I will see him at the airport.

Madam Speaker, this is very necessary. All over the world we see the need for this. It is necessary to combat immigration and identity crime. We are in the process now as well of bringing in a national identification system, hopefully soon. That will involve fingerprinting. So I say, get used to it! It is the one thing that will help us to solve a lot of previously unsolved crime and to deter a lot of activity going forward in our community.

Work permit holders will be required to give an undertaking to provide their fingerprints at the time of the grant or renewal of their work permit. This allows for a phased in approach, not everyone having to get their fingerprints done all at once. That would be chaotic. We have 26,000 work permits in this country. Certainly, on renewal or upon the grant, and eventually as time goes by we will have persons on record. Those records will be very useful to the Chief Immigration Officer, his staff and the government as a whole, to control and understand who we have here to ensure that when something is done, if someone's name is called, then a fingerprint is on record.

Right now, we do not have any real . . . nothing, as it were. The two main things that we use in this day and age are DNA and fingerprints to serve as deterrents and to assist in solving crimes. There is nothing at all wrong with us bringing this in at this time. It will serve to also stop those who might otherwise have decided to come here who know that they have a dodgy past or may be traced because they will have to have a fingerprint record. They may say, Not going there. And we will be better off for that too.

Work permit holders have nothing to fear from this implementation. As I said, this is becoming the norm around the world. In fact, earlier this year, the UK introduced identity cards for foreign nationals which contains their photograph and fingerprints. I think that this is a move in the right direction and one that I wholeheartedly support. I am happy to see it being implemented at this time. I know this Bill will receive widespread support in this honourable House.

Madam Speaker, one final area I would like to speak to is amendment 22, which creates two categories of work permit: one being seasonal workers and the other being entertainers.

Presently, we have persons coming in for the high season. And for the upcoming high season I am sure this will be timely. They will have to apply for a six-month work permit. As we know, the tourist industry has complained that they need persons for eight months, because the season starts around October and does not finish until April or May, just before the summer months. So we need this period of eight months.

They now have to apply under the current system for a year application knowing they will only need two to four months (it varies) of that work permit because eight months would do the job. If they apply for a year, it would be a four month waste, as it were. This creates both an unnecessary expense on the industry and work for the Immigration Department. Madam Speaker, here we are showing that we are cognisant of the cost of doing business in this country. We are cognisant of the hardship that legislation can often impose, although necessary. Therefore, we are looking to reducing some of the expenses for businesses and provide a tailor-made permit that will suit their requirements at the time.

Madam Speaker, I applaud this change because it shows that we are not operating in a vacuum. We are listening to people's requirements in the workplace and working along with them as we have often done in this country under proper private/public partnership to ensure that their businesses do well and, as a result, our economy does well.

I am sure this will be welcomed news by the tourism industry and all those who will make good use of such a permit being offered.

The other one I mentioned was work permits for entertainers. Over the years this has been an interesting area, to say the least. I know from my days as fundraising chairman in the Lions Club of Grand Cayman that when we had to bring in artists it was an area that often caused us much grief. It was an area that we always felt needed some clarity, some tightening up. But we have seen also much abuse in this area by non-profit organisations falsely representing that they are the employers to assist the true hidden promoters to avoid paying work permit fees.

Now, that is sad. Certainly I know my Lions Club does not do it, but, obviously, there are clubs or organisations out there willing to assist entrepreneurs or promoters, as they call themselves, to make a few bucks by using their name and their good reputation. I think that is sad. It is certainly not wise. It does not help the organisation and I hope that they will desist from such activities. Any organisation or individual that will make a profit (in some cases they make losses, but . . .) is entitled to pay a work permit fee. That is the way the law reads.

Madam Speaker, we have also heard complaints over the years from the musicians talking about missed opportunities when they are not able to perform, if not individually, at least along with some of these foreign artists that come to the country. The new permit will require the Chief Immigration Officer to, among other things, take into account the views of the Cayman Islands Music Association and whether a local artist or act has been engaged to participate in the event.

Local artists will find that, because of this change, they are now offered better protection under the Law. I am sure they will be pleased to know that these cases are now being better scrutinised for them to be given an opportunity to show off their talents when we have foreign artists. I am fully in support of when we have foreign artists brought into this country that our local musicians are given a chance to play along with them, whether . . . well it would usually be as the starting act.

We have very good musicians in this country. Often times they have played on the stage of some of the biggest acts that have been brought to this country and at the end of the day they have made us all proud.

I know many of our local country shows with the big artists that we have brought as the Lions Club of Grand Cayman. I can think of some of the contemporary artists that come to our Islands regularly—Morgan Heritage, or someone of that calibre. You will see local artists opening for them and performing admirably. And that is how it should be. Our local artists should have a chance to display and share the big stage, for them to be given an opportunity later on to have successful careers either here or elsewhere. These acts that come in bring their own promoters, managers, and often times it is good exposure for our local acts.

We see them perform as well at Jazz Fest. The Minister, in his wisdom, has ensured that when Jazz Fest takes place we have a number of local artists on stage. We often rave about the performances of groups such as High Tide, Jah Mitch and his group, and K-K and all of the other local acts that often times . . . Rex Watler and his band (I know he'll kill me because I can't remember the name—and these are my local boys too!) These guys are extremely talented.

The Minister of Communication is saying that he performs as well. I haven't been there to catch him as yet!

It is good to see our local talent on display and given an opportunity. Yes, some of the older musicians as well. Often times Edlin Myles and that era of musician gets out there and performs. I think they are in the process of redoing Regeneration—one of our old bands that was very successful. I am sure they will be performing in the future around the place. It is good that these local musicians with great talent who have never hit the big stage, small island bands, are given opportunities to perform and showcase their talent.

If we do what we have to do in legislation, then so be it. We want them to be given equal opportunity. Their responsibility is to be professional, to show up on time, to ensure they are ready when they are given the opportunity.

Madam Speaker, I have not gone through all the amendments, but I did what I considered the most important ones, highlighting the many areas we are addressing and showing that we are a progressive Government.

The People's Progressive Movement is not one that is going to sit and wait until fees are left alone and have to be increased by 500 per cent or 1,000 per cent, or when you have to upgrade legislation from back in the 1970s to the 21st century. Madam Speaker, when you operate like that, you operate in a crisis mode.

This Government, is one that thinks carefully about what it does and about the impact of the decisions and policies we make on our population.

Madam Speaker, the rollover policy is something that we had to implement. It was put in place by the last administration. But when we got elected in 2005, we had to implement that policy. I am sure that all of the nay-sayers, although we still have some hardcore ones, are realising the wisdom in the rollover policy and what it has done for our own people. We are here to ensure that we protect our people, and give those coming here fair opportunity, but that we create an environment that is healthy and good for all to live.

We are living in serious times. I do not need to remind anyone of that. We have a recession in the United States, worldwide financial crisis. Let us hope that it does not go into a depression in the United States because I think if that happens we will need a lot more than fixes to our immigration policies and laws. It is often said that if the US sneezes, Cayman catches a cold.

We have to do what is right now, and we have to be forward thinking in this country. I dare say that we may get to the point where we will have to look at immigration quotas not just on nationalities but on numbers, period. Madam Speaker, I have said this before. There comes a time when, if it is all too easy to get a permit and you just do not want to go through that extra hurdle to try and work with one of your local people . . . yes, we have our local people who give us a tough time in the workplace. But we have those who are very, very good too. We have those who work 16 hour days, those who work 3 jobs. So, I do not like when people use a wide-brush approach and talk about Caymanians this and that. Caymanians are good, hardworking, and have always been passive and respectful people.

We have our bad eggs. Every place does. But we have to protect and we have to minimise, reduce the number of bad eggs. This is what we are doing through our education plan. The Minister of Education is working hard to ensure that we produce the highest standard of students that we can, and that we create opportunities for all levels, not just those who are academically gifted, but those who are good with their hands and other things.

A country does not operate one ministry or one department at a time, Madam Speaker. It is the whole that we are looking at. Therefore, when we put plans like this in place through the Immigration Law, it all ties in with labour, with education, to ensure that we are creating an environment for all to prosper. There is no use in our prospering and we have people coming into this country who are not going to be given a fair opportunity and are not going to be treated well socially and they themselves cause a problem.

On the other hand, there is no use in us taking care of all the expatriates that come here while we forget our own people because dog eat our supper. I think everyone understands that. We have to have social harmony for any country to progress in this world. As I said, we are living right now in tough times. Therefore, we may have to do many things going forward to change spending habits, to prioritise what we are doing. Some of the plans we had we may have to curtail. Who knows? We have to flex with the times, Madam Speaker.

But we have a sensible Government. The People's Progressive Movement is an adaptable Government. We know what is right. We have the pulse. We consult regularly and we are not a reckless Government.

Madam Speaker, I want to pay kudos to the drafters of this proposed Bill. I want to pay kudos to the Chief Immigration Officer, my good friend, and his staff. This gentleman, Madam Speaker, is one of the civil servants who has my highest respect. I know what he has tried to do since he has been Chief Immigration Officer. He takes his licks, like all of us; but he keeps on ticking. I can tell you he has improved that department big time. Therefore, anything we can do as an elected Government to assist him in what he is trying to do over there, I say Aye to that.

Madam Speaker, I also commend the Leader of Government Business for bringing this Bill to the House. It definitely has my full support and I expect that we will see more amendments in the future. I am here to support what is good for this country and shoot down what is bad. That's my job.

Madam Speaker, I thank you. And with that I pledge my support to this Bill.

The Speaker: We will take the luncheon break at this time. Proceedings will be suspended until 1.30.

Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to offer my contribution to this important piece of amending legislation that has been brought to the House by the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

It is the fulfillment of a promise the Government made from months ago to do what we can to further improve the immigration regime and in particular to deal with the whole question of how efficiently we are able to process work permit applications.

As the Leader of Government Business said in his opening, the huge rise in the number of applications that come before the various immigration boards since the inception of the legislation almost 40 years ago is absolutely mind boggling.

One second Madam Speaker. [pause]

Madam Speaker, I was looking for the actual numbers so we could have some indication as to the huge increase. I do not need to go back to the inception of this legislation dealing with immigration control and work permits and so forth, which was first passed back in the late 1960s. If you go back merely to 1994, the number of work permits in force was only 6,400. By 2004 that had risen to just over 19,000, and at the end of last month, the number is almost 26,000 work permits.

Notwithstanding the innovative measures that have been taken legislatively over the course of the last few years with the establishment of the Business Staffing Plan Board, the Work Permit Board and splitting away Permanent Residence and Caymanian status, these volunteer boards are still under immense pressure to process all the huge number of work permit applications that come before them.

So, as one would expect, despite the beefing up of the administrative staff and range of other measures taken to improve efficiency, it is still proving to be a huge challenge to turn around work permit applications in the kind of time the business community expects and, quite frankly, the competitiveness of this jurisdiction demands.

These measures set out in the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, which will hive off a significant percentage of the actual applications to be dealt with administratively, is one that the business community has looked forward to with great anticipation. The challenge will be for the Chief Immigration Officer and his staff to be able to fulfill what I know are very high expectations in this regard.

But the passage of this legislation, Madam Speaker, fortuitously at the present time when the world is facing a global financial crisis and there is lots of uncertainty and fear and concern and all of those kinds of things hanging around, is an indication of the importance this Government attaches to these particular provisions.

Madam Speaker, we are in challenging times. And those challenging times are bound to continue for the foreseeable future. It is important that the Cayman Islands does everything it can. This Government is very conscious of the need to do everything we can to facilitate business, to facilitate employment, to continue to make these Islands increasingly competitive and more attractive to investors, to businesses, both those that may come and those who are here, to ensure that the ones that are here continue to stay around at a time when there is bound to be global retrenchment and cost-cutting measures just to survive in this environment that is projected for the foreseeable future.

Madam Speaker, the Bill goes further than that. It deals with a range of other issues which have been thrown up as the legislation has been implemented over the course of the past year plus. It seeks to make right some of these anomalies which have become apparent.

My colleagues have gone into some detail about the impact of various provisions and various proposed changes to the legislation, so I do not plan to dissect the law in that way. But I do wish to speak to one aspect of the matters that are addressed in this Bill. These relate to the whole question of what has come to be known as the rollover policy and key employee status issues.

Madam Speaker, from the conception of the idea of a term limit policy there has been concerns. There has been criticism about the impact this would have on this jurisdiction and how it would affect the attractiveness of the Cayman Islands as a place to live, work and do business, and whether or not it would affect our competitiveness, affect the ability of businesses in the Cayman Islands to get the quality labour they need to be as productive as they would like to be. It is, always has been, a controversial subject. And no doubt it will continue to be so.

I was reading the Quarterly Review of the Chamber of Commerce, which just came out today, I believe. They have spent some time concentrating on what they call the "Immigration dilemma". They had a survey carried out and they have written a couple of articles about the whole rollover policy.

They have conceded . . . the article is actually written by Brent Fuller, who was here earlier. I just noticed it was actually written by him. It has conceded that . . . I am just quoting from this, with your permission, Madam Speaker. It was conceded that "the Chamber agreed on one point. The term limit policy made a change or devised but it seems unlikely the current government will agree to entirely remove some form of time limits on foreign workers' residency. Even groups that have asked government to consider exemption from the seven-year term limit, such as the Cayman Islands Tourism Association, have essentially agreed that not everyone can be granted key employee status or the right to stay on island for the rest of their lives."

One of the errors that I think is apparent to me from this survey, or one of the survey questions asked about whether or not the rollover policy was achieving its objective is this: These articles seem to have proceeded, and the questions seem to have proceeded on the premise that the principal objective of the rollover policy was to improve employment opportunities for Caymanians.

Madam Speaker, as one of the architects of the policy back in 2000 and 2001 when the team was set up, I can say that we all hoped that that would be one of its consequences, but that was never its objective, nor was the policy developed for that purpose. The policy was developed because of the huge concern which had existed up until the point when this legislation actually took effect back in 2004, that the sheer volume of expatriates living here long term was such that the local population felt it was being and would continue to be overwhelmed in numbers. And by 2004 the point had come when the number of persons not born here, not having any historical connection to these Islands had equaled those who were born here and/or had some historical connection to these Islands. And it was felt that this was a very unhealthy state of affairs. It did not do well for continued social harmony, and its stresses, strains and tensions created by the insecurity of Caymanian people had reached a very dangerous point.

On the other side of that equation, we had very worthwhile expats who had been here for long periods of time, whose children were born here, who had invested here, had homes here, but who did not have any form of security of tenure. This was an unacceptable situation. The country had been under pressure from various quarters, including the UK, to do something about long term residents who were here.

Madam Speaker, we may never ever know this, but I believe and lots of people speculate that the controversial Cabinet status grants made by the last government—the 3,000 (or thereabout) of those—was at least in part a consequence of the pressures brought to bear as a result of the sheer number of people who had been here for long periods of time who had not had the issue of their security of tenure properly addressed.

So, Madam Speaker, when we devised a new Immigration regime, one of the objectives was to try to find a system that was fair, which would allay local Caymanian concerns about being overwhelmed in their country by reducing the number of people who got added to the permanent population base over time. And by doing away, by and large [with] the expectations of foreign workers that once they came here they would generally be allowed to stay indefinitely until they reached the point when the pressures started to build about their security of tenure.

We must also remember that this was at a time when previous governments (plural) had implemented and continued a moratorium on the grant of Caymanian status for years. I think we must have gone 16 years with no grants of Caymanian status on the basis of long-term residence.

So, the team had a mandate to devise a scheme, as I said, which allowed Cayman to remain competitive. We looked at what had been done in places like Bermuda, which shared similar concerns, and had implemented a five-year rollover policy. We had advice and we did a tremendous amount of research which essentially said to us that 10 years was about the most anyone could be allowed to remain in our country without granting them security of tenure.

So, using that 10-year benchmark, we had to work back to a point where persons who got through whatever the residency requirement was would have a chance to apply for permanent residence, have their application considered, have an opportunity to appeal if they did not like the results and all of those things. Taking into account all of those things and the practicalities of how the system actually works, the conclusion was that the most the rollover period could be was seven years. So people were dealt with before the 10-year bar was actually breached.

Madam Speaker, we devised the present scheme whereby after seven years, unless you have been declared a key employee, your work permit will not be renewed beyond that point. You have to leave the Island for what is now one year (initially that period was two) before you could actually apply for another work permit. The whole point of that was to break tenure.

Madam Speaker, the system was never designed to prevent all foreign workers from having the opportunity to apply for permanent residence. What it was designed to do, and is doing I think very effectively, is significantly reducing the number of people who get beyond seven years to eight. But what it has also done is create a whole new certainty on the part of long-term residents. Not like the old days when you could hang around here for, in some cases, as long as 25 years without any form of permanent residence with all the attendant problems and issues that arise from that, particularly in relation to children of those persons who grew up in Cayman, speak like Caymanians, are culturally Caymanian, but do not have Caymanian status, can't go to government schools, can't apply for government scholarships, can't play on the national side. All of those things which a lot of people do not think about when they are considering this whole issue.

Now, if you get through to year eight and you get permanent residence—and most people who get through the seven year bar will go on to get permanent residence (I think the records show that, and will increasingly show that)—and then on to British Overseas Territory citizenship and ultimately Caymanian status. So there is a graduated process which results from year eight with security of tenure and, ultimately, the closest thing to citizenship, Caymanian status.

Madam Speaker, as you move around you do not hear the same concerns from Caymanians that once was the case. I could not tell you the last time I heard Caymanians complaining about people being granted Caymanian status. Why he got Caymanian status? Why she got Caymanian status? As it used to be.

Yes, there are still the strains and tensions by the sheer volume of foreign workers that we have here. But I promise you, Madam Speaker, as one who has invested himself in this community, that if we had not and if we do not continue to have a system which gives that level of comfort to local people that not everybody who comes here is ultimately going to wind up staying here indefinitely with all of the attendant rights and privileges which we would expect a person of Caymanian status to have, this place will blow.

It is one thing to sit and talk about the ideal world from an employment standpoint and that all employers should have the ability to choose whoever they want and keep them for as long as they want. I understand that, Madam Speaker. I spent 20-plus years in the private sector, the last part of which as a partner in the firm. I was an employer too. I understand the pressures and the needs of businesses to be able to have good, solid, productive people. And when you have a good person you do not want to lose him. So, I am not making light of that.

But I am saying that I want people who consider this matter to also appreciate that if the social harmony, which has been one of the huge selling points for this country, which makes it such a pleasant place to live, work and do business in . . . and anyone who has been around will start to understand what I am talking about. If you go to some places (and my Bermudan friends, forgive me) like Bermuda, where the tension between the local people and expats is palpable—you can feel it! If that were to ever truly get to that level in this country, this would not be the Cayman that most of us would want to live in.

So, the challenge for every government that has ever been, and the challenge for this one and any one to come, is going to be trying to get that balance right so that we continue to be attractive to business, but at the same time we have a Caymanian population that does not feel it is being completely overwhelmed and that they are going to lose complete control of their own destiny and the destiny of this little nation.

Madam Speaker, I am not trying to say that the rollover policy is a perfect thing. I am not even trying to say that it cannot be improved upon. What I can tell you is that as one who has been there before it was as a member of the team that developed the whole new immigration regime, I have not heard anything put to me yet which has suggested a better way to deal with it. We tweaked the key employee provisions and I am not saying that they cannot be improved upon. I certainly would welcome any suggestions which could make that system seem fairer, work better, all of those things. But of this I am absolutely certain . . . and I have spent nearly eight years thinking about this whole issue. I don't mean all day long, but the committee was appointed in early 2001 not quite eight years. Seven years plus.

But to go back to the "good old days," as some call them, which were really the bad old days when the system was open-ended, when people who came here lived from work permit to work permit not knowing whether it would be renewed; when, in many instances, the threat that your work permit might not be renewed was a real fear that many people had; when people could live here indefinitely but, because they offended some politician or some senior person in Cayman society (I am trying to be very careful) . . . those were not good days.

When people could stay here for long periods of time, have their children here and have them grow up here, they did not have any form of security of tenure and the children did not . . . is not what I regard as an honourable or reputable immigration regime.

The system that we have now, imperfect though it may be, at least it has the benefit of fairness and of certainty. People generally believe that their applications are going to be considered fairly, objectively. And when you come you know what the regime is no one comes under the illusion that this is indefinite unless they are made a key employee from the start.

The system has sufficient flexibility built into it that key employee status can be applied for along the whole of the seven year period. So an employer does not necessarily have to buy unsighted goods. They have the luxury of employing the individual, seeing how good the individual is, determining in the course of time whether or not it is an employee they truly want and, more importantly, whether they are really key to the particular business that that employer has.

Madam Speaker, even the greatest detractors of the system have now had to concede that the rollover policy has not worked to the detriment of the country in the way that many of the nay-sayers said it would. The actual number of work permits has skyrocketed since the implementation of the policy in January 2004—I should say, by the last government. Even though when convenient, the last government—particularly the Leader of the Opposition—has been quick to criticise the policy, or to distance themselves from the policy. He actually introduced the Bill.

But that is a good thing, Madam Speaker. That is a good thing on that point. And this is a rarity for the two of us. He and I were in agreement. The whole House recognised the critical importance of this issue at the time. Of course, like the cow who gives a good full pail of milk, he quickly turned around and kicked it over by granting 3,000 people status in one fell swoop.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, you take these gifts as you get them.

Madam Speaker, as I was saying, the actual number of work permits has gone from just over 21,000 in 2004, to 26,000 at the moment. But in addition to that, there were concerns that this was going to impact the quality of employee that we got, particularly in the high end jobs of accountants and lawyers and the like, that this was going to create a huge difficulty in persuading people to come and work in the Cayman Islands if they felt that they would not necessarily become key employees, at least not right away.

What we have seen is the opposite. In a statement made in this honourable House by the Leader earlier this year, he pointed out that the number of work permits granted to accountants has actually increased by 94 per cent; permits for lawyers have gone up 54 per cent; and permits for professional managers have increased by 24 per cent in the period to which he was speaking.

So, Madam Speaker, as I said, no one—and certainly not me—is trying to suggest that the rollover policy is ideal. But what no one that I have spoken to—and I have spoken to many people—has been able to suggest to me is how to reconcile these two issues in a way that does not involve some kind of time limit being placed on the majority of people who come here to work.

The dilemma is that if you let them stay indefinitely there are all sorts of reasons—good, moral reasons, human rights reasons, UK perspective reasons, international condemnation, whatever you want to call it—if you let people stay in your country indefinitely, grant them no security of tenure and not make any provision for their children . . . we just cannot do that. I think everybody will agree on that.

I do not know about everybody else, but most people who have been here for any length of time will also agree that to allow the situation where everyone who comes here will ultimately be able to claim some form of security of tenure is to create . . . well, not create, because we have had it . . . is to invite disaster because local people, Caymanians, people who have been here long periods of time will become overwhelmed by the sheer number of people who get added to the permanent population.

As I have said four or five times during this speech, the difficulty, the challenge is to get a balance which is workable, which on the one hand allows businesses to continue to grow, to succeed, to attract the right kind of people; but a system also which Caymanians can be relatively content with and not unduly alarmed by the sheer number of foreigners who are here.

And this is key, Madam Speaker. While many people rail about the sheer number of foreigners who are here, ask anybody who has a business whether or not they would be happy with immigration saying to them they cannot get any more work permits. You will get a response which is not very kind. This is a dilemma this country and all of us have been in ever since I can remember.

We all want the country to continue to grow. We all need the country to continue to grow. In fact, Cayman's success is premised on growth and development. It has always been so. And it does not matter how you look at this. The young Caymanian entrepreneur who is building apartments is depending on work permits growing to fill those apartments.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Oh?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: The businesses that are growing are depending upon a population growth to make their businesses viable.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: The challenge for us continues to be . . . and this is where the Leader of the Opposition and I disagree, because I think he'd like to make everybody Caymanian, give Caymanian status to everybody that comes and stays here a few years.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: And when he gets up, he can say that's not so. But that is certainly what most people perceive.

We can only allow that growth to happen in a way that does not really frighten Caymanians if we restrict the number of foreign workers who come here who do ultimately wind up with Caymanian status.

If we get back to the bad old days, pre-2004, where Caymanians were so fearful of all of these people getting status, you are going to see a very different environment from the one that presently obtains.

So, Madam Speaker, these measures which were taken by the government of the Leader of the Opposition back in 2004—which were actually policy initiatives developed or started by the government of the present Leader of Government Business when he was Leader of Government Business from 2000 to 2001—really demonstrate that despite the rhetoric which is a necessary part of the process, now that different people sit in different seats on different sides of the House, that essentially these initiatives have been supported by and large by both sides of this House.

Sensibly we all understand, as Caymanians, we all get the same representation made to us enough times to know that this is a matter that is near and dear to the hearts of everybody who lives and works in this country—not just Caymanians. Those who come on work permits need to know what the system is and want to believe it is fair and certain.

Madam Speaker, this is actually a continuum—starting back in 2001, the legislation in 2004, the amendments last year—these amendments are all part of an ongoing effort to improve the administrative regime and give legislative life to the policy and to improve upon what is presently there. The Leader alluded to a need for further amendments and spoke at some length about the fact that the Government is looking at other ways to improve the administration of work permits in these Islands and, particularly, to creating a system which provides more incentive to employers to be good corporate citizens and to continue to support, develop and advance the prospects of young Caymanians in the process.

I think, Madam Speaker, that long ago when we were developing this economy and building the system that we have, we conceded that (even if we did not want to accept it back then) to be able to staff, to run this very sophisticated system that we have, that well beyond my lifetime the country will still be required to import labour. I think that by and large we have now conceded that that is the case.

So, the ongoing challenge is to find ways . . . because things change, things have changed from time to time. The system is very dynamic. [The challenge is to find ways] to make sure that we are able

(as I keep coming back to) to create that balance which keeps our people relatively happy and content, that they will not lose everything that they hold dear, and that being Caymanian means something, really means something in their own country, but still allows businesses to grow and to develop, still permits the country to be attractive to people from elsewhere as a good place in which to live, work and do business.

So, Madam Speaker, I support this amending Bill that is before the House because this is another very important initiative on the part of this Government to improve our administrative regime and to help reach the objectives I tried to outline during my short speech in this honourable House today.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I want to make a few remarks on the Bill before the House.

We in the Opposition took the time to talk to Mr. Manderson and a team from the Immigration Department in regard to the Bill. They explained to us just how this proposal will work. So we are thankful to Mr. Manderson. We did not have any cause to get up and even speak because he and his team had done such a good job explaining how this will work.

On behalf of the Opposition, I certainly want to say how much we are thankful to Mr. Manderson and his team for taking the time to do so.

I might as well say too that I also know Mr. Manderson. I have seen him move up the ladder of success to where he is today. I have seen him struggle and come close to losing his life in doing his job as a young immigration officer. So, I know where he comes from, and I believe he is doing his job.

They are not his policies, Madam Speaker. The policies are those of the Government.

I have had to explain this to people over and over again when they call me up and say, Franz Manderson is doing this and he's doing that and he's doing the wrong thing, and his policy is wrong. It is not Franz Manderson's policies. The Immigration policies are the Government's. The policies are only carried out by his department.

So, when this Bill says that he will do this or do that, the public must understand that it is not him that will actually be doing it. If there are too many work permits, it is not his fault. Government lays out a policy and his department carries it out. It would be no different in this Bill and new procedure, because it now gives them an open door to grant them as quickly as possible.

Madam Speaker, let me say that the discussion here by the Government today, I listened closely to what the Minister who just sat down had to say. The discussions here today are a far cry from the sabrerattling days which was the order of the day, in particular by the Minister who just sat down.

I know everyone remembers the chorus Taking back Cayman. Immigration policy is wrong. Cayman for Caymanians. Too many people here. Too much development. I remember those days, Madam Speaker. But I kept telling them since 2005, that all that they had to say during the run-up to the election and the election campaign was not going to work and it was going to work against the people of this country because they raised expectations, making people believe that you did not have to have anyone here. And all my policy was saying was let us try to straighten it out so at least people know where they are at.

I will get back to this thing about status because they will have their people come behind ringing the same old tune. But Caymanians know different today.

[inaudible comment]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You had your say, just go to sleep.

Madam Speaker, let me tell him that when he made that statement that was on the front page of the Caymanian Compass, and I believe on the [Cayman] Net News (before they got in tow with the government somehow) that Caymanians and expatriates hate each other. When the Minister of Employment and Education said that, that started—

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I really do not want to get into a fight, but I certainly did not say that.

I know the article to which the Leader of the Opposition is referring, and if he wants to get it and cite exactly what I said, I do not have a problem with that.

And I do not want to get in a fight this evening, but I certainly did not say anything about Caymanians hating expats or vice versa.

But I know the article to which he is referring.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, do you have the article with you that you are quoting from? Or should we suspend to see if research can find it.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No.

Madam Speaker, let's not get into what he said. What he said was wrong and it was dangerous.

The Speaker: Okay.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: And if those are not the same words, it was words to that extent. Madam Speaker, if that is not what he said, then it was words to that extent carried on the front page of the two newspapers.

But I can say this: What he did then started a fire that was hot and unnecessary. We do not need division. The Government today, when they were in Opposition their whole thing was nothing but creating division and hatred in this country.

Let him not forget the choruses they sang.

Throughout time, immigration has either caused good or bad. I think it should be used for good. I do not have to look back on what we did to try and settle things in the country. I will say this: Remember what I said, and I quote, "Embrace wealth or reap poverty."

Listen to what the Minister had to say just now, it is a far cry from what he said some other times when it was convenient. "Our Cayman Islands, this country, can only survive where there is social harmony and we had all better learn that. Anything done, Madam Speaker, in particular in these times of financial instability worldwide, where the only constant seems to be the noise of falling stocks and bank closures and financial institutions closing, we need to be on our best behaviour here. Let no Caymanian believe otherwise that we are not on the edge of big trouble. I said so in January when I tabled the Motion to ask Government to re-look at their policies and I was told not on the best of mornings would they accept it. We are not in a stable position that can really tell us that we have a safe future. And Immigration can make us or break us."

The Third Elected Member for George Town said, "The Cayman Islands is flourishing."

Oh yeah?

Flourishing, eh?

Don't be so naïve.

Not because there are 26,000 work permits should that be taken as a yardstick to say things are rosy. While there are industries, businesses, and commerce as such that cannot be carried on here, as the Minister rightly said just now, at this point in our history without work permits, we cannot. Too much depends on it. And it would have been good if we had been saying this all along.

On the other hand there are Caymanians out of work and I hope that all and sundry understand that predicament. Whether a fair balance is found is the question. How is it going to be found?

Immigration is the problem of the ages for developing countries, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, perhaps somebody said this, I am sure it is not novel to say it now, but we need to look at how we can bring back Caymanians and those with connections who are living overseas to see if we can encourage them with benefits, other than just being connected to someone born here. Of course, this would be a two-way street. They must want to come back to this Island. But I believe this would be good for us.

We took that stance when there was a problem with so many permits in the casual labour sector back in the 1990s. Madam Speaker, you would remember when we were the government then. I fought for that policy in Cabinet to bring back the Cuban Caymanians. I want to take the opportunity here to draw attention to the need for Government to deal with the issues that I spoke about in the Motion for a solution to be found for those persons who are here really with an immigration position that is not resolved, such as Cuban Caymanians and others. And there is, as I said, a problem with even Caymanians that are born overseas, but to Caymanian parents.

One father called me this morning about it. I hope that for whatever trouble that they are having that that be worked out and that Cabinet would take that in hand and do something about it because it is annoying. When people hear you have 26,000 work permits and then they cannot get their child, they are born Caymanians, their child born outside over 18 years of age, having some sort of difficulty in getting the child regularised. We need to rectify that. All that does is just that. People say, Oh see? You are not taking care of us. And you have these 26,000 work permits.

So, Government needs to address these issues quickly.

Madam Speaker, as Opposition we are satisfied with what was said to us by the Immigration team. We now wait to see how it is going to work, what will happen there. I would imagine that separate and apart from the legislation there have to be policies promulgated by Cabinet. We wait to see how that pans out.

I was thinking when the Minister who sat down before I rose was talking about status grants . . . Perhaps one of these days, Madam Speaker, they will stop using it as a vote-getter and look at the real facts of the situation because when we got to that position, the present Leader of Government Business had said that there were 14,000 people whose immigration position needed to be rectified. He went on to explain the different nationalities, and I know it's in the Hansard. I have it amongst my papers.

Regardless of whether or not some say it is wrong, there are some that I would not give status to. But if they deserve it and they have been here that length of [time], then that's the way the system would work.

But if one or two persons had taken the Government to court for judicial review on the matter of the quota system that was stopped, it was going to be many more than 3,000. They would have been successful on judicial review. Couple that with the fact that the then Governor was granting permanent residency. Within one year people could get status. That was to a chosen few. I saw it happening. I said, not so. It must be an even policy. Within a year or two, people were getting status after they got permanent residency.

So, Madam Speaker, yes, we as a Government had a most difficult job, a job that we knew would be used against us. But something had to be done and maybe some people got through that were perhaps not as deserving as others.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [responding to the interjection] You got elected by it, but you won't do it again.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [responding to the interjection] You will?

No, no, no. This time I am more ready for you, and you have committed some sins yourself.

And so, those sins will haunt them as much as status grants haunt us. But let no one think that we just granted 3,000 or close to it (whatever the amount was) and that was the end of it. As I said, had it gone to judicial review many, many more than 3,000 would have gotten through the courts.

Madam Speaker, let them go ahead and keep using that. As I said—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You hear what the Minister is saying?

Now it's a whole different cry. Your Minister is saying it—Cayman for Caymanians.

Mm-hmm.

That was the tune then. Today it is "We have to grant these permits and our people might as well get used to it." That's what he just said.

Well, that was the situation back then.

Madam Speaker, I have a Motion to move, but I am going to wait, in regard to business plans and staffing plans. I am going to wait to see what happens. But I have a Motion to move and it will be one of censure.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Maybe we could take a suspension for 15 minutes. Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 2.45 pm

Proceedings resumed at 3.12pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Honourable Minister of Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to make a few brief remarks in support of the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, 2008.

The amendments contained in this Bill will further enhance what we consider to have in this jurisdiction, which is a business-friendly environment . . . and I say that, Madam Speaker, because it is important when you have an economy based on tourism and financial services that you have an efficient immigration system and a business-friendly environment. And when I say business-friendly, I am referring to businesses generally.

I know when people hear that term they tend to think in terms of large corporations. But in Cayman, like some other jurisdictions, the majority of businesses in this country are in fact small businesses. And many of them are owned by Caymanians. And many of those small businesses that are owned by Caymanians also require work permits through the Immigration Department.

For many years we have spoken in this country about the number of expatriate workers. As a country we really need to come to grips with the fact that we simply do not have enough Caymanians in this country to supply the labour demand. I believe that we are coming to that, most of us understand that. But there are still some elements that do not quite understand that.

Madam Speaker, we simply cannot produce Caymanians fast enough to satisfy the demand. So for a very long time in this country we are going to have to rely on migrant workers. In order for businesses to operate efficiently and effectively there needs to be a system in place to allow that to happen.

Madam Speaker, over the years we have made changes to the system that we currently operate. We have tweaked it here and there. But we are at a point now where the demand is such on these boards that they find it extremely difficult to cope. Let us not forget that these boards are essentially manned and staffed by volunteers that we as a Government appoint to them. These are people who, like the rest of us, have other jobs. Yet the demand on those immigration boards is such that these individuals are expected to, and indeed do on several days of the week, spend the entire day at the Immigration Department processing these applications and making decisions on them.

Madam Speaker, that is not a sustainable model. That cannot continue into the future. We cannot expect in this very competitive business environment for people to volunteer that level of time to this type of service.

For many years we have spoken about taking a lot of those functions away from the Immigration boards and dealing with as many of them as we possibly can at the administrative level within a very clear legislative framework. We have talked about this (and when I use the term "we" I am talking of successive administrations) for many years. I am very pleased that we have reached a point where this Government can bring this type of amending legislation to the House. I wish to take the opportunity to commend the Honourable Leader of Government Business for his presentation of the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I too am aware of the sacrifices and the important work that the Chief Immigration Officer, and even those who came before him . . . The current Cabinet Secretary is an example. They have all done tremendous work at the Immigration Department. I have known Mr. Manderson as well for many years. I have worked with him when I was a police officer. I know the calibre of individual that we are talking about.

I want to take this opportunity to thank the Chief Immigration Officer and all of his staff for the very hard work that they do every day on behalf of the country.

And not dissimilar to other civil servants and, indeed, politicians, they are often criticised for some of the things that they do. But when you deal with the large number of clients that they have to deal with on a daily basis and within a system that is very much antiquated, notwithstanding the recent improvements, and improvements that will be brought as a result of this Bill which will take us significantly further ahead . . . but a lot of the issues and a lot of the frustrations that have existed up until this point were essentially manifestations of a system that is and that was for a large part obsolete.

I am grateful that we can be as innovative as we have been with this legislation and to bring it to this point where we can pass it into Law.

Madam Speaker, in talking about businesses and the operation of businesses and making sure that we create an efficient environment for them to operate in, I wish to say a little bit more about small businesses and the contribution that they make to the overall economy.

Madam Speaker, that is precisely why we have given the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau a mandate to focus on small businesses. And they have been doing that. They have gone from district to district. They have made their services available to Caymanians who wish to develop businesses. They simply have to go with a concept or an idea and the Investment Bureau will help them with that process. They will look at numbers, projections in terms of cost, revenue, they have business plan templates available and they can make adjustments along the way to make sure that before they actually embark on a business that it is, in fact, a viable business. We have offered that level of support to small businesses and, as I said, small businesses are so important to the overall operation of our economy.

In talking about the economy, we understand the challenges that the global economy is having. Cayman is by no means going to be immune to that. We understand that there are challenging times ahead. And we will say more about that in due course.

At this point in time the Cayman Islands economy is performing exceptionally well, relatively speaking, because these are difficult times. The types of challenges that we have seen in the US market and now also in the European markets are challenges that we expect will eventually reach us. Just how soon? We have some idea and we've had various opinions on that. But I think we need to be clear about it.

There are going to be significant challenges ahead. In order for this destination to remain competitive there is going to be a need for not just this type of legislation, making sure that we pass these types of amendments to streamline the immigration process and make it more efficient in terms of processing applications, but there is likely going to be a need for additional types of legislation in other areas to ensure that we remain on the cutting edge and that we remain innovative and creative about the types of systems and opportunities that we make available in this jurisdiction during these very challenging times.

Madam Speaker, I think there were comments from various sectors before about how the system was slow and essentially stifling business. I believe that these amendments are going to address those concerns and that the time it takes to process a permit will be significantly reduced under this legislation.

There is also provided for in this legislation the ability and power for the Chief Immigration Officer to consider and grant seasonal work permits for up to eight months. I know that this amendment will be welcomed by the industry and, in particular, the tourism industry. There are times during the winter season when demands often require additional staff to be brought on board within a relatively short period of time. And because these applications were submitted through the normal process, and fell into the queue, it took a significant amount of time for them to be processed. In many instances, by the time they were processed there was no longer any need for the worker. So that particular establishment may have gone with a level of service that was below the standard that we would have wanted them to go with simply because the resources were not available because the system was essentially somewhat choking the processing of the applications.

Let no one be misled. This is a very, very important piece of legislation for the future of these Islands. It is an indication of the type of policies this Government intends to embark on to ensure that we maintain and enhance our business environment.

Madam Speaker, much has been said about other immigration issues and the 2003 Caymanian status grants, et cetera. I do not know that it necessarily serves us much of a purpose to extend that debate. But I cannot help but comment on a comment made by the Leader of the Opposition in response to another Member of this House when he said, when talking about the status grants, and I quote, "you have committed some sins yourself."

Implied in that, Madam Speaker, is an admission by the Leader of the Opposition that he did in fact commit a sin when he did what he did in 2003. And I will say that for what it is worth. But, as I said, I do not know if it is necessarily in the interest of this debate, this amendment or, indeed the country, for us to extend a debate on that issue.

I think we need to look to the future. We have, as all countries do in this current environment, significant challenges ahead. The time for divisive politics . . . and I know that the elections are some seven months away and you are going to get that. And we have heard some of that from the other side of the Floor already during this debate. But, during these challenging times it is incumbent on the Government and the Opposition to get together to put our resources together, to put all of our creative voices together and to work together for the betterment of the country.

Madam Speaker, I am one who believes that any economy built on the type of industries our economy is built on requires a level of sophistication not just within the business environment itself, but within the systems that process and regulate that industry and the applications that come from it. Anyone who comes to Cayman to do business, because we have branded ourselves the way that we have, expects that they are coming to a jurisdiction that is going to be offering sophisticated services. As we move forward it is incumbent on us as a Government to continue to make sure that we improve our systems, procedures and services so that we continue to enhance our business environment.

Madam Speaker, with those few words, I wish to commend the Leader of Government Business for his piloting this Bill through the Legislative Assembly. I certainly look forward to giving it my support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If not, does the honourable Leader of Government Business wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In listening to the various contributions it seems that while there may be individual and specific circumstances that Members wish to address, by and large, all those who have spoken spoke in support of the Bill, including the Members of the Opposition who spoke.

Madam Speaker, there were some specific issues brought out in Members' contributions. I would like to take this opportunity to address as many, if not all of them, as I possibly can.

First of all, before I go to the specifics, let me say that in discussions with the Chief Immigration Officer it has been recognised, and already moves are afoot to create the necessary links with Government Information Services in order to engage in the right public relations informing the public of not only these new measures which are to be put in place but also what obtains presently in the Law in various sections.

The truth of the matter is that I myself have heard conflicting stories coming from members of the department, meaning one member of staff saying that it goes a certain way, and another one saying it goes another way. That would happen every so often, but the Chief Immigration Officer also recognises that. There has been some specific training by way of bringing all the staff up to date with the Law. There has been some specific training through the University College of the Cayman Islands. This training is ongoing for staff.

What the Chief Immigration Officer has also done is to link up with the PRIDE programme. That is dealing with customer service. In recognising that many of the Immigration officers are frontline officers, and because in past years there have been complaints, the Chief Immigration Officer is ensuring that all of his staff, including the new staff, are very well trained in customer service.

So, those two programmes are ongoing. I think that both of them will go a long way in assisting the staff of the department in dealing with the public and the many requests they get.

Madam Speaker, an issue the Leader of the Opposition brought up was the result of a Private Member's Motion brought during this Meeting. The Government accepted the Motion and we said we were going to be looking at it and the Leader of the Opposition took the opportunity when he was making his contribution to this debate to ask about that situation.

I would just like to inform everyone that these people being referred to are people who by and large arrived here during the 1990s. At that time, the Executive Council gave them permission to not only land in the Cayman Islands, but also to work in the Cayman Islands without having to go through the process of acquiring a work permit.

As I understand it, what they were told at that time was that as soon as they met the residency requirement they were to apply for permanent residence and then eventually move on to perhaps getting the grant of Caymanian status.

Now, a lot of them did just that. And they are fine. But there are some who, for one reason or the other, because they did not have to work with a work permit simply continued on and did not make the application. What we now find is these people who, with the 2006 Law in force, do not need a work permit but have no travel documents and their situation with regard to immigration is not regularised. They can continue to work in the country, but there is great difficulty with children and with themselves and they cannot enjoy freedom of movement.

The fact is that they can apply for permanent residence because they have been here quite long enough. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, some of them may well have been here 15 years before 1 January 2004, but maybe not many. The plan is that there will be a window, an amnesty period (if I may call it). It is going to be done through the regulations where an amnesty period is going to be announced and these people will be encouraged to apply for their permanent residence. The fact that they are who they are will automatically give them X number of points towards their 100 points, which will give them almost automatically more than 100 points so they can pass the test and be granted permanent residence.

This will be for a finite period so that they can get sorted out. The Chief Immigration Officer is preparing the necessary amendment which will be done through the regulations so we do not need to wait for Legislative Assembly to do it. The announcement will be made and everyone will be made aware and then they will be guided through that process and that should take care of that. It is not something that we can have open forever because it is not meant to satisfy every circumstance but, rather, these specific circumstances.

Moving on, the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman brought up the issue of reduced fees for a grant of a residency certificate for persons of independent means.

Madam Speaker, the arguments put forth can be accepted. These arguments are that, as it stands, precedent has been set and Cayman Brac has fees for work permits, et cetera, immigration fees, at 50 per cent less than those required in Grand Cayman. In Grand Cayman, the fee payable on the grant of a residency certificate for a person of independent means is $15,000. At present in Cayman Brac it is the same $15,000. But all of the other fees in Cayman Brac are half of those in Grand Cayman. So, the argument can sensibly follow that for those individuals who wish to apply for a residency certificate being a person of independent means the fee should be half of what it is in Grand Cayman.

If we look at the Law itself, the requirements for a person to satisfy that residency requirement are less for those for those in Cayman Brac than in Grand Cayman in any case. So in truth and in fact, that really should have been dealt with from much earlier on.

Madam Speaker, we believe that that might be an incentive for persons to be encouraged to retire and invest in the Sister Islands. But the amendment that will have to be done to allow this will not be done through this piece of legislation as this is dealt with in the Immigration Regulations (2007 Revision). So, that will be done as swiftly as possible.

Madam Speaker, there was also a proposal brought out in the debate which speaks to persons born outside the Cayman Islands but who are of Caymanian descent that they should be afforded preferential treatment under the Immigration Law. The Law at present says [section 22] “(2) Any person who- (a) has attained the age of eighteen years; (b) satisfies the Board that he is the child or grandchild of a Caymanian born in the Islands; (c) is legally and ordinarily resident in the Islands; and (d) is not otherwise entitled to the right to be Caymanian, may apply to the Board for the grant of the right to be Caymanian.”

I think where the little hitch is, is that in the Law as it reads now, it speaks to “any person who is legally and ordinarily resident in the Islands.” The Second Elected Member for West Bay in speaking to this issue asked that the Government consider removing the requirement that such a person be legally and ordinarily resident in the Islands before being able to apply for the right to be Caymanian. And more generally, that persons with Caymanian ancestry other than a parent or grandparent should be given preferential treatment under the work permit system.

Madam Speaker, while the Second Elected Member for West Bay sees the answer to that as simply lifting the requirement for them to be ordinarily resident, I do not see it as simple as that. I totally appreciate what he is saying, and I would very much like for us to find a solution. And I give the undertaking . . . and in discussions with the Chief Immigration Officer, he is already putting his mind, along with his team, to find ways and means to achieve that.

But if we take the requirement of being ordinarily resident out . . . Madam Speaker, I just have not thought it through enough to ensure that in doing that we are not going to open up a gate that we do not want to. So we will look at that very carefully and whatever is the best answer, certainly we will do that.

Madam Speaker, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town spoke. One of the points he wanted to bring out was that it was not very clear in my introducing the Bill whether only those people who were applying for their first work permit would have to give fingerprints, or whether those who already had work permits and seeking renewals would also be required.

The answer to that is that the importance of maintaining an up to date database of fingerprints is very clear. I think it is all accepted by the vast majority of people. The proposed amendment in clause 14 of the Bill will allow for fingerprints to be taken both following a new work permit grant or a work permit renewal. So it takes care of the situations brought to light by the Member. It means that everyone who has a work permit will be required to be fingerprinted.

I believe that covers most if not all of the relevant points raised during the debate. Again, I wish to thank all Members for their contributions to the debate and I look forward as we continue this Meeting to getting to committee stage, making the two small amendments and seeing the Bill have safe passage.

Madam Speaker, with your indulgence, as I have concluded my wind up, I would just like to inform the House that we will go into Finance Committee at 11.30 am tomorrow, to deal with the final SAPE [Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates] for the 2007/08 fiscal year (ending 30 June 2008).

As soon as we have completed Finance Committee the Chairman will report back to the House at which time we will conclude the business on the Order Paper, which is to do committee stage and third readings for the Justice Bill and the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, and also for the Minister of Health, second and third readings of the Tobacco Bill.

So, Madam Speaker, if you would ask me, I would be happy to move the adjournment.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, if it is the wish of the Government to adjourn at this time, I will entertain a motion for the adjournment.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, very much, Madam Speaker. Perhaps we could vote for the second reading, and then we will take the adjournment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I was totally out of it.

The question is that a Bill shortly entitled the Immigration (Amendment) Bill, 2008, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Immigration (Amendment) Bill 2008 given a second reading.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move the adjournment of this honourable House until such time as Finance Committee for the final Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates is completed, and that will commence tomorrow at 11.30 am.

The Speaker: Before the question is put, I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition under Standing Order 11(6).

Raising of public matter for which the Government has responsibility

Recent case of Child Abuse

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I have been made aware, and I am sure that other Members of this honourable House were as well, that there has been a recent case of child abuse in this country that has a lot of our people in the community very unhappy.

Over and above the outrage shown by the public, this House and we as Members must be fair and balanced in whatever we do. Today there are parents that are hurting on both sides. It is important for us to consider these issues, not only with respect to the individual incident, but with respect to the wider ramifications for legislation in the Cayman Islands for the protection of our children.

As legislators, our role is to ensure that the values and morals of this country are reflected in its legislative framework. In this case it is clear that the value placed on protection of our children, especially with respect to certain unspeakable acts, is not at the right level. The types of incidents that have been occurring in this country over the past years, including a recent aggression among mere six year-olds at one of our schools, are a clear sign that we have increasing social issues in our country and that we are developing among us a certain tolerance for a type of behaviour that is detrimental to a stable society and the country generally.

Madam Speaker, I would like for the Minister with responsibility for children to consider examining the level of protection provided to our children in our local laws and to also use this opportunity to look at the wider legislative framework dealing with issues affecting families and social services generally.

We have enough problems in this country at this stage, and we must not allow the protection of our most valuable resource—our children—to be subjected to acts of this nature.

Our community is right when they call on us on this issue and we must listen to them and deal expeditiously with this problem regarding the protection of our children.

I only raised this because I have had so many calls as Leader of the Opposition as to what I am doing in regard to this. So I raised this to get an answer from the Minister responsible for children at this time or at some other time in regard to it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

We are in the process, and have just about finalised the amendments to the Children Law. We are working along with the legal drafting. There are about two or three more that need to be done that we have identified recently. Once that is finished, it will be sent to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until Finance Committee completes its business on the Supplementary Annual Estimates. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 3.50 pm the House stood adjourned until the conclusion of Finance Committee.

MONDAY
13 OCTOBER 2008
10.37 AM
Ninth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. And I will ask at this time, Madam Speaker, that we remember in our prayers the family of Estella Scott [Roberts]. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.
 Proceedings are resumed.

Proceedings Resumed at 10.39 am

READINGS BY THE HONOURABLE
 SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
 AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Speaker: I have no messages or announcements.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
 AND OF REPORTS

Annual Report of the Ministry of Community Services, Youth, Sports and Gender Affairs for the year ended 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Communications, Works and Infrastructure.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.
 Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report for the year ended 30 June 2005 under the Ministry of Community Services, Youth, Sports and Gender Affairs.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.
 Just briefly to say that, as the title indicates, this Ministry was not mine. I only spent about five weeks in the Ministry when I took over responsibility as Minister. As can be seen, the Ministry then changed to the Ministry of Communications, Works and Infrastructure from the Ministry of Community Services, Youth, Sports and Gender Affairs.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Report of the Standing Business Committee –
 Fourth Meeting of the 2007/08 Session of the Legislative Assembly

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report of the Standing Business Committee for the Fourth Meeting of the 2007/08 Session of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: No, Madam Speaker.

Report of the Standing Business Committee –
State Opening and Budget Meeting of the 2008/09
Session of the Legislative Assembly

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report of the Standing Business Committee for the State Opening and Budget Meeting of the 2008/09 Session of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: No, Madam Speaker.

Cayman Islands Compendium of Statistics 2007

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Cayman Islands Compendium of Statistics 2007.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Serjeant would you lay the Report for the Third Official Member please?

Honourable Third Official Member do you wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker, just briefly.

This publication presents the annual social, economic and environmental data on the Cayman Islands for the 2007 calendar year. The data in the Compendium was compiled from various public and private sector entities. It represents the status of the data as at 30th June 2008, but it is in respect of the position at the end of the 2007 calendar year.

The Cayman Islands' Compendium of Statistics 2007 contains sixteen (16) chapters as outlined in the Table of Contents. It also features on page one (1) "The Cayman Islands at a Glance" which highlights key socio-economic indicators.

The data presented in this Compendium provides a comprehensive set of measurements on social and economic activities within the Islands. When these are compared with corresponding past periods they provide valuable indicators in specific sectors as well as the economy as a whole. They are therefore useful in identifying and analysing possible issues to aid business planning and policymaking.

Madam Speaker, I would like to clarify that while these statistics are compiled by the Economics and Statistics Office, the offices that provide these statistics remain responsible for the analysis and explanation of the trends shown by the statistics.

The Cayman Islands' Compendium of Statistics 2007 includes economic indicators that were previously reported in the Annual Economic Report 2007, which was tabled in this honourable House in August. I will therefore not dwell on economic data in this Compendium, but will highlight some of the very important social and environmental indicators on education, health, other social services and traffic accidents.

Education, which is considered one of the key areas in the Compendium, is covered in Chapter 2 and includes all areas that give vital support to this sector. I can report that the total enrolment for 2007 for students of both government and private schools (that is, reception to secondary school levels) increased by 6.4 per cent over the previous year.

Matters such as health and other social services are seen as areas of paramount importance as they speak to the wellbeing of the people of the Cayman Islands. In 2007 the school clinic visits in Grand Cayman experienced an expansion by 52 per cent to reach to 10,997, from 7,201 in the previous year. The social assistance program also benefited more individuals. At the end of 2007, there were 1,911 beneficiaries, an increase of 3.7 per cent over 2006.

Road traffic accidents increased in 2007 to 1,310 as compared to 1,186 in 2006. Of note, however, is that while the number of accidents increased in 2007, the rate of increase was significantly less than the 144 per cent increase experienced in 2006. George Town continued to be the location for the largest number of road accidents accounting for 66 per cent of all traffic accidents.

Madam Speaker, I would like to conclude by mentioning that new sets of statistics are included in this year's Compendium, such as the educational attainment and status of the population aged 15 and above in 2007 (as shown by Table 2.09b in the Compendium). It also indicates the profile of households by reference to information technology facilities (as provided by Table 10.02b in the Compendium) and ownership of dwellings (which is shown in Table 10.03b).

This publication remains a current, reliable and relevant document for the enhancement of policy advice, planning and research for government, the private sector, students and researchers.

The Economics and Statistics Office is committed to the mandate of providing quality and timely information to the Government and people of the Cayman Islands. To this end, we aim to keep the contents of the Compendium of Statistics in step with the ever changing nature of our society. For this reason, we welcome comments from the community on the adequacy of the contents therein. Comments can be directed via email to info.stats@gov.ky.

The Cayman Islands' Compendium of Statistics 2007 will be circulated to the general public through the website of the Economics and Statistics Office at www.eso.ky.

I cannot do justice to the vast amount of information contained in the Compendium without taking an inordinate amount of time. Although it is statistics that are presented in the Compendium, it is done in a readily understood format.

I implore members of the public to obtain the 2007 Compendium because it contains information, which should be the basis for informed and reasoned debate and discussion. Although it is captioned "The Cayman Islands Compendium of Statistics 2007", it does not restrict the information contained therein to the 2007 calendar year, but, rather, 2007 is simply the most recent year for which information is presented. It contains data for many years before 2007, making the establishment of trends in the data, where they exist, easy to establish.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Annual Report of the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Development and Commerce for the 2004/05 Financial Year
(Deferred)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, with your permission I beg that this report be deferred until a later sitting of this Meeting.

The Speaker: The question is that the Annual Report of the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Development and Commerce for the 2004/05 Financial Year be deferred to a later Meeting. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Honourable Leader do you want it to a later Meeting, or a later sitting?

[inaudible answer from the Leader of Government Business]

The Speaker: Excuse me.

The question is that the Annual Report of the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Development and Commerce for the 2004/05 Financial Year be deferred to a later sitting of this Meeting. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Annual Report of the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Development and Commerce for the 2004/05 Financial Year deferred to a later sitting of this Meeting.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 37A Parcel 87 (Part) to the National Roads Authority

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 37A Parcel 87 (Part) to the National Roads Authority.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just to briefly outline to Members of this House and, indeed, the public, the recommendation.

This parcel is part of the property owned by the Crown, which is the property in and around where Northward Prison is. The East/West Arterial Road that is gazetted dissects this parcel and the 9.2 acres, approximately, will be on the northern section of the gazetted road. The road is not built, but the gazetting is done.

Where the National Roads Authority (NRA) is now located, they need more land space and certainly they do not need to house all of their equipment in the heart of town or in the industrial area. That Crown land was deemed to be convenient and in checking with the Honourable Chief Secretary and all of his agencies, that portion of the property is not envisaged to be needed for the foreseeable future.

Madam Speaker, the Governor in Cabinet recognised the need that the NRA had and, after various consultations and the necessary procedures according to the Governor Vesting of Lands Law, the recommendation was made by the Cabinet through the Ministry and now down to the Legislative Assembly for the vesting.

Thank you.

Legislative Framework for Educational Entitlement in the Cayman Islands

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House a document entitled A Legislative Framework for Educational Entitlement in the Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the premise of the Education Law (1999 Revision) is now a quarter of a century old. This legislation was designed in another time for another era. Since that time, and in particular during the last three years, much has happened to render this legislation inadequate to deal with the regulation of education in the Cayman Islands and the challenges and opportunities that this presents in the 21st Century. A new legislative framework that provides for educational entitlement in the Cayman Islands that empowers and liberates education professionals and that fully reflects the degree to which education is central to the future of these Islands is, therefore, required.

These legislative deficiencies that have become evident in the Education Law (1999 Revision) include the fact that the Education Law (1999 Revision) is, as the Education Law Review concluded in 2007, more a set of general rules on matters which have from time to time received attention rather than a fully coherent structured enactment.

Another deficiency is the absence of any reference to the Minister who has responsibility for Education and his or her responsibilities for this fundamentally important subject area. The dependency on an education council to perform a large number of supervisory and administrative functions, which potentially inhibits the efficient management and development of education, is also another identified deficiency.

The absence of any statutory underpinning for a system of independent evaluation of school performance across the jurisdiction, along with provisions which facilitate this process and ensure that the findings of such evaluations are formally recognised and acted upon so as to improve school performance is also a deficiency.

Further, Madam Speaker, the unsuitability of the manner in which it is anticipated that tertiary institutions are recognised and established in the Cayman Islands and the dearth of provisions which speak to the regulation of tertiary education in the jurisdiction and the importance of quality assurance in this sector, is also a weakness in the present legislation.

Moreover, the currency of the Education Law (1999 Revision) has been further undermined by the significant advances in education that occurred since the inception of the National Consensus on the Future of Education in the Cayman Islands, and the unanimous endorsement of this landmark document by the Legislative Assembly in October 2005. This blueprint for change has resulted in numerous initiatives in pursuance of the ten strategies identified therein, including the following, which, in particular, would at least in part benefit from legislative reinforcement.

These are:

- The identification of education at the forefront of the national agenda and the vision that the Cayman Islands become as well known for our commitment to and best practice in education as we are for financial services and tourism.
- The prioritization of teaching and learning of an education system that places students at the centre of all its activities.
- The commitment to the creation of an inclusive world class education system where all students have the greatest possible opportunity to realise their individual potential, as evidenced by the reforms collectively, but also specifically by increased provision for students who have additional education needs.
- To service orientated approach of the new department of education services headed by a Director of Education Services instead of a Chief Education Officer.
- The recognition that early childhood education requires specific attention, which is now being delivered by Early Childhood Services in the restructured Department of Education Services.
- The role and function of the new Education Standards and Assessment Unit, which has replaced the old Schools Inspectorate, and the alignment of the work of this unit with that of the restructured Department of Education Services so as to mobilize and focus the full efforts and energy of the entire education system on improving performance.
- The introduction of Cayman's first ever National Curriculum.
- The increased funding provided to private schools and the belief that these funds should make a tangible difference to the student experience of these schools through improvements in teaching and learning.
- The commitment to lifelong learning through which all Caymanians will have the opportunity to develop, improve and refresh their skills, thereby better preparing our people for the reality of the workplace and ensuring that they are best placed to benefit from economic opportunities as these evolve over time.
- The announcement of the Brighter Pathways—Brighter Futures initiative, which will ease the transition from secondary education into the workplace, or an expanding range of tertiary options.

- The desire to increase the compulsory school from 16 to 17 in order to ensure that all Caymanian students have a better opportunity to embark upon one of the pathways identified in the Better Pathways—Brighter Futures initiative.
- The need for post-16 programmes of secondary education to continue beyond age 17, which, for example, would facilitate the introduction of the two-year international Baccalaureate Diploma Programme as a key component of the Better Pathways—Brighter Futures initiative.
- A greater appreciation of the value of technical and vocational education, which is also central to the Better Pathways—Brighter Futures initiative.

Madam Speaker, as these points evidence, the education reforms underway in the Cayman Islands have, as promised, placed the student at the very centre of the system and it is now high time that education legislation in these Islands similarly embodied this fundamental principle.

In November of last year I announced to the Legislative Assembly that work was indeed underway to modernise our education legislation which would also ensure that all advances are, nevertheless, rooted in the traditions and culture of these Islands. As I explained then, our education system and the law that underpins it must be both globally competitive and locally relevant.

In order to advance this process the expertise of the highly recommended legal team from the National Union of Teachers in England and Wales was enlisted. Following extensive consultation with a range of stakeholders, including students, parents and the general public, teachers and other education professions from both the public and private education sectors, along with Members of the Legislative Assembly, a Report was produced and this Report was also presented to this honourable House by me on 21 November last year.

This Report contained an outlined of the proposed new education legislation, which provided, as I noted at the time, an excellent basis for a new law which will secure systemic change, increase accountability and, at the same time, liberate the teaching profession.

Since that time, work has continued and this draft has been further refined. A more advanced draft of an Education Modernisation Bill has now been produced by the Ministry of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture in conjunction with the legal team from the National Union of Teachers in England and Wales. This has now been forwarded along with drafting instructions to provide for a specific early childhood legislation to the Legislative Drafting Department for review and, if necessary, adaptation to comply with local drafting conventions.

However, in light of the far reaching importance of the proposed education modernisation legislation, it is only right that the Legislative Assembly and the general public be further apprised of the developments with the draft legislation and afforded the opportunity to comment on the draft before a bill is produced and brought to the Legislative Assembly for passage.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker, this paper details each part of the proposed legislation and provides a commentary which seeks to explain the underlying policy aims and objectives. Together with the accompanying early childhood legislation it is anticipated that these legislative advances will establish an overarching framework for educational entitlement in the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, with your leave I am going to spend a few more minutes going through the various chapters of the draft legislation.

The Bill is to be called The Education Modernisation Bill, 2008. The Education Modernisation Bill, 2008, will commence with a preamble. This is an explanatory statement which outlines the major objectives of the legislation, including the commitment to lifelong learning.

Part 1 of the Bill, Chapter 1, commences with identifying the education functions of the various entities that it is anticipated will contribute to the future governance of education in the Cayman Islands. It is essentially the statutory outcome of Strategy 1 of the National Consensus on the Future of Education in the Cayman Islands, which called for the development of an administrative framework for a new education services.

Notably, the primary responsibilities have been assigned to the Minister with oversight for this important subject. This makes practical sense and will facilitate the further advancement of the education reforms in these Islands. The Minister will then implement policy through the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Education, who, in line with the Public Service Management Law 2005, will also exercise oversight of the administration of the education services.

The governance of education will additionally be augmented by an Education Advisory Council, so named to reflect its new function. As the Education Law review of 2007 suggests, the Education Advisory Council may provide advice on strategic policy across the education continuum. In the discharge of all its functions the Council should be defined as making recommendations to the Minister for which the Minister will be accountable in the usual way to Cabinet and the Legislative Assembly.

The relative functions of the various entities and their interrelationship with one another are therefore clearly identified with a view to providing a decisive mechanism for decision making and implementation. Along side these powers, the proposed legislation also provides for complementary accountability in the form of the range of duties which ensure that the Legislative Assembly and the general public are fully informed on the position of education in the Cayman Islands, primarily through the production of an Annual Education Report.

Part 1, Chapter II of the Bill defines the various terms contained throughout the legislation, including definitions of the various types of education, which together comprise the education continuum along with the appropriate age range for each stage.

The definition of school has been divided into several categories so as to reflect the fact that many non-governmental schools in the Cayman Islands receive public funding and are, therefore, properly defined as assisted schools. All schools should be licensed and it is anticipated that further detail on licensing requirements will be contained in regulations.

Part 1, Chapter III of the Bill provides for a "compulsory school age". It is proposed that this commences at 5 years of age, although in practice there remains the option to facilitate earlier entry if deemed appropriate.

Reflecting a widely held belief that many of our young people require further education before they enter the workplace, it is also proposed that the compulsory school age be extended to 17. In order to ensure that the compulsory school age is respected, the proposed legislation places a duty on parents and legal guardians to secure attendance at school, albeit with a mechanism to provide for a waiver so as to properly allow for home schooling under certain conditions.

In respect of government schools, the proposed legislation specifies that no charge may be made for admission or in general for the basic education provided.

Part II of the Bill enshrines the exceptional work of the Curriculum Overview Taskforce in creating the first ever Cayman Islands' National Curriculum, which was itself created to fulfill strategy 2 of the National Consensus on the Future of Education in the Cayman Islands. With extensive public input a national curriculum which embodies the full "Profile of the Educated Caymanian", also contained in the National Consensus, has been created and is now being implemented in government schools. It is, however, only right and proper that this landmark achievement, along with its structural outline, is contained in primary legislation thereby registering its major importance.

Part III of the Bill regularises the role of our old School's Inspectorate, which is now known as the Education Standards and Assessment Unit, and emphasises the important contribution that the officers in this unit can make to the cycle of improvement in our schools. As such, the proposed legislation seeks to secure outcomes from the evaluations undertaken by the Unit.

In order to perform this role it is necessary that the Education Standards and Assessment Unit and its Director have a measure of independence, although at the same time it is also important that they work, particularly as it relates to government schools, aligned with the restructured Department of Education Services, as it is the Department that is ultimately accountable for acting upon the issues identified in their valuations.

It is intended that this cycle of improvement will culminate with a further evaluation by the Education Standards and Assessment Unit in order to assess and measure improvement. Where the anticipated improvement is not forthcoming, the proposed legislation also provides for some remedial measures designed to safeguard the educational entitlement of all students.

Part IV of the proposed education legislation seeks to additionally support the quality of teaching and learning through the registration of teachers, thereby ensuring that all teachers possess the requisite qualifications.

The Department of Education Services, in conjunction with the Ministry of Education, has already undertaken significant policy development in this area in order to inform the recruitment process in accordance with the directive to improve human resources, policies and practices, as outlined in strategy 4 of the National Consensus on the Future of Education in the Cayman Islands. This policy will therefore form the basis of the regulations that are anticipated under this part of the proposed legislation.

Part IV of the proposed legislation also envisages a significant role for the redefined and reconstituted Education Advisory Council, which will, importantly, provide some independent procedural guarantees for teachers who are the subject of disciplinary action.

Part V of the proposed education legislation specifically provides the Minister of Education with the power to provide funding to assisted schools and rightly anticipates that conditions may be attached to any such grants. This reflects the long established practice of providing financial assistance to non-governmental schools and also the policy developments in this area that have accompanied the increases in such funding in recent years.

Part VI of the proposed education legislation addresses the value and importance of technical and vocational education and training. This was mandated by Strategy 8 of the National Consensus on the Future of Education and, while significant advances have already been made at the tertiary level, provision should also be made in secondary schools, particularly at the post 16 stage, in line with the Better Pathways—Brighter Futures initiative.

Part VII of the proposed education legislation provides for the power to make tertiary education provision. In addition to a power to cause tertiary institutions to be established, it is also anticipated that the Minister may enter into agreements with third parties for the provision of tertiary education in the Cayman

Islands, which would then be regulated by the terms of that agreement. In addition, however, where necessary, the proposed education legislation also provides for the creation of secondary legislation to supplement the regulation of the conduct and management of institutions providing tertiary education, which may also make the continued operation of a tertiary institution in the Cayman Islands subject to conditions relating to the conduct and management of the institution, as well as the quality of the courses of study provided.

Part VIII of the proposed education legislation fulfils in part the goals identified in Strategy 3 of the National Consensus on the Future of Education document. However, in order to realise all of the targets contained in Strategy 3, it has also been necessary to draft separate legislation that deals specifically with additional ancillary early childhood needs. It is anticipated that the two pieces of legislation will nevertheless work in concert with one another and that they will be presented to the Legislative Assembly in their final form at the same time.

An Early Childhood Unit has already been established, the work of which falls under the remit of the Department of Education Services. The proposed legislation therefore recognises the role of the Director of Education Services particularly as it relates to the quality of teaching and learning where applicable in early childhood settings.

Part IX of the proposed education legislation expressly prohibits corporal punishment in all schools in the Cayman Islands, and in so doing reflects the long establish policy prohibiting such punishment in government schools. Recognising the importance of good behaviour in the establishment of a positive and productive learning environment, which has indeed been reflected in the schools concept that has already improved discipline and performance at George Hicks, and which has been a guiding principle in the design of our new secondary campuses, the proposed education legislation will mandate that every government school possess a written pupil behaviour and discipline policy. Moreover, it will also be a condition of funding that all assisted schools similarly possess a written pupil behaviour and discipline policy.

Part IX of the proposed education legislation, finally provides for the disciplinary authority of teachers so that it is clearly defined in law and understood by all parties.

Part X of the proposed legislation makes provision for additional education needs. This terminology has been specifically adopted in lieu of "special education needs", which is often used, because one key-stone of the education reforms underway in the Cayman Islands is that all students are in some way special. Additional education needs are therefore more inclusive and reflect the current endeavours, where possible, to make exceptional provision for students in need so that all students have an opportunity to realise their individual potential.

In addition to defining the term, the proposed legislation details the policies and procedures as these relate to the identification of additional educational needs, and the duties of schools in the assessment of and provision for additional needs which are subject to the periodic evaluations by the Education Standards and Assessment Unit.

Part XI of the proposed education legislation addresses the use of school facilities, which is particularly important given the anticipated multiple community usage of the new government education facilities currently under construction. In addition, the proposed also specifically identifies that it may be useful to seek agreements with assisted and independent school proprietors to promote community use of the school premises and its facilities.

Part XII of the proposed legislation rightly recognises that special provision may have to be made for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, although this should not be viewed as an indication that any lesser provision is intended. Indeed, over the last three years, education in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman has benefited significantly from a firm commitment to equity in education across all three Islands, not least in the provision for additional educational needs.

Part XIII of the proposed legislation simply provides scope for other miscellaneous provisions. At this point, the only inclusion anticipated here is that a nuisance or disturbance on school premises which disrupts the education provided will constitute a criminal offence. This is a response to a significant challenge that educators in our schools have articulated for some time.

Madam Speaker, I do hope and believe that this update on these important developments will be useful to all Members of this House and indeed the broader community. This has been an immense effort over the course of the past three years to get us to this point. I am confident that by the end of the year we will be in a position to present, with the help of God and the continued assistance of my good friend, the learned Attorney General, the Second Official Member in this House, we will be in a position to present a bill to this House.

I look forward, Madam Speaker, to hearing what Members of this House and, indeed, the broader community have to say about the draft, which I have laid on the Table of this honourable House today.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, and the House, for your indulgence.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

Sympathy and Condolences to the family and friends of Estella Scott-Roberts

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Women Affairs.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise with sadness and a heavy heart to make these comments.

As the Minister responsible for Gender Affairs, I would like to extend my deepest sympathy and condolences to the family and friends of Estella Scott-Roberts. Madam Speaker, I do this also on your behalf, [on behalf of] the Leader of Government Business and this entire Parliament, my Ministry and, I would say, a shocked and somber nation.

She was an unwavering advocate for women and she fought diligently to protect those most vulnerable and victimized. Estella Scott-Roberts was taken from her loved ones too soon and in a manner so cruel and calculated that it is hard to fathom at this time. Madam Speaker, I will add to this sentence, although not in my comments—a prime case for capital punishment, better known to all of us as the death penalty, which we know has been done away with. I have no apologies for saying that.

Our community has been robbed of a caring and strong woman whose purpose in life was to be of service to others. This unimaginable crime is an assault on every man, woman and child in these Islands. I condemn this senseless act, and I say to the individual or the individuals responsible that we will not be silenced; we will not be afraid, and justice will prevail.

And, to the family of Estella, I promise that we will continue her work and carry her in our hearts forever. The entire nation, Madam Speaker, is saddened.

Madam Speaker, I and my colleagues are distraught and to express our true feelings is an impossible chore right now. What we do know is that whatever assistance is needed to solve this brutal and senseless crime must be had immediately. We will be calling on His Excellency the Governor to act immediately.

Madam Speaker, with your permission I would like to pause for a moment of silence in memory [inaudible] [of] Estella.

The Speaker: May we be upstanding, please.

[The House paused for a moment of silence in honour of Estella Scott-Roberts]

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

And with your kind permission I would like to take this opportunity to read an invitation that was sent to me some time ago from the Business and Professional Women's Club in regard to a silent march they had planned for this Saturday.

I had another commitment but, Madam Speaker, I have cancelled that to make sure, and I would invite all of my colleagues here to take one hour to come as many people throughout the Islands come together. I will just read the invite: "The Business and Professional Women's Club of Grand Cayman would like to invite you, your family, colleagues and loved ones to this year's Silent Witness March, which is scheduled to take place on Saturday, 18th October, 2008.

"Each year the Business and Professional Women's club holds the Silent Witness March starting at 12.30 and ending at 1.30 pm. The March begins at the Government Admin Building passing by the Immigration Building, the Central Police Station and the Courts Office, and ending on the steps of the Legislative Assembly for a brief ceremony."

For those who are not familiar with this, the Silent Witness March originated in the United States in 1990 as a reaction by women artists and writers to the growing number of victims of domestic violence in their small town in Minnesota. The solution was to speak out by creating 26 freestanding life-size red wooden figures bearing the name of a woman who once lived among them whose life had been violently ended at the hands of an ex-husband, partner or acquaintance. A 27th figure was added to represent those countless women whose murders went unsolved or were erroneously ruled accidental.

The organisers called the figures "The Silent Witnesses", which were escorted along with 500 other women who showed up for that first silent procession on 18 October.

Finally, in closing this area Madam Speaker, I must say to our people that we must stand up as a community, as a society, and condemn the savagery. And only we, within ourselves, can put a stop to this. Some of us know these perpetrators. They must be exposed and [we must] get help for them.

Madam Speaker, in times like these the entire nation is upset; a call for this and that. Madam Speaker, as in many things, we can bring in the police, the entire Scotland Yard, Metropolitan Police, the FBI, whatever, but it all starts within ourselves. Let's use our internal police, our conscience. Let's get back to the days when these Cayman Islands were all about the family. And no matter what we spend on police, judges, whatever, it makes no difference if we don't deal with this ourselves.

SECOND READING

Tobacco Bill 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House and speak to the Tobacco Bill 2008, and to recommend it for passage into law.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I need you to move the Motion for the Second Reading.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg to move a motion for the Second Reading of the Tobacco Bill, 2008.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is opened for debate. Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Bill is shortly entitled, A Bill for a Law to regulate the labelling promotion, sale and distribution of tobacco products to prohibit their use in certain public place; and for incidental and connected purposes.

Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands will join many other countries across the globe when we vote to have this legislation in place. To pass this legislation will show that we recognise that tobacco use is one of the single greatest public health threats in the world today.

It may be helpful for me to provide a reminder of the global position and the origin of this legislation, and I will read from the World Health Organization when this was first established under what they termed as the FCTC (Framework Convention on Tobacco Control).

The World Health Organization (WHO) is a proponent of a global public health treaty aimed at reducing the burden of disease and death caused by tobacco consumption. It was adopted in June 2003. Surprisingly, the Convention quickly became one of the most widely embraced treaties in the history of the United Nations. Within two and a half years it boasted more than one hundred contracting parties. It officially entered into force in February 2005, and by the end of 2006 the total number of parties had reached the 142 covering more than three quarters of the world's population.

The Convention addresses tobacco control from both the supply and demand sides by requiring price and tax increases on tobacco products, complete bans on tobacco advertising, promotion and sponsorship and visible pictorial health warnings on all tobacco packages.

Article 8—Protection from Exposure, Tobacco Smoke (better known as secondhand smoke) identifies proven measures for reducing the health harm cause by secondhand smoke. Case studies show that countries where legislation is enacted to ban smoking in public places witness decreased consumption of tobacco products, partly because it encourages people to quit. Furthermore, Madam Speaker, there is no vigorous evidence that these bans have a negative economic impact on the hospitality sector.

Just to speak on smoke-free environments, the scientific evidence leaves no doubt, 100 per cent smoke-free environments (SFEs) are the only proven way to adequately protect the health of all people from the devastating effects of secondhand smoke (SHS). Several countries and hundreds of sub-national and local jurisdictions have reached this conclusion and successfully implemented laws that require almost all indoor work and public places to be 100 per cent smoke free. These jurisdictions report large and immediate health benefits showing that smoke-free environments are feasible and realistic in a variety of contexts.

Madam Speaker, in March 2004, Ireland became the first nation in the world to create and enjoy smoke-free indoor workplaces, and public places, including restaurants, bars and pubs. Within three months Norway's smoke-free legislation entered into force. Since then, their example has been followed by more countries, such as New Zealand, Italy and Uruguay territories, and many more cities and communities across the globe.

Large parts of Canada and the United States of America have been made smoke free through provincial or state legislation. Now, 80 per cent of Canadians, and 50 per cent of USA residents, live in a jurisdiction with all public and workplaces smoke free, including bars and restaurants. Similar situations exists in Australia where almost all Australians would enjoy completely smoke free indoor public places by October last year.

Other countries, such as Spain, Guinea and Mauritius, also took important steps with legislation banning smoke in work places to protect the health of all workers.

Niger and Uganda are now strengthening implementation of existing legislation to protect health and help make the population more aware of the dangers of exposure to secondhand smoking.

Other countries, such as England, will bring in or extend legislation in 2007 to make all indoor public places and work places, including bars, cafes, pubs and restaurants, 100 per cent smoke free.

Singapore's already progressive smoke free policies will be extended to include air-conditioned karaoke lounges and nightclubs.

On the city level, the citizens of Hong Kong now enjoy smoke-free indoor workplaces and public places, including childcare centres (thank goodness), schools, hospitals, places of detention, refuge and reformatory schools, and all indoor areas of restaurants; karaoke establishments, residential care homes and treatment centres.

Evaluation reports continue to flow in from Ireland, New Zealand, Norway and other places, showing that comprehensive smoke free laws improve health, reduce tobacco consumption, are popular with both non-smokers and smokers, and have no negative economic impact on the hospitality sector.

Madam Speaker, the benefits of smoke free places are undeniable and the movement to smoke-free environments is growing with unstoppable momentum. Public health actors, non-governmental organisations and other civil society representatives, policy makers, governments and the general public, are raising their voices together to ensure workers and the public are protected from exposure to secondhand smoke by creating and enjoying 100 per cent smoke-free environment.

By making workplaces and public places 100 per cent smoke free inside, we keep the bodies in those places smoke free inside also.

Just to continue, Madam Speaker, to share with you facts about secondhand tobacco smoke.

What is secondhand tobacco smoke? Secondhand tobacco smoke refers to the smoke from burning tobacco products generated by people smoking them. The tobacco industry has also called it environmental tobacco smoke (ETS). When tobacco smoke contaminates the air, especially in enclosed spaces, it is breathed by everyone exposing both smokers and non-smokers to its harmful side effects. And because it is inhaled by people that are not actively smoking, it is also commonly referred to as involuntary smoking or passive smoking.

Secondhand tobacco smoke causes cancer. There is no doubt, Madam Speaker, breathing secondhand smoke is very dangerous to your health. There are over 4,000 known chemicals in tobacco smoke. More than 50 of them are known to cause cancer in humans.

Secondhand tobacco smoke also causes heart disease and many serious respiratory and cardiovascular diseases in children and adults which could lead to death.

Madam Speaker, there is no safe level of exposure to secondhand tobacco smoke. Almost half of the world's children breathe air polluted by tobacco smoke. This was staggering to me. Exposure occurs anywhere smoking is permitted, whether it is in homes, workplaces, or public places. The World Health Organization estimates that around 700 million children—or almost half of the world's children—breathe air polluted by tobacco smoke, particularly at home.

Findings from the Global Youth Tobacco Survey (GYTS) developed by the World Health Organization and the United States Centres for Disease Control and Prevention, better known as CDC, amongst students 13 to 15 years old in 132 countries between 1999 and 2005, show that 43.9 per cent of the students are exposed to secondhand tobacco smoke at home; 55.8 per cent of the students are exposed to secondhand tobacco smoke in public places. Seventy-six point one and three quarters, almost, of the students surveyed expressed support for smoking bans in public places. These are the students saying this, Madam Speaker.

Secondhand tobacco smoke contributes heavily to the global burden of disease.

Worker deaths: The International Labour Organisation (ILO) estimates that at least 200,000 workers die every year due to exposure to secondhand smoke at work.

Interestingly, a recent report estimated that around 80,000 people died in the 25 European Union countries in 2002 due to secondhand smoke related conditions.

The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) estimates that secondhand smoke is responsible for approximately 3,000 lung cancer deaths annually among non-smokers in the USA, and that up to 1 million children with asthma have their condition worsened due to the smoke.

Madam Speaker, secondhand smoking is also an economic burden. The cost of this is not limited to the burden of disease. Its exposure also imposes economic cost on individuals, businesses and society as a whole. These include primarily direct medical costs, but also productivity losses. In addition, workplaces where smoking is permitted incur higher renovation and cleaning costs, increased risk of fire and they experience higher insurance premiums. Quite interesting.

A recent study by the United States Society of Actuaries estimated that secondhand smoke exposure results in more than US$5 billion in direct medical costs, and more than US$5 billion in indirect medical costs, such as disability, lost wages and related benefits, annually in the USA.

In Hong Kong the annual value of direct medical costs long term and productivity loss due to secondhand smoke exposure is estimated to be US$156 million.

The United States Occupational Safety and Health Administration estimated that clean air would increase productivity in the USA by 3.5 per cent, saving US employers $15 billion annually.

Evidence on the damaging health effects of exposure to secondhand smoke has been accumulating for more than 40 years, Madam Speaker. So this is not evidence that sprung up over night. Today there is clear scientific consensus based on hundreds of studies in adults and children. Smoke causes serious and fatal diseases such as heart disease, lung cancer, asthma and others.

Madam Speaker, “The debate is over. The science is clear. Secondhand smoke is not a mere annoyance, but a serious health hazard.” And this comes as a quote from former US Surgeon General, Richard Carmona.

To protect the health of all people against secondhand smoke, it is recommended that a 100 per cent smoke-free environment is the only effective strategy to reduce exposure to tobacco smoke indoors to safe levels, and to provide an acceptable level of protection from the dangers of secondhand smoke exposure. Ventilation in smoking areas, whether or not separately ventilated from non-smoking areas, does not reduce exposure to a safe level of risk and is not recommended. Recommended WHO legislation requires all indoor workplaces and public places to be 100 per cent smoke-free environments.

Laws should ensure universal and equal protection for all. Voluntary policies are not an acceptable response. Implementing and enforcing the law passing smoke-free legislation is not enough. Its proper implementation and adequate enforcement requires relatively small but critical efforts and means.

Implement educational strategies to reduce secondhand smoke exposure, especially in the home. Smoke-free workplace legislation increases the likelihood that people, both smokers and non-smokers, will voluntarily make their homes smoke free.

How to counter tobacco industry myths. Madam Speaker, as expected, most of the opposition comes from the tobacco industry.

Even though effective smoke free laws are popular, policymakers and the public must be prepared to respond to the many and oft used arguments aimed at stopping their passage and implementation. The main opposition, as I said earlier, comes from the tobacco industry often using a third party, such as hotel and restaurant associations to promote its argument, while the industry itself does its best to stay out of the public debate, which is natural.

One of the [inaudible-recording skips] it is not a nuisance, it is a health hazard. To support their claims the tobacco industry and its supporters will probably point that outdated or non-peer reviewed studies—many of them financed (quite interesting) by the tobacco industry itself or affiliated organisations—conclude that there is not enough evidence to affirm that tobacco smoke is dangerous. The fact is, Madam Speaker, it causes at least 200,000 deaths a year in the workplace alone, 14 per cent of all work related deaths caused by disease and 2.8 per cent of all lung cancers.

Another myth: The courtesy of choice concept (where smokers and non-smokers live in harmony) ignores the serious health consequences of secondhand smoke. However, the tobacco industry has used it as one of their strongest marketing campaigns, claiming that this approach promotes tolerance and requires the accommodation of smokers and non-smokers in the same enclosed spaces.

Madam Speaker, evidence and experience do not support the tobacco industry's claim. Voluntary agreements that urge tolerance from non-smokers are not effective in protecting the public from the harms of secondhand smoke and might become a barrier to the establishment of real effective protective measures. For example Madam Speaker, in Finland, Ireland, New Zealand, Uruguay, California and elsewhere, policymakers concluded that voluntary measures did not adequately protect public and workers' health, and have therefore chosen to enact and enforce a 100 per cent smoke-free environment.

Madam Speaker, even though the tobacco industry—another myth—will try to convince business owners and policymakers, supporting their allegations with biased studies that lack rigour in their analysis, not a single independent and rigorous peer review study has proved that smoking bans result in negative results. Independent studies in Canada, Ireland, Italy and other cities, like El Paso and New York, show that on average business remains at the same level or even increases after the smoking bans.

Studies around the world of sales and employment data before and after the implementation of smoke free policies have found either no impact or a positive impact within the hospitality sector.

Another myth: Smoke free laws do not infringe anyone's rights; they are about protecting people's health by regulating where to smoke and where not to smoke. On the other hand, it is worth remembering that most do not smoke and most who smoke want to quit. Many smokers do not use tobacco by choice, but due to an addiction caused by the nicotine in all tobacco products.

The right of a person to breathe air free of poisons takes precedence over the right of smokers to smoke in public places and endanger the health of others.

Madam Speaker, this is not about accommodation or the freedom to use a legal product; it is about where to smoke to avoid endangering the health of others.

It is interesting to note, Madam Speaker, that the tobacco industry has known for decades that smoke free policies represent a serious threat to its business. They commented at one time, the most dangerous development to the viability of the tobacco industry that has yet occurred was this legislation. If smokers can't smoke on the way to work, at work, in stores, banks, restaurants, malls and other public places, they are going to smoke less.

There are a lot of other facts in here, Madam Speaker, on how this legislation was fought against by the tobacco industry. I just want to leave a few comments with the House and the listening public, the importance of going smoke free inside:

- Secondhand tobacco smoke kills and causes serious illnesses.
- One hundred per cent smoke-free environments fully protect workers and the public from the serious harmful effects of tobacco smoke.
- Everyone has the right to breathe clean air, free from tobacco smoke.
- Most people in the world are non-smokers and have a right not to be exposed to other people's smoke.
- Smoking bans are widely supported by both smokers and non-smokers, which I alluded to earlier.

- One hundred per cent smoke-free environments help prevent people, especially the young, from starting to smoke.
- One hundred per cent safe smoke-free environments provide the many smokers who want to quit with a strong incentive to cut down or stop smoking altogether.
- One hundred per cent smoke-free environments are good for business, as families with children, most non-smokers, and even smokers often prefer to go to smoke free places.
- Lastly, 100 per cent smoke-free environments cost little and they work.

Madam Speaker, I may duplicate some of the things that I read from there but I think it is good for reinforcement.

It has been noted that tobacco use enjoyed at one time—and I remember growing up [it was] a glamorous image for quite some time—its use has spread across the world over the past couple hundred years. It has been quite a shock to many to come to know the reality of tobacco consumption as a literally deadly practice.

I suspect, Madam Speaker, that some persons, young smokers especially, probably still find it hard to believe that while they are coolly drawing on their smoke they are also literally poisoning themselves.

Madam Speaker, tobacco is the single greatest cause of preventable death in the world. I will repeat that: tobacco is the single greatest cause of preventable death in the world. If current trends continue, 500 million people alive today will eventually die prematurely from tobacco related diseases.

As the Minister of Health, I will not condone the easy access by our people to tobacco in the name of profit for a business. And I would like to pause here, and I will probably do it again, to congratulate Hurley's for taking a decision to stop selling tobacco products. And there are other businesses that have taken that initiative without having to wait.

This tobacco epidemic is a major threat to global health and poses more daunting challenges than traditional health problems because, Madam Speaker, it involves a powerful addiction, deeply established social customs and beliefs, as well as a history of undermining the efforts of public health.

Globally, the number of persons dying annually from tobacco smoke is 5 million, and this number is expected to increase significantly by the year 2030.

What has the local position been? How should we read the public's view expressed vigorously since the prospect of tighter controls in tobacco use was promised by the government? Madam Speaker, this is one case where it could not be said that the public have not been involved.

Madam Speaker, the advocates of tobacco control may say, and some have already said, that it has taken far too long. I will go further and accept that I have been wrongly criticised for delaying action on this, and I agree and apologise for the at times unavoidable delay. What can seem like a fault sometimes conceals a greater strength. Not every disappointment is a misfortune, as we say.

The elapse of time since the tabling of the discussion draft of this Bill has been marked by receipt of input from the public and private interest. Up until Friday, a week ago, public input was received. And there has been much effort put into weighing up these considerations and crafting appropriate amendments.

Madam Speaker, I have submitted to you a number of amendments which we will do at committee stage. And, with your permission, I could just comment on the effect.

In clause 2 (the definition section), "advertisement" is amended to be compatible with amendments in section 11 of the substantive Bill. Section 11 has been changed in two places, such as the first wording in 11 (1), which is amended in order to avoid circularity. It was noted that in the original draft subsections (1) and (2) referred to each other in such a way as to create redundant statement.

Secondly, the blanket prohibition against use of the brand elements of tobacco products by retailers has been changed to allow for this to be controlled by regulations to be made. This would create the possibility that retailers could be allowed to display signage on a controlled basis at point of sale, not a proliferation of them all over the place.

Section 8 has also been amended in response to a problem just brought to our notice by persons potentially affected by the rigorous control on use of tobacco brand elements.

The intent of the Bill is to come to grips with the many and varied ways used to promote the use of tobacco. Once we were made aware of a problem among retailers of certain goods, which share a brand element with tobacco products . . . and I will just give an example of Cartier. The original legislation would not allow duty free stores to sell some of their memorabilia and stuff like that. We hastened to prepare the amendment which allows for suitable regulations to be made, and we will continue to consult with the relevant parties in so doing.

Section 25 (2) is amended to confirm the powers of the Governor in Cabinet to make the regulations referred to in section 8, as amended.

Section 9 as originally drafted, would prohibit a person giving a cigarette, say, to a friend. It will now be amended to be more clearly directed at the original target, that is, businesses giving tobacco products amongst other kinds of promotion efforts in order to promote use of their tobacco products.

Section 14, the amendment here simply adds the words "or premises" for completeness to avoid any doubt that an authorized officer may, acting on reasonable grounds enter any part of the environments of a public place in order to carry out inspections as required.

Section 21 is amended to allow the Director of prisons to designate smoking areas on the grounds of the prison in response to representations made in that regard.

Madam Speaker, overall I do believe we have a better Bill now, one that certainly reflects the public's view. Even so, Madam Speaker, as we know this version is not perfect, legislation, especially the kind that has immediate practical impact, is very difficult to get right. I trust at the committee stage between us we can make the Bill as close as possible to what it needs to be.

There has been from the outset strong support for this Bill, as I alluded to earlier. The purpose of which—I must say emphatically—is to protect the health of every man, woman and child of the Cayman Islands. This is not just an empty phrase. Tobacco smoke affects the quality of the very air we breathe. Whether we wish to or not, we become consumers of the lethal combination of carcinogenic chemicals contained in tobacco smoke as long as smoking in public places is permitted. Control of smoking in public places is one broad area covered by the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I should add that it has been most encouraging to see a number of businesses either stop selling tobacco products, such as Hurleys (as I alluded to earlier), or actually, establishments going smoke free, like some of the bars and restaurants. It is very pleasing to hear them say their businesses have not suffered as a result, which is one of the predictions made by those who had opposed the Bill.

Madam Speaker, the other broad areas of the Bill are interrelated. Hence, still on the supply side, tighter controls over the merchandising of tobacco products are necessary otherwise we would be allowing unregulated supply and effectively promoting demand.

On the demand side another broad consideration of the Bill is to staunch the proliferation of marketing appeals, especially to the younger more impressionable segment of the population.

Madam Speaker, I think it would be helpful, especially to the listening public if I give a bit more specific detail about the content of the Bill.

Honourable Members will have noted that the Tobacco Bill seeks a multifaceted approach to achieve its purposes. In the interest of clarity I will speak to the major aspects of the Bill as follows: The Tobacco Bill is geared toward protecting minors, our youth, that is, persons under the age of 18, from the use of tobacco and related products.

Some may not be aware, but the younger you are when you begin to smoke the more likely it is that you will remain an adult smoker. It is noted that nearly all first use of tobacco takes place during high school, and, for the most part, persons who do not start using tobacco in their teens never use it. It has also been found that persons who start smoking at younger ages are more likely to develop long term nicotine addiction than persons starting later in life.

The National Drug Council has found that the percentage of seventh graders having their first cigarette has increased from 6 per cent in 2000 to 9.8 per cent in 2006.

There is reason for concern, Madam Speaker. And one of the proposals in this Bill is that the sale of tobacco products to minors should attract fines of up to $5,000 for a first offense and, for a subsequent offense, may include imprisonment too. As usual, with this kind of legislation the actual prohibition of smoking is one of the more contentious aspects. This is so, even though it is well known, as I extensively spoke of earlier, that secondhand smoke is a serious public health hazard, which leads to premature death in children and nonsmoking adults.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I make no apology for moving to prohibit the use of tobacco products in certain public places. My Ministry's responsibility is to protect the health of the general public. In the case of tobacco use what this requires is that we move as much as possible towards a smoke-free environment.

I will interject here, Madam Speaker, that as I go to PAHO (Pan American Health Organization) and WHO meetings, I would not be surprised because of the continued discoveries of the seriousness of tobacco smoke that it will be put in the category of taking arsenic. It may take longer, but I know that this is how it looks. So, this is probably just a bridge in here and many of us may have concerns about the banning for whatever reason. But, Madam Speaker, I would just say that this is the feeling I get as the world health care providers look at this and discover beyond the shadow of a doubt the dangers.

There are concerns from some members of the public with regard to the definition of a cigar bar. But I wish to offer an assurance, that the definition is most appropriate and would not encourage a proliferation of cigar bars as feared due to the effort and cost involved. Cigar bars will be required prior to registration to have installed a smoke ventilation system approved by the Planning Department. Such a system will not be cheap to install or operate, which should prove a significant deterrent.

The use of environmental health officers in the Royal Cayman Islands Police will assist in compliance with the law. The officers will conduct routine inspection of registered business premises. They will be looking, for instance, to confirm whether if, as required, the management of all places where smoking is prohibited has posted 'No Smoking' signs bearing the international No Smoking symbol indicating that the establishment is smoke free.

Madam Speaker, entities dealing in tobacco products will require registration, as such, in order to have their Trade and Business License application considered. Their registration certificates must also be publicly displayed. The authorised officers will be empowered within certain limits to exercise search and seize procedures, where warranted, by apparent contraventions of certain statutory provisions.

Madam Speaker, the legislation is at the heart of effective tobacco control, and tobacco control is a critical component in the drive toward improvement of public health. In view of this, and with the new Public Health Department to be established soon, we consider the Bill an immediate priority to fast forward progress toward arresting the epidemic of chronic non-communicable diseases which has taken its toll right across these Islands. This legislation represents a strong action to benefit the health and wellbeing of the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, I just noted in the Royal Gazette from Bermuda, where the Government there launched a Smoking Cessation Programme. I will briefly read:

“A Smoking Cessation Programme for Bermuda is being set up by the Ministry of Health.

“Eight percent of the Island's residents smoke, according to the 2006 Health Survey — a reduction from 17 percent in 2001.

“It is hoped that figure could be further cut since the Bermuda Tobacco Control Action Plan increased tax so that a pack of 20 cigarettes now costs $8.

“Smoking is a major cause of death and disease from coronary heart disease, cerebrovascular disease, lung and other cancers and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease.

“Further, smoking during pregnancy is associated with adverse outcomes such as low birth weight babies, premature deliveries, spontaneous abortions, stillbirths and neonatal deaths.

“Studies show the most effective smoking cessation programmes combine regulatory efforts, economic approaches, education strategies, clinical intervention and management programmes.”

Finally before closing this presentation, Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Tobacco Legislation Steering Committee, which was chaired by Dr. Kumar, and all of its members. I want to thank Mr. Stephen Miller, who must have gotten frustrated at me at times, and his people in Legal Drafting; my Cabinet colleague, the Honourable Attorney General, for guidance and consultation on some of these touchy issues; former member of staff, Mrs. Jeannie DaCosta, who was the senior administration officer in the Ministry in the early days that worked closely with the committee; and in the final days, my Deputy Chief Officer, Mr. Leonard Dilbert (who took over from Mrs. DaCosta) and brought the legislation to fruition. And for those whom I have missed out I want to thank all of them.

I wish, Madam Speaker, to commend and thank all parties involved, as I said earlier, in bringing this Bill which will help us to realise a healthier tobacco free Cayman Islands. I recommend the Tobacco Bill, 2008 for favourable consideration.

Thank you.

[inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: The suspension will be at a quarter to one. We came in here at quarter to 11.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just bear with me please.

Madam Speaker, I rise to offer my support to a Bill for a Law to regulate the labelling, promotion, sale and distribution of tobacco products, to prohibit their use in certain public places; and for incidental and connected purposes.

My colleague, the Minister of Health, has just given a very good introduction to this very important Bill. This piece of legislation has been on the cards for some time, and it is one of the things that this Government has taken some stick for and the fact that it has not come before this House before. But, as mentioned by the Honourable Minister, there are a number of reasons for this and there were many times late objections and late suggestions which had to be incorporated. I am sure the draft persons had their hands full, as well as the Minister and his staff, and his task force.

Madam Speaker, this is legislation that changes forever the landscape of these Islands. This is important legislation and, as we all know, it is human nature to resist change. No one likes being told what they can do from what they cannot do, something that has been around from creation, I guess. I don't have any proof of that but I am sure people were smoking from way back in cavemen days, I guess, and we are now in this world trying to rid society of this, dare I say, evil.

Many of us became victims of smoking. As we know, the Minister outlined a lot of statistics and reasons why cigarette smoking is bad for one's health. I know you, Madam Speaker, used to indulge. But you have, thankfully, put it behind you. I am sure the Minister who is looking up at me now, my colleague, [laughter] will be forced to one of these days, because it will become more and more difficult for all of my dear friends and others who like the odd cigarette.

It will become difficult. We see it and cannot fool ourselves as we go around the world traveling as parliamentarians. There are very few places now that one can enjoy smoking without some harassment or restriction. The airlines instituted it many, many years ago and in the States wherever you go now, public buildings, hospitals or wherever, there is no smoking.

Madam Speaker, I am certainly 100 per cent in favour of the banning of cigarette smoking indoors. I have no apologies to make in that regard. I guess I bring a certain bias to that position because I have been asthmatic all my life and anyone with my condition certainly cannot tolerate or deal with cigarette smoke too close to them.

I was just telling the Minister that I was away last weekend off Island, and the hotel I was staying in was a smoke free hotel. But just outside the hotel there was an area where patrons were allowed to smoke. There was another entrance (thankfully it was not the main entrance) and I made the mistake one day of walking through that area. It was outdoors but it was an area where people smoked, the butts were there in the cigarette trays, and there were a lot of them. I walked through that area and it was not very wise of me in my condition, but I did, and I can tell you just walking through that area—about 25 feet, no more—to get inside the hotel, I felt my chest and lungs suffering from that.

So, no one needs to tell me about the dangers of cigarette smoking and how it affects the individual, especially those in my unfortunate case who suffer from asthma.

So, Madam Speaker, I would like to make it absolutely clear that I fully support a 100 per cent ban on indoor smoking, as I said before. And even with my condition—and I guess I could be forgiven for saying there should be absolutely no smoking on this earth—I am not so fool hearty. I do understand where we are coming from and where we are trying to get.

Again, in some of my discussions with the Minister I have said to him, and I know he understands that it is difficult to go from A to Z in one fell swoop and we have to take it as it were, in baby steps. I think the banning of cigarette smoking indoors would be a major step, a major accomplishment.

I too am happy to see a lot of businesses taking the initiative on their own without the legislation being in place. I want to commend those businesses. I would also like to commend, as the Minister did, the very bold step taken by a supermarket chain, the Hurler Group, who stopped the sale of cigarettes. Cigarettes for a long time have been an important source of income to many businesses. And small retailers, such as the one that I own, in many cases certainly look forward to the revenue derived there from. But, Madam Speaker, dollars and cents in this world are not everything and I too recognise that very important fact.

So, Madam Speaker, my support for this Bill is with certain caveats, and I know great efforts have been made to take on board the many representations made by many groups and businesses in relation to what is proposed and where the exemptions are inserted.

Madam Speaker, there are certain areas that I would like to bring attention to, to ensure we have a Bill that is smooth in its operation and a Law, once passed, that is smooth in its operation and will give the best result. I know that eventually we would like to rid these Islands of cigarette smoking. That has to be the goal. But I believe that for the time being there is a real need for sensible exemptions at this time until we get society tuned to the point where eventually society itself will be very comfortable moving to a full non-smoking environment.

I believe that day will come because when you have to go and inconvenience yourself every time you want to smoke a cigarette, eventually you're going to say, Enough is enough! This is just not worth it. And you will find another option. It will be a good day for many smokers when they find those other options.

Under Product Regulation and Licensing, Part II of the Bill, 4 (1) speaks to the registration of tobacco products, of the selling or importing of tobacco products. That is very important, Madam Speaker, because there are prescribed fees that will be levied and there will be restrictions on who can become importers and dealers in tobacco products.

Now, Madam Speaker, I am not sure exactly what process will be carried out to make this happen, but one of the things that I would like to see in this area is that when someone who is in business has to register to be a tobacco dealer, that they are allowed to do this in conjunction with their existing Trade and Business License. In other words, it will not be another burden placed on them.

I can tell you that small businesses have a lot of burdens on them at the moment, a lot of laws to comply with and restrictions. Therefore we want to make this process as easy as possible for people to deal with. I don't know what the fee will be (it will be prescribed in the regulations), but I am sure it will be something that is manageable by these businesses, at least for the time being.

Madam Speaker, [Part II] 4 (2) says, "Upon receiving the application for registration, the Chief Officer shall, if satisfied that the applicant is a suitable person for registration under this Law . . ." I looked into the definitions and I don't see a description of a "suitable person", and I am wondering if maybe we could make such a definition or to further clarify what a suitable person is. That is important, Madam Speaker.

As I said earlier, the restrictions in relation to smoking by minors, people under the age of 18, is absolutely crucial. We have to protect our young people and ensure that penalties are in place for violation of these provisions. Too often these days young people are able to walk into establishments and procure a pack of cigarettes or go to a vending machine or some other outlet and get themselves cigarettes.

I can't think of many people that I personally know who took up smoking at a late age unless they had some serious problems befall them all of a sudden and found that a cigarette was the answer. I think smoking is something that is cultivated as a habit, in most cases at a young age. Therefore, if we can deter that activity in minors, then we are well on our way to stamping out and reducing the smokers in our society.

So, I am fully in favour of protecting our youth by this legislation by whatever means possible. Certainly, businesses will have to ensure that anyone purchasing tobacco products has proper identification, and it will be incumbent upon that business to ensure that they are not being taken advantage of and put at risk, because at the end of the day the establishment will be liable.

Madam Speaker, I know that there were concerns voiced in relation to how tobacco products could be displayed and there are certain restrictions that have been put into this Bill in relation to advertising and display of tobacco products. Again, in relation to display of tobacco products, as long as a business is licensed to sell tobacco products then that business should carry out the necessary protection to ensure that customers can't readily walk in and pick up a pack of cigarettes. The dangers of smoking, I would assume, would be on display. I am sure the Bill provides for this.

And also, a habit that has become quite common now is the selling of individual cigarettes from the pack, which never use to really happen before but it has become quite a common thing now. People come in and buy a cigarette or two, or three cigarettes for 25 cents each usually, or whatever the individual sells them for. But it has become quite commonplace. In fact, I was shocked to find out that my staff was doing it without even my consent. So, I am man enough to say that I know of these things.

I am glad to know that that will be prohibited because, again, you do not then have a package that has a label on it warning you of the danger of cigarette smoking, and this is what it is all about, to try and reduce the danger to our society from something that has been proven a lethal killer in our society.

Madam Speaker, we have all seen people suffer with cancer—lung cancer in particular. We have had friends, family and loved ones die from it. It is not an easy thing when you consider that someone suffering from a disease that in all likelihood could have been avoided if they were not subjected to, either direct use of tobacco products or secondhand tobacco smoke. So, Madam Speaker, I certainly, fully support the effort that is being made on this very, very important area.

Madam Speaker, one of the last things I would like to speak about before I close my contribution is the exemption that has been granted to cigar bars. This is something that I am in favour of. I know that there are those out there who are not.

As I started off my debate, I spoke about the fact that we cannot go from A to Z in one fell swoop. We have the fairly new concept in our Islands of cigar bars and I believe that a lot of these people have invested significant sums of money over the years in making these places what they should rightly be and the way they should function, and the exhaust systems, et cetera. But I think it would be unfair at this time to say to someone who has put a lot of effort into one of these establishments that on such and such a date when this Tobacco Bill come into effect you have to close your business, which is in all likelihood their only source of income or livelihood. And they have to change gears and completely move away from it. I think that is hard and would be harsh.

I believe there are those in our community who enjoy cigar smoking and would need somewhere like this to go and have a cigar. Anyone who goes into a cigar bar to have a cigar, or anyone who works there or owns such a place knows the dangers that are inherent in such a business. I know sometimes you have to protect people from themselves, but I believe for the time being it is good that we have exempted cigar bars under the proposed Bill.

What I would like to say in addition to that is that there should be a moratorium placed on cigar bars. I may be wrong, but I think we have somewhere between three and four, maybe as many as five on the Island. Now I do not think that every minute you should have someone starting up another cigar bar to get around and be able to have people smoking indoors. I believe it is very important for us to consider putting a moratorium in place in that area.

You do not want people beating the system by classifying everything that they open as a cigar bar either. There have to be strict guidelines. I know that the Bill will provide for a number of those. We have to have proper ventilation; we have to have all of the signs posted and all of the other restrictions that go along with smoking. So, my recommendation to the Minister and to the task force involved in this is to be bold enough to nip it in the bud and say 'those who have cigar bars now (and I don't own one) but those who have one, Madam Speaker, that's it. We are not allowing anymore cigar bars, because you will find that people will find a way to come up with every reason to get themselves a cigar bar. That will be where they feel that they will be able to take advantage of this legislation.

So, Madam Speaker, I started by saying that I support this legislation and I do, but there are areas of exemption that are necessary. Persons at this time I believe should be able to smoke outside in open areas because the smoke does dissipate quite rapidly. And unless you happen to be unfortunate enough to be downwind of someone smoking outdoors, it is very unlikely, or if you pass through somewhere as I did a week ago off Island, in an area where there are many smokers and it is really, really thick smoke almost on the outside where there is not enough breeze to move it away or whatever. So, if someone is outside having a cigarette I don't see where they pose that much risk to anyone else. They certainly will pose a risk to themselves. That is a risk that they know about.

So, Madam Speaker, I think for the time being it is wise for us to have indoor non-smoking and an area on the outside, a patio or whatever, being careful where it is located, that it is not blowing inside the building when the door opens. Or if there is a smoking designated area on the compound, that it is downside of the prevailing wind, otherwise you could defeat the purpose and fill the establishment with secondhand smoke in the same manner.

Madam Speaker, I think great care and attention has gone into the many representations and comments received from the public. As I said, I know many, many persons out there are in support of a 100 per cent smoke free Cayman Islands, but I do not think that we can go from a smoking society where smoking was not prohibited in any way, except for the establishments that chose to do so, to one of a non-smoking society where you stamp out cigarettes, cigarettes stop coming to the Islands, everyone stops smoking and that's it. I don't think you can get from point A to point Z that easy. I think you have to go through b,c,d,e, and so on. And you will get to the point where I believe smoking will become so uncomfortable, so unnecessary, that you will find eventually we are on the right track.

Madam Speaker, I think it is an important piece of legislation for these Islands. I think it is something that certainly is historical in its own way and will prove, like many other pieces of legislation in the past, that it was the right thing to do at the right time. Some will say a bit late but my saying to that, Madam Speaker, is "better late than never". Therefore I offer my support to the Bill and I commend my colleague and Minister of Health on this very, very important piece of legislation.

I trust that the critics will now realise why it took so long for this to come before the House, because, Madam Speaker, it is not an easy piece of legislation. There are a lot of considerations; a lot of issues concerning smoking and non-smoking. There are strong views on both sides. But I dare say that I believe those who are supporting their argument with facts and figures on a daily basis against cigarette smoking, smoking in general, are coming out on the winning end of the argument.

So, Madam Speaker, with that I close my contribution and I thank you for your patience.

Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continuing on the second reading of the Tobacco Bill, 2008. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise in support of this Bill entitled a Bill for a Law to regulate the labelling, promotion, sale and distribution of tobacco products, to prohibit their use in certain public places; and for incidental and connected purposes.

As the two previous speakers have said, this Bill is long, long overdue. I would like to pass on some information to make my point as to the negative effects tobacco has on humans, whether we smoke it or are simply exposed to tobacco smoke.

I want to go through a story about a gentleman who spent a good bit of his life conducting anti-smoking campaigns throughout the United States. I want to share this because as the story unfolds it makes the point that regardless of how addicted you may think you are to tobacco use, you can make a change if you develop the will.

Some portions I will simply read from the report. It says, "Patrick Reynolds was the first tobacco industry figure to turn his back on cigarette makers. He is grandson to the tobacco company founder RJ Reynolds, but the family's cigarette brands, Camel and Winston, killed his father and eldest brother. Since first speaking out in Congress in 1986, Patrick has been a well respected champion of a tobacco-free society. In hundreds of live talks before universities, middle schools and high schools, and with over 6,000 copies of his educational video purchased by schools and health departments, Mr. Reynolds has reached well over a million youths in schools with his powerful talk about the dangers of tobacco.

"In a little over an hour Reynolds went from being another anti-smoking speaker to something special', commented one local paper. Recent news articles about his appearances illustrate how his appearances can bring the tobacco-free message to the whole community and build good will for sponsors."

Madam Speaker, this is a short synopsis of who Patrick Reynolds is. This is his story. He said:

"I want to begin today with a little story. My parents were divorced when I was three, and for six long years, I didn't see my Dad. Now a boy needs his Dad to come to the football game and say, 'You played well, son. I'm proud of you — you're my boy!' He needs his Dad's hugs, encouragement, guidance and love. I didn't have that, and it was hard for me. A girl needs her Dad, too.

"Some of you in the audience do not have your biological father living at home with you, and you share the situation I remember. How do you feel about that? Are you angry, or sad, or maybe a little afraid, not having him around as much as you would like? Or a combination of feelings?

"Today we're going to spend some of our time talking about our feelings. How did I feel? At times, I felt angry, sad and afraid without my Dad around.

"For six years, I really missed him. When I was nine, I got the idea to write him a letter. It said, 'Dear Dad—I want to meet you. Where are you?'

He was travelling at the time, and amazingly, my little letter was forwarded seven times from city to city. By a miracle, it got into his hands and he sent for me. I remember the day I first got word that he wanted to meet me, and I was jumping up and down with joy.

“When the big day came at last, and they showed me into the room where he was, I was saddened to find my Dad lying down, on his back, gasping for breath. He was dying from emphysema, caused by smoking the cigarettes that made our family wealthy.

“I only got to see him on five visits after that, and every time, he was increasingly sick and frail, and counting the time he had left to live.

“My Dad died from smoking [when] I was 15, and that was hard. Later, my aunt and oldest brother would die because they smoked. That's why I chose to totally turn my back on my family's former tobacco business and walk away—and to do everything in my power to connect with young people, and persuade them to stay tobacco-free.

“I also did it because doing this work, I have been able to make a difference. It feels wonderful to contribute to the lives of others—to be of service.

“So those are two reasons I chose to devote my life to the tobacco-free cause. In 1989 I founded The Foundation for a Smokefree America, and I'll dedicate myself to this work for the rest of my life.”

Madam Speaker, he goes on to say: “If I could give you just one message today, it would be this: smoking is extremely addicting. Once you start, you may not be able to stop — ever. And the same is true for drugs and alcohol.

“I can't emphasize this enough — some of you may not ever be able to stop, if you start smoking or chewing tobacco.

“How long does it take to get hooked? A September 2000 study showed that one quarter of 11 to 13 year olds who smoke as few as two or three cigarettes a day become addicted in just two weeks. And many of the rest got addicted shortly after that.

“Once hooked, the average smoker is unable to stop for seventeen years! And every year, they will spend $1200 or more on tobacco products [I think in the Cayman Islands, those figures would be a whole lot more] to maintain their addiction.

“What could you buy with the money you would save in two years?” In over ten years it could well be in excess of $15,000 to $20,000.

“The Addiction: Let's look at someone trying to quit smoking. For most addicted smokers, the addiction is about half-mental, half-physical. This varies with each individual.

“The physical portion of the addiction is to nicotine. The psychological part of the addiction is to the relaxing, familiar sensation of handling the cigarette, watching its curling smoke, the deep and relaxing breathing associated with inhaling and exhaling, the taste, and so on.

When quitting [or trying to quit, Madam Smoker]—

[interjections and laughter]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: What did I say?

[interjections]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: My apologies, Madam Speaker.

“When quitting, a smoker's conscious mind says, ‘I will stop smoking—no problem.’ But the unconscious mind has been conditioned that cigarettes give pleasure, and that's all it can focus on.

