Finally, I too would like to pay tribute and extend gratitude to the private sector for all of the contributions they have made in respect of the recovery of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Mr. Speaker, in any major disaster, such as this, on an island, whether it is Grand Cayman, Cayman Brac or Little Cayman, it is necessary for the public and private sectors to come together to make sure that the recovery is efficient and rapid. And that is what we have seen in Cayman Brac as we did in Grand Cayman following Hurricane Ivan. We have to continue to be grateful for that type of collaboration between the public and private sectors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us move on with the business of the country and rest assured that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will continue to be supported right through the entire recovery effort and beyond.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, would the mover of the amendment wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

I did not want to begin by having to answer the crap, the foolishness that I just listened to when the little Minister always likes to get up and talk about corruption. MC Restoration, Mr. Speaker, was audited. There is an audit report that says it was a good thing and cleared the whole air and cleared every charge that people like him made during the campaign.

What he has to understand is that that campaign is gone, and he has now to prove himself. But that is what is happening to them that they cry politics, because the people have found out what the likes of that Minister are like. They have proven him. When they see the truth, they fall over it and get up and walk like nothing happened.

Corruption? He likes to talk about that. I will tell you where corruption is: Check what is going on in his Government and you will see a lot of corruption. But the Auditor General cannot get at that now. That's the problem, because no accounts can come and you all believe that you have dug the little holes and made the little holes so small that people cannot see through it.

I don't think I'll bother with him any more than to say that what we did was to give committees of civil servants. Money was allocated for civil servants in charge, and also the Development Bank. If he wants to say that they have done some corruption, but they were not guided by any Minister other than what they found the people making requests to them. But it was a good thing we did that or else we might still be there pulling CUC lines out of the road.

He wants to talk about something about Ivan? People are still waiting on the National Recovery Fund to assist them. And this Minister has the audacity, as small as he is, to talk about what? We wasted the money? Just think how much you have wasted running up and down getting nothing done! He cannot get up in front of anybody to speak, Mr. Speaker, except that he knows that I had the right to wind up. Outside of that, he would have waited us out too.

But to come here, every speech he has made to talk about corruption, when, if you want to find it, look closely around you and perhaps look in the mirror because when a senior civil servant does what he did and when a court of law could prove it, Mr. Speaker, then, Mr. Speaker, then you have the worst kind of corruption!

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yeah. Just wait, because they may find something on you! There won't be anybody over here to find anything on. That will be another sing-song for you next time, but, oh, you have a record and that record is not too good, Mr. Speaker. The Member will be found wanting, has already been weighed.

Mr. Speaker, because we raised this issue of funding and because the Member who has to live it, who herself received extensive damage to her house and as someone in Cayman Brac has told me because her house is like a warehouse, and because of the work that lady has done in Cayman Brac, because she comes now and dares open up some of this, it is politics? Have you experienced it? No!

When you went to Cayman Brac what happened? People could not see him. People are at her door every day. Because that Member experienced the things that she is experiencing up there it is politics to come here and voice it? Where else should she have voiced it?

Some nearly six weeks later, Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Sister Islands, and Leader of the Government, has still not brought a comprehensive report to this honourable House, or even to the country on what obtains in Cayman Brac. We have to piecemeal, and as you speak it is happening (as they are so fond of saying), and this committee that has not yet even been given formal instructions, and they dare come here and talk about politics.

I want to thank my colleague, Mr. Speaker, for her debate and for her articulation of the problems as she is finding it in Cayman Brac. As I said, she has to live it on a day-to-day basis. She did not say that Government did not do anything; what she is concerned about—and rightly so—is the lack of effective management. But what she should have said was that she lays it completely at the feet of the Leader of Government because he is the Leader of Government and because he is responsible for the Sister Islands and for all that is happening there.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the reply by the Leader of Government Business, the Minister responsible for Cayman Brac. When they talk about problems, here is the problem: The problem is that he is playing far too much politics with that matter, and playing the waiting game, waiting for an opportune time when they can benefit most politically. That is the problem of the PPM Administration—everything has been timed to happen now. And I am not going to say the full administration because there are Ministers, like the Minister of Communication and Works, who stepped up from day one and got things done and removed obstacles where he needed to remove them.

But the problem of this Administration is that they have waited until the very last minute to get things done so that they can say to the people of this country, "See? Don't tell me I am not doing something."

Mr. Speaker, if you are starved for three and a half years, if your business went bad for three and a half years, if there is so many other things wrong in the country that everybody else is talking about for three and a half years, you think on the twilight of their hour that the people can just understand? And that is the problem with that Minister, waiting for the opportune time when they can benefit most politically and all that while people suffer.

Far too many things are not right with the recovery effort in Cayman Brac. Far too many things. We cannot sit down, as the Minister loves to do, and do it in drips and drabs so that every time he has to give $1,000 it is shown in the papers with the Minister giving another half million dollars, another three hundred thousand dollars. That is what they are waiting on, Mr. Speaker, so that every time they have to give it will be in the papers from now until the election. That is their problem.

Six weeks later, the Minister . . . and I thought, Mr. Speaker, that when we came here, that when this House opened as was done after Ivan when we had that session so that everybody could have their say, and the Government could bring their reports, I thought that was what was going to happen. But up until today, the Minister responsible and the Leader of Government Business have not brought a comprehensive report to this honourable House telling us what and where things have been done.

There is no limit, he says. This is an ongoing process. Two million [dollars], he says, has been approved on incremental amounts. He says he does not know what the difference is from what we are asking and from what he has said they are doing. But I believe the difference, the debate of the First [Elected] Member [of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman] today and the debate of the Second [Elected] Member [of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman] a few days ago, is saying there is a difference.

And I am going to tell you this. Get the Hansard again, and read what the Minister for Communications and Works said. Read it!

I cannot believe that that Minister came here with the lame excuse he did to talk about construction companies, and that's the reason why they cannot rush, because there are bad construction companies. Mr. Speaker, there is a law—they ought to know that, they brought the law!—dealing with bad companies. So the bad companies should not be able to get in, in Cayman Brac. And that should not be the worry or problem why such funds cannot be given to Cayman Brac at this time.

Take the confusion that exists: He says there is a committee set up. Confusion speaks to exactly the manner in how things have been handled in Cayman Brac. Look at the Government's bright hope, despite the pronouncements of the Government that all is in hand and being managed effectively. I have heard from many people in Cayman Brac, and I am not satisfied with the efficiency and effectiveness of the response to date by the Government. This view is based on the large number of residents who still remain with no permanent solution to their housing needs, the large amount of debris remaining within the various neighbourhoods on Cayman Brac, significant residents I guess still without electricity, and damaged infrastructure left unattended.

Mr. Speaker, I want to look for a minute at the Government's insurance because that was the Government's bright hope. And when they talk about politics, Mr. Speaker, the people of the Sister Islands should not be subjected to the political maneuvering during this time of hardship, nor should they have undue suffering resulting from a Government that has found itself unprepared, I guess financially, because I think that is the problem for such contingencies. Nor should they suffer because the Government subscribed to the Caribbean Catastrophic Insurance Fund without a proper understanding of the triggering mechanisms of the policy and the weighted average payout computation method, which combines the wind factor of the hurricane and the economic impact including the population.

Oh, they knew how to fix Cayman all right—the big promise. They knew how to do everything right. They were the good managers. Good managers, yeah. When you look at the World Bank documentation on it, it reveals a clear and concise understanding of how this calculation is made, and it is highly unfair and unjust that this honourable Legislative Assembly and the entire Cayman community was led to believe that relief money would be eminent and automatic and only determined by the wind factor of the hurricane.

The Leader of Government Business told this honourable House that up to $55 million would be made available within 14 days of a passage of a hurricane. Now, the flurry of excuses and blame shifting does not provide the relief that is needed. Where is all the brain power of the Government? The flurry of excuses and blame-shifting, the lack of research and, what I perceive as incompetence of the decision-makers who signed up the Cayman Islands that under no possible conceived circumstance would result in the Sister Islands ever being qualified for meaningful assistance.

No, Mr. Speaker, the people of the Sister Islands should not have to suffer because of these poor decisions. And that Minister from Bodden Town has the audacity to get up here and want to point fingers? Do you think this is the only mistake he made? This is the same Government that got the education in a mess up at the Community College when they hired [Hassan Syed] . . .

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I already told you that you cannot tell the truth. The whole world knows it by now; it is on record.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I have seen . . . yes, I understand that Mr. Syed was hired as a teacher, but not as a professor and president of the college. He was not hired by the UDP, but you think you are going to fool people with that too, by telling them half truths. The truth stares you every day in the mirror my son, and you do not even see that.

I have seen the World Bank presentation . . . Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I am called off course a little by the rumbling from the Minister who spoke a while ago, the Minister of Tourism. I have seen the World Bank presentation demonstrating how the rated average index is calculated. This presentation is likely the same as what the Government would have received before signing up the Cayman Islands to the policy. I say they had to see it. And, for certain, it was available to all who concerned themselves to review the policy before committing the people of this Country to $2 million initial capitalisation and $2 million per year. But you are not hearing anything about that. Uh-uh, that mistake, when they should have checked at the least.

But it was the same thing with the helicopter. Mr. Speaker, they do not seem to check anything. That never had the floatation devices. All that took was for one of them to go up there and see what the helicopter looked like. They did not even do that. And they have the audacity to talk about people.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is not managing the problem right in Cayman Brac. The National Recovery Fund has over 100 people for housing. Social Services have over 400 people. That's over two weeks ago that Social Services had that. Now they should have updated that. There are at least 15 trailer homes in Cayman Brac—and no one in them yet! This is what you call a Government that is doing its best? Well no wonder the people are hurting!

This is just not good management, and the fault must rest at the feet of the Leader of Government who is not just the Leader of Government, but he is the Minister responsible for the Sister Islands, and the Minister responsible for housing.

They do not want to give this money now because that committee that we suggested would be up and running and getting the work done. What they want to do is hand it out in drips and drabs. And every time the Caymanian Compass would be there, and the Cayman Net News would be there to take his picture handing it out and another headline "The Minister Gives" right up until the elections.

Mr. Speaker, while I do have my concerns too about the NRF, because while it is an agency that we use, the agency still has not been able to deal fully with the matters pertaining to Ivan. That is my understanding from many people across the board. Yet, we are depending on them to deal now with Paloma too. This means that something is going to suffer.

I pose the question again: When can we expect to have Ivan and Paloma cleared up? Surely, Mr. Speaker, those people in the Sister Islands cannot wait another three to four years, as they have had to do with Ivan. They cannot. Why should they?

I would have liked to have seen the long term plans. Mr. Speaker, I heard the Minister say that we (the last Government) did not have any plans. You know, that's a joke, when he was the one responsible for not putting the plans in place; when he refused, because he knew he was going to run for election, to get it before the Cabinet. And he thought he could run and hide forever. We did not have plans, when we did get it to Cabinet it was rejected by [Governor] Dinwiddy who was a great friend of the Opposition at the time.

But that Minister who spoke played his cards well for the election. Everything that he did he did it right—he smeared me, he stopped the work in the Ministry from getting done, and on, and on you can count. And that court that found him guilty, that court, Mr. Speaker, listed it.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Point of Order

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister, can I hear your point of order?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition just made reference to a court finding me guilty. There was no court. I was not charged with anything, And, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to ask him to withdraw those remarks because they are simply not true.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, unless you can show that it was a court of law, can you refrain and move away from that?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I am calling it . . . I mentioned a court. I will withdraw that and say that it was not a court but it was a very lawful institution. It was a commission of enquiry that found him guilty!

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead with your point of order.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: I have asked, Mr. Speaker, for you to direct the Leader of the Opposition to withdraw the remarks. He starts by withdrawing it and then proceeds to repeat it. Mr. Speaker, with respect, he needs to behave better than that in this honourable House. What he has said is not true and he needs to withdraw it unconditionally.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, get the report from the Commission of Enquiry to see if they said that all that he did wasn't what he said it was. In other words, he wasn't telling the truth about what he did. Get the report.

I said I withdraw the remark that it was a court. It was not a court; it was a commission of enquiry—quasi judicial institution.

Now, may I carry on, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker, we hear about plans. I do not know that this hurricane plan that he says the Government has that we did not have. He says that it is doing so well. Where is it? Hurricane hit Cayman Brac and nobody seemed to have known that it was going to hit.

I do not know if that was such a great plan. No matter how quick it came. If you are prepared as a country that just cannot come down one minute from the Central American shores and come across here and you do not know that it is going to hit and people can be better prepared. Well, I am not going to castigate any plans or work that people did during that time. No, I am not going to do that. But do not come bragging about what you have because up until now we are still not hearing about what is going to happen with the shutters that so much noise was being made about. Where is that?

And that Minister gets up here, Mr. Speaker, and wants to point fingers at the last administration? We hear about plans for the Sister Islands. What the Sister Islands needs is those long term sustainable plans, yes. There is a plan existing, done by Deloitte. And they said, 'Oh, the plan was no good.' But do not tell me they could not have improved on it. That meant they could have improved on it from the beginning four years ago. And they are still coming back now saying there is a plan.

There was another plan done by Urani. Cayman Brac was moving in the right direction, but if you leave it as is now you are not going to get anywhere. And what is going to happen to the Sister Islands is they are going to find themselves burdened down and stuck for months. And if you leave the Government alone, as they are saying . . . I know even if they do not accept this [amendment] they are going to have to move in that direction. Oh yes. They will have to.

But I encourage them. They must move so that the island of Cayman Brac can get to the place that its own revenue is coming back. That is the big concern that I have on the long term basis for Cayman Brac. Cayman Brac development is not easy. It took a lot of hard work, Mr. Speaker, to get the kind of tourism that was going in to Cayman Brac. That was not easy. It took a lot of hard work. I can say that our administration played a big role in it. But it has been going on for several years.

Now, if we leave things as is, where people's minds are not focusing, where people are under stress and where people have to be under plastic in the rainy weather as the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac noted is more than usual, what do you think it going to happen? It is going to be a different scenario, Mr. Speaker, if we leave things as they are.

All I am saying is that the Government needs to do better than what it has obtained. It needs to do better. The management needs to be different. That is what the First Member said when she debated, that is what the Second Member said when he debated—two of these Members cannot be wrong!

And if the [Second] Elected Member for Cayman Brac says that it takes—at one point it was $25 [million], maybe he is saying it is $30 [million], I am not sure. But I know he mentioned to me it could be up to $25 million. And the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac is saying let's put up $10 [million] (that is what our [amendment] is saying), and then you have opportunity to come back once you get to a stage and everything has been checked out, then that cannot be politics. Two of them are on opposite sides. One is the Government's party and the other is Opposition. It cannot be politics that is being played. It cannot be, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly it is not coming from this side of the House. What we see are needs and we believe that those needs should be met differently than they are being met today.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible mentioned the insurance. But what we are saying there, Mr. Speaker, it means that if a person has some insurance, but came up with a payout that is actually less than what their cost to repair or rebuild is, Government could assist them if they do not have the means. And a means test could be available for them.

The important thing is helping people get back to their houses.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government is going to do what is necessary to support Cayman Brac and Little Cayman it cannot be in the way that they are headed, that they are managing. It is just not good enough. And while I have not been able to visit there myself, my colleagues went. We get a regular update from the citizens of Cayman Brac, and we get an update from the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac. And she does not come and just tell us; she also makes her report to this House.

So, Mr. Speaker, we do not know the Government will not accept the [amendment]. But we believe that what we have done is the right thing to do for the people of Cayman Brac.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is: AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the eligibility for this assistance be open to all residents of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, and the value of the property or the income of the applicant should not exclude the applicant from eligibility, however, priority should be given to uninsured properties and the most needy.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Deputy Speaker: Debate on Government Motion No. 8/08-09 continuing.

Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover of the Motion wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

On behalf of the Government I wish to thank all honourable Members of the House for their contributions to Government Motion No. 8/08-09.

The contribution which I am now going to make mainly refers to the comments made by honourable Members in relation to the substantive motion. The best way of addressing the points raised in Members' contributions is to summarise the key features of the loan programme.

The point was made that there was a need to re-examine and perhaps relax the terms under which the loan programme operates. The repayment terms are agreed to by the loan applicant when they seek the loan. Briefly, what are these repayment terms? The repayment period is up to five years; that is five years to repay the loan principal borrowed. Applicants are free to, and they have exercised the ability to state to officials from the Portfolio of Finance an affordable repayment period. Therefore, if an applicant seeks the maximum possible loan of $10,000, and asks for a repayment period of five years, their monthly repayment amount is $166.67.

Mr. Speaker, as of 4 December 2008, 254 loans have been approved for a total value of $1.6 million. And 108 of those 254 loans, that is 42.5 per cent, have the maximum possible repayment period of five years. This represents the wishes of the loan applicant.

The repayment of the principal does not start until February 2009. And importantly as well, Mr. Speaker, the loan interest is not paid by the applicant, but is paid by the Government to the credit union. Mr. Speaker, we therefore respectfully feel that the loan programme is appropriately relaxed at the moment.

A point was also made in respect of debt servicing type analysis not being applied to the loan programme. Normally a financial institution will not approve a loan if the applicant has a certain debt service ratio that is beyond the institution's threshold for that institution to consider a safe or reasonable level of debt servicing cost by the applicant.

Mr. Speaker, such analysis is not applied to the loan programme in existence for public servants in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. But that is not to say that the Portfolio of Finance officials do not inquire of loan applicant's existing commitments. We do make those inquiries.

If the applicant states that he can afford the repayment amount, which the loan applicant himself will specify, the loan application will be considered and a decision made without reference to a particular debt service ratio percentage.

Mr. Speaker, we also heard honourable Members state that there is a need to revisit the number of times officials from the Portfolio of Finance visit the Brac to progress the loan programme. Just let me provide some information on a number of visits by officials of the Portfolio of Finance to the Brac.

The first visit occurred on 17 November at which 70 applications were approved for a total value of $496,500. They also remained there the next day (18 November), at which 60 applications were approved for a total value of $341,000. The officials returned again on 27 November, at which time 24 applications were approved for a total value of $106,100.

And even though the Portfolio of Finance officials may not physically be present on the Brac, the loan programme continues by loan applications being sent from the Brac to Grand Cayman by plane. They are considered on Grand Cayman, approved or declined, and the results communicated to the Credit Union. The Portfolio intends to continue with periodic visits to Cayman Brac to consider loan applications.

We were also made aware that some successful loan applicants were spending the funds on unintended purposes. We too, in the Portfolio, have heard of such use of funds for unintended purposes. And while there is not foolproof method of preventing this from occurring, we do try principally by [SKIPS] loan applicants what the intended use is of the loan funds. We do try to ensure that individuals spend the loan funds on proper purposes.

We are, however, dependent on the honesty and integrity of persons to honour their promise to use the funds on purposes they state. More over, we have every reason to believe that the vast majority of loan applicants do spend their loan funds in a manner that is appropriate.

Let me briefly provide some information on the number and value of unsuccessful loan applications. From the inception of the loan programme to 4 December, 41 loans were declined. And the total value of those loans is $274,400. The number of loans approved, as I said earlier, to 4 December is 254, with a value of approximately $1.6 million. When we combined successful and unsuccessful loans together, we find that to the 4th of December, the 41 unsuccessful loans represent a declined rate of 14 per cent. The value of those declined loans represents 15 per cent of the value of all loans considered to 4 December.

All of this indicates that we are aware that some inappropriate applications are being made; but the percentage is relatively small and we will continue to be vigilant in our consideration of the loan applications.

Mr. Speaker, the point was also made that re-consideration ought to be given to the criterion being applied to the $10,000 loan facility and that it be moved away from a household basis to more of a relaxed per public servant basis. Mr. Speaker, that is a point that can be considered and will be considered. But let me say quickly that the intention of applying the loan programme to a per household basis was to ensure that as many households as possible received the benefit of the loan programme.

Our only concern with the situation in which, say, four public servants approached and sought loans for $10,000 each, and therefore the total of the loans being applied for in respect of a single property would be $40,000, is that there is, indeed, $40,000 of damage that needs to be remedied in respect of that property. And if the damage to the property is assessed at, say, $30,000, then we would wish to restrict the loans to a total of $30,000. Therefore, we do apply the loan programme on a per public servant basis, but at the same time we also believe that it is appropriate to link the application being made with the value of damage or discomfort that is desired to be remedied.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to thank all honourable Members for their contributions to this Government Motion. The Government sincerely wishes to extend its gratitude for the quick and efficient response from the Credit Union. Loans have obviously been issued without the guarantee having yet been approved by this House, which is now the purpose of this Government Motion before the House. So, loans have been extended by the Credit Union without having the guarantee from the Government in hand. That, Mr. Speaker, is a commendable stance by the Credit Union.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is: that in accordance with section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision) the Financial Secretary be authorized to issue a guarantee on behalf of the Cayman Islands Government to the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association Cooperative Credit Union Limited for an amount not exceeding CI$6 million for the provision of hurricane recovery assistance loans to public servants who have personal and real property on Cayman Brac and/or Little Cayman which has been adversely affected by Hurricane Paloma.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Government Motion No. 8/08-09 passed.

The Motion is opened for debate. Does the Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to put before this honourable House Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09 for the establishment of four national heroes for these Islands.

Mr. Speaker, just 60 years ago the Cayman Islands was a very different place physically, socially and politically. This was before the building explosion on Seven Mile Beach, before the multistory buildings in George Town, and before we enjoyed the comforts of the built environment that we have today.

Socially, Cayman was different too. Life centered around family and the church. Many of our men were on the high seas earning their living as seamen, sending home the remittances which kept the Islands' economy vibrant. On the home front we were all our brothers' keepers, sharing what little we had looking after our own, and sometimes our neighbours as well. From this tradition emerged many examples of iron men. There were iron women too who were leaders in their community and in these Islands. Iron men and iron women.

Politically, we had an embryonic party system with the National Democratic Party headed by the late and feisty Ormond Panton, OBE, and supported by another stalwart, the late Warren Connolly, OBE, and the late T. W. Farrington, CBE, JP, who led the Christian Democratic Party.

Complementing the men who were out in front on the political scene we had a strong voice coming from the women of the Islands who put forward the petition. Although this just recently received a fair airing in this honourable House, for these purposes it deserves repeating. I quote that petition:

"We, the undersigned, residents of the District of George Town, having examined and obtained Legal advice on the Constitution of the Cayman Islands, find nothing therein which denies women the fundamental Human Right of taking part in deciding who shall govern us.

"Therefore, we declare that it is our intention to exercise our Constitutional Right to vote today, August 19th, 1948, according to our conscience, in the Election of Vestrymen for the District of George Town.

"Should this privilege be denied us by the Officials in Charge of the Election we shall demand the Government give just reasons for making of no effect the laws it has sworn to uphold."

As we have heard before, this was signed by 24 women from George Town. While their petition fell on deaf ears and no woman voted in 1948, nine years later seven identical petitions from seven districts were placed before the legislature. These petitions were signed by 358 women from all across Cayman. These petitions led directly to the famous Sex Disqualification (Removal) Bill, which was introduced in the Assembly and passed into law on 8 December 1958—50 years ago.

And, as I said, Mr. Speaker, we just had a celebration of that. It was worthy to be mentioned again here this evening.

Mr. Speaker, every once in a great while, a country must do as we are attempting to do here today; it must pay the highest tribute and give its highest honour to those who gave of their entire selves, their entire life in service to mankind. And for Evelyn Wood, Joyce Hylton (nurses), Beulah McLaughlin and Almiria Tomlinson, duty, honour, service to country and mankind was their hallmark.

Mr. Speaker, we are moving this Motion today and asking the Government to agree to it and make the declaration in time for National Heroes Day on 26 January [2009], a time when women are to take centre stage for that celebration.

Mr. Speaker, one of the signers to the 1957 district petition for the district of Bodden Town was one Mary Evelyn Wood, a nurse and community worker. Nurse Evie (or Miss Evie as she was called), went on to stand for election as a candidate under the National Democratic Party. In 1962, at the age of 62, she became the first Caymanian woman to be elected to the Legislative Assembly of these Islands.

Ms. Evie was a fighter for human rights and for constitutional change, but that is not the main reason why my colleague and I have put forward her name as a national hero. In a time when we must give respect to those among us who exemplify service to their fellow man, nurse Evie was a shining example of a woman who put country before self.

As a young woman growing up in Bodden Town, she started a small school in her father's house. Later on she decided to become a nurse. She was trained under the late Doctor G. N. Overton, a Jamaican physician who worked in the Cayman Islands for many years. This vocation stood the Islands in good stead in the late 1930s when Grand Cayman was hit by a typhoid epidemic. Nurse Evie worked tirelessly throughout Grand Cayman in that time, especially in the district of West Bay.

In 1939, she left Cayman to work at a girl's orphanage, Pringle Home, in Jamaica, which was and is still run by the Presbyterian Church (now the United Church). Coming back to Cayman ten years later Ms. Evie threw herself into the work of her church and community. She took part in all of the church activities in her day—Sunday school, Christian Endeavour, the Women's Guild, the Girls' [Guildry], and as an elder in her church in Bodden Town.

In the community she established the Bodden Town Players, an amateur theatrical group, and wrote and directed many of their productions. Mr. Speaker, I don't know anything about it, but from what I hear, while they say it was amateur it did put on many professional productions that many people from all over the Islands attended and it became one of the famous dos of that era.

She was also one of the cofounders of the Bodden Town Cooperative and Social Centre where people in the district could meet for social events, sewing groups, and share their arts and crafts skills as well as to buy and sell goods they had produced. We see a group of women, now headed by Mary Lawrence (and various other ladies from Bodden Town) who has started that up and, I will tell you, that it is something else to behold, Mr. Speaker. And don't try buying one from them because it is like pulling teeth.

The last child of six children of Charles and Julietta Wood of Bodden Town, Ms. Evie never married. As was the practice in those days, she made her home with her married sister, Alida, and her husband, Lionel Jackson, where she was beloved of her numerous nieces and nephews and many, many patients whom she nursed both at home and in the hospital. "Service before self" was her motto, exemplified by this strong Christian woman who stood up for what she believed in and left a legacy in these Islands, which today we seek to honour and preserve.

I move now to Ms. Joyce Hylton. Mrs. Sybil Joyce Hylton nee Russell (better known to most of us as Ms. Joyce or Ms. Hylton), was born in George Town, Grand Cayman, on 25 August 1913. She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Russell of George Town. Ms. Hylton spent the early years of her life in Jamaica as her father was a seaman with the Webster Shipping Lines and wanted his family to be near him. When she was ten years old her father stopped going to sea and moved the family back to these Islands.

When she completed her formal schooling in Grand Cayman, where she was successful in all the Jamaica local examinations, her parents sent her back to Jamaica to relatives where she became interested in the field of probation and welfare. As her interest grew she spent more and more time in the study of this subject. She took courses from Benet's College in England, which included the study of juvenile law and gained diplomas in both social welfare and psychology. Later she was made probation officer for the Cayman Islands and sent to Jamaica on an observation tour of the probation and childcare departments there. Her keen interest in social work continued and she threw herself into the activities of the community.

Shortly after she returned to Grand Cayman she paid an impromptu visit to the courtroom and witnessed the trial of a juvenile in open court and his treatment as an adult criminal. The general opinion in those days was that this would teach him a lesson that would last the rest of his life. In a small community such an ordeal, regardless of the triviality of the offence, was difficult indeed to live down for people never forgot and the facts would crop up to haunt one on the least provocation.

However, Ms. Hylton wasted no time in writing a strong protest on the matter to the Commissioner (as the Queen's representative was then known), and began a relentless campaign to change this procedure and effect other needed social changes as well, including talking to Government officials and other prominent members of the community on the subject every chance she got.

Years later, in 1963, she was asked by the Government to set up and operate the first probation department. Welfare was tacked on, naturally, as Ms. Joyce quoted: "You couldn't have really one without the other since the problems of youth are the result of problems in the community itself."

What may not be so well known, Mr. Speaker, is that even after government officials agreed to her recommendation for young offenders, they disagreed as to how those recommendations should be carried out. Some people thought the work of supervising youngsters who had misbehaved would be rough. They wanted a man for the post. No suitable man presented himself and it gradually became clear that the most qualified person was Ms. Hylton herself.

Most of the early cases to come her way involved childcare and protection. It entailed a lot of voluntary supervision, visits to homes, talking to people winning their confidence, and going to schools talking to students. Later, with the passage of the Juvenile Law in 1964, a juvenile court was established to handle young offenders.

Disturbed by the lack of reading material available to children and adults in the outer districts her department set to work organising a mobile library using volunteer drivers in a van that was especially fitted out by an interest group in Canada for the purpose. She managed to implement this idea.

Probation work was only a part of the wide range of services provided to the community over the years. They assisted indigent persons needing relief. Requests were also received for medical help, both locally and overseas, as well as optical services. The department also dealt with truancy problems and problems concerning pre-schoolers and persons wanting to give their children up for adoption. Because of the growing number of the latter and the problems of protecting the rights of these children as well as the number of adults who became involved, the Adoption Law was brought into effect in 1967.

In 1967 a second officer, Ms. Gay Jackson, was appointed. Together the two women carried out all the work, including the clerical and office side of it. In 1974 they were joined by another probation officer, Mr. Steve Smith.

When Ms. Joyce retired on 31 January 1982, the department consisted of three probation and welfare officers in Grand Cayman, one in Cayman Brac, and one secretary. Their work in the previous year included supervision of 94 juveniles, as well as adults on probation; 141 persons who required counseling; 364 who applied for one kind of assistance or another, from glasses and school books to financial aid for the elderly and burial of paupers.

After retirement, Ms. Hylton continued her community involvement in her own way. She had served on the committees that set up the National Council of Social Services in the 1970s. She stayed on as an active member even after it became the National Council of Voluntary Organisations. Other entities that benefited from her energy and talents include the Pink Ladies Volunteer Corps, the Garden Club, the Agricultural Society, and the Cayman Orchid Society, which she helped found in 1986. She was an active member of the United Church since her early youth and played her part in its work as well.

Ms. Hylton was also very involved with the youth in the area of scouting. While in Jamaica she had taken an interest in scouting, particularly the younger age group known as the Cubs, and she trained a leader. Later, she took additional training courses in London in this field at the international headquarters for scouting, gaining her Gillwell Beads there in the 1940s.

She was the district commissioner for cubs in the Cayman Islands for many, many years. In 1968, Ms. Hylton was awarded the Cayman Islands Certificate and Badge of Honour and was put forward to be a member of the Order of the British Empire in 1978.

Mr. Speaker, this is one lady out of the four that we put forward that I had personal contact with. I know of her work and her unstinting service. I know the time that she had to come to talk to me, all because I used to run out of school. And home not being far away from school, I took the chance when it afforded me to just abscond from school. So, my mother (who could not understand why I was doing this) went to Ms. Hylton. All you had to say those days was, 'I'm going to put Ms. Hylton on you.' And that made you tremble in your shoes and go under the bed for a few days.

But when Ms. Hylton came to talk to me she said, 'Come young man. You're not a bad young man, why are you doing this?' It was then that she found out that I could not get any assistance with my homework that was given to me by certain teachers at that time. My poor mother (of course, working until night-fall) just did not know how to assist. But I used to run out in defiance of it.

Ms. Hylton took it on and when she did get the remedy, she put those teachers to shame . . . And this is a time also for praise and not a time to criticise, so I won't do so here. But when she did get it, it was too late for me for high school. I had to be subjected to the Secondary Modern School, a system that I said the other day, that the late Mrs. Theoline McCoy and the late teacher McHale, both of them fought against. But Ms. Joyce fought a hard battle in social work.

When I took over Social Services and fought the first election and lost, she said, 'You have to fight again'. That's all she said. And when I won she called me up and said, 'Now that you have won, all those things that you complained about in social development . . . get to work'. And she was one great encourager for me when I was Minister of Community Development and Culture. She was the encourager for the Young Parents Programme, and that is why we named the Centre, the Joyce Hylton Centre.

This country can't really pay back this kind of work. We owe this person, in fact, the four of these, a great debt of gratitude.

Ms. Hylton passed away on Sunday, 1 October 2006, at the age of 93 years after a lifetime of service to her community and these Islands. I had a talk with her adopted son and she left some instructions for him, and that will come to be known later on.

The late Ms. Beulah McLaughlin, better known as nurse Beulah, was born on 17 October 1894. Ms. Beulah's first job was that of a school teacher. She was trained locally and in Jamaica where she taught for two years. She returned to Grand Cayman where she taught in East End. Nurse Beulah continued her teaching career for a number of years before taking up nursing. She began taking nursing classes with the doctor in George Town and left Grand Cayman and went to Montego Bay, Jamaica, for further studies. She also attended nursing schools in Honduras where she also practiced for some time after completion of her studies.

Nurse Beulah was one of the first nurses to be trained, if not the first in Cayman. On returning to Grand Cayman she continued her nursing career, mainly midwifery, throughout the Island, beginning in East End where she lived. She also taught nursing courses to many students in her district and some of them went abroad to continue their studies and qualify in this field. Nurse Beulah would often have to go to peoples' homes on foot from district to district to care for the sick, as many could not get to town to the doctor. In those days there were very few who owned cars and the doctor only visited the district once every month.

She was taught how to dispense medicines as well and assisted the doctor and dentist in dispensing. Nurse Beulah made a significant contribution to nursing in Cayman in those early and very difficult times. She did much of her nursing without charge to the patients as many persons in those days, of course, could not afford to pay. She worked tirelessly for many, many years, and I feel she deserves to be recognized as one of our national heroes.

The late Mrs. Almiria LeBertha McLaughlin Tomlinson, 1882-1974, is another person we believe qualifies to be so designated. Almiria McLaughlin Tomlinson was one of Cayman Brac's outstanding midwives. She was the granddaughter of one of the first settlers on the Brac, William Scott.

Almiria's mother, Rachael McLaughlin nee Scott, and her grandmother, Mary Scott, were also midwives. Distinguishing qualities of this great woman were her skills as a midwife, her perseverance and her love for her patients. She had great skills, although she had no formal education or training. She never lost a mother and lost only one baby, despite delivering many premature babies, as well as some that were breeched and others that had the umbilical cord wrapped dangerously around their neck.

It is recalled that there was a lady who had her first pregnancy at age 42 but the baby would not be delivered. Mr. Lawrence who was then the pharmacist and the only representation of a doctor, and his wife, also a nurse, all gave the mother and baby over to die. Eventually the baby died. The baby was stillborn.

Mrs. Almiria and her husband, Daniel, who was also knowledgeable in midwifery and who delivered his last child when the midwife was too late in arriving, by taking over the situation decided to make something like a forceps to deliver the stillborn child. They went to Mr. E. A. Carter's store and bought an extra large hook, sawed off the beard of the hook and used it to securely pull the baby out. It was a very crude way of delivery, but through their ingenious idea they saved the mother's life. That was the only baby Mrs. Almiria ever lost. With Mrs. Almiria's care that mother returned in good health and later gave birth to two bouncing baby boys.

Once she heard of a mother in need, no sacrifice was too great to reach the mother and provide care. She often had two patients at a time, sometimes one in Spot Bay and the other in Watering Place. She would get up early in the morning, attend to mother and baby, leave an assistant with that mother, walk to Spot Bay, attend to the other mother and baby, sleep that night with them and early the next morning attend to their needs, leave an assistant with them, walk back to Watering Place, doing this for nine days, as in those days that was the length of time a mother stayed in bed after her delivery. There were times that she did not see her home for 27 days going from one patient to another.

She delivered babies all over Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. She was petrified of the sea, but when a call came to go to Little Cayman to deliver a baby she would lie on the bottom of a Catboat with a calabash as a basin, vomiting as the boat traveled along, sometimes in very rough weather. But if the woman was to be delivered of her baby—no matter how difficult—Mrs. Almiria would be there.

She delivered her first baby at age 23 and continued practicing as a midwife through the age of 80.

Once in an emergency, Mr. Bert Foster offered to take her to a patient on the carrier of his motorcycle. Mrs. Almiria did not like the idea because to her the motorcycle sounded like something that would explode at any time, but to get to her patient she would try most anything. On hopped Mrs. Almiria and rode away with Mr. Bert. A little way down the road the motorcycle, Mr. Bert, and Mrs. Almiria skidded and fell to the ground. Perhaps Mrs. Almiria's large frame had overwhelmed the motorcycle.

Mrs. Almiria jumped up and brushed herself off and took off walking towards her patient never stopping to see how Mr. Bert fared. When he caught up with her, no amount of persuasion could get Mrs. Almiria on that motorcycle again.

Despite the long hours and challenging conditions she had a deep-seated love for her patients. She delivered hundreds of babies from Spot Bay to West End and on Little Cayman. Her payment was often in the form of fish, ground provisions or days of gardening by the father. And if some mother could not pay she still gave to them the same love and care that she gave to all the other mothers.

Through rain or sunshine, cold northeasters or northwesterners, long journeys by foot, Catboat rides over rough seas, or, as she grew older being plagued by arthritis, she still gave to them her love. It never kept her from her passion of delivering babies.

She always said that the cry of a newborn baby was like music to her ears, and to know with God's help she had helped another life safely into the world and the first leg of their journey was immensely fulfilling. She gave of herself unselfishly to her people. God gave Cayman Brackers a Florence Nightingale and they loved her in return. She is gone, but will never be forgotten. We believe she should be so designated a national hero.

Mr. Speaker, we have chosen those four persons after we looked at many, not to say that there are not others who could not have been chosen as national heroes. Of course, we can't so designate everybody. Hopefully, people will see these as standing in stead of others.

Mr. Speaker, some mention was made about designating more men as national heroes. Well, I see nothing wrong with that. There are people, men whom I would recommend. Sir Vassel Johnson, service to country; the late T.W. Farrington for service to country, Mr. Andrew Powery for service to mankind, Mr. Warren Connolly for service to country, Mr. Ormond Panton for service to country.

There are others but, of course, we cannot recommend everybody. While we would love to be able to do that, we cannot. But we could recommend these if at any time it was pleasing to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Government to support the Resolution before the House. We ask them, as I said earlier, to make that designation in time for National Heroes Day on 26 January [2009], a time when women are to take centre stage for that celebration.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister of Education and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I start my contribution to this Motion brought by the Leader of the Opposition and his colleague, the lady Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, by saying to both of them they're late. Nevertheless, welcome to this party.

You see, Mr. Speaker, on 6 September last year [2007], the Third Elected Member for George Town and the Fourth Elected Member for George Town brought a motion to this House entitled Recognition of Contributions Made by Women in the Cayman Islands. It was a motion which was carried, a motion to which I and other Members of the Government and, indeed, I believe the Opposition, responded. It was carried unanimously.

Mr. Speaker, during my contribution I outlined to the House and the broader community the steps that this Government, through my Ministry, was taking to ensure that the immense contributions of women through the years in this country were aptly, appropriately, acknowledged and praised. I outlined the steps that we would be taking during this important year and early next year to pay tribute to the struggles, the achievements, and the aspirations of women of these Islands.

Just a short while ago, 8 December [2008], in what I regard as an appropriate ceremony, we honoured the women who have been elected to public office in this country and we honoured also and celebrated the passage of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law, 1958, on its 50th Anniversary of passage by the predecessor to this House.

And, Mr. Speaker, I announced back in September of last year our intention as a Government and my determination as the Minister with the responsibility for Culture and, by extension, for Heroes' Square, to produce and unveil a monument to the struggles, achievements, and aspirations of women on National Heroes Day 2009.

I said that while obviously a principal element on that occasion and at that ceremony would be a tribute to the women who spearheaded and ultimately achieved the grant of the right to vote, the franchise to women, that that would not be the only basis of the celebration, that would not be the only component of that ceremony; and that what would be celebrated and that what would be memorialised would be the achievements of women, the struggles of women, and the aspirations of women, generally.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that when National Heroes Day was established under the auspices of the Leader of the Opposition, who now so glibly speaks about the need to honour women in a more significant way, that no special attention was paid to their contributions when the day and park itself was established. In the years that followed—while he led Cabinet—they considered numerous persons as national heroes. Some of them were even plastered across the front pages of the Caymanian Compass as possibilities, but nary a one was named.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you could say with the passage of time and more reflection that the Leader of the Opposition now realises and recognises the need to pay special attention to the contributions of women. Or, you could be cynical and say that this Motion is motivated principally by political considerations because the Government is taking the steps which it is taking to honour women. Mr. Speaker, you could say that. But, Mr. Speaker, I will let all who hear and read about this particular Motion draw their own conclusions.

The need, desire, intent and determination to honour the contributions of women are things which this Government and this Minister shall see through.

Mr. Speaker, there is a fundamental problem with the Motion. Even before I get into the issue about naming four national heroes in one fell swoop and what that does and so forth, and the politicisation of this process, there is a fundamental problem with the Motion. Unless the Leader of the Opposition amends it, there is no way that it could possibly be accepted. Or, if it were accepted by the House there is no way it could have any legal effect. And that is this: I believe, in fact I am fairly certain, that it was under the auspices of the Leader of the Opposition that the National Heroes Law was passed (Law 11 of 1993). Maybe I am wrong about that so I am not really making a big point, but it certainly was during his time. And I know that he was a big contributor to the whole initiative, and for that I give him all credit. It ought to have been done years before that.

But the problem with the Motion is that the Motion seeks to have this House bestow on various women the highest Caymanian honour this honourable House can give—that of National Hero.

Mr. Speaker, the problem with the Motion is that the House back in 1993 delegated that responsibility to the Governor in Cabinet by passing legislation which says, and I am quoting from the Law, section 3(1): “The Governor, may by Proclamation published in the Gazette, declare a man or a woman he considers to have [and the Governor means the Governor in Cabinet] provided exceptional and outstanding service to these Islands and the people of the Islands to be a National Hero.” So, that is a function, as a matter of law, which can only be exercised by Cabinet. So, this House has no power to bestow national hero on anyone.

So, Mr. Speaker, my invitation to the Leader, if he wants the Motion to proceed at all, is to invite him to amend the Motion to say that the House recommends, or that the House nominates, or that the House calls on Cabinet, or something. But the House cannot bestow national hero status on anybody.

Now, Mr. Speaker, more substantively, there is no question that the women outlined . . . I knew all but one of them. I did not know Ms. Almiria Tomlinson. Truthfully, I did not know and do not know very much about her at all, although there was an impressive biography read by the Leader of the Opposition when he spoke to this Motion. But I knew the other three.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Beulah McLaughlin is my great aunt. She lived a long time, almost 102 years. I attended and spoke at her funeral not so long ago. I know a little bit about her struggles, her contributions.

Ms. Joyce, I knew her almost from the day I can remember. I know a lot about her contributions.

Ms. Evie, I didn't know. But I know a lot because my family on one side is from Bodden Town. No question at all, she was the first woman elected to this House, a tremendous contributor to the development of this community.

And the Leader of the Opposition did concede in his winding up, Mr. Speaker, that there is a long list of women who have contributed hugely to the development of these Islands. Off the top of my head I can think of at least six more that I would put in the same category as the four who are named here.

Why has he left off Miss Annie Huldah Bodden? No woman has yet served the length that she has in this House. Why should my aunt Beulah (as much as I loved and revered her) be a national hero and not Miss Annie?

He mentioned another one, Mrs. Theoline McCoy. Why is Mrs. Islay Connolly not on the list? And you could take a poll of all of us in this House and all of us would come up with another name.

I say all of that, Mr. Speaker, to say this . . . But before I say that, I don't think anyone in this country doubts my commitment to honouring our people. In the face of major criticism—by the Leader of the Opposition, principally—I have pushed for National Heroes Day to become the pre-eminent celebration of our people in this country.

The women in my family . . . I have a long line of what I call overachievers in my family who are women, going back to my great grandmother. So, no one needs to think that I lack any commitment to or desire for honouring women, their place, their role, their contributions, their struggles, their achievements, their aspirations.

But the great danger that we run, if we allow this process of naming a national hero to be perfumed by political agendas and considerations, is that we devalue that particular honour. We cannot, we should not dispense national hero to any and every person who has made a major and significant contribution to the good of this country. We have a wall of honour with 500 names and there are still people I know who legitimately, justifiably, complain that some relative or other deserving person has been left off that wall.