“The addicted, unconscious mind says, ‘Give me a cigarette — now!’ It only recognizes what feels good, or what doesn't feel good. It demands a cigarette without regard to right or wrong, and rebels against the conscious mind's decision to not smoke.

“During the process of quitting, however, a new habit of being a nonsmoker forms. The unconscious mind gradually gets used to not smoking, and the urges to smoke die away.

“Once they get addicted, nearly all smokers try to stop a number of times. But most fail repeatedly at quitting, and many are never able to stop smoking.

“Reality check: there is no product which works well. [Eighty-five] out of every 100 quitters using the nicotine patch or gum go back to smoking within a year. Once you are hooked, there's just no easy way out.

“For smokers who quit without being in a program, it's worse—95 out of 100 of them fail, and return to the habit within a year.

“The lesson is clear. With no program, statistically smokers have only a 5% chance of success. With a program, the average quitter's chances increase to 15%. So getting into a program increases your chances of quitting by three times.

“Not trying at all, of course, means that nothing will change.

“If you are smoking now or using chew tobacco, [Madam Speaker, the] . . . first admit to yourself that maybe you are smoking less out of choice, and more because you are addicted. Later, when you make a clear and firm decision to stop, getting support from a good program will ease your way and lighten your burden. In short, [it is always advisable to] get help.”

“Real men ask directions: People who are the most successful at living life typically get plenty of help. For example, in business, a successful businesswoman or businessman gets a lawyer to write the contracts, an advertising agency to create the ads, a marketing executive to do the marketing, an accountant to do the accounting, a doctor when they're sick—people who succeed best get help, and lots of it."

Madam Speaker, it goes without saying that if you really want to stop smoking you should get some sort of professional help.

There are many things that I could say today about smoking that people listening to this debate later on will be able to acknowledge. But from my point of view, cigarette smoking is one of the most dangerous and destructive habits that any human being can engage in.

I speak from experience. I grew up with asthma. I am sure anyone who has ever had asthma, or lived around someone who had it, understands how difficult that is. I spent a lot of time with my maternal grandmother who also suffered from asthma. Whenever I had an asthma attack, especially in the summertime, it was usually once a week and I would be unable to go to school for a full week whenever it rained a lot. I just could not complete a week because somewhere down the line I would develop asthma, if it rained and I got my feet wet, that kind of thing.

Nobody could take care of me like my grandmother. So we lived in a yard with four homes, my grandmother, and three of her daughters had homes there, my mother being one of them. So, whenever I got sick, I would go to my grandmother's house and stay with her. But there were times when she had asthma as well and had to care for me, even while she was sick. But there were no hands like my grandmother's hands.

Madam Speaker, I grew out of it in my late teens, early 20s. Maybe six or seven years ago I started having the occasional breathing problem and I eventually went to the doctor. He said that my asthma was coming back. It is not as severe as it used to be, but it is back, and it is not something that I will get rid of.

I will say that I have always been around cigarette smoke and while I was asthma free it did not really bother me. I never liked the scent of it on my clothes. But now whenever I inhale secondhand smoke, it affects my breathing.

I know that this is the case with many individuals. So, when I am around someone and they are smoking, or when I go into a smoking environment, I have to make a choice because I am actually hurting myself. I have the ability to make my choice as to whether or not to leave, but there are so many people in this country who do not always have that choice and are forced to inhale secondhand smoke. Kids, for one, who may be in a home where parents smoke; or people in a vehicle with people who are smoking; or you sit down for a meal, or go to a meeting, or you are working in an environment where people are smoking.

Although you have decided not to smoke yourself, you are exposed to this secondhand smoke and you do not have a choice.

I have always said that those who smoke need to be more conscious, more mindful that although they have made a decision to take on that habit, others have not. If you must smoke you should take yourself away from people who have made the decision not to smoke.

I know that's easier said than done. Unless people continually complain about your smoking habit when you are around them, you eventually become comfortable and it becomes the norm. I believe that every person who lights a cigarette in the presence of people who do not smoke, it crosses their mind that they might not appreciate it—but if they do not complain they will continue. I believe that every single time a smoker lights a cigarette in the presence of other people, for a fleeting moment it does cross their mind that they should not do it. But it becomes a habit, and smokers begin to take people for granted.

Madam Speaker, more statistics. According to the new US Surgeon General's report issued in May 2004 (not so long ago), smoking is even worse than previously thought. It damages virtually every organ in the body. In the US smoking causes one in every five deaths. Cigarettes kill 1200 Americans every day—the tragic death toll of 420,000 each year.

Around the world, smoking kills 5 million people every year. In the US, 22.5 per cent of adults or a bit more than 1 in 5 are addicted to smoking. Smoking rates in Europe and Asia are so much higher. On average 1 in 3 adults worldwide smoke. Smoking kills 4 out of every 10 smokers.

If you do the math, this means that in coming decades, cigarettes will actually kill 500 million people and all of them have already been born. That's 9 per cent of the present world population. It means that almost 1 in every 10 people now alive on Earth will die because of tobacco use.

Madam Speaker, these statistics come from the UN World Health Organization headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland.

Every day in the US, 2,000 teens become newly addicted to smoking. Most will not be able to quit for 17 years and over 800 of those teens will later die—800 of that 2,000 will later die from cigarettes. These are people who have not started smoking yet. How do we as legislators and citizens feel about that?

It is time that we came to grips, that we stood up and took note and were mindful of what we are doing to ourselves, our country and, by extension, the world at large.

Teenagers have been targeted ever since cigarettes have been in production. Let's take a closer look at cigarette advertising. Would we [consent] to being manipulated mentally? The quick answer to that is no.

Well, tobacco ads are designed to play with our minds. In January 1998, Democratic Congressman, Henry Waxman revealed some very secret memos of the RJ Reynolds Tobacco Company. In 1975 one executive wrote: “The Camel brand must increase its share penetration among the 14 to 24 age group which represents tomorrow’s cigarette business.”

Now, these are memos that are in executive papers of a legitimate company that is licensed to do business. “The Camel brand must increase its share penetration among the 14 to 24 age group which represents tomorrow’s cigarette business.” How do we feel about that?

If these same individuals would make that information available, and we could see that at the same time they are trying to sell us their cigarettes, would it make a difference? It would make a difference to many. But they understand that that is information they must keep secret. They understand exactly what is happening and what that would do to their business.

In 1986 a memo noted how the cartoon Camel campaign would utilise peer acceptance and influence to motivate the target audience to take up cigarettes. So many teens believe that tobacco ads have absolutely no influence over them. We can agree that tobacco ads will not change one’s conscious mind; but they are getting through to our subconscious mind a lot more than we may realise.

What is our unconscious mind? While our conscious minds are analytical and make mostly sensible, rational decisions, it is our unconscious mind that often throws commonsense out the window. It is the creative part of our mind, and cares little for right or wrong. It just knows what feels good or bad regardless of the consequences.

For example, an overweight person may have made a reasonable and conscious decision to diet. But their unconscious mind still remembers the sweet taste of ice cream. The conscious mind’s will to diet can be overcome by the power of the unconscious mind and the memory of delicious ice cream. Will power is literally the conscious will to repeatedly resist the strong desires of the unconscious mind.

Madam Speaker, my father is 68 years old. In 1991 it was discovered that he had a tumour on his pituitary gland. Thank God it was benign, but it had to be removed. He no longer produces hormones and will be on hormone medication for the rest of his life.

What has gradually happened to my father is that his brain function continually decreases and his short-term memory is just about gone. I can sit and talk with my father about things that are 30 or 40 years old and that’s fine with him. But the only function that my father wants to do right now is smoke a cigarette. The idea of food or medication or children or any of those things that make up a good part of life in your older years are no longer important to him. The one thing he remembers is that he smoked a cigarette.

If I go and look for my father right now, and my father has never seen me smoke. As a matter of fact, he’s never seen any of his children smoke. Thank God none of his children took up the habit. But if I go to see him right now, he will say “Oh Lord, look at my big son come look for daddy.” Then we sit down and talk. The next thing he says, “Give me a cigarette.” I’ll say, “Daddy, you know I don’t smoke.” We’ll talk a little bit more and in another two minutes, he’ll ask “You got a cigarette?”

I am saying to you that that is the one thing that has apparently been imbedded in his mind. All of the other qualities of my father are still there. He still loves his children. He still recognises everybody and will tell you how much he loves everybody. That part of him still functions very well. But my father will ask you for a cigarette when he will not ask you for food.

I am just telling you this very private part of my life, Madam Speaker, so that people will understand what the addiction to cigarettes does to a human being and how dangerous it is. It is probably something my father will take to his grave. That’s the one thing he remembers. It is imbedded in his memory.

I dare say, Madam Speaker, that there are lots of people like that. I do not think my father is the only one. But we have to understand and be able to accept that when we make the decision to start smoking there are consequences. And while you may not understand or want to believe it at the time, there is enough information and enough history, enough stories around for those who have not started yet, to not start. And, Madam Speaker, for those who are smoking, to understand what their lot in life is going to be if they do not stop.

I am happy, somewhat elated that we have finally gotten to the stage where we can bring this Bill to the Floor of the House. I must commend the Honourable Minister for his perseverance because there have been many roadblocks thrown in his path with this piece of legislation. But those of us that know him understand full well that we’d have to kill him to get him to stop.

I want to also take this opportunity to express my gratitude to his staff who worked with him, who toiled long hard hours to make sure that we got to this stage where we now have it on the Floor of this House. I want to personally thank all who have contributed to bringing it thus far.

Madam Speaker, I do not have anything much to say about the Bill itself. I simply wanted to speak to the ill-effect of tobacco use. I believe we have gone through as many changes and amendments as we could possibly have up to this point in the Tobacco Bill. I will venture to say there will be more to come because legislation like this is difficult to get perfect the very first time. I am mindful and hope that as we go along we will find ways to tighten this up. Like the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, I would love to see a smoke-free Cayman and a smoke-free world.

I am also not so naïve to believe that that will ever happen, but it is our responsibility as legislators, as leaders of this country, to do what we can to reduce its use.

Madam Speaker, I also am very mindful about the effect that cigarette smoking has on our cost of living, as to what it does to a mother or father that may have worked hard all their lives, raised their children, and may be fortunate enough to have saved a couple of dollars for their retirement only to see it spent on hospital bills brought on by cigarette smoking. And the government is called upon when those funds are depleted. In many cases, some of these individuals who require extensive medical help in the hundreds of thousands of dollars because of smoking cannot afford it and it becomes a government expense.

Any money spent by government has to be gotten back from somewhere so it only continues to make life more difficult when fees have to be increased for the ordinary person who does not even smoke to pay hospital bills for those who do. It affects all of us and it behoves each of us, whether we smoke or not, to do our best to encourage people to give up the habit or to not even start smoking because it has a very negative effect on our personal finances and also on the coffers of the country.

We cannot just leave people to die. We have to do our best to make them as comfortable as possible. And in many cases it has been brought on by smoking.

I have a few more statistics that I would like to read into the records. I believe that it takes these types of things to bring the message home to people. I will just read this portion, which says, “An estimated 46.5 million adults in the United States smoke cigarettes even though this single behaviour will result in death or disability for half of all regular users. Cigarette smoking is responsible for more than 400,000 deaths each year, or one in five deaths. Additionally, if current patters of smoking persist, over 5 million people currently younger than 18 will die prematurely from tobacco-related disease. Paralleling this enormous health toll of the economic burden of tobacco: more than $75 billion in medical expenditures and another $80 billion in indirect costs.”

We keep referring to the US and other places, but these are the people who have the statistics. I do not know that our statistics here would be so direct. But I am sure if they were it would be more startling. Because we are a small country does not mean it has not had serious financial effects from cigarette smoking.

Nicotine is one of more than 4,000 chemicals found in tobacco smoke and is a primary component that acts on the brain. Smokeless tobacco products, such as snuff and chewing tobacco, also contain high levels of nicotine as well as other toxins. Gratefully, we do not have too many people in our community who chew. I can remember as a boy there were a lot more who used to chew. But I cannot remember when last I saw anybody chewing tobacco. I think the last person I saw was somebody off of one of the cruise ships. But I do not think that is a big habit here in the Cayman Islands nowadays. So we should be grateful.

Even the baseball players have been making efforts to go to sunflower seeds and chewing bubble gum nowadays. So they too have made an effort to give up the chewing habit.

Nicotine is absorbed through the skin and mucosal lining of the mouth and nose, or by inhalation into the lungs. Depending on how tobacco is taken, nicotine can reach peak levels in the bloodstream and brain rapidly. Cigarette smoking results in rapid distribution of nicotine throughout the body, reaching the brain within 10 seconds of inhalation.

Cigar and pipe smokers, on the other hand, typically do not inhale the smoke, so nicotine is absorbed more slowly through the mucosal membranes of the mouth. The same for smokeless tobacco.

A typical smoker will take 10 puffs on a cigarette over a period of 5 minutes that the cigarette is lit. Thus a person who smokes about 30 cigarettes daily (1 ½ packs) will get 300 hits of nicotine to the brain each day. These factors contribute considerably to nicotine's highly addictive nature.

Chronic cough, Madam Speaker, is also a by-product of cigarette smoking.

Health effects: Smoking tobacco is the chief avoidable cause of death in our society. I will say that again, Madam Speaker. Smoking tobacco is the chief avoidable cause of death in our society. Smokers are more likely than non-smokers to contract heart disease. Some 170,000 die each year from smoking related coronary heart disease, lung, larynx, oesophageal, bladder, pancreatic, and kidney cancers also strike smokers at increased rates. Some 30 per cent of cancer deaths, 130,000 per year, are linked to smoking.

Chronic obstructive lung disease, such as emphysema and chronic bronchitis are ten times more likely to occur among smokers than among non-smokers.

Smoking during pregnancy also poses serious risks, spontaneous abortion, pre-term birth, low birth weights. And foetal and infant deaths are all more likely to occur when the pregnant woman is a smoker.

Exposure to secondhand smoke is thought to cause heart disease. In addition, each year an estimated 3,000 non-smoking Americans die of lung cancer. Exposure to secondhand smoke also causes respiratory tract infections in up to 300,000 children annually. These are innocent victims who have not made the decision to smoke, but who are nonetheless exposed by adults who should be looking out for their welfare.

That is how we need to bring this thing into context, where we, as adults who are responsible for the birth of children, are their primary protectors. We are supposed to make sure they are well taken care of, that they have shelter, that they have the ability to go to school to learn, make sure they have proper nutrition and a well-rounded upbringing. This is our job as adults, to look after children. But we will do all of this and we will actually give our own lives to protect them from harm. Did you ever hear of a father or mother saying, 'You touch my child, I'll kill you'? That's how serious we take on the responsibility of parenthood.

But we will say those same things to somebody who may want to harm our child while holding a cigarette in between our fingers. How hypocritical is that?

Madam Speaker, I am only asking that we step back, put down that pack of cigarettes, look at it; put it next to a picture of our kids (or, if we do not have any, somebody else's kids) and make a choice. When you choose the pack of cigarettes, you are sentencing those kids to a life of health issues.

Madam Speaker, really, what is it that we truly get? What is the urge? I do understand the way it makes us feel as young adults—you know that you finally reach the age where you can now smoke. You are your own man or woman. That is the threshold, the step that many young people think they have to take to move from adolescence into adulthood. The fact that they can now smoke is a signal that they are of age.

There are so many other things we can go with our lives.

As adults, we have to be better examples. We have to make sure that we teach our children and bring them up in the right way. It is not good enough to tell our children that they should not smoke. We must not show them how to smoke.

Madam Speaker, I have already seen in this country where many of the establishments that allowed smoking many years ago have taken the step, even before the passing of this Bill. I commend each of them for that. It has not had any negative effect on their business. As a matter of fact, many are doing better business than they did before because there are many individuals who will not go to places where smoking is allowed. These are all types of individuals. All shapes and sizes.

Madam Speaker, I commend those individuals who have begun the transition and who have begun to prepare their businesses to accommodate people who do not smoke. They have also made the transition to accommodate those who believe that they still want to smoke. But non-smoking environments must be encouraged because we talk about the control that nicotine has on the brain. When individuals who quit smoking on their own get in the company of someone who is smoking, or smell the smoke again, it encourages them to start back. Not everybody, but for the majority of people who try to smoke, that is a problem.

They will tell you they are okay by themselves, but the minute they are in the company of someone who smokes, they want to have a cigarette.

So, when an individual goes to a place he enjoys going to and is not exposed to cigarette smoke, it helps the individual with his resolve to not start back. He will not have to change his lifestyle by not going where his friends are because if he does he will be encouraged to smoke.

We must do whatever we can to ensure that we have controlled environments where people cannot smoke.

The same thing for advertising. Many times an individual . . . what is the saying we have? Out of sight, out of mind. Many times individuals do not remember that they want to indulge in a bad habit until they are encouraged by sight, unless they see something. That's the reason why we need to stop the advertising. We need to put a lid on the advertising so people are not encouraged by seeing a cigarette sign somewhere or the name of a cigarette posted somewhere, for instance in a supermarket where the sign says "cigarettes are over in the far corner." That encourages the individual to go in that direction.

But if they walked into that store and did not see a sign that said anything about cigarettes, they might well have gone in, gotten what they needed, and came back out without cigarettes. These are the things we need to do to encourage our people, to help them along.

Cigarette smoking causes more damage than cancer. As leaders, as legislators, we have to do our part to make sure that we help our people to kick the habit or not to start in the first place.

I can only hope that the country on a whole will embrace this new piece of legislation. The individuals who are in the business will need to make their changes. The Bill is going to allow them some time because we understand that some people will need some time to get their ship in order. I agree with that. But I do look forward in my lifetime to when we can have a total ban on smoking in this country, at least a complete ban on smoking indoors if nothing else. This is but a first step in this country moving towards a healthier lifestyle for our people today and tomorrow.

The Bill has my support.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Bill before the House is one that has been anxiously awaited by many in our community. Indeed, it has been advocated for quite a number of years. However, as we know, change is always resisted. In this instance it has been resisted on many grounds and on many fronts by different people in our community.

However, we have heard the claims from business organisations, businesses and business people about the so-called negative impact that anti-smoking or smoke-free legislation causes. Indeed, from the time the Minister made a move in this direction, we saw many come out of the woodwork with claims that are, from my research and opinion, based principally on flawed reports. Indeed, we can find many reports out there which lend credence to the argument that anti-smoking legislation causes a drop off in business and causes businesses to lose revenue.

They also use as part of their arsenal the whole issue of government and the loss of revenue to government through the taxing of tobacco products.

Madam Speaker, there will be those who still listen to those reports. Indeed, there may be many who still believe those reports. However, I think if one takes a balanced view, and a balanced perspective of the whole situation, one would have to come to the undeniable and unavoidable conclusion that tobacco and tobacco related products take a tremendous toll on human health, cause a lot of revenue to be extended, not only from private citizens but from government in the health care for those impaired by tobacco related illnesses.

They would also have to agree after looking at the entire scenario that there is no provable negative impact of anti-smoking legislation on business. Indeed, the opposite may actually be found true once businesses make a real concerted effort to showcase themselves as being clean establishments.

Madam Speaker, I want to offer a few comments on what's happening globally in this move. Certainly, as the last speaker alluded to, some of the statistics will be from the United States of America, who has done a lot of work in putting together credible information not only on the human health cost and financial cost, but, indeed, a lot of unbiased research on the true economic impact of anti-smoking legislation.

The World Health Organization has a Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (FCTC). It was entered into and came into force on 27 February 2005. What it required was for countries to implement scientifically proven measures to reduce tobacco use and its terrible toll on health, on lives, and indeed on money.

If effectively implemented, any form of tobacco treaties or laws will be a fundamental turning point in reducing tobacco use and its devastating consequences around the world. So far, 168 nations have signed up, of which 157 have ratified the treaty.

Its objective is to protect present and future generations from the devastating health, social, environmental and economic consequences of tobacco consumption and exposure to tobacco smoke by providing a framework for tobacco control measures to be implemented by those signing up at a national, regional and international level.

The treaty commits countries to ban or restrict tobacco advertising, promotion and sponsorship; to place large, graphic health warnings on cigarette packs and to prohibit the use of false and misleading terms, such as "light" and "low tar"; implement measures to protect non-smokers from secondhand smoke; increase the price of tobacco products, particularly through taxation, to discourage tobacco use; eliminate the illicit trade of tobacco products; to regulate the content of tobacco products; require public disclosure of ingredients; to provide cessation assistance and treatment for tobacco dependence; and to prevent sales of tobacco products to minors.

Madam Speaker, as I looked at that it certainly is a very comprehensive framework around which any country can build its anti-smoking campaign. What caught my eye as I read it was the whole issue of eliminating the illicit trade of tobacco products.

When we all think of illegal substances and the trade of illegal substances, we think more along the line of illicit drugs; we do not particularly think of products like tobacco and alcohol. We think generally that would be freely available in most societies for those who wish to pay the price.

But, Madam Speaker, I found a very interesting Reuters article. It is entitled "Smuggled Tobacco Kills More than Illegal Drugs." This is a UK based report. It says:

"A fifth of all tobacco smoked in Britain is smuggled in and at least 4,000 people die as a result, researchers said Friday.

"They urged the government to follow other European Union countries and sign agreements with Philip Morris International and Japan Tobacco to fight smuggling and counterfeiting.

"Britain's revenue losses are greater than in many EU member states due to higher duties on cigarettes, the researchers said in the British Medical Journal. The government was not immediately available [and did not necessarily comment on this report, I must note].

"The researchers also called on the government to set clear targets for border authorities to control illegal tobacco and to support negotiations currently underway for a strong international treaty to combat smuggling."

Madam Speaker, a little further on (I won't go into all of the report) it said: "They said about 21 percent of all tobacco smoked in Britain is smuggled into the country to beat cigarette taxes that are some of the highest in the European Union."

I end off at that point because obviously we would know, and history has proven that whenever governments seek to control human behaviour, particularly as it relates to substances that are known to be addictive, black markets always develop. There will always be those who want to beat the system to make a quick buck.

I certainly do not know whether or not we have any such problems in Cayman. However, it is something to take note of. As government and society launch into this campaign which deals with the whole issue of a negative human behaviour—that of smoking—we ought to be very conscious of what some of the reactions could possibly be (if they are not already happening) and try to ensure that we prepare ourselves to deal with some of those negative consequences, such as the illegal smuggling of tobacco and tobacco related products before it becomes a real problem.

Madam Speaker, as you look at this issue it is impossible to do so without looking at some of the raw statistics. I will share a few that I found rather compelling.

Tobacco use has killed 100 million people in the 20th century. Almost 1 billion men and 250 million women smoke cigarettes. If the current trends continue, 650 million people alive today will eventually die from tobacco related diseases. Tobacco kills almost 14,000 people every day.

Madam Speaker, as we deal with the whole issue of anti-smoking legislation and we delve into the whole issue of smoking in public places, we naturally have to deal with the whole issue of secondhand smoke. I can remember not too long ago there were still many in society, but principally due to reports that were slanted and based on and paid for by the tobacco industry, many disputed whether or not secondhand smoke even harmed anyone. It was not long ago when there were very glowing reports that carried a lot of weight that basically said there was a proven link between secondhand smoke and someone eventually developing some cancer or health problem due to being exposed to secondhand smoke.

Madam Speaker, a few facts and a few definitions are relevant as we look at this whole issue. What is secondhand smoke? According to a very detailed report conducted by the office of the Surgeon General of the United States, secondhand smoke is composed of side stream smoke, the smoke released from the burning end of a cigarette and exhaled mainstream smoke, the smoke exhaled by the smoker.

In this 2006 report, the Surgeon General used the term “involuntary exposure” to secondhand smoke. That is because most non-smokers do not desire to breathe in smoke. Cigarette smoke contains more than 4,000 chemical compounds. Secondhand smoke contains many of the same chemicals present in the smoke inhaled by smokers. Because side stream smoke is generated at lower temperatures and under different conditions than mainstream smoke, it contains higher concentrations of many of the toxins found in cigarette smoke.

I think I should repeat that, Madam Speaker. Because side stream smoke (that is, the smoke coming straight off the tip of the cigarette) is generated at lower temperatures and under different conditions than mainstream smoke (that is, the smoke exhaled by the smoker), it (that is, the side stream smoke) contains higher concentrations of many of the toxins found in cigarette smoke.

The National Toxicology Programme estimates that at least 250 chemicals in secondhand smoke are known to be toxic or carcinogenic. Secondhand smoke has been designated as a known human carcinogen, that is, cancer causing agent, by the United States Environmental Protection Agency, the National Toxicology Programme and the International Agency for Research on Cancer, and an occupational carcinogen by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health.

Secondhand smoke contains more than 50 cancer-causing chemicals. When non-smokers are exposed to secondhand smoke, they inhale many of the same cancer causing chemicals that smokers inhale. The Surgeon General concluded that there is no risk-free level of exposure to secondhand smoke. Even small amounts of secondhand smoke exposure can be harmful to people’s health.

Many millions of Americans continue to be exposed to secondhand smoke. A smoke-free environment is the only way to fully protect non-smokers from the dangers of secondhand smoke. Separating smokers from non-smokers, cleaning the air, and ventilating buildings cannot eliminate exposure of non-smokers to secondhand smoke.

Madam Speaker, if that report, which I believe any reasonable, rational human being would believe to be scientifically and factually based, is not frightening, then nothing is.

Even before now, we have had some restaurants and bars that tried to do this splitting—having a smoke-free area, and then an area for smoking all within the same establishment. For that sort of strategy to be disproved, or to eliminate non-smokers from the dangers of secondhand smoke, is one that has to cause all of us great concern.

Madam Speaker, the report goes on to deal with another critical issue in even more depth, whether there is any risk-free level of exposure to secondhand smoke.

“The U.S. Surgeon General has concluded that breathing even a little secondhand smoke poses a risk to your health. Scientific evidence indicates that there is no risk-free level of exposure to secondhand smoke. Breathing even a little secondhand smoke can be harmful to your health.

“Secondhand smoke causes lung cancer.

“Secondhand smoke is a known human carcinogen and contains more than 50 chemicals that can cause cancer.

“Concentrations of many cancer-causing and toxic chemicals are potentially higher in secondhand smoke than in the smoke inhaled by smokers.” So time and time again we see the very dangers.

“Secondhand smoke causes heart disease.

“Breathing secondhand smoke for even a short time can have immediate adverse effects on the cardiovascular system, interfering with the normal functioning of the heart, blood, and vascular systems in ways that increase the risk of heart attack.

“Even a short time in a smoky room can cause your blood platelets to become stickier, damage the lining of blood vessels, decrease coronary flow velocity reserves, and reduce heart rate variability.

“Persons who already have heart disease are at especially high risk of suffering adverse affects from breathing secondhand smoke, and should take special precautions to avoid even brief exposure.”

Again, Madam Speaker, all of us have fooled ourselves into thinking that if you go into a smoke-filled environment for a short period of time the damage should not be too bad. I think when it really hits home for all of us is when we go into an establishment where a significant number of people are smoking and we smell our clothes when we get home. That scent stays there in your clothes. If you smelled your skin you would see how the scent actually stays on your body. That’s not scientific, but that tells us how any exposure to secondhand smoke has to have an impact.

I think we all agree that smoke does have a negative impact.

“Secondhand smoke causes acute respiratory effects.

“Secondhand smoke can cause sudden infant death syndrome and other health consequences in infants and children.”

As I said a little earlier, “Separating smokers from nonsmokers, cleaning the air, and ventilating buildings cannot eliminate secondhand smoke exposure.

“The American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air-Conditioning Engineers (ASHRAE), the pre-eminent U.S. standard-setting body on ventilation issues, has concluded that ventilation technology cannot be relied on to completely control health risks from secondhand smoke exposure.

“Conventional air cleaning systems can remove large particles, but not the smaller particles or the gases found in secondhand smoke.

That is yet another frightening piece of evidence.

Madam Speaker the US Surgeon General’s report also deals with the whole issue of secondhand exposure in the workplace

The Speaker: Honourable Member, if you are moving on to another report, would you mind if we take a suspension for 15 minutes at this point?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Not at all, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 3.26 pm

Proceedings resumed at 3.47 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate continuing on the second reading of the Tobacco Bill. The Second Elected Member for West Bay, continuing his debate.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Before taking the afternoon break, I had reached a point where I was about to take a brief look at another component of the very comprehensive report carried out by the office of the US Surgeon General that dealt with secondhand smoke exposure in the workplace.

It is good that for many years now most, I would venture to say practically all . . . I don’t know of any indoor office environments in Cayman that continues to allow employees to smoke, other than in restaurants and bars. I mean commercial office buildings. That is something that I believe makes the trek that the Government is going down so much easier because you are principally dealing with commercial enterprises like restaurants and bars.

Naturally, the findings of the US that “Blue collar and service employees are less likely than white collar indoor workers to be covered by smoke-free policies” holds true in Cayman as well.

What is of interest is that we ought to ensure that we do not, in terms of this whole debate and where we ultimately want to get to, leave out persons who are in an open environment, like construction, believing somehow that because it is an open environment that co-workers are safe.

I think we all have had the experience, especially those of us who have never been smokers, where you are driving in your car with the windows down, and you have to slow down or stop for a light, and someone either rides or walks by you and they are smoking. You automatically smell the smoke. The penetration power of cigarette smoke is so incredible!

In our efforts, we ought to have as an ultimate goal the capacity to deal not only with those inside, working indoors, but also those who are outside working externally. Just because you are on a construction site does not mean that other workers on that site who are within several feet of a smoking co-worker are somehow safe. That smoke does not just dissipate into the air straight up above the smoker and get sucked up and away from everyone else. It travels wide. So that impact is there.

Madam Speaker, we need to ensure that all workers are offered the same protection as those in an indoor environment.

Madam Speaker, this report is . . . I should have said this from the beginning of my use of this report. This report is very detailed. I have only cherry picked some of the areas that I found of interest as it relates to the whole debate that we are going through here in Cayman.

A few other revealing statistics and findings contained within the conclusion of this report notes that millions of Americans are still exposed to secondhand smoke in their homes and workplaces despite the substantial progress in tobacco control. How did they come to that conclusion?

“Almost 60 percent of U.S. children aged 3-11 years—or almost 22 million children—are exposed to secondhand smoke.

“About 30 percent of indoor workers in the United States were not covered by smoke-free workplace policies . . .”

A second finding was that “Secondhand smoke exposure causes disease and premature death in children and adults who do not smoke.” I think I have covered that point in terms of secondhand smoke so I won't go into the details.

Another major conclusion is: “Children exposed to secondhand smoke are at an increased risk for sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS), acute respiratory infections, ear problems, and more severe asthma. Smoking by parents causes respiratory symptoms and slows lung growth in their children.”

Fourthly, “Exposure of adults to secondhand smoke has immediate adverse effects on the cardiovascular system and causes coronary heart disease and lung cancer.”

I will repeat that one because as I was looking at this, this was the one that really caught me. “Exposure of adults to secondhand smoke has immediate adverse effects on the cardiovascular system and causes coronary heart disease and lung cancer.”

I will repeat what I said earlier: We cannot be led into a false sense of security—I know I was. When I went to establishments where smoking was allowed, a lot of times I said I'll go in there, but I am just going to go in and out and be very quick. But the research shows that that exposure causes immediate adverse effects to your health.

The fifth conclusion was, “The scientific evidence indicates that there is no risk-free level of exposure to secondhand smoke.”

So this whole business of believing that if you are in open air environment and a smoker is near by, this report is saying there is no risk-free level of exposure to secondhand smoke.

Sixth, “Eliminating smoking in indoor spaces fully protects nonsmokers from exposure to secondhand smoke. Separating smokers from nonsmokers, cleaning the air, and ventilating buildings cannot eliminate exposures of nonsmokers to secondhand smoke.”

Madam Speaker, I would like to turn my attention to this whole issue of the economics of smoke-free laws.

Many people tout differing reports that offer what they believe is conclusive evidence that once you have smoke-free legislation and, in particular, if you are a restaurant or bar, that it is immediately going to have devastating effects on the level of business that would inhibit an owner from making a living or still enjoy the same level of profitability.

In my research, I believe that the evidence that has been gathered through deep analysis of cities within the United States that went down this road, analysis of the businesses impacted by the legislation has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that this is not a conclusion that is supported. Anti-smoking legislation [does not] cause these negative impacts on businesses and their capacity to make money. It [does not] cut down on their revenue.

Madam Speaker, it is interesting because some of the cities covered are in states that have cold weather, states like Illinois, Iowa, Main, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Maryland, and Colorado. You could almost start to envision how smokers may very well stop going out to their favourite sports bar or restaurant if they knew that during the winter season they would have to go outside to smoke. Yet, the research from the businesses in those very cold states has proven the contrary—that the anti-smoking legislation they passed and instituted did not cause the type of economic downturn or negative economic impact the business owners claimed.

What is interesting is that a lot of the research they used was slanted conducted either by groups of businesses that perceived themselves to be negatively impacted (that is, the restaurant and bar sector), or the research was conducted by the tobacco companies themselves. They too pushed a lot of this fear and then used the businesses and the business owners to lobby to their patrons, to then lobby on to lawmakers to not pass anti-smoking legislation. Got them to go to their representatives, either the US House of Representatives or the US Senate, trying to block these moves by saying, Look, if I have to go outside, I am not going back.

So, Madam Speaker, we have come a long way. I think that if we look at the moves that were made in the United States and see that they are not having the type of impact that some around Cayman still claim would be the case, I think that speaks testament to the fact that we ourselves ought not to be distracted by those types of detractors.

What was very telling in the report I relied upon has been the impact on tourism and conventions. This report goes on to make some very revealing insights. It says, “A comprehensive study of the impact of New York's smoke-free state Clean Indoor Air law in five communities, including New York City, found that smoke-free regulations were associated with increases in taxable sales for eat- ing and drinking establishments and hotels (controlling for other economic factors). Employment rose in hotels, while no change was observed for employment in restaurants. The New York State study relied on both sales and employment data and compared those statistics for the year before implementation with the same statistics for the first year following implementation.

“A study in California, including San Francisco and Los Angeles, found that restaurants, bars, hotels, and tourism were not impacted economically following implementation of the state’s smoke-free workplace and restaurant law. Another study comparing hotel revenues and tourism rates before and after passage of 100 percent smoke-free restaurant laws in three states (California, Utah, and Vermont) and six cities (Boulder, Flagstaff, Los Angeles, Mesa, New York, and San Francisco) found that such laws do not adversely affect, and may increase, tourism.

“The three Colorado towns of Aspen, Snowmass Village, and Telluride rely heavily on tourism and passed early smoke-free ordinances. None of these cities experienced a drop in sales following adoption of their ordinances. In 1993, a study found that 48 percent of visitors to San Luis Obispo (a popular tourist destination) knew, prior to their current visit, about a city law making all restaurants and bars smoke-free, and that smokers and nonsmokers were equally aware of the law. None of the smoking visitors, almost half of whom were aware of the law before visiting, reported avoiding San Luis Obispo because of the law.”

Madam Speaker, as you look through the evidence, and there are arguments on both sides of the fence . . . But as you look through the evidence out there, in my humble submission, it would only be blind Bartemeus that could not see that anti-smoking legislation is not something to be feared, but to be embraced. And once embraced all involved will be better off.

Madam Speaker, just to round off the whole impact that it can have on restaurants and bars, in 2006, Zagat (which is one of the very popular books that rates businesses, but in particular restaurants and bars) the Zagat America top restaurants, in their survey of 115,000 Americans, found that 58 per cent of the respondents said that they would dine out the same amount if restaurants were smoke free.

Normally when you see these samples that other polls have done, they use a much smaller sample size, typically about 1,000. This was of 115,000 people. So, 58 per cent said that they would dine out the same amount if restaurants were smoke free.

Thirty-nine per cent said that they would dine out more. Only 3 per cent said they would dine out less often.

Regarding New York’s smoke free laws, Zagat concluded, “The City’s recent smoking ban, far from curbing restaurant traffic, has been a major lift.”

Madam Speaker, I could go on and on with the citations as to why smoke free laws have actually been good for business. I know here locally the bars and restaurants that have decided to go smoke free . . . I can tell you from my personal experience and from what friends and family have said—even those who smoke—not one has said that they would not frequent a smoke free bar or restaurant. I have not found one person yet who says that. That’s just my personal experience, and nothing I can submit for scientific analysis. But I think that if we all spoke to our friends and family, we would find similar findings as Zagat found with its 115,000 respondents.

This move that Cayman is making is but a small drop in the global move to smoke-free environments. The reality is that the opponents will always . . . well, let me not say always. Some may be wise enough to change their minds. But there will always be detractors to anything you try to do. That’s just life. But I have not seen anything in the slightest possible way to convince me that this is not the right move.

As we push and educate our people more and more to try and either stop or avoid smoking altogether, we know there is going to be a negative impact on government revenue. Like most other countries in this region, we have the typical sin taxes. We tax alcohol and cigarettes. However, what we do know is that we have many cases of persons in our community who have suffered from the negative impacts of smoking on their health. A lot of those people are on the government dole, that is, government has to provide free medical for them. And for those who are privately insured, that still has a negative impact in that they continue to drive up the health insurance rates.

Madam Speaker, if you look at the ledger we will know from one case of a person having to go to Miami to undergo a major operation (like that for lung cancer, chemo therapy, radiation) that the savings will more than offset any losses of revenue.

It is not surprising that the US Government has found exactly the same thing. In 2006, US Federal Smoking Cause Health Expenditures, costs through Medicare, Medicaid and other Federal programmes were more than seven times the total amount of Federal Tobacco Tax revenues. In other words, the Federal Smoking Cause Health Expenditures were estimated at US$54.5 billion while the total Federal Tobacco Tax revenues were a paltry $7.3 billion. For those who might want to latch onto that flimsy string, that one is quickly whisked away.

The daily toll of tobacco use in the United States, the number of children who try their first cigarette each day is at 4,000. The number of other kids who become regular daily smokers each day, 1,000-plus. Kids who start each day who will ultimately die from smoking, 350. Number of adults who die from smoking each day, over 1,100. Number of people ill with smoking-caused disease on any given day, 8.6 million.

Madam Speaker, the mounting evidence and growing volume of research and statistics as it relates to smoking just cannot be ignored. I am happy that today we are taking the first important step to really put in place the legislative framework that will greatly assist these Islands.

In his contribution, I heard the Fourth Elected Member for George Town mention the fact that this is indeed a first step, and that as we move forward perhaps we will see other areas that we need to cover. And I agree with him wholeheartedly. We just need to set a very strict public policy standard as to what we will and will not tolerate in Cayman, in particular when we speak to public places.

Naturally we have all seen the ill effects of smoking up close. My paternal grandfather died from emphysema. He smoked for over 50-something years. Every time we ever spoke to him about it, he'd always say that he never inhaled, he only puffed. In fact, I will never forget how he used to say that in his 50-something years of smoking he may have inhaled two or three times. He said he always puffed in and puffed out.

We could not convince him. We could not show him any evidence or report that would change his mind about the effects of even just puffing or sucking a cigarette into his mouth and blowing it straight out.

It was quite sad to see how his life ended. Losing a grandparent for any of us is sad. But to see how he suffered; to see what emphysema does to an otherwise healthy man—every other part of his body was healthy for 76 years. Up until three months before he died, he was still going over to my aunt's house scraping the paint off the fascia board and painting the fascia board and eaves of her house. That was what he enjoyed doing in his latter years, going around to each of his children's homes, helping in any way that he could. He liked doing stuff like that because that kept him going, kept him healthy, kept him strong. I still see him out there, being able to pick up that ladder and move about.

In three short months, he was gone. His voice was gone; we could barely hear anything he was saying. We saw him hooked up to that bag in the hospital and them having to continually pump that fluid out of his body.

I just looked at him, and all I could hear ringing back in my ears was "I don't inhale. I only puff."

The one good thing was that throughout the years he smoked outside. Wherever he was, he would go outside to smoke. So that helped a lot. But the truth of the matter is, as you see the mounting new evidence about the impact of secondhand smoke . . . I clearly remember the times we'd be at my aunt's back porch playing dominoes. Again, when you do not know, you say to yourself, I smell the smoke, but at least we are outside in an open air environment.

The reality is that it is incumbent on all of us, even with our own families and loved ones, to take a firm stand. If they do not do what it takes to quit, my suggest is to do as the old people say, you race them out of the house and make sure they go far! Because the truth is, if they are downwind or within the general vicinity, the evidence and research now proves that there is no safe level of secondhand smoke. No safe level.

So, Madam Speaker, it is incumbent upon all of us to take that stand for ourselves, our children, our loved ones, our friends. We ought to encourage, we ought to be firm, but loving, and try to assist in any way we can to get them to [not] smoke. And do not give up.

For a long time we, like many other communities, have taken the other "hard" drugs a lot more seriously—crack, marijuana. We have really seen those as the things that we push our loved ones not to start. In fact, a lot of us have said, Well, at least if they are not doing the hard drugs, if all they are doing is smoking, if all they are doing is having a few beers . . . But the thing is, a lot of smokers will also say that a lot of times the consumption of alcohol adds to the fervour to smoke.

In fact, I have a few friends who are social smokers. The only time they smoke is when they are out drinking. They do not smoke otherwise. But even that we have to discourage our friends and loved ones from doing because the evidence proves that despite the fact that they make these claims and fool themselves and make themselves feel good, at the end of the day, depending on their body's capacity to deal with that smoke and to fight cancer-causing cells, they could very well be just like the pack-a-day, or two-packs-a-day heavy smoker. We need to really embrace, not shun, our friends and family who smoke and try to assist them and get them to do what it takes to quit. Work with them. It is of utmost importance to them and their health, and to their children's health.

Madam Speaker, with those few and brief comments, I hope I have added somewhat to the debate. Certainly, the Opposition is happy—thrilled, in fact—to vote with the Government on this critically important piece of legislation.

As my colleague said a bit earlier, we encourage the Minister to see this as a first step and to know that on this issue any sort of stance he wants to take on some of the other matters that may not have gotten the type of coverage he wants or would have desired to see, to let him know we have his back on this one. We will not be deterred in trying to ensure that Cayman goes further than anywhere else on the face of this earth, because at the end of the day, when we are really honest with ourselves and we look at the cost that is having on this little Island, it is frightening.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: It is approximately five minutes to the hour of interruption. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment.

Honourable Minister of Health.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I move the adjournment of this honourable House until Wednesday at 10 am.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now stand adjourned until Wednesday at 10 am. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 4.24 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Wednesday, 15 October 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
WEDNESDAY
15 OCTOBER 2008
10.35 AM
Tenth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say the Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

Proceedings resumed at 10.38 am

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS

*Oath of Allegiance (administered by the Clerk)
By Mrs Cheryl Richards to be the Honourable Temporary Second Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Legal Affairs*

The Speaker: Mrs. Richards, would you come to the Clerk's table please?
May we stand?

Oath of Allegiance

Mrs. Cheryl Richards: I, Cheryl Richards, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law so help me God.

The Speaker: Mrs. Richards, I welcome you once again to these Chambers, and it does give me great pleasure when I swear in another woman. You may take your seat.

Please be seated.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Members of Cayman Islands Youth Assembly and their leaders welcomed to Legislative Assembly

The Speaker: I have received no messages or announcements, but at this moment, if the House will allow me, I would like to welcome to this Legislative Assembly this morning members of the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly and their leaders, and to say what a handsome bunch of young people we have in the Cayman Islands.

Welcome.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

Annual Report of the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Development and Commerce for the 2004/5 Financial Year

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report of the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Development and Commerce for the 2004/5 Financial Year.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: No, thank you, Madam Speaker.

Voice of Young Caymanians - Action Papers from the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly 2007-2008 Delegation

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Training, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the document entitled, The Voice of Young Caymanians, which contains two Action Papers, being the work of the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to second your greeting to the members of the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly and their leaders, and to acknowledge among them Ms. Katherine Whitaker, director of the Youth Services Unit; Mr. James Myles, the Youth Services Coordinator; Mr. Ewert Atkinson, Project Officer; Mrs. Lisa Charlton, Youth Empowerment Officer.

The two papers just laid on the Table of this honourable House were presented to me on Friday, October 3, at the National Youth Forum. As I committed then, I have laid them on the Table of this honourable House today.

Before I actually speak to the papers, I think it would be useful to the House and to the broader community if I spent a little time setting out the background to these papers and to the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly.

Madam Speaker, you were the Minister responsible for actually bringing the National Youth Policy to this honourable House, which was accepted. The Cayman Islands Youth Assembly is an implementation mechanism called for by the Cayman Islands National Youth Policy, 2000, which was tabled in this House and accepted by Government as its guiding policy for youth development back in 2001.

According to the National Youth Policy, the Youth Assembly, "Should be an umbrella body of young people who represent various categories of youth and who advocate on behalf of young men and young women. The role of the Assembly is to be the voice of young people regarding the national agenda. This mechanism would ensure ongoing consultation and participation by young men and women." That, Madam Speaker, is from the Cayman Islands National Youth Policy itself.

The Cayman Islands National Youth Policy defines youth as "persons aged 10 to 25 who are becoming independent of adults with the ability to make moral judgments and willing to take responsibility for their actions." Again, that definition comes from the Cayman Islands National Youth Policy.

Because of the wide age range defined as youth, it was decided to split the age range and have two cohorts of youth—Group A aged 1-17; and Group B aged 18-25. In this way it is expected that it will more effectively capture the concerns, dreams, challenges, recommendations and aspirations of young people in these Islands.

Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly presently consists of 28 young men and women in Group A, that is youth aged 11 to 17, from all middle and high schools on Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac, with the exception of First Baptist Christian School as they were unable to participate last year. Their place is available when they are able to participate. Group B, youth aged 18 to 25, will be brought on line this budget year. Representation in this group will include college youth and those in the work force.

I wish to say a little about the selection process for the members of the Youth Assembly. Members are selected to represent their schools through school wide general elections. It is my understanding that the campaign processes were very vigorous and robust, and many a lesson about politics was learnt.

Each school is allowed two representatives. Interested students launch their own campaigns and fellow students vote by secret ballot for the two candidates they think best represent their school and youth their age.

Madam Speaker, I wish to set out the schools involved and to name the representatives, most of whom are here today:

Leading Edge High School	Miss Danielle Borden Miss Jodessa Hamilton
PACE High School	Miss Tianee Levy Mr. Rajay Reid
New Horizon High School	Miss Taylor Reid Mr. Moses Ebanks
Heritage High School	Miss Akime Palmer Miss Allison Antonio
John Gray High School	Miss Kaycha Reid Miss Rashane Frater Miss Martina Jackson Mr. Kadane Hall
Cayman Preparatory and High School	Mr. Ashvin Murugesu Miss Amber Martinez
St. Ignatius High & Middle Schools	Miss Ashley Osborne Mr. Alex Cowan

Triple C School	Miss Farah Miller
Cayman International School	Miss Taylor Ribbins Mr. Tristan von Kirchenheim
Cayman Academy	Mr. Robert Rivers Miss Megan Gould- bourne
Grace Christian Academy	Miss Jhnae Brown Miss Ashley Christian
Wesleyan Christian School	Miss Kendra Ebanks Miss Ashley Smith- Phipps
Cayman Brac High	Miss Karthika Velusamy Mr. Kodie Scott
Lighthouse School	Mr. Harris Egbert Mr. Jonathan McField

Madam Speaker, establishing this Youth Assembly is essentially the significant youth empowerment tool which gives a formal structured and recognised platform from which youth can participate in decision making of the country in which they live and will ultimately inherit. This is their voice on national issues that affect and are of interest to them.

There are two action papers. The first is entitled, “[Overview of] Education and Over-employment.” I wish to give an overview of that particular paper.

The Youth Assembly has submitted that many young people in the Cayman Islands are leaving high schools with little academic proficiency. This has resulted in an influx of expatriates in our job market thereby making it difficult for our youth and native Caymanians to secure worthwhile employment.

The Youth Assembly identified six primary factors that impede youth development, including “Lack of Parental Involvement.” The youth consider it a must for parents to “see the relevance of their involvement and the important role that they play in the lives of their children,” stating further that without parental support the “nation’s children are more likely to fall prey to either peer pressure or lose interest in their education.”

They also identify “Low Academic Expectations” as a factor which impedes youth development. They point out that currently some students are allowed to graduate even if they fail to achieve minimum requirements. “. . . many students merely attend classes just for the sake of acquiring the necessary percentage to graduate,” that is, in terms of attendance and not for the primary role of schools, that is, learning.

Another factor they have identified is what they term “Inadequate Pre-employment Experience.” The youth consider that, “Most of the job opportunities that are being advertised usually ask for work experiences that many of our high school or tertiary graduates may not have. Therefore, without sufficient pre-employment training, our young people will either continue to be screened for not having the requisite knowledge or enter into the workforce at a [distinct] disadvantage.”

The fourth factor they identified was “Lack of Vocational Training Facilities.” The position papers note that, “Not all students are academically inclined and these are usually the ones who graduate without the basic educational proficiencies.” It is the firmly held view of the Youth Assembly “that such students should be filtered into vocational training programmes to acquire skills that can be used to gain future employment.”

The fifth factor they identified was a “Breakdown in the Social Fabric of the Community.” Here the traditional Christian way of life is seen as being threatened by negative subcultures leading to moral decay which influences many of the behavioural patterns now exhibited by our young people.

The sixth factor, primary factor, Madam Speaker, is “Lack of Motivation.” For many youth schools are but social gathering places. Without more innovative programming to motivate the students, the prime objective of education will become secondary.

And so they say, Madam Speaker, that the impeding factors are therefore seen as precursors to increasing juvenile crime, dependence on foreign labour, poverty and unemployment.

On vocational training they say, “The belief shared is that vocational courses will further strengthen the linkages between educational fulfilment and job attainment. It does so by becoming safety nets for students who lack the aptitude for subjects deemed too advanced.” The youth have recommended three steps to enhance the image and relevance of technical and vocational training.

First is “the creation of a vocational training job fair or career day for all students with a slogan ‘Your salary affects your life.’ This could be used to stimulate interest in this field while bringing more awareness to vocational study as a viable alternative for future employment.”

Second, we should “develop a proficiency evaluation for students to determine whether current academic levels warrant extra assistance” or vocational intervention.

And, finally, we should initiate “an apprenticeship programme whereby the schools work in tandem with private entities to give young people the hands-on experience needed to make [these programmes] educational yet exciting.”

Madam Speaker, the overall recommendation of the Youth Assembly on this particular issue has been broken down by them into five points: Funding, Motivation, Family support, Solving mediocre standards, and Providing increased internships.

They say, in relation to Funding, that “Although there may be countless scholarships and funding opportunities available to Caymanians and status holders, [they believe that] more needs to be done to promote where and how these resources are accessed." One suggestion is to have more "Career Fairs, showcasing the different services catering to young people and the resources [such as scholarships or student loan opportunities] that are available."

On "Motivation" they say this "is a challenge that can be resolved by creating programmes that highlight the importance of staying in school. These programmes could then be coupled with scholarships where students are awarded for staying in school or qualifying for higher education."

On "Family Support" they note that "the importance of family support can never be over emphasised. Therefore by creating mechanisms that identify and ensure that this support remains in the home, this will allow students to develop their abilities in a wholesome domestic environment." Parents must also teach their kids positive civic qualities like respect for authority and country.

"Solving mediocre standards," they note that "frequent monitoring and evaluations are the primary ways of alleviating this problem. A special team of inspectors should be dispatched at regular intervals to evaluate whether students are performing at their current grade levels or if the current teaching practices need adjustment. In fact, they believe that stricter more mandatory academic requirements should be expected of students in order to graduate, not just attendance."

On increased internships, they note that often young people are overlooked for entry level jobs because they may lack qualifications and experience. They state that even if our citizens are not qualified for certain jobs they should be given the appropriate training to ensure that they attain skills necessary for current or future job placement.

Madam Speaker, I seek to respond on behalf of the Government to some of these points. I wholeheartedly support much of the recommendations made by the Youth Assembly with regard to education. On the funding point, the Ministry of Education is committed to supporting and encouraging young people to fulfil their fullest potential and it offers a comprehensive scholarship programme to assist Caymanian students wanting to further their education.

Scholarships are available for studies undertaken at accredited institutions both locally and overseas and cover Associate's, Bachelor's, and Master's Degree level courses, as well as PhD programmes.

Overseas scholarships are designed to provide assistance with the cost of tuition, books, housing and reasonable living expenses, and return air travel to the Cayman Islands.

Just in terms of statistics, Madam Speaker, in 2007, Government granted a total of 551 scholarships—102 for study overseas, and 449 for local study. This year we have funded a total of 738 scholarships—311 for overseas study and 427 for study at local institutions.

I should say that any Caymanian interested in finding out more about scholarships can visit the Ministry of Education website, which is, www.brighterfutures.gov.ky for application forms and for further information. They can also email Danielle Japal who is the Education Council secretary, at danielle.japal@gov.ky.

Madam Speaker, I should also mention that the Chamber of Commerce also produces an education and training scholarship booklet containing information on all of the scholarships which are available from private institutions both locally and overseas. And for further information on this, contact the Chamber of Commerce.

On the motivation point, I can say as Minister with responsibility for Education and Youth that I am striving to ensure that every child in Cayman has the opportunity to attend a world class school and receive a world class education. The Better Pathways, Brighter Future initiative, which will start next year, will address the particular issue of providing opportunities and to encourage the aspirations of young people and to support the attainment of goals whether they are academically inclined or gifted in another way.

The Better Pathways Brighter Future programme offers a number of customised paths which provide students with meaningful choices based on individual skills, interests, aptitudes and talents. In Years 10 and 11, every secondary level student will be guided and supported along these pathways and assisted in making the choices that are relevant to the realisation of their particular career goals and aspirations.

These options will include a strong academic programme based around the international baccalaureate diploma programme, or advanced placement examinations which will provide an internationally recognised set of qualifications. Technical and vocational programmes aligned with the offerings of the University College to prepare students for entry into the workforce, and will also form the basis for more advanced professional studies.

Should they need to, students will have the opportunity to repeat or re-sit examination courses they took in Year 11 in order to give them a critical second chance to improve their overall performance. They will be able to benefit from supervised and guided work placement or apprenticeship programmes leading to competency based skills assessment and achievement of work based qualifications.

And finally, they will continue to be able to pursue the course of "A Level" programmes offered by local private schools with the assistance from the Government.

Madam Speaker, the aim of this initiative is to provide students with the opportunity to build a useful portfolio of qualifications in their chosen areas. Further, the options have been designed to give lots and lots of choices so that every young person will be able to leave the education system well prepared for life beyond school and well armed with the qualifications they will need for entry into the work force.

Another significant aspect of the Better Pathways Brighter Futures initiative is that once it is implemented in 2009, all students will be required to continue their education for a minimum of one year after high school. The Better Pathways Brighter Futures initiative is the result of Government's determination, a no excuses attitude when it comes to building brighter futures for all young people in the Cayman Islands.

On family support, I should say that I continually urge and encourage parents and guardians to become more involved with their children's education. But I can only urge and encourage, I cannot force or legislate parental involvement. What I can do is ensure that programmes are implemented and facilities are available to support parents and make it easier for them to remain involved in how their children are performing at school.

As an example of this, the new schools management software, known as SIMS, has been introduced which allows the tracking of every student in the Government education system from Kindergarten to Year 12 and on to tertiary. The data this system provides, such as results, reports, attendance records, and information on individual performance, will help parents and teachers to understand how each child is doing in each of the subjects he is taking. The system highlights the child's strengths as well as weaknesses and allows parents to make more informed decisions.

Madam Speaker, this is just one of the ways my Ministry is assisting parents to become more involved in their children's education.

Solving mediocre standards. Madam Speaker, much effort has gone into ensuring that the work of every educational institution is realigned to focus on serving students and providing necessary support for their learning. The Education Standards and Assessment Unit (ESAU), formerly known as the Schools Inspectorate, was established in 1996 and has been providing inspection services to our schools for over a decade now.

The rigorous external evaluations carried out by officers from ESAU, provide the Ministry of Education system, parents, and members of our community with a clear and impartial view of the quality of education as it is being offered within our public school system, including the strengths and opportunities for improvement.

Then there is the new National Curriculum which was adopted by all Government schools last month. This has been designed to place much greater emphasis on actual skills and abilities. And to ensure that standards are being met and maintained, ESAU will be looking at the extent to which schools are achieving their objectives in each study area and will be gauging what young people are learning against a pre-established set of criteria.

On increased internships, I agree that it is vitally important that young people are as prepared as possible when they are about to enter the job market. When the George Hicks Campus was split into four smaller schools, each school was encouraged to think outside of the box and come up with his own programme and initiative.

Madam Speaker, an example from the Leading Edge High School in relation to internship, is their Learning Through Internship Programme, which is in its second year and is the brainchild of Lyneth Montith, the school leader. This year, 72 students and 25 companies participated. The programme operates on the premise that 13- and 14-year old students are not too young to begin to prepare for the world of work which awaits them when they leave school.

Between the 14th of January and March 10th (seven weeks total), students from Leading Edge attended work each Monday between 8:30 and noon.

Madam Speaker, 25 companies in these Islands participated in this programme. I am not going to name all of them now, because it would take too long, but I wish to thank all of them for their important contribution to the development of our young people.

There is also the Department of Employment Relations which is also part of my Ministry. It has developed a job placement unit which provides advice and training to people who need to develop workplace skills including training and interview skills, resume writing and work ethic.

Since 2002, the Department of Employment Relations has also run a summer employment programme targeting students aged 14 to 22. In 2007, a total of 55 students registered for job placement through this programme, and in 2008 the number of applicants was 48.

Madam Speaker, UCCI, through its Partners in Education Programme, develops relationships with human resource departments of various private sector partners to place students in work experience. Students are evaluated on a monthly basis by the employers and UCCI and are graded at the end of the semester.

In the area of hospitality industry related studies, at UCCI there is an Associate's programme offered in hospitality management. There is also a course in electro-technology which provides the foundation for ultimate certification as an electrician in the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, this list is by no means exhaustive. But it gives some idea of the pre-employment training apprenticeship opportunities which already exist in Cayman for young people.

Now I want to speak to the second paper produced by the Youth Assembly. This paper was produced by the Committee on Overdevelopment and the Environment.

Madam Speaker, the Youth Assembly Committee on the Environment started with a preamble based on the following excerpt from the policy brief Population Scenarios, Past Trends, and Future Possibilities. I am quoting from that.

“Prior to the 1960s, the Cayman Islands were primarily agrarian with emphasis placed on seafaring activities and farming for subsistence. During this period the population grew fairly slowly at an overall rate of 18%. Then came modern development which, despite affecting population growth in the 1960s, didn’t affect the growth rate significantly until the 1970s and 1980s where the population increased by 76%.

“Subsequent to this period, the population ballooned to numbers that can almost be deemed as an oddity for our country’s size. In fact, between the years 1970 and 2006, our Islands witnessed a massive 428% increase in population.

“Cayman’s propensity to achieve this exponential growth in such a relatively short time span is one of the main influences pushing the drive towards overdevelopment now affecting our Islands.”

Madam Speaker, the Youth Assembly sought to highlight the rate at which our Islands population has grown and the potential consequences of this exponential increase. They identified four implications of population increase and overdevelopment.

The first is Carbon Emissions. The action paper states that “overdevelopment and population growth are two intertwining dilemmas that [combine] to impact different aspects of Cayman’s society. The first aspect that both actions influence is the demand for social amenities, such as cars and houses. [What then] results is an increase in carbon emissions induced by the rise in car and home ownership.”

To minimise pollution the Youth Assembly recommends implementing carpool policies, promoting conservation practices, limiting the amount of vegetation destroyed, implementing laws that provide guidelines on how cars are imported and by whom, and mandating citizens to keep their cars for a specific period before purchasing new vehicles.

They said this would effectively regulate the amount of waste that enters the landfill, thus stemming its growth. They recommend that more eco-friendly transportation should be promoted. One solution they say is “to provide incentives for scooter ownership thereby stimulating interest for this mode of transportation instead of cars.”

Smelting: They suggest that “car parts . . . could be recycled and used to make new cars, [and they recommend] developing an efficient and effective public transportation system which would also decrease demand for cars in the country. They suggest that environmentally-friendly disposal methods should also be practiced [and] guidelines [should be developed] to ensure that cars and other machines are stripped of all hazardous material before disposal.”

Secondly, they point to the loss of endangered species and erosion of culture. And they speak to economic implications. They said that due to the increase in development and with the population increasing to man this growth, our landfill will continue to rise because of higher consumption and waste input. This will impact the tourism industry, and if we lose the beauty of our Islands, we may have to compete with our regional competitors through means that deviate from our culture. They give as examples, prostitution and gambling.

They talk about the George Town Landfill and describe it as a monumental threat. They note that if we fail to stem the growth of the George Town Landfill our Islands will face dire consequences including health, social and economic issues.

In addition, they say that other methods were proposed but were unpractical, such as moving the dumpsite, burning the waste, or investing in a StarTech Waste Converter System.

Some of their other recommendations [include] the promotion of solar power, recycling, increased monitoring to reduce littering or improper garbage disposal, an increased role for the National Trust, public education. They note that it is clear that Caymanians are beginning to equate loss of environmental resources with loss of culture and our Caymanian identity.

Madam Speaker, if I may speak to some of these issues, very insightful observations and some very sound recommendations have been made by the Youth Assembly. There are some realities. The continued development of these Islands will bring about more usage of equipment in housing and hotels. However, the use of diesel to supply electricity will continue to increase until an alternative fuel supply is found.

The Department of Environmental Health and the Ministry for Communications, Works and Infrastructure, are planning to develop a waste-to-energy plant that will incinerate the garbage to generate electricity. This will be an alternative and greener energy source which will help to reduce the carbon emissions for the Island.

To further reduce emissions, the Government has a robust vehicle inspection programme that prevents polluting vehicles from being licensed and any vehicle causing very visible pollution can be stopped and ticketed.

The Ministry, through the Department of Environmental Health is currently recycling lead acid batteries, aluminium and used motor oil, which is sent off island. The Department of Environmental Health is also completing a new recycling centre which will be expanded to include a wide range of other recyclable products. A waste-to-energy system will also generate electricity and be sold to the local power company. There will be increased public education and promotion regarding recycling and we trust that young people will play their part in this regard.

The Government will also consider duty discounts for recyclable products and energy systems imported into the Islands and discourage extensive packaging on products that are not environmentally friendly. There are plans to reduce the existing landfill and recycle relevant products and to incinerate the garbage. This will reduce the greenhouse gases over time and improve recycling efforts.

Although there will be a landfill in the future, it will only store inert and non-biodegradable waste which will not contribute to any form of pollution or environmental degradation. Madam Speaker, disposal of vehicles is now being done by shipment overseas. No more vehicles are being disposed of in the landfills, although the public continues to abandon vehicles all over the Island. Fuel, batteries, oils, all are usually removed from the vehicles prior to disposal. Also, the current scrap metals market allows for the entire car—with seats, engine, glass and other components—to be baled and exported off Island.

White goods such as appliances, stoves, fridges, air conditioners, washers and dryers, are also stored and shipped off Island as part of the recycling programme.

The adoption of more eco-friendly transportation and alternative fuel vehicles is being encouraged within the revised traffic law which is currently being reviewed for amendment to facilitate such vehicles. New roads are being constructed with these objectives in mind, as well as bike lanes to encourage cycling.

One of the suggestions of the Assembly was smelting of vehicles. I should say this about that. On average it takes 500 to 600 Kw hours of electricity to melt one ton of metal. To produce this amount of energy, approximately one barrel of diesel would need to be consumed. According to data released by British Petroleum, the combustion of one barrel of diesel produced approximately 550 kilograms or 1,212 pounds of carbon dioxide.

Therefore, when analysing these numbers, it becomes quite apparent that it is best to leave the smelting of scrap metals to those jurisdictions that are able to produce energy with less carbon emissions, that is, using green energy such as hydropower and other alternatives. Hence the removal of derelict vehicles and scrap metals entirely from the Islands is the preferred approach for these Islands.

Madam Speaker, to speak a bit more about the waste energy project, the Department of Environmental Health and the Ministry of Communication, Works and Infrastructure, through the Solid Waste Strategic Management Committee, have created a detailed development plan for a waste energy facility for these Islands. Once this plan is put into effect the George Town landfill will be reduced to a small five acre engineered sanitary landfill, but this will take 15 to 20 years to get to that point, depending on the volume of incoming waste. The reduction of the landfill would happen through mining and recovering recyclables while all burnable material would be processed in the waste energy facility. In doing so, the energy produced could be equal to 8 to 10 per cent of the Island's power requirements. Furthermore, the minimal emissions created would have an overall effect of greatly reducing the CO<sub>2</sub> (carbon dioxide fire extinguisher) gases, which could thereby be sold in the lucrative carbon credit trading market.

The Government has further demonstrated its commitment to dealing with environmental issues by participating in the project known as "Enhancing Capacity for Adaptation to Climate Change," funded by the UK (United Kingdom) Government, and being run through the Belize CARICOM (Caribbean Community) Centre for climate change. This three year project will firstly enhance national capacity to undertake environmental monitoring and vulnerability and risk assessments in key environment and social economic sectors. Secondly, it will develop and integrate climate change adaptation strategies into all national planning programmes, and thirdly, it will develop and implement national public education and outreach programmes that feed into larger public education and outreach strategies. It obligates the Government to development policies and measures to reduce greenhouse gases and facilitate adaptation.

The Cayman Islands hosted the first workshop related to the CARICOM UK project where it was agreed that mitigating action plans and climate adaptation strategies will be produced by the end of this year. A follow up workshop will be held this week, October 21 and 22 [2008].

Madam Speaker, the Government believes that adaptation and mitigation are both necessary and, as such, ratified the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), and its Kyoto Protocol in March of 2007.

With regard to the removal of the forest and wetlands in their role in reducing greenhouse gases, as I noted earlier, no formal plan yet exists for the management of forest and other biological resources under a climate change mitigation framework. However, the passage of the National Conservation Bill scheduled for debate in this House later this year will create a legislative base for a system of protected areas and associated management plans.

Madam Speaker, just before I close I should say that it is worthy to note that a number of private sector entities have begun to offer options to the expanding local market in Thermal and Solar Electric, and there exists a promising biodiesel production and supply operation, which has recently been started by one private individual.

And on a final note to address the issue of erosion of culture: The Government shares this concern and it is against this background that the Government has recently committed significant sums to purchase the home of Ms. Gladwyn Lassie Bush, to be preserved as a cultural reference point of our heritage for generations to come.

Madam Speaker, I make these comments in response to the various action papers, not to rebut the suggestions and recommendations which have been put forward, but to note publicly that it is clear that the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly has done a significant amount of work on these papers. And, in many instances, their observations are spot on. I also seek to assure them that the Government is as concerned as they are about the issues they have raised, and that work is already underway to significantly address many of them. Where there have been suggestions outside of the initiatives that are already ongoing, I commit to the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly that they will be fully considered.

Madam Speaker, I wish to commend these papers for the consideration of all Members of this honourable House and would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Youth Services Department and its staff, and the members of the historic Cayman Islands Youth Assembly for taking their sworn responsibilities seriously and for their dedication to the task at hand in balancing the requirements of their school activities with this significant undertaking.

Madam Speaker, I close by saying that in these days, when so much negativity surrounds the activities of young people, it does the heart and soul good to note the interest of this outstanding group of young people and this tremendous achievement in producing these papers. It also points to the huge potential which all of them have and that can only bode well for the interest of these beloved Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, I would invite you at a convenient and appropriate time to suspend the proceedings of this honourable House so that we may have an opportunity to meet with this outstanding group of young people and provide whatever photo opportunities we feel are necessary and appropriate today.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended at this time, not only to mingle with the members of the Cayman Islands Youth Assembly, but to also complete the report of the Finance Committee. Due to the fact that we had these young people coming here this morning, we were unable to complete the report of the Finance Committee.

So, proceedings will be suspended at this time and we will return when the finance committee has completed its report; the signing and otherwise.

Proceedings suspended at 11.35 am

Proceedings resumed at 3.07 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS AND OF REPORTS

Cayman Islands Monetary Authority Annual Report – 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority Annual Report – 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007.

Thank you.

The Speaker: so ordered.

Does the Honourable Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, just to make a brief contribution in respect of the Annual Report of the Monetary Authority just tabled.

Madam Speaker, when we look at the balance sheet of the Monetary Authority, as at the 30 June 2007 we see that the total assets of the Authority were approximately $110 million, and of that $110 million in assets, approximately $104 million is held in currency reserve assets. The currency reserve assets back the Cayman Islands currency in circulation. And since the total currency in circulation at 30 June 2007 was approximately $76 million, the Cayman Islands dollar is therefore well backed and the currency reserve assets which provide that backing are 136 per cent of the demand liabilities (as it's referred to on the balance sheet), "demand liabilities" or "currency in circulation."

The liability of the Authority at the 30 June 2007 totaled approximately $84 million. The single largest item of those liabilities is the value of demand liabilities or currency in circulation (which I have just said is $76 million), and that total of $76 million is broken down into currency notes in circulation of approximately $68 million, and coins in circulation of approximately $8 million.

The net assets of the Authority at 30 June 2007 were therefore $25.6 million approximately.

Madam Speaker, if we were to turn quickly to the income statement for the year ended 30 June, we would see that the total income earned by the Monetary Authority in that year was approximately $19 million. The vast majority of that $19 million came from Government for outputs or services performed by the Authority on behalf of the Government in respect of its regulation of the financial services industry.

Madam Speaker, total operating expenses were approximately $13 million, and salaries and other benefits are the single largest category or component of operating expenses. Net income, therefore, being the difference between total income of $19 million and total operating expenses of $13 million is $6 million for the year to 30 June 2007.

I would also like to note for the record that the Auditor General has issued an unqualified or a clean audit opinion in respect of the financial statements to June 2007. His concluding opinion is that the financial statements present fairly in all material respects the financial position of the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority at 30 June 2007 and of its results and cash flows for the year then ended.

Madam Speaker, the Annual Report itself is a comprehensive report and gives a number of statistics as at 30 June 2007, and I would just like to briefly detail some of those statistics.

The Authority has a number of divisions or sections within it. I would just like to give some information on the banking stats at 30 June 2007.

There were 20 Category A Banks and Trusts licences in existence at June 2007. There were 262 Category B Bank and Trust licences at that date. There was one Category B Bank and Trust Restricted Licence at 30 June 2007.

If we were to look to the Trust and Company Management Licensing activities we would find that the number of Active Licences at 30 June 2007 were as follows: 86 Trust Company Restricted Licences; 51 Trust Company Unrestricted Licences; 20 Nominee Trusts; 72 Company Managers; and 7 Corporate Service Providers.

Madam Speaker, if you turn to insurance, the number of Class A insurance licences issued at 30 June 2007 were 28. Class B insurance licences at that date were 752; 25 Insurance Managers; 29 Brokers and 89 Insurance Agents.

Madam Speaker, in terms of funds, at 30 June 2007 there were 8,300 Registered Funds; 560 Administered Funds; 112 Licensed Funds; 93 Mutual Fund Full Administration Licence; 55 Restricted licences and 5 Exempted licences.

The Monetary Authority, back on the 29 March 2007, officially launched an electronic reporting mechanism for funds accepting electronic submission of funds' audited accounts along with the Funds Annual Return (FAR). The Authority expects and has proof that the switch to E-reporting will facilitate efficient collection and processing of returns from the funds it now oversees. As of 30 June 2007, the Authority had successfully received 3,745 electronic transmissions.

Madam Speaker, in terms of staff at the Authority as at 30 June 2007, there were 116 total. There were 20 in the banking division, 8 in the compliance division, 5 in currency operations, 8 in fiduciary services, 12 in insurance, 23 in investments and securities, 6 in the legal division, 6 in the managing director's office, 21 in operations (the area of Accounts, Information Systems and Human Resources) and 7 staff members in the policy and development division.

In terms of the total amount of revenue collected by the Monetary Authority on behalf of the Government, that amount to 30 June 2007 was $60.3 million, which would obviously be passed on to the Cayman Islands Government.

Madam Speaker the Annual Report for 2006/07 in respect of the Monetary Authority is quite a detailed and comprehensive report. I would recommend it to all honourable Members and the listening public.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Under the relevant Standing Order, I have permission to—

The Speaker: You do not. There is no Standing Order on a report. If a Minister or a Member makes a statement, you can ask questions to get clarification. Nothing on a report.

Madam Clerk.

Report of the Standing Finance Committee on the 3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the Financial Year ending 30 June 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report of the Standing Finance Committee on the 3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the Financial Year ending 30 June 2008.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker. Once again, just a brief contribution.

The Standing Finance Committee met on Thursday and Friday, 9 and 10 October [2008], to consider the 3rd Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government's financial year that ended 30 June 2008. More specifically, it met to consider the Supplementary Appropriations. Some were positive and some were negative that were set out in section 10 of those Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates.

Madam Speaker, the Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates document was referred to the Finance Committee by virtue of Standing Order 67 (1). The Committee also considered a motion that I moved in the Legislative Assembly on behalf of the Government; a motion to the effect that the Committee approve the supplementary appropriations set out in section 10 of the Annual Plan and Estimates documents.

The results of the committee's deliberations were as follows: All of the supplementary appropriation requests were approved. Some of the initial appropriations were amended, and the motion that I raised in the Legislative Assembly was approved by the Committee inclusive of the amendments to the supplementary appropriations in Schedule 10 of the Annual Plan and Estimates document.

Madam Speaker, the Committee granted its approval that I report the results of the deliberations to the Legislative Assembly, and these are provided in the report that has just been tabled. The Committee also agreed that the report just tabled be the report of the Committee. And, Madam Speaker, the Committee met earlier today to consider the review and to consider and approve the report that has just been tabled.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received no notice of statements by Honourable Members or Ministers of Cabinet.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

BILLS

FIRST READING

The Deputy Clerk: The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No.2) Bill, 2008.

The Speaker: The Bill is deemed to have been read a first time and is set down for a second reading.

SECOND READING

Tobacco Bill 2008

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable . . .

Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Environment, investment and Commerce.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to make my contribution to the Tobacco Bill, 2008, and to start by commending the Minister of Health and Human Services for piloting this Bill through the legislative process.

Madam Speaker, the bottom line is that smoking is rapidly becoming socially unacceptable. And we have seen this in many countries. We have even seen it in some European countries where we know that smoking is certainly prevalent.

I know that all of us will remember the days when we boarded an aircraft and even after the doors were closed smoking was allowed. I know that those of us who are non-smokers certainly did not appreciate having to operate in that environment. Madam speaker, I mentioned that because I think the aviation industry was perhaps the first industry to recognise that this was an issue that needed to be addressed. Today the majority of airlines, save for a few of those such as in Russia, prohibit smoking on board their aircraft. And for good reasons, Madam Speaker.

The whole issue of the cost to a country is certainly not insignificant. We know of the significant health costs associated with various forms of illnesses directly related to the habit of smoking. And more often than not, these costs are borne by the state, and Cayman is no different in that regard.

I believe that the most important clauses (although they are all important in this Bill) are clauses 7 and 12. Clause 7 deals with the whole issue of prohibiting the public promotion of tobacco products. I just wanted to take a minute to read that clause because in my view it is so important. It says, "No person shall promote or cause to be promoted a brand element of a tobacco product-

(a) through direct or indirect means, including through sponsorship of an organization, event, service, physical establishment or vehicle of any kind; or

(b) in a manner that allows a consumer or purchaser of such product to be deceived or misled concerning its character, properties, toxicity, composition, merit or safety."

Madam Speaker, it is an important clause because we have all seen the various forms of tobacco promoting products and how easy it is, particularly for the younger age groups, to become attracted to that, and for it to appear to be a product that can put them in a much better light as far as their peers are concerned.

Madam Speaker, I think that clause is critically important, and while I know that our colleague Minister who is promoting this Bill has had his share of criticism from various quarters with respect to this Bill, we expected no different. This is the type of push back, I suppose you could call it, that you get when you introduce this type of change in a society. Most developed and developing countries are moving in this direction and I am very pleased that our country has decided to make this move at this time.

Madam Speaker, there are some who will say that perhaps we should have done this a long time ago, and maybe that is true. It is certainly better late than never, and I think it is certainly time because this habit is becoming so unacceptable socially.

Madam Speaker, the other important clause in the Bill is clause 12, which deals with smoking in public places, within buildings, et cetera. That clause certainly sets out the detailed provisions. This can only be right because those of us who are non-smokers should not be subjected to an environment in which there is smoke. In many cases before this point in time, and certain policies were introduced voluntarily by businesses, individuals who worked in certain establishments were actually forced to operate in that type of environment because there was nothing prohibiting it. Madam Speaker, that cannot be right.

We have all seen and we all know . . . and perhaps we have relatives who have suffered as a result of cigarette smoking. I know that one or two Members have spoken about this before. I too have had that experience because my father smoked for a very long time. He actually got the disease of emphysema, with which I know we are all familiar. That has to be if not the most terrible disease one of the most terrible diseases. He stopped smoking 12 years before he died, but, of course, he had already contracted the disease and it is a slow killer.

I watched him essentially gradually suffocate over a 12-year period until he simply could not breathe anymore. The unfortunate part about that was that in his case the disease and the consequences from smoking essentially attacked his lungs. The rest of his organs were in relatively good shape for his age. Having died at 84 years of age, it seems clear to me that, had he not contracted that disease as a result of smoking, he would have lived even longer.

Madam Speaker, I mentioned already the cost to society and the cost to the state, but it is not something that we should gloss over because these cases can easily run into the millions of dollars and this has to be borne by the taxpayers. A healthy society is one of the objectives of this Government. One of the outcomes that we have put in our Policy Statement from the time we took office. We must do everything that we possibly can to promote that. And I know that we have and will continue to do so.

Madam Speaker, the Members who have spoken before me have done extensive research on various countries and various cases, and even to the point where certain correspondence from some of these tobacco companies was discovered and the subject of a hearing before the US Congress. And what was revealed there was really, really troubling when you see an industry deliberately targeting people as young as 14 years old. They were very clear in their objectives on the marketing side. They understood that if they could capture that audience at that age they would essentially have clients for life because of how difficult the habit is to kick.

Madam Speaker, I do not propose to go on for too much longer because I think that the Minister for Health and Human Services has done an excellent job presenting the Bill. Only to say that I know that some of the push back in this area (at least the initial push back) was from the hospitality industry. But we have seen what is happening in that industry and more and more you go into establishments, whether it is restaurants, hotel lobbies or wherever it is, and you see that those companies have voluntarily instituted no smoking policies.

In fact, one hotel chain, the Westin hotels, took this decision internationally and have declared that their hotels are now smoke free. So, while there was some initial push back, clearly, the industry is going to be moving in this direction and I do not have any concerns about any loss of business, as was indicated initially. In fact, I think quite the opposite is going to happen. And I think that many restaurants have proven that by the introduction of voluntary no smoking policies.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I am very proud to be a part of a Government that has brought such a Bill before this honourable House. I look forward to watching as the Minister and his Ministry and the various enforcement agencies move from the point of the legislative process to the enforcement of this Bill so that we can realise the tangible benefits of such a Bill.

Again, Madam Speaker, I thank you and the Minister for bringing this Bill to the House.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Minister wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I listened very keenly and attentively. There was quite good research [done by] those who spoke on this very, very important piece of legislation.

First, I would like to begin with a comment on the spirit of the Bill. It has been noted that it would be desirable to have the Islands entirely smoke free. This is true, but the approach in drafting this Bill was to keep this aspiration in view while not mounting an all-out attack on smokers. It must be recognised that not everyone can just put the habit aside and quit. People with a nicotine addiction may need more time and support, meanwhile we did not seek to criminalise the behaviour altogether; instead we encourage smokers to seek the benefit of programmes run by the Cancer Society to help people quit.

As I said earlier, I am very impressed by the research done by both my colleagues, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, and the Second Elected Member for West Bay who spoke on behalf of the Opposition. All of them have spoken volumes about the awful effects of tobacco use, including involuntary use such as passive or secondhand smoke.

I also want to thank my colleague Minister, the Minister for Tourism, for his comments on the Bill.

Not to beat it to death, but there is a little brochure, Madam Speaker, put out by the Cayman Islands Cancer Society. I will just read a few comments and tips that they have in here describing a bit more about the danger of tobacco smoke. You see, Madam Speaker, some people think that it is only me putting forward these ideas in trying to say how serious this problem is. It was even said, Why don't I do something about the alcohol situation. But, Madam Speaker, the research that has been done on tobacco in comparison with alcohol, the dangers and the chemicals, I don't think exist there. And it does not affect the other person who may be in the room with [the drinker] unless, God forbid, [there is] a driving accident.

Back to the brochure by the Cancer Society: It says, "There is no such thing as safe tobacco. Any amount of tobacco can hurt the body. Some facts: Smokers of low tar or low nicotine cigarettes have more cancer, heart attacks, strokes and lung damage than people who don't smoke."

This is interesting: "Cigars can have up to seventy times more nicotine than cigarettes [I did not realise that]. Even if you just hold an unlit cigar in your mouth, the chemicals get into your body. Pipe and cigar smokers have more lip and mouth cancer than people who don't smoke. Chew and snuff contain nicotine and chemicals that cause cancer and damage the mouth and teeth."

"A pregnant woman who smokes may hurt her unborn baby. The baby may be small or born too early. The baby may have a bad heart, lungs or other damage. Interestingly infants exposed to smoke are more likely to die of SIDS, that is, Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, or get lung disease."

"Each year in the United States over 4,000 people are killed or badly injured in fires started by smoking."

"Cigar smoke produces 30 times more carbon monoxide than cigarette smoking."

"Tobacco is a drug. It changes the way the body works just like other drugs. All forms of tobacco contain dangerous chemicals that harm the body. Nicotine is a poison."

This one I had to smile at because when we were growing up my father use to have some tobacco plants around the house and I always wondered why the bugs would not trouble them—"Nicotine is a poison. It kills bugs that try to eat the tobacco plant. It is even sold as an insect killer. One of two drops of liquid nicotine will kill a person."

Wow!

"Tars are sticky, dark brown chemicals. When a person smokes, inhaled tars stay in the lungs. When a person chews tobacco, tars stick to the mouth and teeth."

"Carbon monoxide is a poison gas found in tobacco smoke. It has no colour or smell. In large amounts it can make people sick or even kill them."

And I don't have to tell you about that when people want to take their life.

"Most people keep using tobacco because they are addicted. Their bodies must have nicotine. When they stop using tobacco they feel sick, then it is very hard to quit."

Another interesting one, Madam Speaker: "Nicotine is more addictive than cocaine or heroine."

As my colleague, the Minister of Tourism mentioned about emphysema, it indicates, "Coughing, and tar buildup can make a tobacco user's lungs break down. This is called emphysema. It makes breathing painful and hard. It can cause death."

Heart attacks and strokes: "Tobacco use makes blood vessels hard and narrow. It also makes blood thicken or clot and then the blood can't carry oxygen to the heart or to the brain. This can cause a heart attack or stroke."

"Some people don't believe tobacco is harmful because they don't feel sick for years. But, like a time bomb inside the body, many effects of tobacco can't be felt until it is too late."

Some more reasons, Madam Speaker why tobacco is so dangerous.

As I listened to my colleagues speak, the younger ones, I noted that there is good potential there, Madam Speaker, on the research that they have done on this subject for some future health ministers. And I appreciate the time that they took to go into detail on this subject because it all boils down to the health of the nation and providing an environment in which people are not exposed to things that can cause major problems later on in life.

Madam Speaker, I endorse the view that there is no risk-free level of exposure to tobacco smoke. I associate myself with a powerful description of the choice that a smoker with children makes. As long as you smoke with children around, you are totally and really choosing the cigarette over them. You are actually putting your craving before their welfare, that alone should motivate you to put it down.

Madam Speaker, when it comes to people's behaviour, as recognised by various speakers not all smokers are addicted, at least not in the form of chemical dependency. Both, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, for example, made reference to the ritual coming-of-age aspect. How young men, in particular, mark the right to smoke as a sort of rite of passage into manhood.

It is a sad reflection on how little we pay attention to the ways we raise our boys, our children. But this has been allowed to take on such significance. It says much to us about the need to give young people a new and more positive measure of the passage into adulthood. On the other hand, this is an illustration of the reality that tobacco use is a public health problem. It is a social behaviour problem.

Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, also spoke about possibly placing a moratorium on cigar bars. I too have heard the fears that persons will flock to cigar bars to take advantage of the exemption. However, the requirement there is that such places must be properly vented, and we know this is not easy to accomplish at an acceptable standard. It is not a soft option at all.

Persons are likely to be put off by the level of investment required. Furthermore, if one or two investors are willing and able to put that much into it, would it be fair to protect the current ones from competition? Our greatest concern here is with persons who work in such facilities and, therefore, exposed day after day. It may be that we will have to work with Employment Relations to treat this as a hazardous occupation with whatever safeguards may apply.

Also touched on by the Third Elected Member for Bodden was the difficulty in identifying minors. This kind of issue comes up in such legislation, and there is really only one answer to all the tricks people try to get around this. The onus is on the seller—if in doubt, don't sell. It is better you lose that piece of business than lose your reputation or be subject to prosecution, especially in the light of selling to minors.

Madam Speaker, I would just like to comment that even upon commencement of the law certain provisions would not come into effect until a stated period of commencement, which is listed in the Bill. For example, certain requirements relating to displays at point of sale and so on.

Therefore, it just leaves for me to once again, thank the entire Legislative Assembly for considering, debating and eventual passing this piece of legislation into law.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled, The Tobacco Bill, 2008, be given a second reading. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

The Tobacco Bill, 2008, has been given a second reading.

Agreed: The Tobacco Bill, 2008, given a second reading.

Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No. 2) Bill. 2008

The Deputy Clerk: Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No. 2) Bill, 2008.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 48 I beg to move on behalf of the Government the Second Reading of a Bill that is shortly entitled, The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No. 2) Bill 2008.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Member wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just like to give a very brief contribution in respect of the Bill.

The Bill, as honourable Members will know and see, is an exceedingly simple Bill. Clause 1 of the Bill would give its title of the intended law, and clause 2 provides the summary of the types of transactions incurred by the Government.

Madam Speaker, the Schedule to the Bill sets out the 199 individual supplementaries that are requested, and these are both positive and negative.

The overall net total of the 199 supplementaries is approximately $1.9 million, as a reduction to our existing budget for the year to June 2008. As all honourable Members will know, the 199 supplementaries requested in the Schedule to the Bill have already been considered and approved by Finance Committee.

Therefore, given that the supplementary appropriation requests in the Bill have already been approved by Finance Committee, I do not need to say anything further except to commend the Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No.2) Bill, 2008, to honourable Members and seek their support for the Bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?
Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Only to say thanks to all honourable Members for their silent support. Thank you.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled, The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No. 2) Bill, 2008, be given a second reading. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008) (No. 2) Bill, 2008, has been given a second reading.

Agreed: The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2007 to June 2008 (No. 2) Bill, 2008, given a second reading.

The Speaker: The House will now go into Committee to consider the Bills.

House in Committee at 3.50 pm

COMMITTEE ON BILLS

The Chairman: Please be seated. The House is now in Committee.

With the leave of the House, may I assume that, as usual, we should authorise the Honourable Second Official Member to correct minor errors and suchlike in these Bills?

10.15 AM
First Sitting

The Speaker: I call on the Third Official Member to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

 AND OF REPORTS

Draft Consultation Bill: The Children (Amendment)
 Bill 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Children (Amendment) Bill, 2008, as a draft consultation Bill for public input.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Yes, Madam Speaker, thank you.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child was extended to the Cayman Islands on 7 September 1994, by virtue of the Islands being a British Overseas Territory of the United Kingdom. In order to comply with the provisions and principles of the convention, the Government of the Cayman Islands then took the initial step of drafting the Children Law 1995. However, due to technical difficulties in implementing the Law, it was repealed and redrafted.

In November 2003, the CI Legislature passed the new Children Law, 2003. Some essential and critical elements were not sufficiently addressed in the Children Law, 2003, which this Government is now seeking to address in the draft Children (Amendment) Bill, 2008.

The drafting of this Bill was a collaborative effort between government agencies that have primary responsibility for the welfare of children. It is an-anticipated that the provisions of this Law will provide the relevant regulating authorities with the appropriate statutory powers to ensure that the principle of the best interest of the child is paramount.

The Children (Amendment) Bill, 2008, is a far-reaching comprehensive legal instrument whose primary aim is to embody at a domestic level the articles and provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Honourable Ministers and Members of Cabinet and the Legislative Assembly are asked to take note that the development of a comprehensive legal framework that modernizes provisions regarding children's welfare and focuses on the best interest of the child is part of the Ministry's strategic plan.

During this public consultation process we must remain mindful that this legislation is about protecting our most valuable asset—our children. The task of protecting children in our society is a challenging one for all of the community. Every society needs a variety of ways—social, economic, moral, legal, and environmental—in which to do this.

Certainly, we have our share of challenges in the face of the rate and the extent of social changes experienced here in Cayman in the past decades. There is, for example, the complex issue of mandatory reporting of child abuse. This has implications for children, families and many professionals, including those in the social, health, education, ecclesiastic, and law enforcement fields, as well as government policymakers.

Legislating against child abuse recognises that children have the right to be protected from abuse; but it does not protect children from prevailing social attitudes and beliefs about child abuse, especially abuse within the family unit, and especially if those attitudes condone denial or [an] exaggerated sense of what should be considered private.

I would like to encourage all people to give close attention to the legislation, including some key components. The details of the proposed amendments are as follows:

- New definitions, including a definition of abuse, have been inserted;
- section 4 has been amended to give a father who is not married to the mother of a child at the time of its birth, parental responsibility where he, along with the mother, registers the birth of a child;
- new provisions on acquisition of parental responsibility by a step-parent are also introduced in this bill;
- duty is placed on the Department of Children Services ("the Department") to promote the educational achievements of children it looks after;
- new provisions on mandatory reporting of possible abuse and neglect of children are introduced. It sets out who is required to report and specifies the obligations of the Department following a report. It also provides appropriate safeguards regarding the information and identity of the person making the report;

- the Governor in Cabinet is permitted to issue a certificate to a foster parent providing refuge to a child;

- additional duties are imposed on the Department;

- Part X of the existing Law is repealed; and

- a new section 88A places a duty on the parents of a child appearing before a court to also attend court for the duration of the proceedings. And this, Madam Speaker, is something that we have been asking for, for a long time. Too many times we see the children by themselves, or with a social worker, attending these hearings and it is high time that the parents take some responsibility for this. I know the Minister of Education has talked about this for a long time.

While this Bill is simply a discussion draft for your input, I would like to remind everyone of the importance of placing high priority on the well-being of every boy and girl in these islands. I want to encourage everyone to become familiar with this draft document. The proposed amendments have far-reaching implications for all persons working and caring for children.

There is a thirty-day period to look at this. The future of this legislation will be dependent on your input and participation. Read it and send us your comments. We will not know how you, the public, feel unless you let us know.

I hope that you will give your wholehearted support to this legislation. This is an opportunity for us to make the Cayman Islands a safer place for ourselves and, most importantly, our children—our future.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to let the public know that this document can be found on the Legislative Assembly website. I want to thank your staff for arranging for this in short order.

Thank you very much.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 15E Parcel 196 to the Cayman National Cultural Foundation

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business, Minister responsible for the District Administration, Planning, Agriculture and Housing.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands and the Vesting of Crown Land Block 15E Parcel 196 to the Cayman National Cultural Foundation.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Madam Speaker, thank you.

Madam Speaker, I have laid this Report on the Table, and I wish to confirm that as required by Law the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, [Issue] No. 20/2008 dated 29 September, 2008, and a local newspaper—namely, the Caymanian Compass, on 26 September 2008.

Also as required by Law, three (3) valuations have been carried out on the subject property. Each valuation report forms part of the overall Report and provides a general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

Madam Speaker, this Report deals with the vesting of Block 15D Parcel 196, which is commonly known to all of us as “Miss Lassie’s House”, and it is to be vested to the Cayman National Cultural Foundation (CNCF).

The property is located on South Sound Drive, near the intersection with Walkers Road in South Sound. The area of the parcel is 0.49 Acres and includes two residential structures, namely, Miss Lassie’s house and a duplex to the rear of the house. Both buildings are currently vacant and some work has already been undertaken by the CNCF to minimize deterioration of the structures, particularly Miss Lassie’s house.

Madam Speaker, by way of background I will provide the following information for Members of this honourable House and, indeed, for the public. Members will all be familiar with Miss Gladwyn “Lassie” Bush, perhaps one of Cayman’s best known native artists. Though she starting painting fairly late in life, she was quite prolific and did not restrict her work to canvas. She also painted on her home and the other structures around her yard. Miss Lassie’s house, therefore, is quite literally a work of art, and many of us will remember seeing her around her yard working on her latest creations. Her work, with its strong Christian themes, has been described as “visionary”, and you do not have to look too far on her property to see examples of it—indeed, it is everywhere.

Her home has another important cultural significance as it was constructed using the “old time” wattle and daub construction method, and its design embodies many of the traditional Caymanian architectural features.

After her passing at the age of 89 in November 2003, her property passed to her son, and, upon his death, to his wife. When the property came up for sale, the Cayman National Cultural Foundation and Vision Real Estate (the company which had the property listed) approached the Government with a proposed partnership to preserve this culturally significant site and to develop it into a cultural resource centre.

In July of this year, the Government acquired the site with the intention of vesting it to the Cayman National Cultural Foundation. As many of you may be aware, the CNCF has already launched a fundraising campaign for this project, and this vesting is part of Government’s contribution.

The Report I am tabling here today will allow this property to be vested in the Cayman National Cultural Foundation, and I am confident that they will not only preserve it, but they will also develop it into a wonderful cultural landmark that residents and visitors alike will enjoy for many years to come.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 104A Parcel 9 (Part) to the Water Authority – Cayman

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 104A Parcel 9 (Part) to the Water Authority, Cayman.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Having laid this report on the Table, I want to confirm that as required by Law the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No. 22/2008, dated 27 October 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Caymanian Compass, on 20 October 2008.

And, again as required by Law, three valuations have been carried out on the subject property. Each valuation report forms part of the overall Report and provides a general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

Madam Speaker, the Report deals with vesting of Block 104A Parcel 9 (part) to the Water Authority - Cayman. This property is located on Ashton Reid Drive on the Bluff in Cayman Brac, near the Aston Rutty Centre. The parcel will be subdivided to create a 12.58 acre parcel, and it is proposed that this newly created parcel be vested to the Water Authority.

By way of background, the Water Authority's ten-year development plan includes the extension of the Cayman Brac Water Distribution System. While this expansion will initially cover the north coast of Cayman Brac (which is the most densely populated area) from the West End Crossroads up to Spot Bay, future phases will include pipeline installation in the roads on the Bluff, and then on to the south coast.

The recent impact of Hurricane Paloma and the damage that it caused in Cayman Brac is an all-too-clear reminder that we need to plan for hurricane resilience when it comes to our infrastructure. Currently, the Water Authority's Cayman Brac water production, storage, and pumping facility are all located on a low-lying site which makes this important infrastructure susceptible to flooding. An added difficulty of their current site is that it does not allow sufficient space for future expansion of their water production capacity.

Vesting this parcel on the Bluff to the Water Authority will allow them to relocate their facilities to a higher, more suitable location on the Bluff. Not only will this give the Water Authority's physical plant increased protection from storm events, ensuring that potable water will still be available to the general population after a storm event, [but] it will also allow them sufficient space for the future expansion of their facility.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to lay this Report on the Table for the vesting to proceed. Thank you.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 32E Parcel 50 to the Tourism Attraction Board

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House, the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands—on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 32E Parcel 50 to the name of the Tourism Attraction Board.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I have to confirm that as required by Law the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No. 11/2008, dated 26 May 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Cayman Net News, on 15 May 2008.

Also as required by Law, three valuations have been carried out on the subject property. Each valuation report forms part of the overall Report and provides a general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

Madam Speaker, the Report deals with vesting of Block 32E Parcel 50, the property known as "Pedro St. James", or, more commonly, "Pedro Castle". This property is located on Pedro Castle Road in Lower Valley. By way of background information, section 12 of the Tourism Attraction Board Law, 1996, states that "there is vested in the Board without further assurance or transfer . . . Pedro Castle." It recently came to the Government's attention that this transfer had never been executed, and this parcel is still registered Crown ownership. So, some 12 years later, this vesting is simply an exercise to regularise this situation as called for by that Law by vesting the property to the Tourism Attraction Board. By doing this, we will be bringing the situation into compliance with the relevant legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 43A Parcel 56 to the National Housing Development Trust

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I seek permission to lay on the Table of this honourable House, the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 43A Parcel 56 to the National Housing Development Trust.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I wish to also confirm that as required by Law the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No. 24/2008, dated 24 November 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Caymanian Compass, on 13 October 2008.

The three valuations required by Law have been carried out on this property. Each valuation report forms part of the Report and provides the usual general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

The Report that deals with the vesting of Block 43A Parcel 56 to the National Housing Development Trust indicates that the property is located on Lake Destiny Drive north of Bodden Town Road in Bodden Town, Grand Cayman.

Madam Speaker, the National Housing Development Trust (or NHDT) has several programs with the goal of making the dream of home ownership a reality for as many Caymanians as possible.

Their programmes include the Government Guaranteed Home Assisted Mortgage (or GGHAM) scheme, in which the Government provides a mortgage guarantee for qualified Caymanians who have what we would call a decent income but have not been able to save the lump sum that is required with a traditional mortgage. I am pleased to be able to advise Members that since the launch of this programme late last year, the GGHAM programme has helped over 126 first-time home buyers to purchase their own homes. That means that, end of year, there are 126 Caymanian families who, for the first time, will be celebrating the holidays in their own homes.

The NHDT also has a programme that assists those who already own land to build an affordable home on their property. This "Build on Your Own Property" programme was launched earlier this year. So far, two homes have been completed, one fairly recently. This program assists the client by providing bridge financing and allowing the client to use the NHDT's ready-made plans, which saves the client considerable money in design fees. Two more homes should be started under this program in the next few weeks.

Another very important programme of the NHDT is the development and sale of affordable homes. Members will be aware that the NHDT currently has affordable housing developments in George Town and West Bay. While these sites have met some of the need for affordable housing, there is still a very large unmet demand, which I am sure will only increase with the difficult financial times that, all indications are, lie ahead of us.

In order to address the need for more affordable homes throughout the Island, the NHDT has been working to identify sites for development in each of the districts of Grand Cayman. To date, property has been identified in each district. This vesting Report which I am in the process of doing today is for the proposed Bodden Town Affordable Housing development site.

This site is located close to the Bodden Town Civic Centre, Health Clinic, and playing field. This site will provide house lots for the development of 45 affordable homes. This will mean that, once developed (and that is underway), 45 Caymanian families will be able to have pride in owning their own home in the Bodden Town district.

I know that the passing of Paloma and its devastating effects on our Sister Islands has reminded us of the need to build strong buildings which will, as much as possible, withstand the impacts of natural disasters such as hurricanes. I would like to take this opportunity to confirm to all Members of this honourable House that the new NHDT homes will be solidly constructed in compliance with the Building Code. They will have concrete block walls throughout—internal and external—and I am confident they will stand the test of time.

By vesting this property in the NHDT, we are making a very important contribution to this much-needed programme. I would like to thank the honourable Members for their support of this proposed vesting as I know it will mean the world to those families who move into these affordable homes once they are developed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 4B Parcels 181, 190, 195, 196 and 380 to the National Housing Development Trust

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 4B Parcels 181, 190, 195, 196 and 380 to the National Housing Development Trust.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, this is a continuation of the programme that I spoke to with the previous document I just tabled.

I now have to confirm that as required by the Law, the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No.

23/2008, dated 11 November 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Caymanian Compass, on 29 October 2008.

Also as required by Law, three valuations have been carried out on the parcels. These valuation reports do form part of the overall Report and provide the general indication that is required of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest in the NHDT.

The parcels are all adjacent to each other, and together they represent approximately 10 acres of undeveloped land. This property is located off Boatswain Bay Road near the lighthouse in West Bay, North West, Grand Cayman.

Madam Speaker, as I outlined in my previous statement regarding the proposed vesting of Block 43A Parcel 56 to the NHDT, they do have several programs with the goal of making the dream of home ownership a reality for as many Caymanians as possible. I will not go into those details again.

The Report deals with the proposed vesting of Crown land in West Bay to the NHDT for the purposes of developing an affordable housing subdivision on this site. The West Bay area has one site already and this will be the second site. Once this site is developed, 50 Caymanian families will be able to have pride in owning their own homes in the West Bay district.

Thank you.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: No, Madam Speaker.

Cayman Islands National Insurance Company (CINICO) - Annual Report 2006 – 2007

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Report for the Cayman Islands National Insurance Company (June 30 2006-7).

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Just to say, Madam Speaker, that I am pleased this Government has just about gotten this department brought up to date with its annual reports.

Financial Statements of the National Housing and Community Development Trust – 30 June 2004

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Financial Statements of the National Housing and Community Development Trust, 30 June 2004.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: With your permission, Madam Speaker, I will lay the other report on the Table and speak to both at the same time.

Financial Statements of the National Housing and Community Development Trust – 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Financial Statements of the National Housing and Community Development Trust, 30 June 2005.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I will not speak at length regarding these audited financial statements for the National Housing and Community Development Trust 2003/04 and 2004/05 financial years, as I believe their titles and content will speak for themselves. However I would like to make a few remarks and ask that Members bear these in mind when reviewing these Reports.

You will note, Madam Speaker, that these Reports refer to the National Housing and Community Development Trust, and that they are for the 2003/04 and 2004/05 financial years. Since that time period the role of this agency has changed somewhat and they are now known as the National Housing Development Trust. The Community Development role has been assigned to another agency, and the Trust is under new management and a new Board.

Members will note that the Auditor's statement in the 2003/04 Report makes reference to this fact, when he says, and I quote: "Due to the changes in the management of the Trust, and the composition of the Board of Directors, management was unwilling to sign off on the financial statements acknowledging its responsibility for the fair presentation of the financial statements in accordance with International Financial Reporting Standards. Since Management will not confirm that the financial statements are free of material misstatements and omissions, I am forced to conclude that I cannot attest that the financial statements are free from material misstatement."

The Auditor General goes on to state that due to the significance of this matter, he does not express an opinion on the financial statements of the National Housing and Community Development Trust for the year ending 30 June 2004.

While I am confident that honourable Members will agree with me when I say that this is not really a desirable situation, I believe Members will understand the issues that led to this result. There were a number of areas that the Auditor General questioned in his review of these financials, and the current Management of the NHDT was not in a position to respond to these due to several factors.

In some instances there were incomplete or missing files, in other cases there were no records at all. So it really should come as no surprise that the current management indicated that they were unable to confirm that the financials were "free of material misstatements and omissions."

It is better news, though, for the financial statements for the year ending 30 June 2005, as in this report the Auditor General states, and I quote: ". . . the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the National Housing and Community Development Trust as of 30 June 2005, and of its financial performance and cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with International Public Sector Account Standards."

So, Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to applaud the Chairman and the General Manager of the National Housing Development Trust for their efforts to bring the NHDT's audited financials up to date.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Financial Reporting Authority (CAYFIN) Annual Report 2007/2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Second Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Legal Affairs.

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I seek leave of this House to lay on the Table a Financial Reporting Authority (CAYFIN) Annual Report 2007/2008.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Second Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: No, Madam Speaker. I think the Report itself is quite self explanatory.

Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Seeing as the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, which I want to Table . . . I am also moving a motion directly after that. I would ask if you could pause and allow the Minister for Tourism to lay his two reports and then I will proceed.

Thank you.

Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited – Financial Statements 30 June 2005

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House, the audited financial statements for the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited, for the year ended 30 June 2005.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker.

During the year ended 30 June 2004, Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited, commenced a major re-development project, now called Boatswain's Beach. The project, consisting of a marine park and related development, was completed and opened in two phases—the soft opening in September 2006, and the full opening in November 2006.

During the year ended 30 June 2005, the company's operations were adversely affected by Hurricane Ivan. This and other factors resulted in a net operating loss, before insurance proceeds were received, of CI$756,267. However, after factoring in the value of the insurance proceeds received in total, CI$1,592,890, the company reported an overall net profit of CI$840,623 for the year ended 30 June 2005. This is compared to a loss of CI$1,213,482 for the year ending 30 June 2004.

During the financial year of 2005, the Turtle Farm invested CI$16.8 million in property, plants and equipment, and some CI$16.4 million out of this was for construction in progress which pertains to costs directly attributable to the Boatswain's Beach project.

Madam Speaker, total liabilities of the company include outstanding guaranteed senior notes of CI$36.2 million. These were issued primarily for the purpose of funding the Boatswain's Beach project to pay capitalised interest and to meet the cost of the issuance of the notes. Approximately CI$32 million out of the proceeds were held as bank fixed deposits as of 30 June 2004, and utilised in subsequent years on the above-mentioned projects.

The company has prepared and presented draft financial statements up to 30 June 2008 to the Auditor General, with the last audited financial statements being for the year ended 30 June 2005, the audits for the years ending 30 June 2006, 2007 and 2008 remain pending.

On behalf of the Auditor General, a local accounting firm has completed the field work on the audits for the year ended 30 June 2006, thus the audit is in its final review phase. The company has requested the immediate commencement of the 2007 audit upon completion of the 2006 audit.

In an effort to bring the financial statements up to date, the company obtained accounting services from a local accounting firm to fast-track the preparation and presentation of the financial statements for the years ended June 2006 and June 2007. Upon filling vacancies in the finance division, including the appointment of the chief financial officer in December 2007, and an accounts manager in June 2008, high priority has been given to finalising the outstanding audits.

Thank you.

Cayman Airways Limited – Consolidated Financial Statements 30 June 2004

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the audited financial statements for Cayman Airways Limited for the year ended 30 June 2004.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The year ended 30 June 2004 was a busy one for Cayman Airways Limited. During the fiscal year a new subsidiary devoted to inter-island air service, Cayman Airways Express, was created and began service.

Continuing the effort of improving service, in November 2003 the company received its first leased 737-300 aircraft to complement the existing fleet of 737-200s. Building on the successful introduction of the 300 aircraft into the fleet, in June 2004 a lease agreement was signed for a second 737-300 aircraft for delivery slated for November 2004.

For the financial year ended 30 June 2004, the total revenue was CI$31.3 million. That consisted of passenger revenue of $26.8 million and cargo revenue of $2.3 million. Handling and other miscellaneous revenue accounted for the remaining $2.2 million in revenue.

The operating cost for the same period was CI$41.8 million. I should point out here that while I am expressing these amounts in Cayman Islands Dollars, the audited financial statements are actually expressed in US currency.

The Government contribution for the year was $4 million, resulting in an overall net loss of $6.95 million. And just to highlight again, Madam Speaker, for the period ended 30 June 2004, the operating revenue was $31.3 million; operating expenses $41.7 million, resulting in an operating loss of $10.4 million.

Madam Speaker, there was a further non-operating expense of $545,000, and this related primarily to interest expenses.

The loss before Government subsidy and investment was $10.95 million. The Government subsidy, as I mentioned earlier, was $4 million, and the overall net loss for the year was $6.95 million.

The accumulated deficit at 1 July 2003 was $66.49 million. The accumulated deficit at 30 June 2004 was $73.44 million.

At 30 June 2004, the total assets were $15.48 million, and the current liabilities for that period amounted to $20.41 million.

In addition to the output payments, the investments that I mentioned earlier, the company received an equity injection of $9.11 million from the shareholder through the write-off of debts owing to other government agencies as at September 2003.

Madam Speaker, the audited financial statements for Cayman Airways are in the process of being brought up to date. The 2004 and 2005 audit is complete and CAL is working through the last remaining issues in order to have the report issued. The audits for the years 2005/6 and 2006/7 are being conducted currently and despite a few delays we are optimistic that these will be completed very shortly.

The Government and the Board of Cayman Airways embarked on a turnaround plan two years ago. Through a variety of efforts the airline has been able to make real improvements. Through increased emphasis on the Cayman Airways product, sales have increased drastically and are projected to increase again this year, despite the global financial crisis.

Purchasing has been centralised to reduce cost and ensure that all purchases have a thorough review to ensure the best value for money.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to report that Cayman Airways now has a fleet of four 737-300 aircrafts which has improved the products being offered both in terms of customer comfort and reliability. All aspects of the airline continue to be reviewed to see where efficiencies can be achieved. Many of the procedures, systems and people needed to continue this performance improvement are in place and the airline is poised to continue towards its goal of improved efficiency.

With many airlines worldwide being shut down due to financial and other pressures, Cayman Airways continues to improve its operation as it links the Cayman Islands to the world.

Thank you.

Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Freedom of Information Law, 2007, Law 10 of 2007; the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, there is a Government Motion that I will move and I intend to speak to it when I move that Government Motion.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received no notice of statements by Honourable Ministers or Members of the Cabinet.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 7/08-09—The Freedom of Information Law, 2007; The Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business, Minister responsible for the Ministry of District Administration, Planning, Agriculture and Housing.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to move Government Motion No. 7/08-09, entitled the Freedom of Information Law, 2007; the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, perhaps I paused too long. I was seeking permission to read the Motion, if you would just allow me, then we can move the Motion.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, you are entitled to read the Motion when you move it. So, you can read the Motion and then I will allow you to debate.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Just to be absolutely certain, Madam Speaker, may I now read the Motion?

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, it will be my pleasure to listen to your reading this morning.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you very much.

Madam Speaker, [Government] Motion No. 7/08-9 reads as follows:

WHEREAS section 57 of The Freedom of Information Law 2007 provides that "The Governor in Cabinet may, subject to an affirmative resolution, make regulations—

- (a) generally for giving effect to the provisions and purposes of this Law;
- (b) prescribing the period of time for the doing of any act under this Law;
- (c) for anything that is required or permitted to be prescribed under this Law.";

AND WHEREAS The Freedom of Information (General) Regulations 2008 has been laid on the Table of this Honourable House;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations 2008 be affirmed by the Legislative Assembly pursuant to section 57 of the Law.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Madam Speaker, thank you.

Some 18 months ago I stood before this honourable Legislative Assembly and presented the Freedom of Information Bill, 2007. That Bill found safe passage and became Law, and today I am proud to present the Regulations which are a companion to that Law, known as the Freedom of Information Law.

As you will recall, in March of this year we published a consultation paper on the proposals for the Freedom of Information Regulations, 2008, to obtain comments from members of the public. Comments on the consultation paper were due at the end of April this year.

I am especially proud to advise that we received comments on the paper from members of the public, government departments and agencies here in Cayman, comments from overseas FOI experts, and comments from respected international organisations such as the Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative with their comments actually being fairly extensive. All of the comments were reviewed by the FOI legal sub-committee and the proposed Regulations were amended accordingly.

Being one of the few countries in the world to continually seek public participation during all stages of the creation of the FOI Law and the FOI Regulations, we have proven our commitment to an open and transparent process of the Government in accordance with the current global FOI trends.

To quote the CHRI (Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative) when they responded to our consultation paper, they said "CHRI commends the Cayman Islands Government for pioneering public consultation at all stages of the Law making the processes and also we commend on its implementation. Experience has shown that for any right to information legislation to be effective, the policymakers must proactively encourage the involvement of civil society groups and the general public so that they may consider and provide recommendations on the development of legislation."

They go on to say, "By inviting submissions on the strength and weaknesses of the FOI Regulations 2008, the Cayman Islands Government has helped to strengthen the democratic participation of its citizens. Overall, CHRI's assessment is that the proposed Regulations contain progressive provisions that appropriately draw from international best practice."

Madam Speaker, as I present to this honourable House the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations 2008 today, I dare say these Regulations have been long anticipated and they are welcomed both nationally and internationally.

As shown upon implementation in other jurisdictions worldwide, FOI legislation improves the relationship and trust between the government and the public. It ensures greater efficiency in public sector management processes and allows for greater participation by the people in national decision making.

Freedom of Information legislation plays a vital role in the system of Constitutional democracy and, as such, I am certain the entire Cayman Islands will reap the positive benefits of FOI.

Madam Speaker, permit me to move on to highlight the current FOI Regulations that are a result of the hard work of many, and also much lauded public participation. I want to begin by reminding Members of this honourable House that the objects of the Freedom of Information Law are to ". . . reinforce and to give further effect to certain fundamental principles underlying the system of constitutional democracy, namely:

- a) Governmental accountability;
- b) Transparency;
- c) Public participation in national decision making.

By granting to the public a general right of access to official documents held by public authorities subject to exemptions which balance the right against the public interest in exempting from disclosure governmental, commercial, or personal information of a sensitive nature."

As a result of the public input, we now have established the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008, which further the general principles of maximum disclosure and releasing of information in the public interest. These principles set the standard to be used by Government to bring about this new culture of openness.

The FOI Regulations provide the criteria for making an FOI request, set out the timelines for responses by public authorities, and they define the key terms of the Freedom of Information Law. These key terms include "personal information" and the "public interest". The timeline in the Regulations for transferring the request to another authority more closely related to the subject matter of the request is 14 calendar days, which is also the timeline for notifying a third party that their personal information has been requested.

Finally, and very importantly, the staff members in an authority are given two working days to hand the FOI request to their information manager. The Regulations also provide support for public authorities and include considerations for how a public authority is to treat a voluminous request (that is, where a request will unreasonably divert the resources of an authority) to prevent abuse of the FOI Law.

The Regulations contain a provision for expedited service in defined circumstances where information has to be provided within 10 calendar days as it is needed to preserve the life or liberty of an applicant.

In addition to this, the Freedom of Information Regulations provide the fees to be charged when information is released pursuant to an FOI request. There are no fees for making an FOI request searching for records or making a decision on the records. Instead, the Regulations only provide fees for reproduction of records and change of format of records.

I would also like to make special reference here to the fact that there is no fee for the grant of access to information in electronic form, which was included in the Regulations as a direct result of public input.

The Regulations also outline the circumstance in which these fees can be waived, for example, where an applicant has a financial hardship in paying for information. All of the fees set out in the Regulations have been specifically set so as not to exceed actual costs incurred by government entities in the reproduction of records.

The Freedom of Information Regulations set out the functions of the information managers who are appointed in each public authority to promote the best practices of FOI.

The Regulations also outline the requirements for public authorities to hear appeals from the public, otherwise noted as internal review, and the right of third parties to make an appeal to the Information Commissioner where their personal information has been requested by an applicant as defined under the Freedom of Information Law.

Madam Speaker, these Regulations, which I have laid before this honourable House, have been prepared to coincide with international best practice standards and, I must admit, will probably be closely mimicked in other jurisdictions considering implementing FOI legislation.

We are also happy to announce that the Cayman Islands Freedom of Information Law will be brought into effect on 5 January 2009. Madam Speaker, I am also happy that Mrs. Jennifer Dilbert has been appointed to the post of Freedom of Information Commissioner. She takes up office very shortly and will be surrounded by all of the technical resources that she will need to ensure that the office is up and running efficiently as soon as the Regulations and the Law itself come into force.

In closing, let me thank the many public and private entities for their input into these Regulations. Special mention must be made of the work of all of the members of the FOI legal subcommittee who consolidated and summarised all of the recommendations that were received.

As I table the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008, I would just like to impart this quote of wisdom by Aristotle—which goes to the root of FOI—in which he says, and I quote: “If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alike share in government to the utmost.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I will be brief.

The Opposition is happy that we are getting close to the point of having full freedom of information in the country. Certainly, I want to thank all those persons who have been involved.

The Leader of Government Business said that it will be brought into effect on 5 January, and maybe he will explain in his closure what that means, whether that means that people will be able to get information at that time, or whether there is work left to be done—because we had been told another date. I am still not clear on that. Perhaps he can intimate that to the House.

Madam Speaker, the closing quote by the Leader of Government Business is a good point for me to say that we have had a constitution draft, working though it be, brought back to the country and there have been many calls on Government, calls on the Opposition to release the document, and I see no reason why we cannot do that.

So, Madam Speaker, I know that they say the draft is not for publication, but I see no reason why anyone in the country that wants to have that information should not have it. If liberty is found in democracy, I am going to ask the Serjeant-at-Arms to lay this on the Table, make copies, and see that the public gets it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[An hon. Member's inaudible comment.]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I can't do it? I just did it.

Point of Order

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, on a point of order. The document, which the Leader of the Opposition has just purported to lay on the Table of the House, is a document sent to him under the hand of the Leader of Government Business which contained as part of its . . . or as a condition of its disclosure, a request of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office that it be treated in confidence and not as a public document.

The Leader of the Opposition full well knows of that condition, which was indicated during the constitutional talks back in November, and he has been given it in writing by the Leader of Government Business. Madam Speaker, that is not a condition imposed by the Government of the Cayman Islands; that is a condition imposed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. I do not believe that it would be appropriate for this House and yourself as Speaker to countenance a breach of that condition—a deliberate breach by the Leader of the Opposition—by allowing him to lay it on the Table of this House and thereby make it a public document.

If it is to become a public document, leave must be sought from and obtained by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office whose work, whose product that document is. That document is not a document belonging to the Government of the Cayman Islands, or to the Leader of the Opposition; it is a work product of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Madam Speaker, we cannot expect the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, or anybody else for that matter, to treat us seriously when we deliberately disregard conditions which have been set in the context of the negotiations.

Now I know, Madam Speaker, full well, that the Leader of the Opposition is continuing to do everything he can to ensure that these constitutional talks fail. But, Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, there is no point of order.

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I have to intervene at this point because the Minister rose on a point of order, but he has gone on to make a long speech.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, if I may . . .

I think I needed to know whether this document (which I was going to ask) was distributed to Members in confidence and, if so, I cannot allow it to be laid on the Table of this honourable House. That is why I was listening to the Minister of Education. It is a document in confidence; therefore it cannot be laid on the Table of this honourable House.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: I have made my ruling. The document will not be laid on the Table of the House if it is a document that has been sent out in confidence.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I would like to say to you that at that meeting I said I was not bound by anything said about not releasing any document. I just want to let you and the public know that. Therefore, I see no reason why—it holds no great state secrets—this cannot be distributed.

But as you may, Madam Speaker . . . if you do not allow me to lay it on the Table, certainly I will give it to the newspapers.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak to the Motion? I have made my ruling; the document will not be made public through the Legislative Assembly by being laid on the Table of this honourable House.

Debate continues on the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I just want to join voice with the Leader of Government Business on observing the importance of this occasion, this moment, when the Regulations, which is the last aspect of this Freedom of Information project to be completed to enable the Freedom of Information Law to come into effect on 5 January [2009]. This has been a long time coming. A number of governments have come and gone that have all expounded the virtue of freedom of information and its importance to the continued success of a modern and progressive democracy, which the Cayman Islands is and aspires to be even more so.

Madam Speaker, it has been a difficult, time consuming exercise to get here. When we passed the Freedom of Information Law (which I should say was one of the planks of our election campaign and is contained in our manifesto) some 18 months ago it was met with a mixed response. There were those (and still are those) who said it ought to have come into effect earlier. But as those who work within the system who have worked on the Education campaign, who have worked to develop the rules, procedures, regulations, who have worked to change the culture in government from one which is based on withholding information unless we have every possible basis to disclose it, to a culture of disclosing information unless there is a proper basis to not do so . . . all of them can attest to how difficult this task has been.

Madam Speaker, it is critically important to any country that in the interest of good governance the general public has as much access to the goings on in government and the decisions of government as is practically possible. That is what keeps any government honest—the knowledge that what they do or say will ultimately be subject to public scrutiny.

Madam Speaker, I am incredibly proud that it has been this Government that had the political will and the determination to finally give effect to what has been said, what has been promoted, what has been discussed by many governments before it.

I take this opportunity to say that there is a distinction between allowing government documents and information generally to be available to the public and the breach, or attempted breach, of agreement conditions that have been made during the course of important negotiations.

Madam Speaker, the situation in relation to the working document sent to all of us by the FCO in relation to the constitutional discussions is just such a matter. We are at a critical stage in these negotiations. If either side breaches the basic trust that has to be an implicit part of any negotiations and acts in bad faith in relation to those negotiations, the outcome of the negotiations is bound to be in question.

I wish that we could get to a point in this country where we could develop the sense of maturity to understand that the creation and settlement of a constitutional document must be of paramount importance, that it must override the political agenda of all of us; that in this jockeying for position in this mad desire to win the next elections we ought not to compromise what we are trying to achieve in terms of a new constitutional framework for this country. Blind Bartemaeus could see now that the present constitutional framework under which we are operating is inadequate (to use a mild term, a euphemism) to deal with the circumstances with which we are almost daily presented.

The critical focus of what we are trying to do must be to redefine the relationship with the United Kingdom Government, to get them to accede to our need for shared responsibility in critical decision making. And if, because we think it will make the headlines that it will somehow give us some more political capital, we are prepared to throw these negotiations out of the window because we see 20 May and the outcome of that as the most important thing in life . . . Madam Speaker I am saddened at what the Opposition is prepared to do to this country and to its prospects just because they believe it somehow helps their political position.

Madam Speaker, nothing any of the Members on either side of this House want for themselves is more important than the overriding national interest. We should all be working trying to create a document which secures the future of these Islands and this country for generations to come.

There may be some who want to die in this office. I do not want to be one of those. I have no control over that. None of us do. But I want to be able to look back at my time here and say I contributed to making this place one that generations of Caymanians can be proud to live in. Madam Speaker, if, when 20 May [2009] rolls around, the result is that I am not here, so be it. But I would be far, far more disappointed if we let this opportunity to truly get this country the Constitution it needs and deserves, go by.

They can send me home; that's fine. But unless this country gets the kind of constitutional framework it needs to be able to protect the interests of these Islands, to involve those who are accountable to the people in the critical decision-making, I shudder to think what is going to happen here in the next few years. If we think that the "Bridger" fiasco is something to worry about, I am afraid that unless we change the constitutional arrangement the worst is yet to come.

The "Bridger" situation was foreshadowed by the "Ballantyne" one a few years before that. It is only going to get worse unless we redefine the arrangement. And if anyone ought to understand this, it ought to be the Leader of the Opposition! But, Madam Speaker, he has now left the Chamber. I hope that somehow my words and their import get to him because it is not about him and us—this is about the future of this country.

Would that all of us who sit in the hallowed halls of this Legislative Assembly bear that foremost in mind when we come to taking decisions in relation to matters such as this. And would that we could just put aside political posturing and put at the top of our consideration what is best for these beloved Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 1.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 11.53 am

Proceedings resumed at 1.34 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I rise under Standing Order 86, and I rise to suspend Standing Order 24(5), with your permission Madam Speaker, to move a motion.

The Speaker: Twenty four (5).

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: And I . . . with your guidance, I believe I would have to suspend a further Standing Order to do with the Order paper.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, Standing Order 24(5) is suspended in order for the Clerk to receive a motion after the five days' notice. And once that is approved by the House, the motion is put on an Order Paper for the next sitting or the next meeting.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, as I said, if you look at your Standing Orders, because we are on a piece of business and Standing Orders dealing with the Order Paper would have to be suspended in order for me to move a motion if I get that permission.

The motion, Madam Speaker . . . I would read the motion and—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: —and circulate the motion—

The Speaker: —the question is that the Standing Order be suspended in order for the Clerk to receive the motion. Then it is set down on an Order Paper by the Business Committee. We have another item of a similar nature on today's Order Paper, which is to suspend Standing Order 25 to allow the Minister of Education to bring a motion, which would go through the same process.

So, under Standing Order 25 we can suspend the motion to allow these two motions to be received by the Clerk. And then the Business Committee will set down the date that it will appear on the Order Paper.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, that is if we choose to go that route. If you want to get to a piece of business before we enter any other business, then the Standing Order for the Order Paper—

The Speaker: But it is the Government that can set the Order Paper business as they see fit under these Standing Orders.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You are correct, Madam Speaker. But any Member, as Standing Order 86 says, can ask that Standing Orders be suspended. So that is what I am doing, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Aiden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: But Madam Speaker, there is . . . if I might say this, there is another fundamental problem. There is currently a motion being debated on the Floor of this House. We cannot have two motions going at the same time.

If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to bring a motion, he should give Members of the House notice of what that motion is so that Members can consider whether or not to deal with it, and suspend whatever the relevant Standing Order is. But he cannot, with respect, bring it in the middle of debate on a motion that is before the House. You just cannot do it.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, before you address the Minister's remarks, Standing Order 14 deals with the arrangement of business. That is where I am asking that we suspend so that we can bring this motion in.

Once we agree, or do not agree . . . well, if they do not agree I cannot move forward. But I have every right to ask that Standing Orders be suspended.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, you have every right to ask for any Standing Order to be suspended. But we are in the middle of debate, as the Honourable Minister has pointed out, on another motion. That is why I suggested that when we reached to suspension of Standing Order 24(5), at the end of this, that you could ask for the suspension of 24(5) for the Clerk to receive the motion and circulate it to Members and the Business Committee will then set it down at one of its meetings.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, that is absolutely for that part, for that Standing Order. If I think that my business is more important than what is presently being debated, then at any point, as Standing Order 86 says, "Any of these Standing Orders may be suspended at any time for a specific purpose by the consent of a majority of Members present."

So, Madam Speaker, that is all I am asking. I believe when I read this motion Members will say that it is more important than finishing up this motion we are [debating]. I do not want to bring it in between motions, I would like to suspend Standing Order 14, and so I put that as a motion to this House.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, although that Standing Order says that any Standing Order may be suspended, it certainly does not mean that in the middle of a debate on a particular item that we can suspend the Standing Orders to take another motion, another question, on the Floor of the House.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Oh yes, Ma'am. At any time means at any time, and the Standing Order is specific, and it has been done. There are precedents in this House where it has been done, before I came and after I came. But the Standing Order is very specific "at any time".

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition I will allow the suspension of the Standing Order when we get to Government Business, Suspension of Standing Order 24(5), for you to bring a motion that the Clerk can receive it in the Legislative Assembly and then it can be circulated to Members and sent out to Members and put on an Order Paper.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, are you refusing my motion for a suspension of Standing Orders?

The Speaker: I am saying that I will allow you to bring it when we are dealing with the other suspension at the end of the Government Motion.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I do not want it there, Madam Speaker. My motion is more important than that. If that is where I have to take it, well, I will because I do not have the votes; neither do I believe that the Honourable Speaker has any authority to stop me from moving that motion. The House has to give its consent, yes or no. The House has that authority, but the Honourable Speaker does not.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, would you just get up and move a motion asking for the suspension of 24(5)(2) and nothing more and let me see if the House will agree to its suspension?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No, Madam Speaker. It is not 24(5); it is 14, the business, because we are on a motion.

The Speaker: It cannot happen that way, Honourable Leader of the Opposition, because the suspension of the Standing Order to allow a motion to be received in this department after the five days' notice has to be suspended.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: We are on record, so, as I said.

The Speaker: Debate continues on Government Motion No. 7/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

There are just a few issues that I need to deal with. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition had raised a few questions. He also made an attempt to lay a document on the Table of this honourable House.

His question about the timing of the Freedom of Information Law coming into effect . . . we had stated the date of January 1, 2009. The reason why it is January 5th is simply a matter of practicality—January 1 is New Year's Day, it's a public holiday. The following day is a Friday, and the beginning of the next week is 5 January, which is Monday. That is the only reason it is not the 1st. So, as a matter of course, we have not changed what we have said.

Madam Speaker, the reason why the coming into effect date when the Law was passed was stated to be January 2009, was because when the technical people looked at all of the work that had to be done to prepare the entire Civil Service and all of the other government agencies and public authorities to be able to receive requests and to be able to deal with them, it was set as a target date.

Now, we have been able to achieve that target date, Madam Speaker, and again I want to commend all of those who have been involved and also the hardworking subcommittees and the information managers who have been appointed to the various portfolios, ministries and government agencies.

Madam Speaker, the task has been a very . . . I do not want to say "difficult", but it has been a task that has taken some doing. I know that one of the big changes that had to be achieved, and that is going to be an ongoing process, is a change in the culture of the way the public service was used to operating for many a year. So, this date that we have set, now that it has become an achievable date, Madam Speaker, is one that we are very happy that we are able to announce.

Madam Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition spoke to this Motion, and he was speaking about freedom of information and he made an attempt to table a working document for the constitutional modernisation process that has been sent back from the negotiating team in London as a result of our first meeting, I need to just add a few more comments on to what the Minister of Education said as he very eloquently explained the circumstances.

Madam Speaker, this is not a draft constitution. So we do not want people to get the situation perverted. This is a working document.

We had our first set of meetings. The head of the team from London, Mr. Ian Hendry, during the course of the meetings . . . and, given his vast experience in such negotiations not only with us with a prior attempt, but with many other Overseas Territories in bringing them in line with a new constitution, what he explained to us was that in order to capture all of the thoughts and positions expressed during that first round of talks, he was going to put all that in a document. And at the same time, given the queries put forward by the stakeholders involved in the talks, he was going to proffer some very early positions which the United Kingdom Government may have on the various issues that we were dealing with.

Because he said it was a "working document" and he maintained this throughout the meetings—and I am sure he will maintain this throughout the continuation of our meetings—he said nothing is agreed until all is agreed. His thoughts were that to have this working document out in the public might well confuse many issues because the document itself will have in it different positions on the specific issue. And he speaks from experience.

So it was not a matter of anything in secret. And we ourselves, Madam Speaker, from the side of the Government, are not averse to the public having sight of the document; it is simply a matter of what was deemed to be the logical way forward.

Remember the process, Madam Speaker. Whenever we get to the point where a draft constitution is to be created by London and sent back to us, the public is going to have ample sight of it, ample time to make comments on it. So it is not that anything is trying to be done in secret. But that was the position of the London team. We simply respected that and understood the logic behind what was expressed to us.

Now, Madam Speaker, one of the problems we will now face going forward is that we do not know what level of trust will remain. We do not know if London may question the integrity of the process going forward. We do not know all of that. And the truth of the matter is that while the Opposition and the Leader of the Opposition may think that what he or they are in agreement to do with that document is one that will win them some points immediately, so be it! But, Madam Speaker, there really is a question of being responsible in your actions.

We had requests—not from the Opposition, but from other stakeholders—in the same vein. Simply because we respected the process of the talks and going into further negotiations, we decided not to argue the point with London. We have asked London, for instance, for the talks to be held in the open. We have asked them pointedly. We told them we have had requests from all quarters. They have given some compromises, but, again, their position is that for the talks to give the best results and be the most productive, the actual talks themselves need to be conducted in private. Again, this is based on their experience.

Madam Speaker, if we are simply going to play a game with the whole process, and it seems like it is not very important to many of us to achieve a new constitutional framework and a new relationship with the United Kingdom, then I'll tell you what, I feel sorry for my country.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: And I do not say that lightly, Madam Speaker.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: What a joker you are my son. You're the main one [inaudible]. A new relationship? Ha!

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I am not going to lose my train of thought.

Let me just say this regarding this specific issue before I close on the Government Motion in relation to the Freedom of Information Regulations, 2008.

When the legislation comes into effect along with its accompanying regulations, there will be specific instances where requests cannot be delivered on. Of course, the Law and the Regulations will specify the varying reasons as have been outlined on many occasions before. If the Law was in force today and a request was made for that working document, then, given the circumstances, I dare say the request would have been denied because of the nature of its creation and because of the talks that are ongoing.

I hear all kinds of ya-ya about who stopped what process, Madam Speaker. I have learned in my 54 years how people are, how they act, what they are consistent with, how well they learn certain things and to be certain ways, and the more they say certain things the more people believe them—even when they know different themselves. But I really cannot engage too much in that because I do not have a very high tolerance level even for myself with that.

The Speaker: We are debating the Freedom of Information.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: But, Madam Speaker, so be it.

I want to commend this Motion to the Legislative Assembly. I believe that there is unanimity with support for the Motion. I look forward to the Freedom of Information legislation coming into effect early in the New Year, and I look forward to the process itself being one that swiftly comes into the real workings whereby people get familiarised and the public is quite happy with the fact that they are able to utilise that process.

Once again, Madam Speaker, I commend the Motion and I thank you for your indulgence.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Freedom of Information (General) Regulations, 2008, be affirmed by the Legislative Assembly pursuant to section 57 of the Law.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. Government Motion No. 7/08/09 is duly passed.

Agreed: Government Motion No. 7/08/09 passed.

Government Motion No. 8/08-09—Government Guarantee in Favour of the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Co-operative Credit Union Limited

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Government I beg to move Government Motion No. 8/08-09—Government Guarantee in Favour of the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Co-operative Credit Union Limited. And, the Motion reads:

WHEREAS the Cabinet recently approved an agreement under which the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Co-operative Credit Union Limited would provide hurricane recovery assistance loans to public servants who have personal and real property on Cayman Brac and/or Little Cayman which has been adversely affected by Hurricane Paloma for up to CI$10,000 per [civil] servant repayable over a period of up to five years, with a total maximum limit for all loans being CI$6 million;

AND WHEREAS the Government agrees that the interest expense will be borne by the Government and not by the public servants;

AND WHEREAS section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision) specifies that “no guarantee may be given by or on behalf of the Government unless it has been authorized by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly”;

BE IT NOW RESOLVED that in accordance with section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision) the Financial Secretary be authorized to issue a guarantee on behalf of the Cayman Islands Government to the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Cooperative Credit Union Limited for an amount not exceeding CI$6 million for the provision of hurricane recovery assistance loans to public servants who have personal and real property on Cayman Brac and/or Little Cayman which has been adversely affected by Hurricane Paloma.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, this Government Motion seeks to put in place a Guarantee to secure loans to those Public Servants (meaning employees of the core Government, the Civil Service, as well as employees of statutory authorities and government companies) who have personal and real property on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman that has been adversely affected by Hurricane Paloma.

The loan programme being implemented with the help of this Guarantee, if approved by the House, is very similar to the programme that was put in place in November 2004 to help civil servants with their personal recovery following Hurricane Ivan in September of that year.

Madam Speaker, I will now explain exactly how the loan programme works:

The Credit Union has agreed to provide public servants with a line of credit of up to CI$6 million, repayable over a maximum of five years, which will be used to fund the loans. In order to secure this, the Government will need to provide the Credit Union with a guarantee, hence the need for this particular Motion by virtue of section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law.

To be eligible to apply for a loan under this programme, a public servant must be an employee of one of the following organisations: the Cayman Islands Government; Port Authority; Water Authority; Cayman Islands Airports Authority or Cayman Airways. Madam Speaker, there are approximately 400 civil servants in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, whilst there are approximately 200 individuals employed by statutory authorities and/or government owned companies in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Therefore, there are approximately 600 public servants in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. In addition, the public servant must also be a member of the Credit Union.

The loans are for a maximum of CI$10,000 per public servant or household and are repayable over a maximum period of five years, ensuring that the repayments are kept to a very affordable level. On a loan of the maximum $10,000 over five years, the repayment of principal would just be $166.67 per month. For those public servants on contracts, the maximum repayment period is the duration of their existing employment contract.

The loans are being provided on an interest-free basis to the individual public servant and that is because the Government will be responsible for paying the interest on the loans. The principal portion of the loans will be repaid via regular, monthly or bi-weekly deductions from the employees' salary or wages. That repayment process is due to start in February 2009.

Loan approvals are granted through the Portfolio of Finance and Economics with actual disbursements done directly by the Credit Union. The loan approval process requires an interview either in person or by telephone with each applicant to determine their eligibility, the amount of the loan and their ability to repay.

Madam Speaker, just by way of some statistics and data for the benefit of the House, to date 254 loans have been approved. The total value of those loans is approximately CI$1.6 million. So, 254 loans have been approved out of an estimated possible maximum number of loans of 600 representing the number of public servants in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. To repeat, the value of that is $1.6 million to date.

Madam Speaker, we believe there is very little risk to the Government associated with this Guarantee primarily due to the direct salary and wage deductions which will be used to repay the principal loan amounts. These deductions mechanisms are in place in respect of each loan issued.

I therefore commend this Government Motion to all honourable Members and ask that they support it as it is an attempt to provide direct financial assistance to public servants directly impacted by Hurricane Paloma.

Thank You Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

The Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to make a short contribution on the Motion before us. I would like to take this opportunity to say that I certainly support what has just been read in this honourable House.

What I have learned from my constituents since the programme was introduced is that it was extremely well received and extremely needed. They have gone to the Credit Union the way it was set up and made application. Based on the numbers that have just been given to us, $6 million represents 600 employees, each getting $10,000 (if my math is correct).

What I would like to ask the honourable Financial Secretary in his winding up is if he would give an undertaking to look at the parameters and guidelines, the debt ratios of how these loans are actually lent to the individuals, because—let us be very clear—the people that work for Government and statutory authorities on Cayman Brac need these loans. They need some of the requirements to qualify for these loans relaxed.

With the spiraling cost of living every day, they are at a point in their lives where it is taking every bit of their income to continue their way of life, as we call “business as usual”. With the advent of Hurricane Paloma, everything in their daily activity has been interrupted. All of the things in their homes have been moved around. The way their children go to school has been changed. The way that they think about their future has been changed. So, the standard banking ratios really do not work in the catastrophic situation that we have.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take a little bit of latitude here, if you will allow me, to talk about Paloma because I think it might be the only opportunity we get here today. I am sure other people want to speak a little bit about what we have been through as well.

Madam Speaker, at about 9.30 on the 10th when we came back down off the Bluff to find out what the ravaged island of Cayman Brac really looked like, we knew that we had a catastrophe on our hands. But we did not know that we were going to be so lucky at that point to have no loss of life. I believe that I speak for not only myself, but for my colleague and every Member of this House, that in the hours after that when we finally got the roads cleared and reached the outermost areas of Cayman Brac and found that everyone was accounted for, we breathed a sigh of relief. We said to ourselves no matter what we find, we have to be thankful that we have no loss of life here today.

Madam Speaker, we went about our business in a very disciplined way to see how we could establish a central service and how we could bring order and how we could bring help to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman as the catastrophic disaster unfolded in front of us.

I have to say that the way it was looked at was that the first order of business was to make sure that every person in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman knew that the food chain would not be interrupted, that they knew that they were not going to have to worry about their children and the elderly having a meal that evening and the days on. There was a sigh of relief after two or three days when people realised that the food chain itself was not going to be interrupted.

As we continued to look at the first order of business, to bring the central services back, such as the hospital, the way to get the food there; the Port Authority dock, the airport, and we thought about what had been accomplished in the interest of disaster planning for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. They say hindsight is always 20/20, and none of us could have ever known that building a medical wing on the Aston Rutty Centre was going to be so necessary in the weeks ahead. None of us could ever have known that building the daycare to a Category 5 would actually be tested by Paloma with winds way over 150 MPH, with gusts I am sure reaching 170 or 180 MPH that pummelled the Islands. The buildings were safe havens for the people who were there.

But the next order of business was re-establishing ourselves as a whole. The mere fact that we as a country had Cayman Airways and did not have to look to leased airplanes as after Hurricane Ivan, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and I sat together to make sure that Cayman Airways’ planes got back to Grand Cayman as quickly as possible.

We were able to see the Minister responsible for Cayman Airways arrive. We were able to plan, not having to commandeer a plane; we just had to schedule the planes to come in as soon as the airport was cleared.

We saw the 737s fly two or three flights a day bringing in relief—that gave comfort—taking out the ones that had shelter and family in Grand Cayman that could receive them immediately. As we had opened our doors after Hurricane Ivan to the people of Grand Cayman, and watched people from Grand Cayman get off Cayman Airways at our airport in Cayman Brac with all they had left, the clothes on their back (sometimes that meant just a diaper on the child and a pair of gym shorts on the man), as we are all one country, the people of Grand Cayman opened their arms and said ‘We will do what we can for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.’

I stood on the beach and saw small vessels having to land as we did years ago in catboats from the ships, bring tenders from Grand Cayman, from the private sector, loaded with goods for the community of Cayman Brac. It made us understand that it was a long haul but we would be okay.

Madam Speaker, in the quick days after that, these are some of the things that unfolded. We called that Phase 1—food and shelter and the necessities of life.

Phase 2 in my mind rolled into shelter, health and cleanup. We quickly saw the Leader of Government Business and Members of this honourable House come to Cayman Brac to see what they could do to put the command centre, the task force in place to begin our rebuilding. I call it a rebuilding rather than a recovery.

We saw the hospital get up as quickly as power could be restored with their emergency generator and their staff to accomplish the needed task of providing that for the citizens of Cayman Brac and the workers who were coming over to help to restore our way of life. We saw a coordinated effort from every department of this Government and every member of the private sector and every member of this great country come together to see what we could do. I am sure other Members of this House had the same experience of not being able to answer all the calls left on their phones offering assistance—from churches abroad to churches here; from organisations such as Lions and Rotary; the churches that came and gave their time, the banks, the financial companies all to help clean Cayman Brac and to help restore some of the needed shelter.

The Minister responsible for Environment visited on Wednesday, committed to bring more equipment so we can get our streets back and our lands debris free—pull the metal away, get the nails up so children can roam again freely without fear of getting cut.

Madam Speaker, we have done much in a short period of time. But the task ahead of us is great. The daily realisation that we have a commitment to the people and an opportunity to make Cayman Brac and Little Cayman a place of envy to this whole region is what we face here today.

As we talk about what is on the ground in Cayman Brac, we must mention what the private sector has done. We must make mention what the Atlantic Star people have done as far as drying in homes. We must make mention of public works and the teams there drying in homes and helping individuals. We must make mention of the private contractors, the donations, the private funds that have all come together.

Madam Speaker, we take that into consideration, but stand here today to say that we need more.

We have an opportunity, and an obligation to the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, to fund a proper rebuilding cycle for those people. That is what we were elected to do. That is what [the people are confident we will do]. We have met, we have talked, and my request here today is that we establish without any boundaries a fund, whether it comes from the reserve of the country, or whether it is funded out of an operational . . . comes from the budget by projects being slowed or postponed.

I hear talk of an insurance policy and if, in the wisdom and prudence of a proper business decision, it was decided to self insure Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, it was a business decision. It is also a very clear decision that no better money can be spent than on the people of your country.

Madam Speaker, that is what our request is here today, that we establish whatever it takes—if it is $10 million, $20 million, $30 million—and we establish a fund that can be administered by the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac, myself, the District Commissioner, and whoever else the Government might see fit, so that we can action and partner with people in how they rebuild their lives and their homes in a positive and proactive way.

I feel helpless sometimes when people come to my office. They break down with tears in their eyes and say that they do not want a handout; they want help. 'I can work. I can put my roof back on my house, but I don't have the money to buy my roof. I don't have the money to buy furniture.' What better way can we spend our money than to partner with the people of this country and help them rebuild their lives?

Madam Speaker, I put it to you and I put it to everybody in this House here today, there is no better way to spend this country's money. And, Madam Speaker, if you look at what we can accomplish, what we can do as far as giving the psyche back to the people we meet every day who need the clear understanding that we are here and they are going to be helped and the island is going to be rebuilt to be a very, very special place in this region, we have the opportunity to empower that group to have a proper sustainable economic study done to diversify our tourism product and to attract the kind of investment for the taskforce. Madam Speaker, it is our opportunity and obligation to do this for the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

I ask that the Leader of Government Business consider that. I ask that the Government Ministers consider it and understand that it is something that needs to be done quickly. It needs to be actioned quickly. It needs to be empowered to where the people on Monday morning know that they are going to be able to have this kind of quick partnership and the rebuilding process will not be hindered where we are waiting for money from the European community to be sent to us.

Madam Speaker, there are many, many things in a very fluid situation that could be said and thought about as far as how we go forward. I wanted to touch on the need as it is today and talk about the opportunity in front of us that we must look at and action as quickly as possible. I am sure in the days to come in this Meeting we will have much more to say about Paloma. As I said, it is very fluid and a new need unfolds every day.

As we rounded up 400 or 500 generators, we never thought that we needed to be aware that gasoline would be a need after that. But it was addressed and dealt with and the people received it. I say that just to say how things change on a daily basis. But I reiterate that the opportunity is to build the houses back in a very positive way, to make it better than it was before, to keep the charm of the island. The traditions and culture we have must carry on. Let's take this opportunity so that years from now we do not look back and say Cayman Brac is a burden, Little Cayman is a burden, on the coffers of this great country. We have the opportunity to make it sustainable, to build a sustainable economy, to make it self-sufficient. Let us come together—everybody here—and do that, Madam Speaker.

With those short comments, I thank you for the latitude you have given me, your indulgence, and I speak in support of the Motion brought. I ask that consideration be given to opening it up a little bit wider to the needs of the civil servants in Cayman Brac.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you very much indeed, Madam Speaker.

I rise to render my full support to Government Motion No. 8/08-09, being the Government guarantee in favour of Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Cooperative Credit Union Limited.

Madam Speaker, with respect to the first "WHEREAS" I wish to say that I am happy that the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economics has piloted this most important and timely Motion, certainly with the coalition and direction of the Government of which he forms a part. The civil servants, the statutory authorities and members of the government companies who have already been recipients . . . I believe he said some 254 loans have already been approved on their behalf. I am extremely grateful for the positive and effective consideration that has been given in that regard.

I would, however, wish to make a plea to the Honourable Official Member and his colleagues that additional consideration be given in respect, firstly, of the proposed visits by the team from Grand Cayman. I believe I am correct in saying that they envision yet one more visit to the Brac. I did not hear about Little Cayman, but I hope they are also being included in the visitation and/or the opening up of access to this much needed economic capital.

Madam Speaker, moving on from that particular request, I would ask that as opposed to one office being set up, seeing that time is of the essence that, if two or three personnel are going over (perhaps three would be the preferable number), that a satellite shop be set up in Spot Bay, one in central Cayman Brac and one in West End. For obvious reasons, we are not in normal times; transportation is still a problem for persons. Persons are extremely stressed for many variable reasons and they would greatly appreciate this effort for open access to them.

Madam Speaker, in that vein I would also ask them to look at the various criteria that have been put in place by the officers falling under the Third Official Member to ensure that those persons who are not being approved for the two most popular reasons—firstly, because they are a couple—that either the "WHEREAS" which refers to $10,000 per public servant be explained and/or expanded because it is my understanding, Madam Speaker, that those persons who are a non-married couple (of opposite sex for the avoidance of doubt) have been refused on the basis that they are couples, while in some instances a husband and wife have been approved.

Because of the economic ceiling or cap of $10,000, and with the high degree of damage to their property, if some consideration would be given to ensure that both couples would have access seeing that they are two separate salaries, they are both public servants, then we would be most appreciative.

The other area that seems to be in need of dire attention by the Government with respect to this particular financial assistance provision through the loan scheme interest free is in respect of those persons who are in either of the three categories, core government, statutory authorities and government companies, but they are contracted officers—not expatriate, but Caymanian contracted officers who have concluded their tenure but have been returned to their professional occupations. They are still in their prime and have more than five years, all circumstances being equal, to work. One that readily comes to my mind is a nurse at the hospital who has been there I believe in excess of 30-odd years but has been refused on the basis that she is now a contracted officer and whose property has been severely damaged.

So, I would ask the Government to reconsider perhaps that particular line as they would propose to go over next week and hopefully at least one or two more visits to ensure that those persons who are contracted . . . and, Madam Speaker, I am aware that as far as District Administration is concerned, those persons who were within that category of contracted officer, that some facility had been available. What I am not sure is whether it is through a mandate of the Honourable Leader and his Ministry or whether it emanated from the District Officer. But I am aware that at the District Officer's level arrangements have been made to facilitate, either by way of saying yes they are on contract but there is no intention unless, for example, a criminal activity was an overriding factor that they would not be in continued employment for a minimum of five years.

So, something after that order would suffice those persons who are being declined this loan provision merely for the fact that they are contracted officers. I can say, Madam Speaker, from representation made to me (and I am sure the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac would have had similar representations) that this is also the order of the day at the statutory authority levels for those persons—security officers, for example, at Civil Aviation who are contracted officers merely because of their age—that some consideration would be given to them as well.

Madam Speaker, I wish to go on record to thank the Third Official Member and other Members of the Government for continuing the precedent as was stated in his deliberations prior to the representatives from the Brac making our presentations here today, that no interest would be paid. I believe that although in the mind of some, because the amount being nominal, the interest would not be extremely significant, because of the economic position of the Brac prior, during, and even after Paloma, this is a step in the right direction for the Government to pick up this tab for the interest expense.

Like the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, I wish at this juncture to also go on record that more—much, much more—needs to be done to alleviate the situation at hand on the Brac even as we speak here in this honourable House. I hope to go on to that briefly, with your indulgence, before my conclusion.

Madam Speaker, obviously I fully concur with the Resolve which goes up, or not exceeding $6 million. Of course, based on the fact of the numbers on the Brac I believe this would be sufficient, but I would like to leave a window open that in the event we find that this amount is not sufficient that the Government, again through the Third Official Member, would be minded to do whatever is necessary under the Public Management and Finance Law to ensure that there are adequate funds to allow these public servants to access this capital at this most needed stage.

Madam Speaker, I want to say, so that there is no confusion, that I agree with the efforts in this regard for more than one reason. But, in particular, in going with a loan at this stage it almost creates a tripartite relationship. Whereas the persons who have been affected (the residents of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman) were taking up their responsibility in having to pay back the principal, the Government was taking back their responsibility in this particular isolated instance of the interest, but also the overwhelming support—and that is perhaps an understatement (or an un-utilized adjective) in trying to articulate and explain, expound and expand, the most valuable contribution that has been made by the private sector, mainly in Grand Cayman, but, in addition, as far as I was responsible for, from South Florida.

Madam Speaker, I would even go so far as to say that, had it not been for the immediate, efficient and effective response from the private sector here in Grand Cayman, the situation would have been much worse. And that commenced from the arrival of my colleague being the first on Cayman Brac and shortly thereafter the arrival of the Honourable Leader and his honourable colleagues to not only assess the damage and needs within the constituency but also to lend moral support. Madam Speaker, I am sure you are more than acutely aware of the demoralisation that comes on board with the advent of a hurricane, having gone through Hurricane Ivan yourself here in Grand Cayman.

As I contemplated the way it changed, where it was predicted to hit, as opposed to us . . . God has a sense of humour and there is poetic justice in that it was not Grand Cayman that was hit with the magnitude with which the Brac was hit. I do not know what would have happened to the residents of Cayman Brac if Grand Cayman had been hit and not able to respond so immediately and so overwhelmingly with all sorts of things.

I mean, it just amazed me. Again, speaking from personal experience, with the goods and supplies that came either through private Lear jets or other larger aeroplanes or boats that Capt. Eugene and my colleagues on this side organised, I wish to also thank our Honourable Leader, although incapacitated physically and off island, he was still able to use the telephone to get resources organised and sent over to the Brac. I am sure the Second Elected Member [for Cayman Brac] has already expressed his thanks to his colleagues.

This was a time where everybody saw the nationalism in it where it needed to get assistance. It is my most genuine and honest plea that we keep this at a national level where we can nation build Cayman Brac and to some extent Little Cayman who in this particular instance received less damage.

Madam Speaker, I fully realise that there are other needs in Grand Cayman and I must say, honestly, I was very taken aback by the wrong utilisation (in my respectful opinion) of the word “miniscule” in the press briefing yesterday in reference to the Brac, where it related to the Caribbean Insurance thing. Perhaps technically and literally it was the right word, because I know my honourable colleague has an excellent command of the English language. But taking into consideration what is happening on the ground in Cayman Brac, words that would have been normally used and not noticed have easily become magnified. I can say that because I was not in a position to listen to the press briefing yesterday morning because of ongoing deliveries and rebuilding, recovery process that my colleague and I are trying to assist the command centre [with], under the directorship of the Honourable Leader through Mrs. Leyda [Nicholson-Coe], Mr. Hydes and, of course, the District Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, and his auxiliary staff, who were trying to meet the needs and the fluid position with which we are now faced.

But let's remind ourselves that there is another world happening just 90 miles away. Although things may be busy across in Grand Cayman, let's make some time to not only come across, as most Ministers, if not all, have done at this time. I remember seeing the lady Member over in Cayman Brac. Madam Speaker, some people may say that is small, but the fact that she knew people in the Spot Bay area, for example, and they were able to see her on the ground and see her at the port . . . that goes a long way in saying, yes, we are sisters and we do feel, we've gone through the experience and we want to do everything possible to ensure that we get the assistance.

Madam Speaker, I wish to also say that those who do not fall within these categories is another area the Government . . . I am respectfully requesting the Government to step up to the plate to ensure that those persons who have been adversely affected by Hurricane Paloma . . . and perhaps this is a piece of irony because in Spanish I understand it means white dove. From a spiritual context the visitation of the dove in the Bible has always been the endorsement or a blessing. Obviously, we can put the political spin and make various and diverse arguments from it, but I believe that in a twisted type of way Hurricane Paloma has presented to us an opportunity to re-start.

Like most communities in the Cayman Islands, we did it in an ad hoc way based purely on economic resources. A little room was added on here and there to make sure that the expanded family had sufficient space. Perhaps not up to the [standard]. And sometimes I wonder because as we have traversed, in particular Cayman Brac, we see those little eloquent wooden homes still standing, rusty though be the cement. Somehow our forefathers and mothers had the knowledge to construct it to even withstand the rages of Hurricane Paloma.

I would ask that in the rebuilding process, whether it is through this loan amount being made available in this Motion, that Planning would, insofar as it is possible, ensure that the Cayman Brac architecture will be preserved—sensibly. Not with an overload of unnecessary and undue regulations. Preserve it so that we will not end up with a concrete jungle or just flat tops because we are in a rush to dry-in or what have you.

I wish, Madam Speaker, to tie that in to the Motion in that, yes, we need to expedite the process to ensure that these monies are given to the recipients or beneficiaries as quickly as possible. But we also need to do it with an application of common sense. Let me explain that, Madam Speaker.

To just give somebody who walks in $6,000 or $10,000 without some accounting or transparency to the application, you end up with what I understand is occurring with, hopefully, a minority of recipients, where vehicles have been bought as opposed to fixing up homes, trips have been taken to Grand Cayman. And I say this removing all the political stuff from it because at the end of the day it is the public's money and it can affect other recipients. But it is going on and when that is spent, we as politicians both on this side and on the Government side will still be faced with those persons who still do not have a home or still have a home that is severely damaged and the money is gone.

I understand that the potential safeguard was the fact that they are public servants, so it can be deducted from their salaries. But we have to take it all the way across the spectrum in that some of those persons are still not monthly persons. They show up, especially under these abnormal and dire circumstances whenever they can, whether it is when they feel like it or whether they have obligations on a personal level themselves.

One of the personnel involved with the approval of the loans from the administrative perspective was in the command centre a few days ago. And, again, he was expressing his grave dismay at what he was finding. I will just give it, it is not with his permission but it was not of a confidential nature. He was just sharing with me how he had been to one of the local pubs and one of the recipients whom he had just that day processed came in and, in the usual Caymanian way, offered him a drink. He said he'd have a cranberry. The person proceeded to buy a drink himself and used $100 at one of the establishments there and told the Honduran bartender to keep a tip.

Madam Speaker, I raise that because he raised it. He obviously had concerns that somebody who was able to convince him that there was a dire need could be so liberal in his tips at a local pub.

That may be that person's way of relieving stress. But it is the public's money that we are giving. I take issue with that, Madam Speaker, and so did the person from the Credit Union administration. At the end of the day, these monies have to be paid back. When they are not paid back, then we are going to hear from the Auditor General. And the next time we have a disaster the Government is going to be once bitten twice shy with the distribution of needed funds.

What I am asking is that all efforts should be made. I know from seeing one of the forms that there is an expressed term where the onus is put on the individual. But seeing that the Brac is, to a large majority, dependent on the Government for salaries and financial assistance, dependent on the Government for their veteran's and seamen's assistance, when they default, in effect it is the Government itself in default. So we need in trying to help them . . . and I am all here, I will support the Motion wholeheartedly to help them. I am also prudent and reasonable.

I want to [nip] it in the bud while it is going on to make sure that it does not graduate from the minority that I understand have been misusing or abusing this privilege, and that those who are in need will actually receive the funds.

I wish to commend the two representatives I saw, Mr. Michael Nixon and Mrs. Sonia McLaughlin who came across, for their quick and professional way (I am sure there have been others since). For the avoidance of doubt, it was neither of those two who shared what I just shared about the pub. It was another gentleman. Nonetheless, it is still a true revelation of what is on the ground because I heard it before he shared it.

Madam Speaker, we need to ensure that in our attempt to disburse these funds that there is an education process that is going along with it. I believe we are well poised with the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau with Ms. Lolita Bodden, who is on the ground and going house to house dealing from the business perspective. Perhaps she can be empowered, guided or directed that some financial education, whether it is through leaflets or forums, that one is planned for the business sector next week. Perhaps one could be planned for the recipients of this fund, or maybe through the Credit Union Office itself, so that we can have some type of check and balance to make sure this money is being used for the rebuilding of their homes.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to when the Honourable Official Member, or one of the Elected Ministers in their contribution if they so choose, would respond in particular to the widening of the categories so that the contracted officers, the Caymanian contracted officers, would have access to this capital and that when the words “public servant” are used, that it is not limited to couples who are not married but co-habiting because there are two separate salaries and the need is great enough to justify this minimum amount. I believe, respectfully, that the second one could get based on information received that husbands and wives have got. I am not quite sure of the logic behind and declining that. Perhaps someone in the know can explain that to this honourable House and the public.

Madam Speaker, like the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac, we were happy with the way the Leader of Government Business dealt with Gustav with the colleagues of his Government and the support from the entire House, where financing and funds were made available through a committee established by ourselves, the District Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner who was in attendance. Not only did it empower this small committee, but it gave us the finances to deal quickly.

Being on the ground knowing the needs up front and more quickly, we were able to meet those demands. We followed as far as I can say and see, and I am sure he can speak at another appropriate time, the paper trail was there to ensure the transparency and accountability. But work was done quite quickly.

I wish to thank the Honourable Leader for . . . I believe it was some $300,000 that was given after Gustav to help with this. With the advent of Paloma the committee was only able to disburse I believe it was some $200,000 roundabout. Since then, requests have been made to the Honourable Leader for the redirection of the $100,000. That is where we have been able to assist with the gas vouchers on the Brac and hopefully the Power & Light will continue on working, subject to the inclement weather, so that the Spot Bay area will be in a position that by or before the 23rd of December they will have electricity to the majority if not all and that we can see less strain being put on this ever dwindling fund that is there.

Because of the gas voucher need being so colossal, it means that it greatly restricts, although support has been conveyed by the Honourable Leader that perhaps we could look at other things, pride and proper accountability was interjected there. Because of the gas need being so gigantic, that is not possible. It would mean, from what I understand come this week, we would almost be to the point where we would have to come back to Mr. Leader and say ‘Look, we need supplementary funding for that.’

What I am saying, Madam Speaker, is that I had hoped beyond all hopes that there would have been a motion before this honourable House today saying that, ‘Yes, we (that is, the Government) have looked at our capital projects and, in addition to bringing the motion that is now on the Floor, this takes care of a particular need. We recognise, we appreciate, and we want to continue embracing the Brac and Little Cayman.’

In so doing the Government would wish to bring a motion for Members to decide upon in this House (having gone through Cabinet) that X amount of money—and I am talking about millions of dollars, because those Ministers who have taken the time to come to the Brac will see the amount of damage, both from a private perspective and a business perspective, the need that is there.

I also understand the attempt that is being made to utilise whatever is there from the Government, whether it is through the human resources, the public works gentlemen who have gone over and worked diligently long hours to assist with the trailer homes that are still not occupied (but we hope that sometime in the near future they will be occupied), and other financial outlays from within the current budget. All those things are appreciated, Madam Speaker. All those things are necessary. Some of those things need to be expedited but nonetheless they have been committed. It demonstrates the good will towards moving along the rebuilding process.

I am also cognisant that individual Ministers have gone across to Cayman Brac, be it the Minister for Roads, the Minister for Education or Tourism or Social Services. The Leader has been across. Under their own existing budgets, from what I understand (I have been privy to some of those meetings), they have gone out on economic limbs to ensure that things are being done. But it is going to take more than that because we realise that, yes, Grand Cayman has needs. What has been done is from existing budgets, if my information is correct. I believe that we have always said that our general reserve was for a rainy day.

Well, may I either be presumptuous at this juncture, Madam Speaker, or bordering on the category of an imbecile or a nincompoop with this request? We have not only had a rainy day in Cayman Brac, we have had an absolute flood! So if there is ever justification for any Government—this or any other Government—for tapping into the reserve, whether for $10 million, $20 million or whatever it takes, to give them a chance to peruse more carefully the assessments . . . and Lord knows there have been forms upon forms. There have been assessments.

The Honourable Minister for Children and Family Affairs came across. And his staff has produced an excellent analysis from the social perspective of the needs. Those have been categorised from 1 through 4, I believe. So the statistics are there. We have met. The Second Elected Member and I have met. The Leader has been inundated, both Leaders—our Leader and the Government's Leader—with telephone calls and representations from their own side as well as from our party. We are meeting to death. Simply put, Madam Speaker, we are meeting to death.

It is now time for decisions to be taken, here today if at all possible, as was the plea from the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac, as is now the plea from me, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac. It is so easy to forget, Madam Speaker. Even me, as I came across this morning on the mid-noon flight and walked into Scotiabank and saw CNN, I was immediately reminded that this is the first time you are seeing television, girl, since 8 October. And we are only separated by 90 miles! It's completely two different worlds we now exist in.

Cayman Brac, and to a lesser extent Little Cayman, needs a total re-visitation and a gathering of all minds. Madam Speaker, I know—I won't even say I believe, I know—that every single honourable Member in this House, elected Members included, yourself included, Madam Speaker, have that deep genuine desire to ensure that the needs and even some wants of the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are met.

I do not have the power as a backbencher. I can only do what I am doing now, plus what I have done up to now—go and beg to my colleagues on this side, go and beg to the private sector. And they have been superb! I was reminded where in Micah it says that if you pray to God Almighty, which I do (and I make no apologies about speaking of it in this House though criticised from many different aspects), that He would open the windows of heaven, and that he would indeed pour out the blessings so much that your barn could not contain it. I stand here today as a testament of that because those who have the opportunity, certainly my colleagues have . . . I have spoken to the Honourable Minister for Roads and he is aware through a mutual friend of ours that my house has been transformed to a warehouse, the part that has not been destroyed.

We have been working day and night, and I am sure the Second Elected Member, from his business establishment is doing no less, to ensure there is food, drink, water. As recently as yesterday, having an open flea market atmosphere with the clothes that have been donated free of charge to make sure that our constituents and residents—voting and non-voting—are recipients of these things. We have now moved from that level. Yes, we are still in need for maybe an extra tarp as the wind and rain comes Madam Speaker, and there is still a need to revisit with some water and some of the basic things, but that initial need, thank God, has gone on.

We have gone on from the urgent [need for] generators. There is a spasmodic need here and there, but we are meeting that, both the Second Elected Member and I, and the command centre as best as we can. But the great, great need right now is for funds—allocated, segregated, isolated, named, determined funds—in sufficient quantities to meet the needs of the residents, the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Madam Speaker, that can come, as far as the Government is concerned, from two means that I am aware of: They either look at their capital projects and reprioritise (and if they are doing it I am not privy to it so that is the way I am speaking) whatever project they deem. They are the Government. I am not here to tell them to cut X, Y, or Z. I can make recommendations, but I do not want to raise that. They can make that decision to allocate this because they are going to slow down whichever project.

If they feel that their projects are so important and so necessary to do, then I can even forgive that because Grand Cayman has dire needs as well for various reasons. But the last time we were in Finance Committee we were told [we have] I believe in excess of 90 days' reserve. Can we not access our reserve in a time of need, Madam Speaker, taking into consideration that the insurance for the Caribbean Fund has not come through, for whatever reason which needs to be revisited? Although I did not hear all of the press briefing last night I did hear the Honourable Minister for Education saying, whether or not it is an undertaking I am not sure, that there are aspects of it that need to be looked at. I leave that to the Government to renegotiate.

While that is being done, residents on Cayman Brac are being wet night after night as it rains. They are being exposed to the northers that are coming in. And what is happening is that depression, an emotive area of our lives that we choose not to speak about publicly, is now starting to infiltrate the constituents on Cayman Brac.

As I was reading my devotions while coming down on the aircraft today, Madam Speaker—with your kind permission (it is very short) I would just wish to share it with the House and the wider public to give them what Obama referred to as the “Audacity of Hope”. It says, “He can lead you out of it. '[And] after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire: [and] after the fire a still small voice.' 1 Kings 19:12.

It says that “almost everyone will at some time in their lives be affected by depression, either their own or someone else's. Some common signs and symptoms of depression include feelings of hopelessness, pessimism, worthlessness and helplessness.”

All feelings that I have seen—and I am sure the Second Elected Member has too—not only personally from the damage that we [sustained] but as we go on a daily basis to meet with our constituents.

“Although we cannot say for certain that characters in the Bible experienced depression, we can say that some did exhibit a deep sense of despondency, discouragement and sadness that is linked to personal powerlessness and a loss of meaning and enthusiasm for life. Elijah is one Biblical character who fits this description. After defeating the prophets of Baal, he received a death threat from Jezebel." Been there, done that too, Madam Speaker.

"His hope was shattered and despondency set in. He wanted to die. God helped Elijah deal with his despondency in several ways." And the same God will help the constituents of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

"The Lord did not rebuke him for his feelings but sent an angel to provide for his physical needs." And today, Madam Speaker, that angel that I am making this plea to is the Cayman Islands Government, those with the authority, those with the resources to access either through reprioritization or through our general reserve.

It says, "Then the Lord revealed himself and reminded Elijah that he was quietly working among his people." Perhaps that pronouncement will come to alleviate my fears before the conclusion of this Motion being debated, Madam Speaker.

"Next, He restored Elijah's mission by giving him new orders. Finally, God reminded Elijah that he was not alone. In our times of discouragement, let us remember that God loves us and desires to lead us to a place of a renewed vision of Himself. Be still my soul [and I conclude, Madam Speaker, with this aspect], the Lord is on thy side. Bear patiently the cross of grief or pain. Leave to thy God to order and provide in every change He is faithful to remain."

Madam Speaker, as I move up and down throughout the Island one thing that keeps me going through the long hours, through the stress, through the pain and tribulation is that, despite our circumstances, my God is faithful. And irrespective to whether the Government comes to the plate today and bats a homerun financially so that we can get immediate help on Cayman Brac, I know that my God has not seen the righteous forsaken, neither has his seed begged for bread.

We will rise, Madam Speaker, from the ashes. Time will be the determining factor, but we will rise on the Brac and Little Cayman again. What I am asking is for the Government to put that financial injection in so that it will be an economic catalyst for my people in Cayman Brac to assist to augment, to under girth that rising. As Caymanians, as Brackers, we are a resilient people. We have learned over the many decades that we can do much with little.

I do not want to send the wrong message, and I hope it is being read in the vein that I am bringing it. We are eternally grateful, Madam Speaker, for whatever efforts, whatever impetus the Government has put. But what I am saying, having been there on the ground day and night, feeling it personally, feeling it as I look into the eyes and the souls of my constituents, seeing that dire need, the time is now, Madam Speaker.

Help can no longer be on the way—help must come today. Help must come today through this Parliament, Madam Speaker, for our people, because another delayed decision is another protracted pain, physically, sociologically, financially, educationally, religiously. Every aspect, Madam Speaker, is crying out for help.

If we did not have a reserve, Madam Speaker, perhaps our hands would be tied. But unless there is some latent overriding factor that is within the hallowed halls of the Glass House that I am not cognizant of, I say today to the Honourable Leader through his leadership, through his empowerment, through whatever avenue he has, call a break of this parliament. Caucus with his party, his Cabinet, with the Governor, with whoever, with the Opposition and let us make a decision today so that when the history is written, Madam Speaker, we can say 'here is yet another issue, here is yet another challenge that faced our beloved Cayman Islands and we negated, we annulled, we dissolved, we washed, we neutralised any impediments—political or otherwise—so that the holistic approach was given. The finances were made accessible. The empowerment was distributed to the Brac Recovery Committee as the Leader endeavoured to set up I believe last weekend. Those conveyance instruments are there, Madam Speaker. The funds are sitting somewhere in our class A banks here in our jurisdiction.

We do not need a statutory instrument from the United Kingdom Government. Thank God for Sir Vassel and the rest who had the financial prudence, and for past governments, and for this one for continuing to ensure that there was a reserve for a rainy day.

Madam Speaker, the flood is here. The doors can only be continued in a closed status if we choose once again to walk out for whatever reason rather than taking a suspension here and now and doing what is right for these Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, no Auditor General can question when one makes an investment in our people, the best human capital the Cayman Islands has. We are already a dying breed, Madam Speaker. Whether one Minister wants to call us miniscule in the bigger picture or not, we are two of the three Cayman Islands. We always said we were the best kept secret, but the secret needs to be released today, Madam Speaker.

Yes, we are less than the 2,000 people he referred to in his press briefing. But for the most part we are 2,000 born and bred Caymanians. If we get elected on a national platform, as has been successful not only with this Government but other governments, let us rise today in this honourable parliament to a national level and do what we know in our heart of hearts is best for the people of Cayman Brac.

Madam Speaker, yes, directly we are the beneficiaries. But let us look at the long [term.] When we help our own children, we are in fact helping ourselves. When we help our own sisters, as we referred to the Brac and Little Cayman, we are helping Grand Cayman. The next time the Honourable Minister for Children and Family Affairs comes with his budget he will not have to have an overly inflated budget to increase financial assistance or rental assistance or what have you. We would have given the fish that is necessary.

I say again, Madam Speaker, this Motion here has presented part of the picture—a part that I am grateful for and thankful for. But let us give the fish and the loaves today. Let us access our reserve funding. If the Government is at pains to reprioritise the capital projects because they are needed, because maybe contracts have been signed; because the constituents have a legitimate expectation to receive them, let us access our reserve today so that when the Second Elected Member and I catch the plane, hopefully this afternoon, and go across, we can go back and say yes, we can exercise that Audacity for Hope because the Government and the Opposition, the entire parliament understood—understood, Madam Speaker—our plight and they rose to the occasion and we are here as messengers on behalf of the Government and the House to say, yes, you may have to wait until Monday morning for whatever administrative things we put in place, but the committee can meet.

I am sure my colleague would have no problem to meet tonight, tomorrow, Sunday, to vet applications that are already there to different agencies to get the plywood out. We had a situation (and I will close after this, Madam Speaker) where somebody came in for six sheets of plywood. The Second Elected Member and I, and the District Administration felt completely hopeless, because short of taking it out of our pockets—which Paloma had already put a big hole in—we had no authority to do that. And, yes, we did speak to the Honourable Leader and he gave some indication in that regard. But he, too, unless a paper comes, or unless his colleagues rally around him . . . and I know his colleagues. Yes, politically we do not see eye to eye on certain things, but I know his colleagues, some better than none.

I know the Minister from East End, the Minister responsible for roads. I see how he operates. I know his heart is there, not only because he stands up in this House and says so, but he has been to the Brac more than once. And when he comes, Madam Speaker, if he says that two grab trucks are going to come, you can almost wait at the dock for them to come. And I appreciate that type of commitment.

The Minister for children and welfare, and families, has done the same thing. Other Ministers, I am sure, for whatever reason (the Minister of Education was there) did not include me. At this time I do not care, Madam Speaker. If he was there to ensure that the children were going to meet their educational needs, then that is fine in this crisis. We have time for politics, much time going up to May. What we need is every Caymanian on board this good ship Cayman to make sure that when we set sail in our economic future which can continue to be successful that Cayman

Brac and Little Cayman is a formidable part of the good ship Cayman.

Enough talking has been done on all two sides, Madam Speaker, from the public side. Enough forms have been completed. People do not want that any more. We want the finances, the empowerment to help our people. If the Ministers have to be in Grand Cayman, let us help them because in so helping them we are helping our people.

Madam Speaker, in closing I once again want to say thank you to my honourable colleagues on this side of the House from my personal perspective and on behalf of my constituents, who gave beyond my wildest imagination whether through private planes or private boats, or through containers—one yet to clear tomorrow morning—thank you, thank you, thank you. I know that your cupboards will never be empty because when we give the underprivileged, the handicapped, the elderly, the children, the widow and the stranger, our God—the same God that we proclaim far and near who has established our country—will see that prosperity continues to be the order of the day in Cayman.

Madam Speaker, I thank you for your indulgence. I thank you for your patience. I thank you for giving me this opportunity to not only express my own personal feelings but, as a representative, those feelings of my constituency. I look forward with eager anticipation to the Government to respond accordingly.

May it please you, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Minister of Communications and Works caught my eye first.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Of course.

The Speaker: Don't say of course. I can only see what I see.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible]

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Communications and Works

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I mean, if it . . . it's just after three. That's all right. I will deal with that.

Madam Speaker, thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak on this Motion. I rise to support the Motion and to try to give, in particular the two Members for Cayman Brac, some sense of understanding that we have been there and, more importantly, that we are doing everything we can.

I will start by saying that I hear the desperation in the voices of the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac. I hear it and if one were to go back to the first meeting of parliament after Hurricane Ivan, and review the records, the Hansards, and look at my plea as well during that time when I spoke about the Phoenix and the people of East End and the people of this country in particular rising from the ashes. It was so timely, we had just celebrated 500 years of existence and Ivan had destroyed us. I likened it to the Phoenix, which is the mythical bird who after having lived for 500 years consumes himself in fire and rises anew from the ashes.

Grand Cayman did it then, and I have every confidence that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will do it again. Not only because it is them, but the Caymanian, whether from Little Cayman, Cayman Brac or Grand Cayman, is resilient enough to do it on his own.

Madam Speaker, I have been listening to a song recently. And the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac will have probably listened to it also. Some of the words are that "I am drinking from my saucer because my cup has overflowed." I believe it is a religious song and it is about the blessings received from God.

Now, if we were to turn that around now, I would say to the people of Cayman Brac, I understand that they are drinking from their saucer because their cup is overfilled with the challenges that they are experiencing now. It feels like their cup . . . it is too overwhelming for them. But their time will come and it will work itself out. I have every confidence that it will. And one day they will be able to turn that around and I trust that in the near future they will be able to say that they are drinking from their saucer because their cup is over-filled with blessings.

Madam Speaker, when I went to Cayman Brac for the very first time in the aftermath of Paloma, I said to the two elected representatives (because I have been there a few times since then) that I would have a meeting with them every time I came there. It is not my constituency. I am merely a Minister, visiting the constituency of other elected Members. I have endeavoured to contact them and let them know that I am there and have meetings with them as well, at least one.

Madam Speaker, I told them at that time (they were trying to distribute generators, food, and the likes), I said to them that I had been through that too, in East End, but that was the easy part. If they thought it was hard then, wait until three to four weeks' time. And we are right at that time now. People are becoming desperate and they do not see any progress in certain things and they become depressed. Now is the time to get on the ground and deal with these people. We had it in Ivan. And they are now experiencing it.

Madam Speaker, this Government . . . and the Leader will go into the intricate details of what we have committed and what this Government's commitment, personal and otherwise, is. But I would certainly like to go into that which I am doing. I will just touch briefly on the bigger picture from Government.

Like the previous Government, when Ivan hit Grand Cayman, that Government earmarked certain sums to start out with for the rebuilding and recovery process. And then they kept adding monies to that as time went on and it got depleted through the process of expenditure. This Government has done the same thing. It started out with millions of dollars put into a particular account and that is where monies are coming from. How that is going to be dealt with on the ground in Cayman Brac, I do not have the knowledge because I am not in charge of the recovery process.

However, what I did was to look at my budget. I went to Cayman Brac. We were some of the first people on the ground. I think we left 18 people from the Department of Public Works and then environmental health. I met with the Permanent Secretary and Department heads on the Sunday following the storm. No, the Monday, pardon me.

I said to them two things: I wanted all the people that I had working in Cayman Brac under my ministry to go home. I did not want them working for Government until the time was right when we decided they had taken care of their families. So, I wanted people from Grand Cayman, and the services in Grand Cayman would be truncated, of course. I understood that. But Cayman Brac was the priority now. And that is what we did from then.

Currently, my Ministry has between 70 and 100 people being rotated in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman which equates to about 30 people on the ground every day. It is costing my Ministry tens of thousands of dollars per day to service Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. And, Madam Speaker, rightly so; it should cost my Ministry that money.

I went further and redirected just under a million dollars, after sitting down with my people, the purchasing of a piece of equipment. I was in Cayman Brac on Thursday, and by Monday that piece of equipment was coming from the factory in Ohio being driven to Miami. We had not even paid for it. But it is because of the contacts and people who trust me not only in the Cayman Islands but in America too.

They left Ohio on the Monday, last week Monday, with the understanding that I would be held responsible for $600,000. That is what I have done thus far in that regard. That piece of equipment is on its way to Grand Cayman, as we speak, on the high seas.

Madam Speaker, we sent equipment from here to Cayman Brac. We sent an additional grab truck, an additional rear-end loader to make sure we had sufficient equipment there. And then last week we sent two additional grab trucks from the private sector. We have bought at least two trucks and one van, and a number of small tools. But our problem with it is that we are heavily dependent upon the barge to get to Cayman Brac and that depends heavily upon the water being as smooth as a pond between here and Cayman Brac.

Our equipment has been on the dock for one week. And we cannot get it to Cayman Brac. My understanding this morning (because I follow up on this every morning) is that it was loaded and is supposed to leave today. As soon as that equipment gets to Cayman Brac there are 30 more people that we need to have on the ground. So all in all I will have 60 people on the ground in Cayman Brac to do the cleanup.

We have sent the tub grinder and we did so much work over the last two weeks with it that the teeth on that wear out. The ones that were in it wore out; we sent some to Cayman Brac by freight and they are lost. Now, I would like to know how we lose two or three hundred pounds of metal between here and Cayman Brac, but, anyhow . . . We ordered another set yesterday and they are in Miami at Cayman Airways to be here Tuesday. So, we are having our own little challenges, but it is coming through.

The piece of equipment that is on its way by boat from Miami is a shredder. It is a piece of equipment that will separate metals, it will chew up all the metals and separate them from the vegetative matter and from the C&D [recycling equipment] and all the cement and the likes.

I take full responsibility for having ordered that piece of equipment. My colleagues agreed with me for the expenditure and I take full responsibility. We are engaging a lot of equipment from the people in Cayman Brac. We have a lot of equipment engaged up there now—excavators and bobcats and backhoes. Like I said, it is costing my Ministry tens of thousands of dollars per day.

Madam Speaker, I heard and I saw in the papers where the Leader of the Opposition called for Government to put, I think he said $25 million or something, $10 million to $20 million, something, into Cayman Brac right now. There is no need, in my view at this time, to earmark that kind of money when we do not know what it is going to cost. We need to ensure that whatever we do, we do whatever is necessary to get Cayman Brac back up. We do not know what it is going to cost. It is going to cost money to bring Cayman Brac back up, like it costs everywhere else.

I was very fortunate in East End that I had a benefactor who spent whatever was necessary. And that is what Government has to do as well. But I do not think that we can put an actual price tag on it at this time. At the end of the day, as the need arises we have to put the monies in there. I figure my staff will be in there for at least . . . we have made arrangements for the end of February to get out. That is, having cleaned up the whole area. Certainly there will be need to leave other staff in there just to pick up the C&D debris, but right now I believe that we are adequately serving it if I can get all the equipment to Cayman Brac.

Therein lies our problem; Cayman Brac is so dependent upon one means of transportation—one or two barges are so restricted by the weather. Maybe we need to start concentrating on that and finding alternative methods of delivery, alternative methods of getting stuff delivered to the Sister Islands.

Madam Speaker, I can assure the people of Cayman Brac that I will do no less for them than I did for the people of East End in particular, and the people of this country in general when Ivan hit Grand Cayman. Cayman Brac suffers the same fate that I do, which is they are too far removed from George Town. And everybody has this thing that East End is too far away! But we are one country and Cayman Brackers can be assured that this Minister and this Government is going to do everything possible to ensure that they rise from this, that they are as good—and better off than they were—prior to Paloma.

I ask for them to exercise a little patience. And I know that's difficult. It is easy for me to stand here on the Floor of the Legislative Assembly when I am going home this evening to a house with electricity, with air conditioning, with my children and my wife, and a refrigerator I can open at my pleasure, when these people in Cayman Brac are suffering under some difficult, difficult times. Madam Speaker, it is easy for me to say that. But there also needs to be a little patience exercised.

I heard the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac say that she saw television for the first time this morning. Well, after Ivan I didn't bathe for three weeks! Thank God Progressive [Distributors Ltd] had some baby wipes! And a cold Pepsi was so important to me that it is logged in my diary. It was eight weeks after Hurricane Ivan. I will never forget that. It was so overwhelming I almost got choked on it because it was cold! It was eight weeks after and I have it noted in my memoirs, when I write them, which will be entitled "Only in the Cayman Islands".

Madam Speaker, it is going to be tough for those people in Cayman Brac now. I know that. I have made a commitment that I will visit Cayman Brac every Wednesday. I was there last Wednesday. I stayed over-night and had dinner with the 30 people that I have there working, the guys from public works and environmental health, and the other agencies. I believe it was nice for them to be able to interact like that because they are still lying on bunks without electricity, without running water. And I really appreciate those people.

It was well enough to ask them to do it in the aftermath of Ivan because each night they could go home to their little families. But they travelled to Cayman Brac. Some of those guys have had one day off to come to Grand Cayman for a child's birthday or something. One in particular had his child's birthday party and he came down for one day and was back up the next morning. That is the kind of commitment these people have to this restoration. And they are doing a magnificent job at it.

They have their challenges. When I call to check on them they will tell me they need this or that material. It is material that cannot be sent by plane, it needs to go up on the barge. Those are the major challenges we are having in Cayman Brac.

I personally have to meet with the Leader about finding some method of taking this material to Cayman Brac. It is ridiculous because there are ways of doing it, but we need to talk to the shipping company about sending a ship in there while it is passing through to go to Miami. Whether or not it is more costly, we need to get materials to Cayman Brac. The process is going to come to a grinding halt if we do not get the materials. And that is going to be worse for the people of Cayman Brac. It is going to be really bad for them at that stage.

I went to the supermarket on Wednesday, because we now have a few apartments and we were trying to stock up some food for the guys. And the shelves are empty. The shelves are basically empty because the ships are not coming, because of the weather. The weather is such that a barge and a tug cannot get the materials and the merchandise and the goods to Cayman Brac.

I was hoping that the brand new machine that we are bringing would stay right on the dock and we would transfer it straight onto the barge. I do not even know when the barge is going to leave. I cannot make arrangements for the people to come to train our people with this in Cayman Brac and I need it desperately. I needed that piece of equipment a week ago. The debris is filling up the dump and I am not going to allow it to happen in Cayman Brac as it happened in Grand Cayman after Ivan. I am not prepared to do that.

It needs to be processed. And it needs to be processed immediately. But because of the difficulties of getting the materials and equipment there it is really difficult. Hopefully this barge will reach there and by Monday we will have another 30 people on the ground. I am hoping that is the case. We cannot depend on the people in Cayman Brac to rent things like pickup trucks to carry tools. We have to be self-sufficient when we get there.

Much progress has been made, especially since we now have four grab trucks in Cayman Brac. But it is not as coordinated as I would like. We need to separate, geographically divide the island and concentrate on these areas. There is much, Madam Speaker, much to be done in Cayman Brac.

I hear the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac talk about these loans and the likes. This is all well and good, and I applaud it and I trust that it will assist some of those civil servants who are as bad off now as anyone else. Government is taking care of its civil servants with $6 million. I suspect that by the time my ministry finishes we will be $3 million or $4 million. But we have to find that money from someplace else. And we are constantly juggling that to ensure that we have the money. We have private people. We have private equipment there. They are providing drivers, and the helpers and the likes. A lot of people do not know that but we have private people we have had to go out and hire because we cannot neglect Grand Cayman either.

Right now our services are cut in half in Grand Cayman. But the services in Cayman Brac are reduced too. So, we have to share this responsibility and share the load and get the workers, the staff to deal with both and rotate them. Every day we are paying hundreds and hundreds of dollars on flights to and from Cayman Brac through my ministry.

Madam Speaker, I hear the frustration. I hope that I have eased some of the concerns that the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac have. I know they are frustrated because while they are trying to attend to their constituents they do not even know what is going on here or there. And I understand that. For me it was a little different in East End because I knew everything that was going on since I was directing everything. So, I understand.

But, Madam Speaker, I want to assure them that whatever it is that I can do, I am doing and I am prepared to do. Whatever distance I have to go for the people of Cayman Brac, I am prepared to go. I will be there. I have made the commitment that I will go and check on the people of Cayman Brac and the staff. I have been to Little Cayman. I was the first tourist in Little Cayman. I did over-night there the night that the Southern Cross got electricity. Five of us were the only ones in the hotel. You know the kind of fun we had there, darkness and . . . but, you know, they were going to get tourists from overseas the next day.

My next trip is through Little Cayman to look at our stuff there. I may not be seen on the ground for long periods of time, but Madam Speaker, I can assure them that when I get there I know exactly where I am going and what I want to see and what I need to see in progress and then make decisions on what else we need to do.

I would ask them to tell their constituents that we are working. We are doing whatever we can. I try to get around as much as I can when I get there, but sometimes I cannot. I would love to spend some more time in Cayman Brac but I cannot. But I will have people in there. So I will have about 50-odd people on the ground from here on in sometime next week. That will be about 130 people rotating in and out of Cayman Brac. So, let us not be afraid. I know a lot of people in Cayman Brac do not know what is going on, in particular the representatives—only if they have a meeting.

So, Madam Speaker, with that short contribution to this Motion I ask the people of Cayman Brac to exercise a little patience and reassure the two Elected Members that the Government is doing everything possible. I am sure the Leader will go into the intricate details of the monies earmarked for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. I look forward to getting this job done. Let's do it! Let's get up and do it and get over it and move on and find something else to do. It has already happened. Let's just do it and get it done and get the people back in their homes and back on their feet and in three months' time they should not even know that Paloma passed through or what colour their house was before that time.

Madam Speaker, again, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 3.42 pm

Proceedings resumed at 4.19 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

Hon Minister responsible for Education.

Suspension of Standing Order 24(5)

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, following discussions during the break, I believe it is the will of the House to take the adjournment now and to suspend further debate on this important Motion before the House, one which the Leader of the Opposition has indicated he wishes to propose an amendment to. The debate on the amendment and the continued debate on the substantive Motion are likely to take quite some time.

As I think most people are aware, and certainly all Members of the House are aware, December 8 (this coming Monday), is the 50th Anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification Removal Law, 1958, which gave to the women of this country the right to hold public office and to vote. As we have indicated it is the intention of the Government to commemorate this important date and this important event by a short ceremony at 9.00 on Monday morning on the steps of the Legislative Assembly.

Following that event it is my intention to move a Motion in this honourable House to record and to celebrate this auspicious occasion and to give all Members of this honourable House the opportunity to say what they think they should about an event of such importance.

And so, Madam Speaker, to enable that to happen, and with the agreement of all Members of the House, I wish now with your permission to move the suspension of Standing Order 24(5) to allow the Motion that I just mentioned, which is entitled "Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification Removal Law, 1958", Government Motion No. 9/08-09, to be moved on Monday morning and then, Madam Speaker, for the debate to follow.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 24(5) be suspended in order to bring Government Motion No. 9/08-09, to commemorate the 50th Anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification Removal Law, 1958.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 24(5) suspended to allow a Government Motion to be dealt with during this Meeting.

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I think I should reiterate that 9.00 am is the function for the unveiling of the plaque. I guess the Leader of Government Business spoke to the Governor and the briefing has been postponed to Thursday. Honourable Leader of Government Business. Sorry, First Elected Member for Cayman Brac.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Just following up on my contribution and to some extent the contribution of the Second Elected Member, can I just get some clarification as to where we are with the financial assistance to Cayman Brac? We are taking the adjournment now. Does that mean there is going to be another weekend that we are going to be left without the assistance we asked for today?

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, are you in a position to enlighten the honourable Member?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, just very quickly, as I indicated to the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac, I will be in the Brac in the morning and I will be meeting with them. But just so that they will know, some funds have already been approved by Cabinet under section 11(5) of the Public Management and Finance Law, and those funds are accessible immediately. That is part of what we will be talking about tomorrow morning; some millions of dollars.

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this honourable House until Monday morning, immediately following the conclusion of the ceremony celebrating 50 years of the passage of the legislation which allowed women to vote.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until Monday morning [8 December 2008] after the unveiling of the plaque at the front of this building recognising women having the right to vote 50 years.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 4.25 pm the House stood adjourned until the conclusion of the unveiling ceremony to commemorate the 50th Anniversary of the Passage of The Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law 1958, on Monday 8th December 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
MONDAY
8 DECEMBER 2008
10.40 AM
Second Sitting

The Speaker: I call on the Third Elected Member for the district of George Town to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour : Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.
 Proceedings are resumed.

Proceedings Resumed at 10.42 am

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS

Oath of Allegiance

By Mr. Donovan W.F. Ebanks, MBE (administered by the Clerk)

The Speaker: Mr. Ebanks, would you come to the Clerk's table?

May we stand?

Hon. Donovan W.F. Ebanks: I, Donovan Ebanks, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Ebanks, you may take your seat.
 Please be seated.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE SPEAKER OF MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Speaker: I have no messages or announcements.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received no notice of statements by Honourable Members and Ministers of the Cabinet.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 9/08-09—Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the Passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, it is my honour and distinct privilege to move Government Motion No. 9 of the 2008/09 legislative year, entitled, Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification Removal Law, 1958.

The Motion reads as follows:

WHEREAS on 19th August, 1948 24 courageous women of George Town, Grand Cayman wrote to then Commissioner Ivor Otterbein Smith declaring "that it is our intention to exercise our Constitutional Right to vote today, August 19th, 1948, according to our conscience, in the Election of Vestrymen for the District of George Town" but despite their stated intent were denied that oppor- tunity because at that time the law did not permit women to vote in the Cayman Islands;

AND WHEREAS the women of the Cayman Islands, undaunted, continued their struggle for equal rights and in 1957 presented to the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestry a petition bearing 358 names of Caymanian women which prayed that:

“women should be permitted from henceforth to exercise the right of voting in elections, that they should be permitted to hold public office, and that in any new law of consolidation or codification of the law of the Constitution of the Cayman Islands the rights of women should be safeguarded, so that we be not regarded by you or by the world as less worthy than the women of other lands who have been accorded those rights”;

AND WHEREAS ON 16TH October, 1958 a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestrymen recommended to the House that the petition of the 358 women be granted;

AND WHEREAS on 8TH December, 1958 the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestrymen passed the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958 thereby according women the right to exercise any public function, including the right to vote, and to be entitled to hold any civil or judicial office or post and to enter into or assume any civil profession or vocation in the Cayman Islands.

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly does acknowledge and record the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958 and its seminal role in according equal rights to women by permitting them to exercise any public function, including the right to vote, and to be entitled to hold any civil or judicial office or post and to enter into or assume any civil profession or vocation in the Cayman Islands;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958 the Legislative Assembly does acknowledge and celebrate the achievements of the several women who serve or have served in public office as elected members and/or as Speakers of this House, whose names are now inscribed on a tablet inside the Legislative Assembly Building and who are as follows:

ELECTED MEMBERS

Miss Evelyn Wood – Bodden Town, (1962- 1965)
First Elected Woman to the Legislative Assembly

Miss Annie Huldah Bodden, OBE – George Town (1962 -1984)

Hon. Sybil lone McLaughlin, JP, MBE, National Hero

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly records its gratitude and pays tribute to the contribution of the women of the Cayman Islands to the social, political and physical development of the country and to its continued progress and prosperity.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Minister of Education and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, it is right that we pause from the more mundane matters of legislative business, on a day such as today, to pay honour and tribute to acknowledge the contributions of women, to recognise and appreciate the efforts of those brave souls who for more than 60 years struggled for equality. And it is right that we also acknowledge the fact that the predecessor to this House, as we know it, the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestrymen, who took the brave step 50 years ago today to pass legislation which accorded to women the right to stand for public office and to vote in elections choosing the representatives to this House from the general populace.

Madam Speaker, we have just participated in a public ceremony on the steps of the Legislative Assembly in which we paid tribute at some length to those efforts, contributions and achievements. And it is right, I say again, that we should on this day, in particular, pay special tribute to and recognise the efforts, the courage, the longsuffering and the sacrifice of the women who subsequently went on to hold public office in these Islands.

And, Madam Speaker, it is right also that this is recorded in the records of the proceedings of this House, the Hansard, so that in time to come those who follow us in this House will understand that these present Members of this Legislative Assembly have taken the time, regarded it as important enough to move a motion and speak to the tremendous efforts, contributions and achievements of women, and to acknowledge the importance of this day, 50 years since this House passed legislation giving women equal rights.

Now, Madam Speaker, the struggle was long. It did not begin just with the letter referred to in the motion which was written by 24 George Town women and delivered to the then Commissioner on 19 August 1948. But, Madam Speaker, I believe that as far as recorded history goes, that is the first written record of the effort made by women to achieve the franchise.

I believe it is important enough that I refer to that letter and, in fact, Madam Speaker, read its contents into the record of these proceedings.

As the Motion said, the letter was addressed to Commissioner Ivor Otterbein Smith at Government House in George Town. It is dated 19 August 1948. It reads as follows:

“Sir:

“We, the undersigned, residents of the District of George Town, having examined and obtained Legal advice on the Constitution of the Cayman Islands, find nothing therein which denies women the fundamental Human Right of taking part in deciding who shall govern us.

“Therefore we declare that it is our intention to exercise our Constitutional Right to vote today, August 19th, 1948, according to our conscience, in the Election of Vestrymen for the District of George Town.

“Should this privilege be denied us by the Officials in Charge of the Election we shall demand the Government give just reasons for making of no effect the Laws it has sworn to uphold.

“We have the honour to be, Sir,” [and the names follow. They were]:

“Olive N. Hinds, Valda L. Bodden, Ermyn Merren, Carolyn Hinds, Pansy A. Thompson, Sunbeam Thompson, Mrs. Carley Merren, Georgette V. Hurlston, Violet Thompson, Mrs. George A. Merren, Roxie E. Bodden, Effie Anderson, Daireen V. Merren, Mrs. Winston Watler, Roselyn Merren [Some of the names are a bit difficult to decipher], Veta C. M. Bodden, R. Virginia Bodden, Ena Coe, Mrs. R. J. Watler, Ena Merren, Sylvia E. Coe, Goldie Banks, Isabelle Granger and Mrs. Pershing Merren.”

Madam Speaker, as I mentioned in my brief remarks at the function earlier, despite the strident and determined tone of this letter, no women were permitted to vote in the Election in August of 1948. And the reason for that, Madam Speaker, is rather technical. Perhaps on an occasion such as today, when we are seeking to celebrate the achievement, not much purpose is served by going into too much technical detail except for the real history buffs. But in short, the legal reason given was that despite the fact that the rather short constitution which obtained and had force and effect in Cayman back then did not speak to just men voting but, rather, gave to the Commissioner the ability to call the people together to hold an election. Because the English Common Law had never accorded to women the right to vote or stand for public office, the legal opinion was to the effect that people in the Cayman Islands' Constitution at that time had to be interpreted to mean only men, and that any change to that position would require specific legislation.

Madam Speaker, the matter seemed (at least as far as the history books and the documentation recorded it) to have faded away from the national consciousness for a number of years.

The next recorded note involves correspondence between the then Commissioner back in 1954 (who was known locally as Commissioner Gerrard), in which he writes to the Jamaican Governor who had responsibility for, among other things, the Cayman Islands, regarding a question by Mrs. Eden Cook-Bodden about whether women could stand or vote in elections. And that, Madam Speaker, seems to have renewed the discussion locally and with the Jamaican Government about women having the right to vote and to stand for elections.

Of course, Madam Speaker, all of this, as I said when I addressed the gathering a while ago, was around the time when the West Indies Federation was very much the issue, and the desire for greater self-government and autonomy among British Colonies in the West Indies was manifesting itself. As the Cayman Islands then were a dependency of a dependency (that is, we were a dependency of Jamaica and did not have direct access or control by the UK), there were lots of concerns here about what would be the fate of these Islands if and when (as it seemed inevitable) Jamaica would become independent, as it did in 1962.

So, Madam Speaker, amidst these discussions, obviously missing at the national level were the contributions and the involvement of women. And it is clear that women had real views about the future of these Islands and what should obtain. And that seems to have been the galvanising force between the organisation and the efforts which culminated in a petition dated 25 March 1957, signed by some 358 women. The petition was addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestrymen.

Madam Speaker, the historical records speak to a certain amount of resistance and delaying tactics and so forth by various persons of importance, both within and outside of the Legislative Assembly, for there were what were perceived to be good reasons held in some quarters as to why women should continue to be excluded from this very important process.

I am deliberately not going into too much detail about those or to call too many names because some of the names are what were and to some extent still are very important families in this jurisdiction. And the purpose of this exercise is certainly not to seek to embarrass anyone or to highlight attitudes at the time in terms of detail; but, as I said, to play some context around what transpired back then and to perhaps help all of our people to understand that this was a struggle—not just something that somebody moved a motion and it just happened and everyone agreed. There was a whole lot of hard work and political negotiating that went on both locally and with the Jamaican Government.

Madam Speaker, the women did not give up and, as I said earlier, they were supported by a number of men who believed very much that they should be accorded this right.

I spoke this morning about the fact that on 31 May 1958, ten men nominated Mrs. Ena Watler to stand as a candidate for the Vestry in George Town. Their nomination was rejected.

Madam Speaker, if I may have a moment I seem to have misplaced the actual piece of paper I have with the names and, what is quite insightful, the response from the Commissioner to their attempt to nominate Mrs. Ena. I will read those when it turns up in a moment, but it demonstrates that there was continued pressure being brought to bear on the system by the women and their supporters to make sure that this Law that we are recognising the passage of today actually got through; that there was no guarantee really that it would actually pass.

So, Madam Speaker, could I have just one moment to turn up this document which I seem to have misplaced amongst my many pieces of paper.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I still haven't turned up the actual piece of paper with the response, but I will at some point read that into the record. What I do have is the actual nomination which is dated 31 May 1958.

It says, "The undersigned residents of the district of George Town hereby nominate Mrs. R.D. Watler [her husband was Mr. Royal] as a candidate for representative of the district of George Town in the forthcoming General Elections in August 1958." This is Mrs. Ena Watler. It was signed by Thomas Hurlston, Charles Hislop, Semmes Coe, Pat Henderson, T.B. Bodden, A.H. Godfrey, Alburn Whittaker, Ralph K. Lott, Conrad Forbes, James Arch, Jr.

Madam Speaker, I make the point (which I made earlier this morning) that women had some very strong advocates on their side as well. Ultimately, the House was all male so it required men to actually make the decision.

The way it was dealt with was that the petition was referred to a select committee of the Assembly who considered the matter and, on 16 October 1958, [at the Town Hall, George Town] returned the following letter to: "The President and Members of the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestry.

"Gentlemen, We, the undersigned members of a Select Committee, appointed by the Assembly to consider a petition from 358 women of the Cayman Islands (as quoted below) beg to report that the Committee met at the above place and on the date mentioned.

"The Committee recommends that the prayer of the petitioners be granted.

"We, the undersigned the women of Grand Cayman do beg your favourable consideration of this our petition. It appears to us that constitutional changes of the greatest moment are imminent throughout the British West Indies, and that such changes may be reflected in changes in the Cayman Islands.

"We, your humble petitioners, do hereby pray that women should be permitted from henceforth to exercise the right of voting in elections, that they should be permitted to hold public office, and that in any new law or consolidation or codification of the law of the Constitution of the Cayman Islands the right of women to vote and to hold public office should be safeguarded, so that we be not regarded by you or by the world as less worthy than the women of other lands who have been accorded those rights."

It was signed by T.W. Farrington (known to all of us as Mr. Willie Farrington), O.G. Hurlston, Logan Bodden, E.D. Merren (that is Mr. Ducan Merren), W.A. McLaughlin (that is William Allen), H.M. Coe and O.L. Panton. They were the Select Committee who recommended that the prayer of the petitioners be granted.

And, Madam Speaker, I will not spend the time of this House going into all of the technical details and struggles at the drafting level which occurred before we actually got to this day when the law was passed. But even after the law was passed, it took another two months before it actually came into effect because there were a number of things which needed to be done, including the fact that with the right to vote and stand for public office should also come responsibilities, such as the ability to serve on juries. This required other legislation to be drafted and passed. The Governor of Jamaica finally gave his consent to the legislation on 16 February 1959.

Madam Speaker, in a somewhat abbreviated way I have outlined, I think, how we have gotten to this point. But I want to reflect now a little on these circumstances. I have thought about this truthfully since the Motion was brought to this House on 6 September last year [2007] by the Third and Fourth Elected Members for George Town asking that the Government take steps to recognise the contributions, achievements and aspirations of women generally.

As I began to focus on this particular event and its significance, it seems . . . I grew up in the 60s and 70s which were not much removed from this time. The first woman was not elected until 1962, a year after I was born. So, it is not all that long ago.

When I think that my mother was 33 years old before she had the right to vote . . . Living in the times that we live in now it seems a ridiculous and absolutely preposterous set of affairs. It seems impossible to conceive now that people could believe that this country and countries around the world were best left to be run and could only be run by men, leaving out of involvement in political process and the development of policy and implementation at least half—and in Cayman's case more than half—of the intellect and ability and intuition that women bring to any discussion of any nature, and, even more importantly, of discussion at the national level. But that is the way it was.

I also reflect on the kind of courage it must have taken for women to take a stand on this in this community where, even when I was growing up was very much the case, women did, certainly in any sort of public way, what their husbands permitted them to do or allowed them to do. It was not even contemplated that you would do anything which might embarrass your husband. And many, many of these women were married women.

In fact, one of the dating factors of the petition is that many of the signatures are signed "Mrs." R.D. Watler, or "Mrs." Pershing Merren, as two examples that come to me. Many women conceived their place in society on the basis of who they were married to, and they signed their names in that way using their husband's names. That was a thing of those times.

So, when you consider those circumstances and the place that Cayman was at, where few people—and even fewer women—had access to anything more than the most basic of education, you start to understand and appreciate more what it must have taken for these women to take the stand that they did.

It affects me, Madam Speaker, at a very personal level in a number of ways. And this is true for other Members of this House and many members of the broader community. I had not appreciated this until I started to look at this process. There I see my grandmother's signature and my great aunt's signature, and I knew those people and how humble they were, how much they deferred to my grandfather because he was "the man". But they signed the petition!

I scratched my head and wondered for a little while why my mother had not signed the petition. Then I realised that she had just gotten a job with Government in 1956, so she was not going to sign any petition in 1957 because as a government officer that just was not done. It is probably still the case today.

I don't have to go outside my own personal experience to understand the strength, character and wisdom of these women who are related to me and to think that in my grandmother's case for the vast majority of her life, because she died in 1970, she did not have the right to vote. It's appalling to me. But, as I said, that was not just the way in Cayman; that was the way of much of the world in those times.

I think, Madam Speaker, it is important. I suppose that the one sort of saving grace is that in another ironic sort of way my grandfather, Allen McLaughlin, was a member of the select committee who recommended to this House that the law be passed, as a member of the House when it was passed. But he was also a member of the House all those years when they would not allow women to vote and stand for election either. So I have to balance that consideration.

Madam Speaker, I think this sort of discussion is important for my generation and the generation which follows to truly understand and appreciate where we have come from; and for our young people, particularly girls and young women, to understand the degree of disenfranchisement which their mothers and grandmothers endured, and the efforts and determination and sacrifice involved in giving them now what they quite rightly take for granted.

You see, Madam Speaker, particularly in a place like Cayman where the population was so small—and then it was even smaller. Back when this was passed, the population of these Islands, including Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, was probably less than 8,000 people. Understand that what transpired here was controlled by a very small and select group of people.

Now is not the time or the occasion, and I think it would be distasteful to go into all of that, but those of us in this House who have lived long enough understand entirely what I am talking about. And while the House and politics was the exclusive preserve of men, it was also the exclusive preserve of a very select and small group of men who exercised the real power in this country.

The passing of this legislation, coupled with the 1959 Constitution which reduced the number of representatives but actually gave a greater degree of control to the local legislature, was critically important in the history of these Islands; and in large part, I believe, the basis on which we have moved on to greater progress and prosperity in these past 50 years. And that, Madam Speaker, is due in no small part to the involvement of women in the process, although, as I said earlier this morning, we still have a long way to go because 50 years after the passage of this Law, almost 50 years since women had the right to stand for public office, only 9 women have been elected to this Legislative Assembly, the 10th (being the National Hero, Mrs. Sybil McLaughlin) having been elected as Speaker. But she was not an elected member. We still have a long way to go to get the right balance in terms of who exercises control in this country, who helps shape policies and direction and helps to shape the destiny of this place.

Madam Speaker, I spoke at some length this morning at the public function marking this occasion, and I have said a fair bit now. I believe that while there is much more than can be said, as I have the right to wind up on the Motion I think I will resume my seat shortly and let other Members of this House have an opportunity to contribute on this very special occasion as we seek to recognise the women who have held public office in this country since the passage of this Law, to recognise the efforts, contributions and struggles of those brave women who helped to make it happen, and to record and acknowledge with appreciation the courage and wisdom of our predecessor House, the Legislative Assembly of Justices and Vestrymen, who actually passed the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 50 years ago today.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, the Motion before this honourable House is one which finds unity in this House. This is so because as the people elect we have come here today to recognise one of the most significant efforts ever to be made in our history; that of the right of our ancestors, wives, mothers, grandmothers, daughters, nieces and our sisters to be able to cast their vote.

I want to congratulate the Government in following through with the ceremony this morning. It was a grand and auspicious occasion, Madam Speaker, and I am glad that I was around on this day at this time in our history in our development.

I have seen in my time in this House, these past 24 years, many grand occasions because we do have a lot to record. Sometimes we fail to do that, but I can look back on those 24 years and say that we have come a long way. I can look back, as I am 53 years old today, and say, "We have come a long way". And 50 years ago what type of system existed?

I think the Minister moving the resolution has outlined very well what was the order of the day. Madam Speaker, we do not come here to embarrass, but we know our history. We come here to sing praise, but the fact is that there was an oligarchy of wealth where the rich governed the poor; an oligarchy of learning where the educated governed the not so educated, or even an oligarchy of race.

Madam Speaker, there was a state of affairs which made fathers, brothers, husbands and sons the masters over the mother, sister, wife and daughter of every household. But this was not all bad for these Islands. In fact, it did not ordain all men sovereign, nor did it ordain all women subjects. That would have carried much dissension, discord and rebellion into every home in the developing little Island of ours. No, there was thought process, discussion, and when there was cause for dissension it was done, and you didn't know that there was dissension.

Madam Speaker, we have come a long way. Our women, brave as they always have been, fought that state of affairs and they prevailed. Much has been said about those brave women—358 of them—who stood firm to get the vote. After examining the petition I believe I can safely say that there would have been many, many more signatories to that petition if they could have gotten it to sign. When you examine it and see the names and recognise that there were far more women in this country who were astute also and knew how to hold an argument properly, who could debate, but they, for whatever reason, did not get that chance. But that does not take away anything from the 358 who did.

Madam Speaker, this country could not ever deny the fact that our women for a great part of our history played the greatest role in our development without the vote, without the opportunity to be elected. For when we examine our history, our women were there in government from the early days. Think back on some of the names in George Town who played a role. Think back of the many women from all over the Island who sat sometimes in executive positions in the public sector to make this country tick day by day without nary a cent to do it, keeping the government intact in every true sense of the word. Think of the women who worked the wheels of the private sector. Business could not have made it without them.

Think back on the names of some of the big businesspeople, men in the country, and see the women behind them. And as small as I was, going to their place of business, it was that woman who knew everything about everything in that business. That businessman knew how to get the money and spend it and make the deals, but she knew how to make the wheels of that business work. Our women—though not elected, though not able to vote—were the teachers at school. Remember?

I cannot give enough thanks, and I will do so here today also, for people like Iris Bodden, Theoline McCoy (the late Theoline McCoy who fought a system that came out of that oligarchy that I am talking about). Were it not for them, where would we be? They did not have a vote, could not get elected to the House. They were the stalwarts in the Church; they could take the pulpit and do as well as any educated Baptist Preacher from the southern United States. They could do as well as any educated Minister that came out of Jamaica or any other place, or even out of England. The fact is, we understood them better at times in their messages because they spoke of day to day matters and knew the problems in the home. Think of it!

Madam Speaker, think of people like Ms. Deenie, from your district; the two Ebanks, Mr.

Craddock's wife, Mrs. Louise, and Pat's mother, Mrs. Alvernie. And I can name many more out of your district and many in my district. But when they spoke—my grand aunt, Aunt Florrie, and Aunt Theresa Powery who lived to be 103—I asked them, "Where did you get this knowledge?" "God gave it to me. I honoured him and he honoured me."

We can think of the women I knew from the Church of God: the late Sister E. Redley Powery, who was a school teacher. I went to her school after we got run out of the Secondary Modern School to make space. That was the system I was speaking about that Mrs. Theoline McCoy raved against. And I went to Ms. Redley's school for a short time, 14 plus before I went out on my first job. These women did not have the vote and were not able to be elected because of the laws of the state at the time.

Madam Speaker, while we can heap praise on our women for all they have done in the public sphere while we bemoan the fact that out of the last 12 general elections, one hiatus in 1968 in George Town . . . Those of you who don't know the history, that was when there were more foreign people on the voters' list than locals, and the George Town men stopped the general election in George Town . . . didn't stop it in other districts—everybody else said, "our voter's list is good, we are going ahead." but the George Town men stopped it and there was a hiatus. And at least two by-elections since 1959, we have only had 9 women elected to this honourable House.

The House and politics might have suffered, but I believe the country at large might have been the benefactor. I said that to say this, we cannot ever overstate the contribution that has been made to Government, business, church and the community. But, by an even larger margin, I believe we can count the contribution of our mothers, those homemakers who kept the home fire burning while father was at sea or away from home for whatever reason. For Caymanians could never be the people we are had it not been for the care, love, training and discipline given to us by our faithful mothers and sometimes those who were lucky enough to have a father to play that role.

And connected thereto, Madam Speaker, the development of this country would not have been as successful if our diligent mothers had not been good mothers who taught their children the value of love of country. They didn't have the vote, they didn't have a chance to be elected; but the Cayman Islands could not have had the substance without the work and those attributes of care, love, training and discipline given by our mothers.

During my first days of marriage I often wished that I could have afforded to allow my wife to stay home and be the homemaker taking care of the children. And no one can tell me that any maid, no matter how many good ones—and by God we have had some good ones—could do a better job. I wished often for that. And so, let us not bemoan the fact that in 50 years only 9 women were elected. Let us say thank you God that our mothers were who they were and what they learned sometimes from pure granny-wits (because they did not have the vast education of the oligarchy) . . . look at what they made of this country, and I say 'they' because they made the Caymanian children to be what the country needed.

And so, while there might not have been a large amount of women elected here who could go and cast their votes, they nevertheless played such a significant role in the development of these Islands, too great for me to put into words today.

The Minister made reference to what obtained in the region and the world. Jamaica did not get universal adult suffrage (which meant everybody could vote over 21) until I believe it was 1944. Bermuda had a system where landowners could vote several times, landed gentry, wherever they owned property. And maybe other countries and regions had that. If you did not pay your poll tax here in these Islands you could not vote. That had to be paid up.

So, Madam Speaker, Cayman was not that far behind when you consider our then sister island of Jamaica that had full blown slavery and who went through brimstone fire and hell to get democracy. We got ours. Men could vote if they paid their poll tax. The women got their vote in 1958. We have come a long way.

Madam Speaker, I sat on the frontbench this morning and saw our National Hero sitting there, a living one. We were told at the time, how foolish can you be to appoint somebody living, to be a national hero. Well, I have always been one of those persons who says, 'give me my praise now, don't wait until I am in a casket.' If you have anything good to say about me, if you can, please don't wait until then. And so, as the Minister of Culture, I took that on. (The Third Elected Member for George Town was the Principal Secretary at the time and we had our critics).

I had been waiting for the appropriate occasion all these many years to say what a certain man from George Town had told me and thought it very fit to do so this morning. There they were, the two of them: the honourable National Hero and Mr. Brainard Watler, who, when we were criticised for having her (the National Hero) do the walk around, he said, "Well, the Queen does the walk around, she is our Queen." All these many years I said it to no one.

I thought back on the struggles that we had in this House to get a Speaker. The first motion was moved by myself and Mr. Ezzard Miller, and we did not get far with it. The second motion moved by myself and Mr. Roy Bodden, and we did not get far with it. The third motion succeeded by one [vote]. And if you could have stuck the members of the Executive and the frontbench at that time you would not have gotten a drop of blood out of them because they thought it would never pass—but it did! And it has all been for the better.

Look who rose to get the job—a woman. After that, not long, another woman, and today, Madam Speaker, you yourself are in that position. But do not think it was easy. Search the Hansards and you will see.

Madam Speaker, I recall when I was fighting the Chamber of Commerce for labour legislation. When I was fighting the Chamber of Commerce to get better pregnancy benefits, do you think it was easy? And now I hear them get up and talk about the development of the country and how much they pushed for it. Everybody played a little role in getting some benefits but, boy some sure played a role in trying to stop some benefits in this country. And I can never forget the names that I was called, the licks that I took and the meetings that I had to attend to get better benefits for the women of this country.

At age 53, Madam Speaker, I can reflect on things as they were back in those years. In 1959, when the franchise was given, three years later (in 1962) I was 7 years old and attended my first political meeting at the West Bay Town Hall and learned to say the following words: “Vote for T.W. Farrington.” I was put on a car hood and driven slowly around the district, “Vote for T.W. Farrington”, who was the longest serving politician and a giant in the affairs of these Islands. In those days, I believe at one point he was in charge of finance. Elected men were in charge of finance before.

Madam Speaker, I can think back. I paid close attention to politics and I saw the ins and outs of it from those early days. Today I marvel—sometimes I am left dumbstruck by those who say that party politics is bad, and we need those independent voices like we had back then. I cringe, because I am 53 years old and I know there was no such thing.

Madam Speaker, I know who controlled whom; where the votes were when they came into this honourable House, and where they went sometimes in this honourable House in the early days. I have seen some of the politics, and those people either have not studied our history or they really just do not know how the system of governance works. Party politics or not, named party or none, there has always been full-blown party politics in this country. The groups got it, and they sat together and they voted—those in opposition and those with the government.

The first time I heard the [phrase] “extension cord” was in between 1972 and 1976. That was a big issue in this country and it came in this House. You sat and looked and you knew why because they always voted with the Government. They were part and parcel of the Government, not that there was any extension cord, he was part and parcel of the Government. Party politics! When they moved from one or two named parties to none, when there was the National Democrats and the Christian Democrats and then they moved from that to other names—this team and that team—it was the same thing and worse because they had to get some serious, serious giveaways to survive. And if you did not you simply did not get. Signs were put up in some places that said, “if you did not vote for me, do not come here.” And you were told that by other people.

Madam Speaker, we have come a long way. We have done well. And there are issues that I can not agree with the Government on, but not this one. This is a laudable move and time well taken in this House. As I said, it is good to give thanks and it is fit and proper to thank our women who stood in the front line to help give all the women of these Islands their rightful place in democracy. We thank them, we praise their memory and we bless their families, most of all we say, thank you Lord for those people in the past, men and women who stood for these Islands and did their endeavour best to bring it to where it is today.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I have come here today having been lifted up by 716 hands, and I know Madam Speaker that you cannot speak from the Chair, therefore, I will also speak for you.

This morning was a very touching experience for all men and women in this country, and it was the right time, the right place with the right people, because today is a time of challenges where we need good things in our lives to make us happy. This was a good thing.

I rise to support the Motion commemorating the 50th Anniversary of the Passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958, and I will make a few comments. But I would like to firstly say that this morning when it was all happening I thought about who is missing here today, besides all the people that have contributed to our lives. I would like to just say that I thought Estella Scott Roberts was missing, and to say most of her time that she too made a great contribution in the lives of women in our country.

Madam Speaker, besides the 716 hands (if I multiply 358 by 2, I get 716 hands) I would like to say that there are some great women that perhaps sometimes we forget when we try to honour people because somewhere their names have not really been etched in the annals of history. A few of them would be Ms. Dica Brown, from North Side; Ms. Katilda Seymour, from George Town; Ms. Clara Eden, from George Town; Ms. Martha Saunders, Ms. Aleia Seymour, Mrs. Ruth McLaughlin, Mrs. Beulah Johnson, Ms. Annie Bush, Ms. Earle (Pinkie) Bush, and my own mother, Ms. Maude Mahalia [Seymour].

There are others, many passed on, who have made significant contributions. And they were firsts, like our first pharmacist, Mrs. Althea McLaughlin. These are people that we must ensure . . . and I will start by asking the Minister if we could ensure that the [National] Archive and the Library do great research on all these women so that they will not be forgotten. I know it is going to be a difficult task, but we took 50 years to get here so we can take 50 years to put those names together.

Madam Speaker, you have been a trailblazer in the whole discovery of women's liberation. You have fought for women to be in the Ministry of Women Affairs. You have attended many conferences for us to look at the unpaid work of women. As I said in my first motion on the contribution of women, I hope that we will remember to honour our persons who have made significant contributions. But, Madam Speaker, I have no doubt in my mind that your name will go down in the annals of history as a great role model for women.

I like your maverick way; the way you shoot sometimes from the hip. But you are a straight shooter, you do not miss, and you never missed in what you spoke about in the contribution of women.

Madam Speaker, it is so ironical that here we are in this 21st Century in the Cayman Islands talking about constitutional change, and it was a constitution that debarred women from voting. So you see how the Constitution is so important to the lives of people.

But I do not think that in developing this Constitution we are going to be so shortsighted. We are going to ensure that there is always the balance. But also we must remember, Madam Speaker, that maybe it is best to use neutral language in our Constitution because I believe in looking through the literature it spoke about "vestrymen". And because it spoke about vestrymen and not vestrywomen, it applied. So, we have to ensure that our Constitution has neutral language.

Madam Speaker, in this House today I believe we have 18 persons. And, of those 18 persons (I'm not sure of somebody's age), there are only about 7 or 8 of us that might have witnessed . . . less than that as, a matter of fact. Eight of us understand the milestone of 50; but there are just a few of us that are cognisant of and would remember the event. I am one of them. You are one of them, and Mr. Anthony [Eden]. I'm not sure if anybody else would remember. It is interesting, isn't it Madam Speaker, that the person moving the Motion was not born in that era? And that is commendable too.

But if I know the Honourable Minister, I know that he believes in balance. He has to—he has two sisters, one wife, two sons and two female dogs. So, he has to ensure that he stays . . . No offence to the two female dogs. He has to ensure that he does what he has to do to ensure that there is balancing, where there is equality.

Madam Speaker, those 358 women marched so that all of us could have a voice. I will pause here to say that I know the Honourable Leader of the Opposition spoke about poll tax. Well, let me tell you there were many, many male George Towners that never voted because they could not afford to pay the poll tax. So, they were not just liberating women in giving them the ability to vote, but also those men who could not afford to pay two pounds for the poll tax. So, they had no voice either. But these brave souls marched the journey to break the chains and made us free. Voting is a democratic right; it is one of the fundamental principles of democracy. Those women broke the shackles, and here we are today. And we must thank them and their families for the bold steps.

Madam Speaker, due to the absence of our men {who were] at sea, our women in the Cayman Islands performed many, many roles. That has been said here over and over. Of course, Caribbean women are university renowned for their independence, their creativity and resilience. But despite the relative independence of our women and their educational success, they still had to fight against the belief that a woman's place is in the home.

Madam Speaker, women of the Cayman Islands and throughout the region still knock their heads against the glass ceiling hoping that it will break. We today in the 21st Century are at the crossroads. We are. And this is a good thing. But we have to make a decision about our women, a further decision, that if we continue to educate them there must be a job market for them, not menial tasks. We must create opportunities for them to realise their potential; to make a further significant contribution to the development of our society.

A message today, Madam Speaker, for the young ones to whom we will extend our hands to bring into this landscape of politics and economic progress is that we should make a bold dramatic break with the stereotypes of the past. After 50 years of political enfranchisement we must continue to advocate for the social and economic enfranchisement of half of our citizens.

I think it was Confucius who said that women hold up half the sky. And if women hold up half the sky, there must certainly be equality and balance in everything that we do. There must be a new dispensation for women; a new functional approach of partnering with schools, community and church in nurturing children. These are the pillars of social and principled value system, and we, as women, must be involved with these entities to help children grow up with excellent values of compassion, love, caring and great decision-making skills so as to be able to make great choices in their lives. That is the focus I want to leave, Madam Speaker, about this partnering of women with the pillars of our society which help in the social transformation of our children.

The social pillars, the home, school and community (to the young women I am saying), must partner to ensure that children, young people, reduce their propensity to take drugs, to commit violent acts. They must increase their chances to have a livelihood and to generate income and a model for saving and pursue financial literacy. And, of course, to be civic minded, practice voluntarism and community service. And if all of this is done, Madam Speaker, we will have the perfect fit.

Crime is a learnt behaviour, and the pillars of the social landscape and the socialisation system must unite to create a safe, loving, hardworking and peaceful society. But, Madam Speaker, women need support to facilitate all of this. The Honourable Minister in his speech this morning said we have a long way to go to support women.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, is this a convenient point to take the luncheon break?

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15.

Proceedings suspended at 12.47 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.30 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. Debate continuing on Government Motion No. 9/08-09.

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town continuing her debate.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, this morning I spoke thanking the people for bringing us this far. I concentrated a lot on the new vision for the new Caymanian women and said that they should take a bold step and break away from the stereotypes of the past. And the thrust should be on economic enfranchisement and social enfranchisement. I looked at the connection between the women—the ones who rock the cradle (as they would say) rule the world—and that they should partner with the pillars of the social transformation such as the home, community and school, to ensure that the children and the new women, girls, and boys, would have a different life.

They should partner with these social pillars to ensure the reduction of drugs, the reduction of our women and men committing violent acts so that they could increase our livelihood and practise income generation and develop a model for saving and financial literacy. And also, for them to be civic minded, very involved in community service and voluntarism.

This morning I also said that we need to support the new 21st Century women if we wish to have them involved in the decision-making process, whether it is political or economic. We need to support them, and by supporting them it means that we would have to look at how we can support them with their children. And, of course, a vision would be that we should increase the whole facility for after school, and the whole facility for pre-schools. That is one way, Madam Speaker, we would be sure the children of the women are given foundation education and they are well protected. Every mother should be assured that in the event of having to work long hours like her partner, her children are looked after.

Madam Speaker, as I said, I am asking the new woman to sort of break away from the traditional myths. This would relieve the pressure on women who have to multitask. It would also relieve the anxiety that women suffer when they cannot get away from work to collect their children, or have to leave their children on their own at home. It would also give women the confidence to take on greater responsibility at work as senior managers, as entrepreneurs running their own businesses. If they are given this support, more women would have the confidence to participate in this whole political and economic development that we are asking them to be a part of. This would improve their social standing, Madam Speaker, and their economic power.

Madam Speaker, I believe that women who campaigned for the vote in the 1940s and 1950s . . . that the new Caymanian woman must campaign for economic and social rights. The new Caymanian woman has been quite successful in campaigning where we have domestic violence and spousal abuse. I think that the Business and Professional Women's Club, along with the Government and other entities, has done a fairly good job in pushing that, and we also have the Young Business and Professional Women's Club who has done the work on stalking. And I think that is good.

We also have women in the various service clubs, and the men have accepted the women in the various service clubs so that they can hone all their managerial and networking skills. This is good. But the other side of the coin is the education of the male partners.

We should embark, Madam Speaker, on a public education programme and work with our men on modern gender relationships. As we get better and women become more progressive it means that there has to be constant dialogue with partners or with male counterparts so that we can sit around the table and there is no one-upmanship or anyone being dominating in a situation, and there can be this whole question of equality and balance.

I would advocate, Madam Speaker, that Caymanian women need to start a movement for their social and economic liberation. Women must lead the charge for change in concept of feminisation, of poverty. Research tells you that poverty now has been feminised because more than 60 per cent of women are underachievers, where the question of livelihood is concerned. So, it seems, Madam Speaker, when you read the research that poverty itself is feminised and we must move from that.

But the women themselves must change that, in particular women in the Cayman Islands, because women must strive for economic rights. And you don't have to have any arguments with anybody. How do we do that, Madam Speaker? We do that by embracing the education which is free in our country at primary and secondary level, and the optimum number of scholarships that are given out at a tertiary level that we can embrace. So women, in order to have economic enfranchisement, must be skilled or retooled in a job that acquires money; a job that provides chances for promotion and great income generation.

Madam Speaker, the empowerment of women in the political and economic process is the biggest liberator of all. Women must and should network to share the political responsibilities with their male counterparts in these hallowed halls. When women vote for women, women win. Therefore, women must have a consciousness of their own self discovery if they wish to be part of the political process. If you have more women going out to vote than males, then it is safe to say that you would have more women being voted for to come into the House.

But, Madam Speaker, you know this is an education process that we must go through. I don't think it is fair to say that it might happen tomorrow. I think those of us who are in these hallowed halls, men and women, are to give women an opportunity for political education.

Political education is not jumping into the ring and just going into campaign. Political development is starting from schools in the whole process. How civic minded are you? Are you concerned about your community? Do you do community service? Are you part of a service club? Are you part of different organisations which help you to develop your political management skills?

And, Madam Speaker, if we do this I safely sat that within the next 15 years, and perhaps if we do this, when I visit here (if I am alive at that time) in the gallery I would at least see 50 per cent or at least more than three. At least we could have a third of the House being women. And that is ambitious because at the end of the day it is a brave woman who goes out into that campaign because you don't know what they are going to throw at you. They will say things before you were born or conceived, saying all sorts of things. But, as women, we have to have the skin of a rhinoceros and a gentle heart so that when those things are thrown at us we can bounce off.

Madam Speaker, I know you and I have been doing this. We have to acclimate our own women into this political process. It is not one of the kindest jobs in the world. As I told somebody in this House, I didn't realise I was dishonest until I became a politician. You know I worked 33<sup>1</sup>/<sub>3</sub> years in the Civil Service, cushy job, and then I came over into the politics and I'm the worse thing in the world.

So, you see women have sensitive skin and what we have to do is to put some balm on the skin to toughen our skin up. And at the same time we are balming them we have to educate [women] so that they can articulate well, so they have confidence and can discover themselves and come here.

Madam Speaker, not only here in the political process. The Constitution itself must change so that we embrace more people in the political process. Not necessarily at the national level, but the Constitution should change also so that we embrace people in the districts, that they start from there. They start getting involved in the political process as representatives at the lower echelon of the political ladder, so that they can get experience and work. But this takes some time, Madam Speaker, and I believe that is where we need to . . .

And also, Madam Speaker, the political parties have a part to play in the training of politicians. When you do your research as to how you get involved in the political process you always see where the political parties have extended their arms, put their quotas in or whatever they wanted to do, and to train the women and the young people into the process. Perhaps where we have failed is that we start from the top, and you know only gravediggers start from the top. We need to start digging at the bottom, giving them the key things (being the boys and girls, women and men); the training to be proper political persons. And the same way we do the education process for the economic enfranchisement, we have to do that for the political process.

Madam Speaker, I want to make a point that perhaps in all of this 50 years, in all that I have seen and the involvement that I have been in as a politician, a community person and as a former civil servant, is we women seek to see ourselves as shared developers with other women, and always willing to extend that hand and bring other women along. If you were to ask me—and I am possibly putting my political life on the line here—the negative of a lot of things, I would tell you it is our inability as women to share with women to help them grow and lift them up. And I have witnessed this; I have experienced it.

We should not have to always depend on our male partners to pull us up when we have great role models, good women who can just stretch their hands up. Madam Speaker, the hand is longer than the tongue, and it can lift you higher than the tongue. Of course, they say the strongest weapon on a person is his or her tongue. But, I would wish in this whole shared development with women that the tongue be the wise weapon to grow each other and to form a new humanism of compassion, self discovery, planetary concerns and love of community.