We ought not to name as national hero just any person who has made a major or significant contribution. It must be something that is out of the ordinary that stands head and shoulders above what any other person has done. And the great danger of that determination being made in the House of politics should be obvious to all of us.

Do you think that it would not be an impressive thing for my family to know that my aunt Beulah is a national hero? But no right-thinking person would believe that this is the place that that ought to be done.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to say to this House and the broader community is this: This is an issue with which I myself and the senior staff in my Ministry have been wrestling for about two years. How do we deal with this issue of the choice of national hero? If it simply becomes the case that every government that takes office decides all by themselves without any contribution from the broader community that they are going to name this one and that one a national hero in very short order, the designation will mean little or nothing. It will become commonplace.

So, we name four this year and next year following the elections we name four more. We will have more statues around George Town than they have in London in a few years. And the designation will mean less and less as more and more people get added to the list. And each government that comes will feel it as part of their bounded duty to name more national heroes.

And so, Mr. Speaker, after a long and careful consideration I have decided, with the support of my colleagues, to establish first a National Heroes Advisory Committee and to give that committee authority by amending the National Heroes Law so that nominations for national hero are considered by the national advisory committee who will have terms of reference and who will make recommendations to the Governor in Cabinet. Now, this committee will comprise at least one member of the Government and one member of the Opposition as well as representatives from civil society.

I am not trying to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that somehow we completely insulate this process from politics. That's not possible, nor do I think it is even what we should do. After all, we are representatives of the people and we should have some insight into this as well. But what we must seek to do is to avoid becoming party political, to the extent that that is possible, so that the decision-making is not seen to be, oh yes, they made her a national hero because she was Alden McLaughlin's aunt. That's why she got national hero. Because when we do that we completely undermine the exercise in itself. It means little or nothing.

ing. It will be perceived that people have been named not because of what they did, but because of who they were connected to. And I am determined to do everything I can to keep that from happening.

So, the plan is that in February of this year coming we will propose the necessary amendments to the National Heroes Law to give effect to the National Heroes Advisory Committee, and set out the criteria and the terms of reference by which these nominations are to be judged for the nomination, then to be recommended to the Cabinet of these Islands.

Mr. Speaker, I have been around the political process long enough to understand why motions like this come at a time like this. I commend the Leader of the Opposition and the lady Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman for their political acumen. But, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be said—and I'm sure lots will be said, that the Government would not approve Ms. Joyce and Ms. Almira, and I tried so hard to get it. I even put in his aunt Beulah and he would not approve that either. What kind of man is that?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [Inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I have been around long enough, sir. I could actually write the script for how this is going to unfold.

But I do know after long and careful consideration in my heart of hearts that the route I am taking, and which the Government is supporting, is one that will inure for the longtime benefit of the people of these Islands. National hero must forever be something that is regarded and vaunted and looked up to; and we must not allow an impending elections or political fallout because we say we don't agree, to be the guiding post in the decision-making process about something as important as this.

I say to the Leader of the Opposition and to the rest of the House and broader community that I promise that on National Heroes Day, 26 January [2009], we shall do honour and justice to the achievements, struggles and the aspirations of all the women of this country. We are doing everything we can to make sure that every woman, and man born of woman in this country, every boy and girl will walk away from those celebrations on 26 January proud to be Caymanian, proud of our heritage, proud of the labour, struggles, tears, sufferings, achievements and yes, the aspirations of womankind in this country; not just for what they have achieved in the past, but for the wonderful opportunities and promises of the future which are there and available because of what the foundation builders did.

Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the Government cannot support the Motion as currently drafted. If the Leader of the Opposition and his seconder are prepared to amend the Motion to say that the House nominates or recommends these people for consideration as national heroes, fine and good. They will join the queue because there are quite a number of people in this community who believe that other people ought to be named national heroes as well. They will join the queue to be considered by this committee, the National Heroes Advisory Committee, and, ultimately, a recommendation (or recommendations) will go up to Cabinet for consideration.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude by saying that there is no doubt, there is no question that all four of the women named in the Motion have been major contributors, stalwarts in the development of these Islands, who operated all of them in the most difficult of times and circumstances and their contributions must be valued. Their contributions should be, and in many cases have been, acknowledged.

Mr. Speaker, there is a long list of women who have lived in this country whose contributions also must be valued, acknowledged in a meaningful way. We seek to do all of those things during the weeks to come leading up to National Heroes Day and culminating in National Heroes Day.

Mr. Speaker, with those few words I will close my contribution and look forward to hearing what the Leader of the Opposition and his seconder are prepared to do in relation to my offer on behalf of the Government to reconsider their position if the Motion is amended as I have indicated.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I, too, would like to make a very short contribution to the Motion that is now on the Floor to say that I am in total agreement with the sentiments and position taken by the Honourable Minister for Culture.

Mr. Speaker, this topic of national hero is one that we have had our own internal battles with since we have been the Government. We have discussed it on many occasions. By now I think everybody in this Government has a proper understanding of how to go about nominating or declaring people national hero.

We accept that it is a very delicate and difficult decision. Since I have been a Member of Parliament, even before, many names who people think should be national heroes have been suggested. The issue is that everybody from their little section will have somebody close to them whom they think should be a national hero. The problem is that there are hundreds, if not thousands of those little pockets that think the same way.

The criterion has to be paid special attention to. I will have to agree with the Minister for Culture that it is a dangerous proposition for us to accept here today that at the whim and fancy of politicians we should be allowed to name national heroes. Indeed, the honour will be extremely watered down in a short time, and of little significance.

I would like to add that I accept and understand that there are many individuals in our community who deserve recognition for their contribution to this country over the years. I believe there is room for other levels of recognising these individuals. At the meeting before this one I submitted a motion (which I eventually withdrew because of time constraints) on the setting up of a national honours system. Right now, except for the Certificate and Badge of Honour, the majority of what we consider meaningful awards for people is subject to the Governor's office and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO).

I believe there should be a system locally to recognise our people as we know them, which does not have to depend on recommendations and the whims and fancy of the Governor and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Because we were moving into the Christmas season, I did not bring the motion this time. Maybe I will have time to bring it in February. I do not know. But I do believe there is room for that, and that may cure some of the ills of people who we think have done something worthy of recognition in our community, but who fall somewhere between what we consider a Certificate and Badge of Honour and the wider expanse of national hero.

I think that is a clear alternative. And the selection of national hero needs to be something that we treat very carefully with much respect. I hope that the politics would not play a major role in how we select and name national heroes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I am never amazed when the Minister of Education gets up because it is quite obvious that most of the time—and, given the benefit of the doubt, I would say that the majority of time—he has planned what he is going to do. But, Mr. Speaker, the people of this country have better sense than he really believes.

On which Bible is it printed; in which rule book, in which constitution does it say that if they do something, it is not political, but if we recommend something it is political? And to hear the extension cord, the fourth Member for George Town, get up and talk about politics when everything else that he has done so far is nothing but that. Do they really believe that the people of this country are fooled because the Minister of Education speaks? He just got here.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to move that the Cabinet considers the four persons recommended in the Motion as national heroes and I am going to ask that the House accepts that recommendation.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Members, I know it is running late. I'm not sure if you need an adjournment so that he can prepare the amendment. I know it was recommended by the Minister of Education.

Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to suggest that . . . If he moves the amendment then there is another debate on the amendment. Perhaps if we could have a few minutes we could agree on the terms of the amendment, I hope, and if we can agree on the terms of the amendment that would avoid further debate on the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: It seems like a reasonable request Honourable Minister.

I will suspend proceedings for a few moments and we will remain in our—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, if we don't want to go through a full protracted debate, and I am doing simply what he asked earlier, and if you want to say that you are going to set up this advisory whatever you are going to call it, and you want these four persons to go to that, that is okay by me. So, what do we have to stop for now?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I was going to call you Mr. President again.

Mr. Speaker, we're agreed. But I think for the purposes of the record, and so that everyone knows what it is we have decided and voted on, if we just had ten minutes to type it up so that everybody could be happy with it, that might avoid further problems. That is all I am suggesting. But I don't think there is any issue with it between us. That's fine.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Members, we will now take ten minutes suspension.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Ten minutes for that?

Proceedings suspended at 7.09 pm
(to allow the amendment to be typed and circulated)

Proceedings resumed at 7.43 pm

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Amendment
Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(1) and (2), I, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the First Elected Member for West Bay, seek leave to move the following amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09 as follows: By deleting the first and second resolves and by substituting the following: "BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the following women –

- Mrs Joyce Hylton, MBE, a social worker and advocate for the rights of women and children, widely considered the founder of our modern Social Services;
- the late Miss Beulah McLaughlin, a nurse and midwife at the Cayman Islands Hospital;
- the late Mrs. Almiria Tomlinson, a mid-wife; and
- Miss Mary Evelyn Wood, a nurse, community worker, church leader and the first woman to be elected to this Honourable House as a Member of the Legislative Assembly;

be considered by the National Heroes Advisory Committee, when established, to be recommended to the Governor in Cabinet as National Heroes."

The Deputy Speaker: Is there a seconder to the Motion?

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Mr. Speaker, I beg to second the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09 has been read. The question is: BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the following women –

- Mrs Joyce Hylton, MBE, a social worker and advocate for the rights of women and children, widely considered the founder of our modern Social Services;
- the late Miss Beulah McLaughlin, a nurse and midwife at the Cayman Islands Hospital;
- the late Mrs. Almiria Tomlinson, a mid-wife; and
- Miss Mary Evelyn Wood, a nurse, community worker, church leader and the first woman to be elected to this Honourable House as a Member of the Legislative Assembly;

be considered by the National Heroes Advisory Committee, when established, to be recommended to the Governor in Cabinet as National Heroes."

The [amendment to the] Motion is open [for debate]. Does the Member wish to speak thereto?
The Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, just to say that the Motion as amended finds favour with the Government and we support the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If not, does the Mover wish to exercise his right of reply on the amendment?
[inaudible]

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that the amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09 be passed. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. The amendment to Private member's Motion No. 8/08-09 is duly passed.

Agreed: Amendment to Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09 passed.

The Deputy Speaker: So we have the continuation of Private Member's Motion, as amended, [with] the Mover exercising his right of reply.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, the Government has prevailed in this matter. With some trepidation I agreed to this resolution, and moved it only because the Government said they were not going to agree with us in any shape or form unless we did it this way. So, the Government has gotten what they wanted and, certainly, I did not want the four good ladies to go without having some recommendation made on their part.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say here that I am really, really bothered by the fact that even on this type of motion we had to have the kind of debate from the Honourable Minister of Education, as we have had. He never lets the occasion pass when he can throw a slur, deride the Opposition and lay blame.

Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing you can say about this Government, it is a 'blaming' Government. And, Mr. Speaker, it really bothers me, as the longest serving Member of this House. I remember when I moved the Bill when I was the Minister of Community Development and Culture. We had our detractors on the outside, in fact one wrote a letter just last week that I had to answer in the papers about women and about people being alive and our making them national heroes. We had that kind of detractors. But it did not stop the House 14 years ago when we made recommendation on the last national hero.

What bothers me is this thing that it is politics. Mr. Speaker, what makes it different? What makes politics different on that side of the House from this side of the House? What makes politics different from the Cabinet or this side of the House? What makes it?

Mr. Speaker, there is no difference when the Cabinet does something, except that it is an executive order, but coming from their heart politics plays the role of this House. But the way they put it all the time is in a demeaning way, and that is the worst part of it, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Education and his extension cord on the other side cannot but speak unless they deride somebody—if it is not the Opposition, it is somebody on the outside. Lately, they have been taking up to the Governor. They think that is going to get them some votes now, so they are doing that.

Mr. Speaker, I have been here 24 years. And I have been here through some really rough times, and—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Twenty years too long? You better mind that your four years are not cut short.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: No, Mr. Speaker, when I say cut short I mean—let me be clear when I say that to the Member who talked about 20 years too long, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town. Just let me tell him that if it is too long, then I have been here. Let him that putteth on his armour boasts not as he that taketh it off.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that while I did ask that the House to agree on the persons . . .

You know, Mr. Speaker, I promised myself that I was not really going to pay the Fourth Member for George Town any mind because I really believe that they are deranged politically, and that everything to them is just dirty or hard politics. So, I promised that I was not going to really get in any crosstalk with him.

But while I asked that the House agrees on these persons, it does not say that the Cabinet would not make that declaration, because the Law does say that the House would agree but the Cabinet would have made the declaration.

I was surprised to hear the Minister of Education say that on the one hand we can't—and, of course, the Fourth Member for George Town picked this up with him—make everybody a national hero, yet go on to say well why you didn't do this one? Why you didn't do that one? Why you didn't do the next one? And that I had chosen somebody that was relative to him.

I have to say this: The research was done by somebody else while I was away; I did not realise that Mrs. McLaughlin (that is, Nurse McLaughlin) was any relative to him. But so be it! It could have been his grandfather who gave service to this country. Whether or not they are related to him and they deserve it I am one of the first ones to say give it to them. That is the way I am. But we did say that everyone cannot be so designated. And, of course, we also said that there are many, many—it could be a long list—of women who have given unstinting service to this country. But we chose to do it out of those areas because of what they did, and because the Government is designating next year.

And what are they doing? I don't know all that they are doing. They say they are going to build a wall but walls are already built. Walls are sometimes built to keep people out! Nevertheless, we agreed with them at that time. So, what is this noise about they are doing this? Most ludicrous of his deranged political state was his statement—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: You! The Minister of Education.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: And it is a pity. And he said this: A pity . . . He's laughing now, you know, but we know what the Bible says about those that laugh in times like these.

He said that it is a pity no special attention was paid to women. Wait a minute! What kind of Minister of Education is this? Now, we know that he cannot be too far off the beaten track people like him go when he said that. How could he, Mr. Speaker, say that? "A pity that no special attention was paid to women when we were making these national heroes." That's what he said. I wrote it down.

Can you believe that?

When did Mrs. Sybil McLaughlin become a National Hero? Was it not this Minister that was the Minister who thought she should be and took the licks for doing what we did?

I'm certain the Third Elected Member for George Town remembers, whether [or not] she gives me any accolades now. But she agreed then, because she was the PS (Principal Secretary) at that time. So, she can't be disagreeing and be agreeing with her Minister of Education.

I don't see how anybody in their right state of mind can say that we did not do anything. Look at all the recognition that was paid to women during 2003, our Quincentennial Celebration. Who were the Minister and Leader of Government? Myself!

Look at all the women that we honoured for tourism who were the builders of our tourism.

Mr. Speaker, what he did go on to say was that I fought him every step of the way on making a grand National Heroes Day. Which was the first National Heroes day, Mr. Speaker? And who, in fact, piloted that Bill or made the recommendation, made it a new holiday? Who did that?

They would like the people of this country to believe that this country was just born since they became elected and took executive office. They would like the people to believe that nothing happened. I hear him talking the same thing about education. He is even blaming me asking 'what have you done in 24 years for education?'

I was never the Minister of Education, but I certainly supported everything that came my way that was good for education.

Mr. Speaker, this country did not just rise up. They have benefited much from what other people have done, and the PPM Government cannot believe that they are fooling the people of this country. They can't believe that in this day and age. They can't! But yet they go on time after time saying these things and doing these things.

Mr. Speaker, it is not that we do not want National Heroes Day to be a preeminent day in this country. We believe it should be. That is why we took the time to designate it so. We made the day. What we have said is that we see no reason to spend a half a million dollars—and I just can't see what you are spending it on!

Why, when people don't even have a roof on their house, should we spend a half a million dollars on National Heroes Day? Yes, it is good to honour everybody; yes, it is good to have a good time; yes, it is good to have all the red banners you want; yes, to have all the beautiful paperwork, the glamorous programmes. All of that is good. It is our country. But, Mr. Speaker, we have to consider what we can and cannot do, and we must give some consideration to where money is coming from in this country. So, don't get up here and talk about that we don't support him for National Heroes Day. Who in the world does he think he is?

Just got out of school, voted through and just get elected; mamoguisse the people and come here thinking that you made the whole world?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Little old fop!

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry that they believe that everything done is done for general elections. I have told the Leader of Government Business and every one of them that when that time comes I believe that the people are going to make a considered judgment, and I am not scared of it. If it is my time to go then it is my time to go.

But, oh, I believe there is going to be some weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth on the other side, because their polls have already told them who is in trouble over there. And they can bring every one of their has-beens, has-run, and their want-to-bes in West Bay. We are ready to take them on. I think the West Bay people will make the right judgment.

Not everything is done for politics. And it is times like these when we bring these kinds of motions that we expect that politics will not be played. But the Minister has done that quite well. Very, very considered form! Let him alone, Mr. Speaker. Let him alone. I believe that he will get a licking in due course that all fops get at some place or another.

I am sorry that their minds are so fixed on elections. Mr. Speaker, as I said, I believe that it is a good time to be naming national heroes, whether it is the House which agrees and the Cabinet would have to so designate, as the Law says. I can't understand how he can talk so much about politics, yet he is going to make an advisory body—we don't know of whom—but pass a motion.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Vote against whatever you want to do. It is my conscience! You already voted for it! Change that now! You can't change that vote until six months' time and you will be out of here, I hope, by then. You rascal, you!

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr.—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, he can't change his vote on this.

Point of Order

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order sir.

The Deputy Speaker: May I hear your point of order, Honourable Minister?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: In the spirit of the Season I have been taking all of this, but I really must draw the line on being called a rascal.

[laughter]

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, could you withdraw that unparliamentary statement?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw it in good Christian faith. I will.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I just can't understand why it is this thing about the politics, yet they go and agree to a motion that appoints a body that the Law has not yet even agreed on. And, Mr.

Speaker, I can't understand why, if it always politics that they claim is such a bad thing and we are always doing it, and they are so lily white, why it is that they have to put an elected Member from the Government, an elected Member from the Opposition? Why?

But you see that is the way they do things they think that people can't see through it: Oh we can do that and people will consider it the nice thing. Just pass that up to us, our appointees. Just pass it up to us. And that is not politics, you know. Oh yeah? You think people are really that fool-fool?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You do whatever you want to do. You have done worst things in the past.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: So, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I supported that with some trepidation only because I wanted those women to be included and I do not have the votes on this side to do anything but to ask you to do something. And so, in your cockamamie way that you have come and done this, I just hope that it gets done. We wait and see.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good time to have named those women, the likes of Mrs. Joyce Hylton, Mrs. Evelyn Wood, Nurse McLaughlin and Mrs. Almira Tomlinson. Their records are unblemished and they have given their lives to this country. We can say no more.

I don't believe that it is true of any government, certainly not in the past, and I just can't see Caymanians thinking that any new government is just going to appoint more and more national heroes. The last national hero was appointed 14 years ago. So, Mr. Speaker, everything that the Minister has said is a bunch of rot, and I leave it to them as the Government to do what they want to do. The amended Motion is there and I do hope that the Government will give fair hearing to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, before I sit down, on behalf of the Opposition we want to wish . . .

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I was trying to put salve on it.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that the following women: Mrs Joyce Hylton, MBE, a social worker and advocate for the rights of women and children, widely considered the founder of our modern Social Services; the late Miss Beulah McLaughlin, a nurse and midwife at the Cayman Islands Hospital; the late Mrs. Almira Tomlinson, a mid-wife; and Miss Mary Evelyn Wood, a nurse, community worker, church leader and the first woman to be elected to this Honourable House as a Member of the Legislative Assembly be considered by the National Heroes Advisory Committee, when established, to be recommended to the Governor in Cabinet as National Heroes. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The Ayes have it. Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09, as amended, is duly passed.

Agreed: Private Member's Motion No. 8/08-09, as amended, passed.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Members, since this is the end of the [meeting] for the . . .

Before we do the greetings, can I get a motion from the Government to defer the remaining Private Members' Motions?

Motion to carry business forward to the Fourth Meeting

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I move that Private Members' Motions Nos. 9, 10, 11 and 12 of 2008/09 be carried forward to the next Meeting of this honourable House.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that the remaining Private Members' Motions be carried forward to the next Meeting of this honourable House. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Deputy Speaker: The remaining Motions will be carried forward.

Agreed: Private Members' Motions Nos. 9/08-09; 10/08-09; 11/08-09 and 12/08-09 on the Order Paper carried forward to the Fourth Meeting of the 2008/09 Session.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Members since this is the end of the [Meeting] we will now give an opportunity for Members to give their Season's greetings.

I recognise the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

CHRISTMAS WISHES

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Opposition Members we want to wish all Members of this honourable House and their families the very best for the Holiday Season.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot forget the hardworking staff of this Assembly that keep us going from day to day throughout the year providing for our comforts here in this Assembly. We wish for them all the very best, God's richest blessing, good health and hopefully a more prosperous and happy 2009.

God bless you all.

The Deputy Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to take this opportunity to wish all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly and their families, the staff here at the LA and, indeed, all of the constituents of the district of George Town, in particular, and, by extension, all of the people of the three Cayman Islands, a very Merry Christmas.

I do ask people to be extra careful during the Holiday Season, those who are driving on the road who may be out for a little entertainment to not drink and drive and see if we can have a safe Christmas with no major accidents on our roads this year.

I also would like to wish for everyone that 2009 would be a very prosperous and rewarding year.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Members, I would like to take this opportunity to wish all honourable Members of the Legislative Assembly and their families, all civil servants and their families, the wider Cayman Islands community, the best for the Christmas Season and a happy New Year, and that we focus on the reason for the season—which is Christ—with love in our hearts.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: I would like to wish all honourable Members and their families a safe, blessed and joyful Christmas, also the staff of the Legislative Assembly who are here for our services throughout the year and who take good care of us and keep us comfortable in this Legislative Assembly.

I would also like to extend greetings on behalf of my family to my constituents in Bodden Town and, indeed, the wider Cayman Islands.

I think we all need to keep Cayman Brac, in particular, with their hardships at the moment in mind and do what we can to bring joy to those we are in contact with and what we can do on a daily basis for them.

Also those who have lost loved ones recently. I ask that we, in our time of joy and happiness and festivities, keep them in mind. Also I pray God's richest blessings on everyone for the New Year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words to my colleagues as well as to my constituents in terms of a festive season.

This has been a tough year, sir. But it has had some great rewarding moments, in particular for us in this House. We have witnessed the 50 years of women getting the right to vote. We have witnessed reducing the age of our young people to be registered to vote. These are historic moments, and we must not forget it. I am glad that it was in this place and at this time that it happened.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to send my love and peace to the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and to say to them that they will always be in our hearts. At the moment it might seem tough, but we ask them to have some patience, to love one another. At this time of Christmas, we know that they may not get all of the lights, but to brighten their hearts for whatever good things are to come.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to give all the kudos to the people of George Town because it is by their strength and their care that I am here. I wish, in particular for the young people in this time of festive season, that they do not go over the line and that life will be wonderful and a Christmas of peace and safety will be theirs.

Mr. Speaker, I wish you and your family well. In particular, I wish the Leader of the Opposition a healthy Christmas. I know it might be difficult for him to share in the same foods that I share in, but I will certainly keep him in my heart and hope that everything goes well for him, and that the levity we had today, barring some . . . that we will come back in the New Year and laugh and love and be happy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister of Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring Christmas greetings to you, sir, and your family and all Members of this honourable House, and, indeed, the staff of the Legislative Assembly; the staff of my Ministry and all of its agencies, both locally and overseas; and, indeed, the entire Civil Service.

I also bring greetings to my constituents of Bodden Town and the people of the Cayman Islands. I wish for them a very merry Christmas and a happy, healthy and prosperous 2009.

Mr. Speaker, we know that in recent times we have lost several members of our community. It is during this time that we should take time out to remember those family members who are grieving and to keep them in our thoughts and prayers during this most difficult time.

I thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my family and me I would like to extend Season's Greetings to Madam Speaker and her family. We know this will be a different Christmas for them. To all Members of the House, all staff here at the Legislative Assembly and our public officers across the entire spectrum of Government, all the best for the Christmas, and for a healthy and prosperous New Year.

We would certainly like to extend greetings to all constituents in our district of West Bay, but, indeed, to all of the people across the Cayman Islands wherever they may be during the Christmas season.

In the spirit of the season, Mr. Speaker, as has been said, we would like for all of us to take a deep breath and reflect, for it is celebrating the birth of Christ, who is our Lord and Saviour. I would like to encourage everyone to be careful, cautious on the roads for, indeed, the life that you save may, very well, be your own (to coin a phrase).

We ask parents to be vigilant as their children enjoy the season. We know many of them will be having fireworks and other things can potentially be harmful to them. So let us just be vigilant. Allow them to have fun, but be very vigilant.

The people of Cayman Brac are in all of our prayers. So we ought to reflect on God's mercy that no lives were lost. Indeed, this Christmas it will be very different for them. Whatever we can do, whether it is just making a call to a friend over there, or saying a quiet prayer, we should do whatever we can to ensure that the Christmas season is as normal and as enjoyable as possible to them.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those few words, I wish that all of us will return with health and strength from Almighty God in 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my family and I, I would like to wish a very happy, healthy and safe holiday season for all the Members of the Legislative Assembly, their families, the staff and their families, and to the wider population of the three Islands, and especially the people of West Bay. May God's richest blessings be with you throughout the entire Season.

As the Honourable First Official Member said, let us not forget the reason for the season.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I wish to join voice with my colleagues in this honourable House to wish the entire nation a happy and holy Christmas and to also extend greetings and best wishes to the people of Cayman Brac for whom this will not be a bright Christmas. I urge us all, but particularly those who are going through difficult times, to reflect on the true meaning of Christmas and to understand the importance of the birth of Jesus Christ and what that meant to the world. Reflect upon and view this as a time of optimism, or renewal, as we begin to face another year.

This has been a most challenging year for the world and for the Cayman Islands as well. The year to come appears to be just as challenging. Let us take this period to reflect, to renew ourselves, to regain our strength and our optimism as we move into a New Year.

And for those of us who are better off, let us do everything we can to assist those who are most in need, even if it is not some material thing. A kind word, a Christmas greeting means a lot to people who do not have the opportunity to see other people, particularly their representatives, very often. I also urge the broader community to spend time with other people, particularly those who are less fortunate.

Mr. Speaker, I wish for everyone, particularly the Members of this House, a wonderful Christmas, a safe Christmas, and let us come back to this House and to our work in the New Year renewed, invigorated and ready to deal with the country's issues. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I call on the Honourable Leader of Government Business for the suspension ...

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, trust me I was not trying to jump the queue with you, sir, as we all recognise that you, sir, should have the last say.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, because I do not know (and maybe let me turn the microphone off and ask first) . . .

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, Madam Speaker unfortunately could not be here today, and she has asked to extend her best wishes for the holidays to all Members, the staff and, indeed, especially to all of her constituents and the wider Cayman Islands. She has asked for us to extend those greetings on her behalf.

Mr. Speaker, to you and your family . . . and I must make special mention of your parents, they are near and dear. I certainly wish to extend best wishes for the holidays to you and yours and to them.

To all of the other Members of the House, both sides, my colleagues in Cabinet, the Official Members, and all of the other Elected Members, I certainly wish to extend Season's Greetings to each and every one and their families and them a very safe and happy time of year enjoying the fellowship of family and friends, remembering the celebration that we will have on Christmas and its true meaning, the birth of our Lord, Christ.

To our constituents I want to say that I certainly look forward to being able to visit as many as I can during the off time. I have to admit that it will be a welcomed break for a few days (it will not be many days, but for a few days) from all of the stresses and strains.

I also wish to extend special greetings to all of my friends and the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. We know many of them are experiencing some trying times. We also know that we have our own little squabbles about how to handle certain things, but I know that deep down all of us want the best for all of them. Even though we may argue every now and then (as might have happened today), we certainly are going to ensure that we join forces to make sure that we can remedy that situation as swiftly as we possibly can.

Again, Mr. Speaker, to everyone who lives and works here in the Cayman Islands, I want to extend Christmas greetings on behalf of myself and my family. I also wish to quickly mention that because it is a hectic time of year and there is much celebration for all of us, let's take care. I pray God's safety and that we do not have any sad times during this period as sometimes happens simply because of the nature of events.

So, Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment, I will give way, sir, for you to have the final say.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Honourable Members, I too would like to take this opportunity to extend to all Members on behalf of myself and my family, and to all members of staff and their families, to the good people of West Bay and of the Cayman Islands, specifically the people of Cayman Brac who we know have gone through challenging times, and wish everyone a safe, healthy and blessed Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

I look forward to coming back and continuing our working relationship next year. As you said, this has been a challenging year and it appears that next year will be just as challenging, or more so. So we have a lot of work ahead of us.

I look forward to a safe celebration. I would also like to take this opportunity on behalf of the staff of the Legislative Assembly to extend greetings to all Members as well—Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, with your permission sir, I will pause for just a second.

[Hon. Members sang "Happy Birthday" to the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay, Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker we won't be here tomorrow and it is the birthday of the Fourth Elected Member [of West Bay] tomorrow. We will not ask how young he is, but we also wish for him a very happy birthday. I presume he will be able to bundle it all into one big celebration straight through into Christmas.

The only thing we wish to make sure is that all of his boats, he keeps them clean, sir.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: With that, I move the adjournment of this honourable Legislative Assembly until 10.00 am, 6 February 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is that this House do now adjourn until 10.00 am, 6 February 2009. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 8.25 pm the House stood adjourned until 10.00 am Friday, 6 February 2009.

First Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say the Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce.

Cayman Academy School Visitors

The Speaker: I would like to welcome Years 5 and 6 Students of the Cayman Academy School and Teachers for their attendance in the Gallery this morning. I think this an opportune time when the Leader of Government Business makes a statement later on.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS AND OF REPORTS

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands – on the Vesting of the filled areas of Crown Seabed on Block OPY Parcel 18 to Little Liquor Store Ltd.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House, the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the Vesting of the filled areas of Crown Seabed on Block OPY Parcel 18 to Little Liquor Store Ltd.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker, just a few short notes.

Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm that, as required by the Law, the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No. 25/2008, dated 8 December 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Caymanian Compass, on 3 December 2008.

Also as required by Law, three (3) valuations have been carried out on the subject property. Each valuation report forms part of the overall Report and provides a general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

Madam Speaker, the Report deals with the vesting of filled areas of Crown seabed adjacent to Block OPY Parcel 18 to the Little Liquor Store Ltd. This property is located on North Church Street, north of the Royal Watler Cruise Terminal in George Town.

The area of the filled Crown seabed is approximately 1,215 square feet (a very small parcel), which has been filled as a result of coastal works on the parcel and the Cruise Terminal. The Little Liquor Store is located on this parcel. The purpose of this vesting is to regularise the situation that has arisen as a result of the coastal works that have been done and allow the landowner to re-establish their parcel boundaries to reflect the reclaimed area.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 80A Parcel 175, Block 80A Parcel 177 and Block 82A Parcel 81 to the Cayman Islands Airports Authority.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the Vesting of Crown Land Block 80A Parcel 175, Block 80A Parcel 177 and Block 82A Parcel 81 to the Cayman Islands Airports Authority.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm that, as required by the Law, the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No. 26/2008, dated 22 December 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Caymanian Compass, of 18 December 2008.

Also, as required by Law, three (3) valuations have been carried out on the subject property. Each valuation forms part of the overall Report and provides a general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

Madam Speaker, the Report deals with the vesting of three (3) parcels I mentioned to the Cayman Islands Airports Authority. The three (3) adjoining parcels are located just south of the North Coast Road West in the Registration Section Little Cayman West, on Little Cayman.

Madam Speaker, this is simply an exercise by the Government to vest to the Airports Authority these three parcels where, in the future, it is intended by the Airports Authority to construct a new airport in Little Cayman.

National Drug Council 2004 Annual Report

National Drug Council 2005 Annual Report

National Drug Council 2006 Annual Report

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Annual Reports for the National Drug Council. And, Madam Speaker, with your permission, I will do them all at one time, which is for 2004, 2005 and 2006.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker, just briefly.

As Members of this honourable House are aware, the functions of the National Drug Council operations include coordinating the efforts to provide drug abuse education, treatment and rehabilitation, advice to the Ministry and support for drug demand and supply reduction programmes. The National Drug Council is in the process of compiling the 2007 Annual Report in order to be in compliance with the requirements of both the Public Management and Finance Law (2003 Revision), and the National Drug Council Law (2003 Revision).

On 1 May 2006 (and this is reference to the staff), Mrs. Julene Banks was appointed as the new Chairman to the National Drug Council Board. Mrs. Banks and fellow Board members, with the Ministry's support, have made strides forward in re-energising the activities of the National Drug Council. Vigorous steps have been taken to regularise the administration of the National Council and consolidate the operations of the Secretariat.

The new National Drugs Coordinator Executive Director, Mrs. Joan West-Dacres, was employed in September 2007. Subsequently, an Administrative Finance Officer and a Research and Information Officer have been employed thereby further strengthening the capacity of the National Drug Council Secretariat.

Public Education Campaign and Special Projects: The National Drug Council has been proactive in that a website has been launched that provides information to the public on the changes in life associated with the misuse of substances. The National Drug Council has utilised the local media to provide the general public with up to date, factual information about the negative consequences of substance abuse, including the possible associated impairment.

Some established public information campaigns during 2004 to 2006 included Drug Prevention in Primary Schools, the Fearless Factor Summer Camp, Purple Ribbon Bus, Designated Driver, Drug Awareness, TIPS Training, Basic Drugs Education Programme, World "No Tobacco" Day, International Day Against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and the KEYS Foundation.

Research and Statistics: The National Drug Council plays a proactive role in terms of initiating supporting and publishing studies and reports on drug abuse. Research conducted during 2004 to 2006 include the following: Prison prevalence, Cayman Islands Student Drug-use Survey, Drug Pre-workplace Survey, National Drug Council Database.

A brief overview of the financial report: Total revenue for the year ended 30 June 2004 was $490,397; and for the 2005 fiscal year, the total revenue was $491,259. For the 2006 fiscal year, the total revenue was $504,214.

During the 2004 fiscal year, fixed assets located in the offices of the National Drug Council had a net book value of $708,000. However, due to the destruction of the offices and equipment of the National Drug Council caused by Hurricane Ivan in 2004, this net book value was written off in its entirety. Subsequently, the fixed asset value for 2005 increased substantially to $40,675 as new equipment was purchased.

During the 2006 fiscal year, fixed assets located in the offices of the National Drug Council had a net book value of $41,894.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received notice of a statement by the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Outcome of Constitutional Negotiations

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

First of all, let me apologise to you for the late start (after 10.00) but the mechanics of this morning called for more than usual. So we thank you very much for allowing us to start a little bit late.

I also wish on behalf of the Government to say a very special welcome to all those who are here in the building, especially to the Years 5 and 6 students of the Cayman Academy who, with their bright little faces, are waving their hands. Welcome. And of course, the teachers did not quite trust them, so they had to attend also because they did not want them to come here unsupervised. But we would have been happy to have them. Welcome teachers. And also our good friend, the pastor who is with us (and he does not want me to call his name!).

Madam Speaker, I am reminded, and again I have to apologise. Former Speaker, Mr. Pierson, is here with us and certainly he is in his usual dapper form. We welcome him.

Madam Speaker, it is with an immense sense of pride, satisfaction and accomplishment that I rise to address this honourable House, on what is truly an historic occasion for all of us here in the Cayman Islands; an occasion marked by a single achievement this past week of which every Caymanian can be proud and which is cause for celebration by every Caymanian, regardless of political or other affiliation.

Together as a nation, we are finally near the end of a long and arduous journey, a journey we started some eight years ago at the request of the United Kingdom Government. I speak of the journey of constitutional modernization begun in 2001 under the auspices of the UK's White Paper dealing with its Overseas Territories entitled "Partnership for Progress and Prosperity", a journey which was to culminate with each territory, including the Cayman Islands, modernizing its system of governance and adopting a brand new Constitution to reflect the changing times and circumstances.

The successful conclusion of constitutional negotiations last week in London represents a giant step towards getting us there. Following three separate rounds of negotiations, the Cayman Islands delegation reached agreement with the United Kingdom Government on the provisions of a modern Constitution for us in the Cayman Islands.

As you are aware, Madam Speaker, the composition of the Cayman delegation was broad-based to reflect major national interests. Representatives were from Government, the Opposition, the Cayman Islands Chamber of Commerce, the Cayman Ministers Association, the Seventh Day Adventist Church, and the Human Rights Committee.

We, as the representatives of the people, have done our duty and we have delivered. It is now for the people to give their stamp of approval in a referendum planned for May 20th. This broad-based agreement on a new Constitution is truly a magnificent achievement. It shows what is possible when we choose, despite our differences, to work together in a spirit of cooperation and compromise to advance a common goal. Clearly proving that where there is a will there is always a way, the agreement is also solid testimony of our growing maturity as a people. This, indeed, is great cause for celebration.

There is a significant lesson here. It is that if we as a people draw from this experience and apply the same consensus-building approach to other spheres of national endeavour—for example, confronting the challenges facing our economy—the result will be a stronger and better Cayman Islands for us all in the future. Isn't this, Madam Speaker, a really noble ideal worth pursuing? Something we can commit ourselves to.

As the Government, our role was to give leadership to the constitutional modernization process which we did. However, we recognized from the very outset that if constitutional modernization was to be a truly successful initiative, it had to secure the widest possible support from the population. Hence, the reason we opted for the consultative approach through which we canvassed the views and opinions of Caymanians from all walks of life, and engaged stakeholder groups in a continuous dialogue over the last year in particular.

This was the Government's way of saying to Caymanians Come and get involved! Shape and take ownership of the process because, at the end of the day, it is really your Constitution. Not the Government's! It is all about all of our future—not the Government's future. The response was enthusiastic. Going around the country, it was encouraging to see ordinary folk engaging in serious discussion of complex issues and strongly making their points, which were noted by the Constitutional Modernization Secretariat and acted upon.

To ensure that the people were represented at the negotiating table by other than political voices from Government and the Opposition, we decided to include the church, the private sector and the Human Rights Committee on the national negotiating team. Compared with other UK Overseas Territories which have also undergone constitutional modernization, the approach taken by the Cayman Islands stood out for its uniqueness. As a result, the end-product of the negotiations with the UK Government is a People's Constitution firmly anchored on a national consensus.

On behalf of the Government, I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition and his team and the other stakeholder groups for their meaningful contributions to the process and for approving the final document. Further, I invite the Opposition and stakeholder groups to join me in asking their various constituencies to say a resounding "yes" to the new Constitution when they vote in the May 20th referendum.

Yes, because the proposed Constitution represents a good deal for the Cayman Islands and Caymanians. (And, Madam Speaker, you were there. And just to add we were told that it was better than we expected.)

Yes, because it was achieved with broad-based support not just from the Government and Opposition, but also from civil society.

Yes, because this new Constitution is the key to unlocking new possibilities which will support a better future for the Cayman Islands and a better future for all of us. The new Constitution safeguards our heritage, upholds our cherished values, empowers us by allowing a greater say in the running of our country, and strengthens our constitutional ties with the United Kingdom.

Yes, because the existing 1972 Constitution is so outdated, it no longer meets our changing needs as a rapidly developing economy competing on the global stage. The time is right, therefore, to say, Away with the old Constitution and ring in the new one.

It is unfortunate, Madam Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition could not be here today as he has had to be off island (as you have been notified.) Certainly, we would not wish to be all inclusive in this process. So we are proposing to hold a joint press conference involving representatives from all teams who made up the Cayman Islands delegation to London and to provide an opportunity for everyone who was at the negotiating table to share their experiences with the general public. That, we plan to do next week; Monday, when everyone is on Island. In the meanwhile, I am pleased to inform this honourable House that we have received the final official draft of the new Constitution from London.

In keeping with previous practice, Madam Speaker, with your permission I will this morning be laying a copy of that on the Table of this honourable House and it will be widely circulated for public consideration and comment ahead of the May 20th referendum.

Before highlighting some major features of the new Constitution, I also wish to place on record the Government's thanks and appreciation to the staff of the Constitutional Modernization Secretariat (some of whom are sitting directly behind me) for their sterling work in the managing of the process. The Secretariat, falling under the Cabinet Office headed by Cabinet Secretary, Mr. Orrett Connor, was very ably managed by the Director, Mrs. Suzanne Bothwell, and her deputy Christian Suckoo, with the enthusiastic support of a small staff.

The Secretariat went out regularly into the field and interacted with the people. It ensured that there was a high level of public awareness and understanding of the issues, and provided invaluable technical support to the negotiating team. Madam Speaker, they saw it all the way through.

Thanks also to Professor Jeffrey Jowell, QC, the Constitutional Expert, for his insightful advice and guidance. Madam Speaker, I wish to say that even the UK team was very happy that Professor Jowell had been contracted by the Government as he was very useful in the entire process, including drafting a lot of the new Constitution. And I want to say a very special thank you to the media for ensuring Constitutional Modernization issues enjoyed high visibility.

Madam Speaker I will start by reading the letter received from Mr. Ian Hendry last night enclosing the draft Constitution.

The letter is addressed to me:

"Dear Kurt,

RE: CONSTITUTIONAL MODERNISATION

"I have pleasure in enclosing a draft new Constitution of the Cayman Islands, together with accompanying draft letters from the responsible Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister to yourself. These documents represent the political agreement reached at the constitutional modernisation talks held at Lancaster House, London, from 3 to 5 February 2009, chaired by the Minister for the Overseas Territories, Gillian Merron MP.

"As agreed at the talks, the enclosed documents may be published in the Cayman Islands in such manner as you see fit, to form a basis for public consultation prior to the referendum planned for 20 May 2009. The draft new Constitution will not be submitted to Her Majesty in the Privy Council to be formally enacted until it has been approved by the people of the Cayman Islands in the referendum. If the draft Constitution is duly enacted, the accompanying letters would be sent at the same time.

“If so approved and enacted, the draft new Constitution will represent a modern and more democratic constitutional settlement between the Cayman Islands and the United Kingdom, reflecting our relationship of partnership in the 21st century, and in terms that are acceptable to both the Cayman Islands and the United Kingdom. The continuation of that relationship is a matter of mutual consent, and I believe the draft new Constitution will form a sound and modern basis for our mutual cooperation, in which there is a fair balance between greater local autonomy and the powers necessary to enable the United Kingdom to meet its responsibilities. I therefore hope that it will prove acceptable to the people of the Cayman Islands.

“Yours . . . Ian Hendry, Leader, United Kingdom Constitutional Review Team.”

Madam Speaker, we agree entirely with Mr. Hendry's sentiments that the draft constitution will represent a modern and more democratic constitutional settlement between the Cayman Islands and the United Kingdom, reflecting our relationship of partnership in the 21st century.

First, it is not an 'off-the-peg' constitution but goes out of its way to reflect the traditions and culture of Caymanians. Secondly, it goes further than any other British Overseas Territories Constitution in providing new ways to achieve accountable and honest government at the local level, while building on existing institutions.

Thirdly, while not seeking independence—and I want to stress that, Madam Speaker. No one is seeking independence of the Cayman Islands from the UK. And while it does not in any way shape or form do that, it goes further than any other British Overseas Territories Constitution in placing policy-making in the hands of those who are elected by the people; holding the Governor to higher standards of legal and political accountability and transparent and open governance, and reducing the power of the Governor to make laws for the Cayman Islands to which the people have not assented.

The following is a summary of the main innovations in the proposed new Constitution.

Preamble: While a preamble is not directly enforceable, it sets the tone of the purpose of the new Constitution, guides the way it is interpreted, and resolves any ambiguities of language. The Preamble makes it clear that this new constitution is based on our abiding traditions and values.

It reads as follows: “The people of the Cayman Islands, recalling the events that have shaped their history and made them what they are, and acknowledging their distinct history, culture and Christian heritage and its enduring influence and contribution in shaping the spiritual, moral and social values that have guided their development and brought peace, prosperity and stability to those islands, through the vision, forbearance, and leadership of their people, who are loyal to Her Majesty the Queen; Affirm their intention to be:

- A God-fearing country based on historical and traditional Christian values, tolerant of other religions and beliefs.
- A country with open, responsible and accountable government that includes a working partnership with the private sector and continuing beneficial ties with the United Kingdom.
- A country in which religion finds its expression in moral living and social justice.
- A caring community based on mutual respect for all individuals and their basic human rights.
- A country committed to the democratic values of human dignity, equality and freedom.
- A community that practises honest and open dialogue to ensure mutual understanding and social harmony.
- A safe, secure and law-abiding community.
- A country that is free from crime and drug abuse.
- A country with an educational system that identifies and develops on a continuing basis the abilities of each person, allowing them to reach their full potential and productivity.
- A community that [encourages] and prepares young people to assume leadership roles.
- A country that provides a comprehensive healthcare system.
- A community protective of traditional Caymanian heritage and the family unit.
- A country that honours the sacrifice of its seafaring men who left the shores of the Islands to enhance the quality of life of their people, and in doing so established themselves amongst the finest within the global maritime community of that time and through their remittances, endeavours and experiences built the foundations of the Cayman Islands' modern economy.
- A country that honours and acknowledges the important contribution of Caymanian women who during the absence of the seafaring men of the Islands managed the affairs of their homes, businesses and communities and passed on the values and traditions of the Islands' people.
- A country with a vibrant diversified economy, which provides full employment.
- A country that makes optimal use of modern technology.
- A country that manages growth and maintains prosperity, while protecting its social and natural environment.

- A country that respects, protects and defends its environment and natural resources as the basis of its existence.
- A country that fosters the highest standards of integrity in the dealings of the private and public sectors.
- A country with an immigration system that protects Caymanians, gives security to long term residents and welcomes legitimate visitors and workers.
- A country that plays its full part in the region and in the international community.

Madam Speaker, regarding the Bill of Rights, Freedoms and Responsibilities: This section of the Constitution will be introduced over a period of three years so as to permit time for adjusting, training and education. And just to say, Madam Speaker, for those who may have a question mark in their minds regarding that three-year time period, the fact of the matter is especially with Government institutions, [there is a] need to be fully prepared so that all of the actions of those agencies are in line with the Bill of Rights. It is for that reason more than any other reason why we have agreed for there to be a time lag so that those agencies can be prepared. The Bill of Rights has the following features, some of which are unique:

It enshrines the fact that a true democracy requires all governments, even those with overwhelming popular support, to respect the rule of law and certain fundamental rights and freedoms which belong to us all.

It makes clear that this part of the Constitution does not apply to relations between private individuals and institutions, such as churches or schools. In other words, it has 'vertical' application, not 'horizontal' application.

It includes the fundamental 'civil and political rights' (such as to life, expression, fair trial, property, to be treated equally in respect of all rights, etc.), but also includes new rights that suit the Cayman Islands' traditions and aspirations (such as the right to have our environment protected and children's rights).

While some of the rights and duties are absolute (such as the right to life and to a fair trial) others may be limited where necessary to protect the rights of others or to protect the public interest. Thus freedom of speech may be curtailed to prevent pornography or defamatory statements.

It also makes clear that the right to marriage refers to a union between persons of the opposite sex and preserves the rights of churches and schools to further their particular ethos and traditions.

While the courts are given the power to strike down any decision of a public official or authority that infringes the Bill of Rights, in respect of Laws passed by the Legislative Assembly courts may only declare the offending Law to be incompatible with the Bill of Rights. While such a declaration will have significant moral force, it will still be up to the Legislative Assembly to decide whether or not to remove or amend the offending Law so as to make it compatible with the Bill of Rights. In other words, Madam Speaker, the Parliament remains supreme, the judiciary does not.

The most controversial aspect of this entire constitutional modernization exercise has been the content of the Bill of Rights. The United Kingdom has mandated that a Bill of Rights must form part of any new constitution for its Overseas Territories. The struggle has always been to draft a Bill of Rights which would satisfy the UK that it met all its international obligations under the various conventions and treaties to which it is a signatory, while at the same time respecting Caymanian sensitivities, moral standards and values.

It has taken eight years, but we have done so. We have a draft Bill of Rights which has been approved by the United Kingdom as well as all of the stakeholders in this process among them, notably, representatives from virtually all churches in the Cayman Islands. That has been no mean feat. It has taken tremendous perseverance, forbearance, creativity, intellect and a willingness to compromise on the part of all concerned.

It is with a great deal of disappointment and regret that I have to acknowledge this morning that despite the involvement of the Human Rights Committee in every step of the process, including their attendance and contribution at all three rounds of the Constitutional talks with the United Kingdom, they are determined to campaign against the draft Bill of Rights on the basis that it does not go far enough.

Madam Speaker, obviously, they were not prepared at the end of the day to be a part of that spirit of compromise.

Madam Speaker, successful negotiations are characterized by a spirit of compromise. That has been especially true of these recently concluded constitutional talks. All parties made concessions in order to reach agreement on a document that everyone could support. The Government has not achieved everything it pushed for, neither has the Opposition, the Chamber of Commerce, the Cayman Ministers Association, the Conference of Seventh day Adventists or, indeed, the Human Rights Committee. I believe it is more than fair to say that in some instances even the UK gave more than it would have preferred to give. But that is the way negotiations work.

Having been involved in the process, having sat at the table and negotiated the inclusion of significant provisions in the draft Bill of Rights it is wrong, in my view, for the HRC to now attempt to derail the final approval of the new Constitution because they have not succeeded in obtaining all they pushed for.

Madam Speaker, let me stop for one second and say this with the greatest of respect on a personal level at all times. But when you are faced that if one side gets all that they want, everyone else is going to get up and move from the table and not continue to participate, what do you do? That is what we were faced with. So we got the best that we could get for the majority of the people. And there will be no time in the history of this country—no time at all—when every single human being will look at a constitution that is enforced any given day and say that everything in here is what I agreed with. It will not happen because God made each one of us different. Even the octuplets that were just born will have their own differences, I can promise the world, as soon as we know enough about them.

Madam Speaker, in my view, their approach to this is doing the very cause that they represent, a disservice. They are essentially saying that if they cannot have the Bill of Rights they want, it is better to have none at all. And I am sure on this section this is not what they would wish to say or, indeed, to practise.

Cayman presently has no constitutional provision for human rights. Whatever its perceived shortcomings by the Human Rights Committee, the present draft bill significantly advances human rights protection in this jurisdiction and, importantly—importantly, Madam Speaker—it has the support of both the Cayman delegation and the United Kingdom Government.

And within that Cayman delegation were represented civil society, the Cayman Ministers' Association, the Conference of Seventh Day Adventists, and the Chamber of Commerce and the Human Rights Committee. So I have to say to the Human Rights Committee, half a loaf is better than no bread at all. Let us hasten slowly. Do not attempt to destroy the national consensus which has taken eight years and millions of dollars of the country's money to achieve.

Moving on now, Madam Speaker: the Governor and the Cabinet. Under the present Constitution the Governor is relatively unconstrained in his powers, while the new Constitution is novel in the following respects:

The Governor is under a duty to exercise his powers in the best interest of the Cayman Islands, consistent with those of the UK.

The Cabinet will consist of seven ministers, including the Premier, the Attorney General and the Deputy Governor. The Governor will chair Cabinet and in his absence it will be chaired by the Premier.

Executive power is exercised on behalf of Her Majesty not, as at present, by the Governor alone, but is split between the Governor and the Cabinet of the day. The Cabinet has primary responsibility for making and implementing policy, and the Governor has primary responsibility for defence, external affairs, and appointments and conditions of employment in the public service.

While national security is still a special responsibility of the Governor, he or she must now act in accordance with the advice of a new National Security Council unless he or she considers that giving effect to the advice would adversely affect Her Majesty's interest (whether in respect of the United Kingdom or the Cayman Islands). However, the Governor is duty-bound to keep the Cabinet informed of all matters for which he or she is primarily responsible, and must consult the Cabinet on all of these matters. Madam Speaker, that I can say personally, is a welcome relief.

Where the Governor does not follow the Cabinet's advice, he or she must provide reasons for not doing so.

The Cabinet agenda is no longer in the hands of the Governor alone, but is set by the Governor together with the Premier (as the Leader of Government Business will in future be called).

Even the very broad overriding powers of the United Kingdom to intervene in order to preserve 'peace, order and good governance', is subject to a duty of the Governor to consult in advance of such intervention.

In one of the Governor's areas of special responsibility, external affairs, unless instructed to the contrary by the United Kingdom, the Governor may no longer enter, agree or give final approval to any international agreement that would affect internal policy, or require implementation by a Law of the Cayman Islands, without first obtaining the agreement of Cabinet.

And even in the area of the Governor's special responsibility for external affairs, he or she is under a duty to delegate or assign to a Minister responsibility for a large range of issues, such as matters having to do with the Caribbean region, tourism, taxation, finance and the regulation of financial services, and European Union matters directly affecting the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, let me say this: that is more than welcome; that is absolutely necessary for this country's survival.

The Governor's existing powers to disallow laws or force a law through the Legislative Assembly is also significantly reduced.

Madam Speaker, the Premier, who is the elected leader of the country: The Premier will replace the present office of Leader of Government Business and he or she will be the individual who commands the support of the majority of persons elected to the Legislative Assembly. He or she will advise the Governor on the appointment of the other ministers.

Attorney General, Deputy Governor and Director of Public Prosecutions: In keeping with the notion that those who are elected by the people are in the best position to translate their needs into policies, the new constitution provides that although the Attorney General and the Deputy Governor shall sit in the Legislative Assembly and Cabinet and continue to offer guidance and advice to these two bodies, neither of them will have a vote.

The office of Deputy Governor is a new one and will replace the current office of Chief Secretary, or as we term it in the Legislative Assembly, the Honourable First Official Member. The holder must be a Caymanian who holds or has held senior position in the public service and is still eligible to hold public office. And even that one took a bit of craft to make sure that we captured everything, Madam Speaker, as I am sure you will remember (I see you smiling!), but we did it.

The Attorney General will be the principal legal advisor to Government and the Legislative Assembly and will no longer have responsibility for criminal prosecutions. This responsibility will be conferred upon a new Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP). The appointments of both the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions are no longer the responsibility of His Excellency the Governor solo. In making appointments to these offices the Governor must act in accordance with the advice of a newly created Judicial and Legal Services Commission unless he or she determines that compliance with that advice would prejudice Her Majesty's service.

The draft Constitution gives constitutional recognition to the office of the Cabinet Secretary. The Cabinet Secretary must be a Caymanian and will be appointed by the Governor acting after consultation with the Premier.

While the Cabinet and Legislative responsibility for finance will be transferred to a minister with responsibility for finance, the office of the Financial Secretary is also retained as a constitutionally recognized office. The Financial Secretary will be the principal advisor to the minister with responsibility for finance and will head up this office.

The new Judicial and Legal Services Commission: Whereas now the appointments of judges, magistrates and the Attorney General are made by His Excellency the Governor in his total discretion, the new Constitution provides that the Governor will in future be advised on such appointments by a new Judicial and Legal Services Commission which shall also have responsibility for judicial discipline. No longer will we have to hire this tribunal who, in turn, will hire a battery of lawyers who, in the first week of its operation will cost us more than $1 million. I will say nothing further on that matter. Madam Speaker, the purpose is to strengthen the independence of the judiciary and provide more expertise about the qualities of the new appointees.

Such a Commission will be independent of His Excellency the Governor and consist of four senior judges, two legal practitioners (one from the government legal service and one from private practice), and two lay persons (one of whom will chair the Commission).

The National Security Council: The draft constitution provides for the establishment of a National Security Council to advise His Excellency the Governor on matters relating to internal security with the exception of operational and staffing matters. The Governor will be obliged to act in accordance with the advice of the Council unless he or she considers that giving effect to the advice would adversely affect Her Majesty's interest whether in respect of the United Kingdom or the Cayman Islands. The Council is made up of the Governor, who will be the chair person, the Premier, two other Ministers, the Leader of the Opposition or his or her designate, two persons representing civil society, the Deputy Governor, the Attorney General and the Commissioner of Police.

Madam Speaker, the Legislature and Electoral Arrangements: The elected members of the Legislative Assembly will be increased to 18 to facilitate the proposed increase of ministers to 7. In addition, the membership of the House will include the Speaker and the Deputy Governor and Attorney General, ex officio. Further changes to the number of elected members will not require constitutional change but may be done by ordinary legislation. Any increase in the number of ministers in Cabinet must be balanced by corresponding increases in the membership of the House to ensure that the number of ministers does not exceed two-fifths of the membership of the House.

The present electoral districts will be retained with the proposed increases in membership of the House being allocated by an Electoral Boundaries Commission. Special provision is made to ensure that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will be required to return at least two members to the Legislative Assembly, regardless of the number of voters in that district.

It will be possible in the future to convert the electoral system to single member constituencies without the need for further constitutional change by passing the necessary local legislation.

Madam Speaker, those Institutions which support Democracy: A number of bodies will be introduced so as to set standards which support and strengthen our democracy. These include:

A Human Rights Commission (which will promote the understanding and observance of human rights in the Cayman Islands)

A Commission for Standards in Public Life (which will set the highest standards to ensure the integrity and competence of those in public life, prevent corruption and maintain a Register of Interests).

Advisory District Councils which will provide guidance and advice to members of the Assembly.

A Complaints Commissioner (who will consider and report on complaints about maladministration) and constitutional recognition of the Freedom of Information Law.

With regard to people-initiated referendums, provision is made for people-initiated referendums which will require a referendum to be held in respect of any issue when Cabinet is presented with a petition signed by at least 25 per cent of the electorate. Where the referendum is assented to by more than 50 per cent of the electorate, it is binding on the Cabinet and the Legislature.

Provision is made for limits to be placed on public debt by ordinary legislation, as it is now.

The draft Constitution promotes far greater participation by the Opposition and civil society in the affairs of government. From the inclusion of the Leader of the Opposition or his designate on the National Security Council to a non lawyer, private sector Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, great effort has been made to create a more inclusive, bipartisan environment for the administration of the affairs of government.

Other examples include involvement of the Leader of the Opposition in appointments to key committees and councils, the ability of elected members whose districts are not represented in Cabinet to attend Cabinet and make representations to Cabinet on matters affecting their districts as well as provision for People Initiated Referendum.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, these provisions underscore vast improvements to our system of governance under the new Constitution. They will surely contribute to making life better for all of us in the Cayman Islands. I want to say that I highly commend this new Constitution to all Caymanians. In my view, it is the key to unlocking a better and more secure future.

Voting “yes” in the May 20th referendum means seizing the wonderful opportunities being offered by the new Constitution for the further development of our country. Give the future a chance! A future of confidence, filled with great possibilities. It is within our reach to have and to hold.

Endorse the new Constitution and it is all yours! is what I say to the people of this country. I am extremely happy this morning, Madam Speaker, and I know that all of my colleagues in here and you are very happy to see the youngsters here with us. I can assure them that by their very presence here, they are playing a part in the history of this country. A new Constitution certainly paves a straighter path for them and generations to come.

May God continue to bless and guide us in the Cayman Islands. May we continue to grow from strength to strength under our new Constitution!

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for your indulgence. And I crave your indulgence to now read a short statement which is being published by His Excellency the Governor regarding the new draft Constitution. And just so that everyone will know, Madam Speaker, I did not wrestle it from him. He was quite happy to let me have a copy to read it.

Statement by His Excellency the Governor, Mr Stuart D M Jack, CVO

(Read by Honourable D. Kurt Tibbetts, Leader of Government Business)

“The statement reads: Today a new draft Constitution for the Cayman Islands has been published. This was agreed at last week’s talks in London, which were the culmination of a long process going back some years including two recent rounds of talks in Cayman and, before that, extensive public consultation.

“I commend the proposed new Constitution to the voters of the Cayman Islands, who will be asked to approve it, or not, in a referendum in May. And I also commend the hard work of many people here and in the UK to get us to this point.

“Up to now I have said little publicly apart from encouraging everyone to make their input through the public consultations or directly to those taking part in the talks. In the talks themselves I played a limited part: my main concern was to ensure that the specific circumstances of the Cayman Islands were factored in and that a new Constitution would be workable.

“In my opinion the text released today is a good one. I believe it both reflects the needs and values of the Cayman Islands and forms a solid, workable basis for the relationship between this Territory and the United Kingdom. I believe it will extend democracy and promote good governance.

“It will give the people of the Cayman Islands a greater say, for example over international relations, government finances, the police and judiciary. The Governor and the United Kingdom Government will be obliged to consult the Premier—the new word for Leader of Government Business—the Cabinet or new national bodies on a larger range of issues: this will regularise and extend current informal efforts at consultation. Several new bodies will be established which will be composed mainly of local people. Checks and balances will be strengthened. And the legitimate interests of the UK and its international obligations will also be safeguarded.

“The most controversial part of the new Constitution has been the Bill of Rights. The UK made it clear from the beginning that without a Bill of Rights there would be no new Constitution. Many people here were concerned that it would undermine local values. The text agreed last week will not please everybody—in particular some people felt that it should go further and provide for more rights. But in the opinion of most of those at the talks, including the church representatives, the new Bill of Rights is an acceptable compromise.

“It will give added protection to ordinary members of the public, for example in respect of the treatment they get from the police and the courts. There will be an independent Human Rights Commission that will monitor human rights in a local context. In areas which the Bill of Rights does not explicitly cover it will be for the Legislative Assembly, in other words the elected representatives of the people of these islands, to decide whether and in what form further rights should be set out in law. I strongly hope that the elected government and legislators will soon take action to strengthen the protection of women and children – some legislation and action in these non-controversial areas have been outstanding for far too long. And I hope they will go ahead with plans to provide better arrangements for young offenders, though I recognise that this requires resources and may therefore not be achievable immediately.

“There are three other new features of the proposed Constitution that I particularly welcome. [And, Madam Speaker, just for those who may listen later on, “I”, in this instance, is His Excellency the Governor.]

“First, a National Security Council chaired by the Governor and composed of the Premier, two other elected Ministers, the Leader of the Opposition and two representatives of civic society as well as the Deputy Governor, the Attorney General and the Commissioner of Police. The Governor will normally be expected to follow its advice on policy matters. But the wide membership and the exclusion from its remit of operational and staffing matters mean that the police will not be subject to undue political interference. That means, for example, that the Police Commissioner, not politicians, will continue to decide which police officer does which job.

“Second, a Judicial and Legal Services Commission chaired by a lay member and composed of local and overseas judges, local lawyers, and members of the public. This will ensure that people appointed to be judges and to a few other key positions such as the Attorney General, and the standards expected of them, are both of a high professional calibre and suit the circumstances of the Cayman Islands.

“Third, a Commission for Standards in Public Life chaired by and composed of local people outside politics and the public service. This independent body will have a wide-ranging remit to ensure high standards in the Legislative Assembly, Cabinet, and across the public service.

“In several other respects the new draft differs from the current Constitution, which goes back to 1972. It is also important to note some of the things which the draft does not do. It does not push the Cayman Islands towards independence, though that option remains if the people of these islands so chose in the future. It does not oblige the Territory to recognise gay marriage: as British Ministers have repeatedly made clear, it would be for the Legislative Assembly to decide on such matters. Nor does the new draft restrict the right of civil servants to stand for elected office. [Those are His Excellency’s words, Madam Speaker.]

“Probably no one around last week’s negotiating table in London is 100% happy with every detail. But I am sure that the text is the best that could be agreed now or in the foreseeable future.

“I hope that voters will look at the new draft Constitution carefully and judge the overall package on its merits. Doubtless people will express differing views in the coming weeks, including candidates in the general election. I hope that you, the voters, will not let your decision in the referendum get too mixed up with your decision on how you will vote in the elections to the Legislative Assembly, which will take place on the same day. The country’s Constitution is a matter of long term national importance and should rise above short term party politics.

“There is one key question for voters in the referendum: is the proposed new Constitution better for the people of the Cayman Islands than the present Constitution. I believe it is.

“The Draft New Constitution of the Cayman Islands reached at the Constitutional Modernisation Talks, Lancaster House, London 3-5 February 2009.”

[Applause]

PRIVATE MEMBERS’ MOTIONS

Private Member’s Motion No. 10/08-09—Cayman Islands Sports Hall of Fame

The Speaker: I recognise the Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I beg to move Private Member’s Motion No. 10/08-09—Cayman Islands Sports Hall of Fame, which reads:

BE IT HEREBY RESOLVED that the Government consider establishing a National Sports Hall of Fame.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, I beg to second that Motion.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Motion is, by design, kept brief. In my mind it is a rather simple and non-contentious one, one that I do not believe requires a lot of debate.

Madam Speaker, I will probably take only 10 to 15 minutes to do two things: I want to give the rationale and reason behind my moving the Motion; and, secondly, by way of example, I want to offer up a few suggestions revealed in some of my research as it relates to establishing a national sports hall of fame.

Obviously, the Government (if they accept the Motion) would have to go through that process themselves, through their technical staff, and come up with the policy that would underpin the creation of this sports hall of fame. There are various ways and means by which the Government could achieve that, so that would be the remit of the Government. I am not going to venture too much into that territory.

I think all of us would agree that for a long time in the Islands we have struggled to come up with formalised ways and institutions by which we pay honour to our own people who have achieved much in whatever sphere of life they excel in.

Over the years we have come up with a number of laudable initiatives. For a number of years now we have had a sports person of the year. That is something good and fitting. We know that the criteria for receiving awards from the Queen could be stretched to include persons' contributions in varying facets of life which could potentially be, obviously, sports.

But, Madam Speaker, when we look at trying to capture our national history of sports and achievement in sports across all sports, I believe there is a vacuum. The truth is, other than things like naming buildings and fields and there being some new initiative of a particular government that forces us to conjure up and recollect persons who contributed in a particular area, we do not have the type of framework necessary to really allow us to capture our outstanding sportspersons and persons who have been outstanding in the field of sports.

First of all, I want to make it abundantly clear that in every sport I have looked at in my research there is the possibility for not only the sports persons, the athletes themselves to be so honoured and inducted, but also persons who have contributed greatly to sports should be recognised. So you have the possibility for not only persons who have been long time contributors, sponsors and advocates of a particular sport to be inducted, but also notable writers of sports columns, sections, et cetera, and also commentators of sports.

Given our size, those latter two areas (except for persons who have sponsored and have been heavily involved) when it comes to sports writers and commentators, we do not necessarily have a lot of scope for that in Cayman in my mind. But it is still one of the areas in which a person could be inducted into a sports hall of fame. We need only think about regional sports and the regional experts and commentators involved in some of those sports, the voices . . . as soon as you hear that voice you automatically think of a particular sport because you know they have been doing the commentary for so many years that they become as big as some of the sports figures themselves. When we think more globally and look in North America and Europe, the same thing holds.

Madam Speaker, if you look to some of the more notable examples in the media, in particular from a Cayman perspective, you certainly do see a lot of persons who get inducted into specific sports halls of fame in the United States. For example, the National Football League Hall of Fame; the National Basketball Association Hall of Fame; boxing, et cetera. However, when you look at the institution of sports halls of fame from a more global perspective, you do see that the majority of countries have national sports halls of fame and even within a lot of countries they have regional sports halls of fame where those particular provinces or states actually induct and honour the people who in their more confined area have made a significant contribution.

Cayman is very small and that is the reason I have looked at this from a national perspective. After all, we are only fifty-something thousand people. We are a very small country. I do not believe there is the sort of scope or necessity to have it on any sort of district level at this particular juncture.

Madam Speaker, a number of things have to be done for this to be achieved and well thought through. Firstly, every hall of fame needs to have a mechanism by which the nominations can take place. I think that hurdle is rather easy to overcome in the sense that the technical people can come up with the criteria, the standard form that people can easily access and go through the nomination process.

The second bit is a little trickier in that you do need to have a selection committee. Some body of people has to make the choice. What I found in my research is that typically the selection committees are wide. In other words, they are usually large in number. What is suggested is that you do want to have a lot of minds looking at a nomination and ensuring that the widest input and thought go into it because it is, indeed, a significant achievement and a significant honour to bestow upon a nominee.

Obviously, another issue would involve not only the nominations and selections, but information.

How and where do you place information? Every sports hall of fame that I looked at in the various countries had wonderful websites that you could access. You could see the actual inductees, their picture, their bio and what they have achieved. That is obviously a very important way in which to disseminate information in this age.

However, the slightly more tricky bit would be the whole issue of where would you physically house a sports hall of fame. Usually at some point in time you would want to have some designated place, physical space that the general public can go to and actually tour. In some instances they do statues; in a lot of others they do a picture of the person with a short bio under his name along the walls of the particular building.

Madam Speaker, at this point in time I would not be advocating for Government to necessarily look to build anything that is purpose built specifically for this function. I do believe that if Government looks carefully at its existing facilities there is potential scope for using a hall as a starter location in the interim to double up as a hall of fame.

It might very well be that initially the view will be taken that there is no suitable physical location and that for right now we will develop a very good website that has all the information that would be linked to the central government website with all of the forms for nominating, the selection committee, all of the inductees, their profiles, pictures where available, et cetera. Certainly, I think even that would be a good first step.

I think the most important thing about the exercise is the recognition we are paying to our own people for their achievement in sports, whilst the long term desire would be to have some specific space in which the general public could physically tour and see our own Caymanians in action who have made these significant contributions and have them framed forever because they have been so significant. That would be the long term goal.

Madam Speaker, the terms we use will have to be something we decide upon for Cayman. But typically, you have the athletes who themselves have achieved something outstanding or extraordinarily successful in sports. I also found (and this was rather revealing) that in a number of countries not only have they looked at athletes and their life's work as a standard reason for nomination, but they have also looked at significant specific achievements.

Let us just say, for example, you have an athlete who for whatever reason may not be involved in a specific sport for a very long period of time, but they actually achieved a singular success which itself was extremely important. For example, let's say a person was a gifted sprinter and wound up running the one time race of his or her life, or jumping the one time jump of his or her life. Let's say that in Cayman we had an outstanding high jumper, and he did well. But if we looked at his entire body of work over his entire career we might be saying to ourselves, Well, I am not 100 per cent sure if that entire career is worthy of the hall of fame. But he had the one jump. He went to the one meet, had the one jump and set a world (under whatever age) record.

What I found in the criteria for nomination in a lot of countries [is that] they do account for those single events where a person, for whatever reason, never really wound up being great, but they had the one run, the one jump, the one swim that was singularly so significant that it should and ought to be recognised for its impact on the sport from a national level. That was an angle of this whole thing that I never contemplated when I first thought of the Motion. I really thought more about body of work, that long career where in whatever sport you were involved in there was that long unequivocal contribution made, where it was a long time sponsor, where you sponsored a team for a decade and you were known as Mr. Football, Mr. Basketball, and you were not the athlete. Or, you were an athlete and you had that long well-established career.

As I thought about this, the other thing that struck me that would pose a challenge would be how you would put together a selection committee. That, in and of itself, is not something easy. The truth is that this is a serious matter, so you do not want it to wind up being the type of institution that people do not honour. You want this to be an institution that when a person is inducted, whether he or she played for your favourite football team or not, anyone looking on objectively will quickly say, Yes, that career was worthy of that type of recognition.

As with all things, you are going to have nay sayers. You will have some. This happens in every country where someone will be inducted and someone will say, Well, I am not sure. Or, they may compare it to someone else who did not make it and ask, Why did this individual make it versus another individual? That's human nature. You are never going to have that sort of meeting of the minds across the board. However, you do want to ensure that when putting together the selection committee, that these people will be objective, so removed from the emotive side of this where a person coming before them who is maybe somebody they are really a big fan of, but they are really being objective because the reality is (certainly from what research I have done) that most national sports halls of fame allow the public to actually execute the nomination.

In some other sports, as in specific sports in the United States where it is much more competitive and sophisticated, they have a different type of screening process. That screening process is used by a wide array of persons who have been writers and commentators in a sport over a long period of time and they themselves get to cast a ballot and decide who is going to make it to the finals for induction. Whoever makes that final cut is then voted upon and, once you get X amount of support, you then make it.

The example I am thinking about is in rough terms how the National Football League in America does it. However, I think we need to get away from that line of thinking when we think about what we are trying to achieve. What we are trying to achieve is persons who have either as athletes or as builders been individuals who make outstanding and extraordinary contributions.

Those are the two ways that I like to describe the two types of scenarios that I described earlier. To my mind the outstanding would be the person who had the long body of work, a long career in whatever sport and we honour them and recognise them with induction through the process. The extraordinary contribution could come in and fall under the category where a person has that real one-off, singular type of achievement that itself, on its own merit, would warrant admission.

Madam Speaker, there is another category that some countries also use, which is induction of a team. That can become a little trickier, but it certainly usually would involve team sports that would involve relay pairs. For example, double tennis, rowing, sailing, sports where when we think of a team it is a fairly small body of people we are talking about.

For example, if Cayman were to produce a good, solid, 4 x 100 relay ladies team that went off to a World Games championship or an Olympic championship and ran that relay of a lifetime and medalled, that would be one of those single extraordinary contributions that could be looked at as worthy for contribution.

Madam Speaker, obviously in looking at this issue I fully recognised that it is not as simple as first meets the eye. There are a lot of complexities and there will be a lot of work, and there will have to be the establishment of some real credible and extremely objective bodies.

One of the things that a lot of the larger countries have the benefit of is millions of people so they can spread their selection committees geographically and across different spheres of sports. One of the things that crossed my mind was whether or not in our efforts we might not also draw upon very experienced commentators and persons who were adept at being not only objective but recognising true achievement from perhaps a regional perspective. You could easily see where in our selection committee we might think about whether or not we want to have a few representatives on our selection committee from outside the Island who, themselves, would be persons of stature in sports who would be very objective and could lend more credibility to what we try to achieve. I do not think anyone would have a real issue with that, because the reality is that we only have about 50,000 to draw from. And that is a very small pool.

It has been done. If you look at Canada, for example, they have a certain number of tiers of sports halls of fame. They have their national, provincial and even within that they have some regional sports halls of fame. I found a small town in Canada, for example, that had a sports hall of fame and they are not necessarily that much bigger than Cayman. They used principally (from what I could gather) local commentators and persons who made up their selection committee. So that is not something that necessarily has to be done. I just threw it out there because it was a thought that ran through my mind.

Madam Speaker, how we come about the actual election and what numbers is another very important aspect of this. What I found with all of them is that there is always a cap. There is a cap each year as to the number of people that get elected, period. So you could easily have a year in most of these countries where by just the luck of the draw you have a plethora of worthy individuals who in their own right would make it to the hall of fame.

They have a cap, but once a person has been nominated they are automatically rolled into the next year. There is usually a defined period of time. I found in a lot of instances where it is two years. So, if you were nominated in 2009 and did not make it, for whatever reason, you are automatically reconsidered in 2010 and 2111. That is in obviously safeguard for the scenario I just spoke to, which is a year in which a large number of worthy candidates are put forward but, because you have a cap in place for a maximum number of people who can be inducted, all of them simply cannot make it.

Madam Speaker, the other way I have seen that cap work is that they actually have an overall maximum cap but then within the various categories of eligibility they even have individual quotas. For example, I have seen where they say you can only have a certain number of athletes, a certain number of builders for the year, a certain number of teams, and then you take each of those categories and, once you add them together, the sum cannot go above the overall quota for the year.

For example, let us say that Cayman's cap for the year is eight. And the maximum number of athletes and/or teams is seven. And the maximum number of contributors could be four. Well, seven and four would be eleven and that would go over the cap. The selection committee would then have to decide who those eight finalists will be. The three that did not make it in that example would then be carried over automatically for two years for reconsideration along with whatever other nominees were to come in.

Madam Speaker, I promised to be short. I did not want to get into too much of the technical detail, but I thought that I had better offer up some brief thoughts. Certainly, I think the overall spirit is that we want to create an institution that establishes in our permanent memories in our permanent history in sports, people, teams and individuals who have made a significant and/or extraordinary contribution to any and all areas of sports in the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, I thank you and I look forward to other Members' thoughts and contributions.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As one of only two athletes left in this House, I guess I am entitled to speak—unlike Mr. Anglin, whose athletic days were very fleeting. The Second Elected Member for West Bay, I should say.

Seriously, Madam Speaker, the Motion on the Floor by the Second Elected Member for West Bay is one that is worthy of consideration. I think that the Government of which I am a part will find no difficulty in supporting his proposed hall of fame idea. Whether it comes exactly in the format that he has proposed is another matter, because he did go into quite some detail. I do not propose to go into that detail. I propose to look at the substance of the Motion.

We are at a time in our history that is calling for us to recognise our people and promote our people. We just had our National Heroes Day which gave due recognition to the women in our society. We have recognised people through our Quincentennial Celebrations, and we continue to recognise those who have done well in the Caymanian society.

A sports hall of fame at this time in our history, whatever format it takes, I think is something worthy of consideration. First of all, it gives recognition. And it also gives something for one to aspire to.

In a time when Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars on new facilities, new schools, new sporting facilities where we are surely going to be reaping the benefits of greater athletic prowess and greater athletes down the road, it is something that we will certainly have need for in due course.

Even if that were not the case, Madam Speaker, as the Second Elected Member for West Bay said, the Cayman Islands (although small in size) has produced some world class athletes. Not only world class athletes, but people who have stuck around the athletic scene and worked with those athletes over the years, promoting, managing and doing all the things that made it possible for them to compete and succeed. I think due recognition is certainly something that is a no brainer.

We have to pay tribute and recognise that even as a small island nation we have our pride and joy. In this day of much negativity and much crying down of all that is happening all around us, we still have so much to be thankful for. Right now, on the athletic scene we have the likes of Cydonnie Mother-sill, and Kareem Streete-Thompson before her; we have young Ronald Forbes, from North Side, and many others. I could never go into all the names, but just look at some of the elite athletes. Charles Whittaker, who continues to fight and who will hopefully, get a world championship fight here in Cayman.

Madam Speaker, these are by no means small accomplishments; these are significant, map-setting goals that many, many people have worked hard for. In their own way they have put the Cayman Islands on the map.

Then we have athletes who may not have had international fame or recognition. But we all know people locally who we could look to and say, Well, these guys, these ladies, contributed so much to this particular sport, or played it so well and deserve recognition.

We think of the likes of Lee Ramoon. Reynard Moxam did play pro for a while, and Lee did play semi-pro. And we think of others. Over the years, the Frankie Colemans and . . . the Minister from East End is looking at me and patting his chest. He was a good referee. But seriously, we did have those of our athletes who may not have made the big world stage, but on the Cayman sports scene they certainly did their part to promote sports, played fairly and led by example for many youngsters to follow and to aspire to.

Right here in our own parliament we have the likes of the Third Elected Member for George Town who has been involved with the sport of netball all of my life. And, while her playing days are over, I know she continues to be an administrator for the sport. So, we have people like that that we are talking about, Madam Speaker. This is not a case of looking within, it is just an example. We have many, many people.

When you look around, especially the sport of football in Cayman (which I played for many years), and think about all the great players, we had with no facilities, [they played] with the bare minimum of facilities. We were running on fields, Madam Speaker. Sometimes we would disappear to our waists in holes! Sometimes there were just clouds of dust. Now, what we have are wonderful facilities. Just yesterday evening I was up at the Annex watching 15- and 16-year old youngsters playing on a beautiful Astro turf pitch.

Seriously, without the proper facility you cannot play the game the way it was intended to be played. I am using football because I am versed in it and because it is one of my favourite sports. But this applies to any sport, Madam Speaker. Anyone who plays sports and remains involved in sports knows how important it is to the wellbeing of any society. It gives younger people in society . . . and the middle-aged and older people are playing sports now, not necessarily at the same pace, but they are certainly involved in sports, a healthy lifestyle throughout the world.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, we want to do whatever we can as a Government to encourage people to be involved in sports. When you create something such as due recognition . . . because sometimes even a small article in the press after a game makes a big difference to a player. You can just imagine when there are awards nights an individual can say after his long hard journey in whatever sporting arena that he is now a hall of fame inductee.

We recently had the Scuba Hall of Fame inductions at Pedro Castle, which we have every year under the Ministry of Tourism. I am sure that is something that people aspire to. You want your name to be up in lights; you want to know that you played your part and were recognised for it. Therefore, Madam Speaker, the Motion as brought by the Second Elected Member [for West Bay] for Government to consider creating a sports hall of fame in these Cayman Islands I think is one worthy of note. I think that whatever we can do in this day and age to promote our own people and put them on a pedestal when they deserve it is something worthy and very well deserved. It creates, as I said, an aspiration.

All of those young athletes out there will say, One day I want to see my name up there alongside the others who will certainly lead the way. We see the lights of Ed Bush who has a field named after him; Jimmy Powell, who has a cricket oval named after him, and all those people who promoted sports and played the sports and played them at such a high level.

When young people can say they aspire to be recognised one day as an athlete or be involved in the sport of their choice at whatever level (whether managerial, coaching or whatever), Madam Speaker, I certainly have no problem with the Motion. I am sure that when it comes time for the Minister of Sports to speak, he will also lend his support to the Motion.

Madam Speaker, with those few words (unlike what the Second Elected Member [for West Bay] does when he says he is going to have a few words) I will sit down and offer my support for the Motion.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to give a few words of support to the Motion submitted by the Second Elected Member for West Bay, establishing a national sports hall of fame.

Madam Speaker, I do not profess to be a fast athlete by any means, although through my lifetime I have been involved . . . you and I have our names etched as being high jumpers and runners, and you and myself in netball.

But I do have a very, very long memory of the establishment of sports in the Cayman Islands. While we like to spend our time looking at people who are in this era, I think we might have to go beyond that to do a lot of research to see how, in particular, the national associations were formed. I must say that I myself have been a founder of two, which are the CIAAA (as a founding member), and the Netball Association. I also introduced cricket and soccer in the education circles.

Whilst I am not batting to be in the halls of fame, I certainly would like to be asked to use my memory in terms of persons who have gone before. We must remember Mr. T. E. McField. We must remember people like Mr. Arthur Ebanks, Mr. Benson, all of those who made . . . and Mr. Derek Wight. I sat down very quickly and wrote 16 persons either dead or older than all of us inside here that have contributed.

In terms of women, I notice we have not really called any. We have to remember people like Ms. Sybil McLaughlin, who spent an inordinate amount of time in the development of tennis, Ms. Valerie Street, Mrs. Veronica Dilbert, who was the epitome of netball. Certainly, Madam Speaker, this is about nation building.

As I get older I realise that we live for the day. And that is sad that we live just for the day and we only remember the day. We have to remember our history, and we have to write it down. We have to remember that there were people who went before us and it is not just about the instant of the age; it is about who went before us and made life beautiful for us.

I know nobody has mentioned the Leader of Government Business, but he was (I might say) some athlete having been in soccer and in cricket.

This is a good motion, Madam Speaker. I like to support motions that are going to elevate this country and give us the ability to look into our history in terms of nation building. Today sports is about young people. A lot of people tell us that we do not do anything for young people. But in my lifetime and quite recently we have spent an inordinate amount of money on sports.

I rarely see any old people running on the road. I rarely see any old people kicking football. I rarely see any old people playing netball. Sports to me, as it is now, is about the young. So there has been a lot provided for them. But they too, although they are the action part of it, must remember that somebody went ahead and paved this for us.

We have to give a lot of credit to our Jamaican teachers (although some of us may not remember) that came here, particularly in the 1950s and 1960s who really helped us to develop sports in our country and who were very athletic minded. And also people like Mr. Winston Skinner, Mr. Eric Spooner [deceased], Mr. "Lenny" [Leonard] Hew, Mr. Bill Bissell [deceased]. Those are persons who helped us in sports development. I dare say it is going to be quite fit when the Minister establishes the committee for us to go into the history of this so that we do not omit anyone, not just from the hall of fame, because I think you might have to be putting people into that year by year. But this will help us to honour the people who have . . .

Madam Speaker, I remember as a young girl in the 1950s that George Town was no match for athletes in East End, North Side and Bodden Town. In George Town, we had the playing field; they did not have it. They had the streets. The roads in those days were hard pieces of sand or rocks and they were tough athletes. Some of the fastest runners I think we ever had came from North Side. People like Goodman Powery, those kinds of people, Lorenzo Berry. Those are people I remember who did very well. Ernie Boden. I do not think anybody . . . and I remember my old schoolmate too, the Honourable Anthony Eden (whether or not you believe it) was also an athlete.

[The Second Elected Member for West Bay] has touched a lot by bringing this Motion. It is going to be quite fun and quite interesting for the school children of this country to recognise that we too have our own beautiful nation builders and we do not have to look at the sports channels all the time to find them. They are here.

I want to thank the Member for bringing this.
Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Sports.

[pause] [inaudible comment]

The Speaker: I am sorry, but the Minister caught my eye standing on his feet.

Are you giving way to the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman?

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

[Inaudible comment]

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay, would you direct your questions through the Chair?

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: I thank the Honourable Minister for giving way.

Madam Speaker, I stand to support Private Member's Motion No. 10/08-09, brought by the Second Elected Member for West Bay, and the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

This Motion is a feel-good motion, I believe, for everybody in this House. I believe it is one that we can all support and understand how it will help individuals as they start early in their lives and take advantage of sports programmes made available to them. Throughout the world sport is a common denominator that brings people together. Sport is something that breaks down all types of barriers. When you step onto the field it is a skill that you have and it proves who the best team or individual is that day.

Madam Speaker, some of the previous contributors talked about nation builders. They talked about what the sports programmes have done. I would like to also let us remember that fishing is a sport, and when we talk about the hall of fame that we include all of the sports that take place in the daily lives of Caymanians. Something as special as fishing will, I hope, be considered. It should certainly be provided for in the hall of fame.

Madam Speaker, when you think of somebody who has reached that level of the hall of fame (a hall of fame, as they say), it brings one to an elite skill level. But when you find the person with that elite skill level you are going to find a person with plenty of dedication who has good character, has provided for themselves through hard work a level of sophistication and accomplishment in their lives that very few people reach. I think acknowledging someone in your country that has done that is very important, as we have such a young history and we move in the direction of recognition.

Madam Speaker, when we talk about individuals as mentioned, we must not forget the athletes of Cayman Brac. We know that on a daily basis when the youth meet for netball or football or the other programmes, some have competed abroad (such as the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and the famous Barefoot Brigade that used to travel) and are not mentioned. But a hall of fame or a place where recognition could be given would provide that for the youth.

When you have the sports banquets on a yearly basis and the athletes that have competed in the Olympics and the athletes that have played sports at all different levels come to Cayman Brac, the youth themselves look forward to what they are going to hear and how they are going to act.

I would like to tell you about a coaching clinic with some of the national team players that was provided a couple of years ago for one of our youth leagues. One of the things that impressed me was that this was one of the best players in our country at that time. What the youth were exposed to was not only the quality of the play and the level of skill, but when they were walking off the field . . . I will never forget. There was a Coca Cola can and a pretzel bag and the player bent over, picked them up, looked at the youth and said "you must always remember to respect the field." That stuck in my mind and I believe it stuck in a lot in a lot of the minds of the youth there that day.

Madam Speaker, in supporting this Motion I must also bring a vision of what I think it will mean to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. But I speak specifically about Cayman Brac because of the youth there that would aspire to be put in this category and would make use of it by having the history told of the athletes that have gone before and who have been so successful.

If you think of the National Football League Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio (and I am sure the Second Elected Member for West Bay thought about that when he was doing his research), . . . that is a smaller town. That is a town recognised for having the Hall of Fame. It is recognised for the festival that is there on a yearly basis to accept and acknowledge what national football league players have done.

And as I thought about that, what better place to have a purpose built centre than Cayman Brac to have the hall of fame being talked about? It would do a couple of things: It would provide a yearly event for Cayman Brac itself. It would also provide role models. It would also be placed on the calendar of Cayman Brac. As we look at how we market the island and move that into the years ahead of us to such a better place, what better time to build a purpose built building as we rebuild after Paloma with the help and support of the Government and how we tool ourselves to go forward?

The Minister for East End agrees with that. I am sure there are many more people in this House that agree with that, Madam Speaker. I ask consideration from the mover and seconder, which I am sure there will be support. Some of the—

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: You were doing good.

Madam Speaker, I can hear by the side comments that there is a lot of support for this, and I thank them all.

But as you think of what the hall of fame will do for moving us as a nation forward, I compliment both the mover and the seconder and I am happy to stand and make a few comments in support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Sports.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I wish to thank the mover and seconder of this Motion for bringing such a unifying debate to this honourable House in what is the last Meeting of this term. It demonstrates that on a number of matters (and we saw that earlier today in relation to the Constitution) there is significant agreement across the Floor of this honourable House. I think that bodes well for the future of this country. It bodes well for the type of campaign I believe will occur in the coming months.