In essence, Madam Speaker, what I am saying is that there has to be a change of perception, with us as women to look at the men and learn from them how they network. They do it very well. I know that and have worked with men who network very well. Their bark is harsh, but their bite is soft, and they can tell each other off in a meeting very nicely and come outside and move and have a drink together, whatever the drink is, or just go and visit somewhere together.

Madam Speaker, that is where we as women must help each other, that it is okay to network but you must also have your responsibilities at home or wherever you have your responsibilities. It is okay to take down time and spend with friends to dialogue and get some good brain teasers. It is okay to talk about politics and it is okay to talk about world affairs; that is good for women. And it is also okay to talk about domestic things, like cooking and plants; it is okay to do those things. But the new 21st Caymanian woman must be all of those things. Must be able to talk about domestic things, find time with friends to talk about what is happening politically, what is happening economically in the world today. And we must decrease the level of being negative about our own kind.

One thing that I have learned, Madam Speaker, in being with my eight male friends and colleagues is how to network, how to be able to have a spirit of camaraderie and build up a team. I really don't have too many issues with them because I can take care of myself. And that is good, Madam Speaker. But it would be nice sometimes to have someone else with . . . I think it was one of our speakers this morning who talked about the issues that women bring to the table. If 50 per cent hold up half of the sky, then women must bring 50 per cent of the issues. And we talked about them this morning. We talked about the whole question of health and education.

I hear whispering by my colleagues to make the world know that they take care of me too, Madam Speaker. Of course, they do. They have no other choice but to do that!

The new women in the 21st Century must pledge to be contributors, not to be victims. And by so doing they must look at HIV AIDS because it is the women, research says, that have the most AIDS. Therefore, we must look at how we are partnering with our partners to ensure that the women themselves decrease the spread of HIV AIDS, Madam Speaker.

The women also must look at their health because they give birth to children. The new 21st woman must be healthy.

The new woman in the 21st Century must increase her financial power by retooling and tooling herself to be more marketable, and in this knowledge-based economy, Madam Speaker, that the Cayman Islands has, the new woman—we have spoken about the woman 50 years ago and what she has done so I'm trying to reach out to the new woman to give some advice. The new woman, as I said, must have economic power; must increase financial literacy and develop great models for saving.

Madam Speaker, the current watershed which the world is going through is the best time for the Cayman Islands to do what we are doing. This is the best time. Because it is looking at the women, empowering them so that we can be more competitive in the global marketplace.

Madam Speaker, we cannot move forward in this modern Cayman if we do not place our women in the prime areas of our development. Madam Speaker, we need to get the girl children and the boy children to understand what has happened here today. I suggest to the Honourable Minister to include extending this to the schools so that the schools can be part of this, either in competitions, in essays, or whatever is right about this period. This is important. Fifty years from now they will have been part of this process. So, I would ask the Honourable Minister if he would be able to do that.

Madam Speaker, everybody in this Cayman Islands will stand to gain from the liberation of our women. You know in your clinics that you have in mind, if I have four people for a day, three of them are women. If anybody calls me for assistance, the majority of them are women. So, it tells me, Madam Speaker, that we have lots of work to do. This is just the beginning of a beginning.

We need to ensure that our women become entrepreneurs, their own businesswoman. We need small businesses, and I would suggest that we find money somehow and make that available, in particular to some of the women I and my colleagues see coming to me. We need to empower them, retool them, reshape them, and retrain them. You can teach them different skills. We can. It is not their fault that they did not get what you and I got and what my colleagues here have. It is not their fault. But life did not go well with some of them. And so, not all the women will be managers. We have a lot of women who need a lot of help, in particular with their children.

And this here is not just about politics, but as someone once said, what is politics but the aggregation of interests. So, we must make the whole process of women development political. It must be and it must be here.

Madam Speaker, as I conclude I would like to see more women in politics. I would like to see more women volunteering and being more into community service. I would like to see more women responsible parents because we must not exclude that. Children did not come as Pallas Athena, who burst forth from her father's forehead. They came from people. And we know that in the Caribbean society the women take a lead in this. So women need to get more with a partnering programme that the Ministry of Health has and [improve] their development skills in terms of helping their children.

We can't talk about women in isolation. We have to talk about people with their children and developing their children. We can't just talk about the political process. We have to talk about the whole question of parenting. We have to have our young women. Mind you, I know that this is a modern world and we want to have our down time and socialise, but we want also to be part of the process in developing our children, and we must develop them well; educate them and give them good value system.

Madam Speaker, my last point is that we want to ensure women help women. This has to be said over and over again: Women must help women. I would say more women go to vote in this country than men. The statistics are there and we see it. If they are really interested in seeing the future of their children and of Cayman being better, then they must involve themselves in the process and ensure if they can't reach that some other woman can reach.

For quite a long time I have not gotten as emotional as I did this morning; perhaps I will try and sit down quickly before a tear does drop out of my eye. I am so proud to know that it is in my time and your time, that we are a part of it; that our hand, our vote today, our change is going to make a difference in the lives of women. We really need to ensure that Caymanian women have no regrets and that young men here . . . almost everyone, barring three, is under 54. Young people! Young! That, young men today can get up and move a motion to make life different and make a change for the Caymanian woman. And, Madam Speaker, I am sure that when the Honourable Minister of Health speaks, he will perhaps talk about what his Ministry is doing and has done to pave the paths for women to walk through to be different.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I certainly support the Motion.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I, too, rise to support this extremely important and meaningful Motion brought by our Honourable Minister for Culture.

I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the lady Member, the Third Elected Member for George Town, who just concluded her debate making an excellent presentation on behalf of all women. I am thankful to her—and I am sure we all are—for her insightfulness in bringing an original motion with the end result being that we are debating here today. While we are extremely busy and productive as a government on a whole we are at all times in support of the programmes that our Ministers bring to this honourable House and otherwise.

We need to also recognise the importance of the Government's accepting ideas and suggestions from their Backbench. Allowing the Third Elected Member for George Town to bring this Motion and accepting it, and not only accepting the Motion as a Government, but following through and having the necessary work at the ministry level to make sure where we are today. I would like to say again, congratulations to the Honourable Minister for following this through and also to his staff at the Ministry.

I happen to know, Madam Speaker, the tremendous amount of work that has gone into bringing this to this point by the Ministry staff and the countless number of volunteers that have engaged in assisting with this so far.

I also have first hand knowledge of what is to come on 26 January [2009], National Heroes Day. Again I say that we need to be mindful that this is a result of the original motion brought in this House by the lady Member, the Third Elected Member for George Town. I know the countless hours that are being put in right now (I was about to say man hours, but I believe that would probably be the wrong thing to say!)

The National Heroes Day celebration that the Minister's Ministry staff and volunteers that have been co-opted are doing a tremendous amount of work. They are putting a wonderful programme together for National Heroes Day and, although the previous celebrations have been well-attended, it is my wish that this one will break the record with a tremendous turnout because it is going to be a wonderful and very meaningful programme.

Madam Speaker, one of the dates mentioned today, while commemorating the 50 years since the decision was taken to give women the right to vote and to hold office, was 8 December 1958. We also talked about the legislation coming into effect on 16 February 1959. Just to say, that those two dates were Mondays. And maybe there is nothing much significant about that, but for me it bears great significance, Madam Speaker, because I consider dates to be extremely important. I believe we need to do what we can to preserve dates as important as these. I think that the month of March is when we consider a particular day for Women's Day. Is that how we refer to it? Women's month is March and I think that a specific day has been established since the early 1900s by the United Nations when we commemorate International Women's Day on a date in March. Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether it is by day or date.

I do believe that these two dates we have been talking about, 8 December 1958 and 16 February 1959, are very important dates in the history of our country. I would simply ask that the Government consider doing something on one of those two days. I do not think it is possible for us to switch what we would consider Women's Day, since that is an international event; but I do believe that some recognition for women and all their achievements should be celebrated on one of those days in the future. That is just my suggestion now, Madam Speaker, so that the day itself is what becomes significant in the future.

Madam Speaker, nation building in this country is something that we talk about all the time. I believe that we all recognise (and do say so a lot of times, but I would like to say so again) that some of the greatest nation builders in this country have always been women. In spite of the many accomplishments of the men in this country, behind the scenes have always been very productive, very capable women who have supported the men on the frontline. Many times they could be solely credited with the accomplishments of many of the men in this country who have gone on to have their names recorded in the history of this country.

Madam Speaker, women have been nation-building ever since time began. They have been the individuals who controlled what happened in the homes; they have been responsible for the education, the upbringing, the discipline of children. As that cycle continues, women are always credited—or should be—with the way that generation after generation they continue to develop, and the good values are passed on.

I am a member of a service organisation in this country. I got involved in this from 1975 when I was but a youngster still in school. It has not been many years since women have been allowed to become members in Lions Clubs throughout the world. But I can say to you, Madam Speaker, that the success of the Grand Cayman Lions Club, in no small way, can be credited to the women behind the scenes. Even before they were members I can tell you that they were doing a tremendous amount of the work. There have been projects taken on by my Club that would not have been touched had it not been for the involvement of wives of the members. And that continues today, although we now accept women in the Lions Club of Grand Cayman.

A lot of those, too, have contributed excellent service-minded individuals who have gone on to be president of our Leo's organisation; many, many good decent young Caymanian women. And I dare say that in our club, while there will be a historic event in the Grand Cayman Lions Club next year, we will see our first female president who is also a past president of the youth organisation Leo's where I started as well.

Women in this country have been trail blazers in tourism, they have been the backbone of our country sitting in classrooms teaching our children, they are the most affluent and hardest working church members, Madam Speaker. So, in every walk of life in this country—and I know others because I think the trend continues everywhere we go—women have been playing an important role and can be credited and recorded as nation builders.

I also want to say, Madam Speaker, how important it is for us to do what was done here this morning to recognise these 358 women who signed that petition which was presented in 1957 and eventually passed in 1958. I think the original 24 who signed the first petition in 1948 . . . we may want to look at that and say that maybe the majority of those were women of affluence and maybe women of means. I think most of them would have been connected to what we would consider well-to-do families.

But the subsequent 358 were not necessarily women of great means. They were ordinary individuals who understood what was happening in the country and had great foresight as to what was to come and believed that they should take their role in helping to make decisions in this country. That is why I say, Madam Speaker, we ought to do whatever we can to record in history and honour them every chance we get—at least annually. These are the things that make great stories and allow us to be able to look back in later years and understand exactly where our little country came from so that our younger generation will understand what their role is and what legacy they need to live up to.

I also encourage women to understand how important it is for them to continue to strive to become leaders, to take up their rightful place in society. I agree wholeheartedly with the comments made by the Third Elected Member for George Town, Madam Speaker, that women who put in a fair day's work alongside males for the same job should get the same pay. There is no reason why we should be discriminating simply because there is a difference in sex. And women need to strive to educate themselves, to prepare themselves to take on these roles and demand that they be recognised for the things that they do.

Some of the individuals who have had the greatest influence on my life have been women. I have spoken inside here already about how I adored my grandmother, the things that she imparted to me; the lessons taught by her and my mother, my aunts and many, many cousins. But there are a lot of women in this society who have had a tremendous impact on my life. I can name a few of them (and while it may be the first time I say so publicly you have been a tremendous influence on me), the third Elected Member for George Town who is here with me. There are individuals like Ms. Joanna Clarke, Mrs. Theoline Wellington, and Mrs. Joyce Hylton was a lady who I had a lot of time for and spent a lot of time with. She was considered the mother of Lions.

As a matter of fact, the Christmas programme that we do now (where we go out and deliver Christmas gifts every Christmas morning) was her idea. She challenged Lions to do that. That programme started with us wrapping gifts on her porch in her house. That was something that went on for almost 20 years where we always went to Mrs. Hylton starting in November. Just about every night we sat there and wrapped gifts because she had the list from the time she worked in the Department of Social Services and she knew all the needy people. That was how that programme originated.

And she would go off to Miami, or wherever she had to go, and shop in November for Lions and come back and tell us when we must come to her house to start wrapping gifts. She sent us out on Christmas mornings to deliver Christmas gifts. The Christmas party that we have at the Lions Centre, Madam Speaker, every Christmas for underprivileged kids, was also a suggestion of hers.

So, women have always been very influential in this society and in my life, and I have a tremendous amount of gratitude for people like Mrs. Joyce Hylton. Another one is Mrs. Vernecia Watler from Gun Bay. And there are quite a few more.

A lot of my heroes, Madam Speaker, are also my age group because there is no reason why the only people you look up to should be older people. There are a lot of people who are around my age group, some may even be younger, that I have a tremendous amount of respect and regard for.

I am grateful for this opportunity. I am grateful to have been a Member of this Legislative Assembly when this historic event took place, Madam Speaker, and I am looking forward to National Heroes Day on 26 January [2009] when we will take this a step further in honouring and recognising the importance of women in this country.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Second Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to make short comments on Government Motion No. 9/08-09 – Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the Passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958.

Before I start my comments, I would like to compliment the Third Elected Member for George Town, not only on her comments that she made earlier, but on the motion that she brought which is one of the reasons we are here today. She must have a great sense of satisfaction as she sits in this honourable House and this morning as she viewed the ceremony. As I look at her now it looks like tears may be coming down her eyes. Congratulations. The second order also deserves congratulations.

I would also like to compliment the Honourable Minister for Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture, for bringing this and his team that made it a reality this morning, in all the hard work that has gone into this.

Madam Speaker, I would like to look at two Resolves. The Members who spoke earlier have done an extremely good job of talking about the other Resolves and how they have been so important to this country. The second to last Resolve talks about, “. . . acknowledge and celebrate the achievements of several women who have served in public office as elected members and/or as Speakers of this House, whose names are now inscribed on a tablet inside the Legislative Assembly Building and who are as follows: . . .”

I have the honour and the pleasure of serving with you, Madam Speaker, and two other MLAs: the Third Elected Member for George Town and the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Madam Speaker, I do not think any of you like to hear as many compliments as are being praised upon your good selves today, but you deserve them because today is your day.

I know, Madam Speaker, that you attended Knox College in Jamaica. I know that you worked extremely hard there and returned home to take a job with the Government of the Cayman Islands. Through diligent hard work you rose to a high position and then you were called upon by the people of your district to be their MLA, and now Speaker of the House of this great country. But for me, Madam Speaker, I have had the pleasure of traveling to a good many places in the world with you, and I believe one of the biggest compliments that can be bestowed upon you is how you are recognised on a global stage, and how, when travelling with you on that global stage, for a young MLA like myself, you share your contacts, knowledge, expertise and networking connections then, introduce us. You are invaluable to the younger Members of this House, and we all thank you for that.

Madam Speaker, I also paid tribute earlier to the Third elected for George Town. But I also believe she is a tremendous success story as well. Schooled in George Town, attended University in the UK, undergraduate degree and then off to Pace University to get her Masters. She came back and worked in a career in Government as a teacher. She was teaching in Cayman Brac and she still has many students there that she goes and visits when she comes over.

She rose to one of the highest positions you can rise to—Principal Secretary, now head of a department. She again offered herself to public service and now serves as the Third Elected Member for George Town. And we can see one of her achievements evidenced here today.

The third name is the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac, my colleague. Ms. Juliana was educated in Cayman Brac and well known for her athletic skills along with being an extremely fine student. She received her undergraduate degree at Saint Leo in the United States and then returned home to take her position as a teacher, but qualified in law at the Cayman Islands Law School. She offered herself to public service as well and not only served as the MLA for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, but also served a period of time as Speaker of this honourable House.

A tremendous success story for all three of you.

Madam Speaker, I believe that what the three of you have brought, along with the others mentioned here, is a role model that the youth of this country can follow. I know from experience in my district when the First Elected Member and I visit schools together, the young people, girls especially, like to spend some time and get first hand information of how there are no boundaries for women in this country, that with hard work and dedication [women] can achieve what [they] would like to achieve.

I compliment all three of you and say it is an honour to be in this honourable House with you.

Madam Speaker, I believe it would be remiss of me if I did not spend a couple of minutes on the final resolve which says, “AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly records its gratitude and pays tribute to the contribution of the women of the Cayman Islands to the social, political and physical development of the country and to its continued progress and prosperity.”

I need to talk about the women, the strength of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, and what they have done so ably to make this country a better place.

Madam Speaker, a lot is said about the Cayman Brackers who seek the opportunity to come to Grand Cayman. I say here today that the reason they come and have success is because of the women of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

We are two Islands, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. In my generation, the men basically sought employment by going to sea. The foundation years, the years when you form your skills to take you through life, the ones that we had with us were our mothers, grandmothers, and aunts. They became the ones who showed us the right things to do and made sure that we attended Sunday School. And usually there was a woman who was a Sunday School teacher.

The women were the nurses, the doctors, school teachers; they were everything in the community that we respected and grew in. They had strength, depth and balance, and they had the secret and the foundation of success that the people of my district and the people of this country have used as a platform to go forward.

Madam Speaker, I always like to tell the story (and as I look in this honourable House there are other Members here who had the same experience) how as young boys or girls as we went down to the shores to watch the ships sail away or we went to the airport to see our father or uncle leave to go back to sea, the fear of what was going to happen after they were gone was rested as we held our mother's hand and she looked down and said, 'It will be okay.' Madam Speaker, that is what the strength of the women of this country has done for each one of us; 'It will be okay.'

I believe that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman have many women to be honoured; many women with that strength and dedication that I speak about. Of course, I cannot stop my contribution without mentioning what Estella Scott Roberts did for this country and what she meant to the community of Cayman Brac itself. And we will forever be obligated to what she did for the women in the country. But as we look down the Island I think about the women who ran businesses like Mrs. Zennie Scott, probably the largest business on the Island, Scott Development.

I look at the rent-a-car business and Ms. Nola Bodden; the restaurant in Spot Bay, Mrs. Meriel Ritch; I look at the Hospital, Yvette Dilbert; I look at the community of Spot Bay with Ms. Ann Walton, past manager of Cayman Brac Power and Light; Mrs. Audrey Ryan, a stalwart in the insurance and real estate; the late Mrs. Sharon Knowlton. Just to mention a few that from east to west formed a foundation of what took place in Cayman Brac.

I could not stand here today, Madam Speaker, and mention all the ones that should be mentioned, and I apologise for the ones that I have not. But, certainly, I think it gives you a feel for the contribution that they have given to us in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Madam Speaker, without doubt we owe great gratitude to our mothers, grandmothers, aunts, friends and the [other] women of this great country. I am honoured here today to support this Motion brought by the Honourable Minister.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise on Government Motion No. 9/08-09—Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the Passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958, brought by the Honourable Minister of Education and Culture.

Madam Speaker, I am indeed proud to be here today to be part of this great day for women in the Cayman Islands, in particular, your good self and the other two Elected Members in the Legislative Assembly at this time. My colleague from the Brac has just outlined the three of you and the great contributions that you have made. I would like to join with him in congratulating your good self, Ms. Juliana, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, and Ms. Lucille, the Third Elected Member for George town, on all that you have promoted and achieved over the years.

You know, Madam Speaker, as I was sitting through the ceremony this morning, it hit me that at the age of 47, just three years before I surfaced, the women of this great country could not vote, could not run for office. It does not seem that long ago, Madam Speaker, and I too can understand what the Minister of Education's young son, Daegan, meant when he asked his dad the question he did in relation to how people could think like that.

Madam Speaker, we have to know where we are coming from, but we can't get bogged down in the past. We certainly have to recognise all that was good and was done, and thank God for those who had the vision at the time to do the right thing. What we have to do now, as current legislators and those who come behind us, is to take it forward another notch and continue to promote and embrace the women of our Islands.

Madam Speaker, I am also very proud today for a couple of other reasons. When I was given the list of the women who had signed the petition for the district of Bodden Town, I remember Ms. Lucille (the third Elected Member for George Town) saying to me sometime back that my mother had been a part of that group because she had been privy to the list ahead of me. Certainly that was a good feeling, and when I looked at the list myself and saw her signature, just as it is 50 years hence, I was quite moved and very proud that she had been a part.

Then, on top of that when I was looking at the list and trying to decide who was alive and who had passed on and who the nearest next of kin were for our celebrations to come, I spotted and I was really taken aback then because I did not realise that my grandmother (who I did not have the privilege of knowing) had actually signed as well. There I recognised her name. And her handwriting was remarkably similar to my mom's actually, but there was Flora Robinson inked. That was another reason to feel really, really proud.

On top of all of that which directly impacts me, Ms. Evie (Ms. Evelyn Wood), as we have heard about a lot today, the first elected woman in Parliament, hailed from the district of Bodden Town as well. So, again I have great reason as a Bodden Town representative to feel extremely proud and, as my friends would say, push my chest out today.

We have a lot of good people who have done a lot of good things, and I am proud to know that I have known many of them in my time. I think back, Madam Speaker, to the women who influenced my upbringing and who played such a pivotal role in the district of Bodden Town and, indeed, in the development of the Cayman Islands. I call names such as Ms. Evie, of course, Sunday School teacher, confidant and mentor; Ms. Pearl Carter, another teacher and Sunday School teacher; Ms. Alma McCoy, another Sunday School teacher; Mrs. Hildred Ebanks; Mrs. Theoline McCoy who, again, was very near and dear to me; Ms. Joanna Clarke who is my old principal and someone that I fear to this day.

In fact, I must pause and give a joke because there was a time when I would not go near Ms. Clarke. After I left Savannah Primary I would see that woman and I would run! It is nothing that she and I had, it is just I had a great fear and respect for that lady. As I got older, I learned to love and really appreciate Ms. Clarke even more. Any time we meet now it is a big hug and always a joke and a little reminiscing.

But this morning she looked at me and said, "Now look, I need to tell you something young man. And I'm not telling you this as Ms. Clarke, I'm telling you this as your old teacher. You need to lose some weight".

And I am here to say I took her quite seriously and I will do my best. But that is the kind of influence we are talking about, Madam Speaker. We have so much to be thankful for.

There are so many others in the district in Bodden Town that I had first hand knowledge of: People like Aunt Dena who was there in the Post Office for I don't know how many years, but eventually, due to ill health . . . And then [there is] Mrs. Petrea Kelly who resigned [within] the last couple of years. Those are all women who held up their end of the bargain in the Cayman Islands and in my district and who, one way or the other, influenced us young men and women growing up around them. These were people of integrity, good character and great values. They were also very astute in everything that they did.

When you go to Breakers, Madam Speaker, and you talk to Ms. Nell, one of my favourite people, Mrs. Nell Connor, you sit and talk to her and she boasts about her 30 plus years working for Government (for very little) doing the post in Breakers. And the one thing that she will tell you and everyone who speaks to her—and I'm sure anyone here who has spoken to Ms. Nell will have heard this—she said "In that 30 plus years every day I balanced to the cent."

That is her favourite thing to say, and the woman is telling the truth! Madam Speaker, that is without any formal education, any formal training.

These are the kind of people that ran the home when their husbands and companions went to sea. They managed. In their own way they were managers because they managed the households, kids and whatever left behind. And they managed the allotments when they came home.

So, Madam Speaker, I am most proud to be able to speak today on this very auspicious day and one that the whole House, the current Assembly, finds great value in and support for. I don't think any of us will be around for the 100th year marking of this great event. But, certainly, this 50th year milestone is a great one. I know the Second Elected Member for West Bay just gave me a funny look and he's a little bit our junior, so he may be. But if I am around then I don't think I will be of much use.

Madam Speaker, as I said, we have to look forward. I like the way that the Third Elected Member for George Town did her presentation on this Motion, because she spoke about the new Caymanian woman, the woman of tomorrow and what those women need to be able to achieve and the support base that they will need to live up to their full potential.

Madam Speaker, yes, we have come 50 years hence; but as has been said before this morning and in some of the earlier debate, we have only had 9 women to grace the halls of this hallowed Assembly. And I am privileged to serve with three of the nine but I certainly would like us to move to where women—if not necessarily sitting here in this House—are playing a more important role, a more pivotal role in the development and the decision making of this country.

Women have a lot to offer, and it is hard to believe that that took so long to be recognised. But anyone who has been around and worked with women will know that they bring a different perspective and many times a welcome perspective to decision making. Men have run the world from day one and I guess some will look back and say we may have messed it up a lot. There are a lot of things that we need women to play an important role in and, certainly, the Legislative Assembly and all of its goings-on and organisations that we need at the district level, national level, is something that we need to embrace.

Madam Speaker, the world has changed. The Cayman Islands, a small part of that world, is changing. We have to continue to do the right thing and support our women as we move forward.

Yesterday, I had the privilege of attending the ICCI (International College of the Cayman Islands) Graduation, the graduating class of 2008. There were 53 graduates. If I am not mistaken I think 48 or 49 of those graduates were female.

Madam Speaker, on the education front, and we see this in our entire school system, we see women excelling over, in many cases, our young men. So, Madam Speaker, the fact that the education base is broadening and women are becoming more educated either at a young age or as they find time to improve later on in life, it means that there is certainly no shortage of skills and qualifications on the female end of the spectrum. So, there is no excuse when then get qualified and then simply sit at home and twiddle their thumbs. We have to make use of these great resources.

Madam Speaker, another thing that was quite touching in that graduation ceremony yesterday at ICCI was the student address that was given by a young lady, Mrs. Illiana Ebanks. She is a married young woman with children. I don't know if it is one or two or whatever, but I know she said that she has kids. She gave that address and spoke about (of course, the fact that she gave the address she was the Valedictorian of the class) the hardship, the many nights away from her husband and children, seven days a week in some cases, all the way from West Bay to Newlands to get an education. So, many times she would go to work in the mornings (I guess) and would not see home again until ten, ten-thirty at night. That's the sacrifice that some of our young women are making.

That young lady now definitely deserves to be recognised and embraced, and her skills utilised. It is no use going through that type of hardship and sacrifice, as I said before, and just letting it go to waste. I'm sure she won't be doing that; she does not give me that impression at all.

There were a lot of older graduates, some young ones, but a lot of older people who have obviously been working. Of course, ICCI is based on the working student mostly. It was good to see that people are taking up the chance to improve their lot in life. I think it bodes well for the future of young women and professional women to show just what they can do.

We are seeing the changing of the guard as it were. We are seeing them take their place in many companies and organisations, even in the political arena; although not to the extent that I am sure we would all like to see.

Madam Speaker, I have been involved and, as the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said, we are members of the Lions Club of Grand Cayman and we were there when it changed for females to enter the Lions Club on an international basis. Again, that is one of those things that was just tradition. There were no females in the Lions Club, it was a man's organisation. It was set up by Melvin Jones in Chicago back in the early 1900s and was set up as a businessman's club purely for men to gather and make decisions and do their charity work and network, and what-not. They did not see any need for women at that time, and it continued that way for all these years. And, boom, back in the late 80s I think it was, someone had the vision that, hey, we need to change with the times. And now I can say that the Lions Club internationally as well as locally is that much stronger for it.

We have our female members are still outnumbered, but they certainly play a pivotal role in our Club's development and work, and they are some of the hardest working members we have right now. As was said, next year we will have our first female Lion President.

Madam Speaker, women just need to be given an opportunity to be embraced and the support base has to be there because you know it is difficult if all the responsibility for the home is left on one person. That person does not really have a lot of time then to play with and get involved in other things. So, we have to have partners that share responsibility; a society that understands the need for women to play another role rather than just a domestic one.

As the Third Elected Member for George Town said, we have to have after-school programmes and pre-school programmes that are affordable and work well to support the family base, and we also have to have the families support each other. It all starts with the family, Madam Speaker. The more affluent Cayman Islands has a lot of helpers and people who work with the family. But in the old days that trickled down the family tree. We had the aunts and grandmothers and the others who gave that support and would allow the person to have some time.

Madam Speaker, we as a country need to be really proud of this day. It is not just for us in the Legislative Assembly to feel proud, it is not just about us here; it is about all of us, women in general. And, Madam Speaker, I too am looking forward to National Heroes Day when we will add further recognition to the role of our women and recognise even more of them on that day next year.

So, I would like to offer my full support for the Motion, which is not one that we are going to go and take some big action from here on, but it is a motion that I am sure hits to the core of all of our being, because we all know, male or female, that we have so much to be thankful for, for the role that the females in this country played in our development, in our being here and certainly will continue to play in the future.

Madam Speaker, I thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for women.

[inaudible interjections and laughter]

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you.

The Speaker: He is the women's officer. That's what the Motion asks for, it did not ask for gender or anything else.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to offer my support for this extremely important Motion moved by my colleague, the Minister for Culture. As was alluded to earlier on, it spun off from my school mate of a few years ago, the Third Elected Member for George Town.

As I listened to her . . . and I must also at this time take my hat off to the Leader of the Opposition. It was most interesting to listen to him as he related the history of women in the Legislative Assembly and also the Speakers. It was touching to see that on something of really, really great importance, the two sides of this Parliament can come together.

Madam Speaker, I come to you as a trail blazer. Over 17 years ago, you and I were freshmen legislators elected to this Parliament by the people. As I have worked with you and have seen your performance and the battles you fought [along] with other legislators at that time—Ms. Berna, Ms. Heather and others—it must be a good feeling for you to see this coming to fruition.

When my Ministry undertook the National Assessment of Living Conditions (NALC), in that assessment one of the things that came through loud and clear is that our elderly women are most affected as far as poverty is concerned. There is a significant amount of information and evidence there. Later on I will be (not necessarily in this Sitting but in due course before this Parliament is finished) tabling that report so that everybody can see what is in there. This has now given us a platform (and governments to come, not necessarily this Government) to look at and show how best to help our people, the women, who have brought these Islands.

Madam Speaker, in those days when the men went to sea, we came from a matriarchal society. I always remember the discipline that the women, our mothers, gave while the men were out to sea. If we look at those people who grew up then compared to what is happening today . . . the discipline, most of the time in a one-parent home with the fathers away. What a difference. We should be wielding that discipline stick [with] the children we now have.

Another area that we have done within the Department of Children and Family Services is to separate it into two sections—one more focused on the elderly and also on children. And I am sure that there will be strategies coming out of that and we will be dealing with that. We are also focusing on the YPP (Young Parenting Programme). We are looking at how best to improve that.

Just about two weeks ago we were able to open (and this is not something to really be proud of but it is a necessity in these Islands) the rehab wing at Caribbean Haven. There are none of us who do not at times fall through the cracks. But we are putting [this] in place for those ladies who need help. We have talked about domestic violence, and the Leader of Government Business and I have met with the committee. The report is in and will be going to Cabinet shortly to see how we can deal with reducing this cancer that seems to be growing amongst us.

I will now move from that and name some of the people who have affected me in my growing up: Mrs. Theoline McCoy (as my colleague from Bodden Town said) taught me at Savannah School. I was with her like he said he was with Ms. Clarke. She would look at you and throw that strap and you knew what that meant. And would to God those days were back here again.

Ms. Gleeda Forbes.

During my time in the Ministry I have worked with two wonderful ladies: Ms. Andrea Bryan, succeeded now by Mrs. Montoya—extremely capable people. Also Mrs. Lizette Yearwood, the Acting CEO at the hospital; a Cayman Bracker I must add, of original roots.

Mrs. Vernice Ebanks, a lady of 92 years plus. I take my hat off to her and the struggles she has been through. She is always positive, always smiling and really a credit to these Islands.

It is amazing how the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and I are on the same page so many times. Mrs. Nell Connor, our cultural and tourism ambassador, when you go there [to her home] you just can't get away quickly. She's always talking and talking to the right people and encouraging visitors and tourists making her handy work.

Needless to say, the Director of Children and Family Services, Mrs. Deana Lookloy, being in that position and seeing so much pain and difficulties. But she is always there willing to assist.

Mrs. Estella Scott Roberts: I don't have to go over that. A young dynamic Caymanian snuffed out so early in her life; a young lady who would have made a tremendous impact on these Islands. Even in her death she led the way.

And Mrs. Olga DaCosta is another person I want to talk about, Madam Speaker. I see her granddaughter here as one of the reporters. I remember as a very young child, playing with one of my brothers. He fell and hit the back of his head. In less than no time he had a humongous swelling and was taken to the doctor who said that nothing could be done. We called Mrs. Olga DaCosta, and she prayed and that is why I believe in the power of prayer—it worked!

Madam Speaker, I cannot say enough about the women of these Islands. We must do what we have to and more to preserve their legacy. May God bless us all!

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the Motion before the House, Government Motion No. 9/08-09, is one that affords all of us as elected Members at present the opportunity to reflect, pay credit to, and honour the sterling contributions of women in our society.

The genesis of the debate, as has already been mentioned, was a Private Member's Motion moved by the Third Elected Member for George Town, who is a lady herself. Naturally, I would like to offer my congratulations on the original motion she brought that was unanimously supported by this House, and also congratulations to the Government for going this route in regard to this issue. It could have just been a ceremony; it could have been just the unveiling of the plaque that is in the Legislative Assembly Building's entrance. But the debate does afford all of us who are presently privileged to serve as our district's elected representatives the distinct honour and privilege to speak to the Motion.

Now, Madam Speaker, in doing a bit of research on the topic, the Cayman Islands in passing the legislation some 50 years [ago] and some two months later having it come into full force, while we lagged behind much of the world it was quite revealing to see the numbers of countries that we actually beat to the punch. I say that to say that even as a small jurisdiction we managed to cause fundamental change before many others that would be considered larger and, perhaps, in some instances, even more sophisticated countries than the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, in looking at the Motion and the information that the Government has circulated thus far, in particular the 358 names and other useful information, like those who served on the select committee that dealt with this most important topic, I hope it is permissible, without us having to get up and read into the record of this House, that all of those names would form part of the official record of this debate.

I believe that many will come behind and perhaps look at this as an important motion. I think it is one that would catch people's attention as they do research of the House. As we become more and more sophisticated, and get more and more information available on the Legislative Assembly's website and that sort of thing, that will be one that people will look at. So, instead of them having to look elsewhere for those critical pieces of information that relate to this topic I think we should ensure that in our official records of this House, that all of those names be recorded in one place.

Madam Speaker, as I looked at the names across the Islands, in particular the names from my district, West Bay, many of them were very recognisable because quite a few are still alive until today. And many of them are people with names all of us in the community of West Bay know about. They were not just people who decided to sign a petition. But a lot of them are, as it were, household names. And so this is simply another pointer as to why some of them became household names because they did recognise that participation in the affairs of one's community is of paramount importance. It is something that is so crucially important because it is all of us working hand in hand, whether we are male or female, that will allow us to build the type of Cayman and the type of future that we believe our children and grandchildren deserve. And it was through their hard work that much of the success we enjoy today has become possible.

Now, Madam Speaker, two points that I would like to speak on for a few brief moments are the political process and the job market as related to women. A number of persons, and, indeed, some of my colleagues who spoke before me, have spoken of the desire to see more women become elected Members. Indeed, I think given the fact that this process did not come into full force until 1959 for us as a community to have our first elected member in 1962 (I think it is probably the first or the second election that it would have been possible after such a momentous paradigm shift), speaks volumes and is a testament to the fact that this community does in fact embrace and accept women holding our higher elected office.

And I think, Madam Speaker, the truth is that while 9 in some 50 years, and 3 of 15 at present, are not the types of numbers that we would have hoped to achieve, I think it was the lady Member (the Third Elected Member for George Town) who made the point that there is work that can be done within our realm, in our sphere, that could make it more feasible and attractive for women to want to take part in the political process by offering themselves as candidates.

But, Madam Speaker, what is ironic (and I think all of us who are here can be testaments of this) is that I do not believe—and I can say definitively from the perspective of the district of West Bay—that we could run a successful election campaign if it were not for the women of our district.

Since I have been involved in politics I know most of us have what is called a campaign district chairman. Our last two have been women. Our current chairman is a young lady. As the Third Member for George Town spoke, I sat there and started to think about this particular young lady and the fact that she has difficulties coming to some meetings because she is a young mother also. Just the fact that nature has caused it for women to also be mothers is indeed a serious issue for us to collectively work together on to try to ensure that we can come up with more creative ways, systems that would make it more feasible and easier for women to take that step.

Indeed, I can think of a number of women from West Bay who could give major consideration as to whether or not they would put themselves up for elected office. It is not the case for everyone. That aspect of life can be handled very differently by everyone. But I can think of a number of people who could wind up being a factor.

Madam Speaker, obviously these things and issues are not going to be cured over night. But certainly if all of us continue to put our minds to the process in how we go about organising ourselves and running political campaigns, I think we can start to come up with ideas, ways and means that will make the entire process more attractive.

Now, Madam Speaker, when it comes to seeking elected office I think all of us would quickly agree that one's sex is not what the majority of people are going to take into account. People will look at the person, the substance of the person and substance of their message, and what they stand for in terms of making that selection.

Madam Speaker, when we look at the number of scholarships in this country and the number of people who are obtaining tertiary education these days, we will see that it is heavily disproportioned towards females. Obviously, having a tertiary education is not a prerequisite to holding elected office; however, I think all of us will agree as we become more and more sophisticated as an island, a country and a community, that we are going to find more and more people who offer themselves up for elected office that the general populace will look more and more favourably at people with that type of background.

That is just natural. If we look at other countries and their political evolution, that is something that has naturally happened. I feel confident in saying that Cayman will also develop along those lines. So, if we are not going to, as I said whether individually, collectively, however we do it, try to ensure that we make the entire political process more attractive to women, then, we would have done ourselves and our country a disservice.

Madam Speaker, one way that comes to my mind immediately is the level of discourse during a political campaign, the way in which people either campaign directly from the platform or on the ground. On the ground, actually, is more important because naturally on the platform when you are on the campaign trail, all of us as Caymanians become more and more sophisticated.

We become much more acutely aware of what will be politically correct and incorrect, therefore that will guide what we say. But all of us will know that, certainly as it relates to the campaign on the ground, it is the more important one because that is where we and our supporters are going into people's homes, into people's yards and airing our yard meetings, campaigning directly to people, which is not accessible to the general public. We all know that that is where a lot of what people would call the dirty politics happens.

All of us should do whatever is in our power to lift the level of campaigning in this country, because that, too, has been something that many women I know—not believe, I know, would make excellent representatives in this country . . . and from what I have observed that is used as the number one reason they are disinterested in being a candidate. Yes, they will still serve on your committee; yes, they will still go and campaign for you; yes, they will be at the meetings and assist. They will do all of those things, but they will quickly say, 'No, I am not offering myself up because I see and hear what you are put through; what your family is put through.' You will often hear them say, 'I am not willing to do that to myself or my children.'

So, on 8 December 2008, some 50 years after the passage of this critically important piece of legislation, I speak to myself and to all of us, and to all those who will be candidates in this upcoming election and future elections: Let us continue the development that this country has seen and try our endeavour best to move the level of campaigning and debate forward and lift it to high standards that will not cause anyone . . . because the truth is, that reason I just gave as to what would happen to you, your name and family, is not exclusive to women. There are many men in the community, as well, who use that as a reason for not running for elected office.

It is the country that is worse off because of that. So, we ought to do our best and play our part in lifting those standards so that we are not causing good citizens, good Caymanians, to shy away from the political process as candidates.

Now, Madam Speaker, I also know that a fair amount of Caymanians listen to the radio and therefore would be listening to this debate. I encourage them, because remember there are only 15 seats in this Legislative Assembly. Let us say that nationally you have, for example, 30 candidates. There are many more supporters and campaigners out there. So I plead with everyone who is involved with the political process to lift the standards.

I pin it initially on the candidates because the truth is that we can demand our supporters and ask of them to lift those standards. Not that everyone is going to comply with everything you say, but we do know that they are there supporting us because they respect us and believe in us. Therefore, if they respect us and believe in us, we have a great chance and probability to influence their behaviour.

Madam Speaker, what was interesting as I looked at the Cabinet Bench, I was thinking who would be the Chief Officer's equivalent in the Ministries/and or Portfolios. From my count of the eight there are some five of the eight that are occupied by women. So, if we look at that and at the various government-owned companies, statutory authorities, we will see that many women have risen to the top of their professions and areas of responsibility within government and the private sector in Cayman. The women in Cayman have done a fantastic job at seizing all of the opportunities that have flowed to this country.

One area that I do believe is lacking and in need of some work is the labour sector of our community in trying to assist as much as possible with the whole notion of allowing women, or making it easier for women, as many other countries have, to participate in the job market at varying levels. Not of responsibility, but just from a time perspective allowing them to also do some other very important things that a lot of women truly want to do, which is to be at home more and spend more time with their families.

I know from personal experience that the job market in Cayman is certainly still very immature in that respect compared to countries like the United States. Employers in that country are only too happy to accommodate women in much more part-time roles and flexi-time roles.

Madam Speaker, I believe that is going to be one of those next phases of our evolution as a modern jurisdiction, because while we do have a lot of companies involved with very modern and cutting edge sectors, especially when it comes to global finance and tourism, there still is that natural resistance to allow for and accommodate women when they make a choice and say, 'We would like to be able to work, for example, from 9 in the morning until 2.30 in the afternoon . . .' so as to be able to drop their children to school and be there to collect them afterwards. And, Madam Speaker, I do not say that as a criticism.

Moment of Interruption

The Speaker: Honourable Member, if you would allow me, it is the hour of interruption and it is my understanding we will continue until we close the debate on this Motion.

Honourable Leader of Government Business I will entertain a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 10(2) to go beyond the hour of 4.30.

Honourable Minister of Education.

Suspension of Standing Order 10(2)

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion to suspend the relevant Standing Order to allow business to continue in the Legislative Assembly beyond the hour of interruption.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 10 (2) be suspended in order to conclude the debate on Government Motion No. 9/08-09. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 10(2) suspended to allow business to continue beyond the hour of interruption until the conclusion of debate on Government Motion No. 9/08-09.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay continuing his debate.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, as I was saying, I will be thrilled to see the employment sector—and I am not just talking about the private sector, I am talking about Government as well—doing a much better job in allowing women to participate in the job market and be able to contribute.

I am reminded . . . because the whole issue of how certain things like politics and other professions have been male-dominated is something that I have become much more acutely aware of since being out of university.

I can remember at a firm that I am familiar with, a case in the 80s where a female staff member sued the firm because she had been passed over for partnership for a number of years, and the Court ruled in her favour. Not only did they rule in her favour, but they ordered the firm to compensate her for the years that she should have been a partner there. That was in the late 80s.

Madam Speaker, by the time I was in New York (one short decade later) in 1997, I read with joy in my heart about partnership announcements by the same firm. One of the newly admitted partners was on maternity leave at the time.

I say that to say, Madam Speaker, that this issue that we are looking at revolves around the whole issue of the ability to vote and run for election. But we ought not to turn a blind eye to the fact that there are still many professions around the world, many of which are obviously in Cayman, which systematically disadvantage and disenfranchise women. Because the power-brokers are male they naturally tend to promote and admit as partners in some instances, those of the same sex.

The other thing that happens which relates to the issue I was just speaking of, is that of employers making it easier for women to work, especially when a woman decides that she wants to spend more time with her family. A lot of employers do not make those accommodations and because they do not, they then cause a woman to have to choose: Do I spend more time with my family and give my kids all that I have and give them the best opportunity to have a productive life? Or do I choose my career?

Because of the lack of accommodation to that whole concept, a lot of women choose to stay with their children. Obviously, these days you get more and more dual professional couples, that is, the wife being a professional and the husband being a professional. And so in a lot of those instances the family can survive with the father being the professional and becoming the sole provider.

Madam Speaker, I believe, however, that the system should not cause women to have to make those types of choices. If a woman wants to be a full-time at home mom, it should be a decision she makes without any other considerations. But because, in a lot of instances, employers are still relatively unsophisticated and do not provide the type of opportunity in terms of flexi-hours that a lot of women would desire, they are then forced to make a choice.

I am hopeful that as we continue to mature as a small country that more and more employers will make those types of accommodations. And the truth is, Madam Speaker—I do not want to be seen as throwing any sort of aspersions at employers generally—but the truth is, because of our size as a jurisdiction, there are some real issues about an employer, a company or an entity, rather, at a certain size having the capacity to be able to make those sorts of accommodations.

In other words, Madam Speaker, it is much easier if you are an employer of 50 people to make that accommodation than if you are an employer of 5 people. That is obvious. If your entity alone has 5 people, all of a sudden it really comes down to what are the number of hours that you absolutely need as a minimum for the entity to be a feasible entity from a financial perspective. As we know, for an entity to have its doors open it has to make a profit.

Madam Speaker, I would like to end by saying that certainly God has included in my life a lot of women who have had a tremendous impact on me. I too was a child of the seaman era. And even though my father came home when I was relatively young, most of my siblings were already in their teens. In those early years it was my mother, grandmother, aunts, and the love of neighbours.

I am now in a relatively new phase of life. I have become a father. God has once again caused me . . . even though I come from that age group that sees everyone having equal worth and value, but certainly having a household of five, four of which are female, causes me to really look at life very differently and I would lie if I did not say that.

Every night when I go home there's a wife and three daughters. And being blessed and honoured to have been elected by the people of West Bay, I appreciate at a depth that perhaps I could not if my life were different to the very essence of trying to build and work toward a society that really tears down all barriers as it relates to women.

When I look at my three daughters, I shudder at the thought that they would be disadvantaged in any way. Of course, a lot of my shaping was moulded during my earlier years from my mother and grandmother. And then, after getting married, and being fortunate enough to be married to a professional woman, you see some of her dreams and aspirations not able to be met simply because the labour market does not accommodate a professional woman who does not want helpers to raise her children, who really wants to be there; who really wants to participate as fully as she can in the lives of her children.

Madam Speaker, the ceremony this morning . . . this debate is one that does cause us to have to reflect. But it ought to be one that forces us to act and behave differently. If after today with this coming and facing us squarely head-on we do not recognise that there is something we can do as elected Members to make the political process more attractive to women, then there cannot be a heart that beats in us. There cannot be.

I join with the Third Elected Member for George Town when she alludes to the fact that women too (women who do not have any aspirations or desires) look at women who do and offer themselves. I am not suggesting that anyone vote for anyone because they are male or female, but give them a chance; give them every opportunity and every consideration as you do men who stand for office.

We males who are here, if we are not married we have been married at some point and we recognise that a woman's perspective is completely different from a male's. So, participation by women's voices at this level is of crucial importance to our continued development and ability to build the strongest society that we can build.

Madam Speaker, congratulations to you, to the Third Elected Member for George Town, and to the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, for being the elected women in this Chamber at this time. Having gone through the process now twice, and knowing all that is involved with the process of offering yourselves and winning an election as peers, I congratulate you for having that type of confidence, taking that type of stand and offering yourselves to your particular and respective districts.

To all those who are named in the Motion and who are still alive, I offer my sincere congratulations and gratitude, because all of them, irrespective of how long or short their political life was, made a difference in these Islands just by standing up and offering themselves.

So, Madam Speaker, again, I just want to offer congratulations to the Third Elected Member for George Town and to the Government for bringing this Government Motion at this particular time, and I thank all of our constituents because you have afforded us to speak on your behalf and I hope that everything we have said and everything that will be said here today in this Chamber pleases the people who put us here, because they too recognise the significance.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover of the Motion wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Minister for Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, it has been a privilege to sit today and listen to the various contributions of Members from both sides of this House in what is perhaps a far too rare show of complete unanimity on a matter as important as this.

I have been moved by some of the personal recollections and observations from various Members on both sides of this House. It has indeed been a time of great reflection for all of us to note where we have come from and how far we have come in this time.

Madam Speaker, I should say that the ceremony we held this morning has clearly resonated. Already my Ministry is receiving e-mails from various persons asking for copies of the speeches—in particular, the one that you delivered, Madam Speaker.

And school children: I had an observation of some of the children from John A. Cumber in West Bay who just could not believe that there could have ever been a time when women did not have the right to vote and stand for election.

Madam Speaker, we are going to keep a very careful record of these various submissions as they come in, and I shall pursue, as the Third Elected Member for George Town has asked me to . . . I will encourage the Department of Education Services to investigate the possibility of the various schools doing some project, something to let them further research what life in Cayman was like for women in times past, to, themselves, come to appreciate and understand the importance of this particular day and what this has meant to their prospects of being able to exploit the tremendous opportunities that a place like the Cayman Islands affords.

Madam Speaker, I do believe it was perhaps as much as two years ago that you and I first had our initial discussions about the need to observe this particular day and the importance of what transpired 50 years ago today. And so, I am grateful to you as I am to my other colleagues who have framed the occasion today and the way we have managed that.

I listened to the Fourth Elected Member for George Town and his observations that we ought to give more pre-eminence to Women's Day (as I think it is known internationally), which is sometime in March. And I say to him that whatever support, direction and guidance my Ministry can offer in that regard I am happy to do and support.

But in the year ahead, as I have indicated, it is the Government's declared intention to dedicate National Heroes Day, 26 January, to the struggles, achievements and aspirations of women generally in this community. And while that ceremony will certainly focus on the brave and courageous efforts of the 358 women who signed the petition and the 24 before them who signed the original letter in 1948 to the then Commissioner, the celebration is to have a broader basis—which is about celebrating women and women's achievements (as I said, and aspirations, as well as the struggles), and to seek to make that day and the events of that day relevant to the women of today, in particular, the younger females, the girls of this community so that they see this day and celebration as not just something about our legacy or the legacy that has been left for them, but they also come to appreciate the tremendous opportunities that those events, those struggles and those achievements have had, and what that allows them to do as girls and women in this community now and for years to come.

And so, Madam Speaker, having listened to all that has been said, I can only thank Members on both sides of the House for supporting the Motion and thank the community, particularly those who came out this morning to recognise the achievements of the women who have stood for public office, have been elected to public office in this country, and the Speakers of the House as well.

I say again that it is an honour and privilege for me to be living at this time to hold this office at this time and to have been able to spearhead what I believe is a critically important recognition of women in this community.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Legislative Assembly does acknowledge and record the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Sex disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958 and its seminal role in according equal rights to women by permitting them to exercise any public function, including the right to vote, and to be entitled to hold any civil or judicial office or post and to enter into or assume any civil profession or vocation in the Cayman Islands.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958 the Legislative Assembly does acknowledge and celebrate the achievements of the several women who serve or have served in public office as elected members and/or as Speakers of this House, whose names are not inscribed on a tablet inside the Legislative Assembly Building and who are as follows:

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Government No. 9/08-09 is duly passed.

Agreed: Government Motion No. 9/08-09 passed.

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Just before I move the adjournment, with your permission I would like to advise all Members that the Strategic Policy Statement will be tabled on Wednesday morning, and at that time contributions will be delivered by the Honourable Third Official Member and by me. At the conclusion of that we will then continue the business of the House.

Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this honourable Legislative Assembly until 10 am
Wednesday, 10 December 2008.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10 am Wednesday, 10

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
WEDNESDAY
10 DECEMBER 2008
10.10 am
Third Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

Lord, you know we love you. And we know you love us. Help us to hold fast to that which is good.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings resumed at 10.12 am

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman who has urgent constituency matters relating to Hurricane Paloma.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

Strategic Policy Statement of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ending
30 June 2010

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business, the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of District Administration, Planning, Agriculture and Housing.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Strategic Policy Statement of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ending 30 June 2010.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, when I move the Government Motion I will. Thank you.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

Suspension of Standing Order 24(5)

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I move the suspension of Standing Order 24(5) in order for a Government Motion to be heard this morning.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 24(5) be suspended. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed. Standing Order 24(5) suspended.

Government Motion No. 10/08-09—Approval of the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business, the Minister responsible for the Ministry of District Administration, Planning, Agriculture and Housing.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I beg to move Government Motion No. 10/08-09, entitled, the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year. And with your permission I will read the Motion.

WHEREAS Section 23(1) of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision) states that a strategic policy statement for the next financial year shall be presented to the Legislative Assembly by a member of the Governor in Cabinet appointed by the Governor in Cabinet to do so on their behalf for approval within two months, and if the Legislative Assembly has not within that period resolved to approve, amend or reject the statement it shall be deemed to be approved;

AND WHEREAS the Government has now prepared and presented a strategic policy statement for the 2009/10 financial year;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly approves the policy priorities, aggregate financial targets and financial allocations set out in the 2009/10 Strategic Policy Statement as the indicative parameters on which the 2009/10 Budget is to be formulated.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, around this time every year, Government is required by law to fulfill an important obligation to this honourable House. It is required to submit, for the consideration and approval of honourable Members, a broad outline of the strategic parameters that will inform the preparation of the budget for the upcoming fiscal year. In this instance, we are referring to the 2009-2010 fiscal year beginning July 1, 2009.

And so, in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Public Management and Finance Law as revised in 2005, I present for the consideration and approval of this honourable House, the Government's 2009-2010 Strategic Policy Statement (otherwise known as the SPS).

As is usually the case, the SPS does not allocate resources to individual expenditure items. Neither does it specify particular initiatives which Government intends to pursue. All of these details will be provided when the Annual Plan and Estimates are presented on Budget Day 2009.

THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT

Madam Speaker, this presentation of the 2009-2010 SPS takes place against the backdrop of a worrying downturn in the global economy. So deep and complex is the crisis that some experts are saying the world is facing a situation almost similar to the Great Depression of the 1930s. Several leading economies, most notably the United States, Japan, Germany and Canada, have already slipped into recession. In fact, it was recently acknowledged that the US economy was in recession for almost a year. Other economies, including the United Kingdom, appear to be tottering on the brink. Big or small, developed or developing, just about every country is being adversely affected in some way by the present global slowdown.

Amidst this unfolding global scenario, a few million workers have already lost jobs and the numbers are expected to rise even further as companies continue to shed staff in response to falling demand for their products and services.

To give a general picture of the worsening unemployment situation worldwide, the International Labour Organization—the ILO—is forecasting that the number of persons out of work will reach 210 million by late 2009. This figure represents an increase of 20 million from just a year ago.

Global financial markets are in turmoil. This was triggered in large part by a worsening of the sub-prime mortgage crisis in the United States during the past year. Thousands of hapless American homeowners have become casualties of the crisis, Madam Speaker, hundreds of thousands as a result of losing their properties through foreclosure after defaulting on loans.

The sub-prime mortgage crisis has contributed significantly to instability in the banking industry. Major institutions, not only in the USA but also elsewhere, found themselves overexposed in the collapsed US housing market and suffered dire consequences. Lehman Brothers, a leading US-based international banker, collapsed after Government turned down its appeal for a bail-out. It has been the biggest banking casualty so far.

The collapse of Lehman Brothers only aggravated the crisis in the financial markets, forcing the Bush administration to rethink its initial opposition to bailouts. Subsequently, other leading financial institutions, including the AIG Group and Citibank, have received a lifeline from government that has enabled them to remain afloat. As a result of these developments, credit has become particularly hard to obtain, not only for businesses or governments looking to raise capital but also for individuals for their routine spending purposes.

Even as I speak, the US Congress is getting ready to vote on a US$15 billion bail-out for the country's three largest automobile manufacturers—General Motors, Ford and Chrysler. The three were asking for a US$34 billion rescue package to ease pressure off the industry amid plunging vehicle sales linked to the slowdown in the global economy.

The credit crunch has contributed to a noticeable fall-off in consumer spending, especially in the United States, the world's leading consumer market. The one per cent decline in consumer spending recorded in October, was the biggest in the US since 2001. These days, global stock markets are volatile and share prices are on a downward trend. Overall, the global economic environment is characterised by much uncertainty. Generally speaking, it seems as if the world is pinning considerable hope on the policy direction of the incoming administration of US President-elect Barack Obama who takes office next month.

In the meantime, investors are understandably cautious about taking risks in new ventures. This resulting slowdown in investment is compounding the slowdown in global economic activity. The link is quite obvious because in market-driven economies, the private sector is assigned the key role of 'engine of growth'. The immediate outlook is for these trends to continue, certainly into 2009, and perhaps for a year or even two beyond.

In recent weeks, it seems the only bright spot on an otherwise gloomy horizon has been a welcome decline in oil prices. After soaring steadily over the past year, oil prices reached an all-time high of nearly US$150 a barrel around the middle of the year. Then, in a dramatic reversal, they plunged gradually over the past five months to reach US$40 by last Friday, their lowest level in four years. It is estimated that crude oil prices have dropped by an average of a dollar a day in the last three months.

The dramatic surge in oil prices, coupled with a steep rise in commodity prices especially for certain food staples, only added to the pressure on most economies in the last year. Needless to say, consumers were hit hard in their pockets. It meant having to fork out more money to eat and to travel. Adding to the pressure was the fact that incomes were either stagnating or declining in real terms as a result of rising inflation. High oil prices drove production costs up which, in turn, pushed up the prices of most manufactured goods and services to consumers.

Government has been mindful of the financial pressure which the combination of rising food and oil prices has placed on consumers in the Cayman Islands over the past year. The Cayman Islands import virtually everything that we consume and thus, despite our best efforts, the problem has proved to be a really tough nut to crack. In the case of food, there was very little further government intervention could do to ease prices as most food items already enter the country duty free. However, as you are aware, Madam Speaker, we have done something which is now finally bringing down electricity prices.

Under the new agreement which the Government has negotiated with the Caribbean Utilities Company (CUC) and which took effect earlier this year, consumers were to benefit from an average 15 per cent reduction on their electricity bills. However, as the agreement was taking effect, oil prices unexpectedly shot up by around 30 per cent, effectively negating the price reduction which consumers were to start receiving.

Madam Speaker, that is the simple truth of the matter; it is not that the agreement with CUC is a bad one, as some persons would like us all to believe. No one could have anticipated when the agreement was being negotiated that oil prices would have subsequently soared to the levels that they did. However, the good news is that now that prices have fallen—and are continuing to fall, consumers are finally starting to reap the benefits of the agreement with CUC.

In fact, CUC has announced that customers will see a reduction on their bills for November—a further reduction that is. This is a direct result of a drop in the fuel charge, a consequence of falling oil prices on the world market. This situation is expected to improve even further over the coming months. For instance, for January 2009 bills which will reflect November 2008 fuel costs, small residential consumers will pay approximately $105 for monthly consumption of 500 kWh compared to $176 paid last September at peak fuel prices. This represents a 40 per cent reduction in their bill.

Medium residential customers who paid $348 for 1000 kWh last September will pay $205 in January for the same level of consumption, a 41 per cent reduction. And for the large residential consumer of 1800 kWh who paid $637 in September, that bill will also fall by 40 per cent to $380, a reduction of over $250 on a monthly basis.

As a result of the new agreement with CUC which took effect in January 2008, consumers can look forward to paying a January 2009 electricity bill that will be lower in real terms than was the case in 2005. This is a direct result of the rate reduction by CUC, the fuel duty rebate by the Cayman Islands Government, along with the falling fuel prices on the world market.

The outlook for fuel prices for the remainder of 2009 is also positive based on the projections of the Energy Information Administration. This is the official energy statistic source for the US Government and its outlook is for crude oil prices to average $51 per barrel in 2009 compared to $100 in 2008. Oil is a major component in the generation of electricity in the Cay-man Islands. It is inevitable therefore that the price of oil on the world market will directly influence the price of electricity paid by the consumer here in the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, this Government also took a number of actions to ease the pressure off motorists at the pump. To be specific, we required gas stations to start prominently displaying their prices to give motorists an opportunity to make informed comparisons and to decide where it is cheapest to buy. This has had the positive effect of evening out the price of fuel across stations at the lower end of the price spectrum. We also required distributors to justify any proposed price increases and seek approval of the Chief Petroleum Inspector before implementation. These actions have contributed in some way to bringing down prices at the pump.

We are going another step further. Under new regulations coming into effect shortly, distributors of petroleum product will also be required to justify any planned price increases for propane or cooking gas along with the gasoline and diesel. Before they can introduce the proposed increases, it must be approved by the Chief Petroleum Inspector. Madam Speaker, the evidence is there and it is irrefutable. This Government has been looking out for the interests of the consumer.

Within recent weeks, a clear consensus seems to be emerging among policymakers on the most effective way to counteract the global economic slowdown. From a policy perspective, it is being proposed that governments must take the lead through fiscal stimulus packages and pump much-needed cash into flagging domestic economies through a combination of tax breaks and capital projects. This approach is quite similar to what happened in response to the Great Depression of the 1930s when the world embraced the formula put forward by the eminent British economist, John Maynard Keynes.

At the recent summit of the G20 nations in Washington, it was agreed that fiscal policy must be emphasized in shoring up faltering economies. In subsequent remarks, the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), Mr. Dominique Strauss-Khan, endorsed this approach. Some governments have already started moving in this direction.

For example, the incoming US administration of President-elect Barack Obama has announced plans to spend billions of dollars on modernizing key infrastructure — bridges, highways, schools, et cetera. President-elect Obama's proposed stimulus package also includes tax breaks for the average American— the man and woman on Main Street, as he describes them.

The Government of China too is taking a similar route. It has announced plans to spend US$560 billion to boost economic growth which has been stymied by falling demand for its exports.

And just three weeks ago, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Alistair Darling, unveiled a stimulus package worth 20 billion pounds. Its objective is to stimulate declining consumer spending and help cushion the impact of a deep recession which is expected to hit the United Kingdom in the New Year.

THE DOMESTIC CONTEXT

Madam Speaker, I have provided this brief overview of the prevailing global environment to clearly illustrate the challenging context in which Government has to pursue its economic objectives for the Cayman Islands over the coming year. Now, some persons may ask: "What has all of this got to do with us? Where is the connection?" Such questions would not take us entirely by surprise. There are certain persons, some in positions of influence and who should really know better, who would have Caymanians believe that we are islands unto ourselves, cut off from the world. The conclusion to be drawn from this flawed line of reasoning is that we are pretty much insulated from the external environment, and do not have to be really concerned with what is happening in the rest of the world.

Madam Speaker, persons who espouse such a misleading view are not only engaging in intellectual dishonesty but are also doing a great disservice to the noble cause of public education and enlightenment. A reality of living and doing business in the globalized world of today is the increasing level of interdependence among countries and economies.

Needless to say, the fortunes of the Cayman Islands are inextricably linked to the fortunes of the global economy. Therefore, what happens on the international scene does matter to us. Through tourism and financial services, the two pillars of our economy, the Cayman Islands are fully integrated into the global economy.

When the global economy is doing well, we are presented with opportunities to reap significant benefits. As the evidence shows, this is precisely what happened during the past decade when our economy recorded phenomenal growth and prosperity in the country increased. Unfortunately, when things are going badly with the global economy, we inevitably will experience some fall-out. However, we can determine to some extent how much of the fall-out we will experience based on how we respond.

We are basically faced with two choices. We can behave as helpless victims of the circumstances, hopelessly throw our hands up in the air, and do nothing else. Or we can take bold and decisive action to minimize the impact of any fall-out. Madam Speaker, this Government has opted for the latter approach and it will be reflected in the 2009-2010 Budget. We are trying in everything we do to be proactive in dealing with this global crisis.

We intend to keep a close eye on developments and, as the situation warrants, we will take appropriate action not only to address challenges head-on, but also to seize any opportunities which may arise and from which we can derive benefit. Because we may not come out publicly and discuss every single detail of what we are doing, it does not mean Government is not working assiduously in looking out for our national interests.

I wish to emphasize this point because it is pretty obvious that attempts are on to discredit this Government through an aggressive campaign of disinformation and deception. As a government which has publicly committed itself to being transparent and accountable, we are not averse to being criticized. We welcome criticism as long as it is constructive. Indeed, Madam Speaker, constructive criticism can serve as a catalyst to finding effective solutions. As a government, we do not claim to have all the answers.

If our country is to grow and mature, and our people truly empowered through the acquisition of knowledge to tackle the various challenges of life with confidence, we must have more wholesome public debate, especially via the media and Public debate which highlights not only the problems, but which seeks, more importantly, to encourage outside-the-box thinking to come up with innovative solutions. In this way, our country and our people will benefit.

Despite the enormous challenges we face arising from the global crisis, the overriding goal remains the same for this PPM Government over the coming year. As we have repeatedly made clear since our election to office back in 2005, we are committed to improving the overall quality of life for Caymanians and residents of our three beautiful islands—Grand Cayman, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Every policy, every project, every initiative of this government over the past three and a half years, was undertaken in support of this goal. Be it improving and expanding the road network to ease traffic congestion, building new schools and upgrading the curriculum to better equip our young citizens for the increasingly competitive world of work, increasing opportunities for home ownership, or improving the health sector and expanding the range of services available to our citizens. And, Madam Speaker, I might add that we also have special interests and pay special attention to our elderly.

These are just a few examples. There are so many other achievements of this Government that I can point to. Madam Speaker, any fair evaluation of this Government's performance will show that we have made significant headway in advancing our goal of making life in the Cayman Islands better. Now, in light of the challenges arising from the global crisis, a primary objective of Government's policy over the next year must be to safeguard these gains to prevent any erosion of our quality of life.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

According to the most recent forecasts by the Government's Economic and Statistics Office (ESO), it seems the global downturn will have its greatest effect on the Cayman Islands economy during the current fiscal year. Taking this expectation into account, the ESO is forecasting that the Gross Domestic Product (GDP) will grow marginally by 1.2 per cent in this fiscal year, down from 1.9 per cent in 2007-08. GDP reflects the total output of goods and services by a country within a specified period. It is the most commonly-used yardstick for measuring an economy's performance.

Madam Speaker, when you consider that the GDP of many countries are in decline because of recession, 1.2 per cent growth for the Cayman Islands in the present trying circumstances is not so bad after all. It is a laudable achievement because it shows that we are managing to weather the storm and to keep our heads above the choppy waters. That the economy is still growing, albeit at a slower rate, supports what we have been saying all along. Namely, that the fundamentals of our economy remain strong, despite the U.S. economy being in recession and other external challenges.

Looking to the next two years, the latest ESO forecasts give cause for guarded optimism. During the up-coming 2009-2010 fiscal year, the economy is forecast to start showing signs of a rebound and it is expected to grow slightly faster at 1.7 per cent. It is projected to pick up some momentum during the following financial year—that is, 2010-2011—when a much higher growth of 2.5 per cent is anticipated.

These forecasts by the ESO are based on three key assumptions: firstly, an acknowledgement that the global slowdown will have some impact on key local sectors; secondly, that the local credit market will remain resilient, and thirdly, that consumer confidence will remain stable.

As you can appreciate, Madam Speaker, no one can predict the future with 100 per cent accuracy. Hence, it is important to point out that these forecasts can change depending on how the international situation evolves especially over the next year.

However, I wish to emphasize the importance of this country staying on the present course. Changing course is too fraught with uncertainty and risk. It is akin to gambling with the future. What the Cayman Islands need now more than ever is to have all hands on deck and united around a common goal. With a clear eye, a cool head, and a steady hand on the wheel, I have every confidence we will pull through.

Since taking office in 2005 under the most trying circumstances left by Hurricane Ivan the previous year, the government has proved it can competently manage the economy. Under the watch of the PPM government, the economy grew by 6.5 per cent in 2005. The following year, it grew by a further 4.6 per cent before slowing to 1.9 per cent in 2007, when the initial winds of the present global storm started to be felt.

In contrast, under the previous UDP government, the economy grew by a mere 2 per cent in 2003 when conditions for growth were far more favourable. The figure slipped to 0.9 per cent in 2004. If our critics wish to be taken seriously, then they need to spell out clearly how they propose to do better than we have done. And I do not mean empty rhetoric that sounds impressive to the ear but offers little of substance when it comes to implementation. I mean specific, concrete proposals that can be subjected to the most rigorous scrutiny.

Madam Speaker, as I have said before, the international crisis poses a direct threat to our economy through the tourism and financial services sectors which both rely heavily on the global economy for most of their business. However, available evidence suggests that despite being under some stress, both sectors are holding their own. Naturally, we are hoping and praying that this trend will not only continue but also improve. And we are taking a number of important measures to enhance Cayman's offerings and environment to bolster these key industries.

TOURISM

When we look at tourism, with the approach of the peak winter tourist season, available information indicates that bookings on the whole are going reasonably well. Generally speaking, our hotels are saying that they expect at least to do as well this winter as they did last year. This should be seen as encouraging news when you consider that some Caribbean tourism destinations are struggling as we speak. So much so that some hotels in the region have alluded to the possibility of lay-offs if a pick-up in business does not occur anytime soon.

What seems to be working to our advantage, Madam Speaker, is the fact that our tourism product essentially caters to the upper end of the market. This category of visitor appears to be less vulnerable to the impact of an economic slowdown as customers in other segments of the market, especially the mass segment. As a result, persons at the upper end of the market are less likely to forego taking an annual overseas vacation just because their country's economy happens to be in recession. Had the fortunes of our tourism been tied to the mass market, the picture most likely would have been quite different.

Another factor which is working in Cayman's favour is this Government's strategic decision to increase airlift out of the key North American market for this winter season at a time when several Caribbean destinations are actually facing a decline, a very serious decline in some instances, in airlift.

And, Madam Speaker, let me just interject here that the Honourable Minister of Tourism advised us in Cabinet yesterday that because of the increased airlift on the North American continent, that hoteliers have reported an increase of approximately 1,000 room nights in bookings already for this season. So, certainly, that strategy is assisting tremendously.

Thanks to the recent launch of new flights by our national airline, Cayman Airways, following an expansion and upgrade of its fleet, we now have access to two additional U.S. gateways—Chicago and Washington, D.C. This was a conscious policy decision of Government to boost market opportunities for our tourism during these challenging times. Writing recently in the Cayman Islands Journal, the Executive Director of the Cayman Islands Tourism Association noted that these new services will not only “stimulate the market for potential visitors” but will also create “a potential for new business”. Madam Speaker, all indications are that we are seeing positive results already.

Despite these positives, we cannot afford to be complacent. We have to redouble our efforts to ensure that the Cayman Islands remain a destination of choice in the market niche where we are competing. We have to keep looking at how we can enhance the overall visitor experience so that our customers have the satisfaction of knowing that they are getting excellent value for their money whenever they choose to visit the Cayman Islands.

So much for the land-based segment of our tourism industry: The cruise segment, on the other hand, is going through a challenging period. Some of it is related to the global situation. However, there is another dimension and it stems from an apparently growing perception in the marketplace that the Caribbean is becoming a stale destination.

While we are pursuing various initiatives, such as providing better berthing facilities, to enhance the attractiveness of the Cayman Islands as a cruise destination, we believe that a solution to the perception problem has to be found through a regional approach. And I know that the Minister is seeking to arrange or to participate in just that approach.

There are some persons who play down the importance of the cruise ship visitor vis-à-vis the stay-over visitor. However, as government sees it, both visitors are important. They contribute in different ways to our economy. Our duty free shops, bars, restaurants, taxis, and other attractions, derive significant business from the cruise sector.

More importantly, the cruise passenger is a potential stay over visitor for the future. If a cruise passenger is impressed by his or her experience during the brief stay, the temptation is there to come back for a longer stay. It is therefore our business to ensure that this conversion takes place.

I wish to applaud our various local tourism stakeholders for the generally pro-active approach they have taken in response to dealing with these challenging times. As a result, we have effective strategies in place today to support the viability of the Cayman Islands as a leading holiday destination during this difficult period.

Last January, in response to clear signs that the global economy was heading for a nosedive, the Ministry of Tourism convened a strategic meeting of tourism stakeholders for the purpose of reviewing and revising the destination's marketing and sales strategies. Particular attention was paid to the United States as it is, and has been, our leading market.

Participants at this strategic meeting included the Department of Tourism's staff; the agencies responsible for sales promotions, public relations, media buying and advertising; Cayman Airways; local attractions; hoteliers; and representatives from the Cayman Islands Tourism Association and the Sister Islands Tourism Association.

As a result, new plans were developed to suppress the extent to which US recessionary forces would impact upon the Cayman Islands' tourism sector. These plans honed in on our target demographics with household incomes ranging between $100,000 to $300,000, depending on seasonality. They also relentlessly pursued key markets comprising families, dive, romance, and special events.

After successfully increasing our marketing presence in the United Kingdom over the past two years—a decision that has resulted in some 6.7 per cent growth year to date—the Department of Tourism (DoT) established a dedicated office in Canada this year to increase our sales presence there as well. For 2009, the DoT will continue to research viable opportunities to diversify our source markets for air arrivals by exploring other viable secondary markets whose economic prospects remain strong. Their ability to conveniently access the destination must also be relatively high.

Overall, year to date, the tourism industry is up 8 per cent for the 10-month period of January through October 2008. (That is 8 per cent, compared to last year's figures). This is well ahead of predictions of only 2 per cent annual growth in global tourism this year by the United Nations World Tourism Organization.

Amidst this overall outlook, the tourism industry remains cautiously optimistic about performance in the short term. Expectations for growth in the medium term have been tempered in favour of strategies to preserve market share and brand awareness.

FINANCIAL SERVICES

Madam Speaker, I wish now to devote some time to examining the prospects of our financial services industry, in light of the downturn in the global economy. A major consequence of contracting economic activity worldwide has been a noticeable decline in government revenue. This holds true for the governments of developed countries as well as developing countries such as our own.

Against this backdrop, the governments of a number of leading developed countries have reignited an international debate on the role of offshore financial centres, drawing attention to countries such as our own. Government is not only closely monitoring international developments that have the potential to affect our financial services sector, but we are also fully engaged in what needs to be done to support and protect this vital sector.

Indeed, most of these international developments are not new. They have just acquired, rightly or wrongly, fresh oxygen from the prevailing period of international turmoil in the financial markets. As a result, we are now hearing increasingly talk of the necessary tempering of 'the invisible hand of the market with the iron fist of regulation', to quote one US commentator. We believe that balance is important, hence, as a responsible partner in the global financial community, the Cayman Islands has consistently checked and calibrated our position to ensure that we are on the right side of international regulatory, anti money-laundering, and international cooperation standards. We must adapt to changes and challenging circumstances, from a core of strength and integrity.

As we all know, Senator Barack Obama emerged the impressive victor from the November 4th US presidential elections. I want to publicly congratulate President-elect Obama for his win, as I did by letter to him on November 6th. The Government recognizes the vital importance of maintaining our strong relationship with the United States. We have already had extensive briefings from our Washington DC team. And it is our intention to dispatch a high-level delegation to the U.S. Capital to talk with the new Administration as soon as it is practical from the DC perspective to do so.

In this regard, our job is two-fold. Firstly, to continue to ensure, to the best of our ability, that facts and fundamentals drive policy, not headlines and sound bites; and, secondly, to ensure that the incoming US administration knows that it can continue to rely on the Cayman Islands to be a partner, not a problem.

I wish now to give an update on what is known as the 'green list' of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). As most honourable Members ought to be aware, the Cayman Islands has been an active participant in this OECD exercise since 2000, in particular as a member of the OECD subcommittee known as the 'level playing field sub-group'. The work of this sub-committee is ongoing and has direct input on OECD developments in the area of transparency and exchange of information in tax matters.

We intend to continue with our policy of constructive engagement in relation to the OECD exercise (and others). Having done our analysis, in consultation and from an 'insider's' vantage point, we are confident on that basis that the track we are pursuing will achieve the right results for the Cayman Islands.

Now to another issue: namely, the European Union Savings Directive. At the Overseas Territories Consultative Committee meeting held in London in late October, the UK Treasury Minister responsible advised that it was too early to yet say what the implications of the EU Savings Directive were for the Overseas Territories. However, he has pledged full consultation. What I can assure this honourable House is that Government is directly monitoring developments regarding the EU Savings Directive. We are ready and able to provide input to the UK regarding any proposals for changing this directive.

I would like to make three specific points relating to this issue of the EU Savings Directive. Firstly, the UK understands that there is no automatic route between formal changes to the Savings Directive and the Cayman Islands. Our agreed implementation is contained in 27 bilateral agreements with the EU member states, which would all be subject to re-negotiation if there were any substantive changes to the Directive.

Secondly, the Cayman Islands are fully compliant with our obligations under the existing bilateral agreements and so there is no question of our not having adhered to our commitments.

Thirdly, the risk presented by any changes to the Directive will be a direct function of the UK Government's policy approach and the extent to which disproportionate or asymmetric compliance burdens are sought to be applied to the UK's Overseas Territories. If the playing field is level, a position that we would expect the UK government to support, then the risk profile will adjust accordingly.

Regarding the review involving the Crown Dependencies and Overseas Territories announced by Her Majesty's Treasury in the UK on December 2nd, as we have said publicly, given the approach to be taken and the experience of the reviewer, the Cayman Islands are happy to support the review and we are mobilising accordingly. It is our experience that thorough, thoughtful and objective external reviews are valuable to all parties.

I should also like to note that the Government has had a productive series of meetings and discussions with private sector stakeholders, not only on international development, but also on issues and trends within the local industry, and ways of moving in partnership to address matters that can secure our continued success. And, Madam Speaker, we do intend to continue to meet with private sector because that has always proven to be a fruitful and productive way forward.

New legislation, new markets and new approaches to consolidating Cayman's position as a first-rank international financial services centre are all part of that strategy for continued success. The meetings and discussions between government and the private sector have re-affirmed the partnership ethic which is central to Cayman's strength. We are a small country, but together our achievements, our drive and our resolve are certainly not small.

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE

Madam Speaker, I now wish to give some insight into how Government has been responding to the global financial and economic crisis. First, let me say that we find it particularly interesting that a global consensus is emerging that sees fiscal policy as the most effective tool currently available for kick-starting flagging domestic economies. This Government came to that said conclusion months ago when the Cayman Islands began to really feel the effects of the global slowdown.

This explains why we decided to proceed with the implementation of a number of major capital works projects—among them, the construction of Government's new headquarters building, new schools, and major road improvements. The decision was and still is being roundly criticized, particularly, Madam Speaker, on one talk show. Our critics say circumstances dictate that a halt should be put to these projects. However, we have chosen to press ahead with as many as the country can afford, not only because the country desperately needs them but also because we realize that in trying times like these, Government has a moral duty and responsibility to stimulate economic activity.

Besides, these projects represent a strategic investment in building capacity which will redound to the benefit of the country in the future. We do not believe development is achieved through piece-meal solutions that address issues only in the short-term. Rather, we take a medium- to long-range view of development because we are cognizant that as an economy grows, a country must build the necessary capacity, in terms of both human and material resources in order to keep progressing for the benefit of its people.

Admittedly, in the prevailing circumstances of an economic slowdown, the current capital projects are also having an important short-term benefit. What may not be apparent to our blinkered critics is that these projects actually are having a multiplier effect throughout the economy. The money which Government is spending on these projects is generating spin-off business for our hardware stores and other suppliers and helping to keep their staff employed. In other words, pumping money into the domestic economy.

Construction workers, who are employed on these projects, use some of their earnings to patronize supermarkets, bars, restaurants, barber saloons and other businesses. Ultimately, these projects are also contributing to economic growth as they will be captured in the calculation of our Gross Domestic Product. Altogether, they have had a positive impact in supporting the growth of the economy this year.

The fact that our economy is continuing to grow, even though the growth is slow, is made even more remarkable in the context of the recent revelation that the US economy has been in recession for the past year. Contrary to what our critics would have the public believe, Government is not being reckless in managing the country's finances. I must emphasize for the benefit of everyone, especially the general public, that there are strict guidelines established by law which Government has to abide by.

Meeting the country's needs within the confines of a balanced budget is a legal requirement which this Government has satisfied every year it has been in office. In fact, surpluses were produced every year. In the 2009-2010 fiscal year an operating surplus of $28.2 million is forecast, up from the $20.1 million projected for the current fiscal year.

As for the outrageous charge of excess borrowing, I also need to make it very clear that Government is again constrained by law as to how much money it can raise through loans. Under our laws—and to be specific, under the Public Management and Finance Law—no more than 10 per cent of government's revenue in any given year can go towards repaying debt. This figure is very low by global standards and represents what I would term a most comfortable position for any government to be in.

While these various legal restrictions may hinder us from doing as much as we would like, they impose strong fiscal discipline and forces government as much as possible to live within its means. So that, altogether, Government is required to run a tight operation, which explains why occasionally some needs cannot be met as swiftly as everyone, including ourselves, would like.

Madam Speaker, it is certainly not that we are indifferent to the needs of the people. As we have little choice but to abide by the laws, we can only do as much as available resources will allow at any particular point in time. Needless to say, the unwelcome visit of Hurricane Paloma has placed the Government under additional financial pressure. It occurred as Government was starting to feel the effects of a shortfall in revenue arising from the economic slowdown.

To protect the country's fiscal position, cost-saving measures have been instituted. They include a temporary freeze on hiring in the public sector and a mandated 6 per cent reduction in operational expenditure. Additionally, we have decided to complete capital projects already in progress but not to immediately begin work on any new ones over this coming fiscal year.

Projects being deferred include the construction of the Beulah Smith High School, the new George Town Primary School, the Bodden Town Emergency Response Centre, the seawall at Savannah, and the double lane extension to the Esterley Tibbetts Highway. Projects which are underway and will be completed include the new Government Administration Building, the Clifton Hunter High School at Frank Sound, the new John Gray High School, the annex to the George Town Public Library, the Boxing Gym, and, Madam Speaker, also the new Police Marine Base (as contracts were signed) and also the new MRCU facility at the Airport. A range of necessary road works will also be undertaken during the coming year, but the specifics of those I am certain the good Minister will deal with when it comes Budget time.

Given the tight constraints under which Government is operating to cushion the impact of the global slowdown, Hurricane Paloma's unwelcome visit has only served to compound the situation. It has introduced pressing needs which must be addressed but which were certainly not anticipated or planned for. These needs cannot be ignored, they are not being ignored and they will not be ignored. The Government, therefore, has already channelled substantial resources into the relief and reconstruction of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and, Madam Speaker, we will continue to do so as long as it is necessary.

The private sector and civil society have also pitched in with their contributions. And I will just take a moment here Madam Speaker, to say that Government salutes their public spiritedness and certainly, welcomes this partnership. As demands on the public purse are growing faster than the generation of revenue, we are reaching a stage where it can no longer be realistically expected that the Government can meet every need.

A month into the recovery and reconstruction on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the Government is satisfied that good progress has been made as is usual in these circumstances. Things may well not happen as fast as everyone would like. But, Madam Speaker, things are happening. Compared with a month ago, the situation today is much improved and life is gradually returning to normal. In the same way that this Government got Grand Cayman back on its feet after the devastation of Hurricane Ivan, we will do the very same for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

And, Madam Speaker, just to interject for one second to show the value of the private/public partnership in efforts such as this: Thirty workers have been pledged by one specific entity. They have sent their own mobile accommodations for six months on the ground in Cayman Brac. We are certainly grateful for efforts such as those and also the results that we will see from how swiftly they have come to work hand in hand with the Government and the other volunteer agencies,

However, a certain level of patience is required because building back Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and attempting to make their infrastructure stronger, will take time, by any calculation, at least six months to a year in the first instance. It simply cannot happen overnight. In another demonstration of this Government's commitment to helping the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman to rebuild their lives, Cabinet has just agreed (on top of all of the other things that have happened to this point which we have reported on) to a six-month waiver of import duties on furniture and appliances entering the Sister Islands.

This measure is intended to assist residents with damaged furniture and appliances to be able replace them. And we are presently seeking the approval of this House for a Government guarantee of up to $6 million for loans provided to civil servants on the Cayman Brac and Little Cayman by the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Cooperative Union.

These loans are to assist civil servants with post-hurricane recovery. Government has also decided to take the further step of paying the interest on all loans guaranteed under this programme. So, those civil servants who get those loans will only pay the principal. Madam Speaker, it is regrettable and unfortunate that some persons have deliberately sought to politicise the relief and reconstruction effort. Their voices are conspicuous. It seems their crude aim is to manipulate public opinion in the hope of profiting politically from the tragedy which has befallen the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. They know who they are and they should be ashamed of themselves.

However, there was a really heartening piece of news which came out of the Brac a week ago. It came from a well-known and, you could say, credible voice. In essence, it showed that a pledge made by Government regarding the employment of Brackers in post-Paloma reconstruction work has been acted on. This Bracker, whose name I will not call but who is well known nationally, called a local talk show one morning to give an update on the situation. During his contribution, he made a very important observation. He remarked: "Everyone who wants to find work can do so and they are getting paid."

The Government had made it clear up front that there was no need to import workers and that Cayman Brackers should be given preference in gaining employment during the reconstruction period, especially persons who had been displaced from their regular jobs. From what the caller indicated, this is obviously happening. Later on in this debate, I certainly intend, Madam Speaker, with your permission, to bring this Honourable House fully up-to-date on the recovery and rebuilding effort in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Whilst on the subject of employment, it would be remiss of me if I did not seize this opportunity to address the issue of employment in a broader context. A complaint which we hear repeatedly is that the hiring practices of employers seem biased towards foreign labour at the expense of Caymanians. The complaint is usually accompanied by the charge that Government is doing nothing to ensure that Caymanians are given a fair opportunity when it comes to employment.

The charge that Government is not standing up for Caymanians is without foundation. The Government always acts whenever hard evidence is presented to support charges of job discrimination against Caymanians. But the fact of the matter is, we cannot act unless that hard evidence is presented. If I must be very clear, and I will, Government supports a Caymanians first policy when it comes to employment, as long as the applicants satisfy the requirements for the job. It is only if suitably qualified or skilled Caymanians are not available, or for that matter are not interested, that employers should turn to foreign labour.

Admittedly, this policy has not always worked as Government would like.

Regardless of our best efforts, some employers will occasionally seek to get around this 'Caymanians First' policy to recruit who they wish. Madam Speaker, this is not unique to the Cayman Islands. It happens in just about every country. Through a recent amendment to our Immigration legislation Government is introducing a new system that will allow for more effective management of migration into this country and I am sure that at some point in time the Minister will speak in detail to the issue.

In doing so, we are aiming to strike a balance between the needs of employers and the aspirations of Caymanians who want to use their skills to participate in the economic development of our country. And, Madam Speaker, that is not only the right of Caymanians, but it is certainly what they deserve. However, Caymanians need to appreciate that there will continue to be a demand for foreign labour as long as the Cayman Islands continue to grow at the rate it has been growing. During the past decades, our economy has expanded so rapidly that job creation has simply outstripped the national capacity to supply all the labour that is needed.

Hence, the recruitment of foreign labour is necessary to make up the shortfall. To support the continued growth of our economy and to ensure that our key industries remain globally competitive and on the cutting edge of technology, especially in these challenging times. It is also necessary to bring in workers with specialist skills which are not available here.

Madam Speaker, there are some new approaches which I want to speak to.

NEW APPROACHES

The recent amendment to the immigration legislation addresses these underlying issues. Effective 5 January 2009, there will be a new approach to the processing of applications for work permits which previously were handled entirely by the Work Permit Board and the Business Staffing Plan Board. Under the new approach, approval of certain categories of work permits will be made administratively within the Immigration Department using a very carefully chosen checklist of criteria.

This move is expected to eliminate the annual backlog of applications, significantly speed up the approval of work permits, and also contribute to improving business efficiency. Madam Speaker, there have been several meetings with Immigration Department officials and private sector to make sure that these measures are done in such a way to make the whole atmosphere more business-friendly and certainly allow for more efficiency.

Government is committed to working closely with the private sector, as we have done in reforming our immigration procedures, to create a more business-friendly environment all round. If we accept that the private sector is the engine of growth in our economy then a major part of Government's responsibility is to provide businesses with the relevant support and to create the enabling environment for that engine to produce the growth.

Madam Speaker, as a result of this new approach, the Work Permit Board and the Business Staffing Plan Boards will now be able to focus on difficult or sensitive applications and the critical issue of Key Employee designation. Both Boards will retain decision-making control of all applications where a Caymanian applied for the position; or where there is a signed complaint against a prospective employee on file; or where the Department of Employment Relations identifies that there is a Caymanian who is capable and available for the position.

The Boards will also retain responsibility for determining applications involving the promotion and re-designation of an employee; the revocation of work permits; applications for the grant, renewal or amendment of a Business Staffing Plan, and requests for the waiver of the requirement to advertise a position.

Madam Speaker, we are reforming our immigration procedures in phases. The next phase will focus on combating work permit abuse by unscrupulous employers. Measures will be introduced requiring employers to pre-qualify before they are able to apply for and obtain any work permits. This pre-qualification process will ensure that employers are complying with health insurance and pension requirements in respect of their employees. It will also ensure that employers have programmes in place to ensure that Caymanians are given every opportunity through on-the-job training, mentoring, or further education to advance in their careers.

As part of this initiative, mechanisms will also be introduced to reward those employers who stand out as good corporate citizens. The development of this next phase is also being done in consultation with representatives from the private sector. And as I said, Madam Speaker, officials from the Department are continuing these meetings. The joint public-private sector group will be submitting proposals on this next stage to Cabinet by 15 January 2009 and we will act accordingly.

Some persons have criticized the major investment which this Government has made in modernizing our education system during the past three and a half years. They obviously cannot see the link between education and employment. By equipping our people with the skills demanded by the technology-driven modern economy, Government is quietly laying the groundwork for Caymanians to play an increasingly larger role in building our country and indeed our economy. This will have the effect of gradually reducing the need for foreign labour as we are able to tool our own Caymanians to fill the labour demand.

EDUCATION

In the area of Education, Madam Speaker, just a few words: While there will be a delay in the start of construction of the Beulah Smith campus and the George Town Primary School, the heart of the transformation process underway over the past three and a half years in our education system, is not merely the provision of physical structures but also a radical transformation of teaching and learning and the way it is done. That process continues unabated and I know that not only the Minister, but his entire team are committed to achieving the objectives they have set out.

Dramatic strides are being made towards introducing the International Baccalaureate (IB) Primary years programme in our primary sector, George Town Primary School (GTPS) being one of the schools where it is being introduced). This process will proceed unaffected over the next three years.

At the secondary level, significant improvements have already been made in the options programme. This should provide greater opportunities for success for our students who began their options study this school year and those who do so in subsequent school years. September 2009 will see the launch of the IB diploma programme which will provide exciting new opportunities for advanced secondary studies.

Overall, while significant physical constraints will be imposed on our existing facilities as a result of the delay in construction of Beulah Smith and George Town Primary, the Department of Education Services is working to ensure that it is still able to deliver the critical components of the new secondary curriculum to all high school students. It is expected that we will be able to begin and complete the Beulah Smith High School and the George Town Primary School in the medium term. Madam Speaker, the situation is they remain an absolute priority and we will simply watch very carefully how the economy is performing and the Government's ability to move forward and as soon as that is possible then those projects will commence.

We have to also bear in mind that the on-going projects are some two-year projects and some a little bit over that. But the majority of those projects are well underway now, and it will not be long before those projects will be complete which will allow for a breather in the capital works programmes which are on-going at present.

So, even though we have had to, when looking at the entire situation including the devastation of Hurricane Paloma, take a slightly different view from the original plans it would not be a long delay, hopefully, before we are able to continue with the capital works programmes.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

In the area of affordable housing, Madam Speaker, I would like to speak a bit about the Government's affordable housing programme. Despite the general affluence that is seen in the Cayman Islands, there is a segment of our population for whom home-ownership remains an elusive dream if there is no government support.

It is in response to this social need that the Government has introduced the Affordable Housing Programme which has been making a big difference. Two agencies are responsible for executing the programme—the Sister Islands Affordable Housing Development Corporation (SIAH) in the case of Little Cayman and Cayman Brac and, here in Grand Cayman, the National Housing Development Trust (NHDT). Affordable housing will continue to receive major attention during the coming fiscal year.

On Cayman Brac, the (SIAH) has already constructed six homes on the Bluff, and they will continue to develop this site during the course of the 2009-10 financial year. And, Madam Speaker, I believe, that either contracts have been awarded or bids are out. Although I am not so sure how swiftly they will be accommodated, given how busy the Cayman Brac contractors are with post Paloma rebuilding. But, Madam Speaker, those contracts will not go out to anyone else but the Cayman Brac contractors.

These homes are well designed and built; indeed, the first batch certainly proved their mettle as they were relatively unscathed by the fury of Hurricane Paloma. While they were not quite finished at the time Paloma struck Cayman Brac and Little Cayman they were to a sufficient state of completion to provide much-needed temporary housing for the relief workers after the hurricane. We have certainly gone on from there and once the final touches are completed now, which are being done as we speak. The project manager is concentrating his efforts on getting those homes completed and the new owners have their financing in place, these units will be transferred to the new owners. I expect that will be done very very shortly.

During the upcoming fiscal year, the SIAH plans to develop additional affordable homes on the Bluff site and on the site below Tibbetts Turn in Watering Place. As honourable Members ought to be aware, the Government vested these sites to the SIAH during the past year. Together, these two sites provide sufficient land to allow the SIAH to continue to provide more affordable housing solutions for several years to come for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Madam Speaker, honourable Members should be familiar with the various programmes of the NHDT, as I touched on them briefly when I moved the two vesting Motions in this honourable House on the 5th of December, just a few short days ago. The National Housing Development Trust, or NHDT, has several programmes that are aimed at providing a “helping hand” to those Caymanians who aspire to own their own homes but who may face some difficulties in doing so.

There is the “Government Guaranteed Home Assisted Mortgage” programme (GGHAM), which is targeted at those first-time Caymanian home buyers who have the income required to service a mortgage, but are unable to come up with the lump sum payment that is required. Through the GGHAM programme, which is available to Caymanians on all three of our islands, qualified applicants have a portion of their mortgage guaranteed by the Government. And that portion which is guaranteed by the Government, Madam Speaker, is on the top end of the mortgage. So, if there is a Government guarantee of $20,000 on the mortgage, as soon as the principal of the mortgage is paid down by $20,000 then the Government guarantee falls away. This guarantee that we have been doing certainly has allowed many of them to obtain financing through the banks which are our partners in the GGHAM programme.

Since being launched in late 2007, the GGHAM programme has helped over 126 first-time Caymanians to realise the dream of home ownership. I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the clearing banks which have partnered with Government and to thank them for their participation. The banks are:

- Butterfield Bank
- Cayman National Bank
- Fidelity Bank
- First Caribbean International
- HSBC
- Royal Bank of Canada
- Scotiabank & Trust

And, Madam Speaker, let me just interject: In the first instance these financial institutions had signed agreements with the Government to dedicate up to $5 million (the individual institution) over a five-year period towards these specific types of mortgages and within seven months all of that money has been used up. We are almost a year into the programme now and all of the money has been used up for those 126 families.

The NHDT has 135 applications that are being worked on. The good news is that the banks have just about all agreed to each extend another $5 million towards the programme. They are not holding up any applications that they received, they are proceeding with the programme and I think the signing of the new agreement is awaiting some photo op to be done and I am sure that will be arranged in a day or two. So, that is good news.

I want to publically thank them for engaging in this process. And that, Madam Speaker, certainly assists many, many young Caymanian families who, many of them initially would think that they would want to be in the affordable housing programme, but on discovery they find that they can fit into another programme once we have the mix that we now have.

Earlier this year, the NHDT launched another programme called “Build on Your Own Property.” It caters to qualified applicants who already own land. In this programme, the NHDT provides bridge financing to applicants, a range of house plans to choose from, and a list of pre-qualified contractors who are prepared to build the homes.

This assistance to the client represents a significant cost saving, and helps to make the new home even more affordable. To date, two homes have already been constructed through this programme, and two more are expected to commence shortly and the subcommittee which deals with this has several other applications which they are processing. These support programmes aside, the NHDT is also involved in the actual construction and sale of affordable homes. As members are aware, the NHDT has three existing housing sites where houses were built—two in George Town and one in West Bay. These sites have provided much-needed housing. However, there is still a lot of unmet demand, but Madam Speaker, that housing stock is dwindling fast, simply because of the high maintenance of those existing homes,

The NHDT has set the goal of identifying and developing affordable housing sites in each of the 5 districts in Grand Cayman. The Sister Islands two sites are quite adequate for several years to come. So, the concentration of acquiring property has been in Grand Cayman. I am pleased to report that significant progress has been made toward achieving this goal. Sites have been identified in each of the 5 districts. Members will be familiar with the proposed sites in West Bay and Bodden Town, as I tabled the vesting reports for these properties just last week.

Subdivision plans for new sites in West Bay, Bodden Town, George Town, and East End have either been completed and received planning approval or they are currently with the Central Planning Authority for consideration. And as you know, Madam Speaker, the site in North Side has been identified and is currently going through the acquisition process and once that process is completed, the development will progress fairly swiftly in the North Side subdivision also.

Madam Speaker, combined, the new developments will provide some 240 affordable single family homes. In fact, when all of the subdivisions are considered (including the property in the district of North Side), the number of homes all of them will be able to accommodate is more than the 240. They will also include land on some of the sites which would be allocated for multi-family dwellings. This will follow in some instances because there will be some individuals who would be able to deal with the multi-family homes much better than the individual family homes. So, those are also in the Plan

Recognising the importance of these programmes, especially in economically trying times, this Strategic Policy Statement entitled, "Staying the Course in Challenging Times" maintains Government's commitment to our two affordable housing agencies.

STRATEGIC PRIORITIES

Madam Speaker, I wish to summarize the Government's priorities in the coming fiscal year. They are as follows:

- To protect the economy from the full impact of the current global downturn.
- To stimulate business activity in order to keep our people working and prevent the economy from slipping into decline.
- To continue much needed capital development projects to the extent that we can afford to.
- To maintain a sound fiscal position by ensuring the usual balance is achieved between spending and revenue.
- To rebuild Cayman Brac and Little Cayman with an emphasis on providing stronger infrastructure that can stand up better to any future hurricanes or natural disasters. And also Madam Speaker, making sure that in the rebuild, homes are more resilient.
- To do everything that is required to promote and protect the interests of our tourism industry.
- To do everything that is required to promote and protect the interests of our vital financial services industry, with particular attention to the various international challenges and the need to further enhance the attractiveness of Cayman as a jurisdiction specializing in the provision of international financial services.
- To make the Cayman Islands more business friendly so that more investors will want to come and do business here and support further growth and development of our economy.
- To continue providing support to vulnerable social groups, including our elderly, so that they can enjoy a reasonable standard of living.

In this regard, I am pleased to announce that again this year, in time for Christmas, Government has decided to grant an additional $550 to enhance the lives of our retired seamen, veterans, the elderly and those who receive government financial assistance. We believe that especially in these times this will go some way in enabling them to share in the holiday festivities in a way that might otherwise not have been possible. This extraordinary payment will be made, along with their regular monthly cheque, ahead of Christmas.

Madam Speaker, this Government commits itself to pursuing this path and to doing these things which I have just mentioned. Despite the prevailing challenges, this PPM Government remains firmly committed to the overall goal of improving the quality of life for Caymanians, as stated in our 2005 election manifesto. We have made significant headway in this regard over the last three and a half years in office. Indeed, we have made our country stronger and in a better position to cope with the challenges arising from the present global downturn.

CONCLUSION

And so in conclusion, as I was reflecting on the challenging times facing us, my thoughts were directed to some remarks made several years ago by the late US civil rights leader, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. He said and, I quote, "The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort [and convenience], but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy."

Madam Speaker, I believe these remarks are highly applicable in the present circumstances. Naturally, there are some who will have Caymanians believe that there is an easy way out. They speak in terms that suggest that it is simply a matter of waving a magic wand and the problems will disappear.

Madam Speaker, I dare say that persons espousing such views have taken leave of the real world. They have entered the comfort zone of the fantasy world and wish to lead everyone else there to join them. Someday, like Alice in Wonderland, it is inevitable that they will wake up and have to face the real world. Unfortunately, because valuable time would have been lost, the problems will most likely have worsened.

Grappling with challenging times is nothing new to the Caymanian experience. Just four years ago, this nation was put to the test by the devastation caused by Hurricane Ivan. We did not run away. We held hands and faced up to the challenge. Indeed, the speed at which we were able to rebuild is testimony of our resilience when we believe that we can.

If we believe as a country that we will rise triumphantly over these present challenges, we definitely can. When you think about it, there is nothing highly unusual about the world entering a recession. It simply happens to be a normal occurrence in the overall scheme of economic things. Economics 101 tells us that there will be times of boom followed by times of bust. The world recently went through a fairly long period of boom and has now entered a period of bust.

The good news is that this period of bust is not going to last forever. It too shall pass and will be followed by another period of boom as a new economic cycle begins. Getting through this bumpy period requires discipline, sacrifice, prudence and a resolve to pull through. How economies perform largely reflect the behaviour of the people living therein. When people are brimming with confidence, economies tend to do well. When their confidence dips, economies also tend to dip.

Madam Speaker, at least there seems to be a glimmer of hope on the gloomy global economic horizon. It is the optimism which the election of Senator Barack Obama as US President, has generated around the world. His victory to many is seen as an opportunity for the world to change for the better. If President-elect Obama can match promise with performance and provide effective leadership on the world stage, he may well succeed in rekindling the confidence which is needed to jumpstart not only the US economy but the global economy.

The challenges we face, present an opportunity for stocktaking, to look at our economy critically, to determine what we have got right and what we have got wrong, and to plan and reposition for future growth and prosperity. If we do so, I am with full confidence that we will emerge stronger and better and we will reap greater benefits when the global economy recovers. Madam Speaker, we can. We must. We will.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise in support of Government Motion No.10 of 2008-09. My contribution will focus on the economic and financial forecasts contained in the Strategic Policy Statement (the SPS).

The SPS is a forward-looking forecast and planning document that outlines the Government's strategic outcomes and establishes the broad parameters within which the upcoming 2009/10 Budget will be prepared.

Madam Speaker, we are living in very turbulent economic times with countries across the world experiencing a high degree of economic uncertainty. In mid-November, the Leaders of the Group of Twenty Nations (the G-20) held a Summit in Washington, D.C. to discuss the current global economic and financial difficulties.

At the Summit, Leaders of the G-20 resolved that the current global financial turmoil could be traced to the following, and I quote from the declaration issued after that Summit: "During a period of strong global growth, growing capital flows, and prolonged stability earlier this decade, market participants sought higher yields without an adequate appreciation of the risks and failed to exercise proper due diligence. At the same time, weak underwriting standards, unsound risk management practices, increasingly complex and opaque financial products, and consequent excessive leverage combined to create vulnerabilities in the system. Policy-makers, regulators and supervisors, in some advanced countries, did not adequately appreciate and address the risks building up in financial markets, keep pace with financial innovation, or take into account the systemic ramifications of domestic regulatory actions.

"Major underlying factors to the current situation were, among others, inconsistent and insufficiently coordinated macroeconomic policies, inadequate structural reforms, which led to unsustainable global macroeconomic outcomes. These developments, together, contributed to excesses and ultimately resulted in severe market disruption."

Madam Speaker, the statement and the fact that the G20 nations held a specific summit to discuss these issues highlights the many complexities and challenges facing the global economy today. These problems are not isolated to any particular country or group of countries, they are global issues. That said, we all have a part to play in the solution to these problems and it is necessary for all individuals and businesses in the Cayman Islands to make prudent financial decisions: the Government is leading the way in this regard and is committed to ensuring the continued prosperity of these Islands.

The Cayman Islands is a small, open, services-based economy that is affected by changes in the global economy: in particular, to changes in the US economy. It is inevitable that this current period of difficulties will affect the Cayman Islands, but at this point in time it is difficult to predict the extent of the impact.

It is well understood that the Cayman Islands financial services industry does not operate in isolation and that we are not immune from the volatility and uncertainty in the global financial markets. Our consultations with the financial services industry suggest that this situation is not expected to start improving until late 2009/2010.

While, on average, year over year growth statistics relating to entities regulated by the Monetary Authority and those entities formed with the General Registry have not exhibited precipitous declines, and in fact there are areas that are maintaining growth, overall contractions are expected over the SPS period in both new registrations and licencees and among existing registrations and licencees, and this has been factored into revenue forecasts. The exact quantum of change will become clearer in the period January to March of 2009.

Overall, the areas expected to suffer most are those connected with hedge funds and structured finance. Current global market conditions in the hedge fund arena are characterized by heavy redemptions, suspensions and re-structuring coupled with much-reduced new fund formations. In the structured finance arena there has been severe drop-off in deal flows as a result of the freezing of the global capital markets. By some expert estimates, the number of hedge funds globally could contract by 20 to 30 per cent.

We are confident that through strong industry partnership, a concerted approach to Cayman's competitiveness, and the existing base of strength and quality of our service offerings, we will be able to see our way through this challenging environment.

Madam Speaker, I will turn now to the main features of the economic and financial forecasts contained in the SPS document.

World Economic Position and Outlook

The global economy, particularly the advanced economies, was increasingly challenged in 2007. In the second half of the year, the financial crisis that originated from the mortgage sector in the United States has spread to other advanced economies and has affected their growth performance. At the same time, a general increase in commodity prices, particularly for fuel and food, pushed inflationary pressures globally. Against this backdrop, global economic growth in 2007 was estimated at 5.0 per cent, a slight decline from the 5.1 per cent recorded in 2006.

Global growth came largely from the emerging and developing economies as they recorded a combined growth of 8.0 per cent in 2007, a slight improvement from the 7.9 per cent growth in 2006. On the other hand, advanced economies which comprise the majority of the Cayman Islands financial services and tourism industries, slid from their combined growth of 3.0 per cent in 2006 to 2.6 per cent in 2007.

Inflation among the advanced economies eased slightly in 2007 to 2.2 per cent from 2.4 per cent in 2006, due to the moderation of consumer spending that partially checked the pressures from higher commodity prices. However, in emerging and developing countries where demand growth remained strong, consumer prices rose higher at 6.4 per cent in 2007 from 5.4 per cent in 2006.

World output was estimated to have slowed anew in the first half of 2008, and further weakening is projected for the second half of 2008. Consequently, global growth for the year is foreseen at 3.9 per cent. This outlook is cast amidst a sharp downturn in the financial sector that has resulted in the restructuring and consolidation of major institutions, particularly in the US, resulting in a further tightening of credit for consumer and business spending.

The weakening of global output growth is anticipated to be accompanied by higher inflation. Inflation in 2008 is foreseen to reach 3.6 per cent among advanced economies, and 9.4 per cent among emerging and developing economies.

The US remains an important market for the Cayman Islands. US growth deteriorated in 2007 to 2.0 per cent from 2.8 per cent in 2006, as the housing finance crisis further reduced demand for residential construction. Weakened income position of households along with higher commodity prices softened private consumption expenditure and non-residential investment, especially in the last quarter of 2007. On the other hand, the weakening of the dollar improved US net exports while government spending boosted domestic demand.

The growth of US Gross Domestic Product (GDP) in the first three quarters of 2008 averaged 1.1 per cent as compared to 3.2 per cent in the same period a year ago. Further weakening is projected for the rest of the year, in light of diminished consumer confidence. US GDP growth in 2008 is forecasted at 1.6 per cent.

Meanwhile, other advanced economies are also expected to show softer performance to bring the combined growth of the group to 1.5 per cent in 2008.

Sharp growth adjustments are foreseen for the United Kingdom (from 3.0 per cent in 2007 to 1.0 per cent in 2008) and Canada (from 2.7 per cent in 2007 to 0.7 per cent in 2008).

The global outlook for 2008 is expected to extend to 2009, as world output growth is projected to further weaken at 3.0 per cent. GDP growth among advanced economies in 2009 is expected at 0.5 per cent, led by the US with its growth forecasted at 0.1 per cent. The UK is foreseen to experience a recession, with its growth forecasted at -0.1 per cent, while Canada is expected to rebound at 1.2 per cent.

Meanwhile, global inflation is projected to ease in 2009 on the back of curtailed growth in domestic demand and improved outlook on commodity prices. The inflation rates for the US and the advanced economies are forecasted at 1.8 per cent and 2.0 per cent, respectively.

The Cayman Islands' Economy – Performance in the 2007 and 2008 Calendar Years

Madam Speaker just before I get into the forecasts it is important that we take a few moments to review the Cayman Islands' economic performance for the period January 2007 to June 2008.

In 2007 our overall economic performance was bolstered by a resilient financial services industry, strong growth in public consumption expenditure and robust growth in stay-over tourism. GDP grew by 2.2 per cent during the year, albeit this was lower compared to the 4.6 per cent growth in 2006. Indicators in the first half of 2008 for the major industries – financial services and stay-over tourism – show signs of softening and are consistent with the projected slide in GDP growth for 2008.

The financial services industry displayed its resilience throughout 2007, notwithstanding the global financial turmoil. With the exception of banks and trust licences which dropped by 3.4 per cent, increases were recorded in insurance company licences (3.4 per cent), mutual funds (15.7 per cent), stock exchange listings (42.7 per cent) and new company registrations (15.9 per cent). During the first half of 2008, these services remained on the growth path, albeit at lower growth rates: mutual funds increased by 11.9 per cent while insurance licences and stock market listings rose by 2.6 per cent and 17.9 per cent respectively. However, banks and trust licences declined by 2.4 per cent while new company registrations slipped by 3.3 per cent.

A mixed performance emanated from the tourism industry in 2007. The stay-over market showed strong performance as arrivals rose by 9.1 per cent; this was extended in the first 6 months of 2008 as arrivals improved by 9.3 per cent. In contrast, cruise arrivals fell by 11.1 per cent in 2007 and by 13.5 per cent in the first half of 2008. Overall, tourist arrivals went down by 8.7 per cent in 2007 and by 10.5 per cent in the first half of 2008. Consequently, tourism receipts dipped by 6.6 per cent in 2007 to reach $399.1 million.

In 2007, construction moderated from the strong performances over the last two years. Building permits reached 1,090 (or 15.5 per cent lower than in 2006) valued at $446.3 million (up marginally by 0.1 per cent compared to 2006). Building permits for the first half of 2008 fell by 2.9 per cent to settle at 599; total value of these permits fell to $211.5 million or 26.2 per cent lower compared to the same period in 2007.

Total labour force as of fall 2007 was estimated at 36,476, reflecting a marginal growth of 1.4 per cent over 2006. The unemployment rate went up to 3.8 per cent in 2007 from 2.6 per cent in 2006 as total employment increased modestly by 0.2 per cent to reach 35,081.

The average Consumer Price Index continued to increase in 2007. The average inflation was 2.9 per cent, higher than the 0.8 per cent recorded in 2006. However, the inflation rate was on the down-trend throughout the year: from 4.4 per cent in March 2007, this fell to 3.2 per cent in June, 2.5 per cent in September and 1.7 per cent in December.

For the first six months of 2008, average inflation was 4.0 per cent, due to increases in the average prices of food (3.6 per cent), household equipment (7.5 per cent), transport and communication (5.3 per cent), housing (5.1 per cent), clothing (4.0 per cent), education and medical (4.2 per cent), personal goods and services (0.9 per cent) and alcohol and tobacco (0.5 per cent).

Merchandise imports declined in 2007 to $881.8 million, from $888.7 million in 2006. This was mainly due to a strong reduction in capital goods imports by 21.9 per cent, while consumption goods also fell by 2.9 per cent. In contrast, the value of fuel imports grew by 21.7 per cent which could be traced to increases in both the unit price and the quantity of oil and petroleum products imported. For the first six months of 2008, merchandise imports rose by 2.1 per cent from the same period a year ago to reach $457.6 million. This increase is due largely to oil and petroleum products which posted higher prices in the world market. The volume of fuel imports also grew moderately by 3.5 per cent to settle at 38.3 million imperial gallons.

Total merchandise exports in 2007 was estimated at $21.5 million, an 11.9 per cent improvement above the previous year, mainly due to significant increases in rum exports and re-exports. Meanwhile, exports of services were estimated at $442.9 million, a surge of 3.6 per cent over 2006, mainly on account of the growth in visitor expenditure which resulted from stay-over tourism.

Economic Forecasts for the Next Three Fiscal Years

Madam Speaker, the Economic forecast: Section 3 of the SPS provides the forecast economic position of the Cayman Islands for the 2009/10 to 2011/12 financial years. These forecasts were prepared by the Economics and Statistics Office (the ESO) within the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

The ESO forecasts that the Cayman Islands economy, measured by changes in real GDP will grow by 1.7 per cent in the coming 2009/10 financial year and should accelerate to 2.5 per cent in 2010/11 and 2.4 per cent in 2011/12. These growth prospects assume that the world economy and in particular the economy of the USA will recover from its current difficulties.

Employment levels, measured by the numbers of persons employed, are expected to be 35,729 in 2009/10; 36,161 in 2010/11 and 36,523 in 2011/12. Conversely, the unemployment rate is forecasted at 3.9 per cent in 2009/10, and 3.7 per cent in both 2010/11 and 2011/12.

The local inflation rate, which is highly influenced by inflation rates in the United States of America, is forecasted at 2.7 per cent in 2009/10 and 3.0 per cent in both 2010/11 and 2011/12.

The balance of payments current account is forecasted at 25.3 per cent of GDP in 2009/10 and 2010/11 and 24.7 per cent in 2011/12.

Madam Speaker, all of these economic forecasts are indicating that the Cayman Islands economy will remain strong and healthy in the coming financial years and that while we are likely to experience some adjustment as a result of the current global financial environment, the effects will not be long term.

Financial Forecasts

Madam Speaker, every year the Government goes to great lengths to make sound plans for the country's limited financial resources. This year, the global economic environment has made the exercise particularly challenging. Despite these challenges the Government has ensured that it operates its financial affairs in full compliance with the Principles of Responsible Financial Management defined in the Public Management and Finance Law (the PMFL). This will mean that Government agencies will have to reduce their operating expenses and become more creative and innovative in the way they deliver services.

In taking this approach to managing its finances the Government is not just complying with the PMFL it is also ensuring that it retains the capacity to effectively respond to any sudden unexpected external shocks to the economy.

Core Government operating revenue is forecast to be $535 million in 2009/10, $555.4 million in 2010/11 and $571.8 million in 2011/12.

Core Government operating expenses are forecasted at $488.6 million in 2009/10, $502.2 million in 2010/11 and $514.7 million in 2011/12.

Financing expenses are forecasted to be $18.2 million in 2009/10, $23.7 million in 2010/11 and $25.1 million in 2011/12.

Surpluses are forecasted to be $28.1 million in 2009/10, $29.6 million in 2010/11 and $32.0 million in 2011/12.

On the balance sheet, Government's net worth (which is the difference between its total assets and its total liabilities) is expected to increase steadily over the forecasted period.

Aggregate borrowing (which is the balance outstanding at the end of a financial year in respect of those borrowings) is also expected to increase over the forecast period. This increase is in line with the Government's planned capital investment programme.

The anticipated borrowings in the 2009/10 to 2011/12 period result in Debt Servicing ratios that remain under the maximum 10 per cent level prescribed by the Principles of Responsible Financial Management, in the PMFL.

Net operating cash flows are targeted to remain strong in line with the forecast operating surpluses. The Government has continued its policy of maximizing the use of cash generated from operating surpluses to help finance its planned capital programme over the next three fiscal years.