Madam Speaker, the whole question of facilities for sports and the recognition of sporting figures and people who have contributed significantly to sports has been one to which I have turned my attention ever since I had the honour to take the oath of office as Minister with responsibility for Sports.

Over the course of the past three and a half years, we have rebuilt, repaired and renovated every single football facility in these Islands. We have installed three artificial turfs in Cayman Brac, West Bay and George Town, we have rehabilitated the natural turf fields at Truman Bodden Sports Complex, in Bodden Town, in East End and North Side, and we should shortly be able to reopen the three latter facilities.

Madam Speaker, we have reopened the Truman Bodden Sports Complex and the Ed Bush Sports Field and we are playing on the George Town Field, which is known locally as the Annex. That is a multi-phased development project of which we have phase 1 now completed and phase two underway (phase 2 being the construction of a number of stands on the east side of that facility).

We have completed the construction of a players' pavilion at the Jimmy Powell Cricket Oval and other work is underway there as well. We have replaced the track at the Truman Bodden Sports Field. We are building a boxing gym at the Truman Bodden Sports Facility.

The reason I raise all of these matters, Madam Speaker, is to say that sports has received considerable attention over the course of this term. I also raise it to say that in building these facilities not just the Government of which I am a part, but governments which have preceded us have taken the opportunity to recognise significant contributions of many persons to the development, organisation and operation of sports throughout the years.

The Jimmy Powell Cricket Oval is named after a long-time cricketer and supporter of cricket. In West Bay the Ed Bush Sports Stadium likewise, in relation to one who contributed greatly not so much in terms of his playing ability but to his promotion of the sport of football in West Bay. There is the Donovan Rankine Sports Field in East End, another person who perhaps had not made quite so notable a contribution to sports. Nonetheless, they have played a role in the overall development of facilities in the Cayman Islands and have also had their names appended to various sports facilities.

In relation to the boxing gym under construction, when we broke ground on that some months ago I announced then that that would be named the Dalmain Ebanks Boxing Gym in honour of that great supporter/contributor/developer of boxing, who was also for many years a Member of this House.

While perhaps more could have been done and more should be done, we have in some significant way, I believe, paid attention to the contributions of a variety of not just athletes but persons who have supported sports over the years when we've actually built facilities.

Now, Madam Speaker, in the development of the National Sports Policy and the broader thinking about where we take sports in Cayman, we have been looking at how we remember, how we record for posterity the contributions of the many, many people who have contributed to the development of various sports across these Islands. And [we have also been looking at] how we develop criteria by which we choose those who have been exceptions, who have gone way above the average in terms of contributions, achievements, or both. A part of that plan is at the Truman Bodden facility in George Town, the Ed Bush facility in West Bay, and the George Town Annex which I should say, Madam Speaker, we are proposing to name after a significant contributor to football and cricket in these Islands when that is reopened I hope in another month or two as soon as the stands there are complete.

We are proposing to develop something akin to a wall of honour in which we detail the various teams. Those of us my age or a bit older will remember some of the really famous football teams through the years in the days of Sapriisa [from George Town], Lions from West Bay, Blocks and By-Rite and East End United and the range of teams who have played organised football since the late 50s, early 60s.

It is important, particularly for younger people, to understand that this did not just happen; that while we now have a multi-million dollar turf on which to play, it was not always this way. The development of football, in particular, has been long, arduous, and difficult. It is important that we recognise those who have gone before.

Many of the players are part of the lower football. When you talk to some of the middle-aged and older players there are many, many stories they recount about; very, very special games, very, very special players through the years. It is important that we pay attention to that. As I said, Madam Speaker, part of it also is to pay a special tribute in a way that is seen and noted and permanent to those truly outstanding sports people in all sports.

The idea would be that particular attention would be paid to track and field athletes at the Truman Bodden facility, which is essentially the national stadium and the location of our track. Obviously with the advent of the boxing gym up at Truman Bodden as well the area around that gym would also be the location for whatever tribute, whatever form of monument (or whatever you want to call it) is established in honour of those who have contributed significantly to the development of boxing in these Islands.

Madam Speaker, the netball courts are also in that vicinity. We would make similar arrangements there in relation to people who have contributed significantly to netball.

Right across the way, on the new John Gray campus which is being developed, if anyone has been up there recently (I went there yesterday evening) you will see that the double gymnasium is coming along quite well. That facility there could really become the home of the net sports in these Islands. So that would lend itself to both netball and basketball. In due course similar arrangements could be made and similar monuments established for key players, key contributors to the development of those two sports.

The reason for this thinking is that it is important that whatever we do in terms of recognition of these people, that it is put on display where people will see it on a regular basis so that one does not have to travel to a dedicated building with the purpose and intent of seeing who is in the hall of fame. That is not to say that a hall of fame would not be established and that that is not a good idea. Indeed, Madam Speaker, a hall of fame in relation to football is part of the plan for the redevelopment of the premises on which the George Town Primary School now sits. When the new primary school is completed (in September 2010 is the plan), the newer buildings on the George Town Primary School site would be retained, the older buildings demolished, the modulars removed, and those would become community facilities. Part of what is now the canteen has been proposed as the basis for the football hall of fame.

Madam Speaker, I say all of this to say that the Government accepts the spirit and intent of the Motion proposed by the Second Elected Member for West Bay and the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. How we reach the objective put forward by the Second Elected Member for West Bay, very well I think, is by the recognition of the contributions of our athletes and recognition for those who have helped to develop sports across these Islands. How that quite comes out at the end of this exercise is something that I think is still a bit unformed, a bit malleable at this stage.

I think we are all conscious that elections are looming, that this House will be dissolved on 24 March, and that there are still a significant number of projects underway which need to be finished. I think we are all also deeply conscious of the financial constraints that obtain at this time and the uncertainty of the future generally, given the world economic situation.

With all of those possibilities, uncertainties, contingencies, we accept the Motion. Government does consider the establishment of a sports hall of fame as laudable. We think that what is being proposed fits very well into this Government's determination to recognise the achievements of our people in a tangible, permanent way, and that we take every possibility we can to remind the people of this country, particularly the younger people, that the Cayman they live in now and the privileges, pleasures, and opportunities they enjoy have not just magically appeared. They are there because of the immense contributions of generations who have gone before them who have worked in most difficult and played, for that matter in terms of sports, in most difficult and untenable circumstances to provide the foundation for what is enjoyed today. It is our duty, it is our honour, it is our privilege to build on those solid foundations and to make the opportunities of the next generation and generations to come that much greater, that much brighter.

Madam Speaker, the Government is pleased to accept this Motion brought by the Second Elected Member for West Bay and seconded by the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I thank all Members who have made a contribution and those who have not. I take that as an indication of their support nonetheless.

Madam Speaker, let me just address a couple of very quick points and give my thoughts on them. One of them was brought forward by the lady Member for George Town. She did not come out and say it this way, but I think this is what she meant. When you start looking at an exercise like this you ought not to be restricted by quotas. I think that was the spirit of what she was saying, and I agree with her wholeheartedly.

I think the initial exercise has got to be one about looking back and making sure that the panel evaluates across all sports all those people at that point in time. So the quota would then apply going forward. That would make sense in the way to go about doing things. Certainly, I hope that would be the way in which . . . and from the sound of the Minister that is the way that they are going about it, certainly for the specific sports that he mentioned.

Madam Speaker, again, when we look at Cayman and how we are going to decide to go about the physical structures, as I said during my presentation that is something that we need to think about and how it would work best for Cayman. I still believe, though, that even within all of that (however we establish electronically) via the Internet, from my research I see that as a good central place that you can have persons' names, profiles, et cetera, so that when we are looking from a national perspective as to who has made it to the hall of fame . . . in fact, most of the websites that I have seen allow you to sort by name, by sport, et cetera. I believe that would be a very good cost effective and efficient way for us to have a central place where persons can look and know what teams, what contributors have made their mark, their contribution to sport.

During my presentation I purposely stayed away from any names. I am not criticising Members who have because, obviously, names bring to light the very essence of the spirit of the Motion. Needless to say, from listening to all those who contributed, the initial work is going to entail a lot of work and research, a lot of consideration. I think it is going to be incumbent that we have good solid criteria that is well thought out. I said during my contribution that anyone who makes it into the national sports hall of fame is indeed worthy to be elevated and has reached that level.

The Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman brought up a point that I did not cover, and I did not cover it purposely—the whole issue of what is going to be considered sports. I think that is one that the Minister, his Ministry and his technical team, have to look long and hard at. However, having said that, in my view they ought to also bear in mind that any area or activity that may be borderline, those specific activities usually in Cayman have some form of national association anyway. So nothing stops them as an association from forming their own hall of fame.

In other words, the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman mentioned fishing. That could cause a lot of problems, for example, to come up with criteria that fit sports. I mean, is it the guy who could catch the most squabs on Northwest Point rocks? Or was it the guy who caught the biggest Blue Marlin? And is it fishing from . . . that one is a difficult one.

I would suggest that perhaps there will be activities that Government ought to engage and encourage those associations to also go along the same pathway the Government is embarking upon for those specific activities so that you do recognise people in activities that perhaps might not quite make it.

I saw one Member pointing at me and talking about you'll never get in a sports hall of fame for talking. Perhaps debate might wind up being one of them . . . there may be a debate association at some point that puts forward a hall of fame!

I say all of that in jest, Madam Speaker, to say this: The bottom line is that any activity where an association is established, if that association sees fit to honour their own participants, they establish their own hall of fame for that activity.

I thank the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town because it hit me that as the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman spoke to fishing my mind automatically turned to the fact that we have established in Cayman an international Scuba Hall of Fame. So, I do not think there is any activity that itself and its individual association . . . but I think Government needs to be careful where it goes that it is indeed something that all people will quickly acknowledge that, yes, that is a sport.

Madam Speaker, some of the work that the Minister updated the House on which is ongoing and in train, I think will itself, certainly for the interim, allow us to overcome that hurdle as to physical location where people can go and actually see names on a specific wall or plaque or what have you. Certainly, as things stand, that is probably the safest route to go. But I do encourage the Government to establish some sort of central place where across all sports people in the community can go to. I would advocate for some form of website that has the information so that that recognition is able to be accessed quite readily, quite easily.

The reality is, as other Members have said, particularly the lady Member for George Town, that there have been many pioneers who have come through and done great work. When she started talking back to her frame of reference, I automatically started thinking about when I was in school and the contributions of, for example, Jerry Harper, to athletics, et cetera. I am not going to name many more names because I know that's a dangerous thing when you mention one and you inadvertently forget another very important person that made significant contributions.

The last point I want to make, and a couple of Members touched on this, is the whole impact that sports have on young people. Certainly, as we now become more formalised in the way that we honour, respect and recognise our own sports persons, that in and of itself is going to provide yet another target, another bar for young people to aspire to. When you are a young cricketer and you see who is on the Cayman Islands Sports Hall of Fame website for cricket, that is going to provide that person the extra incentive to say, I want to make such a contribution so that one day my name will be there as well.

It provides incentive. There is absolutely no doubt about that. It provides great incentive for persons.

One Member (and I do not remember who it was) started comparing a person's contribution and mentioned that the person's contribution may not have been to a world class level in a particular sport. I think that is exactly why we set our own criteria for our national sports hall of fame, because it is for the Cayman Islands. These persons are being recognised for the contributions they made to that sport in the Cayman Islands. Yes, these footballers may not have been Pelé, may not have been Maradona, but they were our Pelé, they were our Maradona. That is the most important thing of this exercise. We are looking for our Michael Phelps.

Well, I am just reminded . . . I better go on.

We are looking for our equivalent of a world class athlete. The good thing is that we do have, and we have had over the years, persons from Cayman who have performed at that level. So, it is good that some of the people that I think will be honoured at some point in time will make it into the Cayman Islands Sports Hall of Fame. We are going to be proud to have it said and written in their bio that what they achieved was indeed at a world class level. That makes it even more inspiring for all of us to be proud, but inspiring for younger people coming through to exceed those that came before. That is how a nation gets better. That is how all of us get better, through natural competition, trying to get better.

I know mention was made by the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman (and I do not want to embarrass my colleague the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman who seconded the Motion) . . . but certainly I can remember as a youngster hearing about the barefoot brigade and . . . were there any young men?

I am being told that, indeed, there were young men as well. But I clearly remember the young ladies because two of them grew up with me up at Northwest Point.

Madam Speaker, so much has gone before us. That is why what the Third Elected Member for George Town said is so crucial—the initial work to ensure that we do unearth and remember those who have paved the way.

I will end off with this: Certainly, I would encourage the Government that we do not need to be restrictive in terms of the recognition and whether or not a person might make it named as an individual and by their performance into this actual sports hall of fame. But, certainly, significant contributors. It is very important for us to pay credence to persons who reached that bar and for us to remember them.

Madam Speaker, I am happy that, as the Minister said, we were able to debate a motion that allows all of us to come together and talk about things Cayman and ways in which we can honour our own, elevate our own, and inspire those to come.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT HEREBY RESOLVED that the Government consider establishing a National Sports Hall of Fame. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Private Member's Motion No. 10/08-09 passed.

Private Member's Motion No. 9/08-09—
Establishment of an Historical Research and Documentaries Commission on Members of the Legislative Assembly

The Speaker: I recognise the Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to present Private Member's Motion No. 9/08-09—Establishment of an Historical Research and Documentaries Commission on Members of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg to second the Motion.

The Speaker: The Motion is duly moved and is open for debate. Does the mover wish to speak thereto?

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, perhaps I made an error. I should have included the “whereas” but with your permission I will do that now.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, you can if you care to, but it is not absolutely necessary that you read the entire Motion in your introduction. It is just a procedure that people care to follow. But if you wish to read it, go ahead.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, for the benefit of the listening public, and for us to revisit why this was put forward, I will so do.

WHEREAS the Legislative Assembly is a pillar of democracy and the Members who serve in this hallowed institution strive to make significant contributions to the strengthening of this democracy;

AND WHEREAS the efforts and wisdom of the former Members of the Legislative Assembly have led to Cayman islands becoming and remaining a true and viable democracy;

AND WHEREAS that political stability has led to the economic success that has made this country the fifth largest financial centre in the world;

AND WHEREAS these acts of selflessness and love for country should form part of our historical records and act as means of motivating present and future generations to become proud, law-abiding and productive citizens;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that the Government consider setting up a Commission to oversee research and the production of documentaries and other methods of storing information on former Members of the Legislative Assembly to be made available to Caymanians, residents and visitors through the National Archives, the Public Libraries and the various Educational Institutions of the Cayman Islands.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Commission be comprised of:

- Current Members of the Legislature; and
- A representative of the National Archives.

Madam Speaker, the Motion itself is quite self-explanatory and I will not be too long in my comments. But the whole Motion shows that when the Government talks about transparency it is willing to go all the way in unearthing anything that our representatives have done in these hallowed halls and the corridors of power.

We need to build on the experience and wisdom of past and current legislators. This is for our social and economic development and so it will be good governance. We have had outstanding leaders. I was reading today the 150 Years of Parliamentary Government. It is amazing to see what people, who perhaps did not have a lot of vision that some of the younger politicians have today, in particular in the technological and advanced economical era, have done to make this country.

Madam Speaker, this is important for nation building. All of what we have done here today is about nation building. When we pick up our newspapers, when we read other books about Cayman, it is the new people who have made contributions that take front stage. It behoves us as a Government and as a people to record the important information that our people have contributed in this country.

Plaudits must also go to the Honourable Minister of Education who started this with the last government to look at our national heroes. Madam Speaker, it was quite impressive, very audacious to say the least in some respects, to see the faces of people on National Heroes Day when their mothers were named and they looked on the plaques and the pillars and they saw [the names of] their mothers, their sisters, their aunts. You should have seen those men taking pictures by those plaques, and by the Lady of Aspiration.

This is the beginning of a new Cayman. This has to be important to our young people. And our young people must demand that we record the best history of our people. They must demand it! But we must also have the insight in these hallowed halls to do so. We can spend money on all sorts of things. Millions of dollars. And I will not stand here today to name what we have spent money on, but, surely, we can go back to whatever era we want to unearth the names of our politicians—whether they have been vestrymen or legislators.

Madam Speaker, what was appalling to me when I came into the House . . . and I am very sad about it. I did not know that I had an uncle who was a vestryman until I came in here. As a matter of fact, I did not hear it here. Perchance I went to the Elections Office and I was told that Austin Seymour was a vestryman in 1932. I did not know that, Madam Speaker. I was in my 60s before I knew that. That is appalling, Madam Speaker!

Even if we cannot find any history on them, we should have those names written somewhere so that our children and the people who visit our shores, know who these people were, what they have done, who were vestrymen, et cetera.

Important times, such as 1959 when we had our first Constitution, must be recorded somewhere in the Cayman Islands. It is not just about developing parks (no offence to the Minister of Works), but we must talk about the life and the work that our people have contributed.

When you read this document, Madam Speaker . . . and I would ask us to go back and read this. I think it was put together by the Hon. Sybil McLaughlin. It gives us a time of what people have done. When you go to the Archives to talk about Ms. Annie Huldah Bodden, if you get two pages that is all! That is not good enough!

Madam Speaker, I hear everybody in here saying what Ms. Annie did [including] you, yourself, Madam Speaker. Surely, we must get people who are good at writing and extracting information so that we can write some sort of biography on Annie Huldah Bodden, or any other Member of the Legislative Assembly. Surely, Madam Speaker.

This is very important to me as a Caymanian for the young people, in particular, who we want to live to be Caymanians to understand Caymanians, where we are coming from, the hard work [by] people [who] sat at the Town Hall, under the trees—wherever they had the Vestry—what they did to make this Cayman that others have come and enjoyed. And they have their names and pictures up before those others. That is unfair, Madam Speaker. That is grossly unfair.

Of course, a prophet is not honoured in his own country. I know it's Biblical, but we must do better than that. We must start when this Motion is accepted to set the people . . . and, Madam Speaker, what is even important now is that we have just launched a film commission. It is expensive, but here is a body that the Government has launched that could assist also the other bodies to even film fictitious things on the whole development of democracy in the Cayman Islands.

This is apropos because we have just tabled the Draft Constitution of the Cayman Islands. This is apropos, Madam Speaker. Not that we are fighting for ourselves . . . and I suppose one day somebody will call our names. Of course they will call your name. They will call everybody's name inside here. But the people who went before us must be remembered.

It is not good enough, Madam Speaker . . . we had two of our heroes die in December. Two who have represented our country. It is not good enough to get, as my mother would talk about, scrapsies, on these people. We need proper writers, proper persons who can unearth information on these people. And, Madam Speaker, Caymanians know a lot of things, you just need the right people to go and find it. We are very good at relating things verbally. Madam Speaker, as I said the Motion itself . . . I did it that way so I would not have to talk a lot.

If we do not record our history it means that we are not progressive. If we can only record the history of those who have just come here, whether they are new Caymanians or they have just arrived as indigenous Caymanians, if that is all we can do, we have done a disservice to this country. Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands have gone through a lot in my lifetime and in your lifetime. We have the Archives, but the Archives is where we can archive information.

Madam Speaker, I have been to schools and I do not mind them calling me Mrs. Moyle, but they certainly mix us up. They have called me Mrs. Moyle, and perhaps they call you Ms. Seymour. That is perhaps because they do not have anything on us, except our pictures. And even that they interchange.

They need to know that this is Parliament; this is where the laws of the land and the destiny of the people start and end. This is where the people of good intentions come to work for the benefit of their country. So, when a person leaves here, either by attrition or by a default in the election, their history must be recorded. Whether or not we think we should, that is not our personal choice. But it should be recorded here. It should be put in our school system. It should be given to the transient population we have so they understand who we are. You, yourself, Madam Speaker . . . I have seen people mistake you for others.

Even our police force has not recognised you, Madam Speaker, which is sad. Not that I am hinting to anyone, but this is a pet peeve of mine. It is from where I sit and where I come from so that the great things that people do will not die with them and be interred with their bones, but that it will be written and that the children and grandchildren, the visitors and all who come here will know that, yes, the Cayman Islands has had a history. And part of that history is the democratic process of the people who have been part of it such as the vestrymen and legislators.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to support the Motion. I did second it along with the Third Elected Member for George Town. I agree with the content of the Motion and I would like to say that I am always grateful to work along with the Third Elected Member for George Town. We have moved and seconded quite a few motions together. Her motions are always thoughtful, very important, and in many cases they are all about recognition of our people.

While this Motion may be about Members who have served in our Legislative Assembly or as vestrymen, it is nonetheless extremely important to who we are and where we have come from.

I know that one of the problems we have in the Cayman Islands is exactly what she said. We seem to have a problem with recording important facts, with actually putting down in writing things that are important to us. We leave a lot of things to memory. The way life has gone on, Madam Speaker, those memories, those important things are leaving us as soon as the older generation passes on. That is with everything including things like recipes and craft-making and those kinds of things.

I do believe that a Motion like this should serve well in other areas of Caymanian life right now. I dare say that it would probably be correct to say that it is easier to have a child in our schools research the history of an American politician and get more information than he could for a Caymanian politician. That is because they have recognised the necessity of putting things down for posterity where we can always go back and find things and even build on some of those things.

I am in support of the Motion, Madam Speaker. One thing I do here on a regular basis is take time to look at photos of the Members who served before. I never tire of doing that. Most of them have names, but a lot of them do not even have the dates that they served. I am not saying this is a problem from today; this has been a problem for years. It is difficult. And we have talked about finding ways to remedy this situation. I am extremely glad that the Third Elected Member for George Town has seen fit to bring this Motion because the longer we leave this the worse it is going to get.

I do not believe I can say too much more. The mover of the Motion made a fantastic presentation. I believe Members of the House will see it necessary to support this. Unfortunately, again, it is one of those things that is going to cost money. But it is a part of our history that we must preserve. We must do something about recording it. Generations to come will look very unkindly on us if we continue to leave it this way and not make proper recordings of what has happened in the very important section of the lives of our politicians.

I am in support of the Motion and trust that it will see safe passage.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Government to indicate acceptance of this Motion. This Motion is very timely. The Third Elected Member for George Town should be commended for bringing this Motion at this time.

Like the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, I often times look at the photographs of the persons on the walls inside the passage and in the foyer of the Legislative Assembly. The information that is there on these individuals is often times restricted to what we know of these individuals and their contributions. But there is no record that provides detailed information in terms of the very significant contribution of these individuals.

We know that the history of the Cayman Islands is very rich and will show that over the past several decades quite a number of individuals at great sacrifice, many of them who have gone before us, and some who are presently in our community, have made significant sacrifice. As a result of that, today the Cayman Islands are the envy of the Caribbean region for its accomplishments.

We are a very safe community. We are a God fearing community. We are an orderly community, a modern community, and a community that is tolerant of other people. This did not come about by accident, but by the investment of time and energy by those who have gone before us and those who are here with us at this time. Orderliness in any society is not something that comes about by default. It is as a result of concerted effort to achieve this. We can see in terms of the recent talks on constitutional issues the voices that were raised in terms of ensuring that the culture of the Cayman Islands is protected and known for what it is.

As a result of that, what has been tabled in the Legislative Assembly today is a Draft Constitution that has received consensus on both sides and in the wider community, a document that the community at large can be proud of.

These individuals the honourable Third Elected Member for George Town is saying a commission should be set up in order to capture and accurately reflect relevant information concerning them, are the individuals that have really in their contributions made the Cayman Islands community into what it is known to be today. And it is imperative, Madam Speaker, as she has ably pointed out, that this information be recorded and be made available at our National Archive, to our school children and at the library.

One of our Honourable Ministers reported an unfortunate event. He was coming through the Customs Department less than three months ago. He was in the line that has been established for air crew and Ministers and Members of Government. He was asked by a member of the Customs Department to leave that line and go elsewhere. He stepped back and looked up, and apparently this person (I don't think the individual is mean-spirited) did not know who the Minister of Government was. Madam Speaker, that is quite unfortunate to encounter this situation in our community.

This type of civic awareness is something that should be the norm of the day. When you step into one of our schools or anywhere in the Cayman Islands, everybody should know, Madam Speaker, that you are the Honourable Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, or the Honourable Leader of Government Business, any of our Ministers, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, or any Member of this Parliament. Madam Speaker, it should be known.

And if the current Members of the Legislative Assembly are not widely known in terms of who they are in the community, this in itself underscores the need as to why information in terms of the contributions of the individuals who have gone before us, and some of whom are here, that this information be recorded for posterity.

As the honourable Member pointed out, two of our stalwarts passed towards the latter part of last year—Mr. Warren Connolly and Sir Vassel Johnson. We are aware of the contributions of these individuals.

Madam Speaker, the Motion in itself, in fact the wording of the Motion distills the substance as to the significance of having this information captured, properly recorded. I am not sure in terms of the mechanics as to how this can be done, but I will be seeking the advice of one of our senior members in the Portfolio who has very good experience with the Archives as to how best we can go about setting up this commission. In fact, he was the director for quite some time.

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Government, I am quite pleased to add support to the acceptance of this Motion.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Culture and Sports.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I wish to say a few words about this important Motion.

Over the course of I would say the past 10 years or so, there has been an increasing awareness among our people of the need to recognise the contributions of what we have come to call the nation builders of this land. I think that the highlight of that awareness came during the Quincentennial year and the Quincentennial celebrations.

In my lifetime I have never known an event—it was not an event, really. It was a celebration (I will have to call it that) which lasted a whole year—which so galvanised the people of this country. There are many stories I could recount of just simple exchanges with people, particularly the older people, and particularly the very young. The older ones were completely overwhelmed by the fact that the country had finally come to recognise the contributions of their generation and the generations before them. And the younger ones were in awe because, hitherto, they did not know that any such thing had occurred because when you are very young there is a tendency to believe that what you were born into is the way it has always ever been.

Madam Speaker, when I was in school (and I am not that old!) there was no history of the Cayman Islands taught in the schools. There were four or five small volumes of the notes of Commissioner Hirst that were in my home, which I read many times as a youngster. But that was the extent of the collected information about the birth and development of this nation.

When you grow up in a historical vacuum, you tend to believe that there was nothing there of any consequence. That is why it was never written about. That is why no one was ever honoured for contributions, because there was not much to contribute to, there was not much in terms of contributions made. That is the impression. That is what I remember from my school days. We read about all of the heroes of Europe, the United States and further a field. I studied at advanced level American and European History.

That is important, Madam Speaker, because we need to understand and appreciate that we are a little country in a much bigger world. It is important for us to have perspective and to understand world history. Not for one moment am I saying that that is not the case.

I have always had a deep and abiding love of this place where I was born and of its people and their contributions. My family on both sides come from eastern districts. I am the sixth generation on my father's side to be born on this little rock. So, my family's roots are deep, deep, deep in this soil, and the bones of many generations of my family are interred in the cemeteries in East End and Bodden Town.

Whether it is because of that, or simply because of how I am made up, I have always felt a deep sense of dissatisfaction at how little is said, how little is written, how little regard has been paid to the forebears of my generation of Caymanians, how little attention and regard has, until recent times, been paid to the struggles and achievements of those people in the most difficult of circumstances at a time when this place was little more than a mosquito-ridden backwater unnoticed by most of the world.

They strove, they struggled and they built the foundations of this modern Cayman. And one of the greatest privileges I have ever had is to have been made Minister with responsibility for Culture, and to have been able to inspire the regeneration of National Heroes Day and to be involved in building that to become the most significant national celebration in these Islands. That is not for me; that is to celebrate the nation builders of this land. While there are those who have, and those who will continue to, criticise what we spend on something like National Heroes Day, I say every penny is well spent.

Madam Speaker, I cannot tell you how angered I was to see the comments on the front page of one of the local papers by certain business people within the precincts of this Legislative Assembly and National Heroes Park who complained bitterly about the loss of Saturday's business—it was only that day!—because this area was closed to vehicular traffic so we could set up a National Heroes Day.

Not only angered, but saddened because I have to say I did not recognise a single name there. But these days that does not mean they are not Caymanian, so I will not say that none of them are Caymanian. But what it did tell me was how little importance they pay to the celebration of National Heroes Day. We are getting to a place in this country where the slightest inconvenience (forget about sacrifice) is not tolerated. It is all about me and my; not about us, our and we, because that is what National Heroes Day is about.

Madam Speaker, in my view we cannot do enough to record the contributions, achievements, and the history of the people of this land. We cannot do enough. In the celebration of National Heroes Day I took the policy decision that we want something more than just a grand occasion that makes us all feel good; that we want something tangible, something that is lasting, something that people can come back to and say, I was there when that was done. This is what this stands for; that a mother can explain to her child, That's your grandmother's name there. That's your auntie's name there. This is what they did.

Madam Speaker, in the last two National Heroes Day celebrations we developed the concept of a booklet which would set out details, important, accurate, historical information relating to whatever the theme for National Heroes Day is; something that can be taken home so that the next generation, and even in many cases this generation of people in Cayman who did not know about these things will have a permanent record of it; something we can take into the schools which can be used as teaching tools so that the children in the schools understand that they did not just come as a people, as Caymanians from nowhere—that generations of Caymanians worked to build what we have.

That is why last year when we celebrated, the theme was about our seafaring traditions and we celebrated the Caymanian creation/invention—the Catboat. We had a book prepared called Heart and Sails, which talked about how the catboat was developed, what it was used for, what it meant to Cayman. In real terms it was, as Jerris Miller described it in the past, the “pickup truck of generations past.” It was used for everything from transporting ground provisions to transporting dead bodies. It was the pickup truck of the times.

We have those things recorded. They are now in a book which can be referred to by anyone who wants to. This year, in praise of our women the book was entitled Steps to Equality, setting out the struggles, achievements and aspirations of women across generations—from the time before women were able to vote, to the aspirations of this generation of young women who are pursuing university degrees. It is all set out. Perspectives.

It may not mean so much to people right now, because we are in the here and now. But I know that in time to come, when my bones too are dust, people will look back and be able to say, Well, we didn't know that. It's a good thing that someone had the foresight to prepare . . . because all of that information will be lost in a few short years from now. In the grand span of time, 25, 30 or 50 years is neither here nor there.

While I believe my chances of being around another 50 years are pretty good, 50 years will be gone in a flash. Madam Speaker, it is important while we are here, while we are able, that these things are recorded, for that is, in part, our contribution to nation building.

So, Madam Speaker, if it were left to me, if I had the wherewithal, if they leave me here long enough there will be lots of monuments to the achievements of Caymanians spread around this entire country. That is the way it is remembered the world over. And we do not have to cast about to make up things that our people did or write fiction, there are great stories of tremendous struggle and achievement on the part of our people.

Madam Speaker, next Heroes Day I have already decided that we will celebrate the contributions and achievements of our veterans and their struggles and sacrifices in the various wars that they fought on behalf of Her Majesty's Government. We are already working on how that theme is going to evolve.

Now, of course, Madam Speaker, I won't be so presumptuous. The electorate might intervene and say I should not be around. But I am not proceeding on that premise at all. And if I am around, God willing and the electorate willing, that will be the theme of the next Heroes Day.

Madam Speaker, this important Motion brought by the Third Elected Member for George Town and seconded by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, is important in that context. On 8 December last, we honoured, acknowledged and celebrated the contributions of the first women . . . well, not just the first, but all women who have served in public office since the passage by this House of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Law 50 years ago. There is a plaque on the outside of this Chamber marking that occasion, honouring and recording the names of those women. Fifty years from now, few will remember who they were unless it is recorded somewhere for posterity.

Those things are important to nation building, important to our peoples' sense of who they are and what they are worth. It is about national esteem building. If you perceive that you came from nowhere, it is difficult to find a compass, difficult to find a sense that you mean anything if you came from nowhere. If you came from a country and a people whose achievements were little or nothing, unless you are able to completely divorce yourself from that and adopt some other national and social standing and pretend to be something else, it is difficult for you to find your way, to find your place, to find your purpose in this world.

We must do things . . . and I am not talking about making up things. We must do things which cause our people to appreciate that they came from good stock, that they did not just wash up on the bay one day; that this was not just magically created by people who came from somewhere else and brought all of the wealth and trappings that we have come to take for granted in this country. That is what this exercise is all about. That is how I see this. It is beyond the particular day in question. It is the impact that makes on the nation and the psyche of the nation now, but more than now, in time to come; what it does to young people and their perception about who they are and the people of whom they are a part.

So, Madam Speaker, this particular Motion, which speaks to the need to record and to promote the achievements of the generations of legislators, representatives who came before us, is a critical part of that overall exercise.

As I think the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said very well, it is far easier to Google an American politician representative of the past and get reams and reams of information than it is to find out anything about the generations of legislators that have gone before. We have had 150 years of parliamentary democracy. Many of those people are completely forgotten or unknown because in those days the Vestry consisted of many . . . it was truly representative government because I think when the population of these Islands was only 6,000 people there were 66 representatives. I always scratch my head because I have never been able to understand how all of them would get packed in to the Town Hall or the Court House or wherever they were meeting. I guess they didn't all show up at the same time.

All of those things, the history of how all of that worked would be an important and interesting part of the research that needs to go into how we develop these sorts of historical records in relation to the development of our legislature and the important contributions of those who have gone before.

So, Madam Speaker, as you might have gathered if you did not already know, I am quite passionate about these things. And yes, it costs money. I do not know what in this world, aside from salvation, does not. But this is important. It is important because while it is not about putting food on your table, it is not about building buildings, it is about feeding the country, feeding the appetite of our people for this knowledge. It is about building a nation.

With those few words, I offer this Motion my full support and look forward to its safe passage.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to offer my support to this very important Motion brought by the Third Elected Member for George Town and seconded by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town. I have to pay credit to the Third Elected Member for George Town at this stage, because she always seems to find these motions (as my friend and colleague, the Fourth Elected Member said) that are thought provoking and soul searching and, certainly, about recognising the worth of our people. And that is great! It is good to have someone amongst us who specialises, as it were, in that area to ensure that we stay on top and give the proper recognition in the areas that we need to.

I know that these couple of hours of debate will be looked at by some critics [who will say], Oh, they have been up in there beating their chests about themselves. But, Madam Speaker, that would only come from shallow minded individuals. This is about recognising the contributions of those in our young democracy. Thank God it is quite young because the task ahead will be less arduous, although it will not be easy. It will take quite a bit of research.

Like others before me I, too, enjoy looking at the photos in our gallery, which is really not open to the public, but in the halls where we walk each day when we are here. We look at all of those, some nameless, some dates are incomplete and some are missing. Madam Speaker, I would love to see that, whether electronic or physical, where I could spend the time to learn about the history of these Cayman Islands and those who served as vestrymen and as legislators who played their part in our arrival at this great point that we have reached and who paved the way for us to be here.

It is certainly an honour to serve behind many who have gone before. I do not need to call all the great names because a lot of us will know. But, certainly, those who come to our shores would not know and our young people would not know.

Just this past summer I went on a family vacation to Washington DC. I had never been. And it was a great honour for me to go around the US Capital and see all of the history there. It pretty much is all wrapped around their legislators, the great presidents. You see Jefferson standing there in what I would call, a huge gazebo (they have another name for it), but he's inside there, a massive statue. He's looking in a certain direction. I think he's facing towards parliament, if I am not mistaken. There is Abraham Lincoln. You read on the wall there about Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Yes, a coliseum. That is what past president Jefferson is in.

In one way or the other they are all recognised and put on a pedestal for the world to see and for people to come to the country and learn about US history.

Madam Speaker, when we give recognition like that, it says to those who have come along lately that this is not just a Cayman Islands that is all about money and a place where you come and enjoy a life in the sun and you do well for yourself and your family and you move on. This has not always been a transient society. That came along after our economy started to outstrip our population. But we have people of soul and people of the soil, people who contributed and worked hard and beat away the mosquitoes, did all of the necessary things, did the turtling and the seamanship and took care of the kids. All of that is what we are talking about. That's what these motions are all about, Madam Speaker.

This Motion is not unlike the one that proceeded it on the Sports Hall of Fame where we are looking to recognise people in the sporting arena because, similar to people in the legislative arena, they too have played their part in shaping our history.

Madam Speaker, I remember my good friend the Minister of Education was very keen on history when we were in school. I hated it, in fact! I regret that now, I must say, but I was more into geography. He would be going off to history class and I wanted nothing to do with it. I was much more interested in how things were formed and where people lived and what they did and whatnot currently.

But I remember the reason I was not in tune with history and did not think it was important or valuable to me is because it was not about me. At the time, if I had been told that I was going to study West Indian history or Caymanian history, I can assure you that I would have been in tune and would have wanted to learn. But I did not want any part, although those histories are important to understand and play their part in our development. And at this stage in our lives we need to know about other people.

Thank God, I must say that is one good thing about our people. We always seem to know a lot more about other people than they do about us, because we have that quest for knowledge and we are small fish in a big pond. Because we had seamen who travelled widely and brought back their stories and experiences we are well versed with the world, I must say.

Madam Speaker, in terms of this Motion and all that it asks for, yes, like anything it will cost money and will take some time. But I believe that if we do not do these things now we are losing the people who have a lot of the knowledge that we need. We are looking at people who are probably in their 80s and 90s. Some have gone on, unfortunately. Therefore, it is important for us to capture whatever there is out there because those people, like us now in midlife, know to a certain extent back. But those older than us will know that much further back, once their memory holds. It is important that we capture all that they have to tell us about our traditions, our crafts, capture the knowledge they have of our forefathers so that, yes, whenever our young people Google (or whatever other technology will come to be) they will be able to pull up [information] about us, and where we came from, about the people that got us to the point where we are.

The truth is, party politics aside and all of the other politics aside, when you look back at the classes of legislators we have had in this country, we have a lot to be proud of. You do not see us jumping up like you see in those Asian parliaments where they pelt handbag, table, desk on a daily basis. Even the British parliament . . . we fall under the UK, but look at the British parliament and see how confrontational that is. And you wonder.

We here in the Cayman Islands have always had a sense of decorum. Yes, we fight on issues and we often times fight during the campaign trail and all that, but the politicians of the Cayman Islands, if you look back in general, they have been people that you can hold your hand up to and say these people have put in a lot of time. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that anyone who thinks that this is an easy job has another guess coming. It is a thankless job, Madam Speaker! People who do this, whether for a short time or a very long time, deserve the respect of others.

I notice that the latest thing now is the new breed of prospective politicians saying they are going to be "full time representatives from 9 to 5". Well, that is the best joke that we have had this year because this life is not about 9 to 5, I can tell them that up front. Madam Speaker, we pay our dues. Therefore, research is due on the past as well as the current class of legislators.

I want to pay credit once more to the mover of this Motion for her foresight in continuing to develop and allow others to have knowledge of where we are coming from and where we are going because if you do not know where you came from, you cannot know where you are going.

Madam Speaker, with that, I lend my support to the Motion and thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I rise to offer a few comments to the Motion. I would first ask for one bit of clarification when the mover is winding up.

In looking at the first resolve and the title of the Motion, it speaks to Members of the Legislative Assembly. The reason I point that out is that I presume the intended reach of the Motion was not restricted to what would have been MLAs proper, but perhaps going back to elected vestrymen, et cetera. So, we need to ensure that whoever actually gets this Motion and uses it as a basis for moving forward clearly understands that it is just not Members of the Legislative Assembly that we are talking about.

Madam Speaker, this exercise certainly for the persons who have gone on, especially when we go back into the era of elected vestry, et cetera, back in the 50s and 60s, will be one that will perhaps take some time and would involve quite a bit of research and work. However, the one thing I would encourage as part of the process is that we come up with a very standard approach to how we are going to deal with this.

In other words, we have basic parameters to which every single person would have the information gleaned—what office they held and the tenure. And then, if available (because I am not sure how much will be available and what some of the processes would have been back in the days of the vestry) . . . I know in our days we can speak to Private Members' Motions and that sort of thing. I do not know precisely what the order was and how the business of that particular institution was carried out.

Certainly, from our perspective, if we talk about what obtains now, I could easily see there being a very standard profile for all of us who have our names, the offices we held, the terms we served, and then perhaps link to—because as I understand, the Hansards are now online on our current website. So, it is not beyond technology today for us to be able to link that person's profile to their body of work. That is perhaps a safe way for us to proceed, certainly for current Members in very recent times.

If we start trying to develop subjective profiles about what a person did or did not do, then we are really getting into someone having to sit down with a person to try to subjectively create a story of the person. I see a much safer way for us to proceed, certainly as I said for the Members who have sat in this House and who have had to abide by the rules that we operate under and for which there is Hansard available, the ability to link that profile to what they have done.

So a student could go online, or anyone could go online and pull up a person by name and up would come the person's picture, that very standardised bit of information that is not biased or painted or tainted in any way, shape or form, and gives one a plain history.

If we also envision that we are going to start recording in more of a less formal way a person's bio, that is something that I think we need to be careful about. I am not suggesting that the Motion is not important. But we want to ensure that everything there is completely factual and is plain as possible about an individual and is not painted one way or the other. I am sure a lot of people when they look back at themselves will say, I stood for X. I stood for Y. While it is easy to say that, what did they do when they were here? What motions did they bring? How did they vote? And what is the real history of their work? I think that is what we are trying to capture.

So, if that is what we are trying to capture, I think that some of this exercise is not going to be as difficult or as arduous as the House may believe. I do not think it is beyond—I know it is not beyond technology to be able to do that.

There are a couple of very interesting parliamentary websites currently online that we can look at, and I believe this committee should look at for thoughts and ideas as to a way forward. I think when we look purely at what the Motion speaks to directly, this is going to be a much more difficult exercise when we look back, especially at institutions like the Vestry. I think perhaps one of the things that could help in assisting this would be that we agree where this is going to be housed.

I am not trying to downplay the importance of the National Archive. I know that we live in a digital age. The reality is that as much as we can put on electronic media means that it is going to have relevance, it is going to be accessible and people are going to use it. I think that is the outcome we want out of all of this.

If that is the outcome, we need to try and decide where we are going to house this. From what I have seen already on the Legislative Assembly's website, I think that's a perfect platform to build from. However, I do believe that we need to make sure that it is made clear how each era operated so that when people hear about elected vestry, there is a brief synopsis of how one became eligible, how one became elected and what the system was. If we do that for each of the different eras, I think that makes it very easy for people to follow that political development, that social development in Cayman in one place, and have the information readily accessible to them.

I think if we use that as part (and I am sure there are many other tentacles to this that I am not thinking of while I am on my feet) . . . but if we use that sort of approach I think it will make the exercise a lot easier.

In looking back at the Vestry and people who were elected in those days, like everything, the further back you go the more difficult the whole exercise becomes. I think that is where we will start to get into what this Motion speaks to where a person or persons will have to make a judgment call and say Vestryman/woman X, was elected, and have a date. And when you come to that bio part of it, it will have to potentially be created and have wording that is in the form of a summary.

Madam Speaker, if I could just cover the points. I think that if we start talking about current and going back into the not-too-distant past, my view would be that we do not need to get into someone trying to summarise any of our body of work and what we have done. I think we should have a very standardised approach and simply have the links that will allow persons to access that person by name and pull up what they did while they were elected and let our work and all prior members' work and what we did and what we said on motions and bills in this Legislative Assembly speak for itself.

Then, as we move back further where the system was slightly different and the information is not as readily available and is not perhaps in an easily accessible form, then we really need to come up with an accurate and an objective as possible summary of each person. I think even going back we could use that standard approach, what office they held, the time, the district, the term, if some terms were interrupted by not being elected, then being re-elected, and the district one represented. I think if we go that route we can end up with a product.

At the end of the day I think we all want as far as possible, recorded simply, accurately, accessible [information] on what we have all done. Once that is available to all of us, then it is quite easy. As other Members who have spoken have said, it is quite frustrating today as we walk through the hall in the Legislative Assembly to see a picture and not know who the person was and what office they held, the term they held it. That does not allow us to really appreciate where we are and how we've gotten here. I think that is the crux of the exercise we are looking to undertake.

We want to allow the people of the Cayman Islands and, for that matter, anyone . . . that's why I advocate using what should be our central legislative website as the tool for anyone to look at us from a legislative standpoint and be able to access as much detail as possible about where we came from, who the players were and what we all did and what we all meant in the whole realm of things.

I think when we go into another exercise where we talk about significant contributors, and certainly we would have people like national heroes, et cetera, that we do need to ensure that we commission the type of work necessary to provide the detailed background as to what those people were—what were they really like?—so that again we can look back and say here is a person that is a national hero of the Cayman Islands. Here is who they were and what they did during their lifetime so that anyone today or at any point in the future can look and really appreciate where the Cayman Islands have come from and what contributions people made.

Madam Speaker, I commend the mover of the Motion. She has certainly brought a number of these types of motions (as other Members have said), that are real introspective and reflective motions that allow us—force us . . . let me not say allow. We have always had the ability to do this, and we have talked about a lot of these different things over the years, certainly in the short eight years that I have been here. But she has brought motions that are forcing us to really take a hard look, pull the information together and really appreciate the fact that while we are small we do have a very rich, but in large measure unknown, not readily accessible, history.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover wish to exercise her right of reply?

Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

First of all, let me thank my colleagues who have made many treatise in support of this Motion, and all the various input they had. To listen to the passionate treatise of the Honourable Minister of Education and to say that as the Minister of Culture he certainly will have a hand in this to see that it goes a long way.

I would also like to thank the Second Elected Member for West Bay for his input and looking at how it should take shape. I must remind him that the First Official Member did give his assurance that he would get an expert in his office to look at it. Perhaps because we have asked for Members of the Legislative Assembly as well as other persons to be involved we could really look to see who from this bench would be selected to be on it.

Madam Speaker, the change to come is enough. With the exception of my friend and colleague, the Honourable Minister of Health, and myself, [you are all] extremely young people. Madam Speaker, I did not refer to you at this moment because you are the Speaker. I would not be so bold to do so. But I am saying why say the change to make is in us. And for the last four years that I have been here, every time we make a Motion, whether it is from the Government side or the Opposition side, it is about the human capital building and us as bridge-makers from one generation to the next, whether it is forward to backward, or backward to forward. We have tried to do that.

Madam Speaker, that is good. You have applauded all the activities of the current President of the United States, Obama, and everybody else has done that. It is amazing how we are all so excited about him, and know so much about him. Even the school children in our country. We must be the same way about our own legislators as well, whether they are dead or alive.

Perhaps I will say here that we also need to look at respectability of the posts in terms of how we make the country see legislators. They [need to be seen as] not just persons that you can swear at and say the worst of things [about] on the talk shows. They are lawmakers and the watchdogs of the Government's purse. Parliament is supreme. Whatever we do in here is for the good of the country, at least the majority of it must be for the development of people. And therefore although we are going back through the historical records to bring all the profiles and activities of those who have gone before, from this point forward we must allow our country to respect the office, Madam Speaker, to respect this office, including our school children.

Madam Speaker, I cannot over-emphasise how important it is in our schools, whether private or Government, to know the life and history of parliament. I would ask, Madam Speaker (and perhaps I am moving a little bit from the subject at hand), that parliament also insist that when the new Constitution is completed that we develop a small booklet for the schools called "You and Your Parliament" (something like that), which indicates the whole structure of Parliament: who your legislators are; what they do; who are Backbenchers; who are the Opposition; and what is the role and function of legislators. So that our children can understand that and when they want to go into politics they do not think that politics starts at the top, like if you are a gravedigger. Politics starts in the community.

I would like to say to my colleagues here that our political memory has been wiped out. We had a 1975 fire at the old Government Administration Building which wiped out a lot of our records. We had [Hurricane] Ivan, which wiped out a lot of our records. We had [Hurricane] Paloma, which wiped out a lot of our records. So we have to look at strategies as to how we can get factual, accurate information on the subject at hand.

Madam Speaker, I would like to close by saying that we must give unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. We must give respect and honour to former legislators. There were great orators in this honourable Parliament. I can remember one: the great Haig Bodden. Our children must hear those voices somewhere. They must hear them somewhere.

I have been asked to say that also the former Minister of Education, the Honourable Roy Bodden, also had oratory skill. Madam Speaker, we have to honour our people. We have to put a halo on their head. Halo must not just be given . . . Madam Speaker, and I have to couch this in the correct way.

Madam Speaker, we seem to think that the halo must only be given to the person who is the head of state in our country. Madam Speaker, I think that we have misunderstood in our country the authority of people. We have misunderstood the authority of our Attorney General, the authority of our Financial Secretary, the authority of our Chief Secretary, the authority of our Ministers, the authority of the Speaker of the House. We have misunderstood that.

I saw the other day when the Serjeant was rallying around you and people were looking in awe how the Serjeant could be doing that. We do not understand the role of the Serjeant.

All I am trying to say in succinct form is that we must leave no stone unturned to bring to the fore the honour of our people who have served us and who are serving us to make for the betterment of this country.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to especially thank the Honourable First Official Member who said that he thinks it is timely. I look forward to his input, his ipso facto in this subject.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that the Government consider setting up a Commission to oversee research and the production of documentaries and other methods of storing information on former Members of the Legislative Assembly to be made available to Caymanians, residents and visitors through the National Archives, the Public Libraries and the various Educational Institutions of the Cayman Islands.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Commission be comprised of:

- Current Members of the Legislature; and
- A representative of the National Archives.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Private Member's Motion No 9/08-09

The Speaker: That concludes the orders of the day. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

National Housing Development Trust Financial Statements for the year ended 30 June 2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the National Housing Development Trust Financial Statements for the year ended 30 June 2008.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I will not speak at length regarding the Report as I believe its title and contents will speak for themselves.

Honourable Members will note that on page 3 of his Report the Auditor General offers the following opinion: ". . .the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the National Housing Development Trust as of 30 June 2008, and of its financial performance and cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with International Public Accounting Standards."

I would crave your indulgence, Madam Speaker, to allow me to take this opportunity to update this honourable House on the status of the various programmes of the NHDT.

As honourable Members will be aware, the NHDT has four main programmes which are tailored to meet the different level of needs of its clients. For those first-time Caymanian homeowners who have the financial means to service a market mortgage, but are finding it difficult to save the down payment, the NHDT offers the Government Guaranteed Home Assisted Mortgage, or "GGHAM", programme. Qualified applicants in this programme have a portion of their mortgage guaranteed by Government. As they build equity in their home the guarantee falls away. This programme, launched in November 2007, has been successful well beyond our initial expectations.

Members will have heard that just a few weeks ago, in January of this year, many of the private sector partners in this programme doubled their commitments to this scheme making an additional $25 million of financing available to qualified first-time homeowners. Since its launch a mere 14 months ago, some 125 successful applicants have achieved the dream of home ownership through the GGHAM programme, and this number is increasing every week.

It would be remiss of me not to acknowledge our private sector partners in this important programme. I am very grateful to the participating banks for their commitment to this programme and for partnering with us to give a helping hand to the clients of the GGHAM programme. The participating banks are: Butterfield Bank, Cayman National Bank, Fidelity Bank, First Caribbean Bank, Royal Bank of Canada, and Scotiabank & Trust.

Another programme of the NHDT (which I have described to Members in my past statements) is the "Build on Your Own Land" programme. This programme is designed for those qualified Caymanian applicants who own land but need some assistance to build their home on their land. Under this programme, the NHDT provides a choice of house plans and essentially gives the applicants bridge financing to help build their home. To date, two homes have been constructed through this programme. I have had the pleasure of handing over the keys to one of these homes, and I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that it was a very rewarding feeling to know that Government had helped this young Caymanian family to build their own home on their own land.

The "Helping Hands" programme is still in its development stages and has not yet been launched. The NHDT has identified this programme as a necessary tool in providing financial counselling and guidance to help those Caymanians who may not yet qualify financially for the NHDT programmes identify ways and means to restructure their financial situation and work toward improving it to a level where they can qualify for one of the NHDT's housing programmes.

Finally, I would like to update the Members of this honourable House regarding the NHDT's affordable housing construction programme.

As Members will likely be aware, the NHDT's existing stock of affordable homes has depreciated and deteriorated far more rapidly than was anticipated when they were constructed. They, quite simply, have not stood the test of time, as short as that time has been. While the existing homes have certainly met a need and provided some much-needed affordable housing, the situation is such that they will likely need to be replaced in the very near future.

With that in mind, and recognising that there are still a number of clients on their waiting list, the NHDT set out to identify sites for the construction of affordable homes in each of the districts in Grand Cayman.

In East End, the NHDT acquired a 9 acre parcel off John McLean drive, and has received planning approval for the subdivision of that land into 59 single family lots. The contract for the site works for the first phase has been awarded and work on the site will be underway next week. It is anticipated that these first 18 lots will be ready to be built on before the end of the second quarter of the year, and that by Christmas there will be a number of families enjoying their first holiday season in their new homes.

Madam Speaker, I would like to digress, if I may, to mention that these new homes will be structurally substantial homes constructed of concrete block. I am confident that they will stand the test of time. These affordable homes will be somewhere people will be proud to call home.

In North Side, a parcel of land has been earmarked for acquisition. I am hopeful that this will progress fairly soon and that the construction of affordable homes on that site will follow very closely on the heels of its acquisition. And I can say to you, Madam Speaker, that Tuesday of this week in Cabinet, the process for compulsory acquisition was approved and is well underway. That site, Madam Speaker, is the site that envelops the original site identified for the home for the elderly and that will give that site sufficient property for that project also.

As Members will be aware, Government has vested a property in Bodden Town to the NHDT for the development of affordable homes in that district. When fully developed, this site will provide 55 lots, the majority of which will be single-family home sites, with a few sites designated for multi-family development. The subdivision application for this site will be submitted to the Planning Department for consideration by the Central Planning Authority in the very near future.

One of the hold-ups for that Madam Speaker, was, because of the way the site was, there had to be a land swap. The other owner has finally agreed for that land swap and as soon as the Lands and Survey Department completes that subdivision and combination of the property, then it can be approved.

The NHDT property known as "Fairbanks" in George Town has received planning approval for a 71 lot subdivision, and survey work is currently underway. It is expected that the site works for Phase 1 of this subdivision, which includes 20 lots, will be tendered very, very early in the near future.

Members will be familiar with the NHDT's site on Eastern Avenue, which is currently developed with some affordable homes. The NHDT has been investigating the feasibility of various redevelopment scenarios for that site, and is in the process of finalising the drawings to be submitted to Planning. It is planned to redevelop this site with predominantly multi-family units, including a mix of 1, 2, and 3 bedroom units.

The West Bay district has an existing affordable housing development; however, an additional site has been identified off Boatswain's Bay road, near the Lighthouse. This site was vested to the NHDT by Government, and planning approval has already been obtained for the 50-lot subdivision on this new site. It is expected that the tendering for the phase 1 site works, which will include 15 lots, will be done by March.

I know that on the surface, without the benefit of the update I have just given here, it would appear that little has happened with regard to providing additional affordable housing in Grand Cayman. I am hopeful that the Members of this honourable House now have a better understanding of what actually obtains. A tremendous amount of work has been done in identifying and securing sites, preparing subdivision plans, seeking planning approval for the proposed subdivisions, evaluating the most efficient way to phase the developments in the various districts to meet the needs of as many clients as possible, and starting the tender process for the various site works.

I am confident that we will all be seeing some very concrete and tangible results of these behind-the-scenes efforts in the very near future, and that we will find that the new homes were well worth the wait.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I would like to note that once this Report (the Audited Financial Statements for the National Housing Development Trust 2007-2008 financial year) has been tabled, the National Housing Development Trust will be fully up to date with their financial reporting.

I would like to thank the Chairman, Mr. Leonard Ebanks, and the General Manager of the NHDT, Mrs. Maxine Gibson, for their diligence and efforts in getting the National Housing Development Trust's financial house in order and up to date.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the extension of the Lease over Crown Land at Registration Section West Bay Beach North Block 11D Parcel 1/11 to the Proprietors, Strata Plan 12 (Villas of the Galleon)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report and Recommendation of the Minister Responsible for Lands on the extension of the Lease over Crown Land at Registration Section West Bay Beach North Block 11D Parcel 1/11 to the Proprietors, Strata Plan 12 (Villas of the Galleon).

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm that, as required by the Law, the details of this land matter have been published in the Cayman Islands Gazette, Issue No. 26/2008, dated 22 December 2008, and a local newspaper, namely, the Caymanian Compass of 18 December 2008.

Also, as required by Law, three (3) valuations have been carried out on the subject property. Each valuation report forms part of the overall Report and provides a general indication of the value of the property that Government now proposes to vest.

The Report deals with the lease extension of the Lease over Crown land at West Bay Beach North Block 11D Parcel 1/11, to The Proprietors, Strata Plan 12 (Otherwise known as the Villas of the Galleon Condominium complex). The parcel is approximately 4.264 acres of Beach Front land along Seven Mile Beach, and is part of the Benson Greenall lease properties which includes a number of Crown properties, such as the Ritz Carlton site, the Westin hotel, Safe-Haven and Regatta Park.

Honourable Members will be aware that the original 99 year leases, which were granted in 1950, have less than half their term left prior to expiry, and that many of the leaseholders have opted to extend their leases back to 99 years.

This is the situation with the Villas of the Galleon, whereby their strata executive committee approached Government several years ago to seek an extension of their lease back to the full 99 year term. Protracted negotiations have occurred between Government and the Strata, with the result that in mid-2006 Cabinet approved in principle the lease extension as outlined in this Report. Members will note that 2006 has been used as the valuation date in the valuations in this Report, and that the proposed vestings will extend the original lease to expire 30 June 2105 (approximately 96 years from today) for the consideration of a premium of CI $4,500,000.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

Private Member's Motion No. 12/08-09—
Establishment of Commission for the Elderly

The Speaker: I recognise the Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I wish to move Private Member's Motion No. 12/08-09—Establishment of Commission for the Elderly:

WHEREAS the Cayman Islands has enjoyed unprecedented growth in its economy and its standard of living during the past 25 years;

AND WHEREAS this robust economy is based on the sacrifices and efforts of previous generations;

AND WHEREAS many members of previous generations did not live long enough to benefit from the growing resources of this nation;

AND WHEREAS this category of Caymanian citizens are experiencing a range of challenges which they or the state did not anticipate and for which they did not make adequate provision;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that this Government consider the setting up of a Commission for the Aged whose initial remit shall be a scientific socio-economic study of the elderly resulting in an Action Plan and legislation to bring hope for the future of Seniors in the Cayman Islands and give them opportunities to live with dignity and not fall through the safety net into abject poverty and humiliation;

AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED that, due to the current economic meltdown and likely recession, the Government consider revisiting the retirement age with a view to deciding that retirees who are trainable and able and have special expertise are allowed to remain in the workforce by way of contract in both the private and public sectors.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?

The Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I consider it a privilege to have been asked to second this Motion—Establishment of Commission for the Elderly.

The Speaker: I will suspend proceedings at this time for 15 minutes to allow the Prospect [Primary School] Year 4 [students] to mingle with Members of this House in this hallowed Chamber.

Proceedings suspended at 10.47 am

Proceedings resumed at 11.00 am

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

The Third Elected Member for the district of George Town continuing her introduction of Private Member's Motion No. 12/08-09.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker,

Madam Speaker, this country was built on the persons whom I am referring to in this Motion. They have slaved themselves. Some of them died very early, and those who are alive do not get the best life sometimes; either their families have not attended to them as they should or because of the kind of country that we have evolved. Until now, we have spent a lot of time on what we would call acquiring things and not too much on the whole question of the social landscape in terms of our elderly.

Madam Speaker, never in the history of the world have there been so many senior citizens. These persons were perhaps born after World War II or before. In many respects they are Baby-boomers. Some of them are older, but most of them are Baby-boomers, but not Baby-boomers in the sense that we have on Wall Street and related to the economic crisis at the moment. These persons whom I am talking about are the aged. And when I speak of the aged I am looking at persons who are perhaps late 50s or 60s.

As you know, Madam Speaker, 60 is the new 40 (so they say). So, it means that this is a good time for these people. But at the end of the day because of our laws or our practices some of them will have to leave their work. Some of them will not get any work; some of them never put away anything for the rainy day.

And also, our country never looked at putting away anything in terms of pension until perhaps 1998. What we give is what we call ex-gratia financial assistance, or we give to veterans and seamen. Madam Speaker, that is not sufficient, to my mind, to help the aged. We need to have them as comfortable as possible. It is what we can afford at the moment but it is not what we really should be giving.

And I must say that I understand that someone said that this is not a necessary motion. [I have] to say that this is coming from professional people. It is unfortunate that people can make those kinds of comments.

You see, Madam Speaker, in this world today I think it is better for a young person to make it in this Cayman Islands today than an old person. Especially old persons 65 and up who have never had the benefits as the young people have today of going to university, acquiring lovely jobs, great opportunities we have in our country. They never had that. They slaved, worked hard, did everything they could, and made this place a peaceful, loving place where everybody and his sister or brother comes to live and send remittances home so that their families can live.

Madam Speaker, I want to also applaud the Minister of Health and Human Services for the year-man work that his staff, particularly the Social Services . . . A lot of people criticise the Social Services. But thank God we have them, particularly in this time of global issues, because they can go to the Social Services and get at least half a loaf of bread. So, I want to applaud the Minister and his staff for all they have done in terms of assisting the elderly in this country.

But, Madam Speaker, the country needs to understand that when a person reaches the age of 60, life does not stop. As a matter of fact, some of our men get married at 60 and start having a family. And, Madam Speaker, we need to look into that. That is not a crime. That is the way they want to live their life and if they feel that they are up to it . . . but at the end of the day they have reached 60 so how are they going to look after their offspring? How are they going to do that, Madam Speaker? There has to be some support system in this country to ensure that they don't fall through the net.

Madam Speaker, the 60-year olds, the aged and senior citizens don't really want handouts, yuh nuh. They are an independent set of people. They don't want to know that they have to be climbing the steps up in Micro Centre (I'm speaking of George Town and the other districts as well) to go and get handouts. They don't want that. They want to be an independent set of people. And it is unfortunate that it was not until now in the last perhaps four or five years that we have really focused on the elderly. It is unfortunate, Madam Speaker, because they were pioneers; they were heroes. It is an insult to give them handouts. They feel that they are the forgotten generation.

They feel strongly that we bring immigrants—I want us to listen to what I am saying—to do jobs that they could do. Okay, they have retired from their labour of love which was their work for 30 years or 40 years. They have not amassed the material things or money in order to give them another 20 years, but they can still work. They feel strongly that we are bringing in cashiers on work permits, people to work in supermarkets. They feel strongly about those things and that they now have the ability to work.

And, Madam Speaker, I would ask the Government, when they are considering this commission, that this commission looks into things like that: Do we really need to bring in all of these cashiers? Do we really need to hire them, or can we hire some of our retirees; some of our people who have reached the age of 60 and had to leave work? Some people are more skilled so they would get other things. But I am talking about people who really did not benefit from the formal education that a lot of us have benefited from inside here.

The rising standard of living and the related cost of living have forced older Caymanians to want to work, as I said. And they too, Madam Speaker, want to live that Caymanian dream. They too still want to drive their little car. They want their little house. They want to be able to look after their grandchildren and give them—you know, Madam Speaker, how it goes with your grandchildren. They want to be able to offer them this and that. So, Madam Speaker, they want to be able to work. And there is a hue and cry in this country about senior citizens.

I am not trying to protect myself because we have an efficient Government [where] when you work for the Government they have an efficient pension system. That is why I am very adamant that it must be Caymanians who must work in the Government, so that they can benefit from that type of pension. It must be our Caymanians. And I am not dropping any stones, Madam Speaker, I am just speaking directly.

In our Civil Service when we put people in there we must know at the end of the day that their life is going to be better. We know at the end of the day when they retire their life is going to be better than the ordinary citizen. I can tell you. I've been there. Therefore, we need to ensure that our civil servants, particularly those at the end of the rung of the ladder who have retired, can also get back in the system to do something to have their standard of life a little better, Madam Speaker. And I will appeal to this and if I am back here in the next time I certainly will be on the heels of all those people to ensure that in the Civil Service—Madam Speaker, I am very passionate about this—that it must be Caymanians [in totality] who work in the Civil Service, so they can benefit off the fat of the land.

Madam Speaker, when we bring immigrants here they have an opportunity to send remittances to their families. Regardless of whether it is $100, it is still $100, and [converted] it could be more. They are able to help their children and old people out there, but we don't have that benefit here. So it is the Government, regardless of which party is in, it is the Government's responsibility to take up the slack to ensure that nobody falls through the net.

It is the Government, and more so now it is the PPM Government who in their Manifesto said, “Caymanian Society has been under so many challenges due to rapid growth that the traditional role of children and/or extended family looking after the elderly has been severely eroded. Many younger people find it difficult enough just to look after themselves and their own children. In addition, on average people are living longer. Many older people simply do not have the means to live decently as they have inadequate pension or income. They need proper access to health care and often need financial assistance.”

And that is true, Madam Speaker. That is true. That is very wise of the PPM Government, and so this Motion will only substantiate and enhance what it says here.

All I am asking through this Motion is to enhance the quality of life for senior citizens in this country. And if there is a rebuttal from the Opposition they should not say, well you know it is you all that made it so, as they echo all the time. Madam Speaker, this is cumulative.

When you read the Cayman Islands National Assessment of Living Conditions (NALC) it tells you about our elderly. One group which stands out that needs are our elderly. So, Madam Speaker, this Motion to me is timely. This commission of the aged is absolutely necessary. They can write their terms of reference but this is not to replace the Minister's Social Services Department. This is to encompass all the needs and services that aged would require, like an advocacy for the aged. This is what I am asking. I'm not asking to replace the Government's arm of Social Services. I'm asking to support the whole public—private and public sector—to support an advocacy group, a commission similar to what we have for the youth (the Commission of Youth).

Whereas the aged are now wondering about getting an extra job, the Commission would help them to find jobs, help them to get discounts and do all these things. This is what I am talking about.

Madam Speaker, I know that there are others who will come and make comments. I have stayed away from writing the terms of reference for this commission because the Minister has an able staff through the Social Services and his Ministry to sit down and write terms of reference for these things. I don't have to spend time here doing that. My interest in this is to ensure that the people who made this country, the people who made me, who made us here, whose shoulders we stood on to be here, who took their hands and lifted us to be here—the change is here. The change is right here in these hallowed halls and we must believe that we can make a difference for the aged in this country.

Yesterday somebody referred to my hair and said, Oh, I like your grey. And then the person said, You know when I go to Jamaica and those places, oh, you should see the men now, they are letting their hair grow grey. And that is wonderful, Madam Speaker. That is a journey. No comments on anybody. I'm not touching anybody with 'Just for men' or 'Just for women'. I'm not doing that. What I am saying is that the aged and the elderly and the senior citizens have a part in this country. They are living longer. They are our people and we need to ensure that their standard of living is as good as the young people. And we need to be bridge makers.

We need to have the young people understand that there you will be in 30, 40 years. I'm sorry that I was not able to speak in front of the young people so that they would understand that life is not static; that there is a journey of life where you move from small to medium and to big and live a life. If you don't die you must get old.

You know when I was about 20 years old—my sister is about 10 years younger than me—she looked at me and said, You're old. Now that she is what we call the new 30, I wonder what she thinks. But,

Madam Speaker, I used to wonder myself what it would be like to be 60. How do you feel? Are you old? And now that I am there it is like 40. And that is the kind of feeling I would like for us to put back in our aged.

Revisit the Pines and make sure that they get exercise. And these are the things that the Commission will look at. These are the things, Madam Speaker. Our aged [people] are important in this country and we . . . I'm very emotional about this because I walk around this George Town, particularly where you have most of them, and my life is spent with them almost trying to make their lives better. And you know the thing that bothers me and really irritates me is that I was born poor. A lot of those people who I visit, to me they were wealthy people. When I was a young child they had acres and acres and hundreds of acres of land and for some reason their children and other evil people have taken away their land. Their children, Madam Speaker! And you know they have to be beholding to Social Services because they have no land; they have [nothing] because their children have taken it and squandered.

So, Madam Speaker, we have to be bridge makers for the young people to understand what their role is. What the role is as young and old and the intergenerational relationships. They must understand that. And why I am the way I am and you are the way you are, and most of us are the way we are in here is because our parents made us work with old people. My job every Saturday was to go and shop for them and I could not write it down, I had to remember it; that's how they taught me—you must remember this. You are going for five items, remember those five items. And that was my job. You went and raked their yards and that is how your parents taught you.

And when Christmas came you would write your little list. I still do it up until today. Write your list—it has gotten longer now, they think that I have a little more money—and you give them.

Madam Speaker, in many countries of the world, like Japan and such, the aged and the seniors are held up in high esteem. What impresses me when I come out here and see the people who are off of the cruise ships is that they are the old people who I see. When you go into George Town and see two George Towners with grey hair at the Post Office that is plenty. You don't see them. This is what the Commission will do. The Commission will ensure that people see them and they see people.

Madam Speaker, I perhaps will have to pause here because I know the other Members are anxious to get into this topic because it's interesting. I am eager to hear what each one has to say in how they can change and formulate for the benefit of the Minister who most likely is going to accept the Motion, how they can formulate a terms of reference. So, I am hoping that my leader will get up and help us to formulate this commission for the elderly.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, this is probably a mistake coming after the Third Elected Member for George Town, but she is calling everybody out and so she should. Maybe I will call a few out myself.

In all honesty, Madam Speaker, this is truly another wonderful motion. Again, I want to commend the mover of the Motion who, as I said yesterday, is always able to find these motions that are meaningful, that bring benefit and recognition to our Caymanian people. And I dare say, Madam Speaker, that regardless of all the negativity that goes on, on a daily basis, and the new amount of rumours we hear every day about our legislators, God knows there seems to be a lot of idle people in our community. And there is so much to be done.

Some of these same individuals who seem to enjoy (and I would dare say in many cases make up) these rumours, some of these individuals could be spending their time doing better things like looking out for our elderly. More than likely many of them have neglected elderly family members whose lives could be made a whole lot better. But we don't live in an ideal world.

So, those of us who are in a position to enhance the lives of those we love so much and consider dear should do the best we can. We have to acknowledge that in this world, this life, and this Cayman Islands, that there are good and evil people.

Madam Speaker, we are here. The things that we enjoy and have come to accept as normal parts of our lives, many of the things we take for granted are because of the many sacrifices that our now elderly have made on our behalf. In years to come our generation could well become a burden on governments of the future. If we continue to let the trend that we are now experiencing slide, it is incumbent upon all of us to understand, acknowledge and accept that we have a problem and start to do something about it.

We must acknowledge that while the Cayman Islands have become a very affluent society, we were quite a distance behind the other developed countries and things like proper social security programmes, pensions, health insurance and things of that sort are relatively new to us.

I remember having a conversation a year or two ago when we moved another motion in here. Somebody asked, Well, you know what is this going to cost government again? I answered at the time that in a few years when pensions kick in in earnest that we should expect that the burden on government on the Social Services Department should begin to decrease. That is a hope. But if we do not put the proper mechanisms in place, Madam Speaker, where we assist our workforce now to properly prepare for themselves and to acknowledge that our elderly, those who are now out of the workforce, are not being properly taken care of, then that timeline I spoke to will only go on further.

Once we understand all of the things I just said and the many points made by the mover of the Motion, we can easily understand that because of the lack of the pensions and social security and the . . . even the US is having great problems with that at the time. So we all acknowledge that care for our elderly is a problem. But, Madam Speaker, provided we realise and understand that many of the people who we are talking about now that need help were hard working contributing citizens of this country who, many of them, never had an idle day in their lives. Many of them went to work at an age where many of our generation would take for granted should be time spent in school. But many of these people were 9, 10, 11 and up. We had men in this country going to sea at the age of 14—some younger than that—to the Mosquito Cays, and so on.

Most of these individuals we are talking about now were not idle people. I dare say that the percentage of idle people in our country now and what it was back then, from what I understand, Madam Speaker, is just too far a gap. There was no time for idleness back in those days. So, these are contributing citizens who have toiled, laboured and sacrificed everything for the life that we are now enjoying. And I can only say, why not? Why should we not be able to make whatever sacrifices we need to make for them at this age? They paid their dues, now it is time for us to pay ours.

Our elderly, Madam Speaker, are a dignified set of people. People of our generation, people who are younger than me, people who are in my same age group don't mind right going to anybody and asking for a handout, some even when they don't need it. But our elderly people are too proud to ask for help. So, because they may not ask us, many of us don't know their struggles and sufferings. It is up to us as a government, as a people, as a country, to be able to acknowledge that and seek them out and understand what they are going through.

I understand and appreciate the $550 that we give and the contributions that we make to the seamen, Madam Speaker, but in many cases it does not go far enough. It does not go far enough. I know individuals who can't even pay their medication bills for the month with that amount. And they have to eat, pay utilities, and while many of them may have families, a lot of those families too are struggling. And we can all admit that it all has a lot to do with not preparing for your later days.

I sold insurance for a while. There was a common saying within the insurance industry, and I'm sure it still is, that there were two things in life you had to be mindful of when you thought about life insurance. One of them was dying too soon, and the other was living too long. Meaning that you can live beyond your economic means where you can no longer take care of yourself because you did not prepare for those later years. So, financially you live too long where somebody else now has to take care of you, or you die too soon leaving a young family and nothing behind to take care of them.

Life insurance is one of the things that I mention, but many of our people back then did not even know what that was. Many of them could not afford it. But that only kicks in when somebody dies. If you are still around, then you still have to have accommodation, [you need to] eat and live a comfortable life.

Madam Speaker, I have had many occasions and opportunities, since I have been an elected Member in particular, but also my 30-odd years as a member of service clubs in this country. I would also dare say that the emergence of service clubs throughout the world was basically caused by individuals recognising that mainly elderly people in their respective communities needed help.

There is no magic to this. There is no formula or anything that we have just uncovered that is telling us today that our elderly people need help. This has been recognised throughout. We are just a bit behind. And while we have acknowledged some of it and have gone on to doing the monthly contributions, I believe that there is need for some scientific research to understand exactly what is happening with us and how we should help them prepare for their later years; and [for] those who don't, how we can help them live out a dignified life.

I believe that all of us have experienced going to visit our elderly or having conversations with them. In recent times I have had one tear-jerking experience with a lady I visited, Madam Speaker, in trying to see if there is any way we can assist her because of her living conditions. And this lady was . . . Well let me just say this: When I explained to her why I was there and why I had taken the other individual along with me to look at her condition, her words to us were, My sons, there are plenty worse off than me. I appreciate any help I can get, but you don't need to worry about me if there are more people out there that you need to help. And the individual who was with me looked at me and I could almost see tears in his eyes, Madam Speaker.

When we left, he just could not believe that there were people left in the world like that because she is not living in very accommodating conditions. But I said that to say that that is usually the state because if you met her on the road and asked her how she is doing, she is going to say, I'm fine, I'm alive, I'm great. She would have never said to you, You know, life is difficult. My home is not in the best shape. I'm having problems getting food on a regular basis. You know my doors are not locking properly; my windows are broken. They are not going to tell you all of those kinds of things, they are just too proud.

I believe that we need to pull off the main road a little more often and drive into the small roads and visit and see what is really going on because the majority of these people are off the beaten track.

As a government, must also understand . . . and I agree with the mover of the Motion who continues, not just in this Motion, to champion the fact that we need to understand that our employment practices are in some ways hurting our own population, and that there are many senior citizens in this country, Madam Speaker, who are able, capable and willing to work. They want to work! But we force them out of the workplace at a time when they are not prepared or financially able for it; when their pension (for those who have it) has not reached that stage where another couple of years, three, four or five years would give them a little bit of a better income when they finally retire.

We don't take those things into consideration when we are laying people off or when we are deciding that they have come to the end of their term. We simply look at it as, you are now 60 or 55, it is time to go. We don't take the time to look into the average individual and what that might mean to their financial stability after work.

So, this is an all-encompassing motion. I believe that the Government needs to make that distinction. Government needs to lead the way in dealing with that and look very closely at what we consider mandatory retirement age, and encourage the private sector to do the same thing.

Yes, Madam Speaker, we must make way for our younger Caymanians coming up, but in many cases we are replacing our elderly with work permits. And you know one of the harshest criticisms that I have come under in this Parliament, Madam Speaker, is that I am anti-expatriate. And I get that label because I stand up and speak for what I think is the rightful place that Caymanians should be able to take in their community.

I have nothing against expatriates. Many of them are very good friends of mine. But we must first look out for our people. And those individuals who criticise me . . . They have said so about quite a few of us, in particular my two backbench colleagues, the Third Elected Member for George Town and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. We have been championing that cause where we believe that we ought to be looking out for Caymanians a bit more.

I do believe that we have to take that into consideration because, Madam Speaker, like the mover of the Motion said, if Government's practice is to move elderly Caymanians out and move work permit holders in, then those earnings that would accumulate in this country and become a part of their pension fund are more than likely going elsewhere.

When I brought another motion to this House, I spoke about the importation of labour and the exportation of wealth. We bring labour in and we send money out. We need to understand what is happening with and that we need to retool our people to help prepare them for the jobs in Cayman and understand that we must continue to employ our elderly people if they are able and willing to work.

There are many 65-, 70-, 75-year old individuals in this country that I know. You can't believe their age until they tell you because they look so well and they are in such good health. I believe that we have to be mindful and take note of that, and allow those individuals, instead of them having to go to the Department of Social Services or sit down somewhere, lose their homes because many of them still have mortgages, for whatever reason.

Many of our elderly people have saved for the rainy day only to have had some of their children become ill and [they have] had to spend all of their savings. Again, nothing of their doing. Some had to re-mortgage their homes to take care of other medical problems for their families, and those individuals end up living their lives out in poverty.

I'm just saying that government can't fix everything. We must acknowledge that. But I believe that we do owe it to the people who have built this country and set the pace that the trend does not continue. We must also acknowledge that we have to find ways to reduce the cost to government. That must be understood. And so we should not always look at what government can hand out but how government can prepare our people to better look out for themselves. And I believe that that is the spirit of this Motion and what the mover is asking for.

She also spoke about our elderly population increasing, and thank God modern medicine has caused that to happen. But what do we want? Is that not what we want? We all want our parents and grandparents to be with us longer and God knows medicine has given us that opportunity. So, let's not support the development of better medicine and do nothing, once medicine has given them the opportunity to live longer, about allowing them to live that longer life in dignity.

Madam Speaker, that is my contribution. I trust that this Motion will have safe passage through this honourable House.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, let me once again congratulate the Third Elected Member for George Town for another one of her soul-searching, far-reaching motions. I also congratulate the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, and both of them for the very good platform that they have laid on this important debate.

Madam Speaker, I envisage the people we are talking about are those over the age of 60 and up really, because there are varying degrees of poverty, varying situations when we look at the people in that age group. The Caymanian society has developed in such a way that we have wide disparity in wealth. The old Cayman Islands saw the families take care of their loved ones and remain a tight unit until death did them part. Unfortunately, [in] the new Cayman we now see where elderly people are either put in a retirement home or sometimes left to their own devices. We still have those who have been good enough and lucky enough to have their loved ones with them.

I have had quite a few experiences since I have been elected, Madam Speaker, to also deal with the Caymanian who is still quite able to contribute in the workforce and would wish to do so in one form or the other; who still has a lot to offer, who carries himself in a very professional and dignified manner; who has good work ethics; who has a lot to pass on to people coming behind. But, as has been said by my colleagues, these unfortunate people find themselves retired with no possibility of getting any other job.

The sad part about that is that it would not be so bad if they did not have financial obligations, Madam Speaker. I know of two particular instances in my own district that I was intimately involved with where the individuals involved are very capable, very able, but simply—and I am talking about married couples, both finding themselves in this situation—having serious obligations. Kids have moved on and have their own obligations and these people are financially strapped.

So, I concur fully with the Fourth Elected Member for George Town when he speaks about looking at the . . . And I dare say a motion has been passed in this honourable House before this on this very topic. I think it was also brought by the Third Elected Member for George Town sometime back for us to look at the whole issue of retirement and how we deal with these individuals who can contribute in the workplace. They still have a lot to offer but also have their own commitments and pride and do not want handouts. [They] want to be able to look after themselves. We have to find a way, Madam Speaker.

When I was looking at this Motion I was trying to envisage exactly what the Third Elected Member [for George Town] had in mind as a commission, because I know that we do have a vibrant Children and Family Service unit under the Minister for Health and Social Services. They have been doing a sterling job, Madam Speaker, and I wondered just how the commission would fit in. But as I've sat, listened and read the Motion over, I can now see where we are looking for some sort of umbrella organisation, and that is the commission that would pull together the very different facets of the senior citizens' lives; look at their needs, what they have to offer and operate as a coordinating body.

You see, Madam Speaker, we have in the community (which has been alluded to before as service clubs) district groups, social services, and many other NGOs (Non-Governmental Organisations) that everybody is doing something for the elderly at specific times, especially at Christmas and other International Senior's Day and that type of thing. There is always a lot going on.

Since I have been a part of the PPM Government I can proudly say that this Government . . . and I speak firsthand for the district of Bodden Town of the amount of effort that we have put into our seniors, I can say quite clearly without contradiction—unprecedented. We have a group of women in Bodden Town and their names have been called on the Floor of this House before. But the likes of Ms. Josie Solomon, Mrs. Mary Lawrence, Mrs. Agnes McCoy, Mrs. Ellen Eden, Mrs. Betty Wood, those folks know who I am talking about. I will be forgiven for names I don't call. They, themselves, are nearing the age where they will need assistance. But you know they have done a sterling job in our district to stimulate our seniors, bringing them out to the Nurse Josie Senior Centre to have events for them many, many times during the year.

And people like Ms. Heather Bodden and others who, in the Savannah area, continue to work so hard with the seniors uplifting them and showing appreciation for them. That is all good. That is tremendous. I am proud to have been a part of that over the last two years.

There are times, however, when this stuff is not happening and these people become forgotten souls, because they get in some cases a little lunch from maybe Meals on Wheels or some other organisation, group, loved one or an interested party. But a lot of times they sit there and are lonely. They are sad.

You know you can judge a country, Madam Speaker, by the way it cares for its young and elderly, and also the way it takes care of its graveyards. Those three things, I've been told, tell you a lot about a people. Therefore, anything that we can do to enhance what we are already doing—and with this population becoming an increasing one because of medical science, it is something that we have to be cognizant of. We have to take the bull by the horns, as it were, and we have made strides in that area. But given the next term—and we will be back here as a government the next term, I'm pretty confident of that with the people behind us and with God's help—we will put in place what [is necessary] I'm sure, of what this Motion is calling for.

Madam Speaker, we have to show the respect and love for the people who brought us to where we are today. Yesterday, again with some motions, we were discussing this very thing—paying tribute to those who have paved the way. And our National Heroes Day and all of the other things that we are doing at the moment are all about nation building and uplifting our people.

Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, this commission will be a coordinating body, in my mind, and we don't have to get into the details of the terms of reference and how this will work. I'm sure the Ministry will deal with it through its various agencies. But,

Madam Speaker, yes, these things all cost money but there is no price too high when it comes to dealing with our elderly and our young people. We need to make sure that they have a decent, honourable development, and, in the case of the elderly, a decent respectable dignified exit from this world after they have worked so hard and paved the way for us to be here to stand and talk about them as we are doing today.

These people, Madam Speaker, have a lot to offer. They are a memory bank in itself. They have all of the old crafts, all of the old wisdom and knowledge to pass on to the young people. And there is nothing more beautiful than a group of elderly people sitting in an environment with our young people and seeing the awe and the interest and light in the eyes of the young as they listen. Madam Speaker, having been a young person many years ago I know how important that was to me.

We had an old man in Bodden Town, called Uncle Bill. Madam Speaker, I would sit for hours because one of his favourite perches was on my Mother's porch and by our gas station as well he had his seat there. I spent a lot of time in the company of this old man. He was a Bodden Town institution in itself. He had been some of everything, from police officer to customs, to I don't know. I guess his title went on and on because he buried the dead and brought the young ones into the world as well. In those days we did not have all of the segregation of duties we have now.

But Uncle Bill was an institution and he had the stories of his days in Cuba and growing up in Cayman. I never tired of sitting and listening to Uncle Bill. The only thing I had to do to pay for that was I had to clip his fingernails and bring him a glass of water. He would say, Now, come on young man, get that water out here and try not to be like your uncle. Don't be lazy.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Yes, in these days with all the things that Uncle Bill did he would have been called a multi-tasker. He was something else and was known and loved by all. And, you know, people like him exist today.

There are fantastic stories and wisdom amongst those elderly people that we have and we have to capture that, Madam Speaker. Like I said, we have debated many times on the Floor of this House [the need] to preserve the many things these folks have to offer. And this is another motion in relation to them and is probably the one that will drive some serious action in this regard. A commission will look at the elderly, look at what we can do to keep them occupied, I would imagine; and look at how we can utilise their expertise and talent.

Certainly, Madam Speaker, I would like to once again congratulate the mover and seconder of this important Motion and look forward to the support of this honourable House and safe passage through.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise [to make] a few comments on Private Member's Motion No. 12/08-09—Establishment of Commission for the Elderly. I would like to compliment the mover, the Third Elected Member for George Town, and the seconder, the Fourth elected Member for George Town. I believe the words that I have heard so ably brought forward by some of the previous speakers is timely.

Madam Speaker, with your indulgence I would like to support that comment with a few words from the National Assessment of Living Conditions (NALC) Report which was just released. It says on page 154, “Elderly respondents also believe that they are discriminated against because *“society makes you feel like you are not recognised . . .”

Now, how could this be more timely when there has just been a national assessment? “A sense of disappointment, pain and hopelessness could be detected in the comments such as “you feel useless; you have no luxury”. The level of hopelessness sometimes escalates to feeling suicidal. Overwhelmingly the respondents felt bad about their situation and to some extent depressed”.

I believe, Madam Speaker, the timeliness of this shows that it is our obligation as legislators and as a country itself to respect the issues that now fall upon our elderly. The Assessment does not stop there though. It says (and this shows the character of the elderly of this country), that the elderly reported that they felt ashamed of having to depend on others for assistance. But at the same time (this is the true Caymanian spirit) blessed because they still had something to eat.

Madam Speaker, this was an assessment that was done in every area of our country. I think it speaks volumes for the timeliness and the idea of why we do need the establishment of a commission for the elderly.

I also believe that it is incumbent upon me to say a few words because the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman which I [represent] in this honourable House is an ageing community. And the community itself is one that faces the issues that have been raised by the previous speakers, not on a daily basis, but hour by hour. And let me assure you that since [Hurricane] Paloma, they have raised their heads minute by minute. And it is an issue that starts very early in the morning and ends very late at night. These are people who were the nation builders of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

I just want to give you an example that, when you think about it, shows the type of character and dedication they have to life. The statement was made that a lot of people in Cayman Brac did not have insurance on their houses. Now, Madam Speaker, with a little bit of sophistication we know that if you don't have insurance on your house it means you don't have a mortgage on your house. That shows that the elderly of Cayman Brac who lost their homes had worked so hard most of their lives to put themselves in a position where they did not have to depend. They had used what they had worked for to have their own home—a home that carried forth an extended family with it and gave them a place where their family met on weekends, especially on a Sunday afternoon. And to think that that has been taken away from them makes me very, very cognizant of the fact that we have to do everything in our power to put them back in a position where their families have that home again, where they have the roof over their heads and where we honour what they have done, and honour what they have given us to carry forward.

I hate to say it this way, Madam Speaker, but in Grand Cayman you found after [Hurricane] Ivan that deaths rose months after that. Unfortunately, in Cayman Brac, during the last three months we have seen (I believe I'm safe in saying) 16 people pass on. It takes them to a point where they basically have no hope left.

We are [trying to do] everything we can, but we must do more to make sure they know that relief and help is coming to them. As they see people [working on] their houses and the community standing with them, as they see the private sector from all over the Cayman Islands coming to do what they can, standing together side by side as brothers and sisters of this country, [they will feel] honoured and respected for what they have done for us. We need to put them back in a situation as good as—or better—than they were before Paloma hit our shores.