Net investing cash flows or the amount of funding available for the Government's capital development programme is forecast to be $147.8 million in 2009/10, $76.2 million in 2010/11 and $72.6 million in 2011/12. The decrease in the 2010/11 and 2011/12 financial years reflect the expected completion of major projects in the 2009/10 fiscal year.

The net financing cash flows reflect the Government's anticipated borrowings over the three-year period less its repayment of debt principal.

The targeted closing cash balance for all years satisfies the level of cash reserves required by the Principles of Responsible Financial Management. The forecast cash balances for the 2009/10 to 2011/12 fiscal years are: $116.1 million, $121.6 million and $124.1 million. These balances are sufficient to meet the legal requirement specified in the PMFL that Government must maintain cash balances at the end of each financial year—starting from the 2009/10 year and onwards—that cover 90 days (or a quarter of a year), operating expenses.

Overall, the financial targets indicate an affordable fiscal position over the three-year forecast horizon.

Conclusion

Madam Speaker, these are trying and demanding economic times. But it is during times like these that the Caymanian people shine with their strong determination and resilience that has seen this country through difficult times in our past, and I believe we will once again come out on top.

The Cayman Islands has a robust, innovative, diversified and well regulated financial services industry which must be vigorously defended and encouraged as it is a major component of our economic engine. In addition, our excellent high quality tourism product must continue to be refined and improved to ensure that the Cayman Islands remain a destination of choice for discerning travelers. Together, financial services and tourism form the core of the Cayman Islands economy.

The Government is leading the way in terms of balancing continued economic development with prudent financial management, this SPS sets out challenging but achievable targets for all Government agencies which together will allow the country to conform to the requirements of the PMFL while at the same time continuing to provide the services and infrastructural development necessary for the continued success of these Islands.

I give my full support to this Motion and ask all Honourable Members to do the same.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.15 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.46 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.17 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. Debate continuing on Government Motion No. 10/08-09.

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The speech by the Leader of Government Business brought no surprises. It was a bundle of self-congratulations, a raft of promises and plans to borrow and spend. And when you do that, although you are not saying so, taxation will come because there is nothing evident for real revenue growth. Madam Speaker, what I listened to was the same old, same old as we have had in the past three and a half years.

Madam Speaker, I cannot treat the Government the way they treated me when we were the government. Yes, there have been some things done. I am not going to say no. There is talk, at least, about some things and very important social moves. The glossy, but important, function on Monday was important for the country. That has been done.

There are new roads. That has been done. But on the whole, the people of these Islands have never suffered as they have in the past three and a half years.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, when we look at the Government's projections, they are totally bad. Last year the GDP projections were down by 50 per cent, when you look at the new projections now, 50 per cent. This year under discussion, with a deepening world crisis, I fail to see how they are going to realise their projections. I say it is unrealistic.

I know that my friend, the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance, had his say, but he has to say that. And I will say this again (as I have said before). He could have very well said what one Financial Secretary said some years back when he rose to bring the budget. He said, "Madam Speaker, the Government asked me to bring this." So, anything I say in regard to what has been presented bears no reflection on the Honourable Financial Secretary.

I believe what has been presented is unrealistic, and if the Government continues on the path in which they are headed we are going to see some serious taxation here. What we cannot get out of is the fact that whether we are reaching our borrowing levels or not each year, the total amount of borrowing by the country is reaching close to a billion dollars. For this small country and a deteriorating time of revenue, when revenue is not coming in as Government has projected, I say that the Government should be much more careful with what they say.

It is good to give another cheque out this Christmas for our elderly veterans and seamen, and so on. Madam Speaker, you remember, and I know that the Minister of Health remembers the battles we had to put that in place, the cursing we took. It does cost the country a sizable bill, but there are no better people to spend it on than our senior citizens who built this country from nothing.

But it is quite obvious, when you take that into consideration with everything else, that what we have in the SPS is politics 101. It is the Government's campaign agenda, and so be it. The question is, How much better off will the Islands be? That is the true test. But on a whole, the Government failed that test long ago.

The time has come for the PPM to deliver, rather than just promise. From the onset of their tenure in the political arena they have become famous for glossy and glamorous proposals, or, more accurately put, glossy and glamorous promises. The old adage of "all that glitters is not gold" has been found to be most accurate to describe that type of management by the current administration.

Madam Speaker, year after year under the PPM we find ourselves as legislators being charmed by the glamorous strategic policy statement of the Government close to the budget. Civil servants come and a few other people come down and witness it and this one was particularly long. I think it was 50-odd pages. It must have been close to two hours. Policy statements have become nothing more than a mockery. And their participation in this process is becoming more and more meaningless.

A Government that echoed the sentiments of transparency and accountability right to the doorsteps of the Legislative Assembly during the last campaign left it right there, Madam Speaker. I recall Benson Ebanks saying at one opposition meeting that it was not long after a lady had a meaningful opening prayer that they had thrown God out of the window. It does not say much for real transparency when TV cameras and the live radio are here for the Government, but leave before the Opposition speaks.

Madam Speaker, my friend, the Member for East End, keeps rising saying something about what obtained during a different administration that did not have the mechanisms and the kind of governance that we have today. The Opposition and the Government had just started on that process. We did not have time to even work out proper processes for Opposition and Government. Nevertheless, whatever was done, whatever was said, that does not change the fact of what is being done today.

I am going to say something else, Madam Speaker. I neither have the feelings nor the desire to deal with his interruptions, so I am going to try to pay him no mind.

As the longest serving legislator in this honourable House (this November gone was 24 years), and as the Leader of the Opposition I must once more reiterate my concerns over the budgetary process by the PPM Administration ever since taking office in May 2005. The evolution of the budgetary process to commence with a global framework being established in the SPS and all budgeted line items stemming from this statement were welcomed by legislators of both sides of this House.

However, for us, as responsible legislators, the crucial budgetary process of having audited financial statements in a timely manner has not been fulfilled by the Government which, in effect, nullifies the benefit of having the glossy SPS read to us without the benefit of having the tools to keep the Government accountable and transparent.

Madam Speaker, this is unacceptable. And the pronouncement by the Government that all is well with this long outstanding matter—because the Government is always in the know—of the state of affairs with the Government finances does not provide any remedy to the uneasiness of this matter. The fact is, we need to know the true state of Government finances. The people of this country need to know. The time has come for more than excuses.

As recently reported, the Auditor General has concurred that the audited financial statements of the Government are necessary to ensure accountability. But he did not have to come from Canada to tell us that. All of us know that to be fact. Statements of Government are necessary to ensure accountability. We vote money and authorise expenditure, but the executive arm of Government, that is, the Cabinet, does not afford us the opportunity to review how this expenditure is managed. We are left to trust the Government. And, Madam Speaker, I can trust some; but I cannot trust all—especially when they are so close to election.

This is an unacceptable manner of managing the affairs of this country. The Opposition will once more voice its concern and outright dismay at the continuation of this situation year after year, SPS after another.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You call on your Government to do so!

Over $1.5 billion has been approved without supporting audited financial statements to show how this money was spent.

Madam Speaker, I said I would not answer him. I know that they want to jump on somebody. They have to blame somebody.

The fact is you are the Government. You are on the front bench, especially, so you should have a little bit . . .

[inaudible comments]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes, you should be up and saying a little bit more about it. Instead, Madam Speaker, we find ourselves once more with the PPM attempting to charm this House with frills and thrills but with no substance.

Where is the long awaited sustainable economic plan? Or the growth management plan? Are we still planning willy-nilly? Just point your finger and say, 'Do it over there? Do it over there?'

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Where is it?

The Governor said no such thing to me, Madam Speaker.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: But I have complained about it.

The Speaker: Please stop the crosstalk and allow the Member who is speaking to continue his debate please.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I am sorry for the talking while they are interrupting, but I will continue.

Madam Speaker, we left a plan. It was done by Deloitte. What did the Government do with it? Do you know? Have you seen it? Have you examined it?

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: No matter how many flaws it has, it should have been done over if you so thought it had plans. But I do not believe you know what flaws are when it comes to economic planning. So you would not know.

I was the man who commissioned it. So, if I do not know anything about economics—as he is saying, Madam Speaker—then I know that we ought to have something to tell us about it, and that is what I did.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mm-hmm.

Oh, Madam Speaker, that made good political rhetoric during the campaign and even before for all the likes of the Member from East End to prance up and down and holler and carry on.

Each of these policy statements should be tied together by an umbrella plan that creates the national priorities for the Cayman Islands. But what do we find? Oh, they are tied together; but they are tied together for the re-election of the PPM. Colour and all tied together.

Admittedly, the need for such a plan extends beyond the tenure of this Government. During the significantly shorter term in office the United Democratic Party made a notable start in that direction. But the PPM did not advance the process.

The Cayman Islands finds itself in a significantly different environment than in the past—one that is characterised by new challenges and the need for innovative and creative strategies to ensure our future sustainability. The challenges are great. But I believe so are the opportunities. The key ingredient that will determine whether we surrender to the challenges or capitalise on the opportunities is the leadership and the decisions of the leaders during this period.

I believe that the party in power, the current administration, has opted to ignore the shift in paradigm and cannot adjust the modus of operation, Madam Speaker. Pressure has hit them. Pressure! We cannot expect to continue to do things as we have always done under this new environment. And as much as they want to point back and say what the UDP did not do, they admitted this morning how much we did do to bring the country around after Ivan.

Curse me as much as you like, but I took the bull by the horns and said it must be done. And we did it. And the country was on the right footing when you took office. The cursing about the Ritz, the carrying on about the new city, even Cayman Airways . . . we brought in new equipment. And where would you all have been if this had not been done?

They are out to lunch. You are right.

What we recognised as a party was that there is a shift in the paradigm and that we have to do things differently. I keep saying, Madam Speaker—and I do not say this to insult our Minister of Health because I have great respect for him . . .

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You are the Minister of Roads. I will come to you next.

But you cannot build $100 million building and not give the Minister the money to do the very things he has to do for the health of the nation. They cannot. No matter how much you tell me you are giving him you are not doing what is supposed to be done for the number 1 priority.

If you do not have a station and you cannot afford it, a station cardiologist . . . you have to depend on one visiting. And that's a good programme, but it is not good enough that you cannot afford to have one because of cost. And you can tell me that it might be other things. I lay no blame on the Minister of Health. He cannot get the money.

The SPS before this honourable House is laden with the same class of strategies that have failed to succeed in the new economic climate today. Through this period as Leader of Government Business, we have come to learn that he believes that ignoring the problem and pretending that it does not exist, or at least will not impact the Cayman Islands, will solve the problems of the country.

Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands economy is now a very open economy and is impacted by every global fluctuation, trend or fad. As leaders we must remain current in our observation of international affairs and trends and constantly adopt proactive strategies to prepare the Cayman Islands for the impact of these changes. Within the first week of assuming office, the Government demonstrated to all their lack of understanding of how decisions often based on inaccurate information and key business centres will impact the Cayman Islands.

Their decision to not renew the contractual relationship with one of the top lobbyist firms in Washington DC has had a long-term negative impact on the Cayman Islands—especially the financial industry—because there you had a firm that could walk into any door in Washington, be it the Secretary of State, or the Secretary of the Treasury, and palaver on behalf of these Islands. They could walk into any State when legislation was raised about the Cayman Islands and say, Listen, this is not how it is. Here is where our relationship is. This is what is happening. This is what the Cayman Islands have done.

While we have joined with many in this country in congratulating President-elect Obama, I hear them saying so, it is now important for the Cayman Islands to brace itself for a democratic-led United States. Hopefully efforts are underway to ensure that the new administration is provided with every opportunity to be familiar with the strength of our financial regime in the Cayman Islands. This will require much more than the Minister of Education who has responsibility for such financial matters commenting in a few articles or a law firm commenting in a few articles.

I think the SPS fails to tell us what the Government is really going to do to strengthen the financial services sector. I hear him saying that they are going to Washington. Who is going to Washington? Who are they going to see? And what will they do?

I would like to know what is being done to improve our representation in Washington and other business centres. I would like to see legislation that will be improved upon to increase our competitiveness as a jurisdiction.

Madam Speaker, as a result of neglect by the PPM Government, and ever since they shifted and took away the responsibility of the financial services business from the Financial Secretary to the elected Member there is a neglect. Our financial services industry has been left without the appropriate government policy support over the past four years and is now facing many key challenges.

As a result of the global financial crisis, the Cayman Islands face increased and unwarranted criticism by the international community despite playing a key and positive role in the global economy for so many years. Our industry has been pleading for years for the necessary legislative support in the form of new or revised laws to support its activities or new institutions such as a commercial court. And these have been largely ignored by the PPM. Such changes are required for the industry to maintain its competitive edge against increasingly aggressive competitors, even to those who smile with us.

The industry has not had the required marketing and promotional support from the Government. Despite being a major employer of Caymanians and generating over 30 per cent of all Government revenues—probably more (that's direct, I believe)—the industry receives a marketing and promotional budget which is less than 10 per cent of the similar budget for the tourism sector. The reputation of the financial industry is under attack internationally. And the jurisdiction faces increasing competition from other international financial centres and these issues must be addressed urgently and effectively.

As a result of the poor domestic policies by the PPM Government, the financial services industry is outsourcing many jobs to other countries because the Government has not consulted with industry representatives on the issues. And where they did talk, they did not listen to the industry. The Government has done nothing to actively encourage or support international firms in establishing physical offices in the Cayman Islands and, therefore, the Cayman Islands economy, our local businesses and Caymanians have not received the maximum potential benefit from this international business.

Madam Speaker, we cannot expect a Government to do everything in four years. But the key things need to be done. And this has not been done. We have not seen the licks that we are going to take yet. We need to provide industry with the necessary policy and legislative support. How else will businesses compete? How else will we feel the trickle-down effect of rent, purchasing at the Duty Free for gifts at Christmas? How else will we have the trickle-down effect of supporting small businesses, restaurants? Madam Speaker, some people in the country fail to realise just how much this sector does and that foreign business actually contributes to these Islands. Every local business gets its benefit.

How else have we been able to have the kind of standard of living that we have had? The SPS fails to deliver any of this. Instead, it reads like a long political campaign speech. The only difference is that this time it will fall on ears that are less trusting of the PPM after having four years of unfulfilled promises.

The Caymanian public wants action to make their lives better, and the future prospects of the Cayman Islands for our children brighter. The PPM has been in a preparation and planning mode since the election, but has not delivered. No example is more prevalent than that of the schools.

The consensus on education was prepared from 2005. Remember? And money was voted every year on the new schools. Every year! And today, we still do not have the schools. Admittedly, some start has been made. But we do not have the privilege of having the audited financial statements to see how the money allocated for schools was spent, and what has really been spent to get us to the embryonic stage that we have reached. Once more I restate how disappointed I am at this state of affairs. All of this significantly impairs our ability to properly hold the Government to account.

Madam Speaker, the global economic recession will have to be wrestled with for the next few years. I think it foolhardy for the Government to talk about increasing revenues in the next few years when they see the mess, and they admit—you are not blind Bartemaeus—they see. The full impact of the downturn in economic activity, as I said Madam Speaker, has not yet been fully felt by these Islands. As I said earlier, from February of this year . . . I called on the Government . . . well, from my budget speech [debate] of 2007 I called on the Government (in February, though) on this side of the House through a duly moved motion to re-think the reckless expenditure level of his Government and prepare the country's coffers for a future that will need the Government in a financial position to cushion the blow of this economic slowdown.

In what has now become the characteristic of the PPM, the Leader of Government Business politically postured and refused the motion, saying not on the kindest of mornings would he accept the motion. It was an insult to the civil servants to ask them to re-jig their expenditure and to redraw their plans. Only a few weeks later he had to admit that things were going awry in the global economy and, thus, we would be affected more than the $200-odd thousand that we were losing in revenue.

I sat there that morning and I really said to myself, You know, I have to pity the Leader of Government Business if [he] does not see what is coming down the pipes because every television station of worth that talks about economic affairs was blaring this thing out day after day. Yet he could not see it. Now, the Government has come to the realisation that the slowdown does have an impact on the revenue of the country and they are embarking on an expected curtailment exercise.

Madam Speaker, this is the same Government whose economic wisdom suggested that it was not appropriate to reduce expenditure in advance of a recession, to prepare for its impact. This is the same Leader of Government Business now saying this, but rather now has opted to make cutbacks during the arrival of the recession—the time where the Government is needed most. If this is good economic management, if this is good leadership, if this is good economic sense, Mr. Leader of Government Business, then tell me!

Madam Speaker, politics should not allow for such ill-conceived and distorted decisions as made by the PPM Government on that day. We will recall the Leader of Government Business suggesting in his budget that we could talk ourselves out of a recession. Even the simplest of economic assessments would show that the economic challenges faced in the Cayman Islands are caused by factors beyond our control. The Cayman Islands Government must be able to plan and project into the future and prepare the country for such slowdowns.

The reality for the Islands is that we are in the least prepared state. We find ourselves facing a global recession with our domestic debt rising at an all time high, our major industries being at an all time low, and national motivation being troubled and confused by the lack of direction given by the Government. Madam Speaker, I do not want to be perceived as preaching gloom and doom, and some may say that I am wrong. We have some more months yet to feel whether I am wrong.

I know this: I was right in 2007, and I was right in February when I said let us re-jig and let us re-draw our policies. So, if you want to say I am wrong now, say it! But you better say it with tongue in cheek.

I believe the fundamentals for the future of the Cayman Islands are strong and healthy. I have always approached the leadership of this country in a realistic and pragmatic manner, starting by a clear understanding of where we are and how this compares to where we want to be. I find that is the best approach for developing the appropriate plan to get us there. This is in contrast to the current Leader of Government Business whose approach seems to be Alice in Wonderland or the state of affairs of the Emperor's new clothes.

His approach is to pretend that the problem does not exist. I do not have his words, but it is contained in his last budget speech. Something like, if we do not think we have an economic crisis, then we don't have it.

I do not know. Pretty bad.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But I say this: As the Opposition, we saw it coming and told him so. Sorry he didn't see it. Maybe he was trying to be positive. But I tell you what; it is a pretty bad positive spin that he gave it.

We must plan and save in times such as we are currently experiencing. We can say that they have spent more than any other Government, and their borrowing is at an unprecedented level. And now that the Government is needed to stabilise the economy . . . let's see. We have seen what the response is so far. Let's see what the balance is going to be.

We were hoping to receive a strategic plan today that would outline a way out of this slowdown, this period that we just started in to. Instead, I do not think that realistic strategy is there. Madam Speaker, the Opposition is challenging the Government to develop strategies that deliver sustainable economic opportunities, policies that will rebuild our economic pillars rather than mere political rhetoric and the blame game.

As a country we must examine the value of our tourism product and ways of enhancing that value. To this end, we still worry . . . I worry about the tourism product.

I had to chuckle, Madam Speaker, when the Leader of Government Business was lauding the cruise sector. I have a speech in the Hansard where he talked about how bad it was for the tourism sector in this country. On, and on, and on he went that day criticising the cruise industry. I am glad that he knows how important it is. He didn't seem to know that day.

Madam Speaker, there are serious challenges and a lot of worry ahead. The financial industry, the tourism sector, and small businesses, mom and pop operations are being hit. Where are the Government's plans to better . . . The Government can come behind, as I know they will, and say how much they are doing or that they have done. They will blow out of proportion anything done in the past, but I say to them that a government that has been complacent in respect to so many major activities and initiatives in the country should not expect the country to believe that in their twilight hour they can magically solve the problems that they have compounded or created.

The next budget must contain a strategic approach also to the rebuilding of the Sister Islands of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman—I stress, a strategic approach. Cayman Brac was hit the hardest and has experienced significant damage. This is an opportunity to rebuild better than before, but requires a major financial contribution by the Government. We cannot sit down and wait on the private sector. If done wisely and strategically, Cayman Brac will become an even greater place to live, work and visit. With the hardships they face now, they do not need the worry of their future resting on their shoulders for soon-come. This remedy must be substantial and immediate.

Not to say there has not been something done. The Minister of Communications and Infrastructure gave a good précis of all that he was doing. But I hope that the Leader of Government Business and all his colleagues take what he said, listen to what he said, get the Hansard with what he said, because what he said is something similar to what I am saying—more needs to be done and done now.

In conclusion, I call on the Government to deliver—not promise. I call on the Government to cure, rather than finding excuses. I call on the Government to act rather than to just plan. I call on the Government to provide real solutions, rather than to create solutions that compound the problems. I call on the Government to encourage unity in the country during these difficult times rather than the blame game and the divides. I call on them to fortify our collective national resolve to exceed as a country and, finally, to heed the genuine offers for assistance despite the source.

Madam Speaker, another SPS has been delivered; this one much longer than the others—the PPM's campaign agenda. My best hope for these Islands and our people is that the present Government, the present Administration will not be the Captain of the good ship Cayman Islands after May 2009, God willing.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, and I pray to God that he continues to bless us and these Islands.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to offer a few comments on what has been presented to this House.

This honourable House, through the processes of the Public Management and Finance Law, mandates the Government to come and give a strategic policy statement that outlines where the country is heading and just how it is going to go about formulating the next financial year's budget. So, we are now looking at the Strategic Policy Statement that would be underpinning the 1 July 2009 through 30 June 2010 budget. If we are to take this activity seriously, because this ought to be the platform from which we as a Legislative Assembly try our endeavour best to offer comment that we would hope the Government would take into account after arriving at its position based on its perception of the society and the economy and world affairs . . . Madam Speaker, I am not optimistic that that will happen.

The truth is that I am not optimistic that this country has the capacity to run the system that the Public Management and Finance Law envisioned. As we are now in the seventh year of this system, I have yet to truly see a strategic policy statement that is underpinned from a very high level with meaningful data and analysis that would allow a Legislative Assembly to look at and make comment on.

It is easy to come up with all of the specific statistics from the Economic and Statistics Office which obviously would be underpinned by varying government department agencies and their perception of what is happening in the economy. But that has to be the support for where the country is trying to get to through the government budget, where the public sector is hoping to get to through a government budget that is going to be prepared on the basis of this Strategic Policy Statement.

Madam Speaker, I guess in all fairness to get from a pure cash-based system (where you were using profile budgeting in a very rudimentary inaccurate system as we did) to one that is much more sophisticated and ought to allow the Legislative Assembly (and, by extension, the wider community and public whom we represent) to have a clear view of how the executive arm of government perceives the situation that exists in the country in all facets because this is not just about numbers. . . We often get caught up and lost and muddled in the fact that somehow this is purely about numbers.

Government is not a company. Government is the ultimate social agent in all countries. It has business pieces to it. It has taxation tools; it has certain laws that allow it to raise revenue, et cetera. But, ultimately, Government is about delivering key services to its community. How that is all wrapped up and underpinned by a clear strategic policy statement is something I do not believe we are quite achieving the way in which we need to and we ought to.

In our system of Government, this is a real opportunity for the non-executive members of the Legislative Assembly to try in some way to influence where the Government is going to go in the next year. Unlike more republic type systems like the US practices, where there are varying Houses and those Houses themselves have the capacity and constitutional authority to produce their own budgets and to challenge the executive, we do not have that in Cayman. I have said in this House, Madam Speaker, with you in the Chair and other Speakers in the Chair, that this piece of activity is one that even we as legislators, have not recognised the utility of and what it is really meant to achieve.

Now, I can only presume that in their caucus the backbench members of the Government clearly understand and have clearly deciphered these 55 pages that were just presented to this House, and understand what strategies are behind all those words. I can say objectively that it is difficult for me to say that we have a strategic way forward in the country.

Let us use one example, Madam Speaker, as to how this whole process clearly, clearly in my opinion, does not come close to meeting the objective of the Public Management and Finance Law. If we look at the 2008/9 Budget, because this was rather important, and if we compare it to page 18 of the actual Strategic Policy Statement, we have the aggregate financial targets of Government (on page 18). The very first column you come to is the 2008/9 revised budget.

The 2008/9 revised budget has the big picture, financial targets that the budget (which we just approved) would have had. And if we go to the Annual Plan & Estimates on page 20, and we compare operating revenue in the budget we just approved $528,207,000 . . . on 10 December a few months later, that has been revised to $525,190,000.

Operating expenses were projected in the Annual Plan & Estimates at $501,297,000. Today . . . well, according to the . . . as at the preparation of this SPS, that number is now revised to $490,412,000.

The surplus before financing was projected at that time (in the Annual Plan & Estimates) to be $26,910,000. It is now projected at $35,078,000.

Financing expenses were $13,437,000 in the AP&E. It has now been revised to $14,953,000.

The bottom line (as they would say, Madam Speaker) net surplus, $13,473,000 in the AP&E; and $20,125,000 in the most recent SPS.

Madam Speaker, let us not even start to get into any debate about the voracity or accuracy of the numbers and whether Government is going to achieve this. Let us not get into that particular line of debate. Let us just look at the exercise that this House is supposed to be undertaking.

The exercise we should be undertaking is to clearly show the country where we are getting to. We are close to halfway through the financial year. Yet, of that $11.1 million of reduced expenses . . . what services have been impacted? What is it that the Government is not doing? Not going to do? How does that now impact 2010?

I just use this as one example of what I am talking about when I make the comment that as the system expected in terms of this critically important piece of the process, in my humble opinion, the strategic phase and our debate in this Legislative Assembly surrounding the strategic phase is just as important as the actual budget phase. This is the time and the opportunity that the House has to lend its voice to the loud and thundering voice of the executive arm of Government.

In other words, the SPS is what the people in the Glass House (who also happen to have a seat down here in the Legislative Assembly) have said. Those of us who are not up there ought to be turning our minds to what the Strategic Policy Statement means for the next year, the next 12 months of our country's history? How can we critically look at it and either approve, modify, or disprove it based on our individual vote?

Madam Speaker, we are not going to get into the whole issue on the fact that it is late because everybody will have all the different reasons again. I am not particularly interested in engaging in that line of debate. The reality is that if this critically important part of our process is going to have the impact and import that it should have, as envisioned by the Public Management and Finance Law, we should have [taken a break], just as we do during budget time, so that the non-executive Members (those of us who do not carry the title honourable and/or Minister and sit in the Glass House and run this country on a day-to-day basis) could have the opportunity to clearly understand where the executive arm of Government is taking this country or proposing to take this country and then provide meaningful input, meaningful debate, so that in its deliberations, then, to actually formulate the budget that this SPS underpins, the voice and will of the House would at least have the opportunity to be heard and taken into account.

Madam Speaker, this is just one other example of why the Minister of Education and I do not agree on a lot of fundamental points on the Constitution. He loves the word "sophisticated". I keep telling him and I keep telling people, yes we have a sophisticated business sector, as it relates to the financial services industry; but when it comes to the politics and the administration of this country, we are still not where we need to be. We still have a long way to go. It is only when we get that level of maturity and sophistication that we, as Members of this House, will realise the import of what we are undertaking. Take it seriously. Take it seriously and try to ensure that the product is the best product.

This is not about sides. When it comes to the budget and voting on the budget, yes, that's when it is distinctly about sides and people casting their vote to say I approve of this, because this is still at the negotiating stage. But we don't have that level of sophistication in Cayman. We are still so immature, so sadly immature on the 10th day of December 2008.

In my humble submission, there is going to be a hope for a better future, to the running an administration of this House as it relates to the budget and how an executive treats this House if the people do what I believe they are going to do on May 20, 2009.

Madam Speaker, if we look again at some of the information provided to the House thus far, as Members we ought to be thinking soberly and clearly and questioning whether or not we trust the information and therefore believe that the outcomes are realisable or achievable.

Now, I was surprised when I did that quick analysis over the lunch break between the information that this SPS has and [what] the budget contained. We heard varying utterances, in particular those at Cabinet press briefings when they talked about revenue shortfalls and projected revenue shortfalls some weeks or months ago. Yet now, we see that the projections are that they are only going to be some $3 million off. I remember much larger numbers being talked about some weeks ago.

Madam Speaker, another key piece of data that I presume is being used by the Government in its projections on revenue must be its perceived growth of GDP in the country. On table 2 of the 2008/9 Strategic Policy Statement, at that time (for the 2008 year) the Government was predicting real GDP growth of 3.2 per cent for the Cayman Islands, 1.9 per cent for the US, 4.8 per cent for the world. Twelve months hence, those revised numbers are now 1.5 per cent for the Cayman Islands; 1.6 per cent for the US; 3.9 per cent for the world.

It seems to me that one of the key underpinning pieces of information the Government would be using in formulating its way forward would be its perception of real GDP growth. So those numbers . . . and if you look at 2007, you had the same thing. The predictions for the US and the world . . . we get that data from outside sources. This is not our made-up data. It is obviously very close to what the reality was—in 2007, 2 per cent for the US; whereas 12 months ago we were looking at 1.9 per cent. It was very close. At this stage, 5.0 per cent, versus 12 months ago we were looking at 5.2 per cent. But when it comes to the Cayman Islands, 2.2 per cent is what we are looking at now. Back then we were looking at 3.8 per cent. In both instances, some 50 per cent off.

This year, 2009, we are saying .8 per cent. If the trend holds, that means there will be some class of legislators here 12 months from now, God willing, looking at it and it will be somewhere around 4 per cent, if the trend holds. What does that mean for Government revenue? And how accurate will our projections be?

Madam Speaker, I think all of my honourable colleagues in this House know that there is no piece of legislation or motion or business that comes here that I do not take very seriously, because this business of representing the people and your country is very important. This is not a game about seats and who is going to win power and who likes who. What Government does and how Government behaves has a tremendous impact on our communities. But it also has a tremendous impact on our business sector.

Let me round off this whole point on cuts. As the House has still not been told where the $10.1 million is going, where those cuts are being made. We are only left to speculate and guess. As district representatives down in our beautiful district of West Bay, we were told in writing by a critically important agency of Government there that some of their activities were being curtailed and there were certain activities they would not be able to undertake because of the budget cuts.

What we would have hoped was that the Government would have come to the Legislative Assembly and would have clearly [brought] us up to date on what they foresaw happening in this current financial year, and that they would have built a bridge with concise information as to how that would then impact the 2009/10 year so that Members of the House, who wear another hat as members of the Finance Committee, would clearly understand what is happening to the year end 2009, how it impacts the year 2010 to make informed decisions, have informed debate and informed dialogue.

Madam Speaker, I believe at this juncture of our history governments get off pretty lucky because the truth is we do not necessarily have the type of society . . . and when I say society, I mean all facets of society, from the press right down to the man on the street who themselves clearly understand what it is that we are supposed to be doing on behalf of the people. So, because of that lack of understanding, governments do not come under pressure.

Madam Speaker, if we were in any other country that had any real level of sophistication from that standpoint, we would not dare conduct this piece of business the way we do. In my opinion we do it like kids on the playfield when we really should be talking like executives in the boardroom really understanding, really debating and putting forward critical points and counterpoints that would form a way forward. One day, Madam Speaker. One day, hopefully in the not-too-distant future.

Madam Speaker, as you hurriedly try to get through these 55 pages, the majority of which makes for very nice reading . . . it will form a very nice document that will form a part of the official records of our beloved Cayman Islands. But the truth is—and this is no disrespect to the honourable Leader of Government Business or anyone else, because this is what we have always done—the truth is that its usefulness and utility is so low, in my opinion. I am not quite sure it is worth the paper it's written on.

Not that it does not make good reading, and it has some very specific points that people would read along and say, Oh yes, I did not realise that we had X amount increase in tourism, this that and the other. But the truth is we would have hoped that we would have had a very clear executive summary and not something technical like this SPS. Yes, the SPS itself has some technical merit to it, but [the way] we put forward an official record in this House [is] by debate [and we are] not able to be at that level that would allow for the type of decision making, think and re-think that the Public Management and Finance Law has in spirit.

Madam Speaker, there are a few points that I believe do require some comment. For example, on page 19 of the speech supporting the SPS delivered by the Leader of Government Business where a very rudimentary comparative is made of economic growth apparently under the PPM Government versus the UDP Government. It says that the economy grew 6.5 per cent in 2005; 4.6 per cent in 2006; 1.9 per cent in 2007. Of course, Madam Speaker, it then goes on to compare and say that it grew 2 per cent in 2003; .9 per cent in 2004. And I quote, "If our critics wish to be taken seriously they need to spell out clearly how they propose to do better than we have."

Humph! Madam Speaker, I know it would be unparliamentary of me to call the Government liars. So I won't. But there are some small details missing.

One small detail is that there was the 9/11 attacks in 2001; the SARS epidemic; Hoof and Mouth Disease and the impact that those three events alone had on the world's economy. Of course, it makes no mention that 2004 was interrupted by Hurricane Ivan. Of course it makes no mention of the fact that we had a record per capita destruction and, therefore, the Hurricane Ivan rebuilds gave this economy at least 24 months worth of fuel. Just as a car or boat engine needs gas or fuel of some sort, so too does an economic engine, and so it was quite cutely omitted by the Government.

But now that they have spent the Ivan fuel, the real performance that they can boast of is 2007, which is 1.9 per cent. So, let's say now that we are going to compare the differing events that had a negative impact on the local economy . . . sorry, the events of 2001 that had a negative impact on the local economy and the economy had to rebound.

As we all know we had very negative global events that naturally had devastating effects on our local economy. After 9/11, tourism suffered immensely. SARS, Hoof and Mouth Disease also did the same. Twenty-four months later the economy starts to rebound, gets up to 2 per cent. We have the devastation of Hurricane Ivan and we have tremendous rebuilds. In fact, Madam Speaker, we still have people in trailer homes in this country and we still have the National Recovery Fund doing Ivan work. So, while that fuel has been used up, we see that by 2007 there is 1.9 per cent growth.

If you are going to offer up these comparatives . . . but let me interject here, Madam Speaker. This is one of the reasons why Government purposely treats the SPS stage this way, because if they give you 55 pages of information, no time to peruse it and make meaningful contribution, they would hope that you would miss those pieces of information. You see? But Madam Speaker, I can say that in my life in this House, as long as the people of West Bay put me here, if I am ever put in a position of being an executive this House will never be treated the way that I have seen it treated. Never! At the end of the day they would have to kick me out first before I agree to behave in the way in which the House is treated.

Madam Speaker, it is easy to put all these nice little political statements in hoping that they will be missed because we do not have any time to really analyse and scrutinise. But those are the sorts of points that would be overlooked if we actually did not sit here and really work through the lunch break and try to get something done. But it should not be that way. It ought not to be that way. It just goes to show how unsophisticated we really are.

Before anybody could get me to agree to all that flowery language, they ought to be able to show how sophistication and maturity is demonstrated here. When sophistication and maturity is demonstrated here, that then tells me that we are making some progress in this country.

Madam Speaker, I know I am putting you in a tough spot, but as a good friend of mine in this Legislative Assembly says, facts are stubborn things. And stubborn they are!

Madam Speaker, another point that caused me to have a tad of confusion and caused me to scratch my head was when I heard in the statement delivered by the Honourable Leader of Government Business on page 25, and I quote, "Overall, year to date, the tourism industry is up 8 per cent for the 10-month period of January through October 2008. This is well ahead of predictions of only 2 per cent annual growth in global tourism this year by the United Nations World Tourism Organization."

Again, that is an impressive-sounding statement and would leave one with a very favourable impression. And so as a Member of the House, if that is a piece of information I am going to use to either support, not support, or suggest modification to the SPS, then that would be one that I would tick on the support line because if you see that our tourism product is performing that well, then we would naturally feel good about the projections and predictions the Government is making.

What caused the confusion, Madam Speaker, is that on page 7 of the statement delivered by the honourable Financial Secretary (Third Official Member), the last sentence of paragraph 2 says, "Overall, tourist arrivals went down by 8.7 per cent in 2007 and by 10.5 per cent in the first half of 2008. Consequently, tourism receipts dipped by 6.6 per cent in 2007 to reach $399.1 million."

So, Madam Speaker, if I try to get from the fact that the honourable Third Official Member's statement says that we are down 10.5 per cent in the first half of 2008, that would take me up to 30 June. That would leave us July, August, September and October. So in four months, apparently, the growth in four months—the four slowest months in tourism, Madam Speaker . . . let me repeat that: the four slowest months in tourism—we had such robust growth and we had so many visitors come that we then turned that around to 8 per cent growth for the 10-month period. I would then have to really applaud the Government. This is really miraculous economic times.

Excellent job guys.

Spend all that money on tourism. Don't spend any on the financial services where the money really needs to be spent. That marketing money—well spent!

Now, Madam Speaker, just that one point, if it weren't so serious, it would be funny. But I am sure we are going to get an explanation; I am confident of that.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: You better believe it!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I am hoping that we are . . . and I hear the honourable Leader of Government Business saying “you better believe it” so. . . that’s great.

Madam Speaker, let’s start talking about why I made the original underpinning comment of my contribution, which is that the strategic policy and how we go about this business does not work. It is not in line with the spirit of the Public Management and Finance Law. This is a classic example now to prove that.

On page 28 of the 55-page statement by the Honourable Leader of Government Business, where he speaks of us not trying to be on the green list from the perspective of the OECD in terms of our international business sector, at the very top of page 28 it says, and I quote: “We intend to continue with our policy of constructive engagement in relation to the OECD exercise (and others). Having done our analysis, in consultation and from an ‘insider’s’ vantage point, we are confident on that basis that the track we are pursuing will achieve the right results for the Cayman Islands.”

Madam Speaker, the one thing that I believe would have been critically necessary at that point for this House to clearly understand what the executive is doing is to tell us what these right results are. What are the strategic results that the Government is speaking about here? How are we spending the money to achieve those results? There may be some information they may wish not to share. I cannot think of any in that sphere that would be information the Government would not necessarily want to share. There might be some unspecific points, or unspecific appointments, there may be some things they do not want to share because they do not want our competition to know everything we are doing. That’s natural. Understood!

But certainly, the Legislative Assembly as the body that votes [Aye or No] to endorse the Government’s SPS to say, ‘Okay, go ahead boys, use this as the basis for planning 12 months’ of this country’s history and financial affairs,’ you would have thought that those are the classic types of areas to have critical information coming forward. And trust me; it does not need to be 55 pages. I could easily envision a statement not even half this length, but giving this House the type of thought-provoking information that would then cause us to be able to make an informed decision.

Madam Speaker, when we look at the other . . . let me just round off one point on the financial services industry.

At page 38 (sic), I quote, “I should also like to note that the government has had a productive series of meetings and discussions with the private sector, not only on international developments, but also on issues and trends within local industry and ways of moving in partnership to address matters that can secure our continued success.”

Madam Speaker, whether we are thinking of Keynesian economics or whoever . . . some of us may like Friedman and his views; however we view the world and view the economy—

The Speaker: Honourable Member, would you give me that page number because my page 38—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Page 30. Sorry, Madam Speaker.

In this world, once you have a free market economy (and in particular one that is of the sophistication and competes globally the way our international financial services centre competes), what is needed is a government that listens, gets the point, ensures that policies, legislation, is crafted and quickly put in place when needed to assist meaningfully with the marketing of the jurisdiction and protection of the jurisdiction’s reputation, but, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, at that point to stay out of the way and let the private sector do what it does best—create wealth by new businesses opening to service new products, new clients and provide employment and scholarship opportunities for Caymanians.

And when the relationship is such that there are those who believe, somehow, that the Government is the leader of the industry is when we run into problems. Madam Speaker, from my experience in the private sector, I know that at the end of the day what you want is the right regulatory framework, legislative framework that allows the Island to truthfully hold its hand on its heart and say we have the regimes, we have the mechanisms to hold people to account who are the practitioners to ensure we do not have rogue practitioners out there and that the business of moving the industry forward is left to them. That is their business.

The government is not a trust company. The government is not private banking. The government is not a hedge fund administrator. That is the private sector. So, we must ensure that the way in which we work along with the private sector allows them to grow and do what they do best and have done well with over the years. No doubt about it. If you look at the growth in key areas, the private sector has done a tremendous job.

If you look at the Mutual Funds Law and how it assisted the then government . . . Madam Speaker, I can remember my time in New York. One of the off-shore hedge fund leaders in my old firm had on his desk . . . One day I was working on an engagement that he was a partner on, and he had on his desk a specific piece of amending legislation that had been out for consultation and he was giving comment on it. At the end of the day, I will never forget the one thing he said to me. He said, the biggest difference between the Cayman Islands and other jurisdictions is that you consult, you get it right, you get it done. It does not take 10, 12, 18 months. That is what the industry needs.

Big picture: The country needs to understand that we are not the Islands time forgot; we are not the simple little old backwater that no one cares about. And the reality is that offshore financial centres will forever be under threat and will forever be the envy of many of those in the larger industrial countries. So, the reality is how we play in the world centres such as Washington, New York, London; how we as the Cayman Islands conduct our business is of critical importance to the survival and growth of the industry. That is the key area that Government needs to assist with. In my mind, that is the key area that Government needs to do the work in and work hand-in-hand with the private sector to ensure that we survive.

As we know, there are many out there in this world that would not be any happier if we could be shut down tomorrow. Madam Speaker, We have had an ongoing dialogue, debate, disagreement, with a particular position that the Government has taken as it relates to how the economy gets stimulated and the impact different stimuli has on the economy.

I remember the honourable Leader of Government Business recently saying that it was fortuitous that a lot of the construction around the new government schools was now taking root because . . . and he went on to describe how that was going to add stimulus to the economy as things had started to slow down. So, on page 31 we see again this whole issue of stimulating the economy.

Madam Speaker, I do not believe you can search the world and find any right-thinking individual who believes that government construction is the type of stimulus that really can pull an economy if it is in the doldrums. Otherwise you would hear President-elect Barack Obama talking about all of the construction government is going to undertake.

What is key is broad-based impact that allows more purchasing power and increased consumer confidence for people to spend money. I have certainly never said that the building of these schools does not cause money to be spent and a specific number of workers to work. I understand they live somewhere because I understand the vast majority of persons on the projects are in the rental market, and they go to grocery stores. I will not even get into the issue of what a person does with his excess money, whether or not it is kept here or sent home. That is neither here nor there. The reality is that, yes, you have that single type of injection.

However, the type of activity the majority of leaders talk about government engaging in is broad based and reaches the vast majority of people. That is the reason you have heard the President-elect of the United States take a slightly different position on taxation as some may have thought he would have taken, being a democrat. He understands that it is all about trying to put as much money in people's pockets as possible to allow them to have access to money to spend. You need to increase purchasing power. When you increase purchasing power to the masses they spend money. When they spend money, you avoid layoffs, companies make more money, companies reinvest and you have the type of multiplier effect and stimuli on the economy that you would like to have.

Take the Cayman Islands. I can remember about 12 to 18 months ago when I was on a particular talk show and I was a guest with the managing director of CUC. In a country that has indirect taxation, government has a peculiar difficulty in trying to use its taxation system to cause economic stimulus. In other words, because we are not a country that taxes 10 per cent of everyone's income and all of a sudden if government said this year it is going to be 7.5 per cent, automatically people would have 2.5 per cent more of their base income to spend. Because we do not have that type of system there are a lot of opportunities.

The topic of the talk show was Cost of Living. He was one, there was someone from insurance, and I think another representative (and I am struggling to remember who that would have been at that stage). But we got down into that whole issue of the government's tax on fuel. I clearly remember my good friend, the Minister of Works, giving me a nice little beating publicly saying that was not feasible because if government did it then they would have to tax somewhere else.

Now, let us make sure the House understands one thing clearly—tax breaks versus tax offsets. [They] are two completely different things. If something is revenue neutral, that means that you would cut taxes in one place, cut revenue in one place, but increase it somewhere else to get it. That was not what I proposed. I proposed a tax cut.

From then, anyone who was paying attention to what is going on in the world knew that this was coming. This Government did not listen because they were still running on the Ivan fuel—fool's gold. Still churning along on the Ivan fuel and thinking that everything was well.

Now, I must say that after the Government initially saying that this was impossible, they came along and did it.

These are the sorts of things that can cause the type of stimulus that they desire, that is, putting money directly into the pockets of the people so that at the end of every month everyone has a little bit more and will not do what is natural because, naturally, when people start to see that their position is less, is contracted at the end of each month—

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, the Honourable Minister would like a list of points that I could clarify for him and his Government. He could pass them to the Serjeant in writing and I will be happy to. I'd be happy! You can tell me how much time I have, Madam Speaker. I will be more than happy to. As I see it, that is what we are supposed to be doing.

But he missed one point about the schools, that I might go back to in a little bit, because I am not sure if you heard that and heard how construction politics is not actually the type of classic economic stimulus they are claiming it is. And they know that. I know the Minister of Education knows it because after he sat down he listened. I know he knows it.

[inaudible interjections and laughter]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: These are economics, though. He's a lawyer. No man knows all things.

So, Madam Speaker, the Government came along and they did it. After saying it could not be done, they did it. And every month we see in our CUC bill the amount that is saved. I am unconvinced that with some will and with negotiations with the private sector the Government of the Cayman Islands can get to the point where it still can start to utilise indirect taxation policies to more meaningfully be able to provide relief when we want to provide relief to consumers so that we can have—

[loud electronic interruption]

The Speaker: Telephones interrupt whether they are on silent or on vibrate and we are [losing] a lot of recording in the Hansards at these particular times when things like this happen. So, even if they are on quiet they still cause a problem.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: And, Madam Speaker, the truth hurts. So, whilst I know at this stage the Government will want to come behind and try in some way to—just as was done on page 28 of this statement—put a spin to what I have said, the reality is that facts are stubborn things. I know that the Government clearly understands some of what we are saying. Not everything. Some of it is new. Some of it is a bit new so they will have to go away and think about it a little while. Hopefully they will wind up making the right decisions.

Madam Speaker, what was revealing in this statement, though, and it really brought into focus why the Government initially resisted the call for taking off at least some of the duty on CUC fuel. Why the Government rejected the Motion that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and I brought to this House in February is brought to bear on page 32, paragraph 2, the last sentence: “The fact that our economy is continuing to grow is made even more remarkable in the context of the recent revelation that the US economy has been in recession for the past year.”

I am not quite sure where the Government gets its information or who it listens to, but I am not quite sure that this economy, the US economy's downturn has been any recent revelation. Many commentators have been talking for a long time about the weak fundamentals in the US economy and a recession.

Madam Speaker, the truth is as we all know, there are those out there in the world who have the textbook definition—two consecutive quarters of negative growth is a classic definition. And that is the classic definition that is adhered to by many of the more traditional commentators. But I think more recent and informed thinkers look at the fundamentals of an economy. And when you look at the fundamentals in the US context, it seems like housing starts, unemployment, consumer confidence, those particular measures, for quite some time those who understood what was going on have said, Look, yes there are some textbook definitions that we are talking about — two consecutive quarters of growth and we are just looking at GDP as the measure. But underpinning that, look at the weak fundamentals that we know are crucial to the US economy either in growth or in recession.

And so the reality is, that is why the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and I brought the motion. That is why I spoke the way I did on the last SPS. But because I know the Government and this House do not take this seriously, I know they do not remember. They will probably say, “Why didn't you say it last year?” Well, I did say it last year. We were right then, and we are right now.

The Minister of Education is still insisting we are wrong despite the fact that the world's economy is down and despite the fact that his own SPS—his own SPS—and he was out of the Chamber so let me make sure because he may not have gotten this. Let me make sure the Minister of Education understands this, that 12 months ago his SPS—his SPS! He is a member of the Cabinet. This is his SPS!

His SPS that he voted [for] as a member of the Cabinet that was sent to this Legislative Assembly predicted that the Cayman Islands was going to have 3.2 per cent real GDP growth. It is now saying 1.5 per cent, Mr. Minister. Who is right? And who is wrong? But, oh, I forgot. He's a lawyer! He does not understand economics. He does not understand what we are talking about. I did not realise. I apologise.

Well, you see, where arrogance comes in, Mr. Minister of Tourism, is when the Minister says that I am wrong, yet his numbers prove—prove, prove, prove—

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: The strategy is wrong? Okay, send me a note on the strategy.

I apologise for having the wrong strategy, Madam Speaker.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You don't have the wrong strategy.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But, Madam Speaker, at the end of the day I think there could be another little point here coming in. The truth hurts. That may actually be what is coming into play.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I must say that the truth is one of these days we are going to get to the stage where this exercise reaches the level that it needs and ought to get to. However, Madam Speaker, if we look generally and move around . . . and I know the Minister of Education and other Ministers move around, so I know they are hearing the same stuff that we are hearing. I know they know about the numbers of people who have projects on hold in this country.

And, Madam Speaker, at the end of the day, I just said . . . I don't know, I need another language . . . let me make sure that I say this and it is understood: The building of any government project is going to put money into the economy. Blind Bartemaeus knows that!

What I am saying is that the stimuli the Government is proclaiming it to be, is a farce. It does not have the type of stimulus that the Government is stating. But I agree with them when they say that it is better than nothing. Of course spending X millions of dollars—

[inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: How many people are debating?

Honourable Member, would you please sit down one moment for me?

Every Member that is talking across the Floor, whether it is Government or it is Opposition, you have an opportunity to debate when it is your turn. Could we now have some semblance of order until the Second Elected Member for West Bay has finished his debate?

Thanks.

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: That's right, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: I do not want to carry on. I made a ruling and that is it. Thanks.

Would you continue your debate, please?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for your most opportune and fair, timely and kind ruling.

The Speaker: Don't push it.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Education asked what we would do. Let me repeat, because I recognise that I did cover the point rather quickly and perhaps it does need a little further expansion.

Madam Speaker, I gave one example of the Opposition providing the country with good leadership, good suggestions, and the Government jumped on the bandwagon and took some of the duty off the fuel as it relates to CUC. After getting up at their press conference and giving me a good flogging over it, they came around, they saw the logic and they did it.

The second point I made in that vein is that in our type of system of governance, where it is indirect taxation . . . we are not like the United States that has a direct base of tax and they can therefore use their policies and change that to create increased spending power in their economy to create profit for business simply by removing certain taxes. We know we cannot do that. We do not have that type of system.

The reality is, what all governments fear in Cayman is that if you ever try to tinker with our duty system as it relates to goods and services, in particular we are talking about goods—for example, groceries, et cetera, and durables, whether it be household durables, automobiles, what have you. What all Governments have always feared is that if they ever mess with the rates, how do they ensure that whatever rate reduction or relief they give to try to stimulate an economy is truly passed on to consumers, that it reaches consumers and causes consumers to have more money in their pockets, increased purchasing power and will spend more.

That is the reality of what is necessary for an economy to stay robust; it's when there is money in circulation; people are spending money, businesses are making money, they are not laying people off, not cancelling Christmas parties, and so that in a nutshell shows what allows the economy to continue to grow and expand.

Madam Speaker, what I said was that I did not believe it was beyond the capacity of Government to engage the private sector and be able to identify specific areas where it potentially could provide some form of relief that would allow people to have increased confidence because they have increased purchasing power.

Take for example the amount of money Caymanians will spend this Christmas season overseas and not in the local economy because they feel they can get a better bargain in Miami or Tampa. The reality is that we need to get to that stage because we do need to put more sophisticated systems and resources in place so that Government can have the potential to have a much more significant hand to guide and use Government policies as a tool to assist the economy with when necessary.

Madam Speaker, if we turn our heads back to the SPS, there are some other areas that cause us to scratch our heads and be a little confused as to exactly what information the Government is and is not using and potentially where it is coming from.

As I pointed out, this whole issue of the revelation that the US economy is in recession is on page 32. However, we do have an acknowledgement on page [23] that I will quote. Even though we were wrong, this is according to the statement by the Honourable Leader of Government Business on page 23: “Last January, in response to clear signs that the global economy was heading for a nosedive, the Ministry of Tourism convened a strategic meeting of tourism stakeholders for the purpose of reviewing and revising the destination’s marketing and sales strategies. Particular attention was paid to the United States as it is our leading market.”

It seems on the one hand, the Minister of Tourism was acknowledging that the global economy was heading for a nosedive and apparently trying to do something about it; but on the other hand the Honourable Leader of Government Business was chiding me and the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for having the audacity to bring a motion for the whole of Government to do what the Minister of Tourism was doing. The Minister of Tourism was engaging stakeholders and revising investments and strategies.

We brought a motion in February of this year—and that was January of last year, so let us make sure we are clear. That was January 2007, right? So that is right in line with all that the Opposition has been warning the Government about. Well, let us just say he means last January 2008. Whichever January he means, Madam Speaker, it is neither here nor there.

We brought the motion in February. The Honourable Leader of Government Business said that we were just trying to create something out of nothing and not on the kindest of mornings would he accept it. Yet, his own Minister of Tourism was doing the said same thing!

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Still being told that we are wrong.

Madam Speaker, I must say at this juncture, and we have to keep the debate at a high level. I am going to ignore all the cross talk.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: What this proves, Madam Speaker, what this unequivocally proves, is that while we were paying keen attention to what was going on, there seems to be a section of the Cabinet, at a minimum, that was not. And then there was another section of the Cabinet that was.

Now, I have never been in a Cabinet. And I haven’t visited this one. But this really is a startling revelation that has been unearthed by these statements. As I said earlier, if it was not serious, it would actually be funny.

Madam Speaker, how can it be that we could have one arm of the Cabinet doing one thing—and agreeing with us, trying to do what we were trying—and the rest saying no? What I have to say to the Minister of Tourism in this case is that when—

[inaudible]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I am not going to go that far.

When he hears good happening, he ought to stand up and say Look, the guys are right. We have to listen. I am doing the same thing. I am sure that if he had done that the rest of his Cabinet would have followed.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: That’s what Arden said about [inaudible] too.

Moment of Interruption—4.30 pm

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay, it is hour of interruption. Do you intend to carry on for another five or ten minutes? Or will it be longer than that?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I have quite a bit highlighted so . . .

The Speaker: Okay.

I will entertain a motion for the adjournment. And according to my figures, honourable Second Elected Member, I do not know if the Clerk concurs, I think you have 45 minutes left.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: What?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I move the adjournment of this honourable House until 11.30 tomorrow morning—

The Speaker: I cannot hear to what point the Minister is adjourning the House?

Honourable Minister, would you repeat that for me please?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of this honourable House until 11.30 tomorrow morning in order to facilitate the weekly Cabinet briefing.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 11.30 tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 4.31 pm the House stood adjourned until 11.30 am, Thursday, 11 December 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
THURSDAY
11 DECEMBER 2008
11.59 AM
Fourth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings Resumed at 12.01 pm

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Speaker: I have no messages or announcements.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF CABINET

The Speaker: I have received no statements from Ministers or Members of Cabinet.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Suspension of Standing Order 14(3)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, Thursday is the day for Private Members' Motions, but, in order to complete the debate on the Strategic Policy Statement (SPS), I would ask for the suspension of the relevant Standing Order to allow the continuation of that debate today, being Thursday.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, is the Leader of Government Business saying that we are only going to complete the debate on the motion under discussion and then move to Private Members' business, or continue with the other two Government Motions?

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, my understanding is that we have just been asked to suspend Standing Order 14(3) to allow Government Business to take precedence over Private Members' business on a Thursday, which would be the three motions set down on the Order Paper.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, that might be your understanding, Madam Speaker. But as a Member of the House, I listened carefully to what the Minister said, and he said to complete that. I am asking whether we are going to continue the other two motions after that. Is that it?

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Okay.

If you know that, then I will take your word for it, Madam Speaker. I did not know it.

But I would like to say, Madam Speaker, that the second motion, as I understand, has a deadline. I do not know what that deadline is, but if it is as important as I heard it was, then perhaps we should be doing that motion. I understand that there is a deadline, and if we do not meet that deadline we could lose funding. I am not sure, but that is what I understood.

I would think that that motion and the motion to deal with matters for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman should take precedence over the debate on the Strategic Policy Statement. I am but only one Member, but if that is what I am hearing then I would think that that would make sense.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, do you care to comment?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, it is not envisaged, unless Members on our side change their minds, for this debate that is continuing now to last for an inordinate amount of time. Hence, the reason why the Order Paper was prepared as it is.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 14(3) be suspended in order for Government Business to take precedence over Private Members' Motions. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes and Noes

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Division.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

Division No. 6/08-09

Ayes: 8

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts
Hon. V. Arden McLean
Hon. Charles E. Clifford
Hon. D. W. F. Ebanks
Hon. Samuel Bulgin
Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson
Ms. Lucille D. Seymour
Mr. W. Alfonso Wright

Noes: 4

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush

The Speaker: The result of the division is 8 Ayes, 4 Noes. The Ayes have it. Standing Order 14(3) is accordingly suspended.

Agreed by majority: Standing Order 14(3) suspended.

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 10/08-09—Approval of the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay continuing his debate on Government Motion No. 10/08-09.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When we adjourned yesterday, as the records will indicate and you will recall, we had gotten to a stage in my contribution that seemed to have elicited a lot of discussion among Members. In fact, at one point they got so unruly that you had to tell them to cease.

Madam Speaker, I believe some of that is because there seems to be confusion around some economic principles and some of the information that was shared with the House during the presentation by the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

One thing we ought to be very clear about is this whole issue of terms and definitions that are sometimes bandied about by us and people in the public realm as well. I want to ensure that we are very clear when it comes to this notion of a recession that there is indeed no universally accepted definition.

However, for clarity, and with your permission Madam Speaker, I would like to (and I brought an extra copy, so that if I need to I can lay it on the Table) draw the attention of the House to a number of widely regarded definitions of a recession and some of the hallmarks that are observed in different economies as predictors of a recession. This is important because it will go to show precisely why the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and I moved a motion in February 2008.

“In economics, the term recession generally describes the reduction of a country's gross domestic product (GDP) for at least two quarters. The usual dictionary definition is "a period of reduced economic activity", a business cycle contraction.

“The U.S.-based National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER) defines economic recession as: "a significant decline in [the] economic activity spread across the economy, lasting more than a few months, normally visible in real GDP growth, real personal income, employment (non-farm payrolls), industrial production, and wholesale-retail sales.

“The Attributes of Recession: In macroeconomics, a recession is a decline in a country's gross domestic product (GDP), or negative real economic growth, for two or more successive quarters of a year.

“An alternative, less accepted definition of recession is a downward trend in the rate of actual GDP growth as promoted by the business-cycle dating committee of the National Bureau of Economic Research. That private organization defines a recession more ambiguously as ‘a significant decline in economic activity spread across the economy, lasting more than a few months.’ A recession has many attributes that can occur simultaneously and can include declines in coincident measures of activity such as employment, investment, and corporate profits. A severe or prolonged recession is referred to as an economic depression.

“Predictors of a Recession: There are no completely reliable predictors. These are regarded to be possible predictors.

- In the U.S. a significant stock market drop has often preceded the beginning of a recession. However about half of the declines of 10% or more since 1946 have not been followed by recessions. In about 50% of the cases a significant stock market decline came only after the recessions had already begun.
- Inverted yield curve, the model developed by economist Jonathan H. Wright, uses yields on 10-year and three-month Treasury securities as well as the Fed's overnight funds rate. Another model developed by Federal Reserve Bank of New York economists uses only the 10-year/three-month spread. It is, however, not a definite indicator; it is sometimes followed by a recession 6 to 18 months later.
- The three-month change in the unemployment rate and initial jobless claims.”

Madam Speaker, if I move on, it is noteworthy as it relates to global recessions that: “There is no commonly accepted definition of a global recession, IMF regards periods when global growth is less than 3% to be global recessions. The IMF estimates that global recessions seem to occur over a cycle lasting between 8 and 10 years. During what the IMF terms the past three global recessions of the last three decades, global per capita output growth was zero or negative.

“Economists at the International Monetary Fund (IMF) state that a global recession would take a slowdown in global growth to three percent or less. By this measure, three periods since 1985 qualify: 1990-1993, 1998 and 2001-2002.”

Madam Speaker, when we look at the state of the US economy, the reason so many commentators and noted economists, not only in that country but around the world, have been saying for some 12 to 18 months that the US economy was, indeed, in a recession despite it not reaching the standard set by some in the classic realm of economics (that is, two successive periods of reduction in GDP) was because of some of the very classic hallmarks—jobless claims going up, the housing and credit crisis that existed in the country, that is, the housing market not only being soft but there being declines in housing starts; the state of the stock market in the US.

So, in February 2008, having observed at that point for the better part of 12 months all of the turbulence not only in the US but, indeed, across the globe, we thought it prudent at the time, as the Opposition, to formally bring a motion to this honourable House so that the House as a body would take note—and we hoped would have taken positive action—to have agreed with our analysis of the situation. That analysis was based on what other very credible people, noted economic and business minds, were not only saying overseas, but, indeed, in discussing the matter with many people locally. Despite our size, we have our share of people too who can look, observe, and make those sorts of determinations themselves. So, you do not always have to look overseas or to any particular institution's formal signaling before you act.

Madam Speaker, if I revert back to what was said informally across the Floor, one would be led to believe that because an official pronouncement had not been made by particular entities in the United States of America who are widely regarded as being a very authoritative voice as to the state of the economy, in bringing the motion in February, we (the Opposition) were perhaps wrong because that was not done.

Yet, Madam Speaker, if we look at what the US Government and some of the noted private entities, like the National Bureau of Economic Research, are now saying, they are saying that the US economy is indeed in a recession and has been in a recession for perhaps 12 months, that is, since December 2007.

Madam Speaker, if our internal capacity in the country is such that we have to wait 12 months before we truly acknowledge and act, I do not believe that bodes well.

Now, what is of interest is that when we actually turn our minds to what we do during a recession, we then have to question precisely how we, in the local sense, are going to continue to navigate these troubling times. Yesterday I said that, certainly, capital projects undertaken by the Government would assist. However, if their measured impact was questionable from the sense that they do not have the type of broad-based impact that you would like to have in the economy . . . what is of interest is that whilst the Government is lauding that as one of its combatants to these troubling times, we also see that the Government has put in place a defined hiring freeze and, indeed, is projecting a $20 million surplus for the 2009 year end; a $28 million surplus for the 2010 year end; a $29 million surplus for the 2011 year end; and a $32 million surplus for the 2012 year end.

The second and, perhaps, I dare say in recent times the more well accepted Government combatant to try and assist in warding off the potential effects of any sort of economic downturn locally, would be indeed the spending of Government. We see that in the US, for example, the Federal Government has taken the view that it ought to spend more. Indeed, its spending is now at a high that was only surpassed some almost 80 years ago. President-elect Obama has made it quite clear that the policy of deficit spending is indeed going to be the order of the day for the foreseeable future.

In a large sophisticated economy—in fact, the world economic power—they obviously have the capacity to follow through on those sorts of policies. We have a law that calls for a surplus in our budgeting. I believe that is wise. All of us I would say, as Members of this House, agree that that is wise and prudent in terms of our economic management. However, Madam Speaker, without the Government giving the House some sort of clear idea as to what this reduced $10 million in spending is going to be, we ought to question in our minds whether or not that is going to be counterproductive in terms of stimulating the economy. Indeed, if we are going to reduce that spending, will that serve to offset some of the potentially positive benefits of carrying on with the capital works projects which are all derived from borrowing and with it comes a long-term commitment and a drain on future revenue streams of the country?

You see, Madam Speaker, I noted that the Honourable Leader of Government Business mentioned a very noted economist, that is Keynes, who is widely held as the father of modern economic theory. Obviously, if you go strictly by the principles of his theory, during these times you indeed do engage in capital works as a government. However, Madam Speaker, I think all of us would know that the times in which he lived and the times in which his theory applied are very different than today's sophisticated modern economy. Hence the reason Mr. Milton Friedman, who many consider the father of neoclassic economist economics who grew up and was educated a staunch Keynesian . . . indeed, by the time he reached the height of his career he had rejected much of Keynesian economics.

Now, Madam, Speaker, without clearly understanding what has been cut from the operating expenses of Government and the logic behind those cuts, I think we all ought to question in our minds the strategic direction that we are heading in, because those cuts do not result in there being a surplus. The cuts are some $10 million, the surplus is some $20 million projected for the 2009 financial year. Even absent the cuts, the Government would have been predicting a $10 million surplus.

No one argues, on this side at least, the fact that during times of slowdown it is important for there to be spending in the economy. I believe that the spending cuts of some $10 million would perhaps have a wider and deeper impact in the economy, certainly if they are in some of the hallmark areas normally cut. For example, Madam Speaker, we know that in the past one of the things government looks to cut would certainly be its acquisition of certain consumables.

The acquisition of varying consumables across the whole of government stretches much further across the economy than discreet construction projects, because discreet construction projects are principally going to benefit hardware companies and those engaged in the production of asphalt. We are certainly at the early stages of construction with the government schools, for example. In regard to the roads programme, that would obviously also assist anyone in the excavation and the production of asphalt. And I think it is fair to say that the potential impact on persons who are earning wages in varying sectors across the economy would have a much more positive impact when we speak to the whole issue of government's acquisitions of its various consumables.

And by consumables, we are obviously talking about computers, equipment, and varying assets that perhaps may now be put on hold which could potentially ensure that certain companies engaged in that sort of business, for example, will continue to see positive growth and not have lay offs or the like.

Madam Speaker, obviously, the Government will wind up. We hope that we will get some sort of clarification as to precisely how the Government envisions its current policy posturing, how that is going to assist the overall economy and ensure that Government is doing its bit to assist.

I believe this is either the second or third consecutive SPS . . . and one thing that I have brought up is the whole issue as to what role this stage of our budgeting process and, more importantly, the influence the legislature actually has on that and how we conduct that business.

Madam Speaker, perhaps we might get back to the normal state of affairs where we point fingers and say, 'Yes, but this is how it was done under the UDP Administration' So, what is the Opposition now complaining about?' For anyone who observed weaknesses in a system to simply look back and say this is how it was done, therefore this is how we are going to continue to do it, I believe [they] are more guilty than those who did it in the first case.

If you see something and say that is not right [and that] it should not be done that way, that there is a better, more mature and sophisticated way to do things, we ought to be lifting up the practices in this Legislative Assembly to indeed get us to the stage where we are more mature and sophisticated, and that the work we do here is taken more seriously, it has the possibility to really benefit the executive arm of government as it undertakes its crucial role of actually running the country. . . That should be why we are here, or part of why we are here.

Now, Madam Speaker, I hope that the debate will cause us to move politics and our practices here to a higher standard because if we are not doing that—and we must . . . and I know we all recognise and that's why we are seeing some of the behaviour that we are seeing. We are less than six months from the next general election. So, as of 21 May next year, with 27 May being the swearing in, I presume, we will have a new class of legislators. History has shown us that there is no 100 per cent repeat, so there will be some winners and some losers.

When the new set of legislators comes here they are going to be looking to the practices of what had been done to help guide what they will do, and we ought to be about continual improvement as a Legislative Assembly. That should be something that we take very seriously and personally. We should take pride in being able to tell the public, well, here is how things used to be done in here. Here are the systems we found and here is what we did to lift them up and make them better.

Madam Speaker, it is always good when you hear other Members comment. However, if the comments don't recognise and assist in the cause then perhaps we are not any further ahead.

I certainly look forward to the windup. I presume that, as usual, someone from the Government Bench will come behind and do the usual political posturing and spinning to try to deflect and counter some of the facts that have been presented to the House. I am used to that, Madam Speaker. I know that when Members of the Government are by themselves and really reflect upon what we have said thus far, I know deep down inside it may not be every single thing but a vast majority they will have to agree with.

I hope that some of what we have said will assist and allow the Government to perhaps rethink and do things a little better and provide some alternate ideas as to perspective on some of the matters that the country has before it.

So, Madam Speaker, with those remarks (I can't call them brief!) I eagerly anticipate the conclusion of this debate.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until two o'clock.

Proceedings suspended at 12.39 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.06 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continuing on Government Motion No. 10/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

First Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I do not intend to spend an inordinate amount of time debating the matter before this honourable

House, but I thought it would be prudent of me to touch on two particular areas.

First, Madam Speaker with your kind permission, I would like to refer to the conclusion in the 2009/10 Strategic Policy Statement, as well as the conclusion to the 2008/09 Strategic Policy Statement.

Madam Speaker, for the sake of reference I would ask honourable Members (those so minded) and the wider listening public to pay particular attention to the 2009/10 conclusion as I read into the record what was said on 29 November 2007 by the Honourable D. Kurt Tibbetts, JP, Leader of Government Business, on page 29 of the said documentation.

Under that section (section 7) headed "Conclusion" it said:

"This Strategic Policy Statement establishes the policy and financial framework on which the 2008/9 budget will be prepared.

"The policy goals and financial parameters outlined in this document clearly reflect a continuation of the policies established by the PPM Government. Those policies are based around seven (sic) broad outcomes which include: supporting the economy; improving education and training; strengthening the family and community; addressing traffic congestion; and embracing Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

"The financial targets set out in this SPS allow for the funding of various interventions to progress the key policy initiatives relating to these outcomes. [and bear in mind, Madam Speaker, I am reading from the 2008/09 conclusion] Particularly the targets provide for delivery of a capital development programme which includes additional schools, new Government Office Accommodation, enhanced Public Safety and disaster response capabilities, continued improvement to the country's road network infrastructure and other significant assets. This capital programme will be funded by a combination of operating surplus and borrowings over the three year forecast period.

"At the same time the financial targets reflect the Government's fiscal strategy: be fiscally responsible; acquire the resources necessary to address the country's social and economic infrastructure needs; and support the ongoing economic development of the country. Updated long-run fiscal projections continue to show that the targets are sustainable beyond the forecast period and therefore remain affordable."

Madam Speaker, the very last paragraph: "This Strategic Policy Statement shows that the Government remains focused and committed to delivering on its manifesto commitments. It shows that the Government is continuing with the policy direction it has established since coming into office, and it shows that the Government is continuing to manage the country's finances diligently, responsibly and transparently."

Again, as I indicated, it is signed by Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts, JP, Leader of Government Business, on the 29th day of November 2007.

As I perused the documentation that was presented in this honourable House with this year's Statement, with respect, I could not help but be absolutely amazed at the insignificant changes made to the conclusion. In fact, when I first looked, the only change I could see in section 7 was that the colour print had been changed on the word "Conclusion"—one was purple and one was blue. I am not sure, if you combined them, you would get red. Nevertheless, there was an effort to change the colour.

Madam Speaker, I took time to read last year's statement so that one would not have to go based just on my general conclusion that no effort or attempt was made to change a single word. Not a "the", an "a", a conjunction, a verb, a pronoun or adjective—nothing!—save the colour [of the word] "conclusion" and the date, which it was signed last year, obviously, 29 November 2007. This year it was changed to 9 December 2008.

The other obvious scrivener's change was that last year it said 2008/9 Budget; this conclusion said 2009/10: very fundamental, rudimentary changes that one could not get out of making. Except for that, Madam Speaker, it has remained the same conclusion.

Madam Speaker, I draw emphasis to this because in my respectful submission it is an absolute waste of my time and the time of the House for me to go and comment on the overall ambit of what was presented in this House if, in the conclusion . . . which, when one is taking a cursory look, one looks at the introduction, the intermediate body and the conclusion. But oft times, Madam Speaker, as you would no doubt know (being an avid English literately person yourself), that it is in the conclusion that one would hope to find a summary, a summation of the hopes and aspirations, the goals and objectives. And if after having read that enough inertia, enough concern . . . it was so conspicuously lacking that only the dates were changed, then it leaves a complete deficit as far as the presentation and the content.

Madam Speaker, it is my respectful submission that after having read this . . . and there is, hopefully, some justification why this is the case and that it is not just an oversight because, after all, it is the conclusion of a forward-thinking document. Perhaps, save and except for the Budget, the most important thing. It is the preface for what the Government—any government—intends for the upcoming year.

Madam Speaker, had we not experienced and been subjected to the global economic status and the gloom throughout the world—not limited to Cayman—then, perhaps, we could have understood that there was no reason for this Government or any government to change its conclusion. But surely, Madam Speaker, when one peruses the intermediate section of the presentation it is all about creating legitimate expectations based on the global economic downturn and expecting the Caymanian residents to say, Look, this is not just happening in Cayman. You can't blame us. It's happening all around the world.

If that is the case (and I have no reason to believe that that is not the case, as put forward by the Honourable Leader) then, surely, some evidence, some change, some variation, some expression should have been included in the conclusion rather than coming with what would be almost tantamount to plagiarism had it not been the same author of the documentation.

Now, Madam Speaker, having established that, I then quickly looked at what was happening with one of the 11 objectives directly related to my constituency of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Of course, with that I refer to embracing Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

I spent quite a bit of time last year going through that and what I thought of it, giving the Government the benefit of the doubt. I quickly concluded that an explanation should be forthcoming from the Government Bench as to the change they made in the lineup under Government's Outcome and Goals—Broad Outcomes.

Again, as set out perhaps in more places, but certainly on page 6 of the 2009/10 SPS, it did not take very long to realise that in the PPM 11 countdown country chart of objectives and goals, embracing Cayman Brac and Little Cayman slipped down the chart from being number 6 last year, to number 7 this year. I thought, Madam Speaker, to give the benefit of the doubt, that perhaps they were not listed in any order of priority, but when one looks at the list of the 11 very admirable and challenging goals and objectives of the PPM Government, that theory of not being listed in priority quickly eluded any logic, certainly in my own mind. Perhaps they will come behind and justify or explain to convince me and the wider public, because when you look at last year's broad outcomes by the Government from a substantive perspective, the ambit of the goals and objectives has not changed dramatically. There is a word here and there, but they have remained steadfast in their 11 goals and objectives.

We saw that last year the very first one was to deal with the aftermath and lessons of Hurricane Ivan. No problem with that.

Number 2—Address Crime and Improve Policing: No problem.

Number 3—Improve Education and Training: Based on the manifesto that had been put out by the PPM, I understand and concur with the prioritisation set out.

Number 4 last year—Rebuild the Health Services.

[Number 5]—Address Traffic Congestion: Again, problems that needed to be prioritised.

And there was number 6, good old Cayman Brac and Little Cayman was going to be embraced by the PPM. No problem. They put it in the middle, I really could not complain, Madam Speaker.

Then we go on to number 7—Conserve the Environment: Another admirable goal.

Number 8—Strengthen Family and Community.

Number 9—Support the Economy. Of course, the economy was buoyant last year so I had no real complaint that it fell in the last quadrant of their goals and objectives.

And then, number 10—Open, Transparent, Honest and Efficient Public Administration: I took no issue with that being number 10 because they had been in for an excess of two years and had an opportunity to operate in an open, transparent, honest and efficient public administration. Perhaps they felt it was no longer a priority because it was in the first year of their administration. In their own minds they had opened up and become a sunshine government.

And then number 11—Sound Fiscal Management.

We look, Madam Speaker, at this year's 11 goals and objectives. We see what was number 11 last year [has] now become number 1—same wording, different placement; "Sound Fiscal Management." So, it tells me that it was not an arbitrary laying out of goals and objectives because any prudent government would quickly, in the dire economic ambience we are now enduring, see that we need to exercise sound fiscal management. So, the Government, in its wisdom, has placed it first on this list of goals and objectives.

What was number 9 got shifted this year to number 2—Support the Economy: Thankfully there were some added words. ". . . the implementation of measures and policies to mitigate the effects of the global economic slowdown" was added. And I congratulate the Government for these added words. It is a recognition that the motion brought by our Honourable Leader of the Opposition and the Second Elected Member for West Bay in February, though not accepted by the Government then, finally, the chickens came home to roost and they saw it necessary to add these words—somewhat late, but nonetheless, acceptable.

Then we see, Madam Speaker, that number 10—Open, Transparent, Honest and Efficient Public Administration, has been moved in this year's presentation to number 3. Again, no problem with that because the public is calling for continuation of a sustainable open, transparent, honest and effective public administration regardless of who occupies the seats of Cabinet and the Government Bench.

We see, continuing on in this vein, that education (which was number 3 last year) has now taken the number 4 position. No problems with that. I can understand some of the reasoning with that.

Then we see what was number 2 has now dropped to number 5—Address Crime and Improve Policing. And perhaps that can be explained by the Government when they get up in light of the increase in heinous crime, in particular with gender violence within our respective communities.

What I found interesting though, Madam Speaker, was that it was significant and important enough last year after the advent of Hurricane Ivan to put Deal with the Aftermath and Lessons from Hurricane Ivan as number 1.

Having experienced firsthand, [Hurricane] Paloma on the Brac, which, in my respectful position, was as bad as Ivan or worse, because it is a smaller community and the needs are magnified, they are more relevant and direct. And although the Government in this year's objectives did add the conjunction "and" ("and Paloma") on to dealing with the aftermath of lessons from Hurricane Ivan (page 6 of their new document) it dropped all the way down to number 6 as opposed to being placed on the front.

Perhaps this can be easily explained from the press briefing of Thursday last when we were referred to by the Minister of Education as "miniscule" and "only 2,000 people" when taken against the background of the wider picture.

We see also [that] one thing has remained constant, and that is "Strengthen Family and Community." For whatever justification, that has remained as number 8. I take some solitude in the fact that there is still an unchanging commitment to strengthening our families and communities. After all, it is the foundation of any country, in particular a country on the verge of constitutional modernisation and advancement. The family at all material times needs to be strengthened, as well as the community. I give the Government my full support in achieving these objectives and goals to see that that has remained a stagnant objective in their presentation.

Worthy of noting as well, in my respectful opinion Madam Speaker, is the way the Health Services is referred to this year. Last year it was deemed as it related to the Health Services that they needed to rebuild the Health Services. I took no issue with it; I felt that the Honourable Minister responsible is a good Minister. When the Minister went in, whatever he found led him to the conclusion it needed to be rebuilt. This year I am heartened to see that "rebuild" has been deleted and the PPM is now using the adjective that they want to "improve" the Health Services. Am I to conclude that the Health Services has now been rebuilt to the satisfaction of the PPM Government, save and except some necessary improvement that the basic skeletal infrastructure has been rebuilt? If so, I look forward to hearing specifically what areas have been augmented and subsidised from an economic perspective to have justified the [changing] adjective "rebuild" to "improve".

And then, Madam Speaker, I note that, perhaps indirectly or directly, there is an admission that the Minister responsible for Works has obviously done what he was mandated or directed to do, because addressing traffic congestion (placed number 5 in the PPM's presentation last year) has now slipped to number 10. I take it that that is an expressed admission that the Minister has performed diligently and arduously, and that he has put in the necessary road network on Grand Cayman. It gives me the audacity to hope that since that has now been done we can expect some relevant, sufficient and adequate financing for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman so that our road network can be brought on par with an application of asphalt as opposed to the surface now being put there with chip and spray, especially after the advent of Paloma where there are numerous gigantic potholes on all of the roads in the Brac.

Some parts of the road have been completely compromised, Madam Speaker, which will need complete rebuilding. Can I then deduce (and I hope that I can) that because addressing traffic congestion and road upgrade was done excellently by the Minister, that direct attention can now be given to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman? Perhaps, then, I can find an area of forgiveness or understanding as to the drop of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman in the PPM's chart from number 6 to number 7 if, in fact, they are going to re-address our road situation on the Brac.

Finally in this regard, I observed that Conserving the Environment, which was number 7 last year, a very admirable objective of any government, taking into consideration the global warming and the effect it has had on our own jurisdiction with the increased frequency of hurricanes and weather that is quite unpredictable yet intensifying the damage that was brought on our residents within these beautiful Cayman Islands. That has now dropped to number 11.

Madam Speaker, one could easily argue that dealing with multiple goals and objectives not everyone could be number 1. That I can understand. Those 11 goals and objectives could have been lined up in the same order, changing words as was deemed necessary to reflect the times we are now moving, working, living and breathing in. But when you see a change around of the goals and objectives and the change from a logistical perspective matches the climate, like the economic and fiscal objectives moving from the bottom to the top, then it is difficult to come to a non-tautological conclusion that there is not some attempt or exercise of discretion in prioritising them.

Perhaps the Government has an explanation. Certainly I would be most grateful to understand the reason for the change and would want to know that it is more than just an arbitrary lineup. Because if that is the case, then it gives me even more concern when I read the conclusion that was signed off by the Honourable Leader last year, and compare that with what was presented this year seeing that there was absolutely no effort made to change one solitary word. Not a comma, not anything. You can compare it, Madam Speaker and honourable Members, and it is verbatim [of what was] presented last year. It gives me rise for concern.

Madam Speaker, against that background and the background of my urgent, urgent constituency matters resulting from Hurricane Paloma that warrant my attention and my being on the ground as was expressed yesterday morning when apologies were given for the Second Elected Member, I, too, have those concerns. I, too, spend night hours doing emails and calling and would wish to be on the ground to join the Second Elected Member in our collaborative efforts to meet the needs of the constituency. But I realise that I too have a parliamentary responsibility, Madam Speaker, being in this honourable House, especially knowing full well that there is a motion on the Floor which has now been moved down the parliamentary order of business.

And, even though we had Private Members' [business] today, it has been slid off of today's agenda so that it now gives rise to me having to come back to Cayman to be in a position to discuss the amendment being brought by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and I, seeking for initial funding for Cayman Brac in particular, and for Little Cayman which received less damage from Hurricane Paloma. And I will do that, Madam Speaker. I will fly home this afternoon and return, God willing, in the morning to make sure that I am here to debate and meet those obligations, because it is in parliament that we do have some voice. Whether or not the Government accepts it, it is left to them. But the people will know that I have done all that I can do as a backbench member to ensure that sufficient financing is there.

Madam Speaker, I have chosen not to go into the meat of the presentation based on those two observations that I took time to detail. I await with eager anticipation some comfort level as to the reason why this has occurred. Perhaps at an opportune time I can satisfy my constituency that there was merit in debating the intermediate part. But having looked at the introduction and the conclusion, I did not deem it necessary for me to waste any more time away from my constituency debating that based on what I have said thus far in my presentation.

I thank you for your indulgence. I thank you for allowing me to read into the record, Madam Speaker, last year's so that the honourable Members, if they have not yet noticed it, and the wider public, can see from whence I make my debate.

I thank you most kindly, Madam Speaker, for your indulgence, your patience, your understanding and may God continue to bless these Cayman Islands and open our minds and vision, and remove dividing barriers.

We have a duty, as the Honourable Leader said, to represent the best we know how. Let us do so the best we know how.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I too do not plan to speak for two hours on this subject today, as I firmly believe and accept that the Policy Statement as presented by the Financial Secretary and the speech supporting the Strategic Policy Statement delivered by the Leader of Government Business were both excellent documents.

I say that I must express my amazement at the level of negative and otherwise political rhetoric that has emanated from the Opposition bench. They are obviously having great difficulty accepting and understanding the magnitude of both documents and understanding that they are excellent documents.

I am also amazed, Madam Speaker, that we take time in here as Members of Parliament and servants of the people to make our contribution simply based around what I would consider school politics and backyard arguments about the placement of a particular line item up one level or down another one; and what the level of debate in this honourable House has come to and the significance of our contribution to Parliament, and that these are the things that we are upset about rather than going into the document and trying to make positive suggestions. If you don't like what you see, then what is the alternative?

Madam Speaker, I am in full support of the SPS—"Staying the Course in Challenging Times." I think is an excellent and fitting title.

I want to begin on the February 2008 Motion brought by the Leader of the Opposition, which has been getting a lot of airplay by the Leader of the Opposition himself. It was then expounded upon by the Second Elected Member for West Bay. I want to say that the Second Elected Member for West Bay talked extensively about timing; about them being the only ones who were able to foresee that there was a recession on the horizon, and how in February 2008 they brought this Motion for the Government to cut back on projects.

He also went on to say that just recently someone in the US acknowledged that the US has been in a recession since December of 2007. Now, I say that to say this, Madam Speaker. The great United States of America—the greatest economic power in the world—is now acknowledging that they were in a recession from December of 2007. Why did they not acknowledge it from December 2007?

Madam Speaker, everybody talked about the possibility of a recession being on the horizon. It has been talked about in the Cayman Islands and the United States, but you cannot say that you are in a recession before it happens. As a matter of fact, the lunacy in this whole thing is that if you follow talk on what the naysayers continue to say about recession on the horizon when things are looking gloomy, many times there are signs an economy is going into recession but it never actually happens. Not every time we predict a recession does it happen.

So, at what stage do you actually say, 'Yes, we know for certain that there is a recession'? If we were able to predict recessions accurately, exactly when they would come and what would happen, then I think it is fair game that we should accept that it would never happen because man would be able to do what he had to do to divert that. There is no point where we can actually say with any certainty that a recession is going to happen and it is going to have X, Y, Z effect and it is going to start the first day of November or December. We can never predict that.

I want to say, Madam Speaker, that governments must be extremely careful [of] what is said and done about a recession. And I believe that while the United States of America understood for some time that it was quite possible that that is where they were heading, the minute a government makes the admission that we are heading for a recession, imagine what happens. Imagine what happens to the connected economies, private sector, and when the individual goes to the bank for a mortgage to build their first home.

And, Madam speaker, because government has said that we are going into a recession what is a bank manager to do about that individual who has now gone to apply for a loan? The government has said that we are heading for a recession so you have actually given the financial institutions licence to start pulling back, to start holding back on the economy; to stop lending money for projects because the government has said that we are heading for a recession. Whether they agree or believe it or not, the government has given the private institutions licence to start pulling things back.

Now, tell me, Madam Speaker, will that not ensure that we go into a recession? It is up to the government to guide, to direct, and try to hold off for as long as possible any downturn in the economy. Madam Speaker, government can easily trigger slow down of economies and it is government's responsibility to do the exact opposite.

If the Government had done what the UDP wanted done in February of 2008 and said, 'Yes, we agree with what the UDP says and we are going cut back on all of our projects because we know a recession is coming', Madam Speaker, what would have happened at that stage?

The Second Elected Member for West Bay is a professional accountant. Now, if somebody comes to him for advice and wants to do a particular project, a particular style of investment . . . since the Government has declared that the economy is heading for a recession, what will be his response to that client? Should you encourage them to go ahead or say, The Government has advised that there is a recession looming, I suggest you don't do any business with me and hold on to your cash until this clears?

Is that the advice that he would give based on the premise that from February, when they brought a motion here, the Government should have accepted it, saying, 'Yes, we are heading for a recession'? All that does, Madam Speaker, is cause whatever financial recession we go into to be extended and prolonged. As a matter of fact, usually what happens with these recessions is that they go through the US system first and take their time and trickle down to us. What would happen in that instance is that we would be the first to have a recession here. By the time it hits the US where would we be? Where would we be?

I don't understand the logic or the stimuli that the Second Elected Member for West Bay continues to talk about. I really don't understand the logic. I am not a professional accountant, Madam Speaker, but I believe I have good common sense. And regardless of what kind of degrees one may have, whether it is accounting, law, education, it does one no good unless common sense is employed.

Now, Madam Speaker, what I also want the Opposition in particular, to understand, is that the Government has their ears to the ground. They are connected to the financial sector. Everything that the Opposition hears, the Government hears as well. What the Government does not do is add their spin to it and make it sound completely different.

Madam Speaker, we continue talking about we need to stop the schools. They keep telling us that we need to stop the schools; we need to stop the schools. Well, we have had to stop two schools and what we are hearing now is, 'Why did you stop the West Bay High School?' It is a situation like the work permit issue where no one else must get a helper or a gardener, but I must get mine! So we don't do anything about what we consider to be the work permit problems.

Now, we need to understand that 18, 24, 30 months out, these projects (like the Government Administration building and the schools we are talking about) are projects that take years to put together. Now, at some point the Government has to decide whether to go ahead or hold back on these projects. And in February of 2008, I dare say that the decision had been taken that we would go ahead with the schools. Again, I want to try to bring some logic to bear here. If we agree with what the UDP is saying, and understand what is happening with the private investors, which government has no control over, when they see things begin to happen they will start pulling back. And I dare say that they would have started pulling back a lot earlier had we listened to the advice we were getting from the Second Elected Member for West Bay and his great leader.

Madam Speaker, if we say that a recession is looming and we should not do anything about these projects now because when the recession comes government is going to need (they admitted this) to start projects because government now has to get the economy rolling again . . . now these projects take anywhere from 18 to 30 months from the planning stages to getting them off the ground. This is the beginning of construction.

If you leave these things waiting there for a recession to begin, by the time you get the project up and going the recession would have been over. So, it is a prudent and wise Government, Madam Speaker—who has done exactly the opposite of what they say the Government has done—that has seen this coming and prepared themselves properly, and timed the construction of these new schools and the Government Administration building properly. If we decided to start now that the recession is here, working and getting plans drawn, site prepared, acquire land and the like, by the time we do it the recession would be over.

They know this but they still want to continue . . . You see, Madam Speaker, opposition for the sake of opposing.

The Motion in February 2008 was one of those motions that the Opposition could not lose. It was a motion that they brought as a safety net, and whichever way it went, if the recession did not come then it simply fell away and the Government would not bring it up again because we would have seen it as another political ploy. But if, by chance, the recession did come then they simply jump up and down and say, 'Look, we told you so'. It is simply political posturing because whatever the Government brings it is the job of the Opposition to try and propose the opposite, and that is simply all that they are doing. That is all that is happening without any credibility to their argument at all.

Common sense tells us that the schools and the Government Administration building are going ahead, and it is a good thing that we have decided to do that.

I don't know Madam Speaker. The Second Elected Member for West Bay continues to talk about stimuli and that the projects proposed and are being worked on by the Government do not have broad base impact. I don't know what else in our economy, what else in our little unique neck of the woods creates more economic stimuli than construction. What else?

Construction touches everyone. We get enough of it going regardless of what else is going on in the rest of the world. If we have construction going on, Madam Speaker, we are not so bad off because we get money for work permits, people have to have a place to live as we are not going to get over the issue of having to have people come in here to work any time soon. They have to eat, use transportation, and our people get an opportunity to get some work, as well as many other benefits.

Construction spreads the wealth around in this country like nothing else. So, why should we stop our projects, or not start them at all?

The opposite would happen if we listen to what the Second Elected Member for West Bay and his great leader have said. The minute the Government says that we are heading for a financial recession, companies cut back. The first thing they do is start laying people off. And the way it happens in this country, Madam Speaker, you know who they lay off first? They try. It's the Caymanians who get hurt. Immediately that is who is affected.

Then, if they send the work permit holders home, the shops and services that they support begin to hurt right away. That is what you would trigger the minute Government says, 'Yes, we agree with the UDP that we are headed for a recession and we need to cut back right now.' We would trigger the recession ourselves.

Madam Speaker, right now if we start saying publicly that the gas stations are running out of gas and will be out of gas by the weekend, do you know what is going to happen? There is going to be a run on the gas stations because everyone will want to get their gas. That is plain, simple logic!

Madam Speaker, the Third Elected Member for West Bay will have his chance to get up and speak.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, when we talk about stopping the schools and the Government Administration building, where we as a Government understand the amount of money that is being paid for rental accommodations of government offices, rent money that is wasted and simply going down the drain, as opposed to making an effort to get our own Government Administration building where our money goes into equity, we pay our loan off and end up with a proper facility . . . I want to know why the financial logic of the UDP did not come into play and talk about that.

I am sure that the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman could have found something to say about that.

Madam Speaker, when is it that we will come to terms with the fact that our education facilities are outdated and not good enough to lead our children and this country into the future? And that we don't have the facilities that we need in all realms of education? Is it that we don't want anything better for our children? When do we understand, at what time do we come to terms with the fact that we need to do something about technical and vocational studies in this country, and that the plan to vacate the George Hicks campus so that that can be turned into a technical and vocational unit?

Now if we don't build the other schools how do we accomplish that?

Why is it that education in this country continues to be a political football where people believe that it should be as it always was and that our children do not deserve any better?

Now, had we not gone ahead as we did with the schools, Madam Speaker—and lo and behold the recession is here—when would we get to our schools? Just when?

Another set of excuses. That is all we have been doing for decades with our children. Imagine Madam Speaker, if we had not gone ahead, and here the recession is! Would we ever get the schools off? It would have been another 10 or 15 years before we get the jumpstart that we need to get the schools going. Somebody must be responsible and understand these things and not try to make the people believe otherwise. We must be responsible citizens and responsible Members of this Parliament and stop the nonsense!

Madam Speaker, I have a good friend who loves to play dominoes and when sitting at the table with him he starts to get the upper hand. He tells you . . . as a matter of fact, he had cards done up which he would give to his opponents he had beaten and he says that there is a place called Batsy Institute of Dominology.

The Speaker: What?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Batsy Institute of Dominology. That is the school that you send people to who are domino dunces or novices to learn to play dominoes.

I dare say, Madam Speaker, that we have another similar institution which I call the institute of Rhetorical Political Lunacy! And, Madam Speaker, I dare say that the Second Elected Member for West Bay is competing for dean of rhetorical studies.

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, I want to use another analogy that I am sure the Second Elected Member for West Bay understands. It is about the premise of what I have been explaining about influence, of getting up and telling your people that you are heading for a recession.

When you tell someone that you are heading for a recession, it says—

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Chairman, on a point of order.

The Speaker: I do not think I am Chairman at this point.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Sorry.

Madam Speaker, the Member keeps saying that we are heading for a recession. Thus far, I have not seen in the presentation by the Honourable Leader of Government Business or the Financial Secretary's, or anything I said, that we are heading for a recession. I clearly pointed out the facts as it relates to the economy of the United States, Madam Speaker.

I think it is downright dangerous, completely unnecessary and irresponsible for this Member to continue saying that we are heading for a recession.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for West Bay, is your point of order that you did not say that we were headed for a recession?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: That is right, Madam Speaker. I never said that we are heading for a recession.

The Speaker: All right. Thank you.

Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town, would you continue your debate without referring to us heading into a recession that would have been said by the Second Elected Member for West Bay?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, I could ask for a break and go and get the Hansard, but the motion brought in February by the Leader of the Opposition and seconded by the Second Elected Member for West Bay was about Government cutting back on its projects because the thought was that the world was heading for a recession.

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: So we are not part of the world?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, on another point of order.

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order please?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, the motion was not titled and did not say that Government must cut back. The motion called for Government to re-prioritise.

And, Madam Speaker, it seems as though they have listened to a piece because now the Beulah Smith Campus has been stopped—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: —and they have re-prioritised.

The Speaker: —West Bay.

Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town, continue your debate please.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, another thing that the Second Elected Member for West Bay continued to say during his debate was that the truth hurts. Obviously, he has pain somewhere because he cannot sit down now!

Madam Speaker, the power of influence and why we need to be careful of what we do and say . . . I cannot exactly remember if it was during the presidential debates or shortly after President-elect Barack Obama was elected as President of the United States, when he was asked if there was anything in sports that he would like changed. He quickly said, yes, he would like to see a play-off system implemented in college football. He said nothing else.

Lo and behold, Madam Speaker, headlines today [read] “Congress is considering forcing the managers of college football to implement a play-off system” Now he understands that, because if he does not understand anything else, he understands college football.

Madam Speaker, I am making the point that you have to be careful what you say and how you say it because the power of influence is all too great. The minute anybody gets up and starts saying that we are heading for a recession, it happens. You cannot control what happens after that.

Now, the United States admitted that they are in a recession. And we all know that chances are it will have negative impact on the Cayman Islands. I dare say we are feeling some of that already, but I do not know what our fate will be, how we will end up; whether or not the Cayman Islands itself will end up going into a full blown recession. But I know that there will be some slow down of business. So, I am not saying that the Cayman Islands’ is in a recession. I am simply feeding off of the rhetoric being spurted out from over on the Opposition Bench.

Madam Speaker, I am grateful that I am a part of the PPM Government, a Government that makes decisions by consensus. I do not have anybody standing over me who will brag about I rule with an iron hand. That is not anything that I would like to be—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible] Idi Amin!

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Yes, Mr. Witch doctor.

[inaudible interjections]

The Speaker: Please, please.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker—
Oh yes, believe in witchcraft.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Madam Speaker, I am happy, extremely proud of the fact that I am a part of the PPM Government and understand that what happens to this country happens by consensus.

I am happy that we take advice from those who know because we cannot all be experts at everything. Apparently that is the case over on the other side.

It is a bit difficult to understand all of the political stuff that is going on, Madam Speaker. One would believe that they were never part of a Government. And I wonder why, with the advice the Second Elected Member for West Bay continues to give us, he did not give that to his Government, or whether or not they too would not listen to him.

Madam Speaker, I have said enough.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I support the SPS and all I will say, Madam Speaker, is let the bottom-feeding begin.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In any democracy, the Opposition plays a very important role—providing a very important check and balance on the Government that is in power. But, Madam Speaker, for far too long the Opposition has gotten away with a mediocre response. The truth of the matter is that they really should be presenting real challenges to the Government.

Madam Speaker, for far too long the Opposition has come into this House and simply criticised everything that the Government has brought. What they should be doing is presenting alternatives to what the Government is presenting, whether it is a budget, a strategic policy statement, a motion. Whatever the Government brings to this House that the Opposition does not agree with, they ought to bring their own proposal.

So, Madam Speaker, the Motion currently under debate, the Strategic Policy Statement for 2009/10, if the Opposition did not have the wherewithal to produce their own proposal for a strategic policy statement, they could have used this as a template to provide their proposal for their alternative to this Strategic Policy Statement.

So, Mr. Leader of the Opposition, where is your proposed strategic policy statement?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, that is what a responsible Opposition would do; they would bring forward to this House their proposal for the way forward.

But, Madam Speaker, all we hear are empty promises. And all we hear are alternatives that are unworkable. We have heard so much from the Opposition and their supporters, particularly some who host daily talk shows, about the Government's capital development programme, and how in these challenging times Government should not be embarking upon such a robust capital development programme.

Madam Speaker, in his presentation of the Strategic Policy Statement, the Honourable Leader of Government Business indicated the adjustments we have had to make to our capital development programme. We understand that these are challenging times, but if you listen to the Opposition . . . Let us just pause for a moment and consider where we would be in this country.

There would be no schools under construction. There would have been no roads built. There would have been no plans to redevelop the airport. There would have been no plans to institute berthing facilities, because in their view, Madam Speaker, in these challenging times—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [ongoing inaudible interjections]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Opposition would stop interrupting me while I am speaking.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

The Speaker: Would you please desist from talking across the Floor and accusing people of . . .

Minister—

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I would appreciate if this word "liar", "lying", and "lies" could be removed from the Parliament of the Cayman Islands. I have asked for that before.

Minister of Tourism, would you continue your debate please?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, you cannot expect any better from the Leader of the Opposition because he truly believes that whether or not something is true the more often he repeats it people will begin to believe it. He has always believed that.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, as I said, if the Opposition were now in charge, the Government would not have embarked on any capital development. So, given the fact that we are living in challenging times . . . and this is not unique to Cayman, as we all know. We have spent the better part of several days now debating this very issue. But our own domestic economy would be in a much more precarious position had we not embarked upon the programmes that we have.

And, Madam Speaker, while we are criticised day in and day out for that, we know from decisions made in countries around the world that governments around the world have adopted the same approach because they understand that it is in times like these where the economies have slowed and where, in some cases, there is a recession such as in the United States, that it is the Government's responsibility to step up to the plate and stimulate economic activity. So, Madam Speaker, that is what we have done.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay made much of the fact that the Leader of Government Business said in the presentation of his Strategic Policy Statement that as far back as January this year the Ministry of Tourism began to have meetings with the various stakeholders because of the difficult times that we saw ahead. Madam Speaker, I am going to address that in a little more detail shortly, but the Government has never said that we did not appreciate what was coming down the pipeline.

In fact, even further back than January 2008, when I delivered my speech at the Tourism conference in September 2007 I spoke then about the signs that we had seen at that point, which were worrying signs, about an unusual number of foreclosures within the US economy. So, from our perspective we had begun to look at that very, very closely and plan for that, because that is the prudent thing to do.

I said from the very beginning to my staff and other people who I had discussions with, that one of the things that make the situation worse is when you have all of this doom and gloom and you hear from everybody, the Opposition, the talk show host, everybody—you would swear that the world was coming to an end. All that does is undermine consumer confidence, it prevents people from spending the way that they would normally spend; and all that does is contribute to further economic chaos [which] results, more often than not, in a recession.

I think that, despite the challenges the US economy faced, the single most significant contributing factor to that was all of the doom and gloom that was being talked about, and the fact that this was going to happen and that was going to happen, this was going to go out of business and that was going to go out of business. So, consumer confidence . . . and the average consumer essentially said, 'Well, what are we to do in these circumstances other than crawl into a hole and just wait to see when the storm is going to cross?'

Madam Speaker, that just completely undermines consumer confidence. That is not something that a prudent Government would want to do, and it is not something that this Government chose to do for the reasons I have already mentioned.

Madam Speaker, I have attended several meetings recently in the region, and we have had discussions in the region concerning tourism. I can tell you that the Cayman Islands, while there is no room for complacency, are in a very good position compared to many of the other competing destinations. When I talk about air arrivals being up in the region of 8 per cent, there are many other Caribbean Islands that cannot boast of that. In fact, many of them are moving in the opposite direction and seeing declines in air arrivals.

Local growth in air arrivals has, certainly, as I said, been a hard one as the tourism industry has been besieged with challenges. In 2008, we saw the US go into recession and the mortgage crisis become a credit crisis, unprecedented volatility in fuel prices, the price of food rose sharply, while US domestic air-lifts shrunk markedly, and now, ultimately, the spread of this economic crisis to all parts of the globe.

These external factors accompanied with a very active hurricane season resulting in three hurricane evacuations, including one direct hit from Hurricane Paloma, has put into perspective the scale of challenges the tourism industry has weathered locally and overseas. Amidst the overall outlook, the tourism industry remains cautiously optimistic about performance in the short term, while expectations for growth in the medium term have been tempered in favour of strategies to preserve market share and brand awareness.

One of the challenges we are facing is, because of the times that we are living in right now and because of where consumer confidence is, whereas 8 or 12 months ago we had what we call a booking window of about 90 days (people would book their vacations 90 days out), that booking window is now about 30 days. So, when we look beyond January, as an example, we can make certain predictions; but it is not as certain as we could have been 12 months ago simply because that booking window is so short.

Madam Speaker, the mitigation strategies employed by our agencies driving tourism's economic engine paid off in terms of slowing the immediate impact of the global crisis felt in the Cayman Islands in comparison to many of our other competitors. The skyrocketing price of fuel precipitated a US airline crisis which forced most US carriers to reduce staff and routes in an effort to control operational costs.

While we talk now about the cost of fuel and the fact that it has adjusted downward, the fact of the matter is that with the high fuel costs some months ago, the damage has already been done and we have seen many airlines go out of business. We have seen many airlines reduce staff, fleet and operations significantly. And that has had an impact on the region and, in fact, on the world.

The decrease in US airlift has resulted in a marked decrease in business amongst several destinations within the region. However, as far back as January 2008, as I mentioned earlier, the local tourism sector unanimously identified air lift as the most strategic concern facing the industry. To combat this scenario the Ministry directed Cayman Airways Limited to work closely with the Department of Tourism, the Cayman Islands Tourism Association and the Sister Islands Tourism Association, to monitor the market and consider the launch of a new service to a strategic route to help increase direct sales channels for the destination.

Consequently, even in the midst of massive layoffs in the tourism sector elsewhere, Cayman's public and private sectors have resolved to head into 2009 with confidence by investing in the education and training of our people, insisting on enhanced customer service standards, renewing our historical dive product with the introduction of the kiddy-wake, which is going to be an artificial reef, and by increasing the number of seats and direct routes into the Cayman Islands with the introduction of Cayman Airways' non-stop service to Washington DC and the resumption of service to Chicago.

Cayman Airways has continued its plans to modernise its fleet and has added one additional 737-300 aircraft to the fleet that will allow visitors who want to come to the Cayman Islands to do so affordably and with less traveling hassle. The scheduling of CAL's lease arrangements affords Cayman Airways another year to consider its long-term fleet plans while stabilising airlift in this pivotal year.

Madam Speaker, because I have heard at least one mention of this on one of the local talk shows I want to say now that the Cayman Airways' inaugural flight to Washington DC will depart at 8.00 am this Saturday. I have also heard comments on the talk shows about how the Government has filled up the plane with constituents and are taking them to DC, et cetera. Let me say this, we are taking people to DC. I believe the group is somewhere in the region of about 50 people. And I am going to say that now, because I suspect that we will have to say more about this later on.

But, unlike what has happened in the past, where it was strictly just constituents going, and yes, there are some constituents going, there are some members of the community going on this flight. But, Madam Speaker, there are also members of the Cayman Islands Tourism Association. There are also local travel agents going. And there are also staff members, as you would expect, from the Ministry and Department of Tourism and, indeed, Cayman Airways.

And there is a reason for that. And there has always been a reason for it. And that is, that if you have a product, particularly a new product such as this new service to Washington DC and the resumption of service to Chicago, if you put that product on the market and you do not promote it and market it, it is going to fail. So, when people and talk show hosts get out there and criticise why we do the things we do, they do not have a deep enough understanding of why it is necessary to market our product.

[Deputy Speaker in the Chair from 3.20 pm to 3.35 pm]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: I suppose I should say that since we have the Deputy Speaker in the Chair, I should say "Mr. Speaker."

Mr. Speaker, I was talking also about the fact that Cayman Airways now, with the introduction of this fourth 737-300 aircraft, gives us more time to look at the long-term fleet planning for the national flag carrier.

One of the things that I believe truly, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government, regardless of which government it is that comes into power following the May 2009 election, whether it is the PPM Government that is returned to office—and that is what we expect, Mr. Speaker and are confident of—or whether an alternative comes into power in May 2009. Regardless of who sits in those Cabinet seats, I truly believe that when you look at what is happening around the world and at things like the concentration of wealth in some South American countries, like Brazil and Argentina, we need to begin to diversify our tourism market, as I did very early when I became the Minister of Tourism.

One of the first things I did in accordance with a campaign promise, Mr. Speaker, was to put more investment into Europe and Canada. I said that, while the US will likely remain the major tourism market for the Cayman Islands for the foreseeable future, we needed to spread our risk. We could not afford to keep all of our eggs in one basket. Hence the reason we made those investments. And we have seen the return on those investments.

I believe the same is true for South America, and we need to begin to look to that. And I should say that in addition to the additional airlift I just mentioned (to Washington DC and Chicago) that we are also expecting in the very near future to start service directly to Panama in Central America and also to Honduras. We are simply waiting on those operating permits to do that.

I want to speak a little bit about Panama, because of what I just said about the potential in South America. We believe that Panama is going to be not just a good route for trade, in terms of cargo and passenger traffic and people going there to shop, but we also believe that Panama is an important feeder gateway to get traffic from South America into the Cayman Islands. By going into Panama we are actively pursuing code share and interline arrangements with an airline that has a significant presence in Panama to allow that feed from South America, and in particular from countries like Brazil, to connect on our Cayman Airways flights into Grand Cayman.

Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of doing more with less, the Department of Tourism has partnered with the Ritz Carlton to host next year's Cayman Cookout which will elevate the culinary event locally by attracting an unprecedented calibre of celebrity chefs from the United States to showcase their world renowned skills while exploring and highlighting local culture.

Even as it works with larger properties, the Department of Tourism is also actively developing a strategic selling unit for small properties which will provide a Cayman Islands branded online platform to sell small properties at competitive prices and at reduced transactional costs.

Once successfully launched, the plans call for the unit's capabilities to include the ability to sell packages including air and attractions. This one-stop-shop will cater to internet savvy customers and consumers in both our primary and our secondary markets.

Mr. Speaker, the public and private sector remain cautiously optimistic about the short-term prospects. However, the medium term is far more certain and the 2009/10 budget will continue to facilitate long-term strategies to ensure that when the crisis comes to a close, whether in 12 months or several years, there are compelling tactical offers in place to stimulate demand each season, high service levels in place that exceed customer expectations and generate repeat business, and strategic initiatives in place to position the jurisdiction to emerge even more competitive.

We have, Mr. Speaker, investments and programmes that have also understood and pursued necessary infrastructural projects that will keep this jurisdiction competitive for the long term. In this vein, essential infrastructure needed to facilitate tourism by air and by sea must proceed and we must accept and respond to the fact that our competition is also keenly aware of this and are themselves investing to compete.

The Cayman Islands Airports Authority is currently securing the financing to fast track the pace of this redevelopment which has already commenced. Members of the House and members of the public would have seen some initial improvements at the airport with the construction of additional car parks and the redesign of the road network in the immediate vicinity of the airport.

In respect of the Port redevelopment, the Department of Environment has selected a qualified firm to conduct the Environmental Impact Assessment. Cabinet recently appointed an environmental advisory board to oversee the process and broad public consultation is due to begin after the holidays. Strategies such as these speak to the joint public and private sector resolve and commitment to move forward. The major role of any Government is to instill confidence, as I said at the beginning, and the hallmark of any successful private sector is to pursue and promote innovation.

The close partnership between the public and private sectors in tourism has resulted in advances in raising the destination's awareness levels within our primary and secondary market and solid growth in air arrivals over the past three years.

The Cayman Islands Investment Bureau and the Cayman Islands Development Bank have positioned themselves to be able to support small businesses through this economic crisis to ensure that our economy can keep moving. The mandate to support the most vulnerable small businesses employing 10 persons or less, which represent more than half of the businesses within the Cayman Islands, has a profound impact on the overall economy, but especially on the tourism sector which produces an environment for small business opportunities ranging from public transport and watersports for small retail outlets.

Mr. Speaker, while we experienced solid growth in air arrivals for 2008, we have continued to see a decline in cruise arrivals for the year. This decline can be attributed to three major factors, namely: the impact of inclement weather on the ability to operate a tender facility; the consolidation that is occurring within one of the major cruise lines; and the perceived staleness of the Caribbean product. Mr. Speaker, it is not just the Cayman Islands that has seen a decline in cruise tourism.

And you will remember the comments I made a few minutes ago about airlift and the potential in South America. Well, we can learn a lot from the cruise lines, because I can tell you that for this winter season, as an example, the cruise lines have already deployed 14 ships, most of which are coming from the Caribbean. So they have redeployed them from the Caribbean to South America, specifically to Brazil and Argentina to service those two markets.

That is business that not just the Cayman Islands but the region is going to lose. It is a significant development and one that we need to watch very closely.

In terms of understanding the impact of inclement weather on the cruise sector, in 2008 almost one month of visitation was disrupted in total. In 2008, some 25 days of cruise calls were lost to bad weather in which ships could not dock or tender either at the Royal Watler Cruise Terminal, or at the alternate location at Spotts. During those 25 days, the destination lost approximately 100,000 cruise passengers who were scheduled to visit but were unable to.

This inclement weather has ranged from severe bad weather as three different hurricanes (Hurricane Gustav, Hurricane Paloma and to a lesser extent, Hurricane Ike) to only mild cold fronts where rolling and choppy seas made it unsafe to unload visitors onto tender boats.

Mr. Speaker, the average age of cruise passengers in 2008 was 46 years of age. When we look all around us, destinations have developed berthing facilities as the norm for catering to today's cruise customers. Most of the cruise passengers today are either traveling in groups of families or in many instances they are Baby Boomers. It is increasingly evident that we must develop berthing facilities to improve our customer service and minimise losses due to missed calls which are becoming more prevalent as a result of more dramatic weather patterns experienced globally.

We have also seen a marked decline in the number of cruise calls from the Royal Caribbean Cruise Line. This is the cruise line I mentioned earlier, and one of the world's largest cruise lines, second only to Carnival Cruise Lines. This year the Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines is forecasted to have 82 fewer calls than it did in 2008, resulting in a decrease of 143,000 passengers compared to 2007.

The 2009 forecast for Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines shows a further deterioration with 29 fewer calls than in 2008. So, over the three year period from 2007 through 2009, Mr. Speaker, the forecast calls for a total of 111 fewer calls from Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines, representing 215,000 visitors not coming to the destination.

This demonstrates, contrary to misguided comments that we don't need berthing facilities and should just keep what we have and maintain the status quo, that if we don't put in the infrastructure we need to service this sector, we are going to be in jeopardy of losing business that stems from it.

Royal Caribbean is gearing up for the introduction of their first Genesis Class Ship called the "Oasis of the Seas". It is due to be launched at the end of 2009. The introduction of this mega ship has triggered a reduction in all Royal Caribbean Cruise calls for the Cayman Islands. Further, the "Oasis of the Seas" will not be able to visit the destination in its first year of operation as the mega ship carries some 5,400 passengers (and I should add, Mr. Speaker, close to 2,000 crew members), it is too large to be able to effectively and conveniently tender passengers ashore. In fact, the cruise line itself has taken the decision not to go to any cruise port that does not have berthing facilities that can accommodate their ship.

When you add together visitors that have been lost due to bad weather [or] as a result of Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines consolidations and other miscellaneous cancellations in 2008, we lost over 240,000 passengers from the original 2008 projection.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we need to urgently correct this decline in cruise arrivals, which is not, as I said, unique to the Cayman Islands.

I will be the first to admit that the process for negotiating berthing facilities has not proceeded at the pace that I desired. There are numerous complex considerations ranging from environmental concerns to public interest, each of which must be considered very carefully, and not just consider the long and medium term but also the short term.

[Hon. Speaker in the Chair]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: I welcome you back, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, when I first raised the need to establish cruise berthing facilities there were many who attacked the plan, questioning the need to do so.

Numbers certainly do not lie, and there's a clear economic imperative to move forward.

We will not and must not compromise the immediate- or long-term interest of our people or our environment, but we must accept the fact that maintaining the status quo is not an option for us in this new environment. To enjoy the gains of the past we must invest in the future.

Public consultation on the environmental impact assessment is due to begin in the New Year with both targeted stakeholder meetings and broad-based public consultation. I trust, Madam Speaker, that of the many questions that may be legitimately asked we will not continue to hear the question of whether such facilities are needed, as we undoubtedly owe an economic and moral imperative to those hundreds of small businesses which rely upon this sector to move forward.

Madam Speaker, even in the midst of these troubling economic times, travel forecasts show that the cruise industry will grow in 2008 by 1.6 per cent, even as the rest of the global travel industry has seen marked decline. Cruise lines are forecasted to carry 12.8 million passengers in 2008, the vast majority of which (10.8 million [persons]) are from the North American Continent.

The cruise market continues to be a very important sector of the Cayman Islands Tourism Industry and will certainly remain so, without a doubt, Madam Speaker, for the foreseeable future.