Madam Speaker, I just used that example to support the timeliness of this Motion and to talk about some of the issues that we now have available. The veterans and seaman's benefits and the indigent benefits and some small retirement funds are simply not enough. And I don't say this just for my district, I say this for the whole Cayman Islands. We have to be realistic and understand that the day and age of living off an indigent's, veteran's, or seaman's small pension has passed us by. Not because of anyone's fault of their age or anyone's fault of this country, but because of world economic pressures and what has happened to the cost of living here and abroad.

So, Madam Speaker, the commission that is spoken about, I believe if I could use some examples and carry forward rather than saying we would allow the commission to draw their own terms of reference, I believe that we can be creative and look at this as a cash neutral situation. We can look at this and brainstorm and say a retirement age of 60 may be good in some parts of the labour industry, but it is not acceptable when there are healthy vibrant people going forward that still have a lot to offer to their community.

Think of a simple example: Tourism is one of the legs of our economy. Now, Madam Speaker, I can tell you that people return to these shores because of the ambassadors they meet, the elderly of this country when they have the opportunity to meet them. And how do they meet them? They meet them in a very unstructured or unplanned way. They meet them by going to Church when they are here; they meet them at a restaurant, at a bar, not as much as they did before, but they still meet them around a hotel at some juncture of their stay.

So, if we look at this from 'let us spend good dollars and not bad dollars' in a structured way, that the commission comes together and says, You know we have an opportunity here to build our tourism product, to encourage our elderly to respect them and give them dignity back. As the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town said, if you enjoy stories, Madam Speaker, you will certainly enjoy an elderly Caymanian.

I have the good fortune of being from a family of ship captains. There is not a more delightful way to spend an afternoon and evening than talking and listening to the events and experiences that they have been through all over this world. And, Madam Speaker, I can assure you that when I see the tourists who come to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman enjoy the stories and personalities and understand the character that built these Islands, it gives them a message to take home. And the most important part about it is when you look at building your tourism product and want to make sure that it is built on repeat business, the repeat business is built through the elderly ambassador.

So, that is just one example of how this can be a cash neutral situation for the commission and for this country. As has been said, we need to be creative in the ways. Government cannot be put to the task of just expecting to solve problems with money. A good government is put to the task of solving problems in a prudent way. And I put the position forward that in being prudent we understand how we can do this and involve a partnership between all sectors of our community.

Madam Speaker, it has certainly been said that you nurture your young and respect your elderly. That speaks volumes for you as a country. I am proud to say that what has taken place in Cayman Brac in the last three and a half years is a new daycare centre for the young and a new addition onto the Rest Home for the elderly.

It is very clear that I will support this Motion because I believe that we owe it to the elderly of this country to form this commission. And I believe that this Motion will have safe passage through this House. So, Madam Speaker, with those few words I wind up.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 1.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.07 pm

Proceedings resumed at 1.34 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continuing on Private Member's Motion No. 12/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

It is with a full heart that I stand to respond and accept on behalf of the Government this very special Motion brought by my school colleague of a few years ago. And as I look at the very second "WHEREAS", it is one of the most important areas that I have talked about over and over, and that we have all recognised and acknowledged. I will read it one more time: "AND WHEREAS this robust economy is based on the sacrifices and efforts of previous generations."

Madam Speaker, the entire development of this Private Member's Motion can be based around this foundation.

The fourth "WHEREAS" goes on to say, "And WHEREAS this category of Caymanian citizens are experiencing a range of challenges which they or the state did not anticipate and for which they did not make adequate provision."

I would posture, Madam Speaker, that in the era in which they lived and were brought up, the way they treated their elderly was completely different from how some of us treat our elderly today, and that is by doing the right thing by taking proper care of them and treating them with dignity and respect.

As I speak for the Government in support of this Motion, it is calling for action on a subject that has been a priority for my Ministry. The deployment of a commission should bring a fresh energy and clearer focus on the subject. It should also provide a context for a broader community awareness and response to the position of the elderly. This should actually facilitate one of our objectives as a Ministry, which is to develop a national strategy for the elderly. And, Madam Speaker, to that end we have recently started the operations of separating the Department of Children and Family Services into two distinct operations. One of them is the greater focus on the elderly and then the focus on the children.

We have just recently received the Final Report for the National Assessment of Living Conditions, which was tabled in this honourable House back in December. The findings, as alluded to earlier by one of the previous speakers, have complemented some other routinely collected data. But it has also confirmed the need for further study as we expected it would.

The usefulness of this existing core data is that it provides a good starting point. We already see a clear suggestion from the data that the elderly are the poorest segment of the population, and that the female elderly seem to be the most negatively impacted by the factors which create disadvantages.

As we all know, Madam Speaker, following through on the NALC the Cabinet Office is to take the lead to develop a national poverty reduction strategy. It already seems clear that as one of the most vulnerable groups, strategies for the elderly should be a priority, thus bringing this commission to fit right in with what we will go forward with. Again, a commission for the elderly should augment this process. I would anticipate that it could be a facility for harnessing the various areas of private giving, support and care by the non-governmental organisations, churches, and of course, the key—the commitment of families.

The Motion says that the dignity of the elderly must be secured and that an effective safety net must be available to catch the needy. Indeed, this is the basis on which we have proceeded for some time. Services for the elderly have been accrued over time. Some have been extended and others added through social work, community development work, financial assistance and medical coverage.

And, Madam Speaker, just for a bit of history: As you remember, when we came in here in almost 17 years ago, our elderly were getting a measly sum of about $50. With your support and all of us working together it gradually moved up to $200, $400, and now it is up to $550 a month. And it was so wonderful for us in the last two Christmases, which is a crucial time for our elderly, to take that opportunity to add an extra month to their December money. That meant a lot to them. And this is the commitment, Madam Speaker, of this People's Progressive Movement Government, to continue to look and deal with our elderly in a dignified manner.

Much has already been done. It is literally in the millions of dollars. But we do know that our responsibility for how we deal with the aged must be addressed systematically and on a sustainable basis. This is why we have been moving through improved facilities and programmes towards a national strategy. It is against this background that we accept the Motion, stressing that with all we are already doing best use must be made of existing resources. But we must also acknowledge that there are problems and those who are involved must not be spared the scrutiny.

I take no pride in having to say that it has been brought to my attention how badly some persons treat their older family members. Fortunately, this is not yet commonplace. Madam Speaker, I venture to say that we need to look much closer at proper legislation that will protect these the very vulnerable of our society from abuse sometimes by their own family members. Many of them own their own land, and through whatever opportunities were given to children and other family members when these people really needed it there was nothing for them to fall back on.

Such situations have to be looked into on the basis that neglect or abuse of the elderly will not be tolerated or excused, whether it is a lack of physical care or it is failing to take care of their debts; then, in some cases, coming along to claim property after the person passes on (which is what I alluded to earlier). Such practices occur, and they are unconscionable. I sincerely hope that starting today there will be no occasion for any further such report.

Let me in fact urge that, to the contrary, we reverse what seems in danger of becoming a social tendency to involve the elderly less and less to lose the many benefits that ought to come from continuing to call on them to play a useful role, as was alluded to by the mover and my other three Backbench colleagues.

Madam Speaker, I was touched and moved by the Third Elected Member for George Town. This seems to be a pattern of motions she has brought to this House which affects those that are at times vulnerable; those that are in need. As I listened to the support she got from my other three colleagues on the Backbench, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town and the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, Madam Speaker, the passion that came out really made my heart full, because they share the same feeling and passion that you, the Leader of Government Business and I have felt, who have been here going into 17 years now. We have always, with God's help, endeavoured our best to make life better for our elderly. This is what it is all about, and it is no less than the right thing to do.

A grey head is like money in the bank to a community that knows its values. Integrity and moral values have formed the foundation for our Cayman Islands and brought us to one of the most blessed and successful nations on earth. And once again, I take this opportunity to thank our elderly. We have been such a community, let us not lose it.

I know my Bodden Town colleague, the Third Elected Member, mentioned a couple of names in our district—Uncle Bill, as many of us called him. I also reflect on the 90-year olds in our district and we have a number of them: Ms. Vernice and other people whom I enjoy visiting; Mr. David and [his wife] Veta, in Gun Square; Mr. Frank Scotland, who never ceases to impress me, even at his age, with the knowledge that he has retained. We all know that he was the pioneer of electricity in the Cayman Islands many years ago. But he is still an active ham operator, Madam Speaker.

It is impressive just to sit down (you know we really need much more time than we have on occasions) to visit with them. Ms. Reina, 90 years; Ms.

Lorna, the mother of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town; just recently Ms. Julia Hydes from West Bay who we all know celebrated 100 years of dedication; Mr. Bert Watler, a former Serjeant-at-arms of this House. It is incredible when you visit with them and see the struggles they have been through but, Madam Speaker, still very positive and it behoves us all . . . There is Ms. Ariel Christian, partially blind but always positive and so glad when anyone visits her and in Cayman Brac, Ms. Ellen Yapp.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: I'm being informed that she was 100 [years old] just yesterday. Absolutely incredible!

When I visit her at the Senior Home in Cayman Brac it is amazing the love and feeling that she [possesses] it is just absolutely amazing.

My good friend, not quite in the 100th year, Captain Paul, just to listen to him on the radio and visit with him at his house it is amazing the knowledge Captain Paul can share with many of our young people, and I just wish more of us . . . And this is not to exhaust or go on and on with it, but when you leave from visiting with them you feel so upbeat.

There's a feeling in your heart like 'Wow this was Cayman, the Cayman that you and I and many of us were raised up in'.

Ms. Nell Connor, a real tourism ambassador: you go there and she just keeps talking and you just don't want to leave. There are so many more throughout all districts in our Islands that I feel sure this Motion will make things easier; it alleviate some of their difficulties. And as the mover said, it is not something that is going to cost lots of money, but the benefit which will be derived by our elderly . . . you cannot put a monetary amount on it.

Madam Speaker, as we continue to go forward, this Government is in the process of total renovation of the Golden Age Home in West Bay. There are plans for the East End Sunrise Centre, and I am pleased, as I mentioned to you yesterday, Madam Speaker, [that] we are close to finalizing a location for the North Side Senior Centre that you have championed, Madam Speaker. . .

The Speaker: Wow!

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: . . . for many, many years.

The Kirkconnell and Tibbetts' Senior Centre for our elderly in Cayman Brac. My colleague for Bodden Town spoke on the continued development of the Nurse Josie's Senior Centre at Bodden Town. I too would like to take this opportunity to thank that group. It is so touching when you go there and see them doing their arts and crafts and whatever. This is actually chaired by Ms. [Florence] "Flo" Wood, but she has a cadre of people behind her; people who can relate to the way they were raised in assisting the elderly and keeping them proud and dignified; and our continued funding and assistance to The Pines Retirement Home in George Town.

Madam Speaker, the proposed commission should enable us to properly assess and plan for the needs of older persons and think ahead with regard to the next age cohort and the realities they will face—and some of those people will be us here, Madam Speaker!

We continue to do this in light of the economic downturn throughout the world, and eventually it is coming to the Cayman Islands, but we will always put our elderly as a priority of this PPM Government. I look forward to working with my colleague legislators on this and making life better for our elderly. We should do no less. They have built these Islands and it is time for us now to support them and make life as easy as possible for them in transition.

Once again, Madam Speaker, I take the opportunity on behalf of my Government to offer full support to this Motion and to credit and say how timely it was by the mover and seconder, and all of those who have so far spoken on it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover wish to exercise her right of reply?

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I am going to be quite brief. I would like to say to the Honourable Minister, thanks for his commitment. Not only did he say, yes, but he went at length to offer ways and suggestions, in particular, having a national strategy for the whole question of the aged. I think that is very, very good.

I also would like to thank my colleagues for supporting this, particularly the Fourth Elected Member for George Town who ably assists me in whatever I do. He is always there with me, for me, by me, and not only protects me from some of the others, but—

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Not the others in here [laughter] but he never says no to these sorts of things. He is always willing to do research. Also, Madam Speaker, it is not just that, I think he is touched by it. He has spent 30 years in the Lions, one of our noble service clubs that does a lot for the elderly. He understands this quite well, therefore he knows, in particular, the whole of George Town and where the vulnerabilities are. I want to thank him so much for always being there with me.

Madam Speaker, I just want to say to the Honourable Minister, in terms of when we are looking at the commission, that there are a lot of elderly persons who have difficulty even with the $550 that we give them in acquiring medication for some of their illnesses. Even if they are on CINICO, I know for a fact that some of the medicines are not at the hospital and they have to go to private pharmacies to get them and they are quite expensive. I've gone with them and assisted them and they are quite expensive. So, research on that is something that could be a part of what the commission can do.

Madam Speaker, I also want to say that although the Government gives $550, this is what the Government can afford at this time. This is not what really should be given to those persons. That too, Madam Speaker, I would ask that the commission look at to see whether or not with the next wave of economic success that we could look at increasing that. You will notice I said, 'with the next wave of economic success' because they would have had scientific information on what the cap or the limit should be.

Madam Speaker, this commission will allow public/private partnership and that is what we wish for the private sector to be in terms of social responsibility. I think that the commission itself will broaden the relationship and input by the private sector.

In my final point I would like to say that we ourselves could look at tourism—and I'm sure that the Minister of Tourism has expressed this in some way—that some of these same seniors we have, those who are more affable and quick on their feet could be tourism ambassadors in our country. They could be at the airport, the port, we could find different things, a whole cadre of them that are hired by the Government in order for them to be tourism ambassadors, because that is a pillar of our economy we really need to ensure that it remains top quality and is strengthened.

Madam Speaker, [Hurricanes] Ivan and Paloma have taken away a lot from the aged and we are lucky that we have not lost more of those people. But we have to give them hope. This is where the change is, here in the hallowed halls; this is where it is. So, we have to give them hope that they can live out their next twenty years.

I have been fortunate enough to be a part of a family that has produced a centenarian, and I feel great to know that it is part of my genealogy to have that in my family. I am so happy! At the same time, Madam Speaker, if we want people to live to 100 years we also have to make the provisions for them and this commission, which is to facilitate the standard of living and quality of life for the aged, is certainly going to be a wonderful thing.

I want to thank the Government for accepting and thank you for your patience, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that this Government consider the setting up of a Commission for the Aged whose initial remit shall be a scientific socio-economic study of the elderly resulting in an Action Plan and legislation to bring hope for the future of Seniors in the Cayman Islands and give them opportunities to live with dignity and not fall through the safety net into abject poverty and humiliation;

AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED that, due to the current economic meltdown and likely recession, the Government consider revisiting the retirement age with a view to deciding that retirees who are trainable and able and have special expertise are allowed to remain in the workforce by way of contract in both the private and public sectors.

All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Sex Offender Register Bill, 2009—Consultation Draft

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Sex Offender Register Bill, 2009, as a discussion draft for public circulation.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Yes, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much.

Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the honourable Second Official Member for assisting in the preparation of this Bill. I need not go into the history and background of it.

And just to read from the Memorandum of Objects and Reasons: "This Bill seeks to establish a Sex Offender Registry which will manage and maintain a register of sex offenders to be known as the Sex Offender Register.

"It provides for the requirement of notification by sex offenders of personal information upon registration such as full name date of birth, residence and place of employment; and thereafter the re-registration of the sex offender on the anniversary of the initial registration for the pre- scribed registration period. There is also a requirement to report and notify the Registry of any subsequent change to any of the personal information provided.

“The Bill also provides for the taking of photographs, fingerprints and DNA samples at registration.

“Provision is made for the notification of the Registry of any intention to travel outside of the Islands. There is a requirement to notify the Registry where a sex offender intends to travel within the Islands but away from his usual place of abode or residence for any period in excess of 24 hours.

“Provision is made for restricted access to the Register.”

And just to add to this: there has been some consideration of a suggestion made that it not only be limited to sex offenders but for other categories of serious offences in this Register, which I am made to understand is similar to what happens in other territories. We would look at having this as a public discussion draft out for 60 days. Thank you very much.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received no notice of statements by Honourable Ministers or Members of the Cabinet.

That concludes the orders of the day.
Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: On a matter of procedure, Madam Speaker.

Point of Procedure

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, it seems that the Government has some legislation. We understood that, [but] why are we not having more than just this item of business for today?

The Speaker: It was my understanding, Honourable Leader of the Opposition—and I am certain that the Leader of Government Business can clarify this—that the persons who were moving the two Bills and the Private Member’s Motion were not ready for that to happen today.

Does that satisfy your [question], or would you like the Leader of Government Business to answer you?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, we proceeded . . . I do not know if we had a business committee today or when we had it. Maybe it was on Friday when I was not here. I do not know. But I would have thought that some business should have been ready because we are cutting ourselves short in relation to certain business that should be done before the House is dissolved. Anyway, Madam Speaker, I am not here to hold up the Government, I am only trying to help.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, there are several Bills which have not been put on a Business Paper. They are awaiting completion. It is imperative that they are dealt with during this last meeting before the House is dissolved. They are being worked on and we anticipate the vast majority of them to be down to Members before the week is out.

There is also the Referendum Bill which is coming to Cabinet tomorrow and then on to Members. And there is one Private Member’s Motion left, and the mover was not quite ready for delivery today. There are also another few Bills which are on Business Paper, but these were not ready to be delivered today.

So, I am going to propose that we will get the business to Members as swiftly as we possibly can and will resume, after adjourning today, on Friday morning at which time we will gain consensus as to which of the Bills are to be dealt with, and will continue on to conclude this meeting by next week. We will have to work with it in that fashion.

While I know that we are going to have to suspend Standing Orders, what I would not like is to bring the Bills down and Members do not have an opportunity to peruse in order for them to give fair debate. So, Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of this honourable House until Friday, 10 am.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, is there any intention by the Government to work late, because, if so, they need to make Members know so everyone can set their timeframe.

I am still interested in the matter of the Order Paper, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: What matter, Honourable Leader of the Opposition? [pause]

The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 10 am on Friday. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 2.18 pm the House stood adjourned until 10 am Friday, 20 February 2009.

OFFICIAL HANSARD REPORT
MONDAY
23 FEBRUARY 2009
10.40 AM
Fourth Sitting

The Speaker: I will ask the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to say Prayers.

PRAYERS

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Eternal God, our heavenly Father, we are gathered here in this place of great decisions to do business for our people. As you have directed the affairs of men throughout time, we seek your guidance today. What we say here, what we do here, ever let it be for what is right, for what is pure, and what is acceptable in your sight. These matters, these constitutional matters, Lord, have hounded us for years. Now, Lord, you know the desires of our hearts. You know where we stand. You know our weaknesses, you know our strengths. We know that in your word it says that there is a power of darkness, for the Devil moves to and fro on this earth and so we desire your wisdom now that the Devil be denied and what is done be an extent of glorifying you by lifting our people in a more secure country.

Help us, O Lord, to do what is right; say what is right. Even so, Lord, let it be. We ask, O Lord, that you would bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. And so we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet, the Opposition and other Members of the Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for in Thy great Name's sake.

As we say the Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.
And so Lord, bless us and keep us, make your face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us. Lift up the light of your countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings resumed at 10.45 am

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Speaker: I have received apologies for late arrival from the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce, and from the [Second and Third Elected Members] for the district of West Bay.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received no notice of statements [from] Honourable Ministers or Members of the Cabinet.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

Suspension of Standing Order 24(5)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.
I move the suspension of Standing Order 24(5) to allow two Government Motions to be dealt with during this Meeting.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 24(5) be suspended in order to allow two Government Motions to be dealt with during this Meeting. Those in favour please say Aye . . .

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, there are two suspensions on the Order Paper this morning. These are fundamental items before us. I hasten to say that we are not going to object to either one.

When we were the Government, we had to suspend Standing Orders often because we had so many crises to deal with. I hasten to say also, the Opposition then (the Government now) saw no value in it; they gave us no pity, nor did they give us any support. And it was used against us. But this is Government. This is how it happens.

People have come to me asking, What are you going to do? I am going to do what is best for the people of these Islands, and that is [to] carry through these arrangements today in as orderly a manner as possible and in the best way suitable, ensuring that our people have a constitution that helps them.

The Speaker: Thank you, Honourable Leader of the Opposition .

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 24(5) suspended to allow two Government Motions to be dealt with during this Meeting.

The Speaker: Instead of suspending proceedings for us to break and get back into the Chamber . . . I think all Members have received a copy of the addendum to the Order Paper.

Madam Clerk, could we just hand out the addendum in order to allow us to go straight into the debate on this Motion?

We will remain in our seats until the Serjeant returns with the addendum to the Order Paper.

[pause while Government Motion No. 13/08-08 and the Addendum Order Paper were circulated]

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Government Motion No. 13/08-09—Referendum on Constitutional Modernisation

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I beg to move Government Motion No. 13/08-09, entitled Referendum on Constitutional Modernisation. With your permission, I will read the Motion:

WHEREAS the Government announced in December of 2007 that it intended to restart the Constitutional Modernisation process;

AND WHEREAS the Government published its initial proposals for Constitutional Modernisation on 12th January 2008, in two companion documents entitled: “The Cayman Islands Constitution: A Reflection of Who We Are”;

AND WHEREAS since the publication by the Government of its initial proposals for Constitutional Modernisation on 12th January 2008, the Constitutional Modernisation Secretariat established by the Government has held and/or facilitated dozens of meetings, public and private, hosted radio talk shows and television call-in shows to promote public feedback and education on the issues involved in Constitutional Modernisation;

AND WHEREAS as a result of the extensive public education and consultation exercise carried out since January 2008 the Government has received and considered public feedback and concerns;

AND WHEREAS on 22nd May 2008 the Government published a new document entitled “Revised Proposals for Constitutional Modernisation”;

AND WHEREAS a constitution delegation “the Cayman Islands Constitution Delegation” made up of the Government, the Opposition, the Human Rights Committee, the Chamber of Commerce, the Cayman Ministers Association and the Seventh Day Adventist Cayman Islands Conference held two rounds of talks with the United Kingdom Government in Grand Cayman from 29th September to 2nd October 2008 and from 13th to 16th of January 2009 and a final round at Lancaster House in London in the United Kingdom from 3rd to 5th February 2009;

AND WHEREAS a political agreement was reached between the Cayman Islands Constitution Delegation and the Government of the United Kingdom on the 5th February 2009 and a draft Constitution was received from the United Kingdom Government on 10th February 2009 and laid on the table of the Legislative Assembly on 11th February 2009;

AND WHEREAS the Government committed by way of its manifesto during the election campaign leading up to the 2005 General Elections to the holding of a referendum on any proposed changes to the Cayman Islands Constitution;

AND WHEREAS section 29(2) of the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order 1972 provides that a law may make provisions for the holding of a referendum amongst persons qualified as electors in elections to the Legislative Assembly, on a question declared by resolution, adopted by a majority of the elected members of the Legislative Assembly, to be a matter of national importance and specified in such law;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the following question be declared to be a matter of national importance:

“Do you approve the Draft Constitution which was agreed by the Cayman Islands Constitution Delegation and the Government of the United Kingdom on 5th February 2009 and tabled in the Legislative Assembly of the Cayman Islands on 11th February 2009?”

AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the said question be specified in a Bill and brought by the Government to this Legislative Assembly for debate and disposal in accordance with the provisions of section 29(2) of the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order 1972.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, while the Standing Orders allow for debate on motions in general, the fact of the matter is that the Government Motion and the Bill are inextricably linked. I will be dealing in my contribution with both of them together when the Bill is tabled.

Others are free.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, I do believe that you need to speak to the Motion in order that Members may reply and debate your contribution at this time. Then you can link it into your Bill at a later point.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I will certainly bow to your suggestion, but the Motion itself is self-explanatory. And reading it, it is crystal clear. But I hear what you have suggested.

Madam Speaker, the Motion outlines the various steps this Government has taken to come to the point where the Government Motion is before us and the Referendum Bill to follow.

The Constitution itself is not the concentrated effort in this Motion; it is simply a matter of allowing the Government Motion to be approved and, hence, allowing a Referendum Bill to be brought and debated in the Legislative Assembly. The Referendum Bill is the first of its kind since the 1972 Constitution was brought into force and, certainly, it is not only a very important day for this country but it is one in which I hope all those who are on the list of electors pay close attention to and make sure they are in an informed position by the date of the referendum.

The Government Motion itself resolves that the question that I read in the Motion be declared to be a matter of national importance and thus allowed to be the question in the Referendum. The question itself be placed on the ballot paper. There are other interests who would seek variations to the question that is in the Government Motion. We have listened for long to all concerned.

Madam Speaker, we have had to make some decisions which were not easy decisions but, nevertheless, decisions which had to be made. Madam Speaker, we believe firmly that given all of the circumstances and all of the contributions made by the many stakeholders who have aired their views, that this Government Motion is the best that can be done and, certainly, it is in the best interests of the people of this country.

So I commend the Motion, Madam Speaker, and if there are others who debate, then I certainly will respond.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I was concerned that we were having the resolution at the same time that we had the Bill for a Referendum here. I am concerned somewhat by the committee stage amendment which says that—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, that will be taken at the time the Bill is being debated and not at the time of the Motion, please.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I am not going to debate that. But the motion for the law cannot work unless it has that particular section in it. I am not even objecting to it. I am drawing reference to it. There is a committee stage amendment before us, which has been tabled, and which says that there should be not more than 50 per cent—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the Member moving that amendment has not introduced it as yet. So would you please just move back to the actual Motion?

Thank you.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I do not know why you are trying to give me a hard time on it because I am only drawing reference to it and I believe I can do that under Orders. I cannot debate it. I am not going to debate it from that perspective.

The Speaker: I have asked, would you please move on from that item to the Motion?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I know what you have asked, but I do believe that I have a right to draw reference to it and that is what I did. And I do not want the listening public to believe that I do not have that right, Madam Speaker, because I do.

Madam Speaker, the Referendum Motion which will bring in the Referendum Law is one that is a first time for these Islands. I have said in a press conference, and I have said at a meeting, that we do not intend to make the Constitution the centrepiece of the election campaign.

The House will be dissolved in a matter of weeks. The election campaign must be about the issues that affect the people of these Islands. From our perspective, [that is] the economy, the economy, the economy, crime, how people are faring and the Government actions or inactions. The expenditure of funds must be the main discussions of the election campaign, amongst others, of course.

I was not a fan of a referendum. I have paid attention to referenda in other territories. In our governmental makeup, the Westminster form of Government, there have been referendums on matters such as countries going to independence. But I have been convinced that it is a way of involving the people in what they want.

The Constitution is important. Madam Speaker, we want the Constitution to be one that can do, or will do what we all intended. To get there, if this is the way, then so be it.

I was concerned on the matters before us. As the Leader of Government Business said, they are all intertwined—so linked that we cannot separate them. If you have a small turnout, the will of a majority would not be determined if you had 50 per cent of 7,000 people voting, because you might only have 3,500 people agreeing to the referendum.

However, Madam Speaker (and this was drawn to my attention by many people in the community), we know that the interest in general elections here has always run high. Our people have not failed to come out at all times. I do not think it has dropped to any less than 75 per cent or 80 per cent. We have always had a high turnout. In some constituencies, it has been a 90 per cent turnout.

I know West Bay runs high at times, over 80 per cent. So, I do not believe . . . mind you, I would have preferred that something else were done just in case something happens and we do not get that turnout, because what we want in the end is a Constitution that is agreed by the majority. But we hope and pray that nothing untoward will happen—no inclement weather or any such thing that will stop people from getting to the polls—and that there will be the usual high turnout. I believe there will be that high turnout because the issues are too big. And the people are waiting their turn.

Madam Speaker, the Motion before us and the Referendum Bill are so linked that you can hardly debate one—I will agree with the Leader of Government Business—without trespassing on the other. I intend to stop here and say (to ease your mind, Madam Speaker) that we want the debate and the matters here to be dealt with as expeditiously as possible so that if we need to get other business done we can do it, and we do not need to take all day on these matters. So the less you interrupt me the quicker we will get business done.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition I would not have to interrupt you if you were abiding by the procedures as I interpret them.

Does any other Member wish to speak?
[pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

It seems that there need not be any lengthy debate on the Motion itself. I do not think there was any specific issue brought forward by the Leader of the Opposition which required a specific reply that would not be fleshed out in the debate on the Bill itself. So, Madam Speaker, I just wish to thank Members for their support of the Government Motion.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the following question be declared to be a matter of national importance: “Do you approve the Draft Constitution which was agreed by the Cayman Islands Constitution Delegation and the Government of the United Kingdom on 5th February, 2009 and tabled in the Legislative Assembly of the Cayman Islands on 11th February, 2009?” AND BE IT NOW FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the said question be specified in a Bill and brought by the Government to this Legislative Assembly for debate and disposal in accordance with the provisions of section 29(2) of the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order 1972.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. Government Motion 13/08-09 is duly passed.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, just for safety sake, I am not so sure how I heard. I would like a division please.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

Division No. 9/08-09

Suspension of Standing Order 46(4)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 46(4) suspended to enable to The Referendum (Constitutional Modernisation) Bill, 2009, to be read a second time.

SECOND READING

Referendum (Constitutional Modernisation) Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Referendum (Constitutional Modernisation) Bill, 2009, second reading.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When this Government decided to give high priority to bringing closure to the protracted issue of Constitutional Modernisation, we took a conscious decision. It was that we would take a fundamentally different approach from what had transpired previously.

Instead of leaving it practically to Government to determine the form and substance of our new Constitution, we considered it of paramount importance that the people's voices should be heard and that the people should ultimately decide whether a new Constitution was indeed desirable for the Cayman Islands.

The newly released draft of the proposed new Constitution is the product of the most extensive public consultations ever held in this country. Every opportunity and avenue was provided by the Constitutional Modernisation Secretariat for Caymanians of all walks of life and, indeed, residents to fully express their views on the subject and to state clearly what they wanted and did not want to see in a new Constitution. Their views were noted carefully. The information was collated and later acted upon.

The Government did not stop there. After sounding out the population we then allowed the people through carefully chosen representatives to participate at the highest level of the process, namely, the formal negotiations with the United Kingdom. To ensure that the people had a voice at the table, the Government invited organisations representing a wide cross-section of the community to sit on the national negotiating team along with the Government and the official Opposition.

I hasten to say, Madam Speaker, that at the end of the day the Government had five representatives, the Opposition had five representatives, and there were NGOs from the Cayman Islands Chamber of Commerce, representatives from the Human Rights Committee, the Cayman Ministers' Association and the Cayman Islands Mission of Seventh Day Adventists.

Madam Speaker, the Chamber of Commerce represented a broad cross-section of businesses and they did their own internal surveys with their membership. The churches did their widespread consultation. The Secretariat did what it had to do. The Opposition had their consultation and the Government had myriads of small, large and medium size meetings with various stakeholders. Against this backdrop, it is reasonable Madam Speaker—more than reasonable—to describe this Draft Constitution now before the country as a "people's Constitution".

Madam Speaker, our people can feel a true sense of ownership because it can be said that the new Constitution was fashioned by the people for the people. It was not imposed by the Government as so often happens to be the case elsewhere. In fact, this Government's role in the entire process was largely that of a facilitator.

Even when we introduced the process in January 2008 with the two documents that are referred to in the Government Motion, Madam Speaker, those two documents were simply the starting point from which to get the electorate involved. We managed the process to allow full participation by the people. I am of the firm belief that Caymanians can take pride in what we have accomplished together.

Through this Bill that I am bringing before the Legislative Assembly today the Government is moving to give further expression to the voice of the people. This Bill seeks authorisation for the holding of a referendum on the 20th day of May to allow the voting public to determine if we should proceed with adopting the draft new Constitution as a supreme law of our land.

Madam Speaker, I just want to pause for a second to speak to that. Even when we were in London, many of us were receiving text messages dealing with specific issues and parts of the Constitution that we were debating. Even up to this morning, some of us are receiving messages or getting telephone calls. Madam Speaker, I dare say that if we continue the process until next year this time that would still be happening.

The simple explanation for that . . . and I am not blaming anyone. Not for one minute am I trying to castigate anyone. But the simple explanation for that, Madam Speaker, is that there are many people who are interested in not only the new Constitution, speaking generally, but in specific areas they have their own specific views and they want to make sure that those views are heard.

Madam Speaker, the Government is saddled, and has been saddled with the situation where we have to do every single thing possible by way of taking all positions into consideration, taking that mix of expressions and views and making one document that satisfies the majority of the people.

Madam Speaker, if we take two individuals or two groups of stakeholders, or two entities, two organisations, two anything, it is almost physically impossible that every single section of that Constitution at its stage now, or when a new Constitution comes into force, that both of those entities will agree with every single section in the Constitution. People need to take a grip of that and appreciate that. It is not going to happen.

I dare say, Madam Speaker, that if we took the 15 elected Members, and even if we included the three Official Members of this legislature, and each of us were to go through the Constitution word for word and give our specific views, there would be no two of us that were exact in those views. Madam Speaker, I am taking a few minutes to speak to this issue because it is important that people appreciate that fact.

So, if the Government listens to every single view that is expressed by an individual or an entity, and makes an attempt to get that into the Constitution, then all we do is take that into consideration and wait until the next morning when people who are opposed to that view hear that. Then they are going to come back and say, You cannot put that in. You have to take that out. This is what you have to have in.

If we just allow that situation to continue on, and on, and on, and on, and on, we will never have a new Constitution. Again, Madam Speaker, I say people need to appreciate that. We have extended the process as long as we could have. We extended deadlines more than once. And we are taking it to the point now where the people will have the final say by way of this Bill that is before the House.

Madam Speaker, when we had intentions initially to hold the referendum, the initial thought at that time was May of last year. It is now going to be held in May of this year. While people may not pay any special attention to that and some of them will say, Well, make it stay until next year—whenever—until we get it right . . . Madam Speaker, what is right? Do you know what right is? Right is what is right in your mind, for you! That is what right is. As I said, we have to take all of those thoughts and make one document with the thought being to satisfy as many of the majority as we possibly can.

Madam Speaker, just to close off on that point, the fact of the matter is that even to this day—meaning today—I have heard people say, So, and so, and so, and so, and if you don't change it to so, and so, and so, I am not supporting the Constitution. And that person may very well support the vast majority of points in the Constitution. Madam Speaker, I would urge those individuals to re-think their position because I want them to know that to satisfy them there will be others who, if they had the same frame of mind, would be saying, Since you put that in, I am not supporting the Constitution either.

We have to appreciate the process, Madam Speaker. And we have to understand. . . I believe it is fair to say that what we have achieved—and I say “we”, Madam Speaker, I am claiming no glory for this Government. “We”, meaning the people of this country. That is who I am referring to when I say what we have achieved—what the people of this country have achieved, Madam Speaker. And it has been said without it being a public utterance, but just a statement of fact. What we have achieved is a Constitution based on our relationship with the United Kingdom as a UK Overseas Territory. We have achieved a Draft Constitution that is better than any other Overseas Territory including all of them! The Brits themselves acknowledged that.

Do you know why, Madam Speaker? Because our arguments were so persuasive that we massaged them and they slipped a little in their chairs, and did not even realise when they were slipping and they went a little bit further than they thought they should have. And by the time they realised it, they had already agreed. That's why! And that is not to do with me or any one of my colleagues, that's to do with us. And they were actually appreciative of the way the three rounds of negotiations went.

Madam Speaker, you were there. Several of us who are here today were there. In fact, the majority of us were there. There were points raised. The Government had an initial position. The Human Rights Committee brought another position, which we had not thought about. There were aspiration rights which are now in this Draft Constitution which were not included originally. Not because we did not want to, but no one professes to know it all, hence, the all-inclusive process.

The Opposition brought points to bear. And we worked the situation out to where we found consensus that we could agree on. The Government brought their own points. The Minister's Association brought their own points. The Chamber of Commerce brought their points. And we worked through that entire process with the leader of the UK team, Mr. Ian Hendry, facilitating the process, and with Professor Jeffery Jowell, as the Government's constitutional advisor assisting us. All of those efforts and all of those skill sets and with best endeavours that is what we worked through, Madam Speaker.

And, Madam Speaker, people cannot expect—or I should say, people should not expect for us now to rehash that whole process again. It just is not right. A tremendous amount of resources have been poured into this exercise, both financial and otherwise. I want to give at this point in time (because I do not often say it, and sometimes I wonder if they think I do not care)

. . . But my colleagues, Madam Speaker, every single one of them spent countless hours, Saturdays and Sundays, nights, going through this entire exercise airing their views and doing all that we could to bring about a document that everyone can be satisfied that, while it is not perfect for many, is the best that together we could all bring. And that is what we have.

Madam Speaker, this Draft Constitution is meant to replace the existing 1972 Constitution which, as certain recent experiences show, no longer effectively addresses the present needs and aspirations of the Cayman Islands. The proposed referendum is historic. As I said before, it is the first ever to be held in the Cayman Islands. It represents democracy in action, democracy (I dare say) being taken to the highest level.

As you are aware, attempts have been made since 2001 . . . in fact, there were other attempts before if we go back. If I remember correctly, there was an attempt in 1991 to modernise the Constitution. But the most recent (starting in 2001) was in response to a request from the United Kingdom Government to all of its Overseas Territories. And this request was contained in a White Paper which was published by the UK Government in 1999. It was entitled "Partnership for Progress and Prosperity." That document set out the basis for a new relationship between the United Kingdom and its Overseas Territories in the context of a changing global environment.

Much has happened since then. Most of the other UK Overseas Territories have completed the process and have already enacted modern constitutions. Ours was not complete. So Constitutional Modernisation was one of the items of unfinished business this Government inherited when we assumed office in May 2005. It had been abandoned after it had been started, and it remained in limbo until the Government decided to see the process to its end.

Madam Speaker, we knew all of the difficulties. We wrestled with it. I am going to lay it open. We wrestled with it for quite some time, Madam Speaker, because we realised that to do justice and to see this thing through to the end, the timing was not going to be the best. There was a general election due in May 2009, and there were those who consciously said we were not acting in our best interests politically. They may have been right, Madam Speaker. I do not know. What I do know is that we did what was right. And we have done what is right. We know that what we have done is what is right.

Now, Madam Speaker, the people will decide. That too is right, even though it is risky.

Madam Speaker, you were a part of us from the beginning. I am not trying to draw you into anything. I am just saying that you know for a fact that a big part of us getting together was doing what was right, not just playing the game of politics as is usual. So, Madam Speaker, we are here where we are.

The importance of a Constitution, and specifically this new Constitution, lies in the fact that the Constitution happens to be the supreme law of a country. Seen from this perspective, Constitutional Modernisation was an issue with obvious far-reaching implications for the future of this country. If I am to be very frank, it was an urgent matter which we as a country could not afford to postpone or ignore any longer. That is why this Government gave high priority to restarting the process and finishing the unfinished business of updating the country's Constitution.

Today, Madam Speaker, as I reflect on the experiences of the past year I am pleased to say that we have just about completed the task. We (the Government) are satisfied that we have fulfilled our responsibility by ensuring that the Cayman Islands has the Draft of a modern Constitution which is long overdue, a Constitution which represents a vast improvement over the existing 1972 Constitution. It is now up to the people to give the green light for this new Constitution to be implemented on their behalf.

Madam Speaker, while it is not a perfect document, the Draft represents the best results that could be reached at this particular point in our history. It is based on a national consensus involving all the stakeholders who sat with Government at the negotiating table, with the exception of the Human Rights Committee. It also has the concurrence of the United Kingdom Government. And this is an important consideration, Madam Speaker, because the UK—and we have to appreciate this—is an equal partner with us in the process. And besides, the people of the Cayman Islands have made it abundantly clear that they wish for us to remain a United Kingdom Overseas Territory.

So far, the Chamber, the CMA, and the Seventh Day Adventist Churches have endorsed the Draft Constitution and recommended it to their respective constituencies. Madam Speaker, I trust that my understanding this morning from the Leader of the Opposition was that he was saying the same on behalf of the Opposition.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The fact that the Opposition has signed on—and I just want to emphasise that they did so of their own free will after we sat around the negotiating table—clearly suggests to any right-thinking person that just as all of us at the end of the day they concluded that they could live with the new Constitution even though they did not get it exactly as they wanted it.

But then, Madam Speaker, no other stakeholder—including the Government—got everything that they wanted. Such is the nature of negotiations which always produce agreements based on compromise.

Madam Speaker, this is exactly what happened in this case. During the negotiations the Opposition repeatedly called for politics to be taken out of the Constitution. And for its part, the Government committed all along to keeping politics out of the process. That is why we repeatedly made it clear that the new Constitution was not about the Government alone, but, rather, about the country as a whole. We took the high road and placed the interests of the country first because, Madam Speaker, as I said before, it was the right thing to do.

History will be the judge. But I believe that history will be kind to us in that regard.

Madam Speaker, this new Constitution represents a good deal for the country. It safeguards our heritage, upholds our cherished values, gives us a greater say in the running of our country, and strengthens our relationship with the United Kingdom. It improves the system of Government and makes the Government more accountable to the people. It is a unique Constitution because its scope goes beyond what the other UK Overseas Territories have obtained through their respective constitutional modernisation processes and exercises.

Considering that the Constitution is a living document, what we have represents a good foundation on which we can build our future as the country continues to evolve. We have a lot to gain, and really nothing to lose from this approach.

With regard to the Bill before us, Cabinet approved on 16 February a paper on a Draft Referendum (Constitutional Modernisation) Bill for transmission down to the Legislative Assembly for debate and eventual passage into Law.

This Bill, as we are all aware, replaces another Bill which was circulated to Members earlier on last year. This new Bill is in accordance with section 29(2) of the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Orders 1972 through 2008. This section 29(2) allows for a law to make provision for the holding of a referendum amongst persons qualified as electors in elections to the Legislative Assembly on a question declared by resolution and adopted by the majority of the elected Members to be a matter of national importance and specified in such law. So, the passage of this Bill will allow for the holding of a national referendum on the issue of constitutional reform in the Cayman Islands.

The intended purpose of the referendum is to provide a means by which the Cayman Islands Government and the United Kingdom Government may assess the views of electors on the agreed Draft Constitution tabled in the Legislative Assembly on 11 February. The holding of this referendum, as I mentioned earlier, is integral to the process of Constitutional Modernisation which was formally re-launched in January last year.

Major features of this Bill are as follows: The Bill allows for the holding of a referendum with the procedures set out as I read in section 29(2) of the existing Constitution. The Bill will cause the holding of a referendum upon direction received by the Governor in Cabinet. The Bill provides, for the purposes of guiding persons concerned, a referendum shall be held about whether electors agree with proposals for constitutional modernisation, particularly the Draft Constitution agreed at Lancaster House in London, 5 February last and tabled on 11 February in the Legislative Assembly. The question I read in the Motion.

The Bill also makes provision in respect of the ballot paper, the form which is prescribed in Schedule 1 which provides specifically that the Governor in Cabinet may, by order, add items to part 2 of that Schedule at any time before the issue of the notice appointing a day for the holding of the referendum. The Bill confers entitlement to vote in the referendum upon those persons who are entitled to vote as electors in an electoral district.

Madam Speaker, the Bill prescribes functions of the Supervisor of Elections, the Deputy Supervisor and various other officials for the purpose of the referendum, save for any modification of function, which is outlined specifically in the Bill. It enables the appointment of persons to observe the conduct of the referendum, the verification of the ballot paper accounts, and the counting of votes.

Madam Speaker, there are other areas of the Bill itself which are specific. For now I will go no further with the introduction. I certainly commend the Bill. I will wait to hear what other Members have to say and then I will respond.
Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak . . . The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to make a contribution and offer my wholehearted support to a Bill for a Law to make provision for the holding of a referendum on the proposals to modernise the Constitution of the Cayman Islands; and to make provisions for incidental and connected matters.

I believe this to be one of the more significant and meaningful pieces of legislation that [has] come to the Floor of this honourable House during this administration. The process to modernise our Constitution has been a long and arduous journey. I dare say that many Caymanians young and old have been bombarded with information and talk of constitutional matters over the last decade in particular [to where] some of them know the Constitution inside and out better than some of us in here. That is a good thing.

On the other hand, some of have really taken up the cause and will simply leave it to legislators or be persuaded by others as to how they should go. I for one feel as if all the hard work, the extensive hours of preparation of debating, preparing, negotiating in some form or the other, has been time well spent. Never before in this country has there been a more extensive public relations programme on any item. But I also believe that there is no better topic for the amount of time and money than that same document that we call our Constitution.

I am grateful to the people of George Town and the entire country for the opportunity to have been here during the last three-plus years and having had the opportunity to take part in the process and to be here today to see a Referendum Bill being tabled—an historic moment, to say the least.

The referendum is a tool by which Government puts the power where it should be—in the hands of the electorate. Many have said how appreciative they are of the process and they appreciate Government taking the chance. Many see it as taking a big chance in allowing the public to make these decisions for themselves. I believe that any Government worth its salt should be in a position to explain to the public what needs to be done and give the public the power to make those decisions on their own.

One of the main cornerstones of the PPM campaign in 2004/5 was the promise to everyone—including those who did not support the party, Madam Speaker—that referendum would be our legacy; that referendum would be a tool that we would ensure the public would get. Like many other things that we promised, we have come to deliver yet again.

Regardless of what we believe as legislators—and we do support the Draft Constitution and the thought of introducing a referendum—you take the chance to depend sometimes on whichever direction the wind blows at any particular time on any topic. The public can blow hot or cold. They can either accept or reject and sometimes not in the best interests of the Government. And I dare say at times the general public can be persuaded to do things not in their best interest as well.

Madam Speaker, we have to ensure that we do our best to educate the general public that the decisions they make, when given this type of power, will always be in the best interests of the country and not necessarily in the best interests of special interest groups who may at the time have the ability to persuade, to sweet talk and otherwise, emotive subjects and topics and help to persuade the general public in one direction or the other.

Madam Speaker, we encourage our people to take time to listen to all of the views during the process of putting this Constitution together to the point where we now have a Draft Constitution. I dare say that there were times when things were uttered that at the time of their utterance we may have believed that they were not necessarily the best thing. But when you take the time to understand and [when] the topics are articulated properly many times one can have a change of mind, or you can find something in what may have seemed an impossible suggestion. You find a way to pull something positive out of it. And many of those things have happened during the passage of time with this Constitution.

The point I am making, Madam Speaker, is that we need to listen. But we need to understand things for ourselves and understand the ramifications of our decisions so that we are simply not persuaded by the sweet talk and make our decision based on what other people say rather than on what we took time to understand.

I am grateful. I am proud. I would say that having been able to travel to London for the third round of talks and to listen to the Member in the UK Parliament responsible for the Cayman Islands and the Overseas Territories was a very enlightening and important moment in my life. I was able to witness that day when she spoke the words that we had reached an agreement and that the Cayman Islands would have a new Constitution.

I do not know what the future holds for me or anyone else; but that moment will never be taken away from me. I dare say that many of my colleagues at the time, some nearly drawn to tears understanding that all the hard work, the many sacrifices, the many arguments, had been for a worthwhile cause, and all the hard work had not been in vain.

Again, I am grateful for the opportunity and the many experiences that I have had over the last couple of years dealing with the Constitution matter. I am grateful to my Government that they had the wisdom—even when they were in Opposition—to invite NGOs to be a part of the constitutional process. At the time this was questioned by many. Even the inclusion of the [Conference] of the Seventh Day Adventists in addition to the Cayman Minister's Association was questioned by many people as to why that was necessary. But each day as I sat and listened to the contributions of every one of those NGOs, I understood that they all played a distinct and important role.

The inclusion of the Seventh Day Adventists in the delegation at the negotiation table was, I believe, an excellent idea and brought much to the table from a very large portion of our community whose views were well articulated by those who represented them.

Comments were made in my presence by people from the UK delegation that saw the inclusion of these NGOs as novel. It simply had not been done anywhere before. But at the same time, they acknowledged the tremendous benefit it brought to the table where we simply did not get political views from politicians all the time, that civil society was well represented and they stood firm. They stood their ground and they understood the art of negotiation and compromise and were able to help us to help the Government team to understand a little bit better what their constituents wanted in a Constitution.

I can only say that while the decision to include them in the first instance was when current members of Government were in the Opposition at that time, it is clear to see that these individuals had the interest of this country at heart and were forward in their thinking, preparing the country for what was to come. Although many people at the time did not understand the importance of that inclusion.

The Constitution is clearly and truly the people's Constitution. The wide level of consultation that took place is truly represented in the final document. Many of us have had some moments during this passage when we ourselves had doubts as to where we were going and where we would end up.

I will say to you, Madam Speaker, that I saw many depressing moments, many depressing days, especially during what I considered unnecessary delays in the process. But what I will also acknowledge is that even during those darker days when it looked as if the process might be derailed or abandoned completely, that many good things, many new ideas came out of those delays because it gave us time to reflect on a lot of things. It gave us time to examine our own ambitions and the goals that we set and what we thought was right at the time.

We took advantage of those delays. In every instance we were able to add something positive to the process and to the Constitution. So much so that while we talk about the process being prolonged over such a long period of time I will readily admit that what we have now is a far superior document [to] the Draft Constitution we were given in 2002/3.

I will not get into what was right and what was wrong at the time, only to say that for everybody involved we simply did not sit idly by and pick up that same document we had before and say, Let's run with this. We took advantage of those delays and added value to what we now have as a Constitution. That is what we should have done.

I understand that many of our people are happy with the final product. There are those who are still unhappy and up to this moment expect changes to be made. A Constitution is a living document. I will say at this point that one of the points brought to the table by the Opposition . . . and I do not recall. Although it was said a couple of times since that third round of talks in London that the notion of a constitutional commission had been brought up prior to the third round of talks in London, I have no recollection of that. I will not say that it was not brought up, but that is the only time that I recall the talk of a constitutional commission.

The matter was brought forward by the Opposition and the Government in its wisdom saw merit in it and asked that it be included. I am making the point that we all contributed, whether Government, NGO or Opposition. But to also make the point that the inclusion of a constitutional commission where year-round observation of constitutional matters will be done, that it will be an easier process from here on to make changes to the Constitution, and for us not to expect that this document is the be all and end all, and that whatever we have here now cannot be touched for another 25 or 50 years. That is not the case.

We will never have a document that every person in these Islands will be 100 per cent happy with. We have to acknowledge that. Some are going to win, some are going to lose. But our goal, which I believe we have accomplished, is to have a document suitable to the majority of the people.

If we continue to make changes at the request . . . and I am not saying that the changes being suggested are not good, but if we continue doing that we will never ever get a new Constitution. We have to acknowledge that. But we need to prepare ourselves that the changes being mooted right now are noted, and become a process of the constitutional commission that will fall in place provided we do accept and vote yes for the new Constitution come May 20.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, is this a convenient point to take the luncheon break?

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 1.45 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.11 pm

Proceedings resumed at 1.54 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town continuing his debate on Government Motion No. 13/08-09 on the Referendum Bill.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Just before we took the luncheon break, I was making a few comments about the provision in the new Draft Constitution on the Constitutional Commission. I was making the point of its importance to the whole process, making sure that I gave the Opposition the credit they deserve for bringing that provision to the table. And to also say, Madam Speaker, that it is a provision that allows us to look at updating the Constitution all the time, in that we are always mindful that there is a group of individuals looking at what needs to be done to the Constitution on an ongoing basis. At the same time, we also want to bear in mind that we would not want to be a country that looks at constitutional change every year, for instance. But we take note of the things and whenever necessary there will always be referrals that can be made to the Government from this Commission as to what needs to be done, and the Government can then take advantage of that opportunity.

While there are things now that many members of the public are not happy with, I do believe we should be grateful that we now have this new provision in, so as to make representation and know it will be recorded somewhere so that when the time comes again for us to take a meaningful look at making any substantial changes to the Constitution nothing would have been missed along the way. And I dare say, Madam Speaker, that we have quite a bit to start off with. I do not believe that we should delay the process any further by holding back what we have now crafted to make additional changes as the process will only go on and on and on.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that we should make haste cautiously. We have worked long and hard on what we now have and, rather than trying to make hasty changes at this juncture, we ought to accept and proceed with what we have, and, like I said before, look at those provisions in time to come.

I would also like to say, Madam Speaker, that we decry our Caymanian people all the time. We always talk about their inability to produce—a notion that I do not agree with. But we hear it all the time from some of the companies in this country who continue to strive for work permits in favour of hiring Caymanians as to their inability to focus and be very productive in the workplace. And, Madam Speaker, I have had many occasions when I have been extremely proud of my Caymanian people. Many, many times.

I have been so proud, so happy, and so overwhelmed to be Caymanian, and to have been able to witness the performance level of the Constitutional Secretariat—young productive Caymanians who have given their heart and soul; who have been so conscientious, supportive and so deliberate. Some refer to them as being partial. I hear that comment coming from the Opposition Bench right now, Madam Speaker.

I believe, however, that sensible Caymanians will understand and appreciate the contribution of the members of the Secretariat. They are all young, qualified, competent Caymanians who have done a sterling job against the odds. They have put up with insults from all sorts of people from all walks of life, but they stuck to their task and completed the project at hand.

Talking about being focused . . . Madam Speaker, I hope that at some point in the near future this set of young Caymanians [will be] recognised for their contribution to this important process that we have just gone through. Too many times, too many of our people, especially our young Caymanians, go the extra mile and we fail to recognise them. And I do ask that the Government find a way to recognise these individuals.

I also will take this opportunity to speak to the contribution made by all Members of the Government and those who have sat on the Opposition. I have already spoken to the contribution made by the NGOs (Non-Governmental Organisations) and also that of Professor Jowell, although an individual that the country has paid for his services but again, money well spent.

I do believe that special acknowledgement needs to be made to the Honourable Minister for Education who took on this Constitution as a project, who has been so instrumental in the entire process. His stick-ability to the cause, his ability to articulate, to simply remember things after you have put something off for a couple of years and step right back in and pick it up exactly where he left off. It's amazing, Madam Speaker, how valuable he has been to this process [in] the detailed and technical aspects of what has gone into this Constitution. I don't know, maybe as a politician he will not be formally recognised for his efforts. I guess this is the price you pay for being a politician. But, I believe, when the Caymanian history is updated that somewhere, some generation, somebody will recognise him properly for what he has done.

I recognise the contribution of all others: You, Madam Speaker, Minister McLean, Minister Clifford, Minister Eden, Third Elected Member for George Town, Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, the Second Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, and, as I mentioned before, all of the Members of the Opposition have also played their role in making meaningful contributions to this Constitution.

I would venture to single out the Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay who also played a very important role in making sure that valuable and meaningful things were inserted in the Constitution. I recognise him too as a very conscientious young Caymanian. Although a politician, he does have this country at heart and has made a very positive contribution.

Madam Speaker, I also want to especially thank our Leader for the great role that he has played in this. I dare say that his job has probably been the most difficult of all, in trying to pacify everyone, and in simply keeping things together when many times he felt as if it was simply falling apart. The patience, his desire to see things through, his ability to make peace to keep people calm, to pull things back into perspective, is simply amazing. I dare say that the country as a whole should be grateful that we do have an individual like our Honourable Leader, the Honourable D. Kurt Tibbetts who led the delegation for the last couple of years on the Constitutional process and who is leading this country politically.

Madam Speaker, my plea to all of our people is to recognise the importance and the amount of work gone into this process, and on 20 May come prepared, go to the polls to vote 'yes' for this Constitutional process. And for us to acknowledge that we do have an excellent and more advanced Constitution than all of the other Overseas Territories. While ours has taken a lot longer, Madam Speaker, I dare say that it has been worth it. We do have a superior document.

So, my plea to all those who are still questioning whether or not they should support, is to understand that not everyone will be happy with the document. But, I believe, it is a good document and will serve this country well. A lot of thought has gone into it and we should all be proud and implore the people of our country to prepare themselves and to speak to those who are still not sure, encourage them to be a part of this historical moment—the first ever referendum being held in this country. It has to do with our future. They should all be proud and come out to support the document, Madam Speaker.

We all listened to the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition this morning and I take him at this word that the Opposition will also support the Bill before us now.

I will take my seat now, Madam Speaker, and encourage all Members to offer the Bill their support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, Brutus was discussing with Cassius whether or not they should move ahead immediately in the conduct of the next campaign in the Civil War which was going on between the forces of Octavian and Marcus Antonius. Cassius had been urging that they take some time to regroup and to gather themselves before the next push, but Brutus advocated pressing on with the campaign at a time when he felt that their fortunes were better and the prospect of success greater. And Brutus said:

"There is a tide in the affairs of men.

Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;

Omitted, all the voyage of their life

Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

On such a full sea are we now afloat,

And we must take the current when it serves,

Or lose our ventures."

And that, Madam Speaker, is how I view this situation that presents itself now. This is a signal moment in the history of these Islands. Never before—ever—has this country had the opportunity to express itself by a referendum vote on a particular issue. Never before has the electorate had the opportunity to weigh in on matters of import to the country other than the occasion of a general election when they may choose their representatives. And I daresay, never before has the subject matter been more important than what they are being asked to decide upon for Cayman on 20 May [2009]—whether or not we have a new Constitution which will replace the almost 40-year old document, and which, in this year will also mark the 50th Anniversary of the Cayman Islands obtaining its first written Constitution.

Now, Madam Speaker, what I fear, and I think what a lot of right thinking and discerning people in this community fear, is that we are at risk of sacrificing what is a good document on the altar of perfection. If we listen to some people in this community—well meaning, well intention, but blinkered in many respects. If we listen to their entreaties to tear apart the consensus which was achieved in London, to throw out of the window the political agreement which has taken eight plus years to reach, we will end up where we are now, but also back where we were when this process started eight years ago, with nothing.

Madam Speaker, I never cease to be amazed—and I have to tell you it has been now almost eight and a half years since I have been an elected Member—how it is that some of the most intelligent people I know get locked on to a course and a trajectory, prepared to sacrifice the overall good of an exercise, and in this case, of a country, because of one particular point they believe is right.

On matters of principle they say there can be no compromise. Madam Speaker, that kind of idealism is wonderful, as I have said before; but it is a luxury that is not afforded to those who are charged with the responsibility for government. It is not a luxury which those of us who have been elected to represent the people of this country can afford. Politics is the art of the possible. Politics involves compromise. And, Madam Speaker, I'm not talking about compromise merely between the Government and the Opposition. We all represent every person who lives and works in this country, to ensure that we get the support of the majority of the people who are entitled to vote in this country.

We have striven over the course of eight plus years to reach a point to create a document which had broad based support. I believe that is what the Government believes we now have in this Draft Constitution. It will not meet each and every line, each and every provision, each and every section. Each and every chapter will not have the agreement of every single person who is entitled to vote. That is an impossible objective. But we believe, Madam Speaker, because we were careful in choosing who the stakeholder groups were that would be represented in these discussions, we are confident that what we have achieved does meet with the support of the majority of people in these Islands.

We invited the merchants, the business people through the Chamber of Commerce; the Cayman Ministers' Association, which represents virtually every church in these Islands outside of the Seventh Day Adventist Conference; and we invited the Seventh Day folks themselves. We invited the Human Rights Committee (HRC) so that the views of the vulnerable and the minorities, the more liberal minded would be presented at the table.

There were many in the community who felt and perhaps still feel that the HRC should not have been allowed at the table. I and the Government fundamentally disagree. I think, Madam Speaker, that everyone understands how important I regard human rights and the role of the Human Rights Committee. After all, without wishing to blow my own horn, it was me, as the Minister for Education and other things, who took the decision that we should revive the Human Rights Committee which had fallen into disuse, and was not having meetings when I took office in 2005. So, I do not think I have to try to persuade anyone of how I view this whole question of human rights and the role of the Human Rights Committee.

Madam Speaker, they have done a good job in relation to the promotion of human rights and the education of the Cayman community about the importance of human rights. Because this is a community that feared and to a large extent (those people talk to us regularly) still fears some of the ill consequences as they perceive them of a human rights culture, such as has developed in places like Canada and, to a certain extent the UK, and, to a greater extent, other states of the European Union.

Our people are very conservative people by nature. The indigenous Caymanians (if I dare call them that) worry about the liberal lifestyle and its impact on societal values and mores as they have seen that manifest itself in other countries. Madam Speaker, I am certain of this. If I am wrong about this then I really have totally lost touch with my people. But I am confident that most of the more liberal views I have heard propounded and expressed about recently of what people ought to be entitled to do, entitled to behave, and what they ought to be entitled to in terms of marriage and so forth, do not reflect the general feeling and sentiment of the Caymanian community.

Madam Speaker, if everybody in this country who has reached the age of majority were entitled to vote, the Bill of Rights as it is presently drafted might be in trouble. But I am satisfied that the vast majority of the people who are entitled to vote—all of whom are Caymanian—do not wish for, will not support, in fact, will protest against a Bill of Rights which permits a more liberal lifestyle than has been the norm in these Islands.

I am choosing my words very carefully because I am by no means casting any judgment about what people want to do in their private lives. I believe that is a matter for them. I am speaking as a representative in this community who believes that he is in touch with what our people think and feel about these matters.

Madam Speaker, I am not going to spend the whole of the time I have talking about the Bill of Rights issue because there are other very critical improvements, advancements in the Draft Constitution which are necessary for this country, its protection and its continued success and development.

When we look at what the Draft Bill of Rights now says, I say as one who has been involved from day one in this process . . . In fact, I started looking at this in 1999 before I was elected and not from then but even before then, back in 1992. The reason we did not get a new constitution or significant changes to the Constitution then was because the UK insisted that we had to have a Bill of Rights concomitant with any significant constitutional advancement. And the then Government, led by Mr. Truman Bodden, declined to do so.

So, we have struggled with the old 1972 document for all of those years because as a people and country. . . Madam Speaker, I want to make it clear that I don't think Mr. Truman's judgment at that time was wrong about how the electorate was going to react to the imposition, as they viewed it, of any Bill of Rights. We have struggled because of that with this old document since 1992. It is at least as long ago as that, that the people who worked in government understood that that 1972 Constitution needed to be updated and upgraded to reflect Cayman's evolution since the original document was granted 20 years before that.

Madam Speaker, we all have worried—and in light of recent developments, still must worry—about whether or not the whole question of a Bill of Rights for this country and what it should contain is not the reef on which founders the entire constitutional modernization process. Except Madam Speaker, there is a sad irony in all of this. Somehow the issue has gotten flipped on its head, because until we left to go to London the great concern was whether or not we were going to get the key stakeholders who had issues with this particular aspect of the Constitutional Modernization process to agree to a Bill of Rights which would be acceptable to the United Kingdom Government. And that was a situation which obtained all the way up until the Monday night before the talks started the following Tuesday.

Madam Speaker, anyone who thinks that what we have achieved by getting the key stakeholders in the Churches to sign on to this document was a slam-dunk really has no appreciation of where we have come from and the length of time, effort, resources, forbearance, intellect and creativity that has gone into this process. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, for all of their worth—and I give them their worth—the HRC contributed zero to that part of the process.

The HRC have always started from the position of "This is what we want because this is what an ideal Bill of Rights should contain. Here it is."

It is the Government that has had to sit and figure how we keep this process together. Anyone who thinks otherwise has really not been connected to the process. The decision we took a year ago (or thereabouts) to defer the holding of the Referendum to May of this year instead of May last year, was one over which we agonized for a long time. But we knew (as much as one can know) that if we had pressed on at that stage the Referendum was going to fail because the churches had told us quite categorically that they would not support revised proposals without seeing precisely what was going into the Bill of Rights. No amount of assurances would do. They wanted to see what this was going to look like.

Madam Speaker, because we understood and still understand how very important it is that the country, the electorate . . . let me use the "electorate" because it is not the country to be truthful—there are only 15,000 plus people who have the ability to vote on this document. [The electorate] must be satisfied about it. We know that instinctively Caymanians, as conservative as they are, are more likely to say better the status quo than something which we believe might present dangers. Better the devil you know than the one you don't.

So, because we knew all of that, Madam Speaker, we took a step back from the process and said to ourselves, despite our best efforts no other jurisdiction among the Overseas Territories has done a quarter of what we have done to involve and educate the public in this process. But, notwithstanding all of that, let's give ourselves two pats on the back but that has not done the trick boys and girls. Let's take a step back and say to ourselves, what is it we have not done that we need to do to ensure the passage of this?

That, Madam Speaker, was the key turning point when we said we have to put together a Cayman Constitution Delegation which will allow not just the Government and the Opposition to go to represent the views of the people, but actually to have them involved in the process all the way. Not just turning up at the table in London, as was the case back in 2002, but to have them engaged in the development, that is, in particular, the Bill of Rights. We struggled and worked with the Churches and the HRC to develop what would go into the Bill of Rights. We knew what the key issues were with the Churches.

I have to tell you, Madam Speaker, that for a long time down that road I was far from certain that we would ever be able to achieve a document with which the churches would agree and which the UK would be satisfied met their international obligations. But we did it. We did not do it in one fell swoop, but we did it. We didn't do it until the Monday before the talks started on Tuesday, but we did it!

And so, Madam Speaker, when I in particular say that I am disappointed in the way the HRC has handled this, I want you to know that that comes from deep within my being, because the HRC were part of this process all the way through. They lobbied and advocated for changes. There is a whole section in there on the protections of the right of the child which they put in. And they did not have to fight us about that; there were proposals which ought to have gone in.

Madam Speaker, every group involved in this process has had to make compromises to get a document which all of us could say, Well, it's not everything I wanted. But does it improve Cayman's situation in terms of the protection of human rights? Does it meet the UK's international obligations? Is it satisfactory to the Church in the sense that they do not believe that the social and moral underpinnings of this society will be compromised in any way?

Those are the questions that constantly had to be asked and answered, and adjustments made. And, Madam Speaker, perhaps it speaks in some ways to a lack of maturity about the negotiation process, but to me and the way that my principles work, I do not go through a long, many, many long months, if not years, process of negotiation. [I] go to the table, make my case, get some of my changes, but don't get some. A decision and agreement is finally reached and because I have not gotten everything that I wanted, although I have committed to the process, to pick up my things and say, I'm going to go and campaign against the Bill of Rights. That is exactly what happened and those were the exact words of the Chairman: "I'm going to go campaign against the Bill of Rights."

Madam Speaker when you are playing on that big of a stage, that is not the way you should operate. It is one thing to advocate as strongly as you possibly can for whatever it is you believe is right, to push as hard, make people as uncomfortable as you want; but when the deal is struck the deal is struck. There is a political agreement reached between the Cayman Islands Delegation and a United Kingdom Government Delegation. We're all bound by that agreement, in my view, and if we withdraw from it we have undermined the basis of the agreement.

Madam Speaker, that is why, quite frankly, I am disappointed in the way this matter has been handled by the HRC post the UK negotiations. And, Madam Speaker, I should add that if the HRC felt as strongly as it says it does about section 16 subsection (2) of the Draft Constitution, that they believe an alternate version ought to be put to the electorate, one would have expected that that proposal would have been mooted in London and not something which has seemingly been given birth to after they have had time to come back and consider the matter.

But those, Madam Speaker, are (shall I say) principles which I believe ought to govern the way one negotiates at this level. Others may say that all is fair in love and war and politics; so be it! But this much I know, proceeding on the premise, as they have done, which is that somehow rights are being taken away from vulnerable groups in Cayman as a result of what is being proposed here is downright disingenuous.

Why do I say that, Madam Speaker? Cayman has presently no constitutional protection for human rights at all! Zero! Zilch! Nada!

Nothing!

What is contained in the Draft Bill of Rights at the moment meets—and exceeds in some instances—the provisions of Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights. It satisfies the United Kingdom's international obligation in relation to all of the civil and political rights which need constitutional protection. It contains a number of second and perhaps third generation rights, such as the aspiration or right to education and the protection of the environment. It contains a right to lawful administrative treatment, a number of fairly new rights which have developed and evolved over the course of the last 30 or so years. Some come from the South African Constitution which is a relatively new constitution. And so, what is being proposed for Cayman is certainly not something that is less than meets the UK's international obligations, in fact, in some instances it is more. So what, then, is the issue?

Madam Speaker, the Human Rights Committee believes that there should be a freestanding non-discrimination clause in the Constitution. What does that mean? The present Constitution Draft limits the non-discrimination provisions in the Constitution to the rights which we are protected under the Bill of Rights in the Constitution. That is, those rights which are accorded to people under the Constitution are saved to some extent, which is actually set out in the document, are to be applied fairly and broadly across the whole range of categories of people whether you are young, old, male, female, black or white. It does not matter. All of those rights apply to you; saved to the extent that there are some carve outs, particularly in relation to immigration.

Madam Speaker, initially it was proposed that those rights would not be restricted only to rights granted under the Constitution but more broadly to the full range of government legislation and activity. The Churches objected strenuously to this. It was on this particular point that literally at the last moment we were able to persuade the Seventh-Day Adventists in particular that restricting that provision only to the rights under the Constitution would not in any way create the sorts of issues that they were concerned about, such as the kinds of lifestyles which the Constitution, as they saw it, could possibly condone or promote.

I am talking particularly, Madam Speaker, about the gay lifestyles. That was their big concern.

But as we examined this issue we also realised that having a freestanding non-discrimination clause would have other effects on Cayman as we know it, and the potential for real fiscal burdens being placed upon the Cayman Islands Government; burdens which I think all of us appreciate we can ill-afford.

Now, Madam Speaker, the HRC have so far been careful not to mention those implications and, in fact at the recent meeting, have actually disputed with me the potential for significant financial burdens on government if there was a freestanding non-discrimination clause. Madam Speaker, I have looked at it. I have looked at the section and what obtains in other places.

Lawyers will argue about what a section or subsection means or does not mean. But perhaps the most telling point to me is this: There are presently 89 European Union member States and Territories to whom the European Convention on Human Rights has application.

Now, the European Convention on Human Rights itself, on which section 16(2) of our Draft Constitution is modeled, the non-discrimination provision, is not a freestanding right under the European Convention of Human Rights. Over the years a protocol (protocol 12 it is called) has been developed which, if adopted by the European Union member State, has the effect of turning Article 14—The Right Against Non-discrimination—into a freestanding right to have broad application across a full range of that member state's legislation and governmental activity.

But, Madam Speaker, of the 89 member States or Territories to whom this applies, only 19 have adopted that particular protocol. The reason they have not adopted it . . . the reason the UK Government, notably, has not adopted it is because they believe that the wording of that protocol is too wide and it will result in a flood of new cases testing the extent of that provision. They believe that it might have the effect of including international conventions to which the UK is not party and could result (and these are their words) "In the incorporation of these instruments by stealth."

You see, Madam Speaker, if the non-discrimination provision is freestanding, unless the Constitution itself were to carve out certain legislation, certain government activity, it would mean that government would not be able to discriminate at all in relation to anyone with regard to any of the areas of governmental endeavour policy or legislation. What that would mean, as I see it, is that in terms of attendance of children at government schools, government would no longer be able to say that only Caymanian children are entitled to attend, and attend free of cost.

Madam Speaker, in relation to housing, the Cayman Islands Government would no longer be able to say the Government Guaranteed Home Mortgage Scheme is for Caymanians only; the affordable houses are for Caymanians only.

In relation to provision of healthcare, particularly overseas healthcare, we would not be able to discriminate and say Caymanians are entitled to overseas healthcare free of cost if they can't afford it, but we can't pay for non-Caymanians. It is the implications of those sorts of things that any responsible government has to bear in mind.

And while the idealism and the well intentioned efforts of the HRC and the beliefs of other equity minded people are good, they have to be balanced against the realities of the Cayman in which we live, a country in which more than half of the population, I believe, comes from somewhere else; a country with an extremely narrow tax base which is always under pressure to manage the affairs of the country in terms of infrastructure and programs and support to its people. Always a struggle.

I believe, and I want you to believe, Madam Speaker, and this House to believe, that I doubt if there is anyone who has agonized about this any more than I have. Some have only turned their minds to this in the last year. I have been thinking about this for eight plus years. Madam Speaker, I say to the HRC and to others who are campaigning against the Bill of Rights as it is drafted in the Constitution, that the time for debate on this issue has almost passed. The reason I have not said is past, is because we are in this process right now. But the document that we have is the document which has been signed off on.

And even though I know the Leader of the Opposition has made cautious-sounding noises, he was part of this process and he understands—I am confident in saying this—and supports what I have just said about the Bill of Rights. In fact, he may believe still that not all of the fears of the Christian community have been satisfactorily addressed, although I urge him to believe that they are the best guardians I believe of their own position, and that they are satisfied.

Madam Speaker, the Human Rights Committee has done a lot of good work. It has fought and had to fight for standing in this very conservative community. Their role has not only been preserved but they have been promoted in the Draft Constitution, because this Human Rights Committee will become the Human Rights Commission when the Draft Constitution becomes the Constitution of the Cayman Islands.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that while they will continue to have their reservations and concerns, they really should think long and hard before taking a decision beyond today to campaign against this Bill of Rights. And I know that they will say they are not campaigning against it, they are just educating people. But enough people whom they have spoken to or who have heard them speak have come to me for me to understand that however they intend it, the message out there is clear from the HRC—vote the Bill of Rights down if it does not change.

If you cannot vote the Bill of Rights down without voting the entire Constitution down, I say to them and to others who may have been convinced—including some of the media—that that is the right thing to do, to ask themselves this question, for it is the question that I have to ask myself over and over again: Will the Cayman Islands be better off with the Draft Constitution with all of its perceived imperfections than is currently the case? Will the cause of human rights in Cayman be advanced, imperfect though it may be, by the Draft Bill of Rights, or is it better that the status quo remain, particularly in light of all of the issues that we have to face in the next couple of years?

Which government is going to be brave enough, or some may say foolhardy enough, to go down this road again any time soon? Because that is what it comes down to, Madam Speaker.

This time, 20 May, we are playing for all the marbles. It's yes or no! I am sure, Madam Speaker, that the country will continue to struggle and limp along under this ancient creaking document that is the 1972 Constitution. I am not going to try to say that this will be the end of Cayman as we know it if we don't get the new Constitution. But this I know, from almost four years sitting in that Cabinet with that Governor, Cayman will not be in a better place with no new Constitution than we are now. We will continue to labour under all sorts of impediments.

The Bill of Rights is critically important, but it is not the be-all and end-all of the constitutional process. Even those who believe that section 16(2) is imperfect must accept that many other aspects of the Draft Bill of Rights represent significant advances for the protection of human rights in this jurisdiction, and as right-thinking people must ask themselves, Am I really doing myself and the country justice if I take the position that if I can't get the section 16(2) provision that I want, it is better to have nothing at all?

No one need tell me that that is not a view that has been advanced, because I've heard it advanced. And no one need tell me that it is not a view that is being spread among people who have issues with section 16(2), because some of those people have said as much to me.

Madam Speaker, what is called for here is a sense of reason, of proportionality. If I and Members of the Government in particular, and Members of the Opposition and the Churches had taken the position that if we can't get everything we want, there will be no document. I promise you there would be no document. And for those who think that the churches have been unwilling to compromise or to move, I tell them they need to think again. The Churches were determined that we should have no constitutional protection for human rights because they greatly feared (to paraphrase them) that elevating the issue of human rights to constitutional status would by itself have the result of creating a human rights culture where every single thing of a decision that was taken by churches and schools was open to challenge. They cited time and time again the Canadian example.

To get us to where we are we have had to craft the Bill of Rights so that it is clear that these are rights that are enforceable by an individual against the Government—that they do not have horizontal application, that they don't impact schools and churches and those sorts of institutions. They reluctantly conceded because the UK told them there was no choice, that it had to go in the Constitution and could not be a simple piece of legislation. Huge compromise on their part.

So, Madam Speaker, I urge again that the campaign against the Draft Bill of Rights should cease when the vote is carried today. Its only purpose after this will be to get voters to vote against the new Constitution. It will have no other effect. The time for changes to the Draft Bill of Rights has passed. The HRC, like everyone else, had their say. In fact, they had more than their say. They had more to say about it than anyone else, and that is fine.

Madam Speaker, for those who are cynical about the legislators in this House and perhaps think that our views are ultraconservative and we are rooted in another time, (as I have been told recently) and that Cayman needs to get with the programme to understand this is a liberal world and people are entitled to do what they want, and all of those things . . . I've listened to all of that. To all of those I want to say this: You may entirely discount us who represent the people in this House, but you must accept that the United Kingdom (which cannot be regarded as a conservative society) and the United Kingdom Labour Government, through their Minister, has accepted that what is contained in our Draft Bill of Rights meets the United Kingdom's international obligations with respect to the protection of human rights.

So, this is not some sort of substandard document. It clearly does not go as far as some of the more liberal-minded members of this society would like it to. It does not follow from that that the document is substandard. As some of those who have spoken before me have said, Madam Speaker, the Constitution is a living document. What it contains ought to reflect the views, mores, standards and aspirations of the society that it governs.

Accept that Cayman is in a unique position; one of the few countries in the world where the vast majority of the population cannot vote because they do not have a sufficient connection to the Islands. But I do not believe that we have yet reached the point where the Caymanian population who can vote are prepared to simply say that because there are more of you who can't vote who have more liberal views our constitutional document ought to reflect those views.

Madam Speaker, one of the things that has saddened me in this process—and this is a criticism of the HRC—is some of the things that I have witnessed, particularly last Thursday night. Quite frankly, I regard it as an exploitation of vulnerable people. For, in the process of trying to persuade the Government to break the agreement we have and to insert a new section 16(2) into this Bill, they have spoken to [and] brought on board representatives of the disabled and other people who are vulnerable in the community. And they have sought to persuade them (in some cases, successfully, it seems) that somehow this Draft Bill of Rights is going to take away some rights they have or, conversely, that if the Bill of Rights, section 16(2), Non-discrimination provision, said what they wanted to say, that magically all of the slights and prejudices and bad treatment which they received would be fixed.

Madam Speaker, it has been 500 years since our country was first sighted, but in terms of civilization it is about 300 years. We have never had a Bill of Rights. And I am not for a minute going to say that there have not been prejudices and discrimination, and that we have always treated people fairly. I'm not going to say that, Madam Speaker, because I know different. But I do not think that people in Cayman have fared any worse. In fact, they have fared much better in a country which has respect for the dignity of the human being and for the rule of law, absent to this moment as I speak . . . we have no Bill of Rights. Where is the long list of huge human rights violations?

So, Madam Speaker, it is wrong to paint a picture of Cayman which is oppressive and which somehow is in gross violation of international human rights, and [that] somehow magically (if we had section 16(2) as they are proposing) all of that would be fixed.

And, Madam Speaker, the other side of that coin is this: As we have drafted the Bill of Rights, it does not have horizontal application so that the rights which are granted are enforceable only by the individual against the State. They do not extend to areas like employment, landlord and tenant, bus driver and passenger. And, Madam Speaker, many of the scenarios which are set out as possible if government does not give us a freestanding non-discrimination provision . . . all of these injustices can happen to you. And if they do give you what we propose, this will all stop. What is being said, Madam Speaker, is creating expectations which are unreal.

So, Madam Speaker, I just want to conclude my discussion of this very important aspect of the Constitution by saying again that the time for debate, the time for argument about whether section 16(2) should be freestanding or not is now past. We must ask ourselves as a people whether the Draft Bill of Rights as it currently stands puts Cayman in a better position, protects its people better from the excesses or omissions or discrimination by its government. And I think, Madam Speaker, that the answer to that question must be an unequivocal yes. The Cayman Islands will be in a better place, will be in a better position in relation to human rights protection with this Draft Bill of Rights than is presently the case. Madam Speaker, we must "take this current while it serves", or risk losing the venture.

Madam Speaker, a little note has just been handed to me. While I had closed that aspect I think it is so important that I should mention it.

The whole question about people being unfairly discriminated against, unjustifiably discriminated against in relation to matters that are not covered by this part of the Draft Bill of Rights, such as housing, healthcare and so forth, and provision of financial assistance, as another example, there is, has always been and it remains open to those people, the opportunity to go to the court to have decisions which are regarded as arbitrary, unreasonable or unfair judicially reviewed by the Court. And the Court will strike down such decisions. It does not need a Bill of Rights in order to do so.

Madam Speaker, to the rest of the Constitution: Perhaps because this whole issue of section 16(2) of the Bill of Rights has occupied the headlines and the radio waves and so forth. I have heard little feedback in terms of the rest of the Constitution. Maybe that's a good thing and maybe I am creating an unnecessary risk by mentioning anything in relation to it this afternoon. However, I think this is far too important a matter, this is far too important a Bill, this is far too important a process and far too unique a process for me not to speak about the other provisions of the Constitution which I believe will move Cayman much further down the road.

[They will do so] in terms of our ability to look after our own affairs, in terms of our own ability to protect the interest of these Islands; in terms of our ability to have a better system relating to the administration of Government, in terms of more democracy, and more shared responsibility between the Governor, elected Government and the Opposition, and to a lesser extent, the broader community and, Madam Speaker, in terms of more accountability also.

I believe, Madam Speaker, all of these things will inure for the real good of these Islands, and that in time to come the generations which follow us will look back and say, Well done thou good and faithful servants.

Madam Speaker, "Every disappointment is not a misfortune." As a child, those words of my mother had me questioning them time and time again. I used to think it was simply a ploy of older people to somehow assuage their own guilt and to provide their children with some sort of solace about something important to that child which had not happened. But as I have grown older I have come to understand the wisdom of those words, because while this Constitution Modernisation process has dragged on interminably since it was first mooted in 1999 to, hopefully, its conclusion in May of this year. What that delay has done is only give us a much greater chance and opportunity as a Government and as a people to consider these issues and their import and impact on life in the Cayman Islands and the business of Government in particular. But it has also given us a chance to look at what has happened in other like jurisdictions.

It has also allowed the Constitutional Modernisation process initiated by the United Kingdom Government to mature, and for them to have a chance to look more carefully at what they are prepared to grant or not grant to the Overseas Territories. And again, because of the length of time, it has also given them a chance to evaluate the feasibility of various constitutional advancement proposals which have actually been granted in other jurisdictions. And we have had, Madam Speaker, coming almost last in this particular race, the benefit of all of that.

We have also had the chance to look ourselves at what has transpired elsewhere and to say, Well, if they can get it, then why not us? But we would like this particular improvement and enhancement. We don't like that part of what they have done; that does not fit well within the Caymanian context. And we have had the opportunity because of the length of the process and the wide consultation which has taken place over such a long time to get the benefit of a myriad of views, ideas and suggestions which have shaped the final document that we have.

Madam Speaker, I have to laud the Opposition in relation to a number of novel provisions that have gone into this document which, despite the fact that I do not think the Leader of the Opposition is entirely satisfied that we have actually done enough. We have done, I think, more than any other jurisdiction about the sharing of responsibility between Government and the Opposition, in particular the involvement of the Opposition on key commissions and the opportunity to address Cabinet once a quarter in relation to matters involving their constituencies, as a couple of very important examples.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, is this a convenient time for me to take the afternoon break?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: As you so wish, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 3.21 pm

Proceedings resumed at 3.54 pm

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

Honourable Minister for Education continuing his debate. Honourable Minister, the Clerk informs me that you have 48 minutes left.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I shall attempt to be brief.

Madam Speaker, the Draft Constitution includes a preamble which though not directly enforceable really sets the tone for the entire document. I raise that to say that the concerns which have been expressed about the Bill of Rights are somehow not going far enough in upholding important things like the dignity of the human being and so forth . . . I want to say that right at the very start of this document in the preamble there is a bullet point which says that the Cayman Islands is a country committed to the democratic values of human dignity, equality and freedom.

It also goes on to talk about the Cayman Islands being a God-fearing country based on traditional Christian values tolerant of other religions and beliefs.

Madam Speaker, this is not an insular narrow-based value system that is being developed or set out there. This Constitution, I believe, is a forward-looking document; one that is aimed at reflecting not just modern day principles and values, but capable of being developed and capable of evolving to meet the needs and aspirations of another generation.

Madam Speaker, the Bill of Rights freedoms and responsibilities is something that will be introduced over the course of three years with the exception of the provision requiring the separation of adult and juvenile prisoners, for which we have managed to obtain a four-year delay. That, too, has been the subject of much discussion and criticism. And there is no question, none whatsoever, that it is wrong to have a system which requires—because of the lack of facilities and other resources—in some instances that juvenile prisoners have to be housed with adult prisoners. As a country we really must change that state of affairs.

But that is not a situation that has happened overnight. It is not a situation that occurred yesterday. And I think I have as broad a shoulders and as thick a skin as anybody in this business, but I have to tell you it does irk me when it is suggested that somehow this Government has failed so miserably in that regard (that is, in ensuring the separation of juvenile prisoners and adults). Madam Speaker, it is a resource issue. It is a question of cost and priorities and the allocation of government's limited resources to deal with what is a huge range of ever-increasing issues.

Madam Speaker, there will be some who will fault and have faulted the Government, and will fault me in particular for my thrust in moving education to another level, particularly pressing for the provision of adequate modern-day facilities for our children to go to school. One of the questions the Government had to deal with is: Should we build more jails or should we build more schools? It comes down to decisions that are as stark as that.

Absolutely, we need more facilities, especially for juveniles. But in rationalizing and coming to that decision about the allocation of resources I take the view, the Government takes the view, that the better educated our people are the more opportunities they have, and the less of them who will wind up in need of prison facilities.

We now have a four-year deadline by which we absolutely must provide these facilities. And this Government (or any other government to come) knows that is what it has to work to within the limited resources that we have. Those resources are going to become more limited in the immediate future. I think we all understand that very well. So, again, this is the distinction between the HRC, which has the duty, obligation and the luxury of pressing for what are ideal arrangements, and any government which has to balance competing interests including those involving the allocation of resources.

Madam Speaker, the reason why we have persuaded the UK to delay the implementation of the balance of the Bill of the Rights, as we have said before, is to ensure that there is proper preparation and training of government officers and development of systems to ensure that the Bill of Rights is strictly adhered to once it is implemented. Nothing could be more chaotic than to simply impose it without there being adequate provision. It was the same in relation to the Freedom of Information legislation, and I think we took our criticisms for the delay there in the implementation of that. But so far, so good. It seems that most people who have made requests for information are having their requests dealt with expeditiously, and as far as I am aware the system is working well. That is what ought to happen when you have proper preparation for these new concepts.

Madam Speaker, the Bill of Rights enshrines the fact that true democracy requires all governments, even those with overwhelming populace support, to respect the rule of law and that there are certain fundamental rights and freedoms which belong to us all. I think that is what the Bill of Rights does.

The question of the Governor's powers, Madam Speaker, and the sharing of responsibility between what the Governor is entitled to do under the present Constitution with the Cabinet, was an area that also created some controversy in the earlier stage of this whole constitutional debate. I think the Opposition themselves had a different view than the Government about how these powers ought to be reallocated or whether they ought to be reallocated.

I am delighted that we have reached a point where the Government and the Opposition are ad idem on this matter, and that there is in the Draft Constitution a new arrangement which significantly restrains the ability of the Governor to act on his own without either consultation with or the advice of the Cabinet.

Madam Speaker, importantly, both as a result of the provisions in the Draft Constitution and as a result of political undertakings extracted from the UK under the new Constitution, we will have an arrangement where the Governor is under a duty to exercise his powers in the best interest of the Cayman Islands consistent with those of the UK.

We would have a Cabinet, not this time round but in the elections which follow these, which will consist of seven ministers, including the Premier, Attorney General and the Deputy Governor. We will have an arrangement where the Governor will chair Cabinet, and in his absence Cabinet can be chaired by the Premier, which is a huge move forward.

Madam Speaker, importantly, executive power will be exercised on behalf of Her Majesty, not as at present by the Governor alone, but it will be split between the Governor and the Cabinet. The Cabinet will have primary responsibility for making and implementing policy and the Governor primary responsibility for defense, external affairs and appointments and conditions of employment in the public service.

While national security is still a special responsibility of the Governor, he must now act in accordance with the advice of the new National Security Council unless he or she considers that giving effect to that advice would adversely affect Her Majesty's interest.

Madam Speaker, in the context of what has transpired in these Islands over the course of the last 18 months or so, I know it will not be lost on most people, the importance of that proposed change. What that will mean is that on matters involving national security there will be the involvement of both the elected Government, the Leader of the Opposition, and two members of the private sector of civil society who will all be members of the National Security Council, and who will be able to give the Governor advice on matters affecting national security; and that he must take their advice unless there is a very, very good reason for not doing so—if it would adversely affect Her Majesty's interest.