Madam Speaker, when we consider those issues it is very, very clear to us (and when I say us I'm not just talking about the Cayman Islands, but about the region) that we have some important things to address, and most of it centres around the product we have in the Caribbean. We still have a very strong and very exciting product, and let us not forget that this is where cruise tourism essentially began. This is where it was given its birth—in the Caribbean. And the cruise lines have said to us, even recently, that they have no doubt that the Caribbean will continue to be a major player in cruise tourism, but there is clearly no room for complacency. And it is time that we addressed this issue.

Madam Speaker, the cruise industry is significantly different from the stay over tourism industry. I can address, as I have been doing, the product issues in Cayman that make Cayman much more competitive than other Caribbean destinations for stay over tourism. But if I address the cruise product in Cayman and it is only Cayman that addresses the cruise product and not the rest of the region, it does not work for the cruise lines because they are not coming to the Caribbean to make one stop on a seven day itinerary. So it has to be a regional approach.

I have made my position on that very clear during discussions at the Caribbean Tourism Organization (CTO) meetings, and I can say with confidence that that is the approach that the region has adopted and will be moving forward with.

The fact that economists around the world are responding in different ways to the current crisis (we know of the potential in South America), we have to leverage that to the extent that we can, Madam Speaker, for everything we can get out of it. And we know that there has been additional infrastructure development in Panama, for example, for the cruise sector, so that presents opportunities particularly for the Western Caribbean itinerary. And that is something that we have had preliminary discussions with the cruise lines about.

I think I should also address the whole issue now that we have the eminent change in the US administration with the swearing in of President-elect Barack Obama on 20 January 2009, and address (as I have done before) the whole issue of Cuba.

Madam Speaker, Cuba is an important part of the Caribbean. It is the largest island in the Caribbean. Cuba is also a member of the Caribbean Tourism Organization and is a very significant player in Caribbean tourism. Cuba's primary source market for stay over tourism is Canada, followed by Europe. And one of the reasons why we diversified our tourism markets very early in this administration by putting additional investment in Europe and Canada is because those two regions already have significant access to Cuba.

So, when the US policies towards Cuba are relaxed for travel, as we expect that they will be perhaps as early as two years into the new administration, that the impact that will have on us in our primary market, the United States . . . and there is clearly going to be an impact because lot of people who were up until this point prevented from traveling to Cuba who are going to be rushing to see what this island that they have been kept away from looks like. Hence the reason why we have invested further in Canada and Europe and are seeing increases in air arrivals from both of those regions, as well as from our primary tourism market, the United States.

On the cruise tourism side, Madam Speaker, the cruise lines have told us that certainly they would welcome the opportunity to go into Cuba. They have already done their inspections, actually, at ports in Cuba. But there is, in their words, significant work despite what we thought, that must be done in those ports, including dredging and the upgrade of infrastructure before they could use the ports in Cuba.

Madam Speaker, some time ago I offered the view (which has since been confirmed by the cruise lines) that the opening up of Cuba to cruise tourism was less of a threat to the Cayman Islands and, in fact, presented some significant opportunities for us on the cruise tourism side. That view has been confirmed by the cruise lines because they have indicated to us that they would not develop a Cuban itinerary for cruise in a similar way that they had developed an Alaskan itinerary for cruise passengers.

What they would do is to combine one or perhaps two ports in Cuba with other ports in the Western Caribbean. So, islands like Jamaica, the Cayman Islands and other countries in Central America, like Belize and Honduras, would perhaps benefit from that in a real way. Perhaps you could have an itinerary that comes out of one of the ports in Miami, Ft. Lauderdale or Tampa, that would stop in Cuba, Jamaica, Grand Cayman and either Honduras or Belize or perhaps Mexico. So there are opportunities there, Madam Speaker, on the cruise tourism side and I just wanted to reiterate that we are very mindful of this and are certainly preparing for it.

Madam Speaker, I want to say a few words about some of the other key subjects for which I have constitutional responsibility. I am then going to go on to deal with some of the capital development projects and the fact that we have had to cut some of them back, and say quite a bit more on the whole reason for that and some other things which have impacted that.

On the environment, Madam Speaker, much has been said about the long awaited National Conservation Bill, tabled initially as far back as the previous administration but which did not see safe passage through this honourable House. It is a good piece of legislation that not only brings together various existing pieces of legislation that protect our very important environment, but it enhances that legislation. We have had countless numbers of public consultations, public meetings, specific stakeholder meetings with people who are interested and I believe we have that Bill to the point now where we can have it properly debated in this honourable House. I will be taking it back to our political caucus very early in the New Year and hopefully we will get it finally approved at caucus and can then take it through the process of Cabinet approval and tabling of the green bill in this honourable House for debate.

I want to say that we understand there are strong views on both sides of this issue. The Government does not have the luxury of sitting on one side of the fence or the other, or taking one side or the other. We have to consider the implications of this Bill on all sectors and also the importance of the Bill in protecting our environment and strike the right balance in bringing this legislation to the House.

I recall, long before I was involved in politics, when the current Marine Conservation Law was introduced and the uproar that was caused in the country during that time as a result of that, when people were told they could only take X number of conch or lobster or fish, and that they were marine parks that you could not fish, dive, anchor a boat or do any activity in at all. Madam Speaker, I remember the significant uproar that took place over that legislation. We should pay tribute now to the late Sir Vassel Johnson who was largely responsible for piloting that Bill through this honourable House. Despite the licks that he took over it then, today we all know that most, if not all of the people who criticised him over that Bill, those same individuals will tell you that they don't know what our marine environment would look like and where we would be today were it not for that legislation. They understand clearly that we would not have any conch or lobster left and our marine environment would not be in the pristine condition that it is in.

So, Madam Speaker, while the Government is well aware that there will be some significant opposition to the Bill, hopefully we can get it here in the first meeting of the New Year so that we can have the robust debate we need to have over the National Conservation Bill. Certainly, I sincerely hope that it will see safe passage on this occasion through this honourable House.

We have a very hardworking Environment Department. Many times they don't find favour with some people because they have to be firm in the way that they approach things in the interest of the environment. But, Madam Speaker, they play a very, very significant and important role. And even as we step back from perhaps our personal involvement in a project that may cause somebody to feel negative towards the Department of Environment, we begin to appreciate the very important role that our Department of Environment plays.

Madam Speaker, in the area of investment, the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau continues to adjust and improve its inward investment strategy during this time, where people are somewhat reluctant to invest. This is the time for us to essentially tighten up on our strategy (which is what the Investment Bureau is doing) so that when we go beyond this crisis and the global economy is robust again and investor confidence is high again, that we emerge from that, as I said in relation to the tourism industry, on the investment side in a much more competitive position than we were when we went into it.

Also being focused on during this time, as I said earlier, is the whole issue of small business development and the maintenance of small businesses. That is being done jointly through the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau and the Cayman Islands Development Bank. Like many economies it is the small business sector that is the backbone of the economy and employs the majority of people in this country. I can say without any fear of contradiction that the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau has done more for small businesses in this country in the last three and a half years than it has ever done before, and we are very proud of that fact.

Madam Speaker, in the area of commerce, we continue to work very closely with the Cayman Islands Chamber of Commerce. You, and all Members, will be aware that we have done I think it is three trade missions to Panama with the Cayman Islands Chamber of Commerce. As a result of those trade missions, we have seen a significant increase in trade between the Cayman Islands and Panama. In fact, the business has become so strong that it has made it not just possible but attractive to us to commence non-stop service on Cayman Airways from Grand Cayman to Panama, and that service we hope to inaugurate in January 2009.

Another very important development on the commerce side (and I won't spend too much time dealing with this one because the Honourable Leader of Government Business has already spoken to it) is the whole issue of immigration reform and the introduction of the administrative processing of work permits by the Immigration Department. Madam Speaker, this is going to significantly increase the speed with which the Immigration Department is able to process these applications. The resulting effects from that is, that businesses will get responses quicker, staff up quicker, and be more effective in catering to their customers.

Madam Speaker, I want to go back to the capital development side because we understand the impact that the global economic situation has had on economies around the world and on our economy. We have seen some drop off in revenue, which has resulted in the Government taking the position that we needed to postpone a number of capital development programmes, including, but not limited to, the Beulah Smith High School, George Town Primary School and the Bodden Town Emergency Services Centre.

Madam Speaker, the Bodden Town Emergency Services Centre was a project which I promoted from the very, very beginning and, in particular, the Fire Service Station as a component of that project because as the fastest [growing] district on the Island, with the population it has, to have to wait on a response to an emergency from either the Frank Sound Fire Station or the George Town Fire Station to the Bodden Town district is simply unacceptable. And I have said that from the very beginning, Madam Speaker. But the circumstances are what they are and we have had to make the very, very tough decisions that we have made.

Notwithstanding that, we have already made quite a significant investment in the Bodden Town Emergency Services Centre. We have secured the property; have done all of the site works and have done some landscaping on the perimeter of the property. That investment is there. The property will proceed, albeit perhaps one or two years behind schedule, but it will proceed and it is an important project for this country and one that must be given priority going forward once the situation improves.

The other project that is in the same category and perhaps even higher in terms of priority for the Bodden Town district is the Savannah Seawall with the problems that we have had in the gully area. I know I don't have to tell you or other Members of this House what the situation is there and how difficult that situation has been for many, many residents in the Savannah area. And there is a need to fix it. There is no question about that. We have the solution and have done more than anyone has done before.

We have done extensive studies on the problem and we have a recommended solution. We simply need to implement that solution now, which is the Seawall, and we need the funding to do that. Unfortunately, again, given the situation, we have had to make some cutbacks.

Madam Speaker, you see I'm not a happy man today because it is not just the global economic situation that has contributed to this; we have a situation here and I am not going to go too deep into it so you don't need to have any fear that I am going to say something that might be inappropriate. But we have this situation with this Special Metropolitan Police Investigation. Madam Speaker, if I take as an example the Savannah gulley situation and the seawall that needs to be constructed to address that situation, the money that we have spent on this investigation and the civil liability that is likely to come to this Government's doorstep because of poor judgment by those who are involved . . . that money could be spent today, could have been employed right now as I speak, on building that Seawall.

Madam Speaker, much has been said. And let me say this, because every opportunity I get I'm going to say it, otherwise I know people are going to spin it another way. This Government has never said and will never say that the investigation should be stopped. Madam Speaker, you know my background. I ran on a platform of stamping out corruption. So it is not me who is going to stand in this House and say that these investigations should be stopped or should be curtailed. They must be completed. They must be brought to their proper conclusion, and whoever must be charged must be charged.

I don't pretend to know all the details of the investigation, but I know enough from the judgments of Chief Justice Smellie and Justice Cresswell . . . I know enough from those two judgments to know that Mr. Bridger, the Chief Investigation Officer, has exercised some very, very poor judgment in this matter. Judgment which, I predict, is going to result—if you look even beyond the expenditure for the investigation itself—in significant civil liability for this Government.

Madam Speaker, I don't know about the rest of my colleagues. I shouldn't say I don't know about them because I know, but I can tell you now that this Minister is not going to be supporting any expenditure for this investigation until Martin Bridger is removed as the lead investigating officer. As I said, the investigation must continue. But this man has exposed the Government to significant liability, and I owe it to the people I represent to make sure that he does not continue in a position where he can expose this Government and the people of this country to additional civil liability. It is unacceptable, Madam Speaker.

I heard about him wanting to come to talk to us again. Madam Speaker, I have no confidence in the man and will not sit with him in any room.

Madam Speaker, you have heard a lot of comments publicly and otherwise about what has happened with Justice Henderson's case. This thing called misconduct in public office, from what I can tell from my own research and what other legal minds have said, is not an arrestable offence. Yet, we have had two people—not one—arrested for it.

We don't say much about Burman Scott because perhaps in some peoples' eyes Burman is not as important as other people. But Burman Scott is an important person in this country too. And if he was arrested for an offence that is not an arrestable offence, then he is entitled to a remedy too. And there is no question, because he has said so publicly, that he is going to be seeking one. And so what is the liability going to be there?

That money could be spent on the seawall to address the Savannah Gulley situation. From my point of view, the bills for all of this must be sent immediately across the pond to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) because I ain't paying um! I am not, Madam Speaker!

The Governor might exercise his power to pay them, but it won't be with my approval. Absolutely not!

I say this again, for the avoidance of doubt, from my point of view if there are outstanding matters that need to be investigated then they must—not should, they must—be investigated and brought to a proper conclusion, but by a different team; not by a team led by Martin Bridger. It is unacceptable! And tell them not to bring him into this House.

Madam Speaker, the other thing I want to talk about is the local media, and when I have something to say they know I'm going to say it and they can give me whatever licks they want to give me afterwards. But we have a situation, and it is an unfortunate situation, in this country where we have a local media, in particular the print media, that has taken the position that they don't necessarily need to be a newspaper anymore where they objectively report the news, but they are essentially public relation companies that have sold their souls to the highest bidder, and whoever is willing to pay for the coverage gets the story written.

So, Madam Speaker, the people of this country are faced with a situation today where they cannot pick up the newspaper, read and believe what they are reading because the only question in their mind is, who has paid them today? Whose story are they writing today?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, could you get back to the Motion for me please, or tie it in your debate with the Motion before the House.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I am debating the Motion before the House, but when the Government or any government, whether it is this Government, the past government or a future government, is trying to implement their programmes and there is a deliberate situation going on that is designed to undermine the implementation of that programme, that is a legitimate item, with respect, for debate.

Madam Speaker, I do not know that I necessarily need to say more about it because having said what I have said, I know I will get the usual licks from the media. But that is okay because I'm use to that. I have a direct voice to people so, while the media can help on occasion, if they choose not to report what I say or to report it inaccurately, that is certainly their choice. But I am saying it is a sad situation that we have come to that.

I have been asked before whether the Government would regulate the press. Madam Speaker, the Government would never do that. We believe in the principle of freedom of the press. But the press must regulate itself. The press must be bold enough to have whatever kind of commission they want to have to discipline their members that come out of line. They must self-regulate. They cannot have that kind of situation existing in the country.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I hear the Leader of the Opposition asking about relevance. It is a good thing we don't get up on that point of order when he is speaking because we would be on our feet constantly.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I want to close on this note because, as I said from the very beginning, all of the doom and gloom that is being preached in some quarters is not helpful. In fact, when you consider the people who are saying that and you listen to the talk shows in the morning with all the doom and gloom . . . God help us, Madam Speaker, if those people were running our country, because they have already told the country even before the election is held (and some of them are seeking office) that the world is coming to an end.

Now how do you expect your people to feel if they are going to go out there and, rather than saying to the people (because this is what we believe as a government) that in every challenge there are opportunities versus saying, the world is coming to an end; we might as well close shop, let's go home. Just elect me and then after that I may be able to resurrect everybody?

Come on, Madam Speaker! We can't do that to our people. We must lead and say, look at the challenges, face them head on; look at the opportunities, embrace, pursue and leverage the opportunities for everything you can get out of them. Madam Speaker, that is my position, has always been my position, and is my position from the time I was speaking at the tourism conference in 2007 and it will remain my position.

Madam Speaker, all I need to say at this point is that having said all that I have said, I think that what is more important at this point is that we try to conclude the business of the honourable House as soon as we possibly can so that we can move to where we ought to be at this point, and that is into our various constituencies talking to our people and assisting them where we can.

So, on that final note, Madam Speaker, I will simply wish you, and indeed all Members of this honourable House on both sides of the House, all of the constituents, my constituents of Bodden Town and indeed, the people of the Cayman Islands, a very Merry Christmas and a happy, healthy and safe New Year.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to speak does the Honourable Mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I thank you for accommodating me as I was sitting discussing another matter elsewhere.

Madam Speaker, we are in this House debating the Strategic Policy Statement of the Government, which sets out the broad outlines and parameters against which the 2009/10 Budget is to be developed.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay spent a great deal of time complaining about the process, claiming that the way this Government has approached the matter somehow handicaps the Opposition and that we need to be working to make the process better, et cetera, et cetera.

I am disappointed he is not here this evening so that he could perhaps hear a little bit about the process. What was somewhat surprising to me was the fact that this process was introduced when he was chief economic legal and political advisor to the UDP Government and he never complained about the process then.

Indeed, back then Members of the Opposition were not even given the opportunity to debate the statement because it was not presented as we do it, as a motion, but was simply laid on the Table as a statement. The Leader of Government Business read his statement and sat down. That's how they ran the operation. But now, this Government, which sometimes to its detriment goes out of the way to make the process transparent to make sure that we are held accountable and to allow participation by the Opposition, gets beaten with many stripes.

Madam Speaker, having been around these chambers now for some eight years, I know how the game works. I am not going to spend a great deal of time chiding the Second Elected Member for West Bay for his tongue-in-cheek remarks, because one really can't accord them any greater value than that in this respect. But I think that all who listen to the proceedings in this House and report on the proceedings of this House should be reminded of the way the process used to work compared to the way the process now works.

Now, for having claimed to be labouring under some handicap, the Second Elected Member for West Bay did go on for quite some time. And the Leader of the Opposition himself, despite the fact that at the moment (and we wish him well) he may be labouring under some degree of physical handicap, he certainly read from a prepared speech at some length, a document that had clearly been developed as a result of some thought analysis and research. So, I believe the claim that the Opposition somehow was placed in a difficult position so that they can't carry out their function and job properly—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: [laughter] —is really not truly a just claim.

I will leave that aspect of it there because I don't think a great deal is to be achieved except to perhaps justifiably cause the Leader of the Opposition and his team to be a little red in the face following the remarks made by the Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Now, to the documents themselves, that is, the Motion and the Strategic Policy Statement, as well as the comprehensive address delivered by the Leader of Government Business and the technical support remarks which came from the Third Official Member, the Honourable Financial Secretary, when he spoke.

Madam Speaker, listening to the Opposition, sometimes I wonder whether they were as the Leader of Government Business said, behaving like Alice in Wonderland. Because, while in one breath they acknowledged the reality of the global financial crisis and the world in which we now live (it's a very changed world), they seemed to park that conveniently to one side when looking at the Government's fiscal planning, capital works programmes and other projects and proposals so that somehow over here there is a situation where the world is facing the greatest challenge it has, in financial terms, since the great depression of the 1930s.

But over here in Cayman while the Government needs to be paying attention to it (they said that as well) in actually preparing the Strategic Policy Statement and planning for the years ahead, Government is expected to operate as though there are no pressures being brought to bear. And Government was supposed to have predicted years ago that the world was going to slide into the deep recession which now seems to be apparent. Their response to all of that is to say . . . not to acknowledge—let me just say this before I move on). Not to acknowledge that this must be one of the rare government's anywhere in the world that in a time like this is able to produce a Strategic Policy Statement which is essentially your pre-budget statement. They do it in other places in the world too; pre-budget statements. We call it the Strategic Policy Statement, which projects . . .

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Projects?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: . . . which projects, Madam Speaker, real GDP growth.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [Inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Which projects a substantial operating surplus; which meets all the principles of responsible financial management; which still allows the Government to continue with major critically important infrastructural projects; which allows Government to continue to operate all of its agencies, statutory authorities, companies and central government; not to have to propose any layoffs in staff.

Not one word of acknowledgement—forget about compliment, because you do not get that from that side—about any of that was uttered by any Member of the Opposition who stood up and spoke for hours and hours and hours.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I wonder why.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: They were lavish in their complaints. Some of them waxed lyrical in their criticisms of this Government's programmes, policies, and fiscal planning. But all of them steered clear of dealing with those critical issues, which are what underpin the Government's fiscal policies and budget planning.

I wonder . . . and the truth of the matter is that some of them do not know. But the Leader of the Opposition and the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac—both of whom have served some time in Cabinet—understand. They must understand! Or at least have some insight into how much work, effort, sweat, blood and tears must have gone into Government's thinking about which capital projects had to be sacrificed to make this happen.

Madam Speaker, while they curse us up and down, while the Opposition may have its own talk show dedicated to nothing else but criticism of the Government, the reality that the country has to face when we get to 20 May and in the thinking before it is this: What has been wrong with any of the Government's planning, programmes, projects?

What is wrong with Government's fiscal strategy?

Which other Government could have done better in terms of managing the limited resources we have and producing year after year budgets which have operating surpluses and allow critically needed projects and programmes to go on?

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker . . . and I say this: The Leader of the Opposition has said correctly that no Government before had engaged in a more aggressive (not his precise words, but this is what he meant) capital development programme. Spending more money I think is what he said.

But, Madam Speaker, the reality is that if his government, and the one before that, and the one before that, had focused on the critical infrastructure which this country needed—and still needs—rather than engaging in white elephant projects, like Boatswain's Bay, which is going to drive this country into bankruptcy if we don't take serious and radical steps to deal with it—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Which will never, ever turn a profit under the current structure!

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Which cost $60-plus million.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mm-hmm.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: We would all be in a better place.

I would not have to be stopping the Beulah Smith School—in his constituency, which desperately needs both a primary school and another high school.

But, Madam Speaker, schools are not sexy. Schools are not something you can jump up and down about and have big parties at. So, we like things that have lots of bells and whistles and Boatswain's Beach—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Oh my God.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —and those sorts of projects.

And, Madam Speaker, everything changes, but this does not change: Leopards never change their spots.

So, if this country believes that under the leadership of the present Leader of the Opposition, accompanied by his stalwarts, that the management of this country is going to be any different if they assume office as they aspire to in May of next year, than it was in the years when they ran this country almost into the ground, then they need to ask themselves whether they truly believe leopards change their spots.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, every step of the way the Leader of the Opposition, his opposition talk show and his colleagues have fought the changes—

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

I am sure the Member is speaking with tongue-in-cheek, but he must stop [saying] I have a talk show.

I do not.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, if you cannot prove that the Leader of the Opposition has a talk show, would you please . . .

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You are doing so well with the Opposition speech, but you are talking foolishness now.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: As the Leader of the Opposition has so readily disavowed any association with the Rooster Talk Show, otherwise known as "Cross Talk"—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I must inject here again.

The Minister might be a lawyer, but he cannot keep doing what he is doing if he does not want to waste the time of this House. I did not avow . . . make any such statement—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: —disavow . . . I support in great majority what I hear coming from the talk show—in great majority, because they are telling the truth against what you are doing. And when you were the Opposition you did the same thing.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, please.

Honourable Minister of Education, would you continue your debate?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I need say no more on that point.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Oh yeah?

[inaudible interjections and laughter]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, the reality is that every step of the way the Leader of the Opposition, his colleagues in this House and the unofficial opposition, led in particular by one talk show, have fought the critically needed changes to education which I championed before and after I took office in this House as Minister of Education.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: And a critically important component of that transformation exercise has been a needed upgrade, an expansion of the physical plant—

[inaudible interjection]

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, would you please refrain from interrupting the Minister while he is speaking?

Honourable Minister of Education, would you continue with your debate?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Am I interrupting him?

[pause]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, a critical part of that transformation exercise has been the need for a significant upgrade and expansion of the physical plant which we are operating right across these Islands, including Cayman Brac.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: That, Madam Speaker, by its very nature is hugely capital intensive.

Anyone who took the time to spend a little time around the schools, particularly around John Gray, will understand how desperate the need is for a new arrangement of better laid out space to do something about the sprawling nature of that campus to provide for our young people—modern facilities and amenities which enhance teaching and learning, which resolve some of the security issues.

I was asked today about fights on the campus yesterday.

When we see what has transpired since we have managed to divide the George Hicks campus into four separate schools, [as to] how much better conduct, discipline, learning, attitudes and morale have become, by breaking the school into smaller units, creating a closer, more intimate relationship between teachers and students, making it more of a family situation rather than this broad impersonal campus (which John Gray is), we start to understand how much that has meant; how much better the arrangements are; how much better students do; how much better teachers feel; how much better parents feel and how much better they all interact. And anyone who spent any time on the John Gray campus would understand how critically important it is that we build these schools.

But instead of getting some support from any Member of the Opposition, all I have gotten has been a fight every step of the way. I know, Madam Speaker, that when we made the speech yesterday . . . I know last night was a night of celebration—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh, Madam Speaker, please.

I do not want to hear the Member crying about [inaudible]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —that thankfully the Minister cannot go ahead with these schools.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, it is the hour of interruption.

I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I move the adjournment of this honourable House until 10 am Friday, 12 December.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10 am tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

This honourable House now stands adjourned.

At 4.30 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Friday, 12 December 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
FRIDAY
12 DECEMBER 2008
11.42 AM
Fifth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Fourth Elected Member for the district of West Bay to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

Proceedings Resumed at 11.44 am

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Speaker: I have received apologies for late arrival from the Honourable Minister of Health and Human Services.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE
MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF CABINET

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Report on damage to Cayman Brac High School following an act of vandalism overnight on 12th
December 2008

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I am grateful to you and the House for giving me the time to get this statement together. Consequently, the late start of this House. But it is with deep regret that I have to make this statement reporting on the damage to Cayman Brac High School following an act of gross vandalism last night.

Madam Speaker, this morning a teacher arrived at 7.30 am at the Cayman Brac High School and realised the school had been vandalized. Police were notified immediately and were called to the scene. Eight classrooms were destroyed in this wanton act of senseless violence. Fire extinguishers were released in eight classrooms, furniture was turned over and foam from the extinguishers was sprayed all over the furniture and the walls.

All of the computers in the computer room were destroyed and foam was sprayed over them as well. A computer monitor was thrown into a sink in the boy's bathroom. Fires were lit in one classroom in the mathematics and science block of the building. Fires were also started in several containers in the corridor. In the home economics room, ceiling tiles that were replaced following Hurricane Paloma have been damaged. The room was not yet occupied; it was scheduled to be set up for occupation today.

It would appear that enough classrooms were deliberately damaged to ensure lessons could not take place between now and the end of term.

Police are on the scene investigating and taking fingerprints and footprints. The Assistant District Commissioner is also on the scene. All of the students have been sent home, and the Principal, Mr. Jones, is currently briefing teachers. Parents have been informed and thus far have not been calling for any more information.

A cleaning crew is on standby and will begin the cleanup operation when the police have completed the onsite investigations. The Department of Education Services is trying to get all of the debris and mess cleared up so that school can resume for the last three days of term prior to the Christmas break. School is due to close for Christmas on 17 December 2008.

This act of violence against the community deeply saddens me, Madam Speaker, and comes as a shock to the law abiding citizens of the Cayman Brac community.

To face this news this morning, alongside the pain of the deferment of the Beulah Smith Campus and the new George Town Primary school, leaves me in anguish today. I am especially saddened because on the Saturday morning immediately following the passage of Hurricane Paloma the staff from my Ministry were already speaking to District Administration to assess the situation and determine how we could get education services resumed as quickly as possible.

Our first priority was for the students preparing for examinations and, along with the restoration, great effort was directed at making sure the health and safety issues were dealt with expediently. We wanted to ensure, as always, that our students were in a safe and healthy environment so that they could concentrate fully on their lessons without being distracted or hindered by other issues.

As a consequence, Cayman Brac High was reopened on 21 November for years 11 and 12 students. Once they settled in, years 9 and 10 followed and were able to continue to receive the high quality of education they so richly deserved.

In light of the economic conditions we are facing it is extremely difficult for me to announce the deferment of the construction of two schools. This decision carries no political mileage for me. As painful as it was, it was a decision that I had to take because, caring as deeply for my country as I do, I have a responsibility to lead whatever process is necessary for the longer-term future of the Cayman Islands.

I have made those difficult decisions because, as disappointed as I am, I am also satisfied that my Ministry and the Department of Education Services will continue on the journey we have started and the Education transformation process will be maintained so that every student on these Islands can receive the very highest standard of education possible.

In this regard, I would like to remind and assure the parents of the George Town Primary School that their school has been accepted as an International Baccalaureate School. This, in itself, speaks volumes about the quality of education that the children attending George Town Primary are receiving.

I know I speak for all the staff in my Ministry, as well as those in the Department of Education Services, when I say that we have faced many challenges in order to renovate and reopen the schools in Cayman Brac. But we have pressed on relentlessly and undeterred because my focus, and that of my staff, has been to do everything humanly possible to protect the future of the young people in Cayman Brac.

I would like to assure the parents whose children are affected by this despicable act of wanton violence that your children remain the highest priority for me as Minister and for all the staff of the Department of Education Services and the Ministry.

When the going gets tough, the tough get going. So, we will once again face this adversity and put all of our efforts into restoring the classrooms and making sure the school is made safe for your children to return to. We have dedicated outstanding educators in Cayman Brac who care for your children as if they were their own. For this reason, they will ensure that the perpetrators of this heinous act will not win in their quest to rob your children of their future.

As soon as the police have completed their investigations on site and give us clearance to proceed, the restoration work will commence so that we may continue to deliver the highest standards of education possible regardless, no matter what obstacles others may try to place in our way.

It my fervent hope that whoever committed this dastardly deed will be identified and prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I wonder if I could beg your indulgence to ask a short question under Standing Order 30 (2), please?

The Speaker: Yes.

Short Question (SO 30(2))

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you.

I wonder whether the Minister would say if he would be prepared to give due consideration to two items: Firstly, for the additional lighting, whether it is through the generator powered lighting that the Command Control Centre is using on the Brac to add to the illumination of the high school, [against] the background of what transpired last night. And secondly, to look at the security issue, being a single female officer, and at the extension of her time, if at all possible, to ensure that such a nonsensical act would not occur any time in the near future, if at all, on the Brac.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I am going to Cayman Brac early next week. I am going to sit down with all concerned and we are going to look at everything. I won't make any other commitments at this stage because I would be doing so in something of a vacuum.

I want to consider all of the circumstances and talk to all of the relevant people. Most of all, I want us to catch those who have done this, because this was no act by a couple of teenagers who were unhappy about something. This is a deliberate attempt to keep the school in Cayman Brac from continuing. And I am going to get to the bottom of this.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 10/2008-09—Approval of the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture, continuing his debate.

Honourable Minister, you have one hour and forty-one minutes left.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, when we took the adjournment yesterday afternoon I had been talking about the need for improvements and upgrade of the physical plant in education. I had spent some little time outlining the opposition, or, at its best, the lack of support, to the fundamental and necessary changes to education which this Government under my leadership as Minister of Education has effected and is implementing in an attempt to give all of the young people of these Islands the best possible opportunity to get the best possible education available.

Madam Speaker, I was saying that I know there has been celebration in the Opposition camp at the necessity on the part of the Government to take the hard decision about pursuing the Beulah Smith campus and the George Town Primary School. But, while they may rejoice because they say, I told you so, and the initiatives, at least this initiative of my Ministry and this Government, has faltered, I promise them that in their celebration and rejoicing they ought to appreciate that I am not going to quit and this Government is not going to quit in its commitment to getting these schools done; in our commitment to ensuring that all children in these Islands have equal access and opportunity to the same facilities, amenities and quality of teaching and learning.

Madam Speaker, the despicable acts that took place at Cayman Brac High School last night have devastated me. It's been a long time since I have been as angry as I was this morning. But as I said in the statement earlier, we shall press on. We shall press on.

We [are taking] a long look at how we ensure in 2010 that the equity in terms of facilities, amenities and quality of education is achieved across the high school system. What I want to assure the broader community, but in particular parents and students who will attend those schools (that is, the Clifton Hunter High School and the John Gray High School) in 2010, is that we will deliver the standard of education that we have been striving for right across the full range of high school students.

Madam Speaker, the three high schools, which are part of the plan (two of which are under construction) when completely built out would have accommodated a total of 3,000 students in the high school system. For John Gray, all four academies are being built, so that is 1,000; Clifton Hunter, three academies are under contract, 1,750; and Beulah Smith was to have two academies of 500 students initially.

What we are working towards now, Madam Speaker, given the decision not to go ahead with Beulah Smith, we are striving to find a way to complete all four academies at Clifton Hunter so that we will have capacity for 2,000 students.

As we believe that is feasible, we would be able to accommodate the entire projected high school population between the two schools so that all children who are in the high school system would have access to the same facilities, amenities and offerings that are available. What I feared when this critical decision had to be taken was that we might wind up in a situation where some of our high school children were able to go to the new schools but some had to be accommodated elsewhere (the George Hicks campus being the obvious place). But I believe with some real hard work, determination, pushing and shoving, and some reprioritisation in terms of government's capital projects, we should be able to get that other academy done. Based on the current price, an academy is about $6 million dollars rather than $50 million, which is what the whole school costs.

Madam Speaker, we are not there yet; but that's the road down which we are heading. And I have not quit either in my determination to find a way for us to do George Town Primary. I don't want to hold out false hope, but I have been to I think it is about eight meetings with the parents and teachers of that school over the past couple of years, and I have worked with them and my team as we planned and considered every possible option for what that school should provide, what amenities it should have, how we can best give young people, particularly at that very formative stage in their lives, the best possible opportunities. And I personally had to deliver to them the bad news that we would not be able to go on.

I know how the parents and the teachers at George Town Primary, which is arguably the best primary school in these Islands, including the private ones . . . I understand how they feel. I understand how disappointed they are.

And, Madam Speaker, whatever I and this Government can do, whatever creative means can be found to get George Town Primary built, I am going to seek to do that, because many of the classrooms there are mobile units. It is a less than satisfactory situation. If they have to continue in that environment for even the medium term, the Government is going to have to invest considerable sums in that facility so that they can continue in reasonable comfort to be protected from the rain when they have to move from class to class; and teachers can have a decent staff room and better play areas. All of those things are less than satisfactory at George Town Primary.

And while the Leader of the Opposition will say, as he likes to, that I haven't delivered a single school since I took office, Madam Speaker, when we think where the physical plant has come from, because his government had managed to achieve so little in terms of repairing the educational facilities after Ivan, that we spent a year trying to get facilities back to normal. They had put up signs proclaiming a new high school in West Bay and one up at Clifton Hunter and we had to chop the bush away from the sign so that we could find it when we got there.

Not one penny had been provided in the budget. Not one plan had been drawn. It was all just a bunch of electioneering gimmicks. And he has the gall to talk about my achievements in education in three and a half years?

He has been here 24 years. Tell him to point to one thing, besides breaking ground, that he has done to advance education facilities in this country. He led a government with a Minister of Education with a master's degree in Education who sat here and read books for four and a half years and did nothing. And then he has the nerve to talk about what I and this Government have achieved, when he has fought every step of the way from the day that I laid the National Consensus on the Future of Education document on the Table of this House.

He has fought to keep the transformation of education from happening in this country.

Point of Order

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I only rise so that the Member's vexation will cool down.

The Member—

The Speaker: Well, that is not a point of order.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But you know what the point of order is.

The point of order is, Madam Speaker, that the Member cannot say what he just said. Or you should be challenging him saying, where is the proof of this?

At no point in time have we as an Opposition not supported the Member in anything that he has brought to this Honourable House, no matter if we say that we don't want . . . Like the big grandiose scheme he had when he brought the budget here. We voted for him.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education would you continue?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, talk is cheap. It takes money to build schools.

You see, Madam Speaker, it is easy—and I have never met a politician who has not paid lip service to education. It is the good-sounding thing to do, but the proof of the pudding is in the eating. When it really matters, ask any of them when they have been on the talk shows saying they support what the Minister of Education is doing.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: All the time!

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Never, Madam Speaker! Never!

When I brought the National Consensus document here, he and the Second Elected Member for West Bay moved a motion trying to amend it and defer the implementation of the plan because I was going too fast, too far.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Where the plan is.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Where is the plan?

I will forgive the Leader of the Opposition for the last couple of months because he has not been well. But he must have had his head buried in the sand for the last three and a half years, because not only do we have a plan, which this House has approved, but we have implemented it!

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Every aspect has had attention: From early childhood, which he and his government ignored; special Education Needs, which they absolutely paid no attention to; development of a new National Curriculum, which we developed and implemented to a new governance model for education, to the building of schools.

Now, you tell me, Madam Speaker, where is his plan after 24 years of sitting in that chair?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: My plan?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: They claim to be a government-in-waiting five months before the election.

All they are doing is criticizing everything this Government has done. They have said not one thing! And they are going to be called on this every step of the way between now and 20 May.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Of course. [inaudible]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Where is your plan?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You will see.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: If the plan of the Minister of Education is so bad, if his performance is so poor, what are you proposing to do to make it better?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: What have you done to make it better?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, perhaps because the Leader of the Opposition is so disconnected from reality he does not know. He is asking me what have I done to make education better? Let him ask the parents of the schools if they don't think the environment in which their children are attending school now—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You should hear what some of them are saying.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —is better than it has ever been.

It is not perfect, Madam Speaker. I do not claim it is perfect, but Lord knows it is plenty better than it was when I took office.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yep.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: And, Madam Speaker, with God's will and the continued support of this community it is going to keep getting better.

The difference between this Minister and the last one is that this Minister cares about the children of this country. And you know the difference between this Government and the last government? They thought that the provision of state of the art facilities for turtles was more important than the provision of state of the art facilities for children. That's the difference.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, would you turn off your microphone for me please, because I am getting two recordings.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: So, the Leader of the Opposition can stay there and groan, grunt and grumble as much as he wants.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay talked about facts—those are the facts.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I know what you are talking about is not getting the country anywhere.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: And I can back it up with evidence every step of the way.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yep.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Their response to everything I have done—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Show the results my son, show the results.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —is to say I am spending too much money.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Show the results.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: He is talking about results? I can give him those as well, Madam Speaker.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mm-hmm.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Those results that you are quoting were not from you.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I am asking you again, would you please turn off your microphone. We are getting double recording up there.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Is it on?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I don't mind, I love it when the country can hear that sort of nonsense.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes.

You're so full of yourself that you think that everything you say is correct.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, the difficulty the Leader of the Opposition has with this Minister and with this Government is that we have demonstrated what his government could not do in the years they were there.

We have demonstrated competence, compassion, and we have demonstrated a determination to improve the lot of the people of this country and, with the full support of every member of Cabinet and my Backbench, particularly the lot of young people in this country.

When they get up and carry on about employment issues and why Caymanians cannot get this job and are being overlooked, in part, Madam Speaker, it is tied to the education. And while it may sound good politically, and oh it scores so many points on the talk shows and elsewhere to beat their chests saying we care about Caymanians and foreigners are taking away these jobs, it does little good, Madam Speaker, unless we get to the core of the issue—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —and arm our people with all of the tools they need to get to where they need to get to.

And, Madam Speaker, I may not be returned. I am not so presumptuous as to decide what I think the voters are going to do or not do. But I am going to say this: Cost it what it will, I have no apologies to make for the money that this Government has spent under my leadership of education on improving teaching and learning. All the rest of it is about what you know, Madam Speaker.

None of us, particularly me or any member of my senior team, believes that the mere provision of state of the art facilities transforms education, but it is a critical component of the overall exercise. All of the other things we have done and are continuing to do are about improving teaching and learning; improving outcomes for children in our school system.

And so, Madam Speaker, I am calling on the Leader of the Opposition to name his shadow Minister of Education, to say to this country shortly, 'Well, we think that the Minister of Education has got it all wrong and nothing has been done to improve the lot of the students of this country. So, here is our Education plan when we take office on 20 May [2009].'

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Do you know what, Madam Speaker? He is clueless.

I am going to wait, but not with bated breath, for the production of their education plan. I hope, Madam Speaker, it can bear greater scrutiny than their great economic plan, because they all got up there and debated it—the Leader of the Opposition, his chief economic advisor (the Second Elected Member for West Bay), and the Lady Member for Cayman Brac. And if anyone heard anything but criticism in anything they said, then, Madam Speaker, their ears are better than mine.

On the eve of an election a government-in-waiting should, at a minimum, be telling the country—especially when they say the Government in office has got it all wrong . . . What is your alternative? Where is your plan?

You know where it is, Madam Speaker? Where the last one was, which is why they are where they are now—on the other side of this House.

Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition led what has to be acknowledged as the most dysfunctional Cabinet this country has ever had—five pulling in different directions, and one asleep at the wheel (my predecessor in office).

Madam Speaker, we take licks all the time. That is the nature of the job that we do. But, if the Opposition (the United Democratic Party) expects to be taken seriously, they really at this stage need to start telling the country what it is they are going to do when they take office to make things better.

There are only five months before the elections. I would have thought, particularly given the importance ascribed to this particular process we are going through now—the debate on the Strategic Policy Statement—the importance ascribed to that by the Second Elected Member for West Bay, I fully expected the Leader of the Opposition to roll out their plan for the country. Instead, he sat there in what appeared to me [to be] a state of shock that this Government—and I don't know why he should be so shocked—had again produced a plan which involved a balanced budget with a substantial operating surplus that met all of the legal requirements in relation to the principles of responsible financial management, that had sufficiently strong capital funding to proceed with a number of major Government projects that address the various needs of the community, that does not involve the necessity for any layoffs in government staff or significant cut back in any government programmes.

That is the fourth one of those that we have done, Madam Speaker. We have a track record of careful management. Yes, Madam Speaker, we have borrowed and we are spending, but we are spending on critically important infrastructure which has been neglected for decades!

You see, Madam Speaker, when you grant 3,000 status in one fell swoop, you at least ought to acknowledge that there are going to be implications on the society, on an infrastructure relating to it. Where does the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues believe the children of those new Caymanians are going to go to school—somewhere else? And yet, for three and a half years they have fought me every step of the way as I try to improve and extend the physical plant in education.

Madam Speaker, I say this with all earnestness to the people of this country: It is easy to assail the Government in office because we are the ones who make decisions. And Lord knows that I know of no Government that has had to deal with more criticisms and has handled it the way that we have. Essentially, we have just soaked it up. But I ask the people of this country as this critical time approaches, consider carefully the alternative.

Whatever they say about us, we came to office with a plan. It was denigrated, derogatorily described by the Second Elected Member for West Bay and the Leader of the Opposition, and oh, especially the Third Elected Member for West Bay, as the little red book. That little red book, Madam Speaker, outlined in detail where we thought this country should go. And whatever they say about us we have by and large stuck to the book. If the book can be faulted—and I put my hand up as one of its chief authors—it is that it promised more than could possibly be delivered in a four-year term. But that I consider to be not a bad fault at all.

Anyone who thinks about this country and its future in terms of one election cycle does the sort of things that the last government did. Flying by the seat of their pants, granting status here, building Boatswain's Beach there, but not much else. Not much else. Not much else to put the point to [except] some affordable homes which we now have to replace. That was the contribution of the then minister for community affairs, the right honourable Dr. Frank McField.

[laughter and inaudible interjections]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, the future of this country cannot be handed to people without a vision, a plan whose only basis for seeking office is to say this Government is not doing it right. You [have] got to come better than that, Madam Speaker. The days when you elected somebody because he was a good man; that's a good man! She's a good woman. Those days are past. They need to be good people. Lord, they really need to be good people; but they have to have some ability and some track record. And a track record, Madam Speaker, is not—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —is not sitting on the radio show for three hours a day blackgyaading the Government. Show me, as a voter, on what basis you say you can do it better than the Government. And even before that, Madam Speaker, tell me what it is you are going to do. What is it you are going to do!

I will tell you what, particularly one certain talk show host . . . if he thinks that being a minister in government means you can get away with three hours work a day, he needs to seriously think again. You have got to have the capacity for hard work if you are going to achieve anything else. Otherwise, you are going to wind up like the last Minister for Education, sitting here reading books all day long.

Madam Speaker, in these months to come I want all of those who seek these offices to understand that from my perspective they are going to be subjected to scrutiny. Their track records, or the lack thereof, are going to be called into question. They are going to have to explain to the people of the country why it is and what it is that qualifies them to sit in this honourable House and to say they can do a better job than anyone who is currently here.

And, Madam Speaker, it is one thing to be on one end of a microphone with a sympathetic audience on the other in the comfort of not being subjected to any difficult questions, but when this campaign truly gets underway, I promise you they are—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —not about no licks—they are going to have to prove their credentials.

Oh yes, Madam Speaker. I shall not concede my seat to someone who I think has neither the interest of the country at heart, nor the ability to do the job that is necessary, without a fight.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, could we get back to the Motion, please?

Hon. W. McKeewa Bush: You should have said that a long time ago.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I wish to welcome the Second Elected Member for West Bay. He has come at a convenient time because I was about to turn to the economic—how shall I say it?

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: No, no, no, no. I was about to turn to the economic . . . I keep trying to avoid saying “plan” because I did not hear one, but the discussions about fiscal policy and economics, which were led principally by the Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Again, Madam Speaker, a complete absence on the part of the Opposition of any fiscal policy or economic plan or even suggestion about how the Government should adjust its plan in light of the global economic conditions. Lots of complaints and criticisms, but not one cogent suggestion, recommendation, except—and you can't use cogent for this one—government should withdraw all proposed capital investment in the country so that they can keep the money in their coffers and Government will look good from a financial position and they won't borrow so much.

It does not really matter what happens to the economy or employment as long as government's books look good. That is in essence, Madam Speaker, the only conclusion one could draw from the thesis of the Second Elected Member for West Bay. That is the only conclusion you could come to.

Madam Speaker, this country has never had higher reserves than is currently the case; 90-plus days of reserves (I think this year 117 million [dollars]), an operational surplus this year and every year since we have taken office and projected over the course of the next three years. Substantial borrowing acknowledged, but within the parameters of the principles of responsible financial management.

Now, Madam Speaker, you look around the world from the mighty United States to the United Kingdom, Japan and China, and everybody in between, and see what obtains there. See what governments are doing to keep the whole world from completely collapsing financially. They are all talking about significant financial injections, bailouts in some instances, just to get money into the economy.

And at a time like this the chief economic advisor to the Opposition—the Second Elected Member for West Bay—says, and his leader says, Government should cut all capital projects; should not be spending money; should not be borrowing money. What do they think is going to happen to the economy if government sends that signal?

Madam Speaker, if we take the time to look at how construction has fallen off over the course of the last year in particular, we will start to get a grip on how critically important these capital projects—the Government Office Administration Building, the schools and a range of other things, the road works that government is doing—how critically important they are to the local economy. But you see, Madam Speaker, thus far (and I say that cautiously) . . . thus far, because none of us have any guarantee of what is going to happen over the course of the next few months. Every day there is some new crisis. Today there is another one because the 15 billion dollar bailout of Chrysler, GM and Ford, has failed in the Senate, and that has sent a really negative signal to the world markets.

From day to day it is a rollercoaster we are on. So, I don't want anything I say to be the Government is absolutely certain that we have everything under control. No, Madam Speaker. But we are carefully monitoring every step of the way and adjusting our plans and programmes and spending as we move along.

That is why we took the step a few months ago, Madam Speaker, to rein in operational spending, and that is why after very careful consideration we have taken the steps we have in relation to capital projects. It is something you have to deal with literally from day to day.

But I come back: Thus far, we are not doing badly in the Cayman Islands, all things considered. And I am not suggesting, Madam Speaker, that it is Government alone who is making things as well as they are. It never is. In an economy that is so reliant on global trends, investment, attitudes and spending, what Government must do is not send the wrong signals. What Government must do, as far as the domestic economy is concerned, is provide the basis for people to still have money to spend. And that is what this Government is doing in this difficult time.

What the Second Elected Member for West Bay and the Leader of the Opposition did not tell any of us is what they would do differently. What is their economic plan? What is their fiscal strategy? According to them they would cut all capital projects, but beyond that, then what? How would they deal with the inevitable rise in unemployment? Hand out more Social Services' cheques? Where is the money going to come from?

Madam Speaker, what this Government has done—and that is the trouble they have had now for three and a half years. They may get up and infuse the discussion with great rhetoric, and some of it works. It frightens people—government is borrowing too much money. But what is sadly lacking, and has been lacking all along, is any serious suggestion about what they would do differently. And, Madam Speaker, in the glare of the light of the impending elections, that is a bad sign.

If I were in the Opposition, or if I were a supporter of the Opposition, and if I were a voter I would be saying, 'Well, yeah we hear you Mac, we hear you Rollie, but'—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, can we use their positions, not names?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I'm sorry, Madam Speaker, I was resorting to the vernacular because that is what people tell me.

We hear them, but what are they going to do different? Thus far, there has been a positing, if not a complete void when it comes to a plan. They have no economic plan, no education plan, no health plan, and no plan for Social Services. We have not heard one single thing that they are going to do different. We have heard cries and whining and complaints and criticism, but no plan.

And, Madam Speaker, respectfully to the Leader of the Opposition, through you: If you want to sit over here on 20 May next year, you really need to tell the country what your plan is because, whatever you say about the Government, they have one!

Madam Speaker, a great deal of time was devoted by the Leader of the Opposition and the Second Elected Member for West Bay to criticism of the Government's management of financial services. But it was clear that they had not talked to each other about this before either stood up. That's not unusual with the Opposition, but it was particularly schizophrenic on how we deal with financial services, because on the one hand the criticism emanating from the Leader of the Opposition was that government needed to be more proactive and to market the industry and to promote it, support it, and to get in there and make sure that Cayman is well known on the global market for its products and services in all of those things.

On the other hand, the Second Elected Member for West Bay says that that is not what government should be doing at all. In fact, what government needs to do and what it has always done well . . . and he spoke as one who was a member of the financial services sector for some time at PW (he said with some pride). He is a good accountant and he is my dear friend, the Second Elected Member for West Bay. As I have always said, he has just been misguided and perhaps even misplaced.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, Madam Speaker, we do keep company.

But, Madam Speaker, his position was that what Government ought to be doing is making sure it has the right regulatory framework, provisions, legislation which supports the products, but it ought not to be interfering with marketing and involvement in those other things.

Now, Madam Speaker, the two points of view are not unusual. I have heard both espoused by members of the financial services sector. But, clearly, one set of people spoke to the Leader of the Opposition and another set spoke to the Second Elected Member for West Bay—but they did not speak to each other. Madam Speaker, I just raise that to say it would be more helpful, I believe, to the House and perhaps to the prospects of the party if the Deputy Leader and the Leader actually spoke to each other in relation to these matters before either got up to address the House.

Madam Speaker, I want to say that there has been no neglect of the financial services sector or its interests; that the Government has been—particularly in these difficult times—even more keenly engaged with the private sector on the full range of issues and challenges which that sector faces.

Madam Speaker, I think we all know how seriously impacted the fund market, particularly the hedge fund market, has been and will continue to be as a result of the global financial crisis. And there is little doubt that 31 December [2008] (which is the date for redemption of many funds) is going to be a date when I think the world . . . but in Cayman we are going to have a much clearer idea of how badly impacted that sector of the financial services industry is going to be. And that is already having a real knock-on effect in terms of incorporations generally.

I think the last note I saw was that, overall, incorporations are down 16 per cent over last year. Those are realities that we all have to face. But there are a lot of positive things as well, and a lot of opportunities that are and will continue to present themselves as the world comes to grips with the global financial crisis and its impact.

What Cayman has always been good at, and must continue to be good at, is seeing these opportunities and seizing them and turning them into something real and tangible and build upon them. One of the benefits Cayman has always had is, because of our size and relationship between the private sector and government and the agility of government to do things has enabled us to put ourselves in a more favourable position more quickly than many other jurisdictions have been able to. And the Second Elected Member for West Bay did speak to that.

Madam Speaker, I want to now move on to spend a little more time on the financial services sector, but to talk specifically about some of the critical issues mentioned in the Strategic Policy Statement document that we are grappling with, and to say a bit more, as the Second Elected Member for West Bay inquired, about how we are dealing with things like the most recent OECD (Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development) threat.

And, Madam Speaker, noting the time, I wonder, before I moved into that, whether this would be a convenient time for the luncheon adjournment.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I did intend to give you another ten minutes which would be one hour, but if this is a convenient point for you then we can take the suspension.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, let me be truthful, I need to find a particular document which is buried among the rest that are on my desk.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.45 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.38 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

Honourable Minister of Education continuing his debate on Government Motion No. 10/08-09.

Honourable Minister, I think you have about 51 minutes . . . The Clerk informs that you have 53 minutes left.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, when we took the adjournment—

The Speaker: Suspension.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —I had turned to discuss a bit about the financial services sector and what the Government has been doing and plans to do over the upcoming months, particularly in view of the difficult circumstances that aspect of our economy faces.

Madam Speaker, if you listen to the Leader of the Opposition and the Second Elected Member for West Bay, you could be forgiven for concluding that the Government has done nothing in relation to the financial services sector. In fact, Madam Speaker, over the course of the past years we have had greater involvement in dialogue (that is, the Government) with the private sector than possibly at any time before.

What we don't do anymore is have these meetings with huge numbers of people like the old days of the private sector consultative committee. Quite frankly, those meetings were useful for the purposes of disseminating information, but when you get rooms filled with 50 and 60 people you rarely ever achieve anything in terms of the development of policy and so forth.

So, under this Government we established what is called a Financial Services Council (FSC), and that is made up of representation from across industry but it is a relatively small number of some 12 people, myself included. And because of the relatively small size of the group, we are able to actually spend a considerable amount of time considering matters carefully; developing policy recommendations to Cabinet. The FSC functions well. It meets often. I am its Chair and often in attendance is the Leader of Government Business. The Financial Secretary and the Attorney General are all members of the council. And so, Madam Speaker, that is how we have been monitoring and dealing with policy issues affecting the financial services sector.

In more recent times I have been meeting with what I simply call the Industry Group, which is a broader group of persons who are involved in one way or the other with the financial services sector, to talk about matters which are specific to them. And in recent times, because of what is happening in the world with the financial crisis and so forth and the issues of a new administration coming in the US, some of the rhetoric that has come out of the campaign by Obama and so forth, the concerns there about the Stop Tax Haven Abuse Bill, which he sponsored; and in relation to the OECD, in the wrapping up of the harmful tax practices initiatives and so forth; and, more latterly, the announcement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Alistair Darling, about a review of Overseas Territories which have significant offshore financial centres; all of those issues have created a certain amount of concern, alarm, and government has taken it head on and spent quite a bit of time over the past few months in meetings and discussions with the industry bringing them up to date with what the Government is doing and explaining to them how we are managing these issues.

Madam Speaker, I have to say that this whole issue has not been assisted by the approach taken by the Opposition and some others in the broader community who have essentially made statements to the effect that government does not know what it is doing; that government is not handling these matters. I see some statements again today in the editorial of Cayman Net News suggesting that Government needs to say what it is doing in relation, particularly, to the OECD initiative.

Madam Speaker, we have been and to a lesser extent still are at some difficult stages in negotiation in relation to OECD related matters. There are some additional things I can and will say this evening, which we have not said publicly before, but there is still a certain amount of information which at this stage, we are advised, would not be prudent to talk about in detail in a public forum.

I want to start by saying this: Back in 2000, the Cayman Islands committed to international tax co-operation through the original OECD initiative. And over the course of the past eight years it has entered into discussions with some dozen OECD countries about the possibility of tax information exchange agreements being signed. I think most people will be aware that the Cayman Islands signed a Tax Information Exchange Agreement with the United States in 2000, and since then there has been a range of discussions with, as I said, probably a dozen OECD countries.

Some of those have gone to as many as four rounds of talks, Madam Speaker. The objective of the Cayman Islands Government has been not just under this administration, but under the previous administration led by the present Leader of the Opposition.

The position that the Cayman Islands have taken is that we should insist on what are called comprehensive tax agreements or double taxation agreements, which accorded to the Cayman Islands some degree of economic benefit in return for the exchange of information. And it is true to say that in light of the changed circumstances of the world, particularly in the present financial crisis the world finds itself in, developed countries, G7 countries in particular, and, in fact, most of the G20s, are only too quick to seek to find scapegoats for what really are bad decisions and bad regulatory regimes and bad oversight in developed countries.

And the convenient scapegoat always is the offshore financial centres. Because none of us can vote in any of those developed countries so they don't have to worry about losing any votes. They can beat us up as much as they want and it sounds good because no one who pays taxes likes to believe that other people are avoiding or evading taxes by having them managed or deposited in other countries.

So, Madam Speaker, it is a very changed environment. What has also transpired in recent times is that, while Cayman has a very robust anti money-laundering and counter-terrorism financing regime—which has been acknowledged by the IMF [International Monetary Fund] and various other international agencies as being among the best in the world, quite frankly—there is a reluctance on the part of the developed countries, the OECD, in particular, and the UK for that matter, separately, to give us public recognition for those achievements.

Instead, what is happening is an increasing link of the whole anti money-laundering issue with tax information disclosure and the demand that you need to have effective tax information disclosure machinery in place to truly comply with the global standards in relation to both anti money-laundering and information exchange. So, the rules of the game have changed, as has always been the case with these matters.

Madam Speaker, we have been monitoring it very carefully. None of us were taken by surprise with the rhetoric that has come out of some of the recent meetings, particularly by hawkish OECD countries, like France, in particular. And we have been acting and responding accordingly.

Madam Speaker, I should say that it is not as though Cayman has been sitting on its hands all these years. We have a significant leg-up as far as the tax information exchange issue is concerned because we have long since put ourselves in compliance with the OECD's technical standards for provision of information on tax matters. And this has been repeatedly acknowledged by the OECD in all its annual reports since 2006.

And, Madam Speaker, by virtue of the Tax Information Authority Law we have put in place the administrative infrastructure to be able to service any tax information cooperation obligations that we assume.

So, against that background I should say that we have carefully considered the variety of options that are available for tax information exchange within the OECD process. These options include bilateral agreements, such as the one that we have signed with the United States; and Cayman implemented in 2004, under Cabinet approved negotiating protocols, a bilateral negotiation programme involving more than a dozen OECD States. I can say to this House and the wider community that we have in hand what we expect to be conclusive final discussions in the first quarter of next year with six OECD States.

I say that, Madam Speaker, to perhaps assuage some of the more vocal critics, and people like Tim Ridley, who seem to believe that he has a monopoly on knowledge of what transpires in these matters. But it needs to be understood that the bilateral agreements (TIAS, as we call them) are not the only option available in the OECD process for the exchange of tax information. It also needs to be understood that our response to tax cooperation matters, including the OECD initiative, will have short-, medium-, and long-term aspects which must be given appropriate consideration.

This Government, Madam Speaker, is determined to ensure that we give Cayman as much latitude as possible. In that regard, there are mechanisms besides TIAS that we can use to efficiently and effectively secure our position in relation to tax cooperation generally, and the OECD's current green list programmes specifically. Implementation of these will require measured adjustments to the Tax Information Authority Law. We have been working on these amendments over the course of the past year and, Madam Speaker, next week I believe the [Third] Official Member, the Honourable Financial Secretary, will be in a position to introduce amending legislation to this House in that regard.

Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands have long since established that our business is not built around tax evasion, and that we have no difficulty with the concept of effective cooperation in tax matters. We know where we are and where we need to get to, and we have a strategy that we are confident will get us there. Our financial services sector is extremely valuable to us and we will use every means at our disposal to protect it. This will necessarily involve trust, communication and cooperation between all stakeholders. And that includes, Madam Speaker, those of us here in this legislature.

No one is helped and no business is helped in this country by hysterical comments and remarks and statements made either by the Opposition or by people like Tim Ridley who are presumed by many to know what the true position is. This is an issue which ought to transcend politics, and I am hopeful that we will be able to get the support of the Opposition for the measures which we have to take over the course of the next few weeks as we seek to put in place the framework to enable this strategy to be successfully implemented that will ensure we are on the green list when it is published in June of next year.

Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition and the Second Elected Member for West Bay also spent, as I said earlier, a great deal of time criticizing the Government for perceived inaction in relation to legislation which had been mooted and put forward by the private sector. I do not want to get into a blame game, because nothing is to be served in that regard. But I should say that there have been difficulties with some of the drafts that have come forward from the private sector. In every case substantial rework has been necessary.

I should say (as I have said to members of the private sector in other meetings), the days of the private sector simply drafting legislation, and to use their own words, "government giving it the rubber stamp and passing it down here", are over. Long over! Government has to give careful consideration to every single piece of legislation, particularly those pieces which affect the financial services sector.

This jurisdiction, like all offshore financial centres, is under tremendous scrutiny. I have just finished talking about some of the pressures that we face. We have to make sure that not only is the legislation effective, that it achieves the commercial purpose for which it is being passed, but that it also meets all relevant standards, and that it does not create issues for us down the road.

But, Madam Speaker, I can say that good progress is being made on finalising the drafting instructions in relation to proposals submitted by the Law Society some time ago, and the Legislative Drafting office has allocated dedicated drafting resources to financial services related legislation. So, we now have a small team that is actually devoted to that.

The Portfolio of Finance has engaged the assistance of a special legislative advisor in relation to financial services legislation and nominees from the Law Society are also involved in the process of producing the final drafting instructions. It has been agreed between government and the industry stakeholders that the new legislation being developed will be brought to this House during its February 2009 meeting.

So, Madam Speaker, we are actively involved in this range of issues. In addition to that, given the difficult times that we are in and facing, under the leadership of my colleague, the Leader of Government Business, the Honourable Kurt Tibbetts, we have established the Economic Monitoring and Advisory Group (EMAG we call it), and that is a much broader group of people who are involved, not just in financial services, but in all key aspects of the economy, from tourism to supermarkets, to contractors and to other business people. And the purpose of that is to get regular feedback from the key stakeholders in the economy about how well their businesses are doing, what trends they are seeing; to listen to their suggestions are as to how we can improve the environment, how we can prop up some things that may be weakening and, if legislative change is required or policy changes by government are required, we can move swiftly to deal with these matters.

And so, Madam Speaker, contrary to the impression that was given by the Leader of the Opposition and his colleague, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, there is wide, broad and regular consultation between this Government and private sector on a range of issues.

Now, in support of the Motion which seeks to have this House approve the Strategic Policy Statement, in his address, "Staying the Course in Challenging Times" the Leader spoke at length about the policy behind and the changes made to the Immigration Law. All of that is aimed at two things: (1) Curtailing employer abuse of the system so that we ensure that only good, credible employers who are doing business legally get the benefit of work permits and so forth; and (2) making the system more efficient, effective and more business friendly. That is the thrust behind the move to the administrative grant of what we hope will be probably about 80 per cent of all work permits.

That system, Madam Speaker (which is slated to come into effect on 5 January [2009]), when fully phased in, I believe is going to have a huge positive impact on the way business is done in the Cayman Islands. We will be moving from a system where sometimes people wait for two or three months to get an approval, to a system where they will get approval in weeks if not, in some cases, days.

By this I am not just talking about temporary work permits, because we have the ability to grant temporary work permits. Or I should say, the Chief Immigration Officer has the ability to grant temporary work permits very quickly now. But under the new system he and his cadre of immigration officers who are charged with the responsibility will have the ability to grant full work permits in very short order if there are no Caymanians who have applied for the particular job, and if there are no controversial issues surrounding the particular applications.

Madam Speaker, all of those measures are being taken to make the business environment in Cayman that much more attractive and friendly to businesses, particularly. In these difficult times we have to do everything we can to make this place a good choice, in particular for international business not just to come to, but to stay, because all over the world there is a downsizing exercise going on particularly for businesses that conduct financial services and financial services related business.

We see almost daily announcements of thousands of people being laid off, especially in the United States, and this does have a knock-on effect, particularly in relation to firms which carry out a great deal of fund business. And we have been in discussions with members of the Mutual Fund Association, talking to them about their concerns, looking at ways in which we can improve the perception of Cayman so that when decisions are taken about downsizing and about whether or not to continue operations offshore, that Cayman features high on the list with all sorts of very good reasons why you would choose Cayman over anywhere else.

Madam Speaker, we also have to balance that against the reality that we have some 26,000 work permits in operation in these Islands which means that the majority of our work force is on work permits, and particularly in a time when there are going to be stresses, strains and pressures to keep people employed. We have to do everything we can to ensure to the greatest extent possible, Caymanians are the last to be considered for layoffs, if it should come to that.

Thus far, we have not had any reports of major layoffs in Cayman. I have heard some anecdotal evidence of a few of the financial services firms releasing people; but as far as I have been able to gather, by and large, those have not been local people. And we have been through a year now of the US being in recession and everyone I talk to says that by and large our economy is still holding its own.

In fact, Madam Speaker, there are some bright spots. If you look at some of the statistics from the Economics and Statistics Office (ESO) you will see that the property market has actually shown a little bounce. There is some speculation that, because people who have money, by and large, still have money, and because of the distrust of investing in the stock market, there is some investment now in real property because that is seen as far more stable than just about anything. Equities, in particular, are viewed with a great deal of caution in the present environment.

Madam Speaker, there are no guarantees. But, by and large, I think there is still quite a bit of optimism around that the Cayman Islands is going to be able to weather this storm without major casualties and without suffering from a deep recession. It is our job—all of us in this House—to do everything we can to bolster investor and consumer confidence by taking measures and by saying things which encourage people to spend, to invest, and to look forward to tomorrow as being a tomorrow of promise.

It is easy, Madam Speaker, and perhaps expected at a time like this—especially when an election is looming and the Opposition is desperate for power—for the Opposition to say things in an attempt to discredit the Government and to thereby improve their chances at an election. But I ask them, knowing that and the reality of that, and knowing this is politics and that is how politics works, to temper some of the more outrageous things that they have said and may say, knowing full well that regardless of who assumes this office after the next election, these are our Cayman Islands in which we all live and work.

Madam Speaker, more important than us is that these are our Cayman Islands and we are entrusted by the electorate as the stewards of this vineyard. And regardless of which side of this House we are on, we ought to be united and committed to that one goal and objective making the Cayman Islands a better place, protecting and promoting the Cayman Islands and that whatever we say or do we should bear that in mind regardless of how desperately we wish to assume the reins of power: regardless of how much we would like to discredit the Government that is at the helm.

Madam Speaker, in that vein, not on the Floor of this House, but certainly in speaking to the media, the Leader of the Opposition, in my respectful view, has acted most irresponsibly. Over the course of the past couple of days he has said to the media that the truth of the matter is (and I am quoting him as best as I can because I heard it): “The truth of the matter is, part of the reason that the Government is cutting back on these projects is because they can’t get banks to lend them the money.”

Madam Speaker, I know that the Leader of the Opposition always feels that he has an inside track to information coming out of the Civil Service. But I can tell him, regardless of where he got that information, assuming he did not fabricate it, it is entirely wrong, untrue and irresponsible!

It was not put in a question form, it was stated as a fact which began, “The truth of the matter is . . .” So, Madam Speaker, I am going to say this: As the Leader of the Opposition well knows Government . . .

Well, maybe that was not the case when he was there, but this Government goes out to tender for loans. We do not simply make a sweetheart deal with any one institution. I can tell the Leader of the Opposition and the broader community that we have not started to borrow any money for next year’s budget. The budget has not come yet but we have gone to tender for the 2008/09 borrowings, and we have four top institutions that have bid to provide that funding to Government.

You see, Madam Speaker, not only does this country continue to retain top ratings internationally in terms of credit worthiness, but under this Government we have had no alarming Auditor General reports talking about how money was wasted; how Central Tenders Committee had been evaded when granting contracts. It seemed, particularly in the last year to 18 months of the UDP’s Administration, that every month the Auditor General was being forced to conduct some special inquiry because of alleged shenanigans going on with one of their projects. Nothing damages credibility and creditworthiness more than that sort of thing.

They have had five condemnatory reports issued by the Auditor General under the Leader of the Opposition’s term of office and under his leadership.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: And he is now saying they are not credible, because, of course, anyone who criticises him can’t be credible.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: But, Madam Speaker, the same individual has the audacity to go and either report something which—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: —he has no basis for, or to fabricate it and to say it publicly to the media so that he can discredit the Government.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I’m not sure which money he is talking about, Madam Speaker, but I am going to say this: Every government project that we wish to initiate is underway. Contractors are being paid and the projects are proceeding properly.

There are no screams from people about special interests, and this one got this contract because he knew the Leader of Government Business; or that he was involved with business with the Leader of Government Business, which was the case under his administration.

And so, Madam Speaker, when I raise the issue about how important it is that we all are responsible, we need to be able to think beyond the immediate and to understand that while politics is about discrediting the other side by making your position seem more attractive to voters, that's the nature of business. I spent four and a half years on the other side. I understand it well. But we need to ensure that in so doing, we do not undermine the reputation of the country itself and the—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, can the Minister tell us when they will get the loans for his projects?

The Speaker: That is not a point of order.
Honourable Minister, would you—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I know that is not a point . . . I am asking a question.

The Speaker: Well, you know I just don't understand how we can stand up in the middle of somebody's debate. . . .

Honourable Minister, would you continue with your debate please. [inaudible comment] . . . clarification if . . .

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, it should be plain even to the Leader of the Opposition that contractors would not be working if they were not being paid. As and when the Government needs money it has the authority to draw down such as it needs to fund the various capital projects.

Now, Madam Speaker, I know under his administration they had all sorts of special arrangements. I am afraid that we operate in a conventional manner where we get regular loans from recognised financial institutions and they are all dealt with very carefully, very properly, by the office of the Financial Secretary. I don't have to worry about when the money is coming. This Government does not operate in that haphazard, slipshod way. I hope that satisfies the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, as we are on this topic of what does damage to this jurisdiction, about discrediting the jurisdiction, about creating reputation issues for this jurisdiction, I want to say that the Strategic Policy Statement and the current budget are forced to take into consideration the cost of the various ill-conceived investigations which have been authorised and initiated by His Excellency, the Governor. And I am talking of millions of dollars.

Much has been said publicly about all of this. The Opposition has taken the position to support the Governor's initiative. Indeed, I was surprised, and many across these Islands were surprised, to read in the serialised report (I think it is called) from Cayman Net News, that in fact the Leader of the Opposition had actually spoken to Mr. Kernohan on behalf of his former colleague, Lyndon Martin, about the allegations in relation to Desmond Seales at Cayman New News.<sup>1</sup>

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, can you tie this into your debate of the Strategic Policy Statement?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The link is about the cost of these various investigations which had to be made part of the current budget projections in terms of expenditure and the 2009/2010 Strategic Policy Statement. We're talking about millions of dollars. That is the link to these investigations, because here we are . . . and we can believe it won't be before Christmas but it will be shortly thereafter. We will all be under pressure to find the money to pay for these investigations; to pay damages to Judge Henderson, and I can tell you now that that is going to be the case.

Madam Speaker, we really have to get to a point in this country, constitutionally, where the Governor is not entitled to do as he has done; to simply of his own volition, in his own discretion, authorise any number of investigations to just run, and whatever the cost is, whatever the damage is, the Cayman Islands Government is expected to step up and sign the cheque for it.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have a situation here (and this is coming to the real crux of what I want to say) where one Martin Bridger of the Metropolitan office of the United Kingdom was simply given complete and wide authority to go and do whatever he wanted to do to find out whatever wrongs there are, to investigate them and to make report. In so doing he has broken every procedural rule. He has trampled every convention. He has arrested a judge. He has done things that have left everyone completely stunned and shocked. And at the end of the exercise what has he found? Nothing!

Now, Madam Speaker, we have the Governor [who has] brought in his own judge, Sir Peter Cresswell, who found that this was all wrong, very bad—

Point of Order

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, please.

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order please, First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman?

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I wonder whether or not the Member wishes to suspend Standing Order 35 (7) so that he can continue to discuss the Governor.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman does have a point of order.

Would you move away from discussing the conduct of the Governor, please?

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, might I just beg your indulgence? I was not asking the Chair for him to move away. I was asking whether he minded suspending the Standing Order if he wanted to continue discussion on that important point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I would ask that you continue your debate without getting into the conduct of the Governor.

And you have, as the Clerk has informed me, approximately three minutes left.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, it seems like the extension from the Governor's office reaches even here.

But, Madam Speaker, I abide by your—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, please. The First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman was giving you the opportunity, if you wanted to suspend the relevant Standing Order, to continue discussing the conduct of the Governor. But as the Speaker, I think we should move away from discussing the conduct of the Governor.

Would you continue please?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I abide by your ruling, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, the situation we are in now, though (without raising any matter relating to the Governor), is that we are being asked to continue to fund an investigation led by one Martin Bridger whose conduct (his conduct, not that of the Governor) has been found by the Courts to be in breach of rules, procedures, regulations, rules of evidence, the whole lot.

I just want to say, Madam Speaker, without pressing the point any more than that, that this Minister will join with his colleague, Minister of Tourism, to say that under no circumstances will I support funding any investigations in this country led by one Martin Bridger. I have no intention of supporting the continued involvement of someone who has absolutely no regard for our legal system, judiciary, elected Ministers or for any of us who sit in this House. Madam

Speaker, the day that we countenance that kind of approach we throw the rule of law out of the window.

I do not know what the Opposition is going to do, but I can tell them what this Government is not going to do in relation to Mr. Bridger's continued involvement in any aspect of investigation in this country. Madam Speaker, I will leave that there.

I just want to conclude now by saying that the Government has produced a carefully considered forward-thinking Strategic Policy Statement borne of a great deal of careful deliberation and consideration. In these difficult times we have, I believe, done well, Madam Speaker. There are few, if any, governments in the world that can produce what we have produced in the present economic climate. We should be complimented, not denigrated by the Opposition, for that effort and result.

Madam Speaker, I will end on this point. When the country comes to choose, as is the democratic way, I simply ask all considered to look carefully at what this Government has done, at what it proposes to do, at the way it is operated. I ask them also to consider with equal scrutiny the complete absence of any plan, programme or even valid suggestion or recommendation from the Opposition as to how they would manage the economy, what their fiscal strategy would be. What is their education plan? What is their health plan? How do they deal with social services?

Madam Speaker, to aspire to be the Government you must at a minimum, five months before the election, be able to say to the country, The way they are doing it is wrong. This is how we would do it, vote for us so that we can implement this plan. But, Madam Speaker, all indications are that the Opposition, while lavish in its criticism, is entirely bereft of any ideas, recommendations, and thus far has not been able to outline even one line of any comprehensive national plan for how they will manage this country, should the country have the misfortune of having them at its helm.

And so, Madam Speaker, I thank you for your indulgence. I thank the House for its indulgence and I wish to hear now whether or not the Opposition has anything further in reply.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I rise to make my contribution—and I want to tell the Minister I will not be too rough on him, so he does not have to leave—"Staying the Course in Challenging Times", the Strategic Policy Statement delivered by the Honourable D. Kurt Tibbetts, on Wednesday, 10 December, the honourable Leader of Government Business.

Madam Speaker, I want to pick up on my friend, the Minister of Education, who referred to a tomorrow of promise and to tell the Caymanian public that, yes, we can look forward to a tomorrow of promise. And that promise is that as of May 20, 2009, we will be able to see the last of the PPM Administration.

Madam Speaker, it is amazing to me that we can get up during this time of difficult stress, economic difficulties, and hear the Government try to give the impression that in some way things are well in Cayman. We see spiraling debt. We see no new business. We see the GDP is down. Yet we hear the PPM Administration talking about their track record and their great stewardship over the period.

Madam Speaker, we know there is desperation. And we know that the Government has found a way to use their political analysts, who are in some way, I understand, being paid for by the Government coffers to put as much spin as possible as to how good the position would be. But even those analysts, who are employed to try to prop up the Government and make it look good and give them political strategy, are having a difficult time based on the track record of the People's Progressive Movement.

We see in the Statement that the Leader of Government Business refers to the good economic times being that in 2005 there was some 4.6 per cent GDP, I think. It is amazing that the Government would think it possible to fool the Caymanian public that they could take credit for the GDP growth of 2005 as credit for the People's Progressive Movement Administration. We all know that that growth was strictly to do with the rebuilding exercise from Hurricane Ivan, and that even in 2006, as that growth began to taper, we saw a reduction in 2007. In 2008, we have seen a more significant reduction.

So, under the People's Progressive Movement Administration, we have seen a reduction in the GDP of the Cayman Islands for three consecutive years. Yet, we hear the Government get up and brag that they have done such an excellent job.

Even last year we got into this debate back and forth as to when the US went into a recession. We saw there was a prediction by the Government last year of Cayman having a real GDP growth of 3.2 per cent. And that prediction looked good. We got up and we questioned it and we said, Listen, if the US is only expecting around 1.6 [per cent], 1.9 [per cent], why do we think that we are going to have that kind of growth in Cayman?

They said to us, Oh, yes. You guys do not know what you are talking about.

Now, Madam Speaker, what we are seeing is that we only have growth projected at somewhere around 1.5—less than 50 per cent of what was projected at that time.

And, Madam Speaker, my two colleagues . . . the lady Member for Cayman Brac is obviously more concerned with things that were going on in Cayman Brac, so she did not give a lot of time to the whole issue as to the Government's policy. But when my two colleagues in January brought the motion that asked the Government not to stop government spending, but to reprioritise because it was obvious that things were starting to decline, we now hear . . . at that time we heard that, no, that was an insult; not on the best of mornings could they take that advice.

Now we understand.

I heard the Fourth Elected Member for George Town get up, and the Minister for Tourism, and their logic at that stage was that we could not listen to the policies of the UDP—not because they just do not listen to any advice they were given, what they said at that time was they could not listen to the advice because that economic policy was flawed. And the reason why it was flawed was because during times of economic uncertainty, the Government is required not to pull back on projects, but to pump money into those projects. They were saying, being the smart minders of the economy that they are, that when there was talk of a recession they could not in good conscience cut back on projects because that would further deteriorate our domestic economy.

Now, we heard all the questions, Madam Speaker, as to how long ago the indications of a slowdown in the economy was, whether it was a year ago, whether it was six months ago. What we do know—and they have acknowledged—is that it was evident that things were slowing down, that a recession was looming, they said in January, and that was the reason for continuing on in their capital works projects.

Madam Speaker, that logic . . . and maybe someone can explain it to me. What I find hard to understand is that their reason for not cutting back at that time was because a recession was looming. But now that they have acknowledged that a recession is here—it is not looming any more—their economic policies now call for them to cut back on those projects.

So, we could not do it when it was looming, because that would be bad; but now that the recession is here we all of a sudden decide that our economic policies . . . now it is good policy to cut back. What happened to the need for the Government to be injecting that much-needed money into the economy?

What happened to those plans, Madam Speaker, that said we can't listen to you guys telling us because there is a possibility? But as soon as we find out that it is not a possibility anymore—that we are in a recession—now we are going to pull back?

The question I am not sure about is whether the Government has recognised yet that we are in a recession because I heard the Fourth Elected Member for George Town making the point that we should not say that we are in a recession because when the Government says that we are in a recession that will further complicate the situation and things will get worse during that time.

Point of Order

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order, please Fourth Elected Member for George Town?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I did not say that you cannot say that the country is in a recession when it is in recession, Madam Speaker. What I said was that Government has to be careful and not say that we are heading for a recession. That was the point I made.

The Speaker: Honourable Third Elected Member for West Bay, that was what I understood the Member to say. But if you are not satisfied with that, we could stop to get the Hansard to clarify exactly what was said.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: No, Madam Speaker. I am satisfied.

And just carrying on to that point, Madam Speaker . . . so, when a recession is looming, we should not say that we are heading for a recession, or we should not be shown as pulling back or stopping any projects because that could give a lack of confidence; but when we acknowledge that we are in a recession we can stop the projects then, even though earlier on the reason for not stopping was because we needed that trickle down, we needed that stimulus that those capital works, those projects, would provide.

Madam Speaker, that logic seems to be missing somewhere. If we needed that stimulus when we thought we were going into a recession, I am sure we should all recognise, when acknowledging that we are in a recession, that we need that stimulus. We need that trickle down.

Madam Speaker, what we need is a bit more than just that because the concern my colleagues have expressed is that, yes, we all acknowledge that capital works projects, when we spend $60 million on a school—even though we only have two or three Caymanians employed on the project—we acknowledge that, yes, the Caymanian economy gets a little stimulus trickle of that money that is spent. Obviously, we are not happy that that is sufficient. We would prefer more stimulus than that. But we acknowledge that capital works projects by the Government will provide some stimulus, albeit very small. But, Madam Speaker, there is more need for that during the actual acknowledged recession than when the recession was only looming.

Madam Speaker, maybe there is reason for that. There is some logic. But if the Government had come out and said to us that they just did not have the money and that was why they had to stop the project—but they are expecting a $23 million surplus—they are stopping the projects, and they are also cutting back on services to the tune of some $10 million.

Earlier on, the Minister of Education was saying that, no, we should not leave the money in our coffers. Madam Speaker, if we are projecting a $23 million surplus, if the Government's economic policy says to them that they should be spending to create the stimulus, why, then, are we cutting back?

Madam Speaker, our argument has all along said, Listen, we need to be more prudent, we need to reprioritise. But the Government has said, first of all, that it was not necessary; and now they are saying that we find ourselves in a recession so they need to cut back.

The Minister for Tourism spoke about the reduction in cruise passengers; again, great stewardship. We see a reduction in GDP. We see a reduction in cruise passengers. From what the Minister said, there is going to be some 200,000 fewer passengers over the three-year period. Madam Speaker, I do not know why that is surprising, because that was a promise in that little red book the Honourable Minister of Education referred to, the mistake that the Government was making focusing on cruise tourism, and everything was being done wrong; that industry was being managed wrong. But again, when we look we hear them talking about being so easy to criticise. But now those chickens are coming home to roost.

Those Members stood up and criticised the previous administration. They criticised them on their fiscal prudence and fiscal management. We have seen worse management in the last three years. They criticised them on the management of the tourism product, namely, cruise ship passengers. We have seen a reduction. And we heard all the excuses, all the reasons why those . . . of course, there is no acknowledgement that it is because of poor management by the Government.

But the Caymanian people have seen that. We fully recognise, and hear the same things. I am sure the Minister, while he is trying to get up and give excuses, knows the Caymanian public is savvy enough to understand that in the three and half years, regardless of how much they get up here in the LA and talk about what a good job they were doing—like they said, facts are stubborn things. And we see the facts. The proof is in the pudding.

Madam Speaker, surprise, surprise!

I heard the Minister of Tourism complaining about the press. I heard the Minister of Education complaining about the press. Now, when the press was supporting the administration there were all those claims. I can remember when the Honourable Leader of the Opposition used to question or complain about that, they were the first ones to talk about censorship of the press and the need to have freedom of the press, and there was dictatorship. Now all of a sudden, Madam Speaker, the shoe is on the other foot. That same press, which was their ally at that time, oh it's not being objective any more. It is not objective journalism any more. All of a sudden, now it's bad press—whether it is talk show, print media—it is all bad now. But in 2005, when they were criticising the Government of the day, when they were helping them win their seats, the press was doing a good job at that time.

Madam Speaker, you know what they say about those little evil webs that we weave. But I must say that it is a bit ironic to see and hear how quickly poetic justice has formed and materialised.

Madam Speaker, I could never have imagined the difference happening so quickly from only a few short months ago, of being the darlings to the press, of having all the answers, all the solutions, all of the contracts, Madam Speaker . . . we talk about the need for . . . I heard the Minister get up before and say it is whoever pays the papers, of one particular paper. We heard about all of those contracts before between, I think it was MCM Consulting and the different companies that had the contracts. All of a sudden, that was all fine and well; but now, we get into a situation where the press is out on a vendetta to get rid of the Government and they are not friendly any more.

Madam Speaker, it is getting real old to hear the same stories and the same justifications as to why the Minister for Education has not been able to achieve anything in the Education Department. So far, Madam Speaker, he has talked a good game; but what have we seen as far as results?

The Minister inherited the three school locations. They were all bought by the previous administration. There were groundbreaking ceremonies. Supposedly, there were plans in place. Now, since then, the Minister was elected. He was given the Constitutional responsibility for that section. We saw all these plans and we heard a lot of talk and conventions and celebrations. And then we got some plans in place.

Then the Minister got the support of his Cabinet for the funding that was required for the schools and he came down to the Legislative Assembly and he got all the required funding for those schools. But lo and behold, even with the funding . . . Now [with] previous Ministers the complaint had always been that the country could not afford the expenditure required on the school plant. But this Minister got it approved by his Cabinet; came down to the Legislative Assembly and got the money approved, but because of the incapability of that Minister he has not been able to perform and get anything done.

So what does the Minister continue to do for the three years? He says, 'I don't get support. It's been opposed. The Opposition has been opposing me.' It is time for the Minister to accept responsibility and just say he is not man enough to do the job.

He ended up getting . . . the first year he got his $19 million (or whatever) and, because he was not able to get anything done, he came down here and asked us to transfer that money to the Minister for Roads, [and] then told us how important the school plant is on the education agenda of the PPM.

Now, we voted for education with all intention that the Minister was going to be able to achieve. If his school plant was in such dire need, if it was such an important aspect of the PPM's platform, we assumed that he would be able to get something done. So, the first year we heard some excuse; that money had to come down, and nothing got done.

The second year very little got done. As usual, getting close to an election time, all of a sudden we see a hurry happening with the schools. But surprise, surprise! The school in West Bay would get stopped. We decided there is not enough money and the Minister had the audacity to talk about there being celebration.

Now, the Opposition has been here supporting the Minister every time the budget has come down. I know [of] times the Minister himself was not in the Chamber to vote for his budget when the Opposition was in majority and they voted for his education budget to ensure that he had the money. And that Minister would still get up and try to give the impression that the reason for his lack of achievement is due in some way to a lack of support.

Madam Speaker, he can only play that blame game so long. He cannot continue to talk about, because he did not have the support. The truth of the matter is, he does not need the support of the Opposition—he has the support of the Government. The majority is there. But the Opposition has been supportive every time. He cannot show where the Opposition has not supported his budgets. Now, the Opposition may have questioned some of the stuff in his budget. They may have questioned why we have to spend that amount on schools. I have heard the public, we have bright sunshine, the buildings that are designed in Chicago that are going to be high on air-conditioning and there may be concerns as to whether we can afford all three schools at one time, but there has always been support. Yet the Minister continues, every time he stands up, to talk about his achievement, but his achievements in the absence of support from the Opposition. Totally unfair and fooling nobody!

The Minister just needs to accept—maybe the Government needs to accept too—that that Minister is just not the right Minister for the job!

I heard him quickly complain, and criticise the previous Minister or the previous Administration. Madam Speaker, I need to remind him that the previous UDP Minister [whom] he criticised was his choice for Minister of Education as well. So, when he is up there criticising the previous Minister, I need to remind him that in November 2000 he voted for that Minister as his Minister of Education. Does he have a short memory? Or is it a convenient memory? How could he forget? And how could he be so critical of that Minister and talk about him being down here and the only thing he did was read books?

Madam Speaker, one thing is true—in that Minister's three year term he built a school! He built a school for $10 million. It is the Red Bay Primary School.

An Hon. Member: The Prospect Primary School.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: The Prospect Primary School. Sorry. Thank you.

Madam Speaker, how disingenuous is it for him to criticise the Minister of Education who did more than he did with less? Because he did not come down here and get some $40 million or $50 million voted and approved by the Legislative Assembly to give him the opportunity to build three new high schools. But with the $10 million he had he was able to build his school.

Now, Madam Speaker, he should restrict himself from being so critical, besides the fact [is] that it was, like I said, his Minister. When it comes down to the track record, except [for] the fancy conferences and the pretty talk, when it comes down to results we have seen more from the previous Minister. And, like I told this Honourable Minister of Education before, I have no doubt in my mind that every Minister, if we go back to Mr. Benson Ebanks, Mr. Truman Bodden, Mr. Roy Bodden and this current Minister of Education, I have no doubt in my mind that each one of them got in with the intention of improving our education system. But do not be so quick to criticise the others and to brag about what you have done until you have some tangible results.

We have nothing except a lot of talk and pomp and ceremony, a lot of papers. Wait until something gets achieved. I mean, he can't be taking credit for the University College of the Cayman Islands (UCCI) fiasco—the Dr. Syed fiasco! Is that what he is going to take credit for? The fact that we had this doctor that was not a doctor, and we had an increase in the numbers from some 600 to some 3,400, but we found they were counting the same people four times.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah!

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: That is the kind of thing the Minister is going to take credit for [while criticising] the previous administrators of education?

He makes it sound like . . . where did he get his education and where did we get our education? He is the only one. All the other Ministers of Education prior to him did not do anything for education, according to him.

We have the best, the brightest, we have him who got his education . . . I guess he probably gives himself credit for that too!

But, Madam Speaker, like he said, if it wasn't so serious, it would be funny!

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [Inaudible]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, we hear him talk about the track record—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah, he's got a track record all right. Syed!

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: We see the financial track record, a continuing decline in our GDP. We know that the Caymanian people are having it harder now than they have ever had it before.

Madam Speaker, the spiraling cost of living. We have seen that under that same Minister, who also has responsibility for employment, rising unemployment. And that Minister gets up and talks about his track record and the fact that people should be considered and measured at the next election. He must realise that if they measure him from an education standpoint, or any other standpoint, it is going to be a big failure.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [Inaudible comment]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, that is the same Minister who has responsibility for the Sunrise Centre and never visited it during his whole term.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: And his PS when she went down to Boatswain Bay . . .

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, but he tells us about him, again, having done so much! So much for our people, our young people especially.

He has responsibility for the Sunrise Centre, and it is going to be closed down by the Planning Department because of fire and safety regulations violations. And he has never visited the Centre.

Now, we had to drag that out of him, Madam Speaker, but does he think—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible]

The Speaker: Can we have one Member speaking at a time please?

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Does he think that people are going to forget that kind of stewardship that he talks about?

Does he think that when people go to the polls on May 20th, because he gets up here and makes that passionate speech, that that lack of performance on his part is going to change? He cannot change it in six months regardless of how many consultants.

I heard him talk about Dr. Henry, Dr. this one . . . I do not know who they are going to bring, Madam Speaker, but they can't, regardless of how much money they spend . . . And one thing you have to be careful with, Madam Speaker, some of that advice coming from those territories that are in no way better off than [we are]. We have actually seen when we look at our finances, some of them heading in the wrong direction. Maybe that's because of that bad advice we are getting out of the Eastern Caribbean.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Maybe it is because of that advice, and it is now coming home and we see the three-year policies that are coming out. We are seeing that those policies are putting us in the same place where those people are coming from have left their countries. But, time will tell.

Madam Speaker, the schools? We are hopeful that we will be able to see the school in your good district, the Clifton Hunter School, in North Side. And we are seeing . . . I guess that is what we are seeing . . . Remember when the Minister referred to the only thing that could stop him from building those three schools being divine intervention? Madam Speaker, it has sadly . . . obviously, the Minister has been restricted. Like he said, it was hard for him to be restricted; he was saddened by it.

And, we are saddened to know that the country has to go through these times. But we think that with good management, Madam Speaker, good prioritisation, that we can get through this as a country. But we need good leadership, Madam Speaker. We need leadership that is held accountable to the people.

The Minister was quick to brag about there being no questionable reports from the Auditor General. Madam Speaker, how are we going to get questionable reports when we cannot get any accounts? We do not have accounts for some $1.3 billion for some three or four years. The Government does not give accounts, then, they brag that because they do not give accounts there can be no bad investigations or statements by the Auditor General?

Madam Speaker, does he really think that the Caymanian people are that far removed? That they do not understand that game?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible] Syed?

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, we have increased crime.

The Member talks about this little red book. When we go through that book we see a lot of promises. Like he said, it was too many promises—even he himself acknowledged too many promises. Can you imagine?

That just shows, they fooled the people of Cayman in 2005, Madam Speaker. The Minister acknowledged and said that it was unachievable in a four-year term. And I guess, Madam Speaker, that is why people are saying they made a mistake. They took them on their word; they thought that they could get all these things that they were promising. But reality has come home now, Madam Speaker.

We hear about crime. The solution was that we were going to have more money. We had to give the police more money. That was going to cut back crime. Lo and behold, it has not worked.

The Minister talks about a good track record. We have people more scared to come out of their homes now. [We] cannot open our windows [and are] afraid to walk at night.

Madam Speaker, we hear about a stewardship track record. He cannot be talking about good stewardship with the helicopter fiasco.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No!

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: That cannot be the same good stewardship they are bragging about, Madam Speaker. That cannot be the track record.

So, we got Syed as a failure, we have the helicopter as a failure. Madam Speaker, when we finish with this grade it is going to be a failing grade. We have failing on the Sunrise centre. The Minister did not take the time to go down there. We have failing on the building of the schools, even though we have one that is somewhere on now.

Madam Speaker, we have failure on unemployment. We have increasing work permits with some 26,000 people here on work permits—but ever-increasing unemployment. Now, Madam Speaker, there has to be disconnect. Our sign of a good economy is that we have more people coming here to gain employment; but on the other hand, we have more Caymanians who cannot find a job. And the Minister has the nerve to get up and talk about their stewardship?

Madam Speaker, I have not seen anything . . . he talks about what was done by the previous administration. Higher cost of living, Madam Speaker: The Government gave a concession to CUC of some $6 million a year in fuel reductions, yet everybody is screaming and saying their fuel bills are higher than ever.

Madam Speaker, talk about good stewardship again. Oh well, we are protecting everything. We have catastrophic insurance. But we happen to forget that instead of just being Grand Cayman, when we talk about the Cayman Islands, there's also Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. So, lo and behold, when it comes time to make a claim on that insurance—and we paid some $6 million in premiums—we turn around and say, oops, we made a mistake.

That stewardship that we talk about again [is] nowhere to be found. So, the people of Cayman Brac cannot benefit from the insurance.

Madam Speaker, we can go on. We can go on. But what we see is that while we get a strategic policy statement that talks about how good things are and what a good job the Government has done, when our little friend, the consultant, who spent all his time preparing his speech . . . when we dig down in it we actually see that regardless of how good you try to make that performance look, it just isn't there.

We see that there is a disconnect because we hear one Minister say that we were not sure what the US economy was doing, but then we heard that the Minister of Tourism was making plans from a year ago because he knew that the US economy was slowing down; but the rest of the Government, up until January this year, did not seem to think . . . they said all the indications were spot on. We were looking good.

Madam Speaker, I do see the discussion on the road network. If I have to give some credit, I have to say that they have made some improvements in road networks. Now, we do not know at what cost that will be. And we hope that we are able to afford to pay for those, whether it is the land cost or any associated cost. But we do recognise that the Government has made some . . . even at the expense of education. Even though the Minister came down and asked us to vote for funds for education, when he found out he could not build his schools or he could not improve education he had to use the money for roads. We appreciate and we are thankful, along with the people, that we got some new roads.

Madam Speaker, the point on education that I think was missed, when he was making his remarks earlier, the Minister talked about how disappointed he was. Now I notice he did not go into the same emotion about the Beulah Smith School in West Bay. But he talked about how the George Town Primary School was one of the best schools on the Island, including the private schools. And we agree with that, Madam Speaker. But do you know what was ironic, Madam Speaker? That is one of the best schools and it has the worst infrastructure, according to the Minister.

It goes to show that buildings do not a school or good education make. Even with all of the temporary classrooms that he referred to, even with all of the challenges we know that school is facing, he acknowledges that that school is one of the best primary schools.

Madam Speaker, the Minister has asked us for alternatives. He has asked who our Minister of Education will be. Madam Speaker, I know we have to remind the Minister (because his mind is only focused on politics), but the election is still six months away. The business of this House, the business of the country still has to go on. He should not concern himself so much with looking over his shoulder at who the new Minister of Education is going to be. That will come with time.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: It's not going to be Syed!

[laughter]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: What we can say, Madam Speaker, is that prior to us asking the good people of the Cayman Islands to change this current Administration we will show the alternatives. We will highlight our ministers and we will give them the plan [so] they can measure the success of the government that we are asking them to elect.

Madam Speaker, one problem is that when we give alternatives the Government does not like them. When we came with alternatives in January, the Government said not on the best of mornings.

When the time is appropriate, the country will have the plans and they will have an opportunity to judge based on the comparison of our plans and not only what the Government has promised but what the Government has failed to deliver on.

Madam Speaker, the Minister is going to spend plenty of time, like he said. He acknowledges that he is in a weakened position. The speech is now going into that sympathy: Oh, I wanted to do more, but the Opposition was stopping me. The reason I could not get the schools built is because they were not supporting me.

Before, the Minister was talking about nothing but divine intervention could stop him! All of a sudden now he wants to give the impression that there is some justifiable reason—except his lack of abilities—as to why we have not seen any improvement in education.

Madam Speaker, we go back to the financial industry. What we have seen again . . . and surprise, surprise, Madam Speaker. That is the same Minister that has responsibility. We have seen a decline in our international ranking as a financial centre. I think we went from number 5 to . . . one of the reports had us down to 20-something! That is the same Minister who gets up and talks about his track record.

Madam Speaker, we know we have challenges. We know that when the Minister talked about stay over tourism, cruise ship tourism, the effects of Cuba, that the country does have to face impending challenges. We know that, even though we have seen in this where (on page 16 of the SPS) it talks about “. . . it seems the global downturn will have its greatest effect on the Cayman Islands economy during the current fiscal year.”

I am not sure where we got that information from, Madam Speaker. We have been told that we don't know what the effects of the fallout are going to be. And, like the Minister said, it is so uncertain that every day we see more and more crises. But we understand that for projection purposes the Government has to say that because, believe it or not, they are projecting an increase. They are projecting that the economy is going to get better next year, and even better the next year.

We know that projections are easy to make. But the realities are that we do not really know. And we do have to be prudent. And we do have to be accountable. Madam Speaker, a good way to start that accountability would be to get some of those reports and see what the Auditor General is going to say about them.

We know there is a helicopter fiasco the Auditor General is working on. We know there is a Syed one that he is working on. We know that. I think there is a Matrix one they are working on.

But the Minister gets up and says that his claim to fame is that during their administration there were no damning Auditor General reports, no questionable Auditor General reports. They cannot have those Auditor General reports because there has been no accounting!

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, one thing that I did not hear . . . I was a bit surprised when I heard the discussion about the investigation going on. I heard the excuse for the Savannah gully wall. I heard the reason for that was that . . . well, what was said is that the money that we are spending on those investigations . . . Now, Madam Speaker, before we heard that the Government was not supportive of the investigations, but now what we are hearing is that they are supportive of the investigations—but not with Mr. Bridger.

Madam Speaker, while the Government gets up to talk about being elected on a platform of anticorruption, it is important for us to remind that Government that while there were allegations of corruption before, the only Commission of Inquiry has been held on a sitting Minister of that Government.

And it is also important for us to remind them, Madam Speaker, that they did not want to pay for that Commission of Inquiry either.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: So, when they talk about them running on a platform against corruption, there were all sorts of allegations made, whether it was the Turtle Farm . . . but when the Auditor General reports came out, there was nothing found wrong.

But guess what? Guess who was the only Government—the same one that supposedly ran against corruption—that was found to be wrong by the Commission of Inquiry.

Madam Speaker, we keep talking. It is easy to talk about accountability, and it is easy to talk about track records. But what the Minister needs to understand, what the Members on that side need to understand is that there are no (like I hear my colleague referring to) lily whites over there. And when that cover is drawn down, and when the Glass House is opened up and the sunshine comes in, we start to see all these big defects. We start to see those defects coming out.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible interjection]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, he has to be aware that in the next six months, (five months, sorry), just like he said he is not going to run away, that lack of performance of his is not going to run away either. Regardless of how much he gets up here and pleads and begs and makes it sound like he is the nicest guy in the world who did all of this stuff, the accomplishments—or lack thereof—are going to be brought to light. And we are going to continue to do that because that is the job and the responsibility of the Opposition. They are the checks and balances on the executive arm of Government.

When they get up and talk about all the Opposition being able to do is criticise, Madam Speaker, we are criticising because they are doing so much wrong [and] we have a responsibility to the people to criticise. So, we propose to continue criticising as long as they are doing the wrong thing.

But, like the Minister said, there is a tomorrow of hope—20 May. And we are not going to . . . because, Madam Speaker, remember what the campaign said? They said, “Help was on the way.” And what people are saying is, ‘Boy, we’ve been waiting a long time; we nah got no help yet.’ Help must have gotten lost along the way!

So, 20 May [2009], the good people of Cayman will look and measure the results. And I am sure, Madam Speaker, that when they see the failures they will realise that the time has come to move on.

Madam Speaker, I see the time is nigh. I just want to use this opportunity to wish you and all of my colleagues, all my friends on the Government side and on my side the best and brightest wishes for the season, a happy and prosperous New Year. We look forward to continue working with the Government for those few things they are doing right. We will continue to support them. But for all those things they are doing wrong, we promise the people that we will continue to do our job and continue to highlight and criticise those.

As much as we have given them their time, we have given them their time to try to do what they needed to do. As much as we have given them their time and not been too critical, their time is coming to an end and we have a responsibility to highlight those shortcomings.

Madam Speaker, I also want to use this opportunity to wish the good people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman best wishes for the season. We know they are going through a difficult time. And we continue to pledge and give whatever support we can give to them. And we look forward to a bright and prosperous New Year for the good Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: I would just like to say, for Members who have spoken but who have not extended Christmas wishes and so forth, the final day before we close down I will be allowing all Members who wish to extend Christmas greetings to their constituents the opportunity.

I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I move the adjournment of this honourable House until Monday at 10 am.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION
(Standing Order 31)

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I ask you to allow me to make a statement under the Standing Orders—

The Speaker: A personal explanation, Honourable Leader.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —as follows: The Minister of Education, in his usual way, said in his debate, and I quote: “The Leader of the Opposition spoke to Kernohan on behalf of his colleague . . .” Madam Speaker, that is not true. I did not speak to Mr. Kernohan on behalf of any colleague of mine.

As a good Member of this House, a representative of the people, and as a Justice of the Peace, I have always spoken to new Commissioners on various policing matters. That is what I did [which] I feel is part of my duty. I had no cause, and never did, to speak to any such person on behalf of any colleague.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, before you ask for the vote for the adjournment, I will not be here on Monday, as I have a doctor’s appointment in Miami. I spoke to the Leader of Government Business on the motion that I have before the House (the one dealing with National Hero), and that is very close and near and dear to me personally; but also as a representative. He promised that that will not come until I get back.

I am just asking that that be reminded. I should say because I need to do this, that if I am not here for the motion for Cayman Brac other Members will move that amendment.

The Speaker: I think, Honourable Leader of the Opposition, if I recall correctly—but maybe you can check the Standing Order—I think it has to be done in writing. So, you can give that to one of your colleagues.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I thought that once I gave notice that was sufficient; however, if it has to be in writing, it can be done.

The Speaker: Yes. Just check the Standing Order please or have the Clerk check the Standing Order.

The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until Monday 10 am. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

This Honourable House now stands adjourned until Monday at 10 am.

At 4.36 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Monday, 15 December 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
MONDAY
15 DECEMBER 2008
10.23 AM
Sixth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable First Official Member to say Prayers.

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

PRAYERS

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Let us bow our heads.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of the Cayman Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Father, God, I also pray that You will cause us to be mindful of what the season of the year represents. It is not just a season, but an expression of Your divine love through which You came into this world through Your Son, Jesus Christ. So, help us, Heavenly Father, God, to be mindful that we are accountable to You and we are accountable Heavenly Father, God, for the love that You have extended to us. So, help us Heavenly Father, God, to [use] this time not only for exchanging gifts but to have love in our hearts and that love should be pervasive toward our fellow man.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

Government Motion No. 10/08-09—Approval of the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: Debate continuing on Government Motion No. 10/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to offer my contribution on Government Motion No. 10/08-09, Approval of the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year.

Just before I get into the meat of my debate, I, too, would like to express my remorse for the recent actions that took place in Cayman Brac with the vandalism of the Cayman Brac High School. I certainly hope that the perpetrators will be brought to justice. If they have not been caught yet, I hope it will happen very soon. For someone to commit such an act at this time after the Brac has suffered extreme hardship by Hurricane Paloma, and the Government went about investing heavily and quickly to get the young people of the Brac back into school . . . lo and behold someone saw fit to go and, as a result, force our young people out of school once more. Madam Speaker, it is a terrible, terrible act; to be quite honest, one of the most serious that I have seen committed against our own people. And it will be even sadder if it is by our own people.

Madam Speaker, I would like to first of all commend the Honourable Third Official Member and the Leader of Government Business, all of the Ministers, in fact, and all of the people who worked behind the scenes, the hardworking civil servants who put so much into preparing this Strategic Policy Statement (SPS) for presentation at this time in advance of next year's budget.

There was more effort than normal in this particular SPS because of the situation that we are facing as a country, as a nation, as a world. Most naturally, we had to factor in the effects of the worldwide recession and the possible effect that this can have on our own economy; it would be a reckless government not to. Everything that we do here hinges on what happens on the world economy, especially in the US. Every morning we wake up to the news of further bailouts, layoffs and bad news out of the US at the moment.

So, Madam Speaker, in preparing this SPS there were naturally a number of constraints, apart from those that are laid out by the Public Management and Finance Law. Hence, ministries were asked to find ways of cutting back. And we know that in the month of October a freeze was put on new hires in the Civil Service. Ministries were asked to find ways of foregoing various plans and projects in order that we could continue to act in a responsible manner and within the parameters of the Public Management and Finance Law.

Madam Speaker, this Government, the PPM Government, has worked hard over the past three and a half years to live up to its promises and to practise responsible fiscal management. Often times we are accused of not carrying out everything that is in our manifesto. Well I dare say that anyone looking at the manifesto we prepared in the run up to the last election will realise that that manifesto was not a four-year set of objectives, but more of a vision, a plan that this Government has for the overall enhancement of the economy and the development of this country and its people.

Certainly, there is no way on earth that what we presented as a manifesto could be completed in a four-year term unless we were coming in and continuing office. Then we could say, 'Well, you've hit the ground running and you certainly can get these things done.'

Madam Speaker, that criticism of this Government, to me, is a redundant one and one that should really fall away. What is important is that anyone looking to critique this Government should look at the Government in what it has set out to do, what it has achieved, and the way it has achieved its goals. We have done this with integrity, hard work and we have kept the faith in our people. And I dare say our people have kept the faith in us, and this will be proven come May 2009.

I do not think there has been a harder working and more honest government in the history of these Cayman Islands. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, and I will go through a lot of things before I am done to justify what I just said. We have had major, major challenges and have had obstacles put in place by many people who would like to see us fail, all for their own political gain. But we are about developing our people and country in a responsible manner, not just here as politicians looking to fatten our own pockets.

Madam speaker, we have a Government of statesmen and stateswomen; people who have sacrificed a lot to be here and continue to do so on a daily basis. I do not have to go to bed at night and wake up wondering what bad news I am going to hear about any of my Ministers or any of my colleagues on the Backbench. No scandals, no question of integrity in public office. To me, this is all important. Whether we have managed to complete all that we have attempted to do is another matter. There are many reasons why this would not be the case, but what we have done has been done well. We have consulted along the way; we have not done it in secrecy and for our own political mileage.

This Government has been the subject of a wide scale negative campaign by the print media in general and the radio. I dare say one particular radio station has been campaigning for the past three years. I see now that the host of that radio station, Mr. Solomon, has pretty much declared his hand as a UDP candidate. So, Madam Speaker, when my colleague and friend, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, spoke about the institute of rhetorical political lunacy, and he spoke to the Second Elected Member for West Bay being the dean of that college, I would like to add that that radio station is, I guess, its main campus, with Mr. Solomon as its dean.

Madam Speaker, it is easy to criticise and be negative against a government, or anyone who is working hard when you are doing nothing but looking to cirtcise and say nay against everything that that person or group is doing. But, Madam Speaker, it is a different thing to come into this House and go into the office, work and have fiscal responsibility, to have to plan, implement and be accountable for your actions. It is a different thing.

I hope that that individual finds greener pastures on the other side because the reason that he stood against this Government so firmly was because he could not get his way to be a candidate in George Town the last time around without going through the process that this PPM Party lives by, that is, our in-house elections. He wanted to be guaranteed as a candidate and he could not. Therefore, he went off and became our biggest political enemy as it were.

Madam Speaker, I just want the people out there to understand, those listening, those within the reach of my voice, why we have had this sustained negative campaign by Mr. Solomon and his cohorts against this PPM Government to oppose everything for the sake of opposing; in particular, the vengeance he has against the Minister of Education.

The Opposition, in tandem with Mr. Solomon and the others, has opposed, and opposed, and opposed, and criticised, and criticised, and criticised. We hear the term “the shifting goalposts” or the “glass ceilings”. In this case we are referring to the shifting goalposts because there is nothing that this Government could do . . . we bent over backwards when we have been criticised, or some idea has come up where we have listened to, whether it is the people or the Opposition, and as soon as we act in that manner, then we should have done what we were going to do originally. Or if we do not change, then we are dictators. So, Madam Speaker, how do you win? How do you win in a situation like this?

You know how you win, Madam Speaker? You have your clear, well thought out and considered goals, stick with them, move on; and at the end of the day the country will be better off because, if you have to shift around and move position every time someone opens his mouth, Madam Speaker, nothing will get done. Therefore, we chose to do what we thought was right.

And yes, there were times when we changed our plans. The recent debacle with the constitutional talks, after an outcry by the Opposition that the Paloma hurricane had severely handicapped their ability to be at the talks, and for certain key members to be at the talks . . . Madam Speaker, we decided as a Government to consider postponing the talks. In hindsight, I guess it was the wrong thing to do. But we were being a Government that listens. And then they turned around after we did that and criticized us and said, ‘Well, we were going to show up anyway. There was no need to do that’. How do you win, Madam Speaker? How do you win?

We were being lambasted about our capital works programme—our over-ambitious, too expensive capital works programme—in particular, in relation to our schools. The Minister of Education was being torn apart on a daily basis. Well, when it came time to come up with the Strategic Policy Statement we had to, unfortunately, cut back on two school plans, the Beulah Smith High School in West Bay and the George Town Primary School, which as we all know is very, very badly needed. Madam Speaker, I can assure you, and the Minister has already spoken to this: this was a tough blow, not only for him, but for this Administration, as everyone knows the priority we place on the schools and the development of our young people.

This decision was not taken lightly. And the only reason the Beulah Smith High School was the one that got sacrificed was simply because it was the one that had not started. The other two are underway. The John Gray High School and the Clifton Hunter High School are both significantly underway. So, it made sense to stop the one that had not started.

Lo and behold, along comes the Opposition pounding us to death about stopping the schools (in particular, the West Bay High School) because, of course, that is their hometown and they feel that it is an act against them. Nothing could be further from the truth. The truth is that our overall Education plan calls for the implementation of these three schools at one time in order that it works the way the whole plan was supposed to work. So, we would only be spiting ourselves, cutting off our noses to suit our faces, as the old saying goes, if that was what we were trying to do.

Madam Speaker, how do you win? You either are accused of spending too much, when you are trying to play catch-up with infrastructure in this country that has been neglected over so many years by many administrations, not just one. You are either accused of spending too much or doing nothing. Not getting anything done! Which is it, Madam Speaker? How do you please your critics? As I said, you cannot please your critics, they will continue to critique and be the opposition, so it is our job to get on with the job and do it in the most befitting, equitable and proper way of getting the job done.

Madam Speaker, I would like to address a few points that were raised by the Third Elected Member for West Bay. My good friend spoke to the fact that during tough economic times, capital works need to be conducted by government, and the fact that we have now cut back on some of those capital works, and he could not understand that because this is the time when those works should be done. I fully agree with him, Madam Speaker. That logic is correct to a certain point. However, my friend, the Third Elected Member for West Bay, conveniently forgot to mention how to go about maintaining all of your capital works in lieu of the fact that you have budget constraints.

When revenue predictions are down, and naturally so with the current environment we would be foolhardy. It would be reckless. Then, we would be borrowing outside the parameters that have been laid down for us. We know that we have the five parameters of the Public Management and Finance Law in relation to how we go about all of our borrowings, our net worth and the various other constraints that we have; our debt ratio and the like.

Madam Speaker, if we carried through to conclusion what the Third Elected Member for West Bay was insinuating, then we would be continuing recklessly with capital works and we would certainly have to go outside the scope and the parameters laid down on our debt ratio, because we would not have the revenue to support such borrowings and such works. So, I just want to make that clear. I know that the Member for West Bay understands that, but he was simply being a little mischievous.

The same Member, the Third Elected Member for West Bay, also mentioned something (and he was being doubly mischievous in this regard) when he spoke to us having a consultant which was probably—he did not say absolutely, I listened carefully to him and he did say that it was probably—paid for from government coffers. Madam Speaker, I want to stand here and make it absolutely clear that that is a serious accusation and one that would fit the administration of which he is a part. But it does not fit the PPM. Anyone that we employ outside of central government is paid for out of our party's pocket, not out of the Government of the Cayman Islands.

Yes, we have a consultant. But that consultant is not being paid for by central government, and that is important. That is a distinction I want to make. But, Madam Speaker, I would like to know, and will leave this question out there: Who is paying for theirs?

And they like to call names that they are not sure who they are talking about, but their consultant, Mr. Roy Boyke, a man who has a fantastic reputation in the Caribbean, I would like to know who is paying for him.

Madam Speaker, the Third Elected Member for West Bay also spoke about our losing our ranking as a country in the financial world. I would like to address that because, again, I do not know whether it might have been confusion on his part or deliberate. But the Member spoke about us slipping from our number 5 ranking on the world's stage to somewhere in the 20s, I think.

What the Member referred to was not comparing apples with apples. The two rankings were not the same thing. When we speak to the Cayman Islands having a 5th ranking in the world in the banking sector, we are referring to our place strictly in terms of bank assets. This position has not changed. We are either 5th or 6th in this regard.

The other ranking that the Member for West Bay was alluding to is our ranking as it relates to our economy on a wider range covering many other aspects of our economy—our standard of living, our immigration policies and the like. And it has to do with our overall economy and its competitiveness. And, yes, Madam Speaker, we are ranked somewhere in that area, in the early 20s or whatever, in that regard. So, we are not comparing apples with apples if we say that we have slipped from 5th to 20-something. That has to be made absolutely clear. We still maintain our position in the world ranking in terms of bank assets in the 5th or 6th position. I'm not sure exactly which it is at this time.

The last point I would like to address in what the Third Elected Member for West Bay alluded to is his whole argument in relation to the [number] of permits that we have in this country, some 26,000 work permits, and the fact that we have rising unemployment in our local workforce. This is a very important point and one in which the Third Elected Member for West Bay and I will not necessarily disagree altogether, because this is an alarming area for us as a Government. It is something that we are well aware of. We will not deny that this is the case if someone looks at the stats, but it is not as if we are not trying to address this issue.

Unfortunately, this issue is not one that we can fix overnight. This is where the whole idea of re-tooling and educating our people comes in, and ensuring that employers in this country adhere to proper procedures in hiring and training our local people.

We have spoken about this fact in here many times, the ease with which local employers find the ability to move on from a Caymanian, or give up, as it were, on a Caymanian (and vice versa sometimes as well), but will turn around and take a foreign permit holder and train that permit holder to the point where they become almost key employee. We have to find a way in this country to ensure that all of our people who want to be employed are gainfully employed.

Now, there are always those in our society and any society that will be unemployable and they will unfortunately always, always exist. But if someone is willing to work and has some form of ability in some area, it is my contention that in a country the size of the Cayman Islands we have to find a way of ensuring that we gainfully employ all of our people before we then layer that with work permits.

Work permits are an important source of revenue, but, certainly, cannot be at the expense of our own people. Madam Speaker, when this happens you end up with severe disenfranchisement and individuals who are very discontented and will cause no end of problems on a social scale. We end up with a burden, social services, and with problems in our homes, on the streets and in the workplace.

So, Madam Speaker, that point brought up by the Third Elected Member for West Bay is an important one and, as I said, is one that our Government is cognisant of, is working hard on. But the improvements and benefits of our education plans are not a quick fix. We have made great strides to develop our people in this area, but it is going to take time for the fruits of those labours to be seen and felt.

Madam Speaker, coming back to the issue of cutting back projects to produce this SPS and in the end to produce the next budget for this country, not only was it of hurt to Ministries and Ministers and to all those who worked so hard to identify what our plans were going forward, but when you look at projects such as our schools, as mentioned, when you look in my own district at the emergency response centre, which is badly needed, I dare say, and you look at the Savannah flood wall—God forbid any severe weather coming from the south before we get that done. When we look at projects such as those that have had to be cut because of the need for restraint, I want everyone in this country, the Opposition and everyone in this House to understand the strain and the hurt that this put on this Administration.

These were not, by any means, easy decisions. But we had to look at the overall plan where we are trying to get to and see what could be postponed—not necessarily cut out because they will come back. These projects are not discarded. They are to be reinstated as quickly as we can, budget permitting, Madam Speaker. However, we need to ensure that we act in a responsible manner.

At this time I would like to focus a little on some of the achievements of our Government. And when you consider that this Government came in, in 2005, on the heels of Hurricane Ivan, having to clean up in many cases a lot of mess (I can use no other word) in regard to the rebuilding projects that had been undertaken by the previous administration—yes, they were operating in a crisis mode for a long time, and we give them credit for reacting and trying to get things up and going.

[Nevertheless], there were a lot of things that were left to be desired; many proper processes and people being neglected for various reasons, and people abusing, whether it was people that they had put in place to see the rebuilding through or whether it was the contractors that were involved. There were myriads of issues that we had to deal with. The first six months to a year of our administration was spent trying to get the rebuilding of Hurricane Ivan on a proper track and ensure that it was done in a timely manner. So, Madam Speaker, this Government took office against that backdrop.

We then started work on constitutional modernisation. Because we did not come public with our position paper until 2007 does not mean that that was when the constitutional modernisation process was started. The Constitutional Secretariat had been set up and there were many, many meetings. A professional consultant was hired, and many things were going on behind the scenes before Government came public with our constitutional modernisation suggestions. That, in itself, was a very large undertaking.

Madam Speaker, there is a large initiative that is about to be implemented; the Freedom of Information. Again, very, very huge undertaking spearheaded by the Leader of Government Business, to ensure that [with] this country going forward people will have access to information as they have never had before; access to information from within government, where before things were done . . . papers were filed away and no one quite knew what took place. Freedom of information will pull back those blinds and let the sun shine in and it will be opened for all and sundry to understand what is going on within their government.

Madam Speaker, we had the important area of housing for our people, because not only do we have people that were out of homes by Hurricane Ivan, but for a long time in this country we have had the need for affordable housing. Again, this is not something that could just be as we noted with the debacle that took place under the previous administration with the affordable housing and the tin homes, as they are called. We still have ongoing investigations in that area.

We could not continue in that vein. We had to find another way to provide affordable housing for our people. Land had to be procured—proper land in the right areas—and we had to find the right type of construction; the right plans and the right people to do the work. Again, very time consuming. The National Housing Development Trust, along with the Leader of Government Business . . . a very time-consuming exercise, Madam Speaker.

We have had major criticism over the years about our Planning Department and the need for reform in our planning rules and regulations and the way the department functions. Again, this was undertaken and the Zucker Consultants were employed and a report was produced for reform of our Planning Department. Many, many initiatives were implemented that have gone some way to improving the services that are coming out of the Planning Department, although I know that there are criticisms in that area, and will continue to be. I don't think you will ever have a situation where everyone will be happy about the results of what comes out of the Planning Board or the Planning Department. But, at the end of the day, it is our job to streamline and make that as efficient a process as possible. And we have worked hard in this area.

We also had the whole issue of government accommodation. When you look at the way government is spread throughout George Town and outside of George Town, Madam Speaker, I am in favour of decentralization. But when you look at the way that government is spread around various offices paying voluminous amounts of rent and certainly not enjoying economies of scale or efficiencies that would come being under one roof, Madam Speaker, this Government had no choice but to embark on an ambitious government office accommodation project which is well underway at the old Racquet Club compound.

That is a huge project and one that took tremendous amounts of planning to get it where it is to this point. Very time consuming. Of course, the financial arrangements and everything that went along with that took up a tremendous amount of time.

So, those are all areas that fall under the ambit of the Leader of Government Business.

He also made great strides in the whole area of agriculture development and the development of our small farmers and the Agricultural Pavilion area where we have a Saturday Market at the Grounds, which is doing very well. The plans for the agri-tourism project in that area is still in the cards. Much accomplished, Madam Speaker, to better our people and our small Islands.

Madam Speaker, when you turn to the area of social services, which will always be a bleed on any economy, any country, because this is where you take care of those less fortunate. But, again, it has to be with proper plans and proper processes in place so that it is not being abused. And a lot of streamlining has been done in our Social Services to try and weed out those who are taking advantage of the system and to ensure that those we are helping, we are helping with a leg up so that they can get back on their own feet through the STASS [Support Toward Autonomy and Self-Sufficiency] programme, [which is] another very useful development initiative under this Government to help its people.

Our hospital and Health Services Authority is an area that continues to be a major issue for this country, but I dare say that the Minister has put faith in people that are continuing each day to pay back that faith. The Acting CEO, a young lady, Mrs. Lizette Yearwood, has brought much stability to the hospital services after we had been through a tumultuous time with the loss of a couple of CEOs. There is now less rumbling coming from that sector. We strive each day to provide proper health care; but, again, it is an area that takes tremendous resources. It will continue to be one that has to be carefully managed so that we do not get abuse taking place, we get the best value for a buck and we get the best health service for our people.

Madam Speaker, we have built a new ladies' wing at Caribbean Haven in Breakers. That was recently opened. And we continue to provide the best that we can for our people, asking them in return to help themselves as much as possible; to act responsibly. We do understand that times are hard, but Government can only do so much. Government is there to assist, point you in the right direction, and it is for you to have some initiative to go forward from there.

This Government also took on the restructuring of Cayman Airways and hired consultants which spent a lot of time going through the entire airline finding the most efficient way to run the airline. The consultants have moved on; Cayman Airways has four 737-300 aircraft; there has been a re-branding exercise and there are new routes that the airline is flying into and planning to fly into in the next couple of months; more lucrative routes for better use maximisation of the resources that we have. One of these important areas is the whole area of airlift to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. We had planned to have another type of aircraft to fly into those Islands, but for the time being the aircraft that we have will service and hopefully improve the service that we have offered to the Sister Islands over the past three years.

Madam Speaker, Cayman Airways (again, similar to the government administration project) had offices all over George Town, and the Minister saw it fit to procure a building which, again, he came into some criticism for. But that building was procured, completely renovated and now CAL boasts very modern office accommodations all under one roof reaping the benefit of economies of scale and efficiencies because of streamlined activities.

Madam Speaker, the criticism was unjustified, but it seems that no matter what you do, as I have said, there will be criticism. But we persevered and now we are that much better for it.

The airport is being redeveloped. Again, the plans to do that were slowed because of economic reasons, but will continue next year. There is no doubt that the airport facilities as currently exist have been outgrown, outdated, and the Airports Authority will find a way to ensure that the proper financing and way forward is found for that redevelopment. And once that is done, Madam Speaker, that gateway will be one to be proud of as it will boast modern facilities and state-of-the-art terminals.

Madam Speaker, we are busy trying to come up with berthing facilities for the cruise ships. We know the importance of this. Tendering is something that is a dying breed, as it were. We don't have many ports that are tendered any more. Most places have berthing. And berthing for cruise ship passengers is not only safer, but, certainly, will allow the passengers to spend longer times on Island. Therefore the country would reap greater benefits from them being here. The feasibility studies and all the other works are ongoing in that regard and the country will be apprised in due course on what those final plans will be, and it will be in consultation with our people.

The Cayman Turtle Farm—Boatswain's Beach Development started under the previous administration. When we took over we found that there were many issues there and the project could only be completed at substantial cost. I think at the end of the day it was some $55 million or $60 million spent on what is now a nice project, but one that I dare say was not carefully thought out in the beginning in terms of what revenues were needed or how you would get those revenues in to ensure that this became a viable concern.

Madam Speaker, we have Cayman Airways which already, we know will continue to need government funding into the indefinite future. We have our Social Services which we pump a lot of money into. We do not need a third leg to that where we continue to have to subsidise and support financially a development such as Boatswain's Beach.

Madam Speaker, new management has been employed at Boatswain's Beach and the whole project there is doing fairly well, but has some ways to go to really maximize its potential. The manager there, Mr. Joey Ebanks, is working very hard. There have been many cutbacks, streamlining of activities and processes at Boatswain's Beach, and I think this week (if I am not mistaken) we will see the opening of Dolphin Discovery next door to Boatswain's Beach. This will not only enhance the overall tourism product on the western end, but it will also be of benefit to the Boatswain's Beach project because there will be a certain amount payable each month from Dolphin Discovery to Boatswain's Beach for use of some of their facilities.

So, much has been done; much is continuing to be done.

Madam Speaker, look at the Minister responsible for Roads, Infrastructure and Communications and you will see the amount of road works. As he often says, he does not think there has been that amount of paving done in the Cayman Islands in that short space of time ever. We look at the great roads that we have. We look at the recently completed airport area there by Foster's [Supermarket]. Madam Speaker, this has dramatically improved traffic flow. It is the welcoming gate to our country and it rightly deserves a nice road. It was something that was badly needed.

This was done in fairly short order; a bit of delay because of weather, but apart from that that project was completed and is now serving the public that much better. We look at all of the bypass roads and the bypass to Bodden Town and how that has improved traffic flow in the mornings and evenings for our people getting to work and coming from work. We look at the West Bay bypass and see how much that has improved traffic on the western peninsula, not only for our tourist product, but for the workers in West Bay, to and fro.

Madam Speaker, we continue to repair roads that are long time . . . some of them have never been paved. Some have been problematic over the years with pot holes. There's a strategic plan by the National Roads Authority (NRA) to systematically work its way east repairing these roads. I think we are somewhere in the Prospect area, but you will hear more about that when the Minister gets up.

We are moving with our projects and doing what we have to do to improve the quality of living and the infrastructure in this country. We are doing this with an honest hardworking Government.

The same Minister was responsible for championing the new CUC negotiations, the new agreement with CUC. Now that the price of fuel is coming down we have seen the benefits of this new agreement on our light bills. This month I am sure everybody had a significant reduction in the cost of their light bill. This is an important fact because this is one of the main driving forces behind the rising cost of living in this country.

When fuel goes up and CUC bills go out of whack then everyone complains because everything has a knock-on effect; prices on the shelf, the cost of doing business, no matter what, goes up and we all suffer in the end. Right now I would love to hear those same people who were criticising say, Thanks for the relief. But you don't hear anything; it is quiet now because prices are coming down. It is easy to criticise, but no one gives anyone a pat on the back when things go well.

Madam Speaker, under that same Minister as well, we had the creation of a new unit, the Recreation Park, Beach and Cemeteries Unit. The benefit of pulling together these various components and putting them under one roof, as it were, is proving to be a wise move. The efficiencies are becoming readily apparent the way that our parks, cemeteries and beaches are maintained can be seen. The improvements are there and the various teams are out there working hard and everyone is reaping the benefit and seeing the great job that this unit is doing. These are all things that have been instigated under our Administration.

Lastly, Madam Speaker, in terms of the whole area of our education reform and the building of schools, as I alluded to earlier, when the Minister took charge of that area he quickly held a conference with all stakeholders in regard to education and what was needed to put our children first—not facilities—but what was needed to put our children first in terms of curriculum, teaching and facilities. That report was presented. Professor Heppel, a world renown education reformer was hired and we then embarked on a step by step process for an education plan. We are not doing this in any willy-nilly fashion.

This is what I spoke to earlier when I said that it was a hard decision to cut back on schools. Madam Speaker, it was not an easy decision for the Minister or any of us, the entire government and civil service. That was a tough, tough decision; but it was necessary.

We have, I believe, quadrupled the amount of scholarship money that was being provided to students in this country. Anyone who wants to go off and pursue further education, anyone who wants to attend University College of the Cayman Islands has the ability to do so now as long as they can meet the requirements. You have to have a certain basic education, Madam Speaker, to progress up the education ladder. But, certainly, the way that we are looking at this is that we are retooling people through our University College. There are many vocational studies being pursued at the University College. We hope to eventually turn the George Hicks campus into a full fledged vocational trade school. That is the plan, Madam Speaker, but in the interim our vocational studies are being offered at the University College.

Madam Speaker, we have more people on scholarships now than this country has ever had. And we are monitoring who has scholarships and when they are off this Island what they are doing, and we are also ensuring that there is a place for them in our workplace on their return. It is not the same as it used to be when we had students overseas. We didn't know where they were, what they were doing; and when they came back we did not know who they were.

Madam Speaker, we now have a grip on this. We are working very hard to encourage everyone who wants to pursue further education to do well in school and put themselves in a position where they can go on for further education. Because, at the end of the day as this country continues to develop . . . I won't be in this House, probably, but the day will come when this country will have to go off on its own. It won't be sitting under Mother UK any more. That day will come whether we like it or not. We need to have our people prepared, and the best way to prepare our people for that day is through education.

Therefore, this Government has as its number one priority our school system, our education system, and the young people of this country. We make no apologies for that and there is no amount too great, we feel, to be spent on our young people, although the Opposition, and, in particular, the Leader of the Opposition, would like us to cut back on our expense in this area. He feels that it is all too much and you don't need the type of schools that we are building and the like, and all the criticism. But the proof will be in the pudding. The proof of the pudding will be in the eating.

Madam Speaker, the schools that we are building will also double as hurricane shelters. They will have state-of-the-art sport facilities, 25 metre swimming pools, indoor gyms, proper outdoor playing fields, the works, Madam Speaker, state-of-the-art teaching halls and classes and recreation areas. So, I wish in some ways that I was back in school so that I would be able to take advantage. I know one or two of my children may get an opportunity to take advantage of some of these new facilities. One is already beyond that, but it is certainly exciting times for our young students and it will be thanks to the PPM Administration [for having] the vision to see that our young people were offered the very best.

Madam Speaker, combined with that is the amount of work that the Minister of Education has spearheaded in the area of our sports development. I don't have to tell anyone, they can just simply look around at the facilities in the various districts or Truman Bodden [Sports] Complex, the way that that was done; a new track laid, new field, new stands.

The Ed Bush field in West Bay [with] the new AstroTurf facility there is a wonderful, wonderful facility to play on and the renovated stands.

You come into George Town and look at the AstroTurf facility there, the renovated stands and all of the other things that go along with it.

We have the boxing gym coming on line soon. That has been started and named in honour of the late Dalmain Ebanks, a past legislator and someone who had a great passion for boxing and the youth development in that area. That boxing gym will be opened.

The renovated netball facilities and the fields in the outer districts, East End, Bodden Town and North Side, all are being redone.

And, of course, the new AstroTurf facility in Cayman Brac: I do not know how it fared with [Hurricane] Paloma because I have not been to see it yet. I hope that it is in good condition still and I know that the plans there were for a full developed site on the Bluff for, not only football, but all of the associated sports, and hopefully a swimming pool eventually as well.

Madam Speaker, these are some of the major achievements of a Government that is constantly being bombarded and [reported in the media in a negative way saying] that we are not doing anything or achieving anything [and that we] are wasting time in office. Three-and-a-half years into an Administration; coming in on the heels of [Hurricane] Ivan and wrapping up in the middle of a worldwide recession, and [someone] is going to look me in the face and tell me that this is not the report card of a hardworking Government? Then something is wrong in their mind; something is totally wrong. But again, Madam Speaker, the old saying is, "There is none so blind as he or she who will not see."

We have also done a lot in the area of immigration reform and we implemented the roll-over policy put in place by the last government. We have taken a lot of stick for that too, but to our native Caymanian people it goes somewhere towards giving them a leg to stand on after the wide scale status grants that were granted back in 2003/04, that we will continue to reap the sour for, Madam Speaker.

Going back to the talk about some of our people being unemployed and can't find jobs. Madam Speaker, many, many, many of our people are suffering because of that one reckless act by the past administration, the UDP Government. It was not the act of granting the number of statuses, it was who those statuses were granted to.

If they had been granted to everyone who had been here long term and deserving of it, I could not stand here and criticise. But when you grant status to people who have not seen the Cayman Islands, who don't want status, people who have been here for two months, helpers that were here just a few months—who, I understand, may have even been for some of the Members on that side, Madam Speaker—that was a reckless act that a country can ill-afford and one that will go down in the annals of history as a very, very reckless act against your own people. They can never be forgiven for it.

So when they stand here and accuse us now of unemployment and people not getting work, I want them to think back three, four, five years ago, to what they were busy doing, the lists that they were coming up with, how they were coming up with those lists and the end result.

Madam Speaker, the difference on this side of the House is that you do not see any packsaddles and no bridles. We are free. On this side of the House we are free. I can stand here and talk without fear of retribution from my leader because I know we are on the same page. I know that although sometimes we may not agree, he will listen. And I will listen to him. And we will find a common way forward. I am not under an iron hand—as the Leader of the Opposition says he rules with—and I do not live in fear of opening my mouth contributing to my country. I can talk and suggest things to my leader and my leader will listen, and I will listen to him. That is the difference, Madam

Speaker. There are no packsaddles on the Government Bench and no bridles in our mouths.

Unfortunately, those on the Opposition side cannot say the same. They live in fear and they are so different when the Leader of the Opposition is away.

Madam Speaker, I have strived in my contribution today to outline what this Government has been doing in its time in office in an abbreviated extent, touching briefly on the various ministries and areas that are important and crucial to our ongoing development. We have a lot of work and challenges ahead of us in tough economic times. No doubt about it. But we will continue to consult and work with people, the various stakeholders.

They often accuse us, too, of not having enough clout or not lobbying enough in Washington and all of that, and what's going on with the fear of the Obama presidency and the things he said about the Cayman Islands and all. I want the public to understand that we have our people in Washington. We may not have the people that they had, we may not be boasting about it every minute, but we have our people and in the right places and we are doing what we have to do. We will meet when we have to meet and negotiate when we have to negotiate. But we are not walking in this thing blinded.

We do not live in a vacuum in the Cayman Islands, and are not so foolhardy to think that we do. This Government is a sensible Government. We consult and are not afraid to say that we consult. We do not run a dictatorship. We consult with the private sector stakeholders whether it be financial services or tourism. And I dare say that those people in those areas are very happy that they have a Government like us that they can sit and talk with and not be dominated by one individual saying, this is the way we are going to do it regardless of what you say.

Those people all have their input, good points, and we have ours. At the end of the day it is a private/public partnership that has built this Cayman Islands to where it is today and must continue to be such.

We cannot just pick up and do as we wish because we are the Government. We have to consult, Madam Speaker. And we get knocked because we consult too much, sometimes even from our own people on the inside. But we will continue because we believe that that was the way we came into office. We said we would consult. We are a Government for the people, of the people, by the people.

On top of all that we have been through, we have had Paloma visit us in the Brac and we have the major, major rebuilding effort for Cayman Brac. Again, we are criticised: we have not allocated funds, have not done this, it is not happening fast enough. Madam Speaker, the Brac was hard hit. The Brac was 90 per cent destroyed and, unfortunately, cannot be fixed tomorrow morning. It will take time. But this Government was right there at the beginning with the relief effort—after we were thankful to know that no one died—to make sure that everyone had relief supplies, the bare necessities to survive, their food stuff and dry beds, making sure that our people were taken care of.

We now have the process of rebuilding and rebuild we will, Madam Speaker. But we will do it in an honest straightforward manner ensuring that our people benefit from the work that is there. Our local contractors benefit and the Brac people will be glad at the end of the day when the Brac is rebuilt stronger, better and in a very equitable manner; not fear or favour; not because you are on that side you are not getting this help. We are not going to do what the last administration did. When they came along with a form for you to fill out for relief and found out that you were not voting for them they would tear it up in front of you.

No, Madam Speaker, that is not the way the PPM Government operates. We help those who need help regardless of who they vote for, which side of the political fence they sit on. We help our people and, yes, we know we continue to have people who are hurting in this country. God, I wish it was different; but that will always be the case and it is our job to mitigate that hurt and do it in an equitable manner.

Madam Speaker, it is not easy being a government at this time, because we are in the hot seat at a difficult time. We have many things going on. We have initiatives that are coming right, left and centre from the financial front; challenges to our tourism industry and our inherit problems. But we also had so many, many issues to deal with that were vested upon us by the last administration—value for money audit reports, complaints of impropriety and integrity issues. There are issues that are still with the police being investigated.

Madam Speaker, where are the hard knocks? Tell me where are the actions of this Government that have been so wrong? Where is the challenge to the integrity of this Government?

So, when someone is looking around and judging at the end of the day—especially next May—as to who they want to be in charge of their country, let them ask where is this Government when it comes to the whole issue of integrity, and where does the PPM stand.

Where are those who are challenging us? What have their done? Where is their track record?

Those who have yet to come, where is their track record? And those who are here, what were they involved with in the past?

Madam Speaker, I can stand here today and proudly associate myself with my Government and each Minister within this Government. We are working hard on our Go-East initiative to ensure that some of the benefits of our tourist product move east because we understand the weight that it presents on this side of the Island. George Town and West Bay have traditionally borne the brunt of the tourists, and the volume of tourists that we have are almost two million who come by cruise and another 300,000 to 400,000 by air. Those are a lot of people visiting our shores, plus people who come for business.

It has to be managed carefully and we should all benefit from that and the money transactions I believe that pass through this country. That is one area I believe we still falter a bit in, that when we are looking at revenue we need to find a way of tapping some of the reserves that pass through this country. I feel that money leaves our country much too easily and we don't get anything as a government for that and if we spent some more time coming up with creative ways of looking we could probably find some alternative revenue sources.

But, Madam Speaker, we have done all that I have outlined without major taxes on our people. And we do not have any intention of implementing any major taxes. This is being done under responsible financial management, therefore, our borrowings can be paid for through our revenue. We are able to work through the Public Management and Finance Law guidelines to ensure that whatever obligations we have as a government can be met without over taxation of our people.

We want all of our people to be moving in one positive direction. We do not want to develop one part of Cayman and leave the other part neglected. And we certainly do not want to develop Cayman's infrastructure without developing our people.

Madam Speaker, the 55-page Strategic Policy Statement that took the Leader of Government some two hours to deliver in this House, was something that was carefully thought out. It was well written and there is a vision in that Strategic Policy Statement for the way forward. So, it is easy when you do not have responsibility, when you are not being held accountable, to criticise and say, the Government is not doing this and that. But, Madam Speaker, when you are in the driver's seat and have to be accountable, at the end of the day you have to be able to put your hand up and say, Yes, we did it and did it to the best of our ability. We may not have achieved everything that we set out to achieve, but that is why we have goals and aspirations, and this is where the country is headed.

This country can ill-afford to go back to the dark days of 2005 and before. We need to move forward with a plan and continue the plans that we have to ensure that this country is kept steady and stable.

One of the greatest things, when we go out and sell these Cayman Islands, especially on the financial front, is the whole area of government political stability: good laws, low crime and the like. This is how we sell the Cayman Islands, as a package. The day that we do not have a government that recognises that and those areas start to falter . . . and I guess I have to mention the fact that what we have seen recently under the current constitution arrangements with the Governor, our judicial, police and legal system, I dare say it will not enhance our reputation in the short term.

I am really hoping that this matter will be put to bed and we will get on with business. It is going to cost this country some money—money, again, that we could have used on some of our plans that we have had to forego. It is unfortunate. But I think it shows quite clearly to our people the need for constitutional reform. When we have someone who is not accountable to anyone, and you have an elected government that is accountable but is not in the know, it just cannot be right. There is something wrong with that system. We need constitutional modernisation and we needed it as of yesterday.

So, Madam Speaker, I would ask that the people of this country put their hands up and stand up for their rights for what is going to improve their lot in life. One of the greatest things that they can do is to ensure that we press on with constitutional modernisation and get a new constitution for this country, cut back on some of the Governor's powers, continue as an overseas territory of the United Kingdom working in partnership with them where they consult us and we consult them; but not one where things are just done in the dark of the night without our knowledge. Our people cannot benefit from that. We need a new constitution and we need it now.

Madam Speaker, I think I have outlined and supported why we have the Strategic Policy Statement that we do; why we have had to make the cut-backs that we have had to do, and ask our people to be patient, tolerant and understanding. I thank the civil servants who have worked hard to implement our policies and prepare the paperwork that we use here, such as the Strategic Policy Statement and our Annual Budget. There are a lot of hardworking civil servants and we thank them for their efforts. We thank everyone who has entrusted us to be here to do their work and uphold their end of the bargain.

Madam Speaker, while I am on my feet I guess it may be a good time for me, although you will be allowing those who have spoken before and I have not had the opportunity to express Christmas greetings. I would like before I sit if it is okay with you . . .

Would you like me to do that now, Madam Speaker, or you would like to do that now? Sorry.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, you can go ahead and do it now if you care to.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I would like to thank God for the opportunity to serve in this very important position in my country. I thank the good people of Bodden Town for putting their faith in me to carry out their wishes and to represent them, and I certainly am honoured and privileged to do so. We will not have a chance to have a lengthy debate like this again before the next election . . . Sorry, there will be one more opportunity so I will have a final say at that point.

But, Madam Speaker, I certainly at this time would like to wish a blessed, safe and joyful Christmas to all. I would like to wish all the best for these Cayman Islands and its people in 2009 and beyond. We are in challenging times, but [when the going gets tough the tough get going] And, I believe, that we have the right people to do the job. I believe that we have a Government that is working together, working hard for its people, loves its people, and I am proud to be a part of it.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I will take the luncheon suspension at this time. Proceedings will be suspended until 1.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 11.50 am

Proceedings resumed at 1.40 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continues on Government Motion No. 10/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister responsible for Communications, Works and Infrastructure.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to make my contribution to what is commonly referred to as the SPS, that is, the Strategic Policy Statement for 2009/10.

I know that much has been said about the Strategic Policy Statement that this Government laid in this honourable House on Wednesday, 10 December [2008]. Particularly, much has been said by the Opposition. To the contribution by the Opposition I say, oh how hollow the rhetoric!

Madam Speaker, there is one left in the Opposition to speak, and I trust that we will hear a little more substance than we got from the rest of them. I am sure we will, from my good friend, the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Madam Speaker, I also see where the UDP has recruited another political genius in the form of Mr. Ellio Solomon. But I must say, if that is the best they can do, there is something radically wrong with their recruitment process. If he is going to contribute to the SPS, I am yet to hear anything that is going to be beneficial to the country. My sources say that the reason they are in negotiations is because they are negotiating with him or he is negotiating with them for a ministerial position. It must be the Minister of Education's position they are looking for to put him in because he has had a lot to say about the Minister of Education and the Leader of Government Business. I guess the Leader of the Opposition will be out of that position.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, the people of this country need to be extremely careful who they trust, because when one starts out as an independent and then swings before the heat even starts to get turned up . . . now, that is someone you cannot trust. I wouldn't advise anyone to trust him as leader in this country . . . kind of presumptuous, but there we go.

Madam Speaker, I believe one of the difficulties that the Opposition is having with the SPS is that they did not expect this Government to come with a SPS that lays out what can only be viewed as fiscal responsibility on the part of the Government in these trying times. When this Government laid out that because of hard work, re-looking at our priorities and complying with principle of responsible financial management for the next three years . . . it is hard for the Opposition then to come and say anything positive.

I think that they were surprised; they did not expect this kind of response from Government, because when they were the administration this country grew by some 2 per cent; it was a mere 2 percent. But now when we are in difficult times we grew by 6.5 per cent in 2005; in 2006 we grew by 4.6 [per cent] and then it slowed to 1.9 per cent in 2007.

Now, Madam Speaker, comparing that with their mere 2 per cent in 2003 when conditions were favourable for growth, that speaks volumes, and I believe the country needs to make that comparison and consider which government is the better for them to have at the helm.

Times are hard. Nevertheless, this Government has restructured its priorities and we are within all requirements of the Public Management and Finance Law. Madam Speaker, requirements that are placed upon this Government (or any government for that matter) by law, we continue to hear the UDP and its supporters ridicule this Government for spending too much money. Now, let us for a minute talk about spending too much money: On the one hand they complain that we are spending too much money, and on the other hand, they complain that we are cutting projects that would stimulate the economy. Then they complain that we are doing nothing.

Now it is either fish or fowl. Unfortunately they have no alternatives. I would like to see their alternatives. There is nothing for this country to look at. There is nothing for this country to see or hear except rhetoric on the part of the Opposition. At the very least when the PPM Government were the Opposition, we came up with alternatives. I am yet to see any from the Opposition.

Madam Speaker, when this Government took the helm of this country we had just been through a hurricane. We had to recover from that. We were left with an infrastructure that had been neglected for many, many years. So much so, Madam Speaker, that we had gridlock in the mornings and evenings for our people to and from their homes and work. We set out on an infrastructural development programme which was second to none ever undertaken in this country. Today the proof is in the blacktops that are on the new roads. That is where the rubber meets the road.

Madam Speaker, to the chagrin of my colleagues, my supporters and others, I recommended to Cabinet that we go to West Bay and fix the roads down there first to alleviate some of the traffic. I have been ridiculed for that by the same Opposition. Madam Speaker, they have been in this honourable House and spent more time in Cabinet than I probably will ever do, but they did not even gazette the road into West Bay. I had to go and do that. And then they said I was building it for my friends. We built the road because it was in the interest of the country to move people.

Any country that cannot move its people from one place to the other in an efficient and effective manner has lost. We went along West Bay road and had to gazette the roads. The Leader of the Opposition has been here for 24 years and he did not intercede into fixing, at least . . . not fixing, but at the very least gazetting the corridors so that someone behind, like me, could go and build them. And, Madam Speaker, I am in the process of gazetting the one into West Bay, under section 26 of the Law. It may not be me who will build it, but someone will build it in the future. The road corridor will be reserved.

Madam Speaker, I thought politics was about improving the lot of the people that you purport to represent. I thought that was the essence of politics. But when the infrastructure in this country has been neglected for some 30 or 40 years, you are going to tell me that that is improving the lot of the people of this country, and they have the gall to come here and ridicule the work that we are doing? Madam Speaker, there is no way they are going to tell me . . .

It may have been negligence, and it probably was negligence on their part, because they did not have any vision. All of a sudden, now a Government comes along that has the vision and puts the system in place and we are ridiculed. But I understand that too because the human being, many are not willing allies of change. And it is difficult for many human beings to see into the future and what is needed for the next generation. Many think of this generation but not of the next.

We went then to the eastern end of the Island to commence the development of the east/west arterial. Besides relieving the traffic congestion we now have lands that were hitherto inaccessible. We now have where young Caymanians can own a little piece of this rock. But that is the PPM Government. I believe the Opposition is in such a flux that they don't know what to say. They have never seen anything done like this before.

Madam Speaker, I can assure this honourable House and this country that history will be kind to this Government. History will be kind because we will see in time the value of the work that we have done over the last three years.

Madam Speaker, there are some 200 and odd homes going down on the east/west arterial and more subdivisions being planned just on that three miles that we did.

Twenty years prior to my going in to the Ministry for Works (at that time) there were five miles of new roads built in this country. In three years I did some almost 40 lane miles of road in this country. Nevertheless, we are ridiculed that we have done nothing. And they get on the highest mountain and preach that.

Well, Madam Speaker, I would borrow one of the commercials that Obama had during his campaign where the commercial said, "If you want to see where McCain will take the country, just look into your rear-view mirror." And that is where the Opposition will take this country. All you need to do is to look into the rear-view mirror. They will take us back 30 years.

They will probably dig up the roads that I have already built because they were not done by them. But the Opposition has a record of stopping everything that the previous government has done. They have a record of doing that. I suspect that if this country elects the UDP Government in the coming election, those schools are going to be stopped, pronto. I suspect that, and I will live with that until proven different. But I know the people of this country are much wiser than that and that is precisely why they are out there—the poor management of this country during the time they were on this side.

Madam Speaker, they continue to ridicule the Government's ability to borrow. The Leader of the Opposition is going to the press ridiculing and making irresponsible statements about the Government not being able to borrow the money for their capital projects. If he or any of them out there were dedicated to their country they would not make such irresponsible statements—statements, such as, "The truth is that the Government cannot get anyone to lend them money."

Madam Speaker, we have just now received four bids on the monies that the Government has to borrow. But, you know, the Opposition and all their supporters love to talk about joining hands and moving our country forward. Where is the joining of hands in that?

This is absolute fabrication when there is no need for it. They should be ashamed of themselves going out and talking about the Government not being able to borrow money. But because they could say nothing about the SPS, they are now trying to spread all kinds of innuendo, rumour, fabrication. That is not right if this is the country that they love. They must be fair to the country they love. They must understand that they should not play with people's lives. They must stop playing with people's lives to get re-elected. Stop thinking about 20 May [2009] and let's start working to keep this country afloat in these tough global economic times.

I'm really looking forward to this campaign, Madam Speaker, if I am alive. I am looking forward to this campaign because there is one thing about me, I will stand on my tip toes for them all.

It is wrong! You must stop trying to manipulate the minds of people, people who are not initiated in this process. People have to stop it! They love to fabricate these stories for their own personal benefit.

Madam Speaker, here we are as a government making sure we cut our garment to suit the cloth that we have. Here we are stopping two schools [and] other major projects that I would love to see done. I also had to go in and stop the waste energy plant at this stage. That is something that if I had done nothing else in my tenure as a Minister I wanted to see that done. I made a commitment that I wanted to see it done. I would liked to have seen it completed during this four-year term, but I cannot because it is going to cost too much money. Nevertheless, we are spending too much money and we are reckless with the people's money. They need to look at the projects that we have done and the benefits that have been derived from those projects.

The Opposition continues to oppose the schools; they continue to ridicule the possibility of us increasing the educational lot of the people of this country. Madam Speaker, does anyone believe that that is the hallmark of a good Opposition? Cannot be! I understand politics and that you support the principle and oppose the method. But they oppose everything: principle, method, it does not matter. They are opposing and ridiculing everything.

I sat on that side of this honourable House and served my time in hell too. I have sat on that side and supported the principles under which they operated. There were things that I did not agree with the method of how they were doing them. But the Opposition opposes everything now, unless, of course, it means projects in their constituency that will get them re-elected—like the paving of the roads.

The one good thing about me is that it makes no difference to me whether it is Cayman Brac, Little Cayman, West Bay; I do not represent the people who sit on the opposite side of this honourable House. If it were left to me they would not be here, but the people of this country elected them, and I have to respect that. I have to respect that, therefore I have to listen to them too in my job as a Minister. They also represent a certain sector of this country and if I don't listen to them then I am disrespecting the people. That was their choice—it wasn't mine. But I have to respect the people of this country as a Minister, a human being and a Caymanian. If it were left to me they would not be here. I'm sure they would say the same about me, but that is how politics go.

Madam Speaker, they must try to stop paying lip service to this thing about joining hands and moving this country forward because they are not doing that. They are paying too much lip service to it and it bothers me; it really bothers me. There is no shame in reaching across the aisle. I have done that many times since being here. I've worked with them.

But when you deliberately manipulate the truth like some of them are doing on that side, it is wrong. It does not all go well with being representatives of the people of this country. You must stop looking for re-election and start thinking about the lives of the people we represent. That's what we must do! Look at representing them and making their lives a little better, particularly now when we have so many work permits in this country. Maybe we need to start cracking down on that.

Of course, Madam Speaker, we have a lot of work permits in this country, a number of people who are not getting jobs. That's what we need to come together with in order that our people can see the benefit of good representation. We need to start thinking about them. Yes, it will always be said that the government of the day is responsible. Well, it is my view that we are all responsible; we are all our brothers' and sisters' keepers. Let us work together in the interest of those brothers and sisters.

Madam Speaker, I want to turn to a subject that has given me some real concern over the last year or thereabout. It is that of this investigation that has been going on for over a year now and, in particular, how it is being conducted.

Now, I have said before that if you write the word "investigation" on a birthday cake I would probably eat it and would not know what I am eating because I have no expertise in that. But, certainly, I have enough common sense and an opinion. Like I said to His Excellency, while he has a constituency to satisfy, so do I. And I am not going to tell him how to satisfy his and he certainly has no room to tell me how to satisfy mine. I don't know what he is prepared to sacrifice to satisfy his, but I am prepared to sacrifice my freedom to satisfy mine.

From the outset of this investigation I have supported it. I want to make that abundantly clear. If there is corruption it needs to be weeded out. From where I am sitting or standing it is obvious that what I am seeing cannot amount to corruption. The most that I believe it can amount to is errors on the part of individuals, omissions, whatever you want to call them.

Now, this investigation was started on the basis of there being corruption in this country. I am yet, as I have said, to see any evidence of any corruption. Mind you, Madam Speaker, I may not have all of the evidence and I certainly don't expect that I will. But certainly, there is a need to really look objectively, comprehensively, at this investigation that continues to drain the coffers of this country. I suspect it is going to be over $5 million by the time this investigation is finished. I would not be surprised if it's closer to $10 [million].

Now, Madam Speaker, what is the old saying? "The cemeteries are filled with indispensable men." No person is indispensable. I have the utmost respect for Mr. Bridger, but from what I can read in Sir Peter Cresswell's judgment—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, is Sir Peter's judgment a public document?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Yes, Madam Speaker, it is. It is at the Courts and it is on the Website as well. This one came from the Website.

The Speaker: Okay, thank you.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, from what I can read from Sir Peter Cresswell's judgment, mistakes were made.

Now, I cannot say that these mistakes were deliberate. In his judgment, some of them were deliberate (if you can call them mistakes). But I call on the Governor to remove Mr. Bridger from the head of this investigation and leave the rest of the investigators there, because it is impossible for me to understand . . . And remember now, I am not a lawyer or anything like that. But I have read this judgment on a number of occasions.

One of the things that Sir Peter Cresswell said in his judgment was that . . . And, Madam Speaker, this was when Judge Henderson sued my Principal Secretary, Mr. Carson Ebanks, in which he said, "I am concerned about paragraph 25 of Mr. Bridger's first affidavit. He says, 'I did not have sufficient confidence in the judiciary of the Grand Court. I spoke to the Oversight Group about this and Donnie Ebanks, the Deputy Chief Secretary, suggested a list of three justices of the peace who would be suitable. There are . . . about 168 justices of the peace in the Cayman Islands.'"

Keeping in mind, Madam Speaker, I have the utmost respect for the gentleman, however, he—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, one minute please.

Can I ask Members to put away their telephones? There is one telephone that is beeping that is driving me mad. So, could we put them away until the debate is concluded?

Thank you.

Honourable Minister would you continue?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Keep in mind that I have the utmost respect for these people. They know the way to investigate, and I certainly don't want the investigation to be derailed. If there is evidence, let's get it out.

If there is someone in this country at the top, or wherever, who has been corrupt, let's get it out. But certainly, my position is that where in this country now, the chief investigating officer sent here from the home office . . . will he be able to operate if he has no confidence in the judiciary?

Madam Speaker, I recognise that this may be straying a little bit, but this is $10 million worth of Cayman money—of tax-payers' money—and all we can find is sufficient evidence to slap people on the wrist.

Is this some conspiracy by whomever it is to destroy my country? The time has come! Ten million dollars worth! I'll bet you it is going to be $10 million worth that we could have used more wisely in this SPS. This could have built two walls in Savannah Gully. As a Minister I must kowtow to everything that comes from the FCO?

Madam Speaker, the people of this country better understand that when they vote for us they are only sending us there to be puppets in Cabinet, because let's get it straight, since we are going to start—and, Madam Speaker, you know when I get hot around the collar I'll go.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I just want you to keep tying it in with the Motion that is being debated. That's all I am saying to you. Continue your debate please.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Let's get it straight now, Madam Speaker. As I was saying, we are but puppets.

The last Commissioner of Police . . . Do you know when the five Elected Members of Cabinet found that out? We saw it in the papers like everybody else did. That is the kind of respect—or lack thereof—that the FCO and their representatives have for us. Okay?

When we talk about getting more involved—the UDP loves to say that we want to take power from the Governor. We don't want to take power from the Governor, Madam Speaker, nor from the FCO because the people of this country say they want to stay under the United Kingdom. What we want is to share in the decision-making for this country. We are best to know what the people in East End, West Bay and Cayman Brac and Little Cayman need. We are best to know that. You cannot send people here from England. You know the White Paper said it was co-operation. Co? Co-op?

Madam Speaker, sometimes I wonder where I am when I sit in Cabinet. I really wonder that. I know there are two sitting on the Opposition who has been there before me and they too have experienced this! So they must stand up and support changes to the Constitution. They must! And they must support it because it is not about them and me; it is about the future of this country and whoever else is going to come in after us and the kind of reception they are going to get.

You cannot repose that kind of power in one man. Which American President said, "The buck stops here?" That's all it is, Madam Speaker, the buck stops right at the Governor, and he does as he pleases in my country. And then I have to rubberstamp millions and millions of dollars. That was going on for nine months and I didn't know anything about it! I may be a little barefoot boy from East End, but I'm not stupid! And people need to learn that I am not, and I am going to say what I have to say. I'm here representing the people of East End and the country in general. And what they are getting is not proper representation and I can't give advice on their behalf. We need to come together and stop this reckless behaviour of the FCO.

Madam Speaker, let's just look at another section of this thing as to the independent legal counsel: ". . . at the outset of their investigation, the investigators were provided with the services of Mr. A. Mon Desir, a barrister entitled to practice in the Cayman Islands. He appeared on the two applications made to the Chief Justice and is described in one as the 'Special Counsel to His Excellency, the Governor.'"

This is the part that the country must pay close attention to: "The Attorney General appears to have played no part in these applications."

Madam Speaker, why the country needs to pay close attention to that is [because] the Attorney General was sidelined—because they don't trust him either. How can you operate a country and not trust your Attorney General, who happens to be—whether we like him or not—the legal advisor to the Government?

"Principal legal advisor", the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac says. And he sits in his office and does not know when anything happens until he reads it in the papers.

No, Madam Speaker, that . . . no, no, no! And then I understand they are coming down to the Legislature to brief us? No, they are not briefing me. Madam Speaker, there comes a time in any man's life when he must be prepared to lay his own down. That is now my time!

Madam Speaker, all I am reading is what Sir Peter Cresswell's judgment was—a public document. He goes on to say, "Mr. Martin Polaine, a non-practising barrister in the UK, [non-practising you know] appears to have joined the investigation team. He is not called to the Bar of the Cayman Islands or admitted as a solicitor here."

Now, Madam Speaker, you are going to tell me we are going to bypass the Attorney General and then we are going to bring in somebody who is not licensed to practice? And we are paying him big money out of what could have been for the children of this country. And we must come down here to the legislature and approve it and then try to wiggle in between and put priorities on something else and drop something else out of what the people of this country need and England wants an investigation and we got to pay for it! Do you think that is fair, Madam Speaker? No, it is not fair.

Yes, I recognise that I am a Minister, you know. I recognise that I'm a lowly Minister; but first I also come from the people of East End and I must defend their right in this country. Sometimes I feel like I have been throttled, choked. I know the separation of powers allows me to defend the people of this country on this Floor. I don't have to go back to the Glass House, but they can't move me from here. I don't have to go back to the Glass House! But, [neither] the Governor nor the FCO will move me from here! This is my spot! This is the people of East End's chair; this is not theirs.

No!

Madam Speaker, sometimes I get so angry when I realise that my worth is naught—almost naught. We build roads, and I do this and I do that; but that is not all there is. And I don't want any power from the Governor. But, certainly, Madam Speaker, I and the other Ministers of Government, and those to come, should be able to share in the decision-making of this country.

The Leader of the Opposition and the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac know. She pulled out her hair when she was there too. And when you have one man who has that kind of control in the country it cannot . . . Not even the President of the United States—who is the leader of the free world—has that kind of control. Can't talk about him; you can't impeach him; you can't do anything! Nevertheless, my people must suffer and they must pay for their mistakes. They must pay for the mistakes visited upon them by people being sent here to do anything they want.

And I wonder. The question is still to be answered. Is this a deliberate attempt to discredit us? Is this payback from Ballantyne? I can ask the questions and tomorrow I can go back in Cabinet, if I'm welcomed, and sit there and do my job too. I've had it up to my eyes, Madam Speaker. I wonder, I really honestly wonder where we are going from here.

Nevertheless, the Governor goes on the radio and says that Mr. Bridger did not act in bad faith. I can't say he acted in bad faith either. But mistakes happen. Now the gentleman should be relieved of his responsibility, leave the rest to the people in place and find someone else to continue the investigation. We have called on the Governor more than once to do so, but of course he has the authority to say 'no' and to appoint the commissioners and we find out about it when it is on the news.

But you see, Madam Speaker, for years no one has talked about this. I'm glad he is here because it is bringing it all to the fore now. One day, though, you know, Madam Speaker, we will have to endure it all because that is what our status is. But I promise you, I ga be ya longer than him, because I ain't leaving. I am not leaving this country—but they will. Thank God, they will.

Madam Speaker, I think I have said my piece on that kind of expenditure that we have had to cut something in this year's expenditures, because it is about the distribution of resources in this country and it must be equal. There must be some equality in the distribution of resources amongst the people of this country. But when we have to cut into it in such large sums to satisfy others and their women fancy—because it is not much else that it can be called. It has to be a 'women fancy.' They are looking to see what is next to be brought . . .

And, Madam Speaker, you know I said earlier that there comes a time in a man's life when he must be prepared to give up his life. It matters not to me. Here I am. I am going to say what I have to say. I will always be here in this country; this is my country. I have no other passport. This is it. This is it! What do we say? This is alpha and omega; the beginning and the end. For me it is. I don't know who else calls it that, but for me it is. And I am going to voice my position whenever, not however (because I have to have some kind of respect), but whenever I see fit.

Madam Speaker, let me now go on to some of the other areas that I believe are necessary for us to address. We know that Paloma sort of did us a disservice in the Sister Islands. This Government is working very hard to try and ease the plight of the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. I said in here during this meeting that the constraints we are under to get shipping in and out of Cayman Brac is causing us some hardships. Now, that is so true. I have a $600,000 piece of equipment to get to Cayman Brac and I don't know when it is going to get there. It has arrived and it is sitting here but when it is going to get there I don't know. But you know those are the difficulties that we are having with responding in this post hurricane recovery period to the Cayman Brac people.

Madam Speaker, that is not to say that things are not going, [but] they could have gone a little faster. I wish that we did have things going a little faster in order to relieve the people in Cayman Brac sooner from their stressful situation that they have going on there. Hopefully, we will have it back on track by the end of February.

Madam Speaker, I see where the Opposition is bringing a motion to this honourable House—and I guess when the time comes we will debate that amendment to a motion that is going to be on the Floor for the civil servants. But we are doing everything possible for the people of Cayman Brac. They deserve no less. However, I must tell you Madam Speaker, that it is difficult.

This Government is also doing everything within its power to ensure that the Cayman Islands remain at the forefront in the financial world. The discussion with the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and England, it is highly important that we continue to do that.

Now, it is ironic that when the UDP Administration was in power and I sat across in the Opposition and supported every bill they brought here on those initiatives. Sometimes they would come in the middle of the night and we stayed here late to do it, because we understood the need to be on the cutting edge in the global financial industry in order not to lose one of the pillars of our economy. However, now the roles are reversed, and the Leader of the Opposition likes to get on the radio on his talk show with his surrogate and talk about how the Government is doing nothing.

Madam Speaker, it could not be further from the truth, but I guess the best thing in this world is to know, eh?

We never once questioned when they brought their initiatives here and their amendments to the laws. As a matter of fact, we tried suggesting to those amendments, the amendments that would be in the best interest of this country. But today he continues to beat on us for his own political benefit and you would think that he was the only one who knew. But when he is put to the test he cannot come up with any answers.

These are the things we need to work together on and it is unfortunate he is not here today but certainly I would like to think that he will hear and re-think his position.

Madam Speaker, before I close there is another thing that I would like to address; one that I have been bashed about for quite some time. There is a gentleman who loves to get on the talk show and talk about how I own shares in Caribbean Utilities Company Ltd. (CUC). I think it is time for him to stop that because it appears that he thinks it is only he who can talk to his kids and say that he is honest. Well, maybe he needs to understand that there are other people who are honest too.

I like the way the Opposition has their spokesperson out in the front too. And I know this is the silly season so they are going to say anything, but they do know that I have the capacity to respond. And they do know that I will respond.

Now, Madam Speaker, they like to say that we did not break a good deal for the people of this country. Well, let me explain to them how and what we have done compared with what they were in line to do.

Now, Madam Speaker, my good friend, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, likes to say that we would not consider taking duties off fuel and that only after they had suggested it, that we did. Under their proposal in 2004 they were going to increase the duties on fuel by 10 cents.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Everybody got what I said?

Under their heads of agreement they were going . . . and, Madam Speaker, one minute now. The chairman is the Third Elected Member for West Bay, same man out there so.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: The guru! Yeah!

He has all the answers to the electrification industry in this country. I wonder for whom! I wonder for whom! I wonder for whom!

He needs to answer that. They were going to add 10 cents on to the 50 [cents]. They were going to have it 60 cents per gallon. Can you imagine what we would have had now? We cut it by 20 cents! Now, that equates to $5.9 million per year we gave back to the consumers.

They were also going to increase the duties on non-fuel items in April of 2009 under their heads of agreement, Madam Speaker. We are retaining it at its current level. That is, engines and parts and the likes. So, that is two areas that they were going to kill the consumers—those same people there with the Third Elected Member for West Bay, being the chairman.

Now, CUC's rate of return was 15 per cent, guaranteed. We now have a defined range of 9 to 11 with 10 being the average and it should stay around 10. Madam Speaker, the key is that they were putting the range of 10 to 24 per cent. Them, not me! They were applying a range of 10 to 24 per cent. I have a range of 9 to 11. We all got that?

The rates as they stand now are 10.15 cents per kilowatt hour. Theirs was going to be three tiered ranging from 14.9 to 15.9 [cents]. Now you tell me, Madam Speaker, who cut the best deal for the people of this country? You tell me who is capable of negotiating. Tell them to come up and dispute this. They want to dispute? Tell them to dispute this. These are facts.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, is this a convenient time for me to take a 15 minute suspension?

Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 2.59 pm

Proceedings resumed at 3.42 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Communications, Works and Infrastructure continuing his debate. Honourable Minister you have forty-three minutes.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, that is quite a lot of time. I guess I might as well leave some time for the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay so he can start his debate.

Madam Speaker, when we took the afternoon break I was discussing the negotiations between CUC and the Cayman Islands Government, particularly comparing the negotiations that took place in 2004 between the UDP Government and CUC, versus those that took place between the PPM Government and CUC and the results of those negotiations.

Now, as I outlined, the country would have been much worse off under the UDP heads of agreement. The UDP tried making the people of this country believe that they had negotiated such a good deal for them when in fact they had not. And because we had not responded to all of their accusations about us they continued on their campaign to try and discredit me about my having worked for CUC for a long period of time.

But I can say to this country that I stood tall and in their defense when it was necessary for me to do so. The objective was not to shut down CUC; it was for both parties to benefit. That is, to keep CUC going and for the consumers to benefit.

I cannot be responsible for the licence that was negotiated and signed prior to my time. That was another government; another government with a Minister that was part of the UDP too. But I know that the negotiating team that we put together in the form of Olivaire Watler, Sammy Jackson, Charlie Farrington, Mr. Winston Hay, out of Jamaica, and the gentleman out of the United States. We can be justly proud of those people. We reduced the cost of electricity by over 30 per cent.

Now the fuel is a different matter. What the UDP did not tell the people of this country was that they too had negotiated for the fuel to be a pass through, which was the same thing we did. However, they did not tell them further that part of the fuel was included in rates prior to these negotiations, which we removed, that had a cost on and a rate increase on it every time there was a rate increase. All that work we did. But you see when you don't understand you will say anything, and that is precisely what happened to the Third Elected Member for West Bay.

And he is constantly spurring off his mouth in public about the bidding process as well. And I am not going to go far into that, Madam Speaker, because you know it is an ongoing process. And as for the Leader of the Opposition, he would not know a generator if he saw one. He wouldn't know an MCC if he saw one.

I know people are hurting, Madam Speaker, but the reason electricity costs so much is because of the fuel. If one would compare their electricity cost prior to January 2008, they will see that there is more than a 30 per cent drop in cost of electricity—not the fuel. But because fuel went up to over almost a $150 per barrel it was a 100 per cent over what it was when we did the negotiations. Now the fuel cost is down to some $40 per barrel and people will start to see the benefits of those negotiations. Albeit that there is a delay of two months in the fuel cost.

Madam Speaker, I don't think they understood what they were doing, to tell you the truth. When they would have given a return on equity in a range of 10 to 24 per cent . . . Let me tell you something, Madam Speaker, this country would have been reeling under hardships as opposed to the defined range of 9 to 11 per cent.

You know maybe I have kept quiet for too long, because unlike the UDP I don't need pats on my back. I do what I have to do; I get on with the job. This is a job as far as I am concerned, and I have to do that in the best interest of my employers and I have plenty of those. But they love to get out there and ridicule for their own benefit. I didn't buy any land, nor did any of my friends buy any land next to CUC in anticipation of competition in the electrification industry. I didn't! I don't know who else did, but it is rumoured that many did. And when you use your position in politics to gain an advantage you must understand there are consequences.

We see the Governor of Illinois facing an impeachment, as we speak, for the same of type of behaviour. Madam Speaker, I will be able to walk away from this honourable House with my head high and be able to look every Caymanian, every resident in this country squarely in the eye and say I did not take anything from you. And that is how I will leave; that is how I came, and will leave whenever that time comes.

I came in here to make a contribution for love of country and when they and their talk show host accuse me of owning big shares in CUC . . . Let me explain the shares that I have into CUC.

When I had completed ten years of service with CUC I got 100 shares. When I completed 15 I got 150. I put them in my children's names; my two boys. I was entitled to them for long service to that company. Madam Speaker, I didn't buy one share in CUC. Not one share did I buy in CUC! Now, Madam Speaker, maybe, just maybe, they will tell the country how much they bought, Members of the Opposition. Just maybe they will explain that to the country. I put the 150 shares that were given to me for long service in CUC into a drip plan, dividends, a reinvestment plan for my two boys.

The last time I saw it, it was something like 1,000 shares in my two children's names. They are worth $6 a share or something like that. You think I can be corrupted for $6,000! Maybe they can tell this country whether they can be corrupted for $100,000. Mine? Madam Speaker, I told them my day was going to come you know. I told them my day was going to come!

It is unfortunate they are not here but I trust they will listen to the rebroadcast.

I am worse off as a result of coming in here. But I have greater self-satisfaction because I believe I am doing a service to my country and people. And those who aspire to get here must understand that I have been; they are yet to get here. You think negotiating with the UDP for a ministerial seat means you're here? You have to go to the people of this country. You have to demonstrate your honesty and integrity; you have to demonstrate that you want to serve, not serve yourself either, serve those whom you represent.

I will walk away with my head high and will do nothing in this life, much less this office, that I cannot explain to my two children; because if I do it then they feel they are entitled to do it too and this is not how a country is built. There is no longevity in that for any country. We must show leadership and it is not only about the SPS, it is about how we conduct ourselves in office. But they love to point their finger until they understand that those they are pointing their fingers at have a little knowledge of their behaviour.

Madam Speaker, it is like what the Third Elected Member for George Town said, I really didn't know I was a thief until I came here. I never took anything in my life from anybody. All of a sudden I become an elected representative and I am a thief. Everybody accuses you of stealing, and, most importantly, it is those who steal most that accuse you!

Madam Speaker, I trust that now clears the air with this CUC thing, because I have no fear. I can tell the world what I have done. But they will get up here or on the radio and talk about the fact that I worked for CUC is why the country did not get a good deal in the negotiations. I was not even part of it except that as a Minister I was consulted. I was not around the table. I never spent one day around the table until we had stalemates. They had one of their Members as chairman!

And they talk about transparency in the UDP and curse us about how we have no transparency. What do you call that when you bring people from the outside all the way from Jamaica to negotiate on the country's behalf? When you pick some of the best minds in this country? And you know what, Madam Speaker, most of them did it for free. Okay? That's how much those people trust me.

So, they have to stop it because when my name is being dragged through the mud and my children and family have to face it, I have a problem. And you would think that the last persons who would accuse are Members from within this Chamber. And when they hear their supporters doing it they should be man or woman enough to stop them. But no; it makes them look good.

It makes them look good? Well, I will respond to all of them. They need to get a life! They really, really need to get a life. Everybody's a thief but them. I never took anything in my life, but my children must be faced with that from their peers and I must say nothing about it. I must go on as if nothing happened.

No, Madam Speaker. The same fighting spirit they have over there, I have here too. They think this is some kind of joke when you trample on one's integrity and good name. They shouldn't be doing that. Madam Speaker, I never accused anyone of it but when I am accused I am going to respond. I am going to respond! And to think that their heads of agreement were much, much worse and the people of this country would have seen probably twice the amount of electricity bills as they are seeing now.

Madam Speaker, like I said, I hope that resolves the matter. But I guess it won't. They must not take kindness for weakness because there is no weakness here. But it bothers me and really hurts. I wonder sometimes who is it they are talking about and I pinch myself to see if it is really me they are talking about. And I know there is a certain degree of it that one must endure if you are to be a politician. I've never ran away from it, but they must remember I am going to defend myself. I have no problems with anyone in this country questioning my abilities, but when you encroach on my integrity I am going to deal with you.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Every one of them out there. Yeah.

Madam Speaker, earlier I spoke briefly on the Constitution, but I really did not go real deep into it so I would just like to spend a few minutes on the negotiations that are currently—or we hope or should have been underway.

It is unfortunate that we, from opposing sides, cannot come together with this Constitution. Each and every Member of this honourable House knows the difficulties the Constitution is presenting with the operation and good governance (that is the present Constitution). We all do. Thirty-odd years and yes we hear our people saying, 'Well, it has worked for 30 years why can't it work for longer?' Madam Speaker, the Opposition, particularly the Leader of the Opposition, is relying on that to derail the constitutional talks.

Madam Speaker, we know what is wrong with the Constitution. Our people who don't have the time to sit down and discuss it, or live it each day, will never understand (unless they come here) how difficult it is in practical terms to govern under the current Constitution. And nobody wants to go against the wishes of the people of this country, which is that they want to stay as an Overseas Territory. Nobody wants to go against the wishes, but every time we make a proposal, in particular the Leader of the Opposition jumps up on his bandwagon and starts talking about us wanting to take away power from the Governor. He knows better. He knows better! And he has done everything.

Mind you, Madam Speaker, you see those other young men that are over there with him, they know better. They know better but they don't say anything because he loves to take the lead in it. And then he goes and discloses the draft working document as if we had something to hide. There was nothing to hide in it, but we gave the people an undertaking that before it is exposed or disseminated to the general public we would use that as a working document. All the areas that were not agreed upon are not even finished. But he, in his infinite wisdom, thinks that is a good chance to be seen as the saviour of the country.

Saviour of the country in what? You think we can trust him as leader of this country in the free world? You think anybody out there trusts him? Nobody trusts him precisely for that. He has no regard for law and order or anyone else.

That is why, when I compare the negotiations we had with CUC . . . if I had been bombastic like he was I would have given up on the talks a long time too! There are three stalemates with CUC, but I did not give up. I did not come out and say, No. We are going to do this and we are going to do it that way. But this is what he does, knowing quite well that this country needs—but more importantly deserves—a modernized constitution.

Madam Speaker, the proposals are not taking anything away from the people of this country. All it is doing is ensuring that the people's representatives are given more decision-making authority in their country, and that they are advised on what England is planning on doing with their country. No different from what he proposed in 2003. But all of a sudden now the shoe is on the other foot and they want to use this as a means of getting re-elected. Madam Speaker, it is wrong. They are playing with people's lives. And the Second Elected Member for West Bay, who is a very good friend of mine, he knows!

Madam Speaker, it is going to cost us in this same SPS for those same constitutional talks, because we have to realise that it is now derailed by them. Every minute they wanted a postponement. It is now almost to the point that it is totally derailed by the Opposition, because they threatened not to do this and to do that, and then if you don't include them it becomes a national issue. And the Second Elected Member for West Bay can whine so much.

[laughter]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: But, Madam Speaker, I must say he doesn't whine as much as the Leader of the Opposition, but he has perfected it.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, can we tie all of this debate into this Motion that is before the House?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Well, Madam Speaker, what I was saying was that the SPS requires us to find money to put the new Constitution in place.

Look at what we did. They were the ones who proposed. Look at how we compromised at the last talk. They proposed that we try to ensure that those who would become 18 [years of age] on the day of election or prior thereto, but after the registration had been closed, that they should not be disenfranchised. It was the Leader of the Opposition and the Second Elected Member for West Bay who proposed it! And we immediately went along with it because we saw the value in ensuring that these people are able to vote and are capable of making decisions at that age. And now we are waiting on an Order in Council to ensure that happens.

But nothing we do is good enough for the Leader of the Opposition and the Second Elected Member for West Bay, who likes to bring it out of the side of his mouth. But he knows better.

Madam Speaker, the Opposition ought to be ashamed. They know this last exercise instituted by the FCO—I don't know who else, probably Gordon Brown too—is going to cost this country $5 million to $10 million (those are my best estimates) which could have been included in this for the children in West Bay and the Sister Islands as well because that is where the Opposition is made up. So, they should be ashamed of themselves to try and derail it when it is costing us this amount of money.

Because the Constitution is the way it is they do not have to consult with us. But you know I am going to live long enough to see that same Second Elected Member for West Bay in Cabinet, even if it is with me. I am going to live long enough! And then he is going to understand and get exactly one of Burleigh Berry's things from Bodden Town, "a shock of surpri-sation."

You hear what I tell you, Madam Speaker? He is yelling and saying it is unparliamentary. I am going to move on to another thing now, Madam Speaker.

I am going to leave him alone. He knows I love him to death. He knows that. But I still have to deal with him according to the law. He is on the wrong side of the fence and I recall—this is just a little joke—when Mr. Pierson was here as a Minister he told me one day he would invite me on this side, but he would have to wash me in the blood of the Lamb first. And that is my cousin.

I invited him to the other side, but I knew I would have to kill a lot of lamb to bathe him after being tainted with where he was. So, we will wash him in the blood of the Lamb too.

Madam Speaker, just let me go on to one other thing before we close and then I can do my conclusion.

The Speaker: I think you have approximately eight minutes, Honourable Minister.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

One of the areas that I have really paid close attention to during my tenure was that of the infrastructure which supports family. That is, parks, cemeteries and beaches. We brought together a number of entity units and it is working extremely well, far beyond my expectations.

George Town is like a breath of fresh air. It is still not completed but we sweep the streets, we . . . and no one notices it really or very few people do. We have planters in the middle of George Town and parallel parking. I guess no one will notice it if—that is the way it should have been. We have spent monies on equipment which sweeps the beaches that the UDP said we should not; monies on equipment to take care of the parks where families can enjoy themselves.

Madam Speaker, if there is one legacy I would like to leave behind, it is that families can now go to the public beaches in comfort and go to parks and have the opportunity for their kids to enjoy themselves.

As we speak, we are installing parks in George Town, Breakers and East End. They are very simple little things; just one little slide and a couple of swings and that is all the kids want. But in the absence of those little things kids will find, as is said, "The devil finds work for idle hands". Madam Speaker, I believe that the RPCU (Recreation, Parks and Cemeteries Unit) needs to be congratulated for a job well done. Mr. Jonathan Jackson is the manager of that unit.

The cemeteries are being kept much better than they were. People can feel comfortable now going to visit the graves of their loved ones.

The ramps and jetties for fishermen are much better. From time I can remember, the people of George Town were crying for a ramp in George Town Barcadere, and not one of those big-time ministers who came from George Town would put a ramp in George Town Barcadere for those people. That launching ramp is now there.

The police have better access to North Sound as well. That is what this Government has been doing, Madam Speaker. We are in the process of putting one in Bodden Town because the closest ones are in Spotts and Frank Sound. In Bodden Town, we will put a ramp. The fact that we recently had to go to Frank Sound to launch boats in response to the incident that occurred last Wednesday [shows] that we need to do it.

Bodden Town has a number of fishermen whom we need to cater to. So, we will be putting a jetty there and a ramp. And then, it will also serve as a quick access for search and rescue between Frank Sound, Bodden Town and below as well. Madam Speaker, I am very proud of that little unit and I trust that the rest of the country will get on board. I know people appreciate it because they continue to call me and talk about it letting me know how they feel about the job they are doing.

So, in conclusion, Madam Speaker, let me say that while the UDP has ridiculed the SPS, the SPS has provided for them what they understand as good fiscal management of the country's funds. I know the Second Elected Member for West Bay, being the accountant he is, was a little shocked to find out that when we brought it here that it was as complete and as robust as it is. I fully endorse and support the SPS. I know he does too, but he needs to say something.

Madam Speaker, these are trying times for this country. We had to make some major cuts in what we hoped would have been the upcoming year projects. We had to make some deep cuts in those projects but, hopefully, those projects will come back on line as soon as the economy does better.

We have kept the faith, we are being responsible with the people's funds and we are getting the job done. I know they like to say that we should not be building the government building and all the schools but, like I said earlier, now they are asking why we are cutting them. Well, we are cutting them because at this time in the economy we cannot support going forward with them right now.

Madam Speaker, I'm sure that at the end of the day the UDP and their supporters will see the benefit of the SPS. They have no argument other than empty political rhetoric and fluff which we know is the hallmark of certain Members on that side. But they do a good job at it.

Madam Speaker, let me just say Merry Christmas to everybody. Even if I get another chance to speak I still believe that I should say it now. Merry Christmas to all the Members, and to say to the country, we are still better than the alternative. There is no maybe or perhaps. All you need to do is to look into the rearview mirror and you will see five people in that. That is how far back they will take us.

Madam Speaker, I thank you and I look forward to the coming year when the campaign starts and we will see who the declared Ministers are, not the candidates. But as Members of Parliament the PPM is still better than the candidates who will be coming forward.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move the adjournment of this honourable Legislative Assembly until Wednesday at 10 am.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10 am on Wednesday. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

This honourable House now stands adjourned.

At 4.31 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Wednesday, 17 December 2008.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
WEDNESDAY
17 DECEMBER 2008
10.19 AM
Seventh Sitting

[Not recorded]

PRAYERS

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgin: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say the Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings resumed at 10.21 am

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the First Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman who was unable to get a flight back to Grand Cayman.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

Cayman Islands National Assessment of Living Conditions (2006/2007) – Volume 1 – Main Report
– Final Report September 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay upon the Table of this honourable House the Report on The Cayman Islands National Assessment of Living Conditions (2006/2007).

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to table this Report. When this was commissioned a little over a year ago, many people said it would never see the light of day and that it would be one of those reports that would gather dust in the Glass House. But I had the commitment of my Cabinet colleagues and the support of the backbench of the People's Progressive Movement that this would see the light of day.

I rise to speak about a significant milestone achieved in Cayman's social development, namely, the completion of the Final Report of the National Assessment of Living Conditions (later referred to as NALC).

The broad goal of the National Assessment of Living Conditions was to assess a range of socio-economic conditions in all three Islands in order to identify policies, strategies and projects that will reduce poverty and improve the quality of life across all societal strata. It was about charting our future together as its slogan states. It was and still is about making a better life for future generations. The need to meet this objective is becoming more important each moment, and we should not let the cooling winds of the global economy tear down our wishes for a true, stable and prosperous future for Cayman.

Madam Speaker, the National Assessment of Living Conditions is a unique study for the Cayman Islands for three reasons. First, because of our residents' support and participation it is the first time in history that extensive living conditions related data has been gathered in all three Islands.

Second, it provides insight into the socio-economic interrelationships within our communities and families, as well as on an individual level with a particular focus on vulnerable groups like women and children. It informs us in a very real way what people are experiencing, what their needs are and how to meet those needs.

Third, the process that we undertook for this study was a countrywide learning exercise. I can assure you that, based on the training and experience we have had with NALC, Cayman is now better able to conduct similar studies in the future, from organising the study, to data gathering, to analysis. So it has provided a firm foundation for further, more focused and detailed, studies. The Final Report provides policy analysts across government with vital unbiased insight into the socio-economic fabric of our Islands.

Madam Speaker, I would now like to address some of the findings of the NALC study. As its central topic, this study addresses the question: What is poverty in the Cayman Islands? I just pause here briefly to interject that a number of queries have been raised about the yardstick used. Madam Speaker, the yardstick used in this Report is the very same one used by 18 other territories in the Caribbean. As you know, there is a different standard of living here. But I understand the reason this was done was for us to compare with other territories.

What we found is that there are many different definitions. The survey suggests that in the Cayman Islands there are low levels of what is called "absolute poverty", which is an international technical benchmark (which I alluded to earlier on) by which the severity of living conditions may be measured. It also indicates that this extent of poverty is found in pockets.

Another definition is used for persons who do not meet this technical definition of absolute poverty, but who instead may be said to live in "relative poverty" or "hidden poverty". This means that their standard of living is lower than the average.

The document noted that there is a clear sense of deprivation for persons who are in either absolute or relative poverty. One of our pressing goals must be to investigate this matter more closely in a way that effectively addresses their needs and challenges. The National Assessment of Living Conditions data also uncovered that problems associated with poverty, whatever definition of poverty we use, are not determined by nationality.

The statistics paint a complicated picture that challenges stereotypes. One way of looking at poverty is by dividing the Caymanian population into three. If we look at the poorest one-third of our residents, the study indicates that 60 per cent is non-Caymanian. Significantly, this also means that 40 per cent—or the poorest one-third—is Caymanian.

Caymanians dominate all remaining income groups, with the exception of the very top. There, the ratio of non-Caymanians to Caymanians approaches that of the general population. In other words, it is nearly even. The survey also observes that native born Caymanians account for roughly half of Caymanian status holders.

Another angle of poverty levels is presented via consumption patterns where it is visible that the majority of the poorest income is spent on basic necessities and utilities. This time we look at poverty in terms of fifths. The richest one-fifth accounts for nearly half of all consumption. Yet the poorest one-fifth spends some 20 per cent of their income on food, while the top fifth spends less than 10 per cent.

NALC also found that the biggest expenditure across groups was on housing and utilities at nearly 40 per cent. This was followed by transportation at less than 10 per cent.

Sadly, Cayman Brac has tripled the rate of poverty, yet is more expensive. And most of us here in this Parliament know the reason why.

Madam Speaker, although the detailed analysis of the National Assessment of Living Conditions Final Report is still being done, the Ministry of Health and Human Services has already initiated several initiatives. I will briefly outline the initiatives for health concerns, gender issues and social and family life.

In health concerns, NALC informs us that 93.5 per cent of persons were either very satisfied or satisfied with health services. Not so positive are indicators, that around quarter of the population (slightly, more women than men) is estimated to suffer from chronic lifestyle-related diseases, primarily high blood pressure and diabetes. While the reporting of these illnesses is higher among those with more income, this was linked to the fact that people with more money visit the doctor more often.

The Ministry continues to combat chronic diseases by raising the populations' awareness using methods such as public courses, health messages, and health fairs. However, as a new major step we are working to move the Public Health Department from the Health Services Authority and place it directly under my Ministry. This will give the department more autonomy in raising public awareness and also in monitoring primary health services in district clinics closer to people's homes.

In a related health issue, according to the National Assessment of Living Conditions, health insurance coverage is estimated at almost 80 per cent, with a drop to 69.8 per cent in the lowest quintile. More men are covered than women. The Ministry is working to increase public awareness about the need for health insurance coverage among both employees and employers. Also, Madam Speaker, the Health Insurance Commission has increased its efforts to enforce mandatory health insurance coverage.

Turning to gender issues: One of the current harsh realities highlighted by NALC is the fact that the living conditions of the poorest women are worse than those of the poorest men.

The Speaker: What else is new?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Women are more likely to be unemployed, paid less and uninsured, yet they head half of the poor households.

Men have their own issues, mainly to do with how they are socialised to believe that men should behave. As one possible solution, Madam Speaker, my Ministry is updating the gender policy to address some of these issues. Also, the Ministry has organised a special advisory committee whose recommendations on eliminating gender violence were just yesterday considered by Cabinet at its meeting.

Highlighting the comprehensiveness of the Report, NALC then shows how gender issues and poverty impact social and family life as the poor face economic, social, and psychological pressures that often cause family ruptures. Tension between parents in the home has a particular influence on the behaviour of young people who grow up in this environment. In order to give a more focused approach on social and family issues, the Ministry has established an empowerment and community development agency and is restructuring the Department of Children and Family Services.

Madam Speaker, there are so many insights contained in the National Assessment of Living Conditions Report that the public would like to know. With this in mind, allow me to provide just three more of its conclusions.

If absolute poverty exists in extremely low levels, then the social deprivations associated with relative poverty (and, again, relative poverty is also called hidden poverty) contribute to the stigmatisation of and discrimination against certain groups. Relative poverty fosters a sense of marginalisation.

Second, it is worth acknowledging that the disabled and elderly also report these feelings. And, lastly, it should come as no surprise that poverty is fuelling the drug culture in the Cayman Islands. This pressing issue is being addressed with the help of a new anti-drug strategy developed by the National Drug Council. Other efforts include Recovery Month, initiated by the Department of Counselling Services and the new Residential Treatment Facility for women at Caribbean Haven.

Madam Speaker, in closing, I emphasise that we cannot let the people of our Islands fall further into socio-economic difficulties. Every one of us as representatives had dealings with some of our people who need this help. The NALC enables us to make economically efficient focused interventions so that we can emerge as a nation with more coherent and sustainable development.

I would like to take this opportunity to invite all my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly, as well as Government, the private sector, community agencies and individuals, to take the National Assessment of Living Conditions Report on board, review its findings and come up with proposals for policies, programmes and other interventions that benefit the Cayman Islands.

As far as my Ministry, we are committed to analysing the National Assessment of Living Conditions findings as a way of bringing sharper focus to our vision, namely, optimum wellbeing for all. And by that word "all" I mean all residents of the Cayman Islands, every nationality and every man, women, boy and girl.

I give my gratitude for carrying out this comprehensive Report to the main donor agency, the Caribbean Development Bank. I also thank the National Assessment Team, driven by my Chief Officer, Ms. Diane Montoya, and especially all the residents of the Cayman Islands for their input and their continued support.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Water Authority of the Cayman Islands Annual Report 2001
(Deferred)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, unavoidably, the Minister responsible for [tabling] both of the Water Authority Reports is on his way, but not here yet. So I would ask if it is possible, for us to simply defer the [tabling] of these reports until he gets here. And, Madam Speaker, I also know that you confirmed to him that he could read a statement this morning. So, if those three items could be deferred until his arrival, I would ask if that's possible.

The Speaker: The question is that the [tabling] of the Water Authority of the Cayman Islands Annual Reports for 2001 and 2002 be deferred to a later point in this sitting. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Annual Reports on the Water Authority of the Cayman Islands Annual Reports for 2001 and 2002 be deferred until latter in this sitting.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE
MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET
(Deferred)

The Speaker: I have been notified by the Honourable Minister responsible for Communications, Works and Infrastructure that he would like to make a very urgent statement. Upon his arrival we will suspend the relevant Standing Order to allow him to make a statement.

BILLS

Suspension of Standing Order 46 (1) and (2)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to move the suspension of Standing Order 46(1) and (2) to enable the Bill on the Order Paper to be read a first time.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 46(1) and (2) be suspended. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 46 (1) and (2) suspended to allow the Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2008 to be read a first time.

FIRST READING

Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008

The Clerk: The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008.

The Speaker: The Bill is deemed to have been read a first time and is set down for second reading.

Suspension of Standing Order 46(4)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to move the suspension of Standing Order 46(4) so that the Bill can be read a second time.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 46(4) be suspended. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 46 (4) suspended to allow the Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2008 to be read a second time.

SECOND READING

Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008

The Clerk: The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to move the second reading of a Bill that is shortly entitled, The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2008, enhances the ability of the Cayman Islands to position itself successfully in relation to international developments in the tax cooperation arena. It is a part of the overall strategy which the Government has developed based on careful analysis over the past year. We have already established that our financial services sector is not built around tax evasion, nor does it rely on the absence of transparency.

Madam Speaker, the Bill before the House establishes principally in the proposed new Part IV (and that is done by clause 12)—

The Speaker: Honourable Third Official Member, may I interrupt you until the Table has been given a copy of this Bill so that I know what you are reading? I have no copy.

[pause]

The Speaker: Honourable Third Official Member, you may continue now. Thank you.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Bill establishes principally in the proposed new Part IV (and that is done by clause 12 of the Bill) a parallel mechanism for cooperation in tax matters and that would be in addition to bilateral agreements.

The other changes sought to the Tax Information Authority Law are consequential to the new Part IV. The parallel mechanism is necessarily designed to reflect OECD technical standards for transparency and provision of information with which the Cayman Islands already complies, and which, in fact, already operates in respect of our 2001 Tax Information Agreement with the United States.

Clause 12 of the Bill inserts new sections (sections 8A to 8G) in the principal Law. To deal with the key provisions within that clause, section 8A enables an information request to be made by specified jurisdictions concerning specified tax matters.

Section 8C sets out the requirements for a request for information.

Section 8D prescribes the circumstances in which a request for information can be refused.

Section 8E contains confidentiality provisions.

Madam Speaker, I would just like to note that the proposed OECD green list of jurisdictions deemed cooperative in tax matters is simply one aspect of international developments potentially affecting our vitally important financial services sector.

This legislation is required to enhance the Cayman Islands' ability to deal efficiently and effectively with tax cooperation matters and I therefore commend the Bill now before the House for passage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I just simply thank all honourable Members for their silent support.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled the Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2008, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed. The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2008, given a second reading.

The Speaker: The House will now go into Committee.

House in Committee at 10.46 am

COMMITTEE ON BILL

The Chairman: Please be seated.

The House is now in Committee.

With the leave of the House, may I assume that, as usual, we should authorise the Honourable Second Official Member to correct minor errors and such the like in these Bills?

Would the Clerk please state the Bill and read the clauses?

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 10/08-09—Approval of the Strategic Policy Statement for the 2009/10 Financial Year

(continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: Debate continuing on Government Motion No.10/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to make my contribution to the Strategic Policy Statement for the year 2009/10, and on the speech of the Leader of Government Business and the Financial Secretary's response.

Madam Speaker, my comments will be not as brief as the Third Elected Member for West Bay, but certainly brief enough.

I would like to congratulate the Leader of Government Business and the Financial Secretary for once again putting together a very accomplished policy statement looking at the goals that we had from the time this Government came into place.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to make a few remarks on the whole question of "Staying the Course in Challenging Times".

I was a witness to Hurricane Ivan. I was not only a witness, but my property, personal items and memories of my childhood—everything—was destroyed. If we would reflect on the damages that we had four years ago when Hurricane Ivan came upon us . . . I am sure, Madam Speaker, that it has gone out of our memory. We cannot even bring to fore what we went through because it was so horrific. The damages cost I think about $3 billion. That's a lot of money, Madam Speaker. That's a lot of damage. So how come we do not remember? Well, that was done!

How come the Opposition stands in this House and [gets] on the radio telling people in this country—almost in a rebellious way, Madam Speaker—that nothing was done in the four years? That is sad for people that are waiting to take over a Government.

Madam Speaker, $3 billion . . . I do not even know [how many] zeroes we have to put there. I mean, Madam Speaker, it is just unimaginable how that money can spread around the Cayman Islands. It possibly covered the whole Cayman Islands. But that is a lot of money.

For the Leader of the Opposition to get up . . . and who during our budget debate did not vote for the budget, but can come here and talk about senseless SPS, and for the Third Elected Member of West Bay, who I have a lot of regard and haloes for, and I think if he would just come on this side that—

[inaudible interjection]

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: The Second Elected, sorry.

If he would just come on this side, life would be different.

But, Madam Speaker, especially the Second Elected Member [for West Bay], who is a very good accountant, knows what $3 billion is. And to stand up there and get on the radio for the last four years, and try to have the self-fulfilling prophecy, the whole thing of subliminal, to tell the people that nothing was done in the last four years (nearly four years, come May).

Madam Speaker, my delight is to ride through your country of North Side and through the eastern district. When I drive through there I am the happiest person on earth. To compare it when I drove through there, or when I could get through there four years ago to now, you ask the question, Well, what was the PPM doing?

According to the people on the Opposition and those who are waiting to take our shoes, we never did anything. But, Madam Speaker, [if] $3 billion just flew away into thin air we should see the Cayman Islands looking just as bad, looking just like it did four years ago. But what do we see? We see a reconstructed country. A country as if nothing had happened, as if roofs were not off people's homes, as if buildings were not destroyed, as if the lives of people had not stopped.

And yet, they get on the talk show, write letters in the paper and they come to this hallowed Hall and say nothing has been done and they laugh at the SPS. As a matter of fact, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman went up and down whether this goal was first, second or third. And that was all the contribution that she could have made, Madam Speaker, and whether or not Cayman Brac should have been sixth or seventh, and that they are in no special order.

But it is aptly said in the speech of the Leader of Government Business, "Staying the Course in Challenging Times". And that is what we have had. We have had that from [Hurricanes] Ivan, Gustav and Paloma. And we have had other things, and now we have the global economic crisis. But we are staying the course, Madam Speaker.

When the Israelites were being led out of Egypt by Moses, a great leader . . . in slavery they had meat, onions, leeks, cucumbers, they had all the niceties. And when Moses took them into the wilderness or wherever it was, they rebelled on him. They rebelled and they did not even remember the slavery. All they remembered was that they had cucumbers, leeks, and all of these things.

Madam Speaker, I want to just pause here a moment to make a comment regarding . . . [pause] Madam Speaker, God wanted to destroy the children of Israel ten times, and Moses stopped him. Moses said, "Forgive them." All they did was murmur. They were ungrateful. They only wanted the meat from Egypt. They did not want any manna that came down, which was angel food.

But in 1 Samuel, Madam Speaker, I would just like to make a point on this, it says, "Does the Lord delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as much as in obeying the voice of the Lord? To obey is better than sacrifice, and to heed is better than the fat of the rams. For rebellion is like the sin of divination and arrogance like the evil of idolatry."

For rebellion, Madam Speaker, is like the sin of divination. And according to my readings on divination, it is compared to witchcraft. And what is rebellion when you go against the government? When there is ingratitude and that sort of thing. And, Madam Speaker, I am juxtaposing this with what happened to us in Ivan as to where we are now. We are in a great position. We are all doing well. We have issues that are global, but we all have. Those of us who have had, we have our homes. They are even more beautiful. Cayman is even more beautiful. It is everything. Yet, Madam Speaker, we murmur. We complain. And it is all induced by the Opposition who says that nothing was done!

Madam Speaker, I cannot stand here as a sensible person, perhaps not as learned in mathematics and finance as the Second Elected Member, but I know that in our time in the Cayman Islands, three point something billion dollars were spent to make this place what it is today. Unless we came like Pallas Athena, from our father's forehead, we are the Government and [we] are real people. So, all the changes in the reconstruction happened within the last three and a half years. So, how is it that the Opposition can tell the people who listen to the radio . . . And, Madam Speaker, we are leaders of the nation, and they believe us.

They get out there and say nothing was done. If you say it long enough, Madam Speaker, they will believe it. But we must go back, and I challenge (if I may so do) the Leader of Government Business to go over for the sake of the Opposition to remind them what was done in the last three and a half years to make this country so beautiful, so well put together as people when they come and see it cannot believe . . . They cannot! People who have visited here three and four times since Ivan cannot believe that this country is where it is now.

Madam Speaker, it is so because we have good leaders under the leadership of the Leader of Government Business. And we did not get any external help. It is only now, Madam Speaker, according to my information that the EU (European Union) and all the other U's and the P's or the Q's or whatever they are, are trying to give us some money. So, where did the Cayman Islands Government and private sector get that money to make the change that we have?

Madam Speaker, I think this has to be repeated over, and over, and over, and over. It is a sin—the sin of rebellion is worse than divination! As leaders of our country we cannot cause our people to be insurrectionists. We cannot! And we must not! And we cannot get on any radio show and tell our people that nothing was done in the last three and a half years in this country because that is totally, totally wrong for political leaders. It is what I call political divisiveness and polarisation. They are just, just wrong, Madam Speaker.

This is what you do when the jaws of victory are being snatched from you. You get desperate and lose your humanness. You try to change people's minds and make the people of the Cayman Islands think that they are simple minded people. But they are not. I would like for us (that is, the Leader of Government Business and, if so be, the Financial Secretary) to repeat what has happened over the last three and a half years in the reconstruction. I have not even gone on to the rest of the stuff!

Madam Speaker, I even discovered that the Second Elected Member for West Bay could be related to me. But I note he is sleeping through all of this. He is not pretending; he is sleeping. But I know that six months is not far, and I know what he will do in the next six months. And I am sorry, Madam Speaker, that perhaps constitutionally we may not be able to have the Minister of Finance, because he would be a perfect fit—in the PPM Government, that is!

Madam Speaker, I do not want to be so disruptive to make people think that I do not like the Second Elected Member for West Bay. I love him dearly. But, Madam Speaker, he sat there and he trounced us and tried to convince the little person who listens to the radio for information, that the PPM Government did not do anything in the last three and a half years. But I want to repeat myself by saying that the damages from Ivan (and I have not even touched on Gustav and Paloma) was over three point something billion dollars. It must have taken money or something and good judgment and wise people to put this country together.

Madam Speaker, in the midst of challenging times we have to look at the development of human capital. I was in education for a long time and I know in my own heart of hearts that I did well. But I also knew that I was not the political leader. I was an implementer.

When I bought ten computers (I was then the education officer responsible for the primary schools in the Cayman Islands) I was told that I was empire building! The first ten computers that were put in the primary schools were bought by me—my own initiative. Nobody told me to do that. But our children must be computer savvy. That was in the 1980s, Madam Speaker. I had just come back from Pace University doing my Masters in Educational Administration. I was exposed to greater things. So I decided that we have to go on into the technological world and we could only afford ten. That's all we could afford.

As I said, I was told that I was empire building by the people in Government at that time. So you know how difficult it was for me as a progressive thinker to move.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Education came in thinking of building human capital. He did a conference of educational consensus and brought all the teachers and stakeholders and everybody together to say, Look, we must have a transformation in this country. Our people must own the best jobs. Our people must own the best of everything. But how do you get that? You get that through good education. So what we have to do, Madam Speaker, is to change the mindset of teachers, parents, children, the gardener, the bus driver, we have to change everybody. Hence, the transformation began.

But it will take some time. We do not see the results of educational changes. We will not see it now. Perhaps we will not see it in this generation. But I can tell you, Madam Speaker, if both of us live long enough we will see the difference in the next generation. That is the complaint the private sector has on us. They say, You are not educated, you cannot hold these jobs, you are not exposed and you are not experienced. So, what do we do? We almost have to start from the beginning. We have to change the course. We have to have our people equipped to take the positions, including in here.

When we compare the results we are not comparing one child against the next child, we must compare the children of the Cayman Islands globally. And hence, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Education is changing the primary schools.

Never in my lifetime, never, when I was going to school, did anyone try to change the course of primary education from the slavery type of educational system that we imparted to the primary school children. Never! And I stand here as one of the educators.

The Honourable Minister went through this system. Do you know why he achieved? He achieved because he had good parents. He also achieved because he learns well. But we have children who may have parents but do not have the interest in ensuring that they are well educated. And some of them do not learn like we learned. So, what he has also done is to expose the system for multiple intelligence where any child can learn best how he learns, whether through sight, hearing, callisthenics, or through other methods. That is what the whole question of the change in the primary education is going to be.

Now, Madam Speaker, it takes the physical plant to make a difference. And it takes the human to make a difference. I think it is fair to say he started first with the human aspect of it. He gave the teachers exposure. He sent them all over the world to this place and that place. I have gone on airplanes and saw teachers and asked them where they are going. They say they are going to this country because they have to go and look at the IBB and that sort of thing.

It also takes physical plant. I remember my mother and other mothers prancing up and down in this Cayman Islands because when we went to the old green school down at the bottom, that was good enough they said. And they had to march to make a difference so they could get one little school built up in the pond. It was pure, pure, unadulterated pond, and they put it there for the children. And they said that was all they could give them. But this Government, Madam Speaker, through the Honourable Minister, ensures that we are going to have a 21st century building for 21st century learning and teaching. So, we started what I called an ambitious programme for educational transformation in terms of the physical plant. We are changing the high schools.

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Minister went there. That is, from the 1970s or 1964 I think it was. But we also wanted to change the physical plant of primary. And George Town Primary should have been changed. But there are all kinds of naysayers out there about, Boy, you stopped the school and you should have started it. And they there are the other naysayers who say we are spending too much money and we should not be building these schools, but we can build nice big buildings for turtles to swim. Of course, we eat them and that sort of thing.

Madam Speaker, the physical plant is important. I am sorry but it is with deep feeling that we are not going to get the building right now. But we have to be sensible people too. We have just gone through Ivan. We have paved the way and built up our country. We have gone through Gustav. We did something for that. Paloma has taken a lot of money out of it. So we can understand that we have to pull back and prioritise. Nevertheless, I know the economy is going to get better and I know that it is one of the first things the Minister is going to do.

I, for one, the Third Elected Member for George Town, alias Lucille Seymour, will tell you that I believe in the Minister of Education. I believe that whenever he can find that money, whenever it appears that we can do that, we will do that. But I would like to ask a question today, to us and the public. Where does the money come from?

You know, I heard a lady with a foreign accent yesterday saying how we must work for our money (that is, us inside here must work for our money, ya nuh). Madam Speaker, let me tell you something. I have done some cushy things in my life. This is the worst one! But I came short of, and perhaps the First Official Member can remind you. I have come short a couple hundred dollars of making $7,000. So I did not come into this business here for money. I was a retired person. I retired having spent 33.3 years in the Cayman Islands Government. Moved from a teacher to a permanent secretary and retired with a lump sum of $146,000 and $1,800-something as pension. Me. Yes ma'am.

But we have people who are contesting the elections who have got up into systems that never spent the time I did, never contributed what I contributed that have retired with half a million. That's the people's money, Madam Speaker! And in our time too! In the time of the PPM! And you say we have not done anything? At least we retired somebody with half a million.

I retired eleven years ago with $146,000 and some change, and $1,800-something pension per month. Me, Madam Speaker! And we come here and are rubbed every day, rubbed—rub it in that we are working. We are getting money so we must work. I work, Madam Speaker. I work day in, day out. I mean this is the hardest I have worked in my lifetime. Real, real, real work Madam Speaker. But I do not mind it. I like to do this. It is not well paid. Of course it is not well paid. They could never pay us for what we do.

But you know, many, many years in BC, Plato said, you must pay your lawmakers so that they are not susceptible to a bribe. Perhaps that's why they call us corrupted because the pay is so small; but not that we do any of that sort of thing, Madam Speaker.

I digressed a bit but I want to go back to the human capital in terms of the knowledge base. George Town Primary will be built. Beulah Smith will be built. But we have to be a little patient because our money comes in at the whims of the same people that sometimes we want to move.

How do the Cayman Islands get money? It gets its money through indirect taxation. Those of us who go away, when we return and declare we pay our taxes of 20 per cent. We also pay indirectly through the food. But a lot of the foodstuff that people eat is not taxed. You know that, Madam Speaker.

We also have to get money from the fees of those who work in law firms and other companies. We have to have those persons so that we can get money. We get money through the work permit system, unfortunately, Madam Speaker. But that is how we get the money. So it is only a small amount; a rich country with a poor government. Is that not ironical, Madam Speaker?

Other countries that we watch every day [on] CNN and all those people; they are taxed. They can get anything. They can ask for the moon. They are taxed 38 per cent. That is a lot of money coming out of your pocket, Madam Speaker. And the only thing we ask them to pay directly is the garbage tax. Well, you know what happens to that, Madam Speaker. What else? We ask them to contribute to their own pension, their retirement. And we ask them to contribute for their health. And that is causing issues too.

Madam Speaker, we have to be reasonable and say we do not have a money-making machine here. We do not make our own money. Therefore, we have to in all of what has happened in putting Cayman back from Ivan, Gustav, Paloma . . . we have done well. And I congratulate not just the Government, but I also congratulate the private sector and the people who had the resolve to get their places back, to make it a better place.

I am about to close, but I would like to say that sometimes my heart gets heavy, particularly when I listen to somebody who works three hours a day—and I work, you can say I take night and make day—who can try and direct the course of this country by blasphemy, rebelliousness, insurrection. Yes, Madam Speaker! It almost borders that because if you listen carefully sometimes they are almost giving instructions as to how to be rebellious. And, Madam Speaker, my Book says, "The sin of rebelliousness is worse than the sin of divination" which means witchcraft too.

Madam Speaker, at this time, in this place, at this hour, I want to make a plea to my people, genuinely, honestly and under strength of my mother, that we must take this Yule Tide season, reflect on what God has given us and where God has brought us, and how He has spoken to us. He spoke to the Israelites ten times. Ten times he wanted to wipe them out! We have to make sure that we continue to work for the Caymanian dream. But how do we work for that Caymanian dream to own a house, to drive a car, to educate our children, to build a great family, to have a good nation to be civic minded? We need to reflect on our lives since Ivan.

We need to get down on our knees (those of us who can) and thank God that we are here. And I am not trying to be any kind of religious person at this moment, Madam Speaker, I speak from what I was born with—a great heart and what I try to be, a good person. I ask my people in this Season that while we celebrate the other side of Christ's life (that is the whole issue of eating and drinking and festiveness) we also celebrate that it was a sacrifice that was made. God gave us his Son as a Sacrifice. We should make a sacrifice to ensure that our country (and I am speaking to each person in the Cayman Islands today, Madam Speaker, including this House) . . . to search our souls, to reflect on how we are so lucky to be here at this time in this place.

And when the New Year comes we [should] go to our neighbours and be neighbourly. Love thy neighbour as thyself. Where are all those principles that we learned? Every day we are either killing the Jamaicans, Filipinos or Caymanians, or politicians, especially if they are in Government.

Madam Speaker, I am asking my people that, come January, let us hold on, and whether we have different ideologies; that is fine. But let us be thankful for what we have! We have plenty, Madam Speaker. We have a lot to be thankful for. We have good people, minimal crime, lovely country, nice place, nobody moves. We do not have a rush of people leaving this country. People come here, Madam Speaker. But I want my people to be the people that they were before, the warmth, the kindness, the good spirit, the short tongue, and to get off of that radio and help themselves!

Which talk show host helps you? I hear them calling and saying, Listen, I don't know what happened here; you go see to that. The next day what happens? Nothing happens, Madam Speaker. Nothing happens!

Do you mean to say that the people of the Cayman Islands are so deficient in knowledge of their government departments and what they do that they have to call the talk show host to find out who is responsible for this? Something is wrong with us. Or is it because we have too much money that we can call—I think you have to pay for it, right? I believe so—and stay five and ten minutes on a cell phone talking about where you must go, how you must go, or where is it. Our people have changed. We have changed. We are not taking the responsibility that we used to take when we were younger people, when we were poor and hungry.

Madam Speaker, I do sports. And we were taught that the best sports persons are those who are hungry. When you are hungry you go out for the kill (not literally). You go out to win. You are competitive and you do the best. Perhaps . . .

Madam Speaker, I was born a happy child. There are no moments in my life when I am unhappy; not even when I had cancer. I believe it was because I was a happy person that I was able to pull through for the length of time that I have today. I am asking my people to reflect and compare themselves now to where they were in Ivan (I am not even going before Ivan) and say is it better? Is it worse? I know the global crises is causing a few people not to have jobs, but a lot of people who say they do not have a job never had a job three years ago either.

I spoke to a person yesterday who has not worked in four years who came now to ask me for a job. I asked the person what are your talents? "Well, I really don't have any." Now, that is not good enough, Madam Speaker. You have to have something. All of us have talents. God made us with talents. We just have to search hard and we will find out. And they are not necessarily working for somebody else. All our talents that God gave us can make us entrepreneurs. Every talent! Your father was a carpenter. Who taught him? He was born with that gift. All of us, if we just search hard enough over the complaints, the murmuring the whimpering and the naysaying, we will find our talents.

Madam Speaker, I would like, with your permission, to read from today's Cayman New News, written by Charissa Van Roekel, "Is government to babysit Caymanians?"

"Dear Sir, Regarding the comment in an article entitled 'Governing by Foresight Rather Than Hindsight' December 10 2008: and now we must try to learn to fight for our rights as workers. The truth is that the majority of Caymanians are now dependent on wages."

Madam Speaker, entrepreneurship.

"Come again? Is government to baby sit Caymanians and pamper them with access to salaried jobs? It is not government's responsibility to assure Caymanians to have salaried jobs. It is the employee's responsibility to qualify him or herself and then seek out and maintain the job that is rightly suited to him or her. That is called free market economy (aka Capitalism). Oh, that's right; I guess Marxists would not have advocated the freedom of creativity and economic choice."

"Please don't assume that I am saying government has no responsibility to halt false employment advertising and other such practices. What I am saying is that the individual has responsibility for him or herself before the government has responsibility to the individual. Without the employee gravitating towards and utilising fully employment opportunities presented to him or her, you have a workforce sitting around waiting on a handout. That's called Socialism."

Madam Speaker, that is aptly put.

Yesterday I was speaking to a very high powered person whom I thought had good sense and has influenced me in many ways, who was trying to convince me that it is Government that must find jobs, and find this and that for our people. I want people to be better than me, much more educated than I am, and wealthy. But when I grew up, I do not think I heard the word “probation” until when Miss Hylton came in. I heard the word “social service” when we had a study by a gentleman from England. But I believe that Government—this Government and other Governments have done it—must make a proviso that when people fall there must be a cushion and a hand to pull them up so they can stand and on their own walk again. I believe that. I sincerely believe that.

Madam Speaker, I know and have discussed this with the social services—a lot of people have fallen. Government has helped them to walk and they decide to fall on their own, not because of a situation like now where there is a global situation and people lose jobs and in some countries you have unemployment insurance and things like that; no, Madam Speaker.

But in all of this we, as good, hard working, thinking Caymanians, must have ambition. That is what people used to say we had, Madam Speaker. We had ambition. Hard working people! But I want to remind you, Madam Speaker, that when I was growing up as a young child all of the men, barring those who could not see or were deaf—and even those had a skill, you know. They may not have had the education that we have today, but every one of them who wasn't a shoemaker was a carpenter or a barber or a tailor . . . My brothers, too, can all do something with their hands. And they all survived in my day.

Madam Speaker, perhaps what we need to do in this whole building of human capital, we perhaps may not just rely on academia. And I know that the Minister has that, but we might deliberately teach persons to have a hobby that they can do with their hands. Hobbies make you wealthy; they make you entrepreneurial.

I would close by saying that this is my fourth year. I have had a wonderful time, tough, tough, tough. But I have had an education. I have unearthed a lot of issues that were hidden over the years. And this whole thing of need and what people talk of poverty is accumulative. . . This did not just happen in four years. How can you get poor in four years unless you were in the stock market? This has been a systematic thing.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Health and Human Services just tabled the Report on the National Assessment of Living Conditions. I am glad he did it because it has unearthed . . . You see, Madam Speaker, in all of this wealth, in all of this richness, in all of this dream accomplished, we still have conditions that are brought about by lack of education. A lack of education, Madam Speaker! That is what it is.

We are not blaming those persons, but this Government, though it only has five months [left] and will be in the next Government come May, is going to ensure that everybody will be lifted by the rising tide. The rising tide lifts all boats. But we need from within us to have ambition, to have goals, to want to reach to be something. Not only to be something but to own something. To own a house, a car, to have educated children, a great family, to be civic minded, and to love our neighbour.

Madam Speaker, come January 1st the people of the Cayman Islands, foreign and citizen, [should] kneel down and pray to God to change us to be the beautiful, sweet, warm, healthy, Christian people that we purport to be.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I have listened to the many contributions and read through the Strategic Policy Statement delivered to this honourable House on 10 December of this year by the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

This Strategic Policy Statement paints a rosy picture for the Cayman Islands and the Caymanian people. However, Madam Speaker, the truth is that the average man on the street is saying that he has never had such a difficult time trying to make ends meet. There are a lot of people who are struggling to live the Caymanian dream at this time. I feel it is irresponsible for the Leader of Government Business not to address the fundamental issues that are affecting our people. Madam Speaker, with unemployment on the increase and work permits at a record high, it is very obvious that the “Caymanian first” policy is not being enforced.

One of the points in the SPS that I would like to comment on is on page 36. With your permission, Madam Speaker, I would like to read from the Policy Statement. It is the first paragraph on page 36, and it reads: “A month into the recovery and reconstruction on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, Government is satisfied—”

The Speaker: Honourable Fourth Elected Member, are you reading from the Strategic Policy Statement or the speech by the Honourable Leader of Government Business supporting the Strategic Policy Statement?

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Yes, Ma'am. I am reading from . . . yes Ma'am.

The Speaker: Okay.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: I would like to continue with that.

“A month into the recovery and reconstruction on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, Government is satisfied that good progress has been made. Admittedly, things may not happen as fast as everyone would like, but things are happening nevertheless. Compared with a month ago, the situation today is much improved and life is gradually returning to normal. In the same way that this Government got Grand Cayman back on its feet after the devastation of Hurricane Ivan, we will do the same for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.” [Speech supporting the 2009-2010 Strategic Policy Statement delivered by the Honourable Leader of Government Business on 10 December 2008.]

Madam Speaker, I would just like to remind the Leader of Government Business that the Opposition [was] the Government at that time and that in the eight months after Hurricane Ivan [they] did a lot to help the recovery efforts of the Island and the people. This Government cannot take the credit for that. It was the United Democratic Party that spearheaded most of the recovery efforts, Madam Speaker.

In my opinion, the United Democratic Party did more in the eight and a half months after the devastation of Ivan than the PPM Administration has done in three and a half years. And, Madam Speaker, that is my honest opinion. So, I hope that the good people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will get better results after Hurricane Paloma than the people of Grand Cayman got after Hurricane Ivan from the PPM.

Madam Speaker, just this week I was asked to assist a gentleman who was promised by the PPM Government to have his roof repaired. He is still waiting. He said they came and did an evaluation on it and promised that they would come back and fix it, but he still has not seen or heard anything else.

Madam Speaker, I would like to address another very important issue that was mentioned in the SPS. When the Minister of Education says that the Leader of the Opposition has not done anything for education in his 24 years in office, I think these comments are not only wrong, but were clearly made to mislead the public once again. The Leader of the Opposition has never been a Minister of Education, but has always been a supporter and proponent for the improvement of the country's educational system.

During the 24 years the Leader of the Opposition was a Member of this House he has supported every educational initiative that has been brought to this honourable House, including the following: the building of the Community College, building and improvement of various schools across the three islands, implementation of numerous educational programmes.

During the United Democratic Party's short three and a half years, they enhanced the programmes of the Community College and upgraded the College to a University College, built the Prospect Primary School, improved the Bonaventure to include a girl's programme, provided over 1,000 local and overseas scholarships for the education of Caymanian children, Madam Speaker, to educate our young Caymanians.

Madam Speaker, we are not saying that more buildings are not necessary to facilitate the education of our youth, what we are saying is, do we need to make schools as monuments? We are saying we must be prudent and look at what the country can afford. We have supported all the initiatives that the current Minister of Education has brought to this honourable House. But we cannot support the cavalier way in which the Minister has set about in the building of these new schools. As the Minister of Education has said in the past, only divine intervention will stop him. The fact is, Madam Speaker, that the country cannot afford these high expenditures at this time.

With a global slowdown in economies, this country will definitely be affected, and is being affected, and the country cannot afford this kind of expenditure at this time. In the past we have asked the Minister to reconsider his strategy but he has totally ignored not only us, Madam Speaker, but also the people of these Islands. He has shown no regard for the country's finances. In my opinion, any good leader would know that we must always seek to do what is right for our people and country. We should never be so blinded by our own ego that we forget about the total wellbeing of our people.

Madam Speaker, a prime example of why buildings do not create the best educational systems is the George Town Primary School. As the Minister said, the George Town Primary School is the best primary school in these Islands, yet it has the worst infrastructure. So, Madam Speaker, this proves what we have been saying all along—that we do not need to spend $60 million in order to create a better educational system. We do not need monuments. What we need are better paid teachers, a better curriculum that is relevant, better overall educational strategy. I would suggest that the Minister of Education take a long hard look at the country's educational system instead of simply focusing on building these monuments and criticising previous administrations.

In connection with the development of these schools, Madam Speaker, I think it is important that the Government provide some answers to the country so that we can be better informed. I would specifically like the Minister to provide some answers to these questions:

Has the Government signed an agreement for the financing of these schools? If so, which bank? If not, where is the money coming from to pay for these schools that are now being constructed?

What is the interest rate?

Were there formal contracts for the Beulah Smith and George Town Primary schools?

Is there a cost for stopping the construction of these two schools?

Madam Speaker, I am very concerned with the liabilities associated with the building of these two schools. And, as such, it is imperative that the Minister immediately tell the country where he is getting the money to pay for the Clifton Hunter High School and the John Gray High School.

While the Minister of Education speaks about good governance and the tendering process of the previous administration, he should first examine all the contracts that have been signed under his administration. Madam Speaker, it is my opinion that there are numerous questions on the manner in which his administration managed the tendering process.

Madam Speaker, I can assure you that during our administration contracts were signed with local contractors for the buildings which ensured that the money stayed on the Island. It would be interesting to see how much of the profits derived from the building of these schools actually stay on Island.

The Minister of Education loves to make sound bytes, and has compared the building of schools with the redevelopment of the Turtle Farm. As a former member of the Turtle Farm Board, Madam Speaker, I can assure that a complete business plan was reviewed and approved by the Board. More importantly, the entire redevelopment was approved by local and international tourism stakeholders. Additionally, this entire project was self-financed with the most attractive terms, and not with government money. The only time that government's money was used was since the PPM took office. They did so, and will continue to spend the money because they did not implement the complete plan, which included the West Bay Jetty.

The Jetty was the main revenue enhancer for the Turtle Farm and was approved by the Florida Caribbean Cruise Association (FCCA) that provided the US$8 million of funding for the development of the Jetty.

Our plan for the Jetty was also to ease traffic on the West Bay Road by having a scheduled ferry service to and from the George Town dock.

The Florida Caribbean Cruise Association was a key stakeholder of the Turtle Farm redevelopment project. As a result of the forward thinking of Mr. Bush, as Leader of Government and Minister of Tourism, we negotiated an agreement with the Florida Caribbean Cruise Association to provide a guaranteed amount of passengers to the Turtle Farm attraction through the West Bay Jetty. This would have made the Turtle Farm very successful, but the PPM Government decided to stop the Jetty project and, as a result, has jeopardised the financial viability of the Turtle Farm.

Madam Speaker, it is really unfortunate that the PPM took such drastic and unnecessary decisions based solely on political expediency and not sound financial thinking of what is best for the country.

The Minister of Education has made a big push for the next election; however, we feel sure, based on their performance, that our chances are as good as theirs. But we will leave that to the smart Caymanian people to do whatever they think is right.

Under the PPM Administration, unemployment of Caymanians has increased every year since they took office, while at the same time the number of work permits has increased. This is clear evidence that the PPM has really not done anything to assist Caymanians in getting employment.

A reduction of 200,000 plus passengers from one cruise line: Madam Speaker, we need to start hearing answers on what Government is going to do to improve our tourism product. Realising that our competitors are not waiting, they are aggressively seeking to improve their tourism product.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, is this a convenient time to take the luncheon break, or are you going to be finished shortly?

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Three more minutes.

The Speaker: Okay, go ahead.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Madam Speaker, while I have just addressed some of the major shortcomings of the SPS, I am extremely concerned about the direction that the country is headed in. Our people are suffering and are concerned about their jobs, paying their bills, and in general, their future. It is up to us as elected leaders to do what is right for our people and the country. However, the SPS that was presented to this honourable House sadly does not address how the PPM is going to fix the fundamental problems that are now facing our people and country.

Now is the time, Madam Speaker, for true leadership. We must work together to solve the problems collectively. And that is the reason why the Opposition has always tried to take a prudent view when dealing with Government expenditure. We must always plan for a rainy day.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 1.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.04 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.21 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. Debate continuing on Government Motion No. 10/08-09—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, the honourable Minister for Communications and Works is now present and according to your ruling this morning we would continue our debate after he has been allowed to lay his reports and do his statement, with your permission, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, I need a suspension [of Standing Order 14(4)] to suspend the debate on Government Motion No. 10/08-09 and to resume it after the Honourable Minister has made his statement.

Suspension of Standing Order 14(4)

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Therefore, accordingly I would wish to suspend the relevant Standing Order on the debate on the Strategic Policy Statement to allow the Honourable Minister to lay his two reports and make his statement, and to thereafter continue the debate.

The Speaker: The question is that debate on Government Motion No. 10/08-09 be suspended in order to allow the Honourable Minister responsible for Communication, Works and Infrastructure to lay two reports and to make a statement. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 14(4) suspended to re-arrange the Order of Business on the Order Paper.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS AND OF REPORTS

Water Authority of the Cayman Islands Annual Report 2001

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Communication, Works and Infrastructure.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House The Water Authority of the Cayman Islands Annual Report 2001.

The Speaker: So ordered.
Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, just to say that these are reports which were prior to my time and I am just getting them . . . they are just becoming available and we are laying them on the Table.

Water Authority of the Cayman Islands 2002 Annual Report

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Communication, Works and Infrastructure.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House The Water Authority of the Cayman Islands 2002 Annual Report.

The Speaker: So ordered.
Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just to note that those two reports were held up by the annual reports. Audits were completed on time in those respective years, but it was just the annual reports held up. Thank you.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received notice of a statement from the Honourable Minister for Communications, Works and Infrastructure.

Department of Environmental Health Tub Grinder in Cayman Brac

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is with great sadness and profound regret that I must report to this honourable House that this morning I had to issue a directive to shut down the cleanup operations being conducted by my Ministry and specifically managed by the Department of Environmental Health in Cayman Brac. This decision was taken as a result of our tub grinder being burned during the night.

At 6.30 am, when the staff arrived to open the compound for work, they were confronted with the horrible spectacle of the grinder being on fire. The police and firemen have reported that their preliminary investigations are underway to determine the cause. Madam Speaker, if this is another senseless act of vandalism it would mark the second in as many weeks on Cayman Brac and demonstrate complete disregard and utter disrespect for the wellbeing of the people of Cayman Brac and the recovery efforts.

Nevertheless, it regrettably leaves the Government with no other alternative than to remove the staff from that environment and secure the remainder of the equipment being used in the cleanup operation. Madam Speaker, because we cannot guarantee the safety of our staff, I have therefore instructed to have them removed without delay. I have also instructed that 24 hour security be put in place to ensure that further damage is not inflicted on the remaining equipment. This arrangement will remain in place until the New Year when a decision is taken on how we proceed.

The irony of the situation is that, in our untiring efforts to effectively cleanup as quickly as humanly possible, we have purchased with utmost dispatch another grinder in the region of some $600,000 to mulch construction waste, including metal, which we had intended to ship to Cayman Brac today, 17 December. Now, in all good conscience, I cannot follow through. I cannot take the risk.

While the police are conducting their investigation, and I am sure they will be thoroughly and professionally carried out, all cleanup operations have been suspended. I deeply regret this, Madam Speaker, but until we can be assured that this incident is not the result of a wanton act of destruction, we believe this is the most prudent course of action.

Madam Speaker, I will keep this House and Members informed of any future developments.

CONTINUATION OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Government Motion No. 10/08-09

(Continuation of debate)

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, for reasons which I believe to be very valid, I first of all would like to spend a few moments repeating the strategic priorities of this Government, which I outlined exactly a week ago. I say now, as I said then Madam Speaker, that the Government's priorities in the coming fiscal year are as follows:

- To protect the economy from the full impact of the current global downturn.
- To stimulate business activity in order to keep our people working and prevent the economy from slipping into decline.
- To continue much needed capital development projects to the extent that we can afford to.
- To maintain a sound fiscal position by ensuring the usual balance is achieved between spending and revenue.
- To rebuild Cayman Brac and Little Cayman with an emphasis on providing stronger infrastructure that can stand up better to any future hurricanes or natural disasters.
- To do everything that is required to promote and protect the interests of our tourism industry.
- To do everything that is required to promote and protect the interests of our vital financial services industry, with particular attention to the various international challenges and the need to further enhance the attractiveness of Cayman as a jurisdiction specializing in the provision of international financial services.

- To make the Cayman Islands more business friendly so that more investors will want to come and do business here and support further growth and development of our economy.
- To continue providing support to vulnerable social groups, including our elderly, so that they enjoy a reasonable standard of living.

Madam Speaker, it is a list comprising nine priorities for the Government in the upcoming fiscal year. When I spoke to those priorities, I did not say at any point in time, and I am not saying now, that they are in any specific order. The fact of the matter is that the Queen's English does not allow me to call all nine of them out at one time. That is physically impossible. I did not say number 1, number 2, number 3, number 4, in that order. And, Madam Speaker, I heard from various quarters about which one was number 6 and which was number 7. Then I also heard which one was the first.

Madam Speaker, this Government has the various ministries, portfolios and agencies where all nine of these priorities are being dealt with and will continue to be dealt with concurrently. So, it is ludicrous at least, if not worse, for anyone to expect anybody with good sense not to understand that these are our priorities. And for anyone, because of their particular interest, to try to say which one should be 1st as compared to the 8th one, the 7th one, or the 6th one, that is downright mischievous.

So, I have once again outlined the Government's priorities and I want to state very clearly that they are all priorities. Every one of them is a main priority. There is no order in which they are placed but they are the top nine priorities and all efforts and resources are being put to deal with them.

Madam Speaker, having said that, the Honourable Minister for Health this morning tabled the Final Report of the National Assessment of Living Conditions, that is, the NALC Report. With your permission, because the content of that report is very valuable to these priorities which the Government has listed, I would simply like to make a few comments, even though in my initial presentation I did not mention that specific report.

Madam Speaker, the National Assessment of Living Conditions Final Report is truly for and from the people of these Islands. Because people talked with us over the many months of the data collection process, this country now has a much better understanding of people's needs, their wants and their dreams. Accordingly, the Government now has a much better foundation on which to build solutions that will benefit all the people in our beloved three Islands.

Although the main thrust of National Assessment of Living Conditions is social development, the Government intends to take this far-reaching initiative beyond that. Specifically, we will start true national development planning rather than just focusing on managing growth. This goal is also shared by His Excellency the Governor, the Members of Cabinet, the Government on a whole and, I firmly believe, the residents of these Islands. Because it is incontrovertible that development to date has affected the social situation, we foresee NALC being used as a strong base for effective policies and action plans. This, in turn, will more reliably ensure sustainable future in our Islands for each and every person.

Madam Speaker, our approach to sustainable development revolves around three major goals. Firstly, the NALC results demand strengthening of institutions and services including areas such as disaster preparedness, education, the labour market, family and community, interests of the Sister Islands, infrastructural development and sound fiscal management. We have to consider all of these areas individually and collectively in order to achieve balanced development in our society.

Madam Speaker, we clearly see the relevance between the nine priority areas of the Government and the Final Report of NALC.

Secondly, we want NALC to help us provide better opportunities through which our people can develop their abilities and talents. We want to support high achievers as well as those whose progress may tend to be marred by inherent or environmental disadvantages. And because the NALC approach affirms Government's belief that public policy must be properly researched, the last major goal is to increase the use of social research as the foundation for sustainable action.

Madam Speaker, we must accept that addressing social issues is directly linked to the economic future of the Cayman Islands and vice versa. Therefore, with this long-term perspective in mind, we can grow and prosper only if as a country we work together to secure an enhanced quality of life for all of us without exception.

To put NALC into a larger perspective, many of the issues it highlights were captured in Vision 2008, and, indeed, we see these documents as being complementary. With some of these issues Government ministries and departments have long been working toward solutions. The National Assessment of Living Conditions has given us many things, but one of the best gifts is the opportunity to identify what we have achieved and where we need to improve.

In terms of the former, NALC has spurred the update of Cayman's consumer price index (CPI), which definitely benefits both the public and the private sectors. In my Ministry, issues like affordable housing and sustainable agriculture are key concerns addressed by both NALC and Vision 2008.

The NALC Report often gives credit to the ways that Government is addressing the problems that the report describes. It also recognises developments that have taken place since the survey period last year. The report also points out areas where Government may be able to develop more targeted and effective strategies.

To build on the remarks of my colleague, the Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services, NALC validates that not all residents who want to own a house are able to afford one. In addition, NALC provides numbers on households with inadequate construction or materials, such as plywood walls, metal roofing and poor plumbing.

Madam Speaker, the National Housing Development Trust, which falls under my Ministry, is constantly working to provide affordable housing. In addition, the European Union grant to the National Recovery Fund is being used to make low income accommodations more weather resistant. The NALC data will help us to refine these initiatives in order to make them more effective.

The report also refers to agriculture and fisheries as an important opportunity for Caymanian entrepreneurship. The Agriculture Department has for years afforded assistance to such entrepreneurs and is committed to continuing its efforts. For Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, NALC articulates the need to devolve more power to local officials so that they can proactively pursue development.

And, Madam Speaker, climate change has long been an important subject globally. And the people of Cayman through NALC have firmly said that they want that to stay on our priority list. The subject is relevant across the ministries areas of remit as demonstrated by the attendance of the Director of Planning this year at a seminar on biodiversity and climate change hosted by the European Union. Our intention is to further develop this area.

Again, referring to the statement from the Honourable Minister for Health, all ministries are reviewing their work plans in light of the NALC findings. But it is now up to the people and all of their representatives to decide whether and how they want to apply or expand on the report's recommendations. If we all do our part charting the future together, Madam Speaker, I daresay the possibilities are limitless. This is what we hope to achieve by encouraging the utmost transparency through the process and by encouraging strong continued public participation.

I just want to take this opportunity to commend the National Assessment team for their thorough and hard work. I also wish to thank the Caribbean Development Bank for funding vital components of this study.

Thank you for allowing me to speak a little bit to that NALC report, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to show how important that report is going to be as we chart the way forward in all of the areas of priority and the data that has been collected will certainly help to guide us to be more effective in the outputs and outcomes that are sought.

Madam Speaker, I listened as best I could to all of the contributions to the debate. I want to thank everyone for their contributions. There are some issues which I feel compelled to address and I would like to take a few minutes at this point in time to simply speak to a few of them.

I do not wish to start with the “Inventor”. The Inventor is the Second Elected Member for West Bay. He is the Inventor, Madam Speaker. I am going to begin with the “Guru”, the Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Madam Speaker, when the Third Elected Member (I will get to the Inventor, don't fear!) for West Bay (whom my colleagues have most aptly named “the Guru”) spoke on this matter, one of the things that he was very quick to speak to was . . . and you will forgive me, Madam Speaker, but with your permission I am going to have to quote a few sentences from the unedited Hansard.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader, I have no objection, but there is no copy of that unedited Hansard on this desk for me to ensure that you are quoting correctly from that Hansard. So, if you would give me one minute until I can get a copy . . .

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Certainly, Madam Speaker. And I know that it is not a matter of lack of trust, it is just a matter of procedure. I certainly understand.

The Speaker: I can certainly ensure you of that, sir. Procedure is my middle name as long as I sit in this Chair.

[pause]

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, you may continue now.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Madam Speaker.

I am quoting from page 6 of the unedited Hansard, the second to last paragraph down, or from the bottom. I should say the date, being 12 December [2008].

I quote [the Third Elected Member for West Bay]. He says, referring to the Honourable Minister of Education, “Madam Speaker, we go back to the financial industry. What we have seen again . . . and surprise, surprise . . . [He is speaking like Santa Claus now. He says] That is the same Minister that has responsibility. We have seen a decline in our international rankings as a financial centre. I think we went from number 5 to . . . one of the reports had us down to twenty-something! That is the same Minister who gets up and talks about his track record.”

Now, Madam Speaker, his colleague and dear friend, “the Guru's” colleague, the Third Elected Member for West Bay's colleague and dear friend is the Second Elected Member for West Bay, “the Inventor”, who is a chartered public accountant by profession, and who understands all of these things. And the way the Second Elected Member for West Bay speaks, I would normally assume he understands also . . . the Third [Elected Member for West Bay], rather. Forgive me.

No, I wasn't going at the Second [Elected Member for West Bay]; forgive me. I am glad somebody corrected that. [It is] the Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Madam Speaker, I normally assume that he understands these matters. When I finish what I am saying about this, I am going to be left with one of two choices: to either believe that he is not quite as much as I thought he was; or that he is as much and he is speaking with forked tongue. The nice word for that is being “disingenuous.”

But, Madam Speaker, if he understood what he was saying and was deliberately misleading, risking the reputation of this country, it is worse than disingenuous—it is dangerous! I am going to show you.

Madam Speaker, when I quoted him, he referred to international rankings and us seeing this great decline from number 5 to number 20-something. He is mixed up or has purposely mixed it all up. I just want to explain where he got number 5 from.

Madam Speaker, as at June 2008, the Cayman Islands ranked 6th in terms of assets, that is, US one trillion, eight hundred and twenty-six point two billion dollars, and 5th in terms of liabilities, that is one trillion, eight hundred and twenty three point four billion [dollars]. For instance, in those rankings, the United Kingdom is number 1 when it comes to assets; Germany is number 2; France is number 3; the United States is number 4; Japan is number 5; the Cayman Islands is number 6. Next are the Netherlands, Switzerland, Belgium and Ireland.

When it comes to the liabilities, the UK is also number 1; the United States is number 2; France is number 3; Germany, number 4; [number] 5 is the Cayman Islands.

So, Madam Speaker, that is his 5th that he is talking about.

The 20-something that he tried to compare the 5th and 6th with . . . notice the dates that I quoted, Madam Speaker, June 2008. I am going to explain something. This 20-something business he refers to is known as the Global Financial Centres Index (GFCI).

Madam Speaker, the City of London's Global Financial Centres Index was first produced for the city of London in March 2007. The report ranks each major financial centre in the world in terms of competitiveness. In the fourth of such reports covering 59 countries, dated September 2008 (just three months ago), the Cayman Islands ranked 21st out of those 59 countries in terms of competitiveness. It actually moved up four places in its ranking and gained 27 points in the ratings from the previous report dated March 2008.

Madam Speaker, the picture he tried to conjure about moving from 5th to 21st . . . he is taking an apple and an orange and squeezing it into one glass and expecting you to have milk. In fact, this business about 20-something just allowed me the opportunity to show, since these ratings began in 2007, where we have moved up the ladder.

And if I did not have the opportunity to clarify that today—just for his own or their own political expedience, they would have the rest of the world that was listening in to believe that the Cayman Islands are slipping. Madam Speaker, that is dangerous! That means that he (and by association, they) would risk the whole country and its future towards political expediency because the election is coming up.

Madam Speaker, if that were the only instance, it would not be so bad. I truly hope, not because I am wicked and evil . . . The world knows I am not that. Some of them would like me to be more wicked and evil; but nothing about that, Madam Speaker. It irks me and in a way frightens me when I know that I have colleagues in this Legislative Assembly who are prepared to go to those lengths, either not realising the danger they create, or fully realising it and still moving ahead with it because of their own selfish wishes. What else would they do, Madam Speaker? What else would they do?

Madam Speaker, this has been said before also. My colleagues have mentioned it, but if that were the only sporadic bit of danger in the last several days in this Legislative Assembly, it really would not have been too bad. But then his leader, the Leader of the Opposition, who purports in his sleep to care about this country and the people of this country so much; who puts on the best show I have ever seen . . . I have seen none better!

Madam Speaker, I heard my colleagues, the Minister for Communications and the Minister for Education, both speak to his public utterances of trying to tell people that the reason why Government was stopping some of the capital projects was because we could not get the money to borrow.

Madam Speaker, let me tell you and the entire country this: No one told me he said that because when the Minister for Education said he said it, he blabbered across the Floor of this House, “I didn’t say that, I asked a question.”

Madam Speaker, my name is Darwin Kurt Tibbetts. I have no impediment with hearing and I heard him with my own two ears. He was his usual reckless self and the reason why . . . I won’t even say the rest of the stuff he was saying because it might assist him in his quest. The reason he was like that was because he did not have a clue anyone was listening.

I will tell you what happened. I was about to go through the door and when I opened it I heard his voice and froze. There was a wall between [where the] door [was] and where he was speaking to the press, and I simply held the door open, froze, and listened to him rattle on. That is when I heard what he was saying and nothing could be further from the truth.

The Moody’s ratings are still at triple-A. Even now in these turbulent times, globally, they look forward to visiting the Cayman Islands because it is one of their easiest jobs, [that is,] Moody’s. Perhaps the Third Elected Member for West Bay and the Leader of the Opposition might not quite know who they are, but I am certain their colleague, the CPA—the Inventor—can explain to them who Moody’s is.

The Speaker: Could we just refer to these Members in their positions?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will call him the Inventor no more!

So, Madam Speaker, I use those two examples to ask: Where does it end? Where does it get us? [Is it] just to have people say this Government is no good or to have [inaudible]?

Madam Speaker, let me tell you something, they can send me home. And I do not say this because I do not revere and respect the confidence people have bestowed on me to allow me to be one of their representatives. I do not do this because I want to be somebody and I am not going to relegate myself to downright untruths to stay where I am!

It is unfortunate, Madam Speaker, that we have those in our midst who will do that, not only to stay where they are, but to get where they aspire. It is not hurting Kurt Tibbetts. Every night [when] I go home I sleep with a clear conscience. It is hurting the country! As a result, it is hurting the same people they say they love so much. What is the sense in that? And it did not end with the Third Elected Member for West Bay. (I will not call him the Guru anymore either.)

Madam Speaker, here is how much the Third Elected Member for West Bay understands about the budget process and the Public Management and Finance Law after eight years in this Legislative Assembly and being almost joined at the hip with his colleague, the chartered accountant. Talking about law, I would urge his colleague to tell him to study a little bit more accounting instead of all the time he is spending on law and he might get to understand a little bit better.

Madam Speaker, in the [unedited] 12 December Hansard on page 2, the right-hand column in the middle of the first paragraph, beginning with the sentence, “But we acknowledge.” [Quoting what the Third Elected Member said in 12 December 2008 Hansard]

“But we acknowledge that capital works projects by the Government will provide some stimulus, albeit very small. Madam Speaker, it would have to be that there is more need for that during the actual acknowledged recession time than when the recession was only looming.

“Now, Madam Speaker, maybe there is reason for that. There is some logic. But if the Government had come out and said to us that they just did not have the money and that was why they had to stop the project, but they are expecting a

$23 million surplus, they are stopping the projects, and they are also cutting back on services to the tune of some $10 million. . .”

I am not going to read any more, Madam Speaker. I just quoted what he said, but let me tell you what he was talking about in a nutshell. He was simply speaking to why the Government would stop certain capital projects if they were expecting to have an operating surplus of $23 million at the end of the 2008/09 year. Why not take some of that operating surplus and continue the other projects that we have put on hold? That is what he is saying.

I will tell you what he is intimating, Madam Speaker. He is saying that we project a surplus, but he is questioning that when he talks like this and he is trying to do two things in his usual underhanded fashion with that little smirk on his face that belies innocence. Yeah, innocence.

Madam Speaker, what he is saying is that these figures do not look so real to him, that we have this operating surplus and we are cutting back these projects. Because if we have an operating surplus projected, then we should go on with the projects since we said the projects are needed to stimulate the economy. He is totally forgetting about what the Public Management and Finance Law calls for. It calls for one fact. Firstly, you cannot operate in a deficit, which means you have to have a surplus even if it is a dollar. That is what it is saying, generally speaking. It also says that the country must have 90 days' operating cash in reserves. That is what it says.

So, Madam Speaker, for us to comply with what the Law says, a part of those 90 days' reserves must be whatever the operating surplus is. We figured out the best projections possible, given the tracking of revenue and everything to the end of October and part of November. Based on the projected revenue for year end we knew for 2008/9 exactly what percentage . . .

Because that total revenue is one thing, but you then [have to] look at what the total projected expenditure is (it is simple, Madam Speaker) and divide that by 365 days and you will get what it costs to operate for one day. You multiply that by 90 and you will get the figure that you have to have in reserves by Law. Some of those reserves are the $23 million operating surplus. Therefore, we could not expend any more of our general revenue on capital projects plus the borrowings without leaving that $23 million, otherwise we would not meet this legal requirement.

Madam Speaker, are you going to tell me he does not understand that?

Again, Madam Speaker, one of two things: either he does and is devious; or he is dumb and I think he is smart. Either one of them is no good.

Madam Speaker, when he speaks, you know, I mean, it really amazes me. He speaks with authority! This is Bible, like when he goes to church on a Saturday.

Me? I believe he understands. But he somehow has this twisted belief that that is just the nature of politics and you can lie as you please and that nobody else is going to figure anything like that out, only his CPA friend that he is joined at the hip with, that is . . . No, I won't.

Madam Speaker, although I do not speak the accountant language, I know that the Second Elected Member for West Bay understood every single thing I just said because even half asleep he was nodding. And he wasn't nodding sleeping nod; he was nodding saying, yes, that's how it is. That is what he was doing.

I cannot believe that his colleague does not understand that. But, Madam Speaker, that is just an example—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: —of what they are prepared to do, all in an effort. . . And, as I said, Madam Speaker, I do not mind so much if it is a matter of making the Government look bad. And there are certain lines we have. I know that. But, Madam Speaker, you draw the line a certain distance because when you risk your country it cannot be any good, either in your actions or in you. Madam Speaker, little things, little baby things.

On page 23 of my delivery I said in the very last paragraph: “Last January, in response to clear signs that the global economy was heading for a nose-dive, the Ministry of Tourism convened a strategic meeting of tourism stakeholders for the purpose of reviewing and revising the destination's marketing and sales strategies.”

Madam Speaker, those same ones opposite me, I heard two of them . . . to suit their argument, because it was an argument of time span; they took last January to mean January 2007. And they know better!

He is sitting down there looking at me, laughing now, because he knows better! Sure they know better! But they are prepared to publicly make those statements for the public to believe that is what I said when they know better!

Where do we draw the line, Madam Speaker? What in reality is Opposition? And it begs the question: What is constructive Opposition?

Do you know what, Madam Speaker? I remember very well in my early days. I remember a former political adversary. Not a personal adversary. We are friends. The former Minister of Education. And Madam Speaker, you and I were sworn in the same very day in this House in November 1992, and the Minister for Health. The three of us were sworn in for the very first time on the same day.

Madam Speaker, you know the battles we had. But I would never, never stretch the truth to expect this country to believe me about any of his actions that were not so. I would not do that, because it is wrong to do that! It is possible to make a mistake,

Madam Speaker, and I accept that. And I have had that happen on occasion. Not only did I apologise personally, but I apologised over the microphone. Not this [microphone], the one I used on the other side where I used to sit. And you have heard me do that. I am not afraid to do that.

I am not comparing me as a goody-goody, Madam Speaker. You hear them over there talking about I think I am Lilly white. I know exactly what colour blood runs in my veins. But while I may seem to be taking extra time with this specific issue, I need to say this to you, Madam Speaker, and to this country. This is important, because if we allow the elected Members of this legislature to consider those types of actions the norm, God help us in the future.

Madam Speaker, the real point that I want to make about this . . . God knows I am not trying to retaliate because of what was said. I am not trying to gain back points because I figure they gained some points in the eyes of the public by what they said. I am saying, Madam Speaker—and I am going to say it loud—that that is not what we are about. Opposition is opposition. And the Opposition must be seen to be giving a different perspective that they believe is either an alternative or complementary to whatever Government policy is.

I know the nature of the business. The nature of the business is that the Opposition wants to be . . . or compares themselves to a government in waiting, and whenever there is an election they are going to do everything that they possibly can to be the government. I understand those principles, Madam Speaker, but there are lines unseen that we should draw.

Do not tell me that we do not realise that what we say and do decides the actions of John Public. Madam Speaker, I am certain not one single one of them . . . all of them have children. Some of the children are adults, some of them are young adults, and some are babies. None of them would wish for anyone to mislead any one of their children. None of them would wish to do it.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

Point of Order

The Speaker: May I hear your point of order, Second Elected Member for West Bay?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I would draw your attention (and I know you do not have a copy) to the unedited Hansard of my contribution on the SPS, which clearly shows that on this point, which the Honourable Leader of Government Business is making quite a mountain out of, I did indeed catch myself and refer to January 2008. And, Madam Speaker, I will pass this to you so that you . . . because, Madam Speaker, what the Minister is saying that I said is not what I said.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I did not call anybody's name!

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for West Bay—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Well, Madam Speaker, if he did not call anyone's name, I would rather he said who he is quoting because he is just using a wide-sweeping brush, which does strike to the core of—

The Speaker: Could I have your point of order?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I am rising to say that I, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, did say that he would have been referring to January 2008. The point that he is making is that the Opposition misled the House and, by extension, the country in saying that it was January 2007.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member, I cannot draw a point of order. If you had gotten when he referred . . .

[Addressing the Honourable Leader of Government Business]: He has sat down.

[Addressing the Second Elected Member for West Bay] So you have given a clarification. I have to say that I, as the Speaker, brought to your attention that it was last January 2008, and you did correct yourself.

[inaudible interjection]

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker. And I do not have a problem with his point of elucidation; but he certainly did not have a point of order, and I am so glad.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Ma'am, I am moving on.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, very much.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I did not just say that.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business would you direct your conversation to me and the country and ignore the crosstalk from across the way? Thank you.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Right.

Madam Speaker, first of all, I had gone beyond that point. And I know that you realised that, but just because . . . I understand how life is. I do not have a problem.

Madam Speaker, my point was a general one and he certainly did not win any distraction on my part because all he is doing now is make me go all over it again.

Madam Speaker, I am responding to my contribution to the SPS that was tabled in this House. I moved a motion and then spoke to the motion. The rest of them have given their contributions to my initial debate, and now I am responding.

The Speaker: You are responding to their contribution to the motion.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

I am saying once more that they—forget about last January. They—all of them! Not one, not two, not three, not four—five of them! So make him understand that now. He is not excluded. He can argue about the 7th of January, but that's it.

All of them, Madam Speaker, in their own way every one of them, with their own choice of words for them to score points, go beyond the line they should go. Not because it frightens me because they can score points and I don't. If they send me home, I will not die! My God is the same God they profess to have, some of them.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Same God. No different one.

I will tell you what, Madam Speaker, none of them have any more fear of Him than I. None of them!

Madam Speaker, the examples that I just used (and there are a few more, but not only am I not going to bore you with the specific examples, I have used enough) . . . I have proven my point beyond a shadow of a doubt that they are unreasonable in their line of debate, they are irresponsible in many of their contributions, and in instances they are downright dangerous; reckless to this entire country and to you and me.

And I was using the example of children, not to P-R-E-Y on the innocent, but to show why we should not, because let me tell them, Madam Speaker, they do not have the luxury of saying what they say here and then going home and saying to their own children, Listen to me carefully. When you hear what I said, that is not how it is, you know. Let me tell you the truth how it is. I only said that for the rest of them. They do not have that luxury. None of us have that luxury.

Madam Speaker, when you get like that I can tell you, because I have watched it happen too many times. They get into the habit and say things, not only on the Floor of this House, but in other forums. They say things and they cause people to do things that cause all kinds of problems. I fully understand it.

You know, Madam Speaker, many a time, many, many a time I have heard, why don't I do this, why don't I say that, because so-and-so said this. And, Madam Speaker, it is the same reason I am talking about now that many times I do not do that—because I do not know who might listen. I do not know what it might put in their head, and I do not know even when I don't know what I will be responsible for! That's how important our job is as legislators!

Madam Speaker, God knows there is no disrespect meant, but there are more people who listen to us than listen to the preachers. Statistics will prove that, because there are fewer people who go to church than the number of people who hear us on the radio.

Do we understand the strength of our influence?

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I can only hope that the point I just raised, I raised my voice cleanly. I was not mad. I was not incensed. Madam Speaker, we need to stop it. We need to stop it.

I know we make jokes in here. I know that. But I can tell you, Madam Speaker, because I have seen it more than once—not counted on one hand or two—the times when what we have said in here has influenced the actions of some members of the public.

So, while one may think the examples I used really do not matter, let me give you a scenario, Madam Speaker. Because the taxi driver who listens to this garbage—the lies the untruths—believes in that person, he naturally believes what the person says. You can't blame him for that. And then he has six or eight tourists and they ask him how the economy is doing. Do you know what he says? [He says], 'Boy, I don't know, you know, because I hear so-and-so say the government can't get the money to borrow for these capital projects.'

What is the tourist going to think? What opinion does that group of tourists form then? They go back home and they say, 'Listen, you know we've been coming here for many years, but it looks like slowly but surely they are becoming another "Banana Republic". So, when we start to make our plans next year, we better go somewhere else because we don't know what it's going to be like down there next year.' That's what it does!

It does worse than that. And we talk about our tourism product. Then we speak about the strong, strong pillar in our economy, the financial services sector—the one the CPA wallows in (and I do not mean that disparagingly, Madam Speaker)—and the kinds of statements that you hear them say. Again, he, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, is respected within the industry. I know that. He is fairly young, but he is respected for his ability. And even when he does not say it (because I know he won't say that), his colleague says it. And because he is a part of that, and is respected, they believe what his colleague says because if it were not so, he would get up and say it is not so. But he does not get up and say it is not so, even when he knows so.

I am just simply saying, Madam Speaker, that we never know the damage we cause with our actions—because we think those actions are politically expedient—what the further ramifications are and how far-reaching the effects can be. And the crowning situation to refer to is those same poor innocent people who believe in these people and listen to them and take their lies for truth.

The Speaker: Can we just refer to untruths?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: And take their untruths for truths, Madam Speaker.

They go and repeat those untruths (which they think is the truth) elsewhere, and it just goes on, and on, and on, and the poison spreads like AIDS. That's what happens.

And then, just to be able to get up on the Floor of this House and say, I told you this Government was not any good . . . yeah. And some of them have been here longer than others. And the longer some of them have been here, the better they have become at it. I have to wonder sometimes if they have convinced themselves that they do not have to think of right and wrong anymore; they just look to what does best for them.

Anyway, Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, would this be a convenient time to take a 15 minute break?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 3.33 pm

Proceedings resumed at 3.54 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Leader of Government Business is exercising his right of reply.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, thank you.

I want to speak for just a short while on education. The Third Elected Member for West Bay and others of his colleagues went to great lengths—and I am so glad that at least one of them is coming back into the Chamber, Madam Speaker—to say that the Government has delivered nothing in the area of education. Nothing! Especially the Third Elected Member for West Bay: “Nothing” was his favourite word in those few paragraphs.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Education spoke at length outlining the physical plans, even when he had to sadly give notice that the start of construction on the Beulah Smith High School in West Bay had been deferred, and also the start of construction for the new George Town Primary School. Of course, they chose at that point in time to do the usual “we told you so”.

Madam Speaker, if they had even come with the line which we all do at times, and said, ‘we just had a feeling, that's why we told you so’, I could accept that quite readily than the foolishness, the utter rubbish that they tried to use as logic to say, I told you so.

Madam Speaker, here are the facts: Two new high schools are well under construction. Funding is in place. The only reason why it happened to be the Beulah Smith High School that was deferred was because that was the one where the contract had not been signed yet. Neither had a contract been signed for the construction of the George Town Primary School. And, Madam Speaker, let me say this, because I know before we finish there will be more time to speak at length, as they are going to make sure we have to speak at length about Cayman Brac.

When [Hurricane] Paloma hit Cayman Brac, the moment we visited the next day we knew that there were going to have to be millions of dollars poured into Cayman Brac. Cabinet has agreed that whatever has to be done in Cayman Brac will be done. But, Madam Speaker, when we knew of that . . . and I do not want to sing song about this. But let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that when it comes to these tribunals that are being called, and these investigations, when the Minister of Communications spoke about the cost to this country (by the time all of those are over) being well in the range of $10 million, he was not exaggerating.

Madam Speaker, in a very, very short time over the last two months the Government has realised that just those two unforeseen circumstances—unforeseen! First of all an act of nature; and, secondly, the other one promulgated by forces other than ourselves—but understanding full well that the Government of the Cayman Islands will face the responsibility for it. We knew that was added burden. And when you put all of that together along with the uncertain times, we are simply acting with prudent thought with regard to fiscal management.

Madam Speaker, sad to say even today there is going to be hundreds of thousands of dollars of additional expenditure having to purchase a new tub grinder with what happened in the Brac sometime between the hours of last night and this morning.

So, when we take all of that into account, it is sensible—and they know it! But what I said here are the facts, it is not just these facts I am talking about. They are talking about schools, Madam Speaker . . .

It is only the Second Elected Member for West Bay in the Chamber now on the other side. And I really do not know if he attended both of these performances, but the previous government had two great performances: They broke ground for the Beulah Smith High School with the golden shovels; they broke ground for the Clifton Hunter High School in Bodden Town with the golden shovels and very nice signs, and asked the Minister of Education, when we took office . . . ground had been broken just before the elections as a signal to the country that construction was about to start on those two projects. Madam Speaker, they did not even have a plan drawn!

When the Third Elected Member for West Bay is going to speak and tell the Minister for Education that he has done nothing because nearly four years later no school has been completed, he does not understand that from the time that same conference, which all of them talked about, in December 2005 at the Mary Miller Hall, with all of the educators and other stakeholders being there—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am being reminded that the Second Elected Member for West Bay was there smiling ear to ear.

Madam Speaker, after that, all the ground-work had to be laid. All the plans had to be drawn. And it was not done in a vacuum. The Minister has spoken at length about the new curriculum that is in place, about the IB Programme (International Baccalaureate) and about the way the whole transformation of education is taking place and the design of the schools. You know, Madam Speaker, I will tell you something else.

When they start to get loose and talk their ordinary talk just so they can get loud and brawly (I call it), and talk about this whole pile of glass windows in the schools and that kind of stuff, Madam Speaker, those schools were not designed by the professionals just for looks. They were designed to create an environment that is most conducive to learning by years of experience and historical data and tracking the success of programmes.

So, Madam Speaker, how can they speak to all of these “failures” when their only success was the two theatrical performances they had with the golden shovels and the big smiles?

Madam Speaker, I know that the Prospect Primary School was built, and that was good. But, the fact of the matter is, one year after the opening of that school—one year—it was filled to capacity. So, if they expect us to say that we are going to build one school for every four-year term, Madam Speaker, [when] in two or three years the children will be out underneath the Guinep trees again for their classes. . . And somebody might ask, ‘What’s wrong with that? That’s what we did.’ Sure that’s what we did; but we used to go barefoot too. Tell them to go barefoot now.

We used to do a lot of things. Some of us didn’t have long pants until we were way up in our teens. And the first one you got was a hand-me-down if you weren’t the oldest one. And that was fine. Life is just not like that nowadays, Madam Speaker. So, I do not want to hear all of that foolishness, because they know its foolishness.

Madam Speaker, I want to go back a little bit to focus on all that Ministers and other Members have talked about. It all comes up in sum total to the Government accepting the responsibility and doing everything within its means to make the lives of our people better, to create more opportunities for our people, to create the type of living that gives people self-esteem to want to succeed.

Madam Speaker, if I stand here this afternoon and tell you that we do not have any problems, I lie . . . or I am untruthful, to be parliamentary. But I have never said that, and I will not ever say that because the challenges are daily.

This morning, before I could come out of my backyard, the tub grinder was burning and everybody was screaming and hollering. The net result of that, while all the plans had been made to continue working throughout the holidays with staff who were quite committed for the cleanup in the Brac, now it has had to be suspended. I guess they will blame me for that too. I am not suggesting, I am just saying, Madam Speaker, because you never know.

Madam Speaker, I am with absolute certainty that that does not equate itself to the people of Cayman Brac. Whoever that individual is or those individuals are, that is the exception not the rule. But look at the damage it causes. Madam Speaker, I am going to be very guarded in these comments, but I am going to say once more that we must understand and appreciate how important it is for us as legislators to think before we speak, because we do not know what we say will cause. We do not know.

In winding up, I want to reiterate once more, that while we understand and accept that we are in challenging times, we will weather the storm and weather it well. I remember hearing the Opposition, when they heard me speak positively in my initial contribution. Some of them actually went to the point of making a joke out of it.

Just before I actually close, Madam Speaker, there were also some very pointed remarks made by the Opposition regarding the Strategic Policy Statement itself, the document and the revenue forecasts in that 2009/10 document. They were trying their very best to use the most eloquent words within the Queen’s English to cast doubt on the projections. Those comments, Madam Speaker, actually questioned the veracity of the revenue forecast contained in the Strategic Policy Statement document. Before I close, I want to speak to that for a couple of minutes.

The Portfolio of Finance and Economics did not produce the revenue forecasts on its own, but in consultation with major revenue-earning agencies within Government. As I mentioned earlier, there is a frequent and regular robust review of these revenue forecasts, meaning that the revenue forecasts are not cast in stone. They never can be. The Second Elected Member for West Bay will quite understand that, given his professional qualifications and practice. From time to time they will have to be, as they have been in this instance, adjusted.

Just to illustrate this, Madam Speaker, when the 2008/9 SPS document was presented in this Legislative Assembly on 30 November last year, the revenue estimate for the 2008/9 year was $539 million. When we presented the 2008/9 Budget on 30 April 2008, some five months later, the revenue forecast for the same year (that is, the 2008/9 year) was revised downwards to $528 million, as compared to the figure in the SPS of $539 [million].

In late October of this year, when we received details of the actual revenues for the period 1 July 2008 to 30 September 2008 in Cabinet, those actual revenues, along with consultations with the major revenue earning agencies in the Government, caused another downward revision to the revenue forecast for the 2008/9 year to $513 million, which is a fall off of $15 million from the revenue estimate figure of $528 million contained in the 2008/9 Budget, which was approved.

In the SPS for 2009/10, tabled last week Wednesday, we revised the revenue forecast figure for the 2008/9 year upwards from $513 million to $525 million. The reason for that is purely because of technical adjustments to properly account for waivers of Government revenue. I would very much like if the Second Elected Member for West Bay could listen first, and then understand carefully so that he can explain this to his colleagues lest they get on with their wayward ways again.

Madam Speaker, prior to this change, whenever there was a waiver of Government revenue (for example, a waiver of import duties) the revenue received was accounted for on a net basis, which simply means that revenues were recorded in Government books net of the duty waivers. The proper way to account for such matters is to show the revenues on a gross basis, that is, to record the revenues at their full amount without any reduction arising because of the waivers and record the amount waived as part of the expenditures. So, in almost layman's terms, at the end of the day it is a revenue neutral transaction. But instead of not recording on the revenue side the amount of dollars and recording on the expenditure side the amount of the waiver, we were not doing that before. We were made to understand by the qualified technocrats that that was not the proper accounting treatment.

Now, Madam Speaker, we in Government (that is, the elected arm of Government), did not do that. That just happened to be the way it was being done. When everybody was made aware of it, now they are doing it the correct way. It does not change the picture. It just simply says, for instance, in this instance (where we had $513 million forecast in late October 2008 for the 2008/9 projected revenue), in this SPS it shows $525 million, which is a $12 million increase in revenue. But what it will also show is a $12 million increase in expenditure because that is the amount of the Government waivers which, before now, was not being recorded on both sides of the books.

I am sure that the Second Elected Member for West Bay has a very clear understanding of what I am saying. He is smiling. He will not allow himself to nod, but he will smile to give me the same signal, 'Yes, I do.'

Madam Speaker, I want to stress that so we do not hear anything about [how] in these challenging times with the global downturn in the world economy we are projecting revenue to increase. We have not projected the revenue to increase. It is simply an accounting treatment.

You see, Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay also understands that revenue forecasts are not static. They cannot be static. The figures are continually monitored and revised appropriately where there is a need for change, whether up or down.

I want to repeat again, Madam Speaker, the Government cannot operate legally with an operational deficit at any year end. By virtue of the Public Management and Finance Law, the Government has to make a surplus, as I said before, even if that is a dollar or even, for that matter, if it is one cent. So, if the revenue forecast needs to change, then expenditure levels must also change to ensure that we are not operating ultra vires the law.

Madam Speaker, I took two or three minutes to explain that simply because I know how they will go on again. They will try to pretend like we have fixed the books by way of increasing revenue. And I hear the Second Elected Member for West Bay kind of like smirking. Now, he is not going to get up and publicly state that because he knows that the good things we think about him will all disappear. But there are others to whom it matters not. And, besides that, Madam Speaker, the truth is, his professional ethics would not allow him to do that, and I know he respects that. I am sure, being surrounded by so much of it, the temptation must get there. I am just glad that he continues to resist.

Madam Speaker, they have also been asking about the Government's readiness in these challenging times. I hear questions being asked about who we are partnering with. As the Minister for Education (who also has the constitutional responsibility for international financial services) stated in his contribution already, we are in constant contact and collaboration with private sector stakeholders to ensure that the Government is doing what it needs to do for us to stay on the cutting edge, especially in these times, by being responsive to the needs by way of any legislation that is needed or collaboration from the point of view of making contacts or representation overseas.

We hear talk about the incoming US political administration. And there are worries about what their stance might be regarding jurisdictions such as ours. Madam Speaker, our people are on the ground in Washington as we speak. As I mentioned, when the time is right, in short order, we will be making our jaunt over there knocking on the doors and making sure that we are dealing with the facts and doing everything we possibly can to let them understand the facts, to let them know that we are allies, not a hindrance, not the enemy; not a jurisdiction that wants to hide tax money; nothing like that. Our business has, by and large, transformed itself in the large majority to institutional business, Madam Speaker. And that institutional business is almost the lifeline of the US economy when it comes to the volume of business.

It is jurisdictions like ours, Madam Speaker, that allow US companies to be able to be competitive in the global marketplace. Without jurisdictions like ours, many of those companies would not be able to be as successful as they are globally and they would not be able to report as large a profit as they do, which means more tax money that they pay.

That is what everyone needs to know—from the top to the bottom. And we have been transmitting that message, and the other messages, the robustness of our regulatory regime. We have been doing all of that. I am saying to you, Madam Speaker, that we are conscious of the need for all of these efforts and the need for us to be in partnership with private sector.

You know, Madam Speaker, a lot of people take it lightly, but when we compare this jurisdiction to any other jurisdiction in the world, we have talent here in our financial services industry in its broadest sense. We have talent here that can be judged alongside any other jurisdiction in this world. That is one of the big pluses. We are no fly-by-night. Our regulatory regime and the quality of industry is by far superior to most. And we have to ensure that that stays like that.

Madam Speaker, I simply say that to say never let it be thought or said by the Opposition, or anyone else for that matter, that we simply expect that it will get fixed by itself over night. No such thing. We are very conscious of the threats. But we also understand that we have to tread carefully. We cannot be rash in our decisions. And whatever we do must be able to withstand scrutiny from any quarter.

Madam Speaker, I will close now knowing that there is much more that could have been said, but I did not want to be too repetitive because many of my colleagues have gone over many of the issues at hand. I also could have spoken at more length about the mischievousness of the Opposition, but, again, I only chose a few examples to make my points.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to be a part of this Government. I am also very proud to have been given the privilege to serve the people of this country.

I am extremely proud of that. I cherish that. And I guard that ferociously, meaning that, because I understand and accept how heavy that responsibility is, I treat it most carefully and with the utmost respect.

You see, Madam Speaker, perhaps that is why I have never considered myself a politician, because, as the saying goes, a politician thinks about the next election; a statesman thinks about the next generation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that the Legislative Assembly approves the policy priorities aggregate financial targets and financial allocations set out in the 2009/2010 Strategic Policy Statement as the indicative parameters on which the 2009/10 Budget is to be formulated.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes and one audible No.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, could we have a division please, because it is obvious that there is a desire for one.

THURSDAY
18 DECEMBER 2008
10.42 AM
Eighth Sitting

[Hon. Cline A. Glidden, Jr., Deputy Speaker, in the Chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I will invite the Honourable Minister of Communications to grace us with Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

Proceedings Resumed at 10.45 am

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Deputy Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services and from the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE
MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

(Deferred)

The Deputy Speaker: I have been notified of the intention of the Honourable Third Official Member to make a statement, but he needs some additional time, so we want to move it to further on in the day.

Can I ask the Leader of Government Business to move a motion that we defer the reading of statements until later on in this [sitting]?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I so move the suspension of the relevant Standing Order to allow for a statement to be done later on during this [sitting].

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that we allow statements to be done later on in this [sitting]. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Statement deferred until later in the sitting.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

BILLS

THIRD READING

Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008

The Clerk: The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I beg to move on behalf of the Government that the Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008, be given a third reading and passed.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that the Bill shortly entitled The Tax Information Authority (Amendment) Bill 2008, be given a third reading and passed. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 46(4) suspended to allow the Elections (Amendment) (No.2) Bill 2008 to be read a second time.

SECOND READING

Elections (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2008

The Clerk: The Elections (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2008.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognise the Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

This is a short amendment to the Elections Law. During the recent constitutional talks held here in September of this year, representation was made by the Government and the Opposition seeking an amendment to the Cayman Islands Constitution in order to allow for persons who will attain the age of 18 on or before polling day to be registered and allowed to vote. The Order in Council is now in force and, consequently, enabling legislation has now been prepared by way of this amending Bill.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Constitution was dealt with in the United Kingdom on 10 December and was tabled in the Parliament of the United Kingdom yesterday, 17 December 2008. The necessary Order to give effect to this amendment to the Constitution was signed by His Excellency the Governor this morning and is being dealt with by way of extraordinary gazettal by the Legislative Department within the Portfolio of Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, clauses 2 and 3 of the Bill amend sections 11 and 19 of the principal Law to give effect to the Cayman Islands (Constitution) (Amendment) Order 2008, as I have just referenced. The Elections Office will be seeking the Governor's approval to change the registration date to the 1st of February, instead of keeping it the 1st of January. This is to accommodate those individuals who are presently 17 years of age, but who will become 18 on or before Election Day. Every effort will be made to ensure that these persons are enfranchised during this registration drive.

Clause 4 of the Bill seeks to bring section 49A(2) in line with other provisions of the principal Law by providing that the Supervisor's power in respect of mobile polling stations are exercisable subject to the Governor acting in his discretion (rather than the approval of the Governor in Cabinet).

Mr. Speaker, in a recent amendment to the Law, that section 49A(2), which now reads: "The Supervisor, subject to the approval of the Governor in Cabinet . . ." the phrase "in Cabinet", is being sought to be removed which will allow for the amendment made to become consistent with the provisions of the Law thus allowing the Law to operate with the desired level of autonomy without consultation having to be made with Cabinet and, as I mentioned earlier, the Governor acting in his discretion.

Mr. Speaker, clause 5 contains consequential amendment to the various forms used for the purposes of an election. In form 8 the title of some columns are changed around and a new column "polling division" inserted.

Form 8 can be found in the existing Law on page 68. Members will note that the titles in the different columns have been changed. This is to facilitate this change which has been made by way of this constitutional amendment.

In Form 4, application for registration as an elector on the reverse side, which lists the qualifications of electors, deleting paragraph c(ii) of the Note of qualifications to be registered as an elector and substituting the new qualifications contained in the Cayman Islands Constitution (Amendment) Order, 2008, and that is where the age of 18 appears. It should now read 17 years of age. And form c(ii) [currently] reads, "He has attained the age of 18 years." This will now read, "He has attained the age of 17 years of age."

These are the amendments that are being proposed by way of this amending Bill, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, essentially there are four. I commend this amending Bill to honourable Members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

We are glad that the UK has ceded to our request to get this amendment before the House as quickly as we have it in order to allow the young people who will be 18 on Election Day to be able to vote. This was an initiative that was raised, firstly, by the Third Elected Member for West Bay (yourself, Mr. Speaker), during our constitutional discussions throughout the Islands. This is one of the things people were asking, and when we raised it at the Constitutional talks it was supported by the Government and we are on all fours together on this matter. Certainly, we thank His Excellency the Governor for moving as quickly as he did on this matter.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I, too, would like to express my appreciation to all those involved in bringing the amendment to the Elections Law forward. I do personally say a big thank you to you, Mr. Speaker, and your group for first bringing the suggestion. And also to say that in times like these, when the suggestions are made or brought forward that are of real benefit to the people and to make it easier for our young people to exercise their democratic right in voting, that the Government has no problem accepting suggestions brought forward by the Opposition.

I do thank the Government for picking up the importance of the suggestion and working with the Governor to make sure that he request was sent through to the UK and, subsequently, having it completed so that we could accept it here in parliament today.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to make a personal appeal to all of our young people who now have this added opportunity to be registered to make sure that they are prepared to vote in whatever voting comes up, whether it is referendum or in the general election, that they need to make sure they get registered.

Maybe in the wrap up from the Honourable Chief Secretary we can have some verification that the Elections Office is prepared and ready to accept these new registrations.

So, once again, my public appeal is to all of our young people—and for parents to encourage their youngsters—to take advantage of this opportunity to get registered.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I want to briefly make a few observations about this Law. As the First Official Member has said, this Bill is here as part of the exercise necessary to enfranchise young people who would be 18 on or before 20 May, but under the present constitutional provisions and legislative provisions, are unable to register because the way the Constitution and the Law operate you have to be 18 before you can actually be registered.

The Government felt that it was an eminently sensible reasonable and progressive proposal put forward by the Opposition in some of the talks that we had to broaden the franchise and to allow young people the opportunity to vote at the earliest possible time once they gained majority. The way the present system operates, you could be 18 on the date of the election but you still would not be able to vote in that case until you'd be almost 22 years old.

So, we did whatever we could to facilitate the process. It has not been easy because of the timelines that are in place, because the date of the election has already been fixed. So we supported, and we urged the Governor on to have the FCO put forward to Her Majesty's Privy Council the proposed change to the Constitutional Order. Thankfully, that was accomplished in time.

There are still some serious time constraints because under the present Law the time for registration would have been the end of this month. So, we have spoken to the Governor, and the Governor has agreed, because it is within his power so to do under the provisions of the Elections Law to extend the registration period to 31 January. We would have liked if the period could have been extended beyond that because we know over this season time is going to be lost. Few people are going to be focusing on things like voter registration.

But the difficulty is, because of the claims period required for objections and so forth to registration, the necessary timelines that are already set out in the Law make it impossible to go beyond 31 January without having to move other deadlines which require more changes to the Law. No one believes—certainly the technical people—that that is right or appropriate to do.

So, I want to join voice with those who have spoken before me to urge, particularly our young people who wish to take advantage of this opportunity being provided, to do everything they can to get registered by 31 January. But I should also say that that registration period is the registration period for everyone. So anyone who does not get registered by 31 January will not have the opportunity to vote in the 20 May elections. I just want to urge everyone to take this opportunity. It is a right that has been fought for; blood has been shed for the right to be able to vote and to have that democratic right enshrined in the constitutions of countries around the world.

We take it for granted in Cayman, but just a short while ago in this House we celebrated the passage of the Sexist Qualification Removal Law because less than 50 years ago, women did not have the right to vote. So, I want young people in particular to reflect upon that and to do everything they can to become engaged in the process, to listen to what all of the people who propose to stand for election have to say, and to make up their minds who they think would best represent their country and to actually go and vote on 20 May. But in order to do that, they first have to be registered.

So, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to add those few words to the debate on this important piece of legislation. I hope that the reasonableness and the unanimity that has emerged as we made this constitutional change can be carried through to talks which are proposed to start on the 13th of next month.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

If not, does the Honourable First Official Member wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

This is to express my gratitude to honourable Members for their support of this Bill and the point made by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town to encourage the young people to register as electors which was underscored by the Honourable Minister of Education. This point has been made by changing the date from 31 December to 31 January, as he mentioned, for registration. So, this, combined with the efforts being made by the Elections office will ensure that information is put out advising young people of this great opportunity that has been presented to them, and encouraging them to exercise this right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled The Elections (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2008, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Elections (Amendment) (No.2) Bill 2008, given a second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The House will now go into Committee to consider the Bill.

House in Committee at 11.03 am

COMMITTEE ON BILL

The Chairman: Please be seated. The House is now in Committee.

With the leave of the House, may I assume that, as usual, we should authorise the Honourable Second Official Member to correct minor errors and suchlike in these Bills?

Would the Clerk please state the Bill and read the clauses.

MOTIONS

Suspension of Standing Order 24(5)

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I trust that with your guidance I am going to be doing this correctly.

There is an addendum to the Order Paper that needs to be prepared. I believe it is proper at this point in time to ask you if you would suspend for a very short time so that that addendum can be prepared. Members need not leave their seats, Mr. Speaker, if you would instruct.

Having explained that, I would move the suspension of Suspension of Standing Order 24(5) to enable a Government Motion entitled "Government Guarantee in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to a Financial Institution” to be moved during the current Meeting.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 24(5) be suspended. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 24(5) suspended to enable a Government Motion entitled “Government Guarantee in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to a Financial Institution” to be moved during the current Meeting.

The Deputy Speaker: The House will now take a 15 minute suspension.

Proceedings suspended at 11.09 am

(to allow an Addendum Order Paper to be prepared)

Proceedings resumed at 11.39 am

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

I recognise the Third Official Member on the statement that was deferred this morning.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF THE CABINET

Chairman’s Statement in Respect of the Public Service Pensions Board year ended 30 June 2008

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my gratitude to you for allowing me to make this statement. It is entitled “Chairman’s Statement in Respect of the Public Service Pension Board’s Year Ended 30 June 2008.”

Mr. Speaker, I will just pause for a short second while the Serjeant hands out the statement so that Members can follow as it is being read. [pause]

Mr. Speaker, the Public Service Pensions Board (the Board), with assistance provided by external professional investment managers, is entrusted with vesting the assets of the Public Service Pension’s Plan, and in doing so it identifies and pursues investment opportunities in accordance with laws, regulations, best practices and the Pension Plan’s statement of investment policy and procedures.

As an integral part of that oversight, the Board has defined management’s responsibilities to include planning, operating and reporting activities for the Pensions Plan. Subject to the Board’s approval, the Managing Director develops and implements policies within the areas of investments, communications, integrity and control organisation and compensation and operations, and administration. Throughout this process, management ensures that the pension funds are administered in compliance with all policy and regulatory requirements.

The investment objective of the Pensions Plan is to produce returns over the long term that, at a minimum, achieve the rate of return required to cover the Pensions Plan liabilities. In this regard, the last financial year (that is the year ended 30 June 2008), was marked by tumultuous and volatile capital markets. While that financial year commenced with positive global economic growth, there soon arose pressure on central banks to raise interest rates in response to fears of rising inflation.

In addition, developments in the US housing and financial markets increased the downward pressure on global economic growth. These developments triggered a general decline in the overall investment rates of return generated by pension plans worldwide. Understandably, the Public Service Pensions Plan was not immune to this period of disruption and declined within global investment markets.

Mr. Speaker, in responding, the Board, guided by the overarching objective of meeting its pension promises and reflecting the defined contribution plans preference for volatility control over increasing returns, has implemented an investment strategy that seeks to mitigate risks while generating appropriate long-term returns at the total Pensions Plan level.

Fortunately, the Pensions Plan assets have been conservatively invested with no exposure to high risks investment vehicles or now unstable banking institutions which were commonly held within most pension plans. The Board, acting through its team of investment professionals, has secured a level of performance that leaves the Public Service Pension Plan in a favourable financial position longer term.

The Pension Plan utilises a specialised external financial advisory firm which provides portfolio performance measurement and a benchmark data. Against the backdrop of considerable turmoil within financial markets, investment returns as reported by our external advisory firm have retracted into a negative territory from strongly positive and double-digit returns generated in the prior financial year for the Pensions Plan. The Pensions Plan net assets for benefits remain relatively flat at approximately US$273 million over the year from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008.

This modestly negative performance experience follows prior years of positive performance for the Pensions Plan. Notwithstanding this recent period’s negative performance, the Pensions Plan three-year annualised performance delivered a rate of return of 6.5 per cent per annum, which is ahead of the average US pension plan by 1 per cent per annum and holds a ranking at the 29th percentile of a comparative peer group sample universe of 101 US pensions plan. This performance translates into more than US$7 million of additional market value appreciation than the average US pension plan experience.

Additionally, over the last five-year period the Pensions Plan return has exactly met an annualised return of 7 per cent.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, the Public Service Pensions Plan remains financially strong. Throughout the challenges of the last year the Board continued their practice of monitoring the solvency position of the Public Service Pensions Plan through a full actuarial valuation conducted by the Pensions Plan actuary. The actuary is currently in the process of completing his review of the actuarial valuation as of 1 January 2008, and that will provide recommendation for the Board's consideration.

The results of the valuation will be reviewed carefully by the Board and management to ensure that any and all necessary steps are taken to maintain the Pensions Plan growth and financial health, thereby strengthening the pension promise made to thousands of Caymanians.

Finally, in regard to the Board's commitment to provide excellence in benefits administrations over the last financial year, formal approval was given for the implementation of technological enhancements which will respond to a greater demand for more information and better services delivery to pensioners.

Reflecting on the last financial year, we are fortunate to have had in place a dedicated Board and experienced and committed staff. Their experience and continued dedication will ensure that the investment programme is well positioned to provide an above average investment programme that plan members have come to expect.

As investment markets continue to be volatile the Board and management will maintain a prudent outlook and provide the appropriate direction to safeguard current pension benefits.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to acknowledge the commitment and effort of the Board, the Managing Director and staff at the Pensions Board, for successfully achieving the performance objectives of the Public Service Pensions Plan.

Thank you, sir.

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 11/08-09—Government Guarantee in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to a Financial Institution

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I beg to move on behalf of the Government, Government Motion No. 11/08-09, which is captioned, Government Guarantee in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to a Financial Institution.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to read the Motion.

WHEREAS the Government entered into Financing Agreements with the European Commission entitled Hurricane Ivan Reconstruction Efforts – part 1: Repair and Reconstruction of Houses (9 PTU CI 001) and Hurricane Ivan Reconstruction Efforts Project: Repair and Reconstruction of Houses (Part II) (9 PTU CI 002);

AND WHEREAS the Government awarded, by way of Grant Contracts, the implementation of the actions under the Financing Agreements to the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund;

AND WHEREAS the Grant Contracts require that a guarantee be issued if the sum total of pre-financing paid under the Grant Contracts is more than €1 million;

AND WHEREAS section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision) specifies that “no guarantee may be given by or on behalf of the Government unless it has been authorised by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly”;

BE IT NOW RESOLVED that, in accordance with section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision), the Financial Secretary be authorised to issue a guarantee to a financial institution in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund for the purpose of allowing the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to request the full amount of pre-financing available under the Financing Agreements and Grant Contracts for an amount not exceeding €4,851,199 for the provision of Hurricane Ivan reconstruction efforts: repair and reconstruction of houses.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is: That in accordance with section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision), the Financial Secretary be authorised to issue a guarantee to a financial institution in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund for the purpose of allowing the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to request the full amount of pre-financing available under the Financing Agreements and Grant Contracts for an amount not exceeding €4,851,199 for the provision of Hurricane Ivan reconstruction efforts: repair and reconstruction of houses.

The Motion is open for debate.

Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

This Motion seeks approval for the issuance of a guarantee by the Government to a financial institution in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund for the purpose of allowing the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to request a full amount of pre-financing available under the financing agreements and grant contracts for an amount not exceeding €4,851,199 (approximately CI$5,190,783) for the provision of Hurricane Ivan reconstruction efforts: repair and reconstruction of houses.

The Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund is a not-for-profit charitable organisation utilising primarily privately donated funds from individuals, corporations, and organisations nationally and internationally to further its aims of assisting needy persons who were injured, bereaved, rendered homeless, destitute or otherwise adversely affected by natural disasters, such as hurricanes. It provides assistance for repair of damaged homes to those who cannot assist themselves.

On 8 June 2005, the Cayman Islands Government made a request to the European Commission via the European Commission delegation in Jamaica for monetary assistance for Hurricane Ivan reconstruction and repair efforts, which were to be channeled through the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund.

The request was agreed to by the European Commission at the end of 2006. The total funds being made available by the European Commission are €7 million. The Financing Agreement between the European Commission and the Government for part 1 of the project came into force on 29 January 2007. The Financing Agreement requires that Government contribute €394,000 to the project, and that the European Commission contribute €3.7 million under part 1 of the project.

On 13 June 2007, the Government signed a grant contract with the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund for the implementation of part 1. The Financing Agreement for part 2 of the project for €3.3 million was signed on 28 March 2008. The grant contract for part 2 of the project, which is very similar to the grant contract under part 1, is expected to be signed mid December. In fact Mr. Speaker, it was signed this morning.

Due to a number of issues both on the part of the European Commission and the Government, the first set of funding, €975,000 (approximately CI$1.2 million) was received on 17 March 2008. The amount received was limited to under €1 million since the European Commission requires that a bank guarantee be in place for requests greater than €1 million.

Should the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund receive a guarantee, it would be able to request the remaining pre-financing amounts under the grant contracts. The delegation in Jamaica has advised that the guarantee must include the first installment of €975,000, which has already been received, since this has not yet been reported on by the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund and its auditors. But Mr. Speaker, that report from the auditors to the delegation in Jamaica to account for how that first tranche of €975,000 has been spent is very much nearing completion and should certainly be done either tomorrow or very early next week.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore respectfully ask all honourable Members to support the Government Motion now before the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If not, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I just wish to thank all honourable Members of the House for their silent support.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is: That in accordance with section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision), the Financial Secretary be authorised to issue a guarantee to a financial institution in respect of the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund for the purpose of allowing the Cayman Islands National Recovery Fund to request the full amount of pre-financing available under the Financing Agreements and Grant Contracts for an amount not exceeding €4,851,199 for the provision of Hurricane Ivan reconstruction efforts: repair and reconstruction of houses.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Government Motion No. 11/08-09 passed.

Government Motion No. 8/08-09—Government Guarantee in favour of the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Co-operative Credit Union Limited

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Deputy Speaker: This is the continuation of the debate. Does any other Member wish to speak?

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Amendment to Government Motion No. 8/08-09

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer an amendment to the Motion before us.

In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25 (1) and (2), I, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the First Elected Member for West Bay, seek leave to move the following amendment to Government Motion No. 8/08-09 as follows: by inserting the following resolve sections at the end thereof:

AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government considers making available immediately CI$10 million in the first instance for the repairs and reconstruction of homes on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman with an assessment to be conducted at the exhaustion of this amount to determine the outstanding needs and to make additional funds available;

AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government establish a committee to receive applications for financial assistance or to review applications previously submitted to other Government agencies and to determine their eligibility for assistance;

AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the eligibility for this assistance be open to all residents of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and the value of the property or the income of the applicant should not exclude the applicant from eligibility, however, priority should be given to uninsured properties and the most needy.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there a seconder for the amendment?

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Mr. Speaker, I beg to second the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The amendment has been duly moved and seconded. Does the mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, this Motion started several days ago when the Honourable Financial Secretary introduced the substantive Motion, but it got put back for several reasons.

Mr. Speaker, the experience we all shared following the passage of Hurricane Ivan here must have equipped us to provide compassionate leadership to this country that is informed by our own life-changing experience in 2004.

Several weeks now after the passage of Hurricane Paloma, many of the residents of the Sister Islands are looking for relief and recovery from the severe damages caused by the impact of Hurricane Paloma on 8 November 2008.

At one of the recent Government press briefings, the Minister of Education claimed that the Cayman Islands Government was fully able to manage the Cayman Brac situation internally and further claimed that his PPM Administration was demonstrating this. Furthermore, the Minister determined the full impact on Cayman Brac as miniscule as a percentage of the Cayman Islands economic activity.

Where this is likely statistically accurate, I certainly do not subscribe to the view that the damage done in Cayman Brac was miniscule, and, more and more, I think they are finding this out.

Mr. Speaker, we know the Sister Islands of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman received severe damage to their infrastructure, government buildings, commercial properties and residential homes from the passage of hurricane Paloma on 8 November [2008]. We know the Caribbean Catastrophic Insurance Programme has failed to deliver the eminent financial relief as purported by the Government at the time of the initiation of the insurance programme.

We hear the Cayman Islands Government . . . at least the Government has boasted of having in excess of $100 million in its various accounts. We know the private sector has made a laudable contribution to the initiation relief effort and to the longer term recovery effort. We know many residents of the Sister Islands remain with damages to their homes and, in some cases, with complete destruction of their homes.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we witnessed the passionate call from the two foremost government persons on the ground (that is, outside the District Commissioner), that is, the two elected representatives. I listened to both of them and their call said that while something is being done [by] Government, they believed more needed to be done, from their experiences.

I don't know what is going to be said here. I await hearing what new information will come from the Minister responsible for the Sister Islands. We have heard that the Government gave, or intends to give, a million dollars, firstly. And so I wait to hear.

Mr. Speaker, the [amendment] is brought in a constructive spirit, and is hoped to receive the support of the House, especially after the pronouncement from the Government that no expenses will be spared and that the Government has the means internally to tackle the rebuilding task ahead.

As outlined in a statement by the Second Elected Member for the Sister Islands, the rebuilding of the Sister Islands must be done strategically. It is much more than simply returning the residents to their pre-Paloma state. It would be unwise not to learn from the lessons of our collective experiences and rebuild the Sister Islands even stronger and better. The long-term development strategy for the Sister Islands must emanate from the people and a systematic approach for collating such strategy should be immediately employed. The two Sister Islands' representatives should play a central role in the development of this strategy; both of them.

Mr. Speaker, housing is one of the most fundamental needs of the human race. The private sector has taken a laudable start in contributing to the rebuilding effort. And this [amendment] seeks to offer an instant injection to the recovery and rebuilding efforts by making available the financial capital needed to get people back in their homes quickly, enabling them to concentrate on other matters. We know firsthand what can happen, because we experienced it here, when people have to concentrate on living in the conditions in a house after a hurricane has hit it.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I worry most about is how this affects the older generation in Cayman Brac. It can't be any different than how it affected them here. We lost a good many of our older citizens after the shock and fallout of the hurricane. They just could not take the pressure. They could not take their houses and life's possessions being destroyed and lost, things that mattered to them. It is a fact.

I recall my own mother-in-law after hurricane Ivan hit. She was already sick, but I know the pressure, the stress that she went through after she lost her house. She couldn't stay there. She died in early May and was buried on the 5th (or thereabouts) of May 2005. I don't want anyone to think that I am saying that was the total cause because she was sick. But I mentioned that because so many other of our elderly citizens, when you talked to them their main concern [was] 'when am I going to get back into my house?' That was their main concern and that stressed them out.

So, Mr. Speaker, this [amendment] calls for an immediate allocation of $10 million to be allocated to residents who have received damages to their homes or, in some cases, complete destruction of their homes. Eligibility for assistance should be determined by a committee comprised of the District Commissioner as chairman; both Sister Islands MLAs and a representative from the Ministry responsible for the Sister Islands. Collectively, this group has hands-on knowledge of the needs and can facilitate getting the assistance to the needy individuals quickly in a non-bureaucratic manner and, Mr. Speaker, that is what the Government has to be careful with; the bureaucracy that can build when Government has to give out funds. But the wherewithal is there to make it normal and, of course, all the normal and expected accountability facilities to be employed.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a drive underway on the Sister Islands to have impacted residents complete forms for loans and for assistance through the National Recovery office, and this could be the starting point for the committee's work. Wherever possible, duplication of efforts should be minimised as the residents of the Sister Islands need assistance, not additional and unnecessary duplication of paperwork.

In addition to those who have submitted assistance requests, I believe that the Department of Children and Family Services has also conducted their own needs assessment. This would equate yet another source. The assistance received in Cayman Brac from all over, but in particular from Grand Cayman, has been impressive. Despite initial difficulties in the distribution of this relief, the efforts prove to soften the blow for the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Although, Mr. Speaker, I was not able to be on hand personally due to medical reasons (I do recall when I got the message that I was in the hospital still), I assured the good people of the Sister Islands my heartfelt prayers were with them at all times, and, additionally, my colleagues coordinated several relief efforts. I take this opportunity personally to pay tribute to the First Elected Member for the Sister Islands, Ms. O'Connor-Connolly, for the diligence and commitment she demonstrated to the people of the Sister Islands during those trying times, and she is still doing so. That is why she is not here today.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues were among the first officials to visit the Sister Islands. They told me that her house has been converted into a full scale warehouse. It would be remiss of me not to mention the efforts of the Second Elected Member who took a hard blow in losing his home.

Mr. Speaker, as the Sister Islands transition from recovery into rebuilding, the level of expenditure required will grow. Although the private sector has stepped forward and is contributing in this effort, it is at this time that the $10 million is needed. People need their roofs back on and their doors repaired and their houses reconstructed. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that some of the houses that have been impacted will need to be rebuilt rather than some sort of exercise that just fixes a door or puts back in a window or just puts something back on the roof.

We have an obligation to deliver this relief as quickly as humanly possible. The National Recovery Fund excludes repairs to property of an estimated value of $200,000 or greater. And here we have to be careful, but, certainly, eligibility for the repair of a home should not be excluded based on that $200,000. Mr. Speaker, although the full assessment of the cost of the damages has not been determined, or let us say we have not yet been given such figures, it is widely agreed that it will be in the range of $20 million.

I heard the First Elected Member say $25 million. Accordingly, additional funds will be required above and beyond what I am talking about. And the [amendment] is calling on the Government to make an assessment at the expiration of this initial amount to determine the outstanding needs.

We must expect that these needs will be far reaching and as a legislature we must reprioritise the expenditure to ensure that these needs are met.

I remind this honourable House of the words of the Leader of Government Business in February of this year when I called on the Government to reduce their spending, which, if heeded, at that time, would have prepared the country to better afford the needed recovery expenses. Indeed, he commented, "not on the best of mornings." So, Mr. Speaker, it is the good people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman who need Government's immediate assistance.

At one of the Government's press briefings the Leader of Government Business said "The Government is going to spare no expense in rebuilding Cayman Brac." How is he going to do this? Is it a little bit here, a little bit here, a little bit here? Or is there going to be a sustained effort to take the bull by the horns and deal with the issue and fix Cayman Brac the way it ought to be fixed rather than, as I said, a little, a little, a little! His colleague, the Minister of Education, said his Government has been demonstrating this.

So I call on the Leader of Government Business and all other honourable Members to what I hear from Cayman Brac, [and that] is, Cayman Brac people want less talk, less meetings. And while I hear some people grumbling here about the calls from Cayman Brac for assistance, we should not grumble, we should not make noise because we know how much noise was made by us when we had our damage here. Let us vote the necessary money to get the job done. It is really time to, as the old adage goes, "Put your money where your mouth is."

And so, Mr. Speaker, I await to hear what the Government is saying in regard to the request before us.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Members, we will now suspend for lunch and resume at 2 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.20 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.34 pm

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

When we took the luncheon break we were debating the amendment to Government Motion No. 8/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I rise to respond to this amendment being proposed by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition on behalf of the Government. Before I take the Motion itself and its resolve clauses, I just want to give a general background which will outline the state of play.

As I was saying, I just want to give a background as to the rationale in the Government's reply by way of addressing the state of play with regard to the rebuilding efforts in Cayman Brac especially, but also inclusive of Little Cayman.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, when we realised what was happening with the storm Paloma, and that Grand Cayman was not being hit with the ferocious winds that we were expecting, and the latest information showed that indeed the system had diverted slightly, just enough to create a possible serious threat to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, we retained contact throughout the event so that we could have a good feel, not only while things were happening but also to be able to respond as swiftly as we possibly could.

Mr. Speaker, those long hours of the morning into that Saturday afternoon kept telling us tales here in Grand Cayman that only served to bring back the horrific memories of the Ivan experience here. So, even before we had any type of windshield survey or people were able to go out to have some glimpse of what the possible damage might be like, we had a fairly good idea of what the reports were going to be.

We kept giving updates as we have moved along, Mr. Speaker, so I will not repeat myself in that regard. But immediately when we moved in to do everything we could to assist in all the NGOs, private sector help that came forth in the immediate aftermath, within days afterwards, the battle was on to get to the point where we could shed the panic, so to speak. And everyone—and I mean everyone—worked real hard to make that happen, and we were able to do that. Now we have transitioned from that point to the rebuilding mode.

Within about a week after the event, we discussed it at length at Cabinet. We did not know exactly what kind of level of funding was actually going to be needed, so what we did was we gave the commitment that whatever it took to deal with the rebuilding of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the Government was going to utilise all necessary resources.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that meant all necessary resources equated to funding, human resources, equipment and whatever else it took. During all of that time, the various government agencies had been mobilised—Public Works, Environmental Health, the Department of Agriculture, various other agencies that were all required, the Department of Children and Family Services, the Health Services Authority—all going through the process of making the necessary assessments and developing the action plans as to what each agency would be doing to normalise situations.

Many of those agencies were looking at the Government assets and the infrastructure over there, namely, the hospital, the schools, the district administration building, post offices, police station, and all of the [other] infrastructure that is there, which are on the asset register for all of the various government agencies to function.

In the meantime, assessments were being done by the Planning Department and other necessary agencies to see what extent the damage was with regard to private homes and other buildings. As the reports kept coming in, we did everything we could to coordinate the various relief organisations and other private sector help that was coming in along with all the other government agencies who are still working during the rebuilding process to bring things to normal.

When the Cabinet met, as I said, not knowing exactly what we were dealing with by way of a dollar figure, in the first instance we approved $2 million for the rebuilding process. And all the other agencies are still spending monies to do all of the other recovery efforts, all the remediation efforts that are being done towards the other government buildings and the government assets. Schools have been repaired and there are still some repairs to be done and such like.

So, we approved the $2 million with the commitment that funds would continue to be approved as was necessary and there would simply be a continuing incremental funding of the process. That is what obtains and that is what will continue. So, in effect, there is no limit; it is simply an ongoing process and all resources that can be put are being put towards normalising the situation over there.

Mr. Speaker, I want to now take a minute and look at the amendment itself. In the first resolve section it says:

“AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government considers making available immediately CI$10 million in the first instance for the repairs and reconstruction of homes on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman with an assessment to be conducted at the exhaustion of this amount to determine the outstanding needs and to make additional funds available;

“AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Government establish a committee to receive applications for financial assistance or to review applications previously submitted to other Government agencies and to determine their eligibility for assistance;”

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to those two resolves, the amendment is asking us to consider making available immediately CI$10 million in the first instance. I have just reported to you that $2 million has been approved with the proviso that incremental amounts will continue to be approved ongoing until the process is complete.

Mr. Speaker, I am not very sure what difference there may be in what I have just explained that Cabinet decided a week after Paloma's passing and what is being sought here. The fact of the matter is that we were not sure—and we still are not sure—how swiftly the money can be used. One of the things we learned from the Ivan experience was that it was one thing to be able to have individuals get estimates for repairs to their homes and to be issuing cheques, and to be able to get the right results for those homeowners. In many instances with the Ivan experience, because the devastation was to the level it was, we had construction companies being formed over night all over the place. The truth is, in many instances the help that was supposed to be had was not realised.

I say this now because I am sure all of us are on the same page with this. We certainly do not want at any time for that to be happening over in Cayman Brac or Little Cayman, and we would be well advised not to make it happen. So, we have to be careful in how the whole process is handled.

The second resolve section speaks to forming a committee. And the mover of the amendment, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, has outlined how they thought this committee should be formed. Mr. Speaker, the committee was formed several Saturdays ago. I cannot remember if it was three or four Saturdays ago. I met with the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and we had fairly long discussions about the way forward with that. That committee is formed.

We have the—

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of elucidation, if the Member would give way.

[inaudible]

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, would the Honourable Leader of Government Business care to inform this House who members of the committee are, and on what basis has the committee been established?

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, if you could give that information during your—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, when we spoke my memory tells me that our agreement was that we would have the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the District Commissioner and his Deputy. We would need to have somebody liaison with that committee who could deal with project management to ensure that after their assessment and approval of any repairs or reconstruction, that there could be follow up to ensure that work was being done, not only on a timely basis, but to the quality level that was needed.

In discussions with both Members, we spoke to a representative from Children and Family Services and we also talked about somebody liaising from the National Recovery Fund and also from Atlantic Star with regard to their efforts to ensure that there was not duplication. That is . . .

Mr. Speaker, I am hearing that there is no committee formed and I really do not understand that because in my conversations up until yesterday I was told that the committee was formed and that they would be meeting. I spoke with the district commissioner up until yesterday morning. I specifically called him yesterday morning and asked him about it.

Now, I do not know what issue that is going to cause. What I do know is that the NRF and the Atlantic Star people, as I understand it (not that I have had personal conversations with them), they would simply rather not necessarily be on the committee making these decisions, which I think makes a lot of sense; but simply there be a liaison between those and the committee so that the committee would not be approving these requests from homeowners for assistance which are accompanied by estimates from contractors and then, at the same time, those same homeowners are on a list to be done by the NRF and/or Atlantic Star. The whole idea was to prevent any duplication of efforts.

That was the need for those to be in contact with the actual committee itself. And I understand the sense in all of that in that the decision-making process for the applications need not have those inputs by way of making the decisions. That is my understanding of it. I do not know what else will be said about that, but that is how I understood it to be.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will have to hear what is not done about that side of it (if it is not done), but that was what we agreed on. The avenue has been set for the funding to be through district administration as is expected and the sensible way to go about it. Once approvals from the committee are completed by way of that process, then the cheques are issued by way of any deposits for the work to be done. And once it is signed off that the work has been done then the contract is completed by way of payment.

So, my understanding is that is the way that committee is supposed to be working.

Mr. Speaker, the last resolve section: “AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the eligibility for this assistance be open to all residents of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and the value of the property or the income of the applicant should not exclude the applicant from eligibility, however, priority should be given to uninsured properties and the most needy.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, I looked at the wording of that very carefully and I actually had a short discussion with the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman to make sure that I understood its intent. As I understood it, Mr. Speaker, the committee that I speak to, are quite able within the parameters that they set, or the criteria they set, for the eligibility of individuals to make application to be able to deal with this.

I just want to use an example. And I used this example prior to this so that I could have an understanding. For instance, you may well have had an individual who had three or four apartment units as one complex, and who lived in one of those units. And that person is a retired person, but the other three units were rental units. And the entire property may have been either completely wrecked or extensively damaged.

You would wonder whether the expectation was that Government funds would restore that entire property to its original state, where the rental units could be rented too. Mr. Speaker, that is going a bit too far, in my view. Just as I expected in the discussion, the thought was in an instance like that, which was probably not a very common situation but you may have had situations that were fairly similar, you would look to assist, to replacing or restoring where the individual lived.

And you might also find a situation like I encountered in one of my visits where you had an elderly person who is as proud as a peacock by way of wanting to be self-sufficient. She had her own little place and she also had a little place she was renting for a few hundred dollars a month. Her own little place had less damage, but the little place she was getting $300 a month for is extensively damaged. But the truth of the matter is, what it is going to take to fix her place is less than what it is going to take to fix the rental unit.

There, you make judgment calls because that income causes her not to need to go to the Department of Children and Family Services to get help to survive.

So those are the instances where you look at the individual circumstances and you make the judgment calls and that is how I foresee that committee functioning.

Mr. Speaker, one of the other difficulties that exist, as I speak, is accommodation. What we have now is because of the many individuals within Government departments who are up there who are actually doing various tasks in the rebuilding process. Much of that is not necessarily related to repairing actual homes, but it is necessary for what they are doing. That included the cleanup and all the remediation works to Government assets. That is an ongoing process and I am thinking there could easily be 60 to 80 people up there from various government agencies doing various tasks as we speak.

We have the good fortune to be able to use two buildings of the Divi Tiara site, which were repaired and put to where individuals could stay in them. That is accommodating several people from the various government departments.

I have to say a very special thank you to Atlantic Star: they have been there from the very beginning with a crew that worked on drying in many of the homes. We have made a firm arrangement with them, Mr. Speaker, where by January 5 they will have two crews of nine up there working for the next six months. When they started off, their major focus was on houses that had zinc roofs because they felt they were the most vulnerable. Those were the homes that they were drying in. And that was with one crew working steady all the time.

Now we have an arrangement in place . . . we all know that everything is going to shut down by the weekend because of the Christmas holidays. But they are going to be back on the ground and we have procured the necessary material to have them working full time. I expect that that same committee will be in liaison with those two construction teams from Atlantic Star. We certainly could not expect them to be working all of that time for free. So we have made an agreement with them whereby they will house all of the workers, they will feed them, and Government will simply be paying a flat fee of $14,000 a week for those two crews with supervisors and all of their tools and everything, and we do not have to worry about accommodation, meals, or anything else. We are certainly happy because we know we could not get a better price. And they have proven to be working not only efficiently but they are doing good quality work. So we have that on board, and that is ongoing.

I have not been able to get an update today on the National Recovery Fund, but I do understand that contracts have been issued for them and that they have begun their work. We have also said to them . . . I think, Mr. Speaker, they have somewhere between $800,000 and $900,000 that they are starting off with in doing the work up there. We have said to them that as they get going whatever funds they need to continue until between all of the various agencies and organisations that are working complete all of the work, the Government will be funding their operation also so that we do not have them stopping when there is work to be done.

So, you see, Mr. Speaker, the plan is one that involves everybody because there is great difficulty with accommodation in getting mass working crews up there. We have the local contractors up there who are working. I do not know at this point in time how many of them are free to take on the contracts that . . . hopefully we will not get any real stumbling blocks with this committee as I am hearing now, and we can get that sorted out swiftly . . . that we can get those going so that whatever labour, and whatever the labour pool is up there that is able to assist.

It is obvious that those homes that are insured and those who are dealing with their own matters are going to need to tap into the labour pool also. I am not sure how much they will be able to do on this side of it, and will simply have to continue to have to supplement that labour pool as best we can making sure that there is place for these work crews to stay.

I was seeking to get the number of homes that have been dried in, and I have not gotten that figure yet. But I know that they have been working steadily, while there is still a lot to be done.

Mr. Speaker, from our own experiences, many of us had the same or similar misfortune to what both the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are experiencing with their own homes, so we know. We feel and understand the difficulty.

I have a lot of family in the Brac and I have a lot of friends in the Brac. And I have gotten the calls and I have followed up and I have explained to them, and I do the best I can. And I know how difficult it is for the elected Members because people . . . let me put it this way: It is only fair that in these circumstances they are thinking of their well-being more than anyone else's. That is only human nature. But it is physically impossible to have a crew working on every single house simultaneously.

I say this once more, and I am sure that there is no argument with this. What we do not want to happen is that in our efforts to expedite the situation that we find ourselves having no control whatsoever on the quality of the labour provided for these people who are so anxious to return to their normal state. It is a difficult situation and one that we have to continue to work at and manage the best way we know how.

Mr. Speaker, what the [amendment] is calling for, by and large, is already in train. We do not have to consider it because it is being done. The [amendment] asks for a $10 million amount to be considered in the first instance. I am saying to your good self and to honourable Members in this House that we have set absolutely no ceiling. Those amounts will be incrementally approved as the amounts are required.

I spoke with the Financial Secretary asking him what is the best way for us to deal with this. We are acting on the advice . . . and I am not pinning him down, but we are acting on his advice based on the way the government system works, based on the cash flow that continues. Once it gets to a point where funds are needed and the funds are not there, then there really is no difference in the effort. The same thing is being achieved.

This is not one that the Government wishes to come to the table to argue. I have just explained what the Government's position is with the various requests and the resolve sections of the [amendment]. I am absolutely certain, as I have heard from the First Elected Member off the microphone that there seems to be some problem with this committee. I will simply have to listen to that, find out what seemingly is not going right, and make sure that that is corrected if that is the case. I knew nothing about it. There was no discussion with me about it prior to this. As far as I was concerned, based on my last conversation with the district commissioner the committee was functioning. So I will have to hear what is wrong about that.

Mr. Speaker, I have explained the Government's position. It is not a situation where the Government needs to accept this [amendment] in order to act on anything. The Government is already doing what it has to do. The requests that are being asked for are being dealt with. Perhaps the method that the Government has employed differs from what the [amendment] asks for with this $10 million amount, but anyone looking at it objectively can easily understand that there is no less benefit in the way the Government is dealing with it than in the way the request asks for it to be done.

I trust that the position has been explained and I will wait to hear what else I may not have covered. Of course, in this particular amendment I will not have the opportunity to speak, but it is part of a Government Motion to which I have not spoken and I will simply have to wait to hear, and perhaps I will use that opportunity, with your permission, to make any response that is necessary.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

The First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

For the record, let me first beg your indulgence for the state of my attire as the honourable House would have realised that this amendment motion was seeking to find its way on this Floor since Thursday of last week, and either by way of utilisation of suspension of Standing Orders, and even introduction of addendums, it did not find its way to the Floor until this morning.

Mr. Speaker, I called the parliament yesterday to indicate the difficulty I was experiencing getting over from my constituency yesterday in that I was not able to get any flights at all after having spent the entire morning trying to get to Grand Cayman. In fact, the only flight that was made available was for tomorrow morning, which I have already booked, sir, and paid a ticket for.

To my disappointment and great surprise (I was in the District Administration Office, having dressed this morning for the continuation of distribution of supplies to the various members of my constituency), not only was I in the meeting with the District Commissioner, Deputy, and waiting on the Second Elected Member to meet, it was then that I received word that somehow this Motion had—surprise, surprise—appeared on the agenda today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Members would fully understand the urgency within my constituency that I would not have been here, as has been the case with the Second Elected Member who has chosen not to be here (at Parliament) for some two weeks. And although he was in Grand Cayman last Friday, did not take the opportunity to come to Parliament, I too had urgent constituency matters. But, because I had a Motion, Mr. Speaker, and amendment on this Floor that I thought, and still in fact think, was of utmost importance to the Sister Islands and to the Cayman Islands as a whole . . . because if we do not pull through this, Mr. Speaker, it will certainly affect Grand Cayman's revenue as well. So, hence the reason I am dressed casually in a T shirt, a pair of jeans and a pair of slippers.

As you know, that is not my normal attire. But when I got elected back in 1996, I did tell the constituency of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman that, at all material times they would have a voice in this House. And that is what transpired today.

Mr. Speaker, I am also wishing to place on record (before getting into the meat of this amendment) that although I was able through divine intervention . . . the jet that had been chartered to go over to the Brac this evening for a very worthy cause with the partnership of the Chamber of Commerce and the Minister's Association, the Cayman Airways jet is broken down and they have had to rush around to get additional CAL Express there. As a result, when I called at 11.30 am from the District Commissioner's office I was informed that one such flight was coming back across empty.

On getting to the Airport, Mr. Speaker (so that you can understand the background and difficulties that we have in getting to this Parliament—and we do not take it lightly, nor do we take it for granted), one of my constituents who became direly sick this morning, the flight that I had booked and paid for to come on at 12.05, had to be immediately converted into an air ambulance to take out one of my constituents to Grand Cayman.

And when I say divine intervention, Mr. Speaker, when I first heard of the illness this morning, I was in much worse condition handing out water and everything else, and I was not able to go into the hospital to pray with her at that time. But as it worked out, I was able after some negotiation to ask the family if I could get a seat on the air ambulance so that I could be here today to debate this amendment. And they graciously allowed me to do so, which meant that I had a captive audience and I was able to pray for that constituent and her family.

Mr. Speaker, I say that to say that while we play around with business papers and order papers and politics and whatever else Members want to play around with, there is a real world happening in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Let's make no mistake about that. That is why I get absolutely passionate about that.

Yes, I too went through Ivan. I never imagined that some four years after we would be in a situation, not only from my own personal loss for my farm and my property, as is the case for the Second Elected Member, tremendous loss to his own businesses and property. But the Honourable Leader will know from our discussions, and I give him the benefit of the doubt. I really believe that he feels what is going on in the Sister Islands, however, Mr. Speaker, to play semantics with this [amendment] to say that it is the same thing and they are already doing it . . .

Mr. Speaker, we did not have conversation until after the fact. When this [amendment] was filed on Thursday last, he graciously gave me an audience. And I am eternally grateful for that day that we spent on Saturday at the Command Centre where we had various discussions, where we talked about the formation of a committee and about the long term sustainability of Cayman Brac where, perhaps, an economic study could be done. And he graciously received that, and I am looking forward to that long term planning.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are in a situation where long term planning is just for the books. We have a situation where we have need of urgent attention on Cayman Brac. This is where the difference comes. It is not just in methodology. As I understand, as of today (unless it was sent while I was in route to Grand Cayman), CI$1 million last Friday, I believe, was deposited for the utilisation via district administration and this committee when it is formed.

Let me say at this juncture that when we talked about the formation of the committee we talked, as the Leader rightly said, about my being included along with the Second Elected Member, the District Commissioner and/or his Deputy. We asked for, perhaps, Mr. Jonathan Jackson, and we got a reasonable explanation where he did not have a deputy in Grand Cayman and the Minister responsible for Works could not at this particular time release him. But because we had Mr. Tristan Hydes, we were convinced that they performed similar functions save and except Jonathan had hands-on experience with East End's experience with the luxury of the $3 million from Mrs. Susan Olde. Unfortunately, we do not have a Susan Olde, Mr. Speaker, in Cayman Brac. In fact, if we do, to date she has not come forward.

I am grateful to the good Samaritans in the form of Mr. Linton Tibbetts who, I understand, has given some US$250,000 initially to his brother, Mr. Burnard to give out to needy persons. Within three or four days, that has changed location and it has now been put into the hands of the personal assistant of the Second Elected Member, Ms. Walton, for them to distribute. And also, Mr. Steve Foster, Capt. Eldon, and Capt. Charles, have also given a generous donation to the Second Elected Member for distribution. So the private sector has and continues to do its role.

Mr. Speaker, I was not then at that meeting, neither am I now, satisfied that private sector must lead the way. Government has a moral obligation; Government has a legal obligation to attend to the needs of Cayman Brac. And I did say before, and it bears repeating, that I wish to go on record to thank the Honourable Minister of Works for what he has done. Obviously, his budget was like everyone else's—stretched in these economic times. But he has found it within his budget not only to allocate resources from the human capital perspective, but machinery . . . and he has also taken the time to come across on Wednesdays. It makes a difference when you sit down face to face.

When we sat down with the Honourable Leader that Saturday, I am here to tell you, Mr. Speaker and Members of this honourable House, that Saturday gone a week ago (it certainly was not more than three weeks ago, the Saturday after we filed our [amendment]), we got more accomplished in having eye contact and discourse at that time, the Second Elected Member and I . . . and, Mr. Speaker, the Leader got up today and said that one week after the passing of Paloma that his Cabinet got together and approved these funds.

Excellent! Kudos!

My question then is, Mr. Speaker, we are now into the 18th of December, Paloma hit the Sister Islands, and more in particular Cayman Brac, on the 8th. Is it ironic (perhaps it is) that it is now Motion 8 that we are dealing with? What has taken such a protracted lacuna between one week, seven days onto 18, for him to only get those funds—and not even $2 million as I understand it, but $1 million to the Brac last week.

As I stand here today, none of that money has yet been spent, Mr. Speaker, because we want to make sure we are transparent; and, yes, we want to make sure there is accountability, because, yes, there is still an office called the Auditor General. And I certainly want to make sure, in light of the facts that we were recently told that there are no accounts filed—that when the chickens come home to roost, with this substantial amount of money, not only has the committee been properly formulated either through his Ministry or through Cabinet because it is going to be dealing with a substantial amount of money.

As eager as I am to assist the constituents, I need that insurance. I was happy for the oral communication that the committee would be formed, but as I stand here today, no formal or informal communication has been made to me. As far as I understand, when I left abruptly the 12 o'clock meeting where we were going to be dealing with gas vouchers and looking at this form . . . which brings me to another important point, Mr. Speaker.

This form, entitled "Sister Islands Hurricane Recovery Fund RE: Paloma Application for Assistance" . . . actually, this is the Government's draft version. This was presented to me today. No complaints about that. But what I will make a complaint about, Mr. Speaker, is that what we used in Gustav has been in circulation by the Second Elected Member, a member of the PPM Government, since two or three days ago. Basically . . . and I wish that I'd had more notice of this meeting because I would have produced it and laid it for the public to see. This is the Gustav form that we used, a very rudimentary form because we were just dealing with a mere $300,000.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, because of the onslaught of Hurricane Paloma, we were only able to reach less than $200,000. Thank God. Because of that we had $100,000 we could access for gas relief. I thank the Honourable Leader for allowing us to access that capital that was on the island because had we to wait for God knows what was going to happen with the price of gasoline and diesel there within the Islands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, not only were the amended Gustav forms . . . and no committee amended those because I made it my business to send my personal assistant to his personal assistant, which now seems to be the hub of everything including the school Christmas concerts in the supermarket. Be that as it may . . . to get a copy to see whether there had been a subcommittee, or whether there had been some other link that was missing why constituents were given . . . and lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, I discovered that not only was he using Gustav forms, but a black marker had been taken to mark out “Gustav” with “Paloma” handwritten in, knowing full well that that form was not authorised or authenticated. If that is not so, I am willing to sit down now for the Leader to get up, or any Member of his Cabinet to say that they authorised it. That is why I am asking about this committee. If I am going to be on a committee—and I am more than happy, Mr. Speaker, to accommodate the Government or anyone to serve my role on the committee . . . As a matter of fact, I would extend that appreciation to say I am grateful, I am appreciative to be a part of the committee, as was the case in Gustav, and I thought it worked quite well. However, this committee has to have more roots. It needs to be more formally established and it needs to be done from yesterday because we are talking from our amendment for a consideration of $10 million as a first instance.

So, that gives a legitimate expectation that if and when the Government got around to making a proper financial and social analysis of the needs . . . and we know that has been started because the Honourable Minister responsible for Children and Family Affairs came and met with us with his chief officer and presented various statistics to show where just under 500 households on the Brac had been visited, house to house, and they had down priority as far as need assessments and various other categories that needed to be considered.

The forms have been completed. Statistics have been gathered. And we do not need anyone—and I do not care who it is, I make no apologies . . . my father left me no riches. But he left me a good name. And the Good Book says that a good name is rather to be chosen than riches. And if I am going to be involved in this recovery and rebuilding process, which I want to be, it must be done properly. The committee must be formulated properly, whether it takes a Ministerial Cabinet paper, whether it takes a letter from the Minister, whatever. And I need to be assured, Mr. Speaker, that it is not just left where we left it Saturday two weeks ago, that I put the question to the Honourable Leader (and so did the Second Elected Member) for various persons to be on it to ensure that we had the expertise and we had the right amount for a meeting.

We also needed to establish that there was a quorum for this committee to function properly and effectively and in a very modern and transparent and accountable fashion, which means that at the very least we needed to establish that there was a quorum of three. I would take that a bit further that if the First and Second Elected Members were going to be involved, that that quorum should comprise of both myself, the Second Elected Member and either a representative from the Ministry, which would include district administration and/or their delegate, to ensure that the Minister, the Honourable Leader, would be in the know at all material times as to what was happening with the money, because ultimately he would have to give answers to the Auditor General or his own Cabinet, ministerial colleagues and to this honourable House through Finance Committee. But also, that we had those extra bodies to keep us in check as it were, the “Delmiras” that we requested to be there.

Mr. Speaker, that does not take an inordinate amount of time. It is now two weeks. And, to date, I have received no oral or written confirmation that that committee has been established. I am cognisant (for the avoidance of doubt) that a meeting was called yesterday for the same committee—using “committee” lightly because we are an ad hoc committee. The First and Second Elected Members, the district commissioner and the deputy sits in, but he was not an integral part of the committee, to deal with gas vouchers.

The DC intimated that we would look at this form. But as I left from his office mid-day, unless I am speaking some other language (and I am pretty good at Spanish and English), it was not my understanding that this committee had been established.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I am making so much of this is not to show up the Leader. I do not have to do that. The talk show is doing that, the public is doing it and I am sure other quadrants of the community are doing it. Once you are a politician, once you are a leader that happens irrespective of who you are. But I want to make sure that if we are dealing with millions of dollars and we already have the experience of what happened in Ivan where the Leader has indicated that people formed construction companies and their work was substandard, that we know what we are doing.

And, Mr. Speaker, the reason why the methodology is so very important, and it is not just a matter of splitting hairs, is as follows: We already have an excellent idea of persons who are in need; we have had Planning go around; we have had the National Recovery Fund; we have had Social Services go around; the Second Elected Member and I went around; and I am sure the Leader has gone around when he was there. He has had his visual presentation, he has had his technical staff there, the ones from Grand Cayman—excellent staff—working. Other ministerial colleagues have been there and I am sure [they] have reported either in caucus or in Cabinet. We know what the need is.

What we need is easy, effective access to the funds. The difference therefore is, Mr. Speaker, with what we are proposing, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and I, and my colleagues on this side, is for an immediate $10 million because the need that we have seen, and I am sure he has been told by his technical staff because I have been in meetings where they are throwing out figures of $20 million. In fact, the Second Elected Member thinks it is going to be somewhere between $25 million and $30 million.

We see the need there. With $1 million (although he indicated $2 million and I take him at his word, I have no reason to disbelieve the additional million will eventually arrive on the Brac), it means that once we have utilised that . . . and that won't take very long if we meet long enough, which could be one meeting, Mr. Speaker, because the forms are in there. And I am not talking about those unauthorised forms that were circulated this week by the Second Elected Member. Forms and information have been there from various agencies that we have to work with, because if we don't work with them we could find that we are approving money that the National Recovery Fund has approved, or this private money from the Kirkconnells, Fosters and Mr. Tibbetts have approved, and we find that the people who need it most may not be receiving it.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you of a particular case (and I will not call the madam's name, because of her privacy and the confidential nature) but she did attend the office after realising that it had been moved for whatever reason from Mr. Burnard's General Store to the Second Elected Member and she was told that she should come to me because I had money. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why I am insisting that this committee is properly formed so that when they come we see the application based on need; we don't see the potential for political expediency, we don't see the cultural differentiation, we don't see the social demarcation, we don't see the optimism for the voters' list being extended . . . I have no time for that nonsense.

My phone is bombarded. I am sure Members' phones on that side are bombarded, either text or calls. People come knocking on my door all the time. I go out in my community as I was dressed to do with water delivery and other deliveries this morning and I see what is happening for whatever reason, Mr. Speaker.

We have been receiving more rain in the month of December since Paloma than I can ever remember. The wind has been up, and thankfully so because it will hopefully alleviate with what we are expecting to be a gigantic utility cost. We sit here and we hear about CUC and the high cost. But the unspoken word is Cayman Brac Power and Light. In fact, when the last Member for Cayman Brac had the audacity to mention it, an immediate meeting was called and they were warned that the company was going to be shut down because somebody dared to question it.

Mr. Speaker, I know, having been the minister responsible where CUC fell before, that their light poles, their lights are not insured. So who is going to pick up the tab? Is it not going to be the Brac consumers? Or are they going to make an application to the Government for subsidy? Either way, it is going to fall back on the consumers, Mr. Speaker.

So we ought to realise that it is a great difference between the $2 million and the $10 million. The need, we know. The Leader has acknowledged; his Government knows. And if they would come out and say, yes, we've seen the need . . . I believe every one of them has been there. And, Mr. Speaker, we have to take this against the background that visitors are not being allowed to the Sister Islands. In fact, as I understand it, we are expecting a cruise ship to visit sometime mid-January for a mere two hours. They are asking for a beach experience. And we are having difficulty getting that communicated to them that, yes, they can come.

Mr. Speaker, we need to start doing whatever we can do to get our revenue back up because there is a Christmas season, but there is not a Santa Claus who is going to be pumping out money. Somewhere along the lines the chickens will come home to roost. And to get up and say that we were given $2 million today and it is going to be open-ended . . . that is like saying we have a blank page for the Constitution, knowing full well that is not the case.

It sounds good, it's flowery language, and it would be receptive had I not been a veteran politician and know that that means nothing. What that means is that as soon as the committee is formulated and we eventually get to meet and approve the proper form for members of our community to go and fill out which is simple, transparent, is intertwined with every element in every sense of accountability, that it can be open to scrutiny taking in mind that come January we will have another transparent animal, as it were, called "Freedom of Information" where things can be asked for and they will no longer be put in a corner saying it cannot be done.

We need to make sure that it is done right, Mr. Speaker. The method that the Leader has put forward on behalf of his Government means that as soon as the $1 million, or whenever the extra million comes is utilised, and it won't be very long, we will have to come back to him, either through a paper or through Cabinet to get it. And if that is not the case (I see the Leader shaking his head) then what is the big deal, knowing it is going to take more than $2 million? Is it because the Government is broke? Is it because they have no money? Is it because they do not want to touch the reserve that I made a passionate plea for some days ago, some weeks ago now, that they said was put aside. Every Government has said it is put aside for a rainy day. We have had more, Mr. Speaker, than a rainy day.

I just cannot understand what it is that the Government finds so hard to get the money over to Cayman Brac. It was intimated as an innuendo when the Leader made his submission that, you know, perhaps the local labour force will not be able to meet the need. Has that been established? And, if so, Mr. Speaker, if it is established, what measures have been put in place to ensure that Caymanians . . . because out of many we are one. We are still the three Cayman Islands. There are Caymanian companies here and some of them are even Cayman Brackers. Are they available? Can they come up with a compromise with the local market where they either become subcontractors, partners, whether there is an understanding that, yes, we have more than enough work and we need help . . . because what cannot happen. And he said a lot of things that cannot happen. But what cannot happen, Mr. Speaker, is, for this to be protracted on through 20 May, 31(sic) June, 30 November next year to stretch out the work to make sure that the local chaps are kept happy.

In a normal situation, any good politician would think that way. But, Mr. Speaker, we are in a state of emergency. Perhaps the Governor has not used his red ink pen to say that, and perhaps the National Hurricane Committee (or whatever it is now called) has stepped down because Paloma has passed. But Paloma has only passed on NOAA. It has only passed on the Weather Station. Paloma is alive and well.

As a matter of fact, my niece said last night as we were driving on the south side and the wind was picking up, "Aunt Julie, is this the tail of Paloma?" because the weather has been so uncertain since the passing of Paloma. It's Christmas. The Government has made its 'carrot' offer with the financial assistance and the seamen's bonus. That will boost things. The Chamber has partnered this evening. That will address the whole man—the mind, the body, and the soul. What is most important? Humble though it may be, affordable or not affordable, mortgaged or not mortgaged, is a person's home.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader has said that they are doing all they can. Maybe he can explain to me so that I can understand. Is 'doing all they can,' sending up trailer homes, which are still as I speak not in a position to be occupied? After I got on Rooster, I know that a call was made to public works to take up a gallon of white paint to paint out the profanity that was on one of them which should not have even left George Town to come there. But the inside is in such a state, the electrical, the plumbing, the preparation of the site. And I am not blaming the workers. The workers are carrying out the mandate from their managers, and the buck has to stop at the Leader.

If he does not know, he needs to know what is happening there. It is adjacent to the district from whence I was born, and I visit every day unless I am in Grand Cayman or off Island. Up until last night they are still trying to work on the plumbing.

I know of families where an American couple who visit seasonally allowed one family with four children to stay in their garage. He is coming back this weekend and they have nowhere to go. And what makes it worse is that that particular family got things approved to be in one of the affordable homes. And let me set the record straight here, Mr. Speaker. I heard up until yesterday that they built six affordable homes on the bluff. Well, I found four. Perhaps since that Leader is responsible for Lands and Survey, when he gets up to respond he can tell me where I can find the other two.

Yes, it was good that they were there to house workers. But let the truth be told. They could have moved in, subject to some paper work, I am reliably informed, prior to Paloma. But they were waiting for a convenient time for the Leader to come to do an official opening and a walk through of the buildings. Fine; he's a politician. Let him have his day. But, Mr. Speaker, today as I speak, those properties have been vacated by the workers. I understand reliably that everything is ready except for one dryer, which is a luxury in the time of an emergency. And they could be moved in as of now. Again, they are not moved in. Can we have a opening and a walk through tomorrow so that that family can get in and not have to be looking at being homeless and joining the other statistics?

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to forget what is happening in the Sister Islands. And I say that for myself. When I come in here and I go into the common room, as I have done for the past couple of weeks, and I see the television, CNN news, and get the wonderful meals, for a split second I am tempted to forget that 90 miles away my people are suffering. I am sure they will get their foot soldiers to come up with deflectors, like the hamburger nonsense that came on the radio some days ago.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have to get up here and make speeches or respond to those imbeciles that get on and make non-factual statements, because I believe in an Almighty God. And He says vengeance is not [yours], I will repay. Today, in my respectful opinion, and nobody can hurt me for that, it was orchestrated for this motion to come on knowing full well I was in the Brac. I spoke to the Leader this morning on a constituent matter. No mention was made that this was coming up today. I had called parliament telling them I could not get a seat. If we have now gone from 8 November to 18 [December] and it was not deemed urgent to get monies over there, what would one night more matter when I had a confirmed seat today or tomorrow? But thankfully there is a God. Although I had to hitch a ride on an air ambulance, God worked it out that even though I did not have time to go and pick up a rental car for the next three hours, someone was at the airport who graciously brought me to the front of this Parliament to make sure that a voice was heard.

Mr. Speaker, I could not promise my constituents that the Government would hear and duly and positively consider what I had to say, or my honourable Leader. One thing I could guarantee them was that their position would be put forward. And when the Government votes—and I will put them on notice that I will be asking for a division . . . because this day, Mr. Speaker, must go down in the records to see that we have a Leader who is from the Brac, though not born in my constituency—many of my constituents had to go abroad for medical—but by blood, by relation, he is from the Brac. He lives and eats and feeds from the Brac. And although he runs in George Town, Mr. Speaker, there are a substantial number of Cayman Brackers who vote in George Town. He must know, he must understand, he must be cognisant that if there is no difference between what our [amendment] is bringing except the methodology, can he not, in his articulate, logical way of thinking say, Okay, if the money is available (and he has not said that it is not available) . . . if the statistics are there, if the need is there, and at this stage there should no longer be the conjunction "if". He knows as a matter of fact the need is there, I am sure his honourable colleague, the Minister for Family Affairs, has shared with him the same information he shared with the Command Centre, the First and Second Elected Members for Cayman Brac, just those needs alone, Mr. Speaker, and we will have to be calling back and saying the money is finished, can we get it over.

Mr. Speaker, this is not dolly house. This is a real world. We are not playing with some Utopia. Have people not yet realised what happened on Cayman Brac? And, if not, I invite him and anyone else when you are there this afternoon for the function with the Chamber of Commerce and the Minister's Association to look into the eyes of the people. The eyes are the windows to their hearts. You will see the pain they are going through, and the suffering.

Yes, I congratulate, I am eternally appreciative and grateful, Mr. Speaker, for Atlantic Star and for all of the private sector, for those who sent all of the things they sent. The first stage is over: the food, the generators, the water, to an extent the tarpaulin. We are in the building, the construction process. Every time it rains, it gets worse and worse. It is going to cost the Government more and more money.

What I thought I was going to hear today was that the Leader had caucused with his reasonable group in his Cabinet, that they had considered that we are not that many degrees apart, the goals are the same, we want to provide for every need that is reasonable in the Brac, and that money is available. He said that he liaised with the Financial Secretary. And although we do not have public accounts, surely they know what the day to day activity is. We just had the Strategic Policy Statement. Somebody in Government must know what we have in the said expression that we have a 90 day reserve.

Reserve for what? If the Brac does not fall into the prequalification—as we were very surprised to hear it did not fall into their wonderful insurance prequalification—are we going to fall through the gap yet one more time? For what! For the satisfaction, for the indulgence, for the therapeutic, egotistical, massages that they need?

Mr. Speaker, we need to take our blinkers off. Yes, Election is 20 May. Every person in this [honourable] House who has done what he should have done in the past 4 years, the past 12 years, or whatever number of years, should not have to fear 20 May. In fact, we look forward to it because that is an expression, an attestation of the endorsement that the public will once again put faith in those Members who have performed. So why are we here wrangling and fighting over the method knowing full well that the $1 million will be like a sponge?

We have difficulties just getting phones answered when we call from Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, [much less] getting money sent across. If it took one week, Mr. Speaker, for the Leader and his Government in this electronic age in which we now live to do a wire transfer, because I am sure it was not sent by courier (not at the time I heard it arrived at CNB), and we still have not gotten the other $1 million deposit . . . is it going to take until next December to get the other 8, 10 or 20?

Mr. Speaker, I came not only inappropriately dressed for this parliament, which I have the utmost respect for, but I also came against the background that I do not even have a confirmed seat back to the Brac this evening, having confirmed this morning with Pastor Al that I would be there speaking on behalf of the honourable Leader making a two minute remark. But life calls for reprioritisation, and that was a decision I had to make. Somehow, somewhere I felt that the Leader would be able to convince his Government after being reminded (for the want of a better term), and after knowing that he himself will have to go there and be faced with it again, that he would call his ministerial colleagues together and say, Look fellows, this is what we did. At the time it was the best that we could do. We thought it was the best method. But hindsight is better than what we had at the time. We now know it is going to take more. The $10 million is not an unreasonable amount.

Mr. Speaker, because of how our Standing Orders are, we can only say "consider". It still gives them that wonderful privilege of saying, we have considered, we are the Government and we will now take a decision to give the $10 million.

When I first heard that the $1 million had been received, Mr. Speaker, I thought maybe it was a Scribner's error and the zero had somehow disappeared in the transaction. But after hearing today, and that's against the background of our discussions and the Leader having some hesitations in accepting it. Anybody can change his mind, except a dead man and a fool, Mr. Speaker. And that Leader falls in neither of the two categories.

So, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down, I wish through this avenue, through this forum, through this honourable House, to ask the Honourable Leader, would you take a break, Mr. Leader? Meet with your honourable colleagues. Meet with the Third Official Member and say this is a situation at hand, and approve this amendment.

Fate has worked it that I was not even a mover. So that is no longer a consideration. I am just an official bystander. Yes, perhaps with a vested interest, because I live it, I breathe it, and I face it every day. What are the overriding factors preventing a positive resolution to this amendment today? Have they not yet been revealed?

Mr. Speaker, the glory will be the Government's; the beneficiaries will be the inhabitants of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman; and, yes, by indirect beneficiary routes, curious though it may be, will be the revenue of these beloved Cayman Islands. The sooner we are given that positive jump start, that positive boost that we need now; the sooner we can once again embark upon our road to financial independence and reclaim what has made us resilient Cayman Brackers and Little Caymanians, and Caymanians in general; the pride of receiving income after hard work; the pride of being recipients of the fish and finding diverse ways to utilise the fish to supply our needs so that we don't operate in a deficit.

Mr. Speaker, knowing that we are facing dire economic circumstances, come January next year, who is to say that using Government's proposed method when we come back Government will not say revenue is down—as I am sure it is going to be, unless there is some economic miracle? But Cayman Brac will slip from six to seven, down to eight or ten.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford at this point in time to operate in the speculative. We know all that we need to know today to approve this most important, timely and relevant amendment. I ask my honourable colleagues on both sides of this House to do as the advertisement does, where you see the man walking behind. He gets a ticket and his car is chained up, and he gets his wonderful cushioned foot sole, and he decides all of a sudden that it's not so bad being chained up, he can now walk.

Remove whatever unseen chains, unseen shackles that are preventing Government from approving this resolution. Take a break here and now, Mr. Speaker. Re-think, reprioritise, re-evaluate and do the right thing.

We heard almost four years ago that help was on the way. And it was obvious by the majority, colossal, gigantic landside that the people bought that concept that help was on the way. Help is needed today, Mr. Speaker. It is an opportune time for this Government to show that help is no longer on the way, that help has arrived and that they are going to do the right thing.

Mr. Speaker, I have no other conclusion to make, via the process of deductive reasoning, that if the Government for whatever reason or justification or circumstance not to approve this amendment, that the needs of Cayman Brac fell on the sacrificial altar of the PPM Government for alternative motives, which I dare not even hear.

May it please you, and may God Almighty himself guide through wisdom, knowledge and understanding as we take a step back and consider what we are going to vote on here today. It is not an ordinary vote, Mr. Speaker; it is a vote that will go down in history. It is a vote that will make a difference in the lives, from young to old, rich and poor, black and white, from Spot Bay to West End, from Point of Sand to Boatswain Village, to Blossom Village, Little Cayman, one that the Leader can get on the plane this evening and proudly announce, the Government is here, your help has stepped off.

I don't even care if he mentions my name. What matters most is that when this committee is properly formalised and we can have our first meeting, which I hope could be tomorrow if the Parliament is not meeting, or Saturday or Sunday. It's an emergency time, and although Sunday is a holy day for me, I will meet because the need is there.

This calls for extraordinary action in extraordinary times. And it will take extraordinary men and women here today to do the extraordinary thing.

May it please you, [Mr. Speaker] and I thank you and honourable Members for your kindest indulgence.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Members, I have been given notice that it is being proposed that we work a bit later today to try and finish business, either this evening or tomorrow.

So, at this time, I am proposing that we take an afternoon suspension to return at 4.15.

Proceedings suspended at 3.55 pm

Proceedings resumed at 4.45 pm

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. Does any other Member wish to speak on the amendment to Government Motion No. 8/08-09? [pause]

Honourable Minister for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I did not intend to debate this proposed amendment to Government Motion No. 8/08-09, but after hearing the contribution from the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, I am left with no choice but to debate the [amendment.]

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the [amendment] speaks directly to the repairs to homes in Cayman Brac, the debate on the [amendment] has been much wider. To those who may not be aware, it might appear to them that the Government has done little to nothing to assist Cayman Brac and Little Cayman in their recovery.

It is unfortunate that we are at this point in the recovery of our Sister Islands, because I heard commitments being made in the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Paloma from the Opposition, that they would not play politics with this issue. Mr. Speaker, what we have been subjected to this afternoon is clearly the playing of politics.

Moment of Interruption

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, my apologies, but we have gone past the hour of interruption. [May I have a motion to suspend Standing Order 10(2) to continue beyond the hour of 4.30?]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move the suspension of the relevant Standing Order to allow proceedings to continue beyond the hour of 4.30 pm.

Suspension of Standing Order 10(2)

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this House do continue beyond the hour of adjournment, which is 4.30. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed. Standing Order 10(2) suspended to allow proceedings to continue beyond the hour of 4.30 pm

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry honourable Minister.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As I was saying, I think it is most unfortunate that the plight of the people of Cayman Brac would be used for political gains, because that is essentially what we were subjected to this afternoon.

Listening to the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, a friend of mine, I was quite surprised and taken back by the debate because I know she is aware of how much Government has done up until this point to assist with the recovery of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Speaker, in the immediate aftermath of the hurricane, I took one of the first available flights over to Cayman Brac because I have, as you know, responsibility for two of the key pieces of infrastructure—the airport and the seaport—that would be necessary in order to ensure the quick and efficient recovery of our Sister Islands.

Mr. Speaker, after some inspections we were able to get the airport up and running. I was very grateful to have there with us, not just the management of the Gerrard Smith International Airport, but one of our senior captains, Captain Steve Scott, who was able to inspect the runway and determined that we had 500 feet of useable runway, which allowed us to bring in the Cayman Airways 737-300 jets late that Sunday evening.

The same was done for the seaport. We determined that that infrastructure was intact. And, although the warehouse had been destroyed, the dock itself was intact and that as soon as the weather cleared they would be able to receive cargo.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that I did immediately was to instruct Cayman Airways that all relief supplies and cargo supplies going to Cayman Brac would go free of cost and that anyone who needed to be evacuated from Cayman Brac would be evacuated free of cost. And, Mr. Speaker, I am going on to mention more, but I am saying all of this to say that while that came at no cost to the people of Cayman Brac, somebody had to pay for it. The Government supported those “freedom flights”.

We had other instances. We had the work that was done through the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau, through the Cayman Islands Development Bank. We made overdraft facilities immediately available for small businesses and for farmers. We immediately put in place a moratorium on all loans that were in place with the Cayman Islands Development Bank to assist and aid with the recovery of small businesses in Cayman Brac.

Mr. Speaker, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac herself has acknowledged the work done through the Ministry of the Minister of Communications, Works and Infrastructure in terms of the cleanup. We know that we worked as rapidly as we possible could to repair the schools and to get them back in order. We have had some success with that, notwithstanding some recent setbacks with vandalism to the Cayman Brac High School.

Mr. Speaker, I am saying all of that to say that this all comes at a cost. There is a cost associated with all of the recovery so far, but the Government has not gone out there and said, oh well, we have already spent whatever the sum is on the recovery for Cayman Brac and, therefore, we are going to put that out there are some public relations exercise. We are not going to play politics with the situation of the people in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. They deserve better, Mr. Speaker.

When you look at the [amendment] that speaks to the Government making available this $10 million for repair and construction of homes in Cayman Brac, that process has already commenced. That too comes at a cost, and the Government is picking up the tab for that.

The Government has indicated that we are actually prepared to go further than the [amendment] has suggested, because all this [amendment] is about is for somebody . . . and, certainly the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman would be one of the first to say, Hey look what I have done for you all. I got $10 million for you all to aid in the recovery. The Government has said that we are prepared to go further than that. We have said that there is no ceiling on the recovery efforts for Cayman Brac. We understand how important it is for the recovery of Cayman Brac to take place as quickly as possible. So we have said that whatever the cost is, the Government is prepared to fund it. But we fund it on an incremental basis on an as-needed basis in the same way, Mr. Speaker, that was done immediately following Hurricane Ivan.

There was no $50 million or $60 million approved in one fell swoop; it was approved on the basis of what was required. And at the end of the day, yes, there was a total tab. Of course, there's always a total tab at the end of the recovery. But you do it on an as-needed basis.

So, while this [amendment] speaks to an immediate amount of $10 million, we are simply saying that we are prepared, and we have said from the very beginning that we are prepared to do more than $10 million if that is what it takes. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we see the [amendment] for what it is, which is simply a motion to play politics with the plight of the people in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Opposition is expecting from the Government, but we also know what transpired in the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Ivan in Cayman when there were amounts of money, again on an incremental basis, but amounts approved and sent out with no plan and absolute chaos existed and there were all sorts of issues and allegations of corruption. We do not have to be reminded of the MC Restoration issues and all of those issues.

Mr. Speaker, we must learn from our mistakes. Why would the Government want to go down that road again? Why? When we have in place now, following Hurricane Ivan, not just a Hurricane Preparedness Plan that we can be proud of as a country, but a Hurricane Recovery Plan that we can be proud of as a country. So, Mr. Speaker, why not follow that plan in an orderly fashion in the way the Government is doing instead of using the ad hoc approach that was used in the past with all of the associated issues that came with that.

Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the people in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman as I did when I visited there following the hurricane that they would not be left alone to do this recovery and that the Government and, indeed, the people of Grand Cayman would be with them every step of the way during the recovery process. Mr. Speaker, we have proven that so far, and we are going to continue with our efforts to do so. All I ask, as we asked from the very beginning, that in circumstances like these it is not the time to play politics. We have an election looming. The election is in May 2009. There will be plenty of time to play politics, and perhaps the Opposition is warming up for that. But I would suggest to them that they should not use the situation in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman to start their political games. It is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and the Government will not engage in it.

Suffice it to say that the Government is going to fund the recovery of Cayman Brac to the extent that we need to fund it. In other words, whatever it is going to take to ensure that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman recover, that is what it is going to take and that is what the Government is prepared to fund because either way you look at it, the Government will have to pay the cost. At the end of the day, there is a certain amount of subsidy that would be required to support our Sister Islands and we understand that, and we have always done it.

Mr. Speaker, with that brief contribution, I would hope that the political games with respect to the situation in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will not be used any longer for these political games. And I say "we" because I include all of us. And the Opposition has taken the position they have today, but I would just ask them to remember the commitment that they made to this country immediately after Hurricane Paloma and that is that they would not play politics with this issue. I ask them, Mr. Speaker, to honour that commitment.