Matters involving national security, Madam Speaker, are far too important for those critical decisions to be taken by any one individual. And this, I believe, will stand the Cayman Islands in very good stead and ought to avoid some of the unfortunate happenings which have occurred over the course of the last 18 months or so.

Madam Speaker, the Cabinet agenda is something that will now be set by both the Governor and the Premier. We will not be subjected to the present arrangement whereby every single matter that is on the agenda of Cabinet has to be approved by the Governor, and if he does not approve it, it does not get to Cabinet.

Madam Speaker, in one of the Governor's areas of special responsibility (external affairs), unless he is instructed to the contrary by the UK, the Governor may no longer enter, agree, or give final approval to any international agreement that would affect internal policy or require implementation by a law of the Cayman Islands without first obtaining the agreement of Cabinet. And even in the area of the Governor's special responsibility for external affairs, he or she is under a duty to delegate or assign to a Minister responsibility for a large range of issues such as matters having to do with the Caribbean Region, tourism, taxation, finance and the regulation of financial services, and European Union matters directly affecting the Cayman Islands.

So, Madam Speaker, there is a great advancement, I believe, in the present arrangement to better reflect the sophistication and ability of the locally elected Members of Cabinet to administer the affairs of this country. And it is good that the United Kingdom has recognised that and is prepared to give us a Constitution which will allow that to occur.

Madam Speaker, in keeping with the notion that it is those who were elected by the people who should have the ability to vote both in Cabinet and in the Legislative Assembly, under the new arrangements, while the Attorney General and the Deputy Governor will continue to be Members of both Cabinet and this honourable House, neither will have the right to vote. But both Cabinet and this House will continue to have the benefit of their advice and guidance on key matters.

The Deputy Governor will replace what is now the office of the Chief Secretary and continue to have responsibility for the Civil Service. One of the important changes is that the Deputy Governor must be a Caymanian.

Madam Speaker, the Attorney General will continue to be the principal legal advisor to the Government and (importantly, because the present Constitution does not make this provision) also legal advisor to this House. He will no longer have responsibility for prosecutions, which will be transferred to the office of the director of public prosecutions, an office that will be created under the new Constitution.

Another important change, Madam Speaker, is that his appointment and those of the director of public prosecutions, other senior legal counsel, magistrates and judges, including the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal, will no longer be made by the Governor alone, but will be made by the Governor on the advice of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, which, again, is a newly created body made up of people from civil society as well as lawyers and senior judicial offices.

Madam Speaker, again that is an improvement in democracy. Another example of the development of a more participatory democracy where there is devolution of responsibility for key appointments away from the chief executive sitting on his own.

Madam Speaker, while the Financial Secretary will no longer be a Member of Cabinet or of this House, the office is being preserved as the Chief Fiscal and Economic Advisor to the Minister for Finance so that the benefit of the Financial Secretary's advice and guidance is still very much available to the Minister for finance. And I think it is proposed that essentially the Financial Secretary will head up the Ministry of Finance as the chief civil servant there.

I have already spoken about the Judicial and Legal Services Commission and the National Security Council, Madam Speaker. Again, I believe important advances both in participatory democracy and in the decentralization of key decision making.

It is proposed (again, not in the upcoming elections, but those that follow) that the membership of this House will increase to 18 to enable the number of Ministers in Cabinet to then be increased to 7. And there is, importantly, a provision in the Draft Constitution which will allow further increases to be made by local legislation rather than the need to change the Constitution to do so, but that any changes will have to be made in a way which allows the balance of power to remain so that the number of ministers in Cabinet does not exceed at any time two-fifths of the membership of this House.

Madam Speaker, the present electoral districts will remain as they are for the time being with any proposed increases being allocated by the electoral commission. And importantly, for the people on the Brac, there is a provision to ensure that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman at all times will be entitled to return at least two Members to this honourable House. It will be possible in the future to convert the electoral system to one, say of single member constituencies, again, by local legislation without the need to amend the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, a number of institutions supporting democracy have been created, again, in an effort to have a more modern and forward-looking constitutional arrangement and system of governance. This includes the Human Rights Commission, the Commission for Standards and Public life, Advisory District Counsels for MLAs. Again, constitutional recognition for the work of the Complaints Commissioner and his office; a constitutional recognition for the Freedom of Information Law, and, importantly, a Constitutional Commission, which has been proposed by the Leader of the Opposition and accepted, to keep the constitutional process constantly under review.

Also, Madam Speaker, as part of this participative democracy there is constitutionally enshrined the concept of people initiated referendums, where the electorate can call for Cabinet to hold a referendum on any matter which they regard as important providing they can get a minimum of 25 per cent of the electorate to agree that the matter has such importance. And where the referendum is assented to by more than 50 per cent of the electorate, the Cabinet and the Legislature are bound by the results of it.

Madam Speaker, I have tried very quickly and briefly to run through what I consider to be some of the more important changes and provisions of the Draft Constitution which I believe will provide a better framework for the governance of this country, will provide us with a better system to administer government, will create more participative government, will create more democracy; will allow more participation by society and the Opposition in the affairs of government.

Madam Speaker, there is much, if not all, in this Draft Constitution of the Cayman Islands to commend it to our people. We are nearing the end of what is a most important exercise. One that has taken us down many roads. One that has created a great deal of frustration, and a great deal of anguish on the part of many involved in the process, but one which I believe ultimately has resulted in a good document; a document which establishes a new and modern framework for our system of governance; a document which improves and provides, finally, constitutional protection for human rights; one which allows greater involvement of the elected government in all the affairs of the country; one that requires the Governor and the UK to have careful regard to the interest of these Islands in exercising their role in relation to the affairs of this country. And, Madam Speaker, one which I believe provides a framework for the modern Cayman; one which builds on the foundations of previous constitutions—both the 1972 and 1959 Constitutions—and one which should provide a proper basis of Cayman's continued evolution as a modern nation state.

So, Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of satisfaction, and not a little concern, that I am today pleased to have had the opportunity to offer a contribution on this important Bill which is before this House.

Madam Speaker, the Referendum Constitutional Modernisation Bill 2009 is the first such Bill that has ever been brought to this House. I finish up essentially where I began, and, that is, Madam Speaker, that the electorate of this country is being afforded an opportunity which hitherto it has never had—the opportunity to weigh in on a critically important national issue, and to answer the question: Do you approve the Draft Constitution which was agreed by the Cayman Islands Constitution Delegation and the Government of the United Kingdom on 5 February 2009, and Tabled in the Legislative Assembly of the Cayman Islands on the 11 February 2009?

The country has to answer that question with a simple yes or no.

Just a moment, Madam Speaker, if I might—[pause]

Madam Speaker, I'm sorry. The country has to answer that question with a simple yes or no.

I know that, regrettably, there is a petition (or petitions) being circulated about this whole question of section 16(2) of the Bill of Rights. I simply say, as I have said before—this time not to the HRC but to the community as a whole—the time for petitions, the time for proposing changes to the document, the Draft Bill of Rights or the Draft Constitution as a whole has passed. We have had eight plus years to make those changes, to make those proposals. The time now is not to sign or circulate petitions, but to study and familiarize yourselves with the document—and I'm not asking, nor is the Government asking, anyone to simply say blindly, We support the Draft Constitution—and ask, Do I believe that the Draft Constitution and the Bill of Rights with all its imperfections, or perceived imperfections, will make the Cayman Islands a better place in terms of the protection of human rights and the administration of Government?

And if the answer to those questions is yes, then your answer to the Referendum question must be yes, regardless of reservations you may have about a particular provision or disappointment you may have about a particular provision. If overall the document means to you that the Cayman Islands will be better off, that its people will be better off, then, Madam Speaker, I respectfully submit that the answer must be yes.

Madam Speaker, I will finish as I began, with the quote from Brutus in Julius Caesar:

“There is a tide in the affairs of men.

Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;

Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

On such a full sea are we now afloat,

And we must take the current when it serves,

Or lose our ventures.”

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

I notice the time, honourable Member, so you will speak for two minutes and then we will suspend the relevant Standing Order. Thank you.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Could you just bear with me one moment?

Hopefully, I still have one minute of those two minutes.

The Speaker: You still have two, honourable Member.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Madam Speaker, I rise to offer my contribution on a Bill for a Law to make provisions for the holding of a Referendum on the proposals to modernise the Constitution of the Cayman Islands; and to make provision for incidental and connected matters.

Madam Speaker, this is indeed a historic and important occasion for these Cayman Islands, and I am proud and humble to be a part of this process, even if but a small part.

I would like to begin by also extending kudos to all those who worked so long and hard, and put in the hours when many of us others were resting, because, Madam Speaker, not everyone could be involved in the great detail that is involved in such a process. But this process has been long and arduous, as has been said, from back in the 2000/2001 era until now.

I don't think there are many people who deny the fact that the 1972 Constitution has served us well and was in need of revision. This Government undertook to make that a part of its efforts over the four-year period. Shortly after being elected the process was started and, although there was no public participation at that point, the Secretariat was formed and work started from as early as 2006.

The Speaker: Honourable Member, one moment.

Honourable Leader of Government Business, could I have a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 10(2)?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Suspension of Standing Order 10(2)

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Madam Speaker, I move that the relevant Standing Order be suspended to allow business to continue beyond the hour of interruption?

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 10(2) . . .

Could I have a seconder please?

That's why I would like the Government to do these things and then I won't forget.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg to second the Motion.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 10 (2) be suspended in order for debate to go on beyond the hour of 4.30 pm. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 10(2) suspended.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, as I was saying, the process started and, of course, it was officially launched early last year at the grounds of Pedro Castle, the birth place of democracy, as we know it in these Islands. The Government hosted a grand affair on the grounds where all of our proposals on the various issues and contentions were aired and then everything was kicked into high gear.

Madam Speaker, the Constitutional Secretariat, as the Fourth Elected Member for George Town mentioned, deserves much accolade. That is a body put together under the Cabinet Secretary, the Leader of Government Business. It is headed up by a team of young Caymanians who have put in tremendous hours. And, as my good friend and colleague, the First Elected Member for Bodden Town, often says, killed a lot of trees in the process, because, certainly, the amount of paper that was generated to make this process a reality was tremendous.

Madam Speaker, it was a labour of love for that young group of Caymanians who proved that they are as able as anyone. I want to personally congratulate them and thank them, and hope that they will continue to be a part of this process as we roll forward.

I too would like to pay tribute to the Minister for Education and his dedication over many, many years, and his foresight and knowledge. He has become well respected not only here but in the UK for his efforts on this draft that we now have. He and professor Jowell formed a formidable team and worked, massaged, tweaked, changed, redrafted and all the other things necessary behind the scenes to get us to where we are.

It was certainly a privilege to be part of the negotiating team in the UK, Madam Speaker, and to see that high level of negotiation take place, and to offer my contributions either behind the scenes or on the microphone whenever it was needed. Madam Speaker, the reason I believe that we have the document we have is because of the way we dealt with the folks from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office through their representative, Mr. Ian Hendry, and his team. They came to respect and believe in what we were trying to do. As a result, by the time Minister [Gillian] Merron came on the scene, because of the reports she got she was quite impressed with what had been done, and she understood the time and effort that had gone into making this document a reality.

When you look at the words of Mr. Hendry which I think have been spoken on the Floor of this House by the Leader of Government Business, at the end of his letter to the Leader of Government Business, dated the 10 February 2009, which accompanied the new Draft, he said: “. . . the draft new Constitution will represent a modern and more democratic constitutional settlement between the Cayman Islands and the United Kingdom, reflecting our relationship of partnership in the 21st century, and in terms that are acceptable to both the Cayman Islands and the United Kingdom. The continuation of that relationship is a matter of mutual consent, and I believe the draft new Constitution will form a sound and modern basis for our mutual cooperation, in which there is a fair balance between greater local autonomy and the powers necessary to enable the United Kingdom to meet its responsibilities. I therefore hope that it will prove acceptable to the people of the Cayman Islands.”

Madam Speaker, a constitution is a dynamic document, not a static one. It has to suit the times. It has to be relevant. It is not a document that you go about updating every couple of years, but certainly, as we develop as a young country and we have a Constitution (as we do now) that is proving to be outdated and difficult for the mechanisms of government to properly work and be carried out at Cabinet level and through other judicial and regulatory and security areas, it is obvious that [it is] time for change.

We are a progressive country, and someone had to lead this process. It so happens, that it is now the PPM Government. We said from the get-go that this was something we would do and would bring the Constitution into being through a referendum.

Madam Speaker, a lot of people are scared of a referendum. But, to me, a referendum is ultimate democracy. We have to make sure that our people understand what they are voting on and voting for. We also have to give our people a lot of credit. The Cayman Islands have always had good people with foresight, understanding and vision. That is why we have reached this point in history.

I do not want to sell our people short. I believe that they will deal with this and keep the good ship Cayman going in the right direction. They will understand that this document, their document, is not a document about us, the UDP or any other party, group or person; this is a document that is for the Cayman Islands and that is the reason it took this long to get where we are.

We could have drafted a Constitution, Madam Speaker, and gone off to the UK. We could have even side-step the Opposition. That has been done in other countries. We could have forgotten about the NGOs and had a Constitution on the table a long time ago, but that is not the way this Government works. We said that we would have a consultative process and that is what we did. We have not tried to ramrod this Constitution down anyone's throat or ram it through the process.

Madam Speaker, this is the first time that a referendum will be held in these Islands. That is my understanding. And if that is indeed the case, it speaks well to us as a country involving and bringing our people along in the governance of this country. It speaks well to the openness and transparency that is often talked about.

All of the major stakeholders, the public and the large representative bodies, have been involved in getting us to this point. When you take the Chamber of Commerce, the Churches, the Human Rights Committee, along with the Members of the Legislative Assembly, whether it is the Opposition or Government, you are representing a lot of people. It is your job to understand your constituents' wishes and your Members' wishes; therefore people who sit at that table with that responsibility should ensure that they are carrying out the wishes of the people they represent.

During this process everyone involved sometimes sat back and took deep breaths, breaks. But I saw everyone, including [those of us] on the Government side, sit back, reflect, reposition, change minds and at the end of the day reach the compromise position. They say that it is only a dead man and a fool that can't change his mind, and I certainly saw this. No matter how strongly we felt about something, for the sake of getting a document that is workable, palatable, forward-thinking and beneficial to this country, I saw in all the meetings that I participated in—there were quite a few between 2006 and now—everyone doing their best to thrash the various views and ideas [in] sometimes heated debate but at the end of the day getting what is not a perfect document, by any means, because I do not think such a document is possible. But it is certainly one, as the Minister for Education has just outlined going into great depth (since he knows this stuff inside out), outlining many of the areas that have been improved in the Constitution and the reasons why.

Madam Speaker, we did what we did to come to this position where we can proudly say we have a document that we believe will advance these Cayman Islands. It is not the cure for all ills and that is what I think a lot of people, including the Human Rights Committee, at the moment fail to realise.

This is the umbrella legislation under which the Cayman Islands will function for the next so many years. Under this Constitution many other pieces of legislation will be developed. And, Madam Speaker, what I want to stress is that a constitution must be drafted for the benefit of the majority of the people of your country. It would be a foolhardy government to think otherwise. It must be in the best interest of the people. The rights of the minority—which are important and we all understand on this side and I'm sure on the Opposition's side as well—[are] important. You have to be careful. Yes, you have to protect those rights and this can be done by legislation, and will be done—I am confident of that—where there are loopholes and gaps in protecting the rights of children or people who are physically or mentally challenged or whatever the scenario. I am sure that as we develop as a country we will address these issues and deal with them.

We cannot protect, as it were, or enshrine those rights in a constitution and not open the floodgates for rights that will forever change the landscape of these Islands, which will go against the grain of what is Caymanian, Madam Speaker. That is the bottom line.

I was at the meeting on Thursday night at the Family Life Centre which was hosted by the Ministers Association. There was a great attendance of about 400 to 500 people there. We had those of us who had been to London and all of the NGOs. The Human Rights Committee was there. They had rallied their troops and brought out the high vocal cords and all of that to lend their support to what they are trying to insist on having in this Constitution, which is a repeal of section 16(2) and, of course, freestanding rights for all.

And, Madam Speaker, as an example, they used a young lady who I know very well, a young lady who used to be known as Keisha Ramkissoon I think she is married and the last name has been changed. I can't remember what it is but—

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: Christian?

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: Martin.

Yes, she is now Keisha Martin. The young lady is well known throughout these Islands, Madam Speaker, and she is 100 per cent sight impaired. She is someone who is known to a number of us on this side, very, very well through our affiliation with the Lions Club of Grand Cayman. Everyone knows one of the main projects of the Lions Club is the preservation [of sight] and treatment for sight impaired individuals assisting them [by] whatever means. As it turned out, Keisha was brought to that meeting and obviously told that her rights under this new Draft were being violated or taken away.

Madam Speaker, that saddened me because that is misrepresentation to that young lady who was led to the microphone [to speak]. She wanted to find out—rightly so, she can't read it for herself—why is it that her rights are being taken away under this new proposal. And that is disingenuous. It's just simply not right.

Keisha is a smart young lady and if [this] had been properly explained to [her], she would have understood. I know that. I happened to be the chairman of the committee that provided a leader dog for Keisha through the Lions Club. The Minister for Education, I believe, was president at the time. So, we know the story. We know how hard we fought to get that dog to these Islands, how hard we fought to get Keisha up to be trained and know the challenges she faced. We know the disappointment that the Leader Dog Foundation had to deal with along with ourselves and Keisha when that dog had to be returned to them.

So, we know the hardship, Madam Speaker. We know all too well. At that time, I remember speaking to the then Minister for Health, Mr. Gilbert McLean, and there simply was no legislation on the books to force anyone to accept Keisha with her dog, whether in living accommodation or in public places. It was sad because that dog had travelled with Keisha on the plane. We go around and travel to the States or other places and see guide dogs, whether they are hearing, sight or whatever, leading their partners around and doing a great job. And this was going to offer Keisha a whole new beginning. As a result of a number of circumstances and factors, not the least was the fact that we did not have legislation on the books, we ended up with a failed project as it were.

Madam Speaker, I am man enough to admit that because of all the other stuff we have been doing since we have been here the past almost four years, it is something that I always said that I would pursue. And if God gives me strength and the people see it fit to return me here in May, I can assure this country that that is a piece of legislation that I will do my utmost, by whatever means—Private Member's Motion or whatever it is I have to do. I will certainly do what I have to do to ensure that we do get legislation in these Cayman Islands which will facilitate such a practice in the future.

But, Madam Speaker, as I said, when you are passionate about a cause and get the blinkers on and cannot see the woods as it were for the trees . . . I believe this is what is happening to the Human Rights Committee. That is not unlike any other special interest group at this time. They are focused purely on driving a hard bargain and not seeing the big picture that this Government has to look at, and that any government would have to look at. And that is the whole idea of resources and the change that would be brought to bear on our Cayman Islands if what they are suggesting was implemented.

We look around this world and see what is being done in the name of human rights. Yes, Madam Speaker, we have had our share of atrocities in the past where the rights of humans have been trampled on, denied, and people have been victimized et cetera. We understand the need for basic human rights, but we also see the other side of the coin where you can take anything too far. It is all about moderation, as my young daughter likes to say. You can overdo anything. And when you take a country that is formed, as the Cayman Islands have been developed, on strong Christian principles . . . and there is no denying that fact, Madam Speaker. Our Christian heritage was stated in Vision 2008, and the need to maintain that. We have it as well in the preamble to our Constitution. There is no denying the values.

You see we have a lot of Johnnies-come-lately to our country, Madam Speaker. And we welcome people to these shores. But there are a lot of people who come to these Islands and impose or seek to impose their will and where they come from upon us. When you go to Rome, you do as the Romans do—which is an old saying. And yes, we have an evolving culture; we have a growing population and changes. We have changed a lot. But to seek to impose unbridled freestanding human rights on the Cayman Islands at this time would be just as dangerous as to take this country to independence at this time. Madam Speaker, we are simply not ready for it! And that is another important thing that I will touch on later.

There is no need for anyone to think that this Government or those on the other side, the Opposition, do not understand as good Caymanians—as people who fight every day for the rights of [our] citizens, who get the complaints regularly—the challenges that are out there. And we understand that those who are mentally or physically challenged in any way have even greater hardship. We understand the seriousness, as the Minister just said, of having our young people incarcerated with older prisoners.

Just last week the three of us here on the Backbench, myself, the Third and Fourth Elected Members for George Town, had a tour of both Fairbanks and Northward. And, let me tell you, I told them when I got to the gate: I've been in prison three hours, I want to get out! This is no place to be. We saw firsthand the inside of our prisons.

Madam Speaker, I, like many others, used to say when someone goes to Northward, Oh yeah; they have gone to the Northward hotel. Well, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, after having been inside those walls and seeing a bit of what prison life is about, it is no hotel.

Yes, they are treated humanely, and that is basic human rights, again. And that is the way it should be because you do not want to create prisoners. You want to be sure that people who come to prison don't want to come back, but at the same time you want to ensure that they leave prison and they are rehabilitated and are able to take their rightful place in society, if at all possible. Unfortunately, not every prisoner will reach that point. But that is the goal.

I would like to commend the folks at the prison, all of the officers and those in charge who are doing a hard job day in and day out, and who are seeking to keep our prison under control. [They] do their best, along with the other people who go there to work with prisoners, in trying to rehabilitate ensuring that they become productive citizens.

And, Madam Speaker, yes, we did see a few juveniles in there and it saddened us. I asked the question: Why is it like this? First of all, there is an over capacity therefore Eagle House had to be used for adults.

I also asked the question of the senior personnel in charge: What will it take to sort this out?

They said, Well we need a juvenile remand centre, but it is a costly exercise and it is not something that can be done over night.

So, Madam Speaker, we are aware. And for those of us in Cabinet we are all too aware of the need to have our young people properly accommodated and certainly rehabilitated. This is something that will be an initiative under our Children and Family Services Department because these things go hand in hand. That's an area that will certainly have to play a great role in this as we go forward. But no one should think that this does not concern us or bother us in any way and that we turn a blind eye to it. As the Minister of Education said earlier, it is a case of prioritizing and trying to do what we can do with what we have at the time. Hopefully, in due course in the not-too-distant future we will bring to fruition the proper facilities for this.

One of the prisoners said to me when I was leaving one of the wings that day: Don't build any more prisons, you hear. No more prisons; that is not the answer. He is absolutely right, Madam Speaker. He said: Build schools. And that is what we are trying to do. If we can get it right, we will cut down on the number of juveniles and young people in the prison walls because we are locking the gate after the horse is bolted at the moment. We have to turn that around and deal with the proactive courses rather than the reactive ones. We have to ensure that we stop them getting into prison. This country is too small to have a large prison population, and I am looking forward to alternative sentencing coming into play, and whatever else we can do to reduce the number of our local people behind the walls of our prisons.

So, Madam Speaker, as I said, the rights of the minority are first and foremost always on our minds. And it will take us or whichever government to ensure that their rights are protected. But [we] don't want anyone to think that we are coming from a position now where we do not have any written human rights.

The current Constitution has no human rights in it. We are moving to one where we have vertical human rights—

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: —and protection.

How anyone can take that position and turn it against us in that, suddenly, we are going to become a community that totally ignores what is right, the right way to treat our people, to become this tyrannical government to suddenly abuse everyone and just totally reverse all that we have built, Madam Speaker, is beyond me. We now are enshrining into our Constitution a Bill of Rights—something that was insisted upon by the UK Government. But during our negotiations we were able to convince the UK that what we have here is adequate for now.

They understand the problems that you can have with human rights. They themselves are under pressure from the European Union. If we do not put protection in place to guard against some of the things that come down the pipe to the UK, then we naturally will be subject to every single thing that happens to them. We owe our people more than that, Madam Speaker. We have to, on the surface at least, ensure that we put some protection in that will not allow the landscape of the Cayman Islands to change over night. And that is what we have done.

We have worked very hard at all of the other provisions in the Constitution to ensure greater participation by the local Government. But, Madam Speaker, at no time was independence even considered. From right up front we said as a government that we do not at this time care to discuss the whole issue of independence for these Cayman Islands. We understand as a government that we are a long ways from that. So, that was put up front.

We looked at many other constitutions to see what had been approved recently by the UK, whether it was BVI, Turks, Gibraltar or whatever, to see just how far the UK would allow us to go in terms of our own self-determination and control of own affairs.

Madam Speaker, I think we did a tremendous job with that. We conceded where we had to concede and the Opposition conceded where they felt was needed. And everyone came up with extremely good points. For instance, when you look at us including the Leader of the Opposition on the National Security Council, this is unprecedented! Nowhere else in the world you can find that. But, Madam Speaker, when you look at that you can see there was an air of compromise, an air of value in the necessity of getting a document that allowed us to be unique, to go forward as a people.

Madam Speaker, the Governor, Mr. Jack, issued a statement when the Draft Constitution was returned, as well. I would like to quote some of his remarks. He said: “In my opinion the text released today is a good one. I believe it both reflects the needs and values of the Cayman Islands and forms a solid, workable basis for the relationship between this Territory and the United Kingdom. I believe it will extend democracy and promote good governance.”

“The country’s Constitution is a matter of long term national importance and should rise above short term party politics.”

“There is one key question for voters in the referendum: Is the proposed new Constitution better for the people of the Cayman Islands than the present one. I believe it is.”

Madam Speaker, I share those sentiments with His Excellency.

What I would like to do at this time is to ask the people of this country to think carefully over the next few months as to what is contained in the Constitution, to exercise their democratic right in referendum in May, which will be clear for them through the hard work of the Elections Office. It will be a ‘Yes’ or ‘No’ question that will allow you to say yes you agree with the Draft or no you don’t. But I ask the people in the Cayman Islands to think about where we are coming from and where we are trying to get. And to play their part in taking their country forward by a means which many other people in other countries wish that they had the ability to do; that is to vote, not only for candidates in the next general election and for the next government, but to vote for a constitution that will guide and take these Cayman Islands forward for years to come.

Madam Speaker, I beg, plead, and ask them to think of the hard work that has gone into this process and to trust a document [that] has been prepared by everyone concerned; to some extent, even the Human Rights Committee, although they take umbrage with the Bill of Rights . . . I think otherwise that they see the Draft Constitution as a good document.

So, Madam Speaker, I implore our people in these Cayman Islands to come out and vote sensibly; vote for their future in May. I ask God’s continued blessings and wisdom as we lead this country forward into the 21st century.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak . . .

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to make my contribution and to support a Bill for a Law to make provision for the holding of a Referendum on the proposals to modernise the Constitution of the Cayman Islands; and to make provision for incidental and connected purposes.

Madam Speaker, this Bill should not have any partisan division. It should not be one-upmanship. It should not be who speaks first and who speaks last. It should be whose interest it is going to be. It is the interest of the people of the Cayman Islands, not the people inside here. So, it does not matter, Madam Speaker, whether you come last, first or whatever, because all of us are going to say almost the same thing. We committed ourselves this morning in the Motion so I can’t see how we can contradict ourselves. That is on both sides of the aisle.

Madam Speaker, I think I’m old enough to recall certain incidents in the history of building constitutions in the Cayman Islands.

The Cayman Islands’ first written Constitution was in 1959. I recall reading just a while ago that it had been 137 years that the Cayman Islands had been practicing Rules and Regulations Constitution from somewhere else. But it was in 1959 that we had a new constitution and elected legislative persons.

Then again, Madam Speaker, I remember in the 70s Lord Oxford and Asquith came here to the Cayman Islands and within a couple of months a new Constitution was written without much consultation with the people of the Cayman Islands.

I also remember in the 1990s, Sir [Frederick] Smith and another gentleman came here. And without much consultation—within months—a Constitution was made. Of course, there are only parts of that Constitution that were adopted and a lot of it was rejected. Primarily because I think it was at that time that Britain was looking at making sure that the Cayman Islands had a Bill of Rights.

Now, Madam Speaker, one of the glorious days in our lives was on 8 January 2008 when launched the beginning of a discussion on the Constitution. Just looking at years gone by when constitutions were built in this country and on just 8 January [2008] made us know that this country had changed, in particular with the current Government that wanted to be open and transparent. Madam Speaker, I know there were a lot of criticisms. I was pleased that day. The people came to Pedro St. James and they listened, and they had activities that were cultural and [about] our heritage. And they listened to the explanation of a document presented by the Government for consultation, and that has formed the genesis to where we are today.

Madam Speaker, anyone of good sense, any one of us would say that was a good beginning. We opened the minds of our people. We gave them opportunities to be part of a process that is the destiny of their lives. I don't think any other government would have done that. And this is not for argument, Madam Speaker. This is a fact! Whoever comes behind me and says what they have to say, if it were so it would have been done. So, I need no arguments from anybody. If they wanted the people [to be] part of the process it would have been done.

I was part of a 2001 move for referendum. They laughed with us because over 6,000 people—who were not all registered voters—signed a petition to ask for a referendum. Simply put, Madam Speaker, (I will paraphrase) it would have put a cost on the government to have a referendum, for us to include some six items, I think it was, in the new Constitution. Madam Speaker, déjà vu. Isn't it strange that today we are all agreeing that we need a referendum? And, Madam Speaker, I believe . . .

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, if I'm not so rudely interrupted by the Leader of the Opposition . . . I certainly would like to carry on my discourse.

I did not say anything when he spoke this morning, and I think it is not respectful of us when we rudely interrupt a speaker, Madam Speaker. And I would like to just say what I have to say so that I can speak for the benefit [of] my people [so they] will clearly understand what is happening.

You see we must not try to fool our people, Madam Speaker. We are here not just to get votes and to preserve our seats, we are here because it is our duty, Madam Speaker, to elucidate and to clarify and make it as simple as possible [for] the people of these Islands.

I was looking in the Manifesto of the Peoples Progressive Movement, where we spent an inordinate amount of time talking about the whole question of the modernisation of the Constitution. And written by Alfred E. Smith, it is entitled, "constitutional modernisation" and it reads, "Keep your eye on the Constitution. This is the guarantee, that is the safe- guard, that is the night watchman of democratic representative government."

Madam Speaker, I was part and parcel of the movement with the modernisation of the Constitution from day one. I believe I missed one meeting in all of the discussions, particularly in George Town. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, I chaired one of the meetings. So, I am ofay with the process and I'm also ofay with the participation by the people. And every time I went to a meeting it gave me great joy to hear and see the people participate in the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, the whole question of the modernisation of the Constitution is not just from us, but we were asked by Britain to do that. In the White Paper for Partnership and Progress, Britain asked us to meet with the people. And it says that we must justify that the people have been part and parcel of this. And apart from going to the meetings, discussing and showing that you understand is one of the true direct ways of ensuring that the democratic process is laid for them to have a referendum. Never in the history . . . never, never!

And I dare say that there are not too many Caribbean countries that have done referenda. Yes, I heard this morning that referenda are usually for independence. But I took a little time off and went into some research base, and that is not true. A referendum is not just about whether you want independence. Any issue of national importance that any country, ranging from Australia to the UK or Canada . . . they have had referenda or people initiated referendum.

But, Madam Speaker, the process that we are discussing now is about (let us not try to discuss it in abstract terms) empowerment. It is about inclusiveness. It is about he who is touched by a decision should have a hand in it. And what other way can we involve our people but to be part of the Referendum? Sometimes the results may not be as favourable, but what is important at this time in our lives, although we would like to get the Constitution, is to show the people that it is in this 21st century, we, the legislators, whether we be on the Opposition side or on the Government side, are going to give them all to be part of the process of saying, This is what we want. And that is all it is.

Quite recently, Madam Speaker, we are hearing that the text of the Constitution is not in the language that we can understand, even by lawyers. I was wondering where I am because every law I pick up that guides my life and all of our lives is written in the same language that the Constitution is written in. And I have not heard the lawyers say that we should change the laws. You see, Madam Speaker (and with no offence to my friends who are lawyers), that is what you pay for—the jargon. You pay for someone to interpret it for you. That is what you pay for. And I'm not being disingenuous or anything like that. I'm just saying that I understand that things have to be written in a certain language because if you are writing in that language there are not many deviations. But when you write it in very simplistic language that is when you get a lot of, "what does this really mean?"

But, Madam Speaker, what I do understand is done in Britain and other countries in the Caribbean, in Belize and other places, is that you take the document for the sake of the school children and point it out in your parliament, your government, and you then write it in terminology but not missing out the point that it is written in the language that it is. And I would like to thank my colleagues for assisting me with that.

The whole question of this process which has gone on for over a year has made us better global thinkers. It has helped us to be better nation builders, Madam Speaker. It has helped us to be better community builders. And where I think it has really helped us as a nation is for people to see that a government can take a risk and invite civic society to be part of a delegation to discuss and help to negotiate a constitution. That is a risk you know, Madam Speaker! That is a real, real 100 per cent risk!

But, Madam Speaker, if we as a government talk about openness and transparency, we have to open up. We have to let the sun shine in; let other people in; let the churches in. I was saddened the other night. I had to take a break to go to the facilities and I did not hear all the questions, but if I am interpreting it correctly I saw where the church was challenged.

Madam Speaker, that bothered me. It bothered me that at the end of the day in talking about a Constitution which is shaping our future, the poor church is challenged. The church that is fighting for our religious values to stay in there was challenged and asked, where was the church when such and such a thing happened in our country? But, I'm not so sure if that was correct to do at that time, because the church is not the issue. The issue is the Constitution.

The issue is the whole question of having the Human Rights in the Constitution and other aspects of the Constitution. I hope that we will be open enough to embrace the church in everything now and not be afraid of them and challenge them to say that they must take on all the responsibilities that happened to our country.

Madam Speaker, over the process, as I said, I was part and parcel of the two discussions. I did not go to Britain. Not that I did not get the opportunity, but at that time I just could not go. But I am very happy that the ten points we had to discuss (it was only ten) were done so with the full cooperation and consensus [of] the parties that went there. It is unfortunate that the very body that is going to represent the people, called the Human Rights Committee, took the course of action that they took. But I understand that in their own wisdom they think that they are protecting the people.

But, Madam Speaker, on the Thursday night I also was saddened by the fact that some people went out and picked people, challenged people to come and say that they wondered about their rights and what was going to happen. I'm sure that is because they were frightened. It depends on how the messenger took the message.

Madam Speaker, I was in education a long time and we did not have any human rights. Before 1981 the challenged community was looked after by the Rotary and some community people in West Bay and other districts. At that time the then government decided that they wanted to embrace the challenge so they built what we call the Lighthouse School and had people who went out to look for babies that were born. It's a programme [the name of which] has slipped me but it will probably come back to me. They would go out into these families and work with these challenged people and we had no human rights at the time, Madam Speaker.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Mr. Leader.

It was Childhood Early Intervention.

As soon as the hospital knew there was any challenged child, the Education Department knew about it. The Health Services knew it. It was a team approach that went . . . and it still exists to this day, Madam Speaker. And it has even gotten better than that.

Now we have a programme for the adults. We not only have a programme for the adults who go to that programme two days a week, but a lot of them are working. That was introduced without any legislation or human rights. And I could think of so many things that have happened; so many persons who have benefited from that.

So, Madam Speaker, whilst I understand the person who has the challenge may have concerns—[and] it depends on how the message is put by the messenger—I can't see . . . This country, regardless of what we may say about Cayman people, I think they have lots of good common sense and they act with common sense. I have been here long enough not to see many contrarians as far as my people are concerned. They do things for the human person. They do it with a kind heart. We have more help now with service clubs. These are all part of the process you know, Madam Speaker.

At the end of the day this human rights is about government's relationship with the individual. That is what it is about. I have not seen a government that has gone against any challenged person, not in my time. And I don't think that I will see it [during] the time I have left, because Cayman people are a rare breed of people. They have a lot of compassion, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I liked a couple of things in the preamble. I think the public should know that the churches, in particular, wanted a preamble. They wanted something in front of this document saying who we are, what kind of people Caymanians are. Permit me to say that it says, “The people of the Cayman Islands, recalling the events that have shaped their history and made them what they are, and acknowledging their distinct history, culture and Christian heritage and its enduring influence and contribution in shaping the spiritual, moral and social values that have guided their development and brought peace, prosperity and stability to those islands, through the vision, forbearance, and leadership of their people, who are loyal to Her Majesty the Queen;

Affirm their intention to be –

- A God-fearing country based on traditional Christian values, tolerant of other religions and beliefs.
- A country with open, responsible and accountable government, that includes a working partnership with the private sector and continuing beneficial ties with the United Kingdom.”

Madam Speaker, it is almost a whole page of things that they have affirmed, and their intentions of what they want to be, including about women. And you, Madam Speaker, were very instrumental in that, about our seafaring men and all of those things which were put into this document. I think that is good, because when we take this out to the schools now and it is accepted, the children of the country right away know these are goals, aspirations of what we wish for them to be. And, Madam Speaker, that too is very good.

The other thing I felt about the whole question of the Constitution was how it will change for making the country, that is, the legislators and civil society, be more involved in the activities of government, starting with the Governor who shall promote good governance and, in this exercise of his functions, shall consult the Cabinet except under his powers. Madam Speaker, we never had that before.

What it is doing is taking the legislators, whom the people have elected to represent them, and it is making them partners with Her Majesty's Governor (that is, the Cabinet). And the Cabinet, of course [is made up of] the people the legislators have elected to be the executive arm to work, develop and oversee the implementation of the policies of the Government. And that is wonderful. This is not about us. That is wonderful. And whoever takes over this Government, the wannabes, all the independents and the various parties, if this is passed they will have a good life laid out for them, a better relationship with Her Majesty's Government; a better relationship with the Governor, a better relationship with the civil service. Madam Speaker, this is certainly awesome.

Also, Madam Speaker, the Governor must keep the Cabinet informed. Is not that wonderful, Madam Speaker, knowing what is happening today? I think so. And when the Cabinet is informed the other legislators will be informed and then the people of this country will be informed. That is how it must work. That is the democratic process. And that is what we all here must ensure that when we go out to campaign, after this House is closed, that we are talking on the same page. We might be Opposition, but we are talking on the same page when it comes to the Constitution. This is not about whether the Government has enough money or social programmes, this is about the people's business, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, of course the other arm, the central focus of who really helps to make the policies of the Government and to ensure that [policies] are implemented, is the executive arm. And it has created a partnership with the Governor. It says here, “Subject to this Constitution, the executive authority of the Cayman Islands shall be exercised on behalf of Her Majesty by the Government, consisting of the Governor as Her Majesty's representative and the Cabinet, either directly or through public officers.”

Where have we had that before, Madam Speaker? Never before! And I think the people of this country need to understand that this document is not just written because it is influenced by the Leader of the Opposition, nor is it influenced by the Leader of Government Business. It is influenced because we want our people to be participators in this thing. We want them to know they can see themselves in there. And regardless of how we say the language is, whatever it is, they can go after we have explained it and read it and understand. Our people are quite intelligent, I think, Madam Speaker, so they will understand.

Madam Speaker, also showing the partnership that Her Majesty's Government wants with the Cabinet and the Government, in the absence of the Governor it is the Premier who chairs Cabinet. The Premier!

Who is the Premier? The Premier is the elected leader who leads the country and represents the people. So, what they have done (and very cleverly so) is show the important function of the Premier. They have shown the important function of the relationship with the Governor. Madam Speaker, that is wonderful. And at the moment that is not so. But that Constitution was written 30-something years ago. That was a different time. This is now, a time of involvement.

Madam Speaker, they are not just only chairing the meeting but they are setting the agenda together. That is another way of opening up the business of the Government with the elected Member and the Governor.

There was a lot of hue and cry about the Premier, whether it should have been a Chief Minister or whatever. But, Madam Speaker, the young students can see, when this is all accepted, what the functions of the Premier are, because we have the functions of the Governor and the functions of the Premier so that they will understand.

Who is the Leader of Government Business anyway? What role, authority or responsibility [does he] have? It is all written down here, Madam Speaker, empowering the people of this country. And it is not about empowering Mr. Kurt Tibbetts or Mr. McKeeva Bush (if I may be so bold to say those words). It's not about them, you know. It is empowering the people's person whom they have asked to represent them. The function! That is what it is, because it could be two different persons. But it is there, as my mother would say, written in black and white.

And, Madam Speaker, it goes even further to say that Ministers who form part of the Cabinet shall be collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly with respect to any matter for which a Minister is responsible under this section. Madam Speaker, you know there was no such thing. You had collective responsibility but it did not extend to the Legislative Assembly except somewhere in some funny way in our Standing Orders when we come to budget we ask whether the Minister is or is not a witness or whatever. We have had those arguments. But it tells you here! It tells you that that the legislators, that is the Opposition, front and backbench and the Government backbench will be part of this process and the Ministers must be accountable.

You can't have a Legislative Assembly and legislators who only pass laws. They must be the watchdogs of the people's purse. And they must be the watchdogs of the issues that the people have asked to be policies. And that is why that is there, Madam Speaker. So, the legislators themselves are more empowered too, and the legislators are the local Caymanians. So, the Caymanians have more empowerment.

It even goes to say that in some parts—I am just picking things out—that even the duties of the Governor are carded solely for him. He can designate to a Minister, and it gives some reference like making agreements overseas et cetera. Madam Speaker, it is just wonderful to know that the people's representative will have more authority to act on their behalf.

Madam Speaker, again where we involve the people: In the whole process of the security of a country, although it seems a little unique, the whole National Security Council has been set up so that it involves civil society. It involves legislators, the Opposition, civil servants, the Attorney General and those persons. Again, another vehicle whereby the people of the Cayman Islands can have a say in their destiny. How can you have the Governor solamente being the person [that is] the only security with England?

Madam, Speaker, that is archaic; that does not happen anywhere else in the world.

You know what is interesting? I remember attending these meetings and there was a lot of opposition by companies and others present to this, to say that we were trying to get into the business of the police. Madam Speaker, I didn't see it like that because we don't have any beef with the police. We know we do not hire them. We know we pay them. That is why we have a Commissioner of Police. We have a Commissioner of Police to look at the operations. But the national policy of security of this country must be vested in the people. This, again, is very good.

Madam Speaker, perhaps I'm learning not to be the old civil servant, although there was an advantage in that and I liked the training I got. But you know when I read the second draft, I think it was, and they had included who could not run for office, all my life I knew that it stopped at ". . . holds or is acting in a public office." They had annexed, they had included senior civil servants or so. Madam Speaker, I am so glad that that has been taken out.

A civil servant does public service, Madam Speaker. People in these hallowed halls do public service. All they are doing (if they do decide) is moving from one public service to the next. And perhaps, if we, as legislators (perhaps this is part of the whole party system process), are to develop people who can run—and the most brilliant minds are in the civil service. Most brilliant minds, Madam Speaker! Of course [they] would want to come out and run. So what are we going to do? Cut off the minds of those brilliant people from running and being part of the process? I am glad that that was taken out. I know that was a compromise. I know that. But I am so happy, because I, as a former civil servant, could not and would not vote for that. I can tell you, not me! I part ways—part ways, Madam Speaker. No, not at all!

There were jobs that never existed when I was a civil servant. So, Madam Speaker, some of the civil servants perhaps change their degrees at least four times, much less. . . . Your tenure in your work life is shorter now. It is more advantageous now for people to come into politics than years ago. It is different so I can understand why a civil servant would wish to be . . . . Not because they have any beef against the Government, Opposition or anybody. I think it is their right. It is their democratic right, Madam Speaker, providing that they retire, they resign; they give them whatever the law says, three months, six weeks, whatever and they leave and that's it.

Madam Speaker, I retired at the age of 52. I worked a year in the financial industry before deciding I was going to run for politics. I had always in my life wanted to be a politician, but I also wanted to be a civil servant. I did not want to leave in midstream and come out, because there is no money in politics, Madam Speaker, regardless of what people say. There's none! But it is a good feeling to know that you can come here and make changes in people's lives and their destiny, such as we are doing now.

Even the prorogation of the House . . . the Governor acting after consultation with Premier . . . again, Madam Speaker, they seek partnership. Partnership! And that is what the White Paper said—Partnership. So, the Governor consults with the Premier about when we have to prorogue the House.

Madam Speaker, we have another commission called the Judicial and Legal Services Commission. This is just wild to know that here again civil society and the legal minds and the judges can come together and look at an institution that is noble, and work to appoint them with their discipline, et cetera, and it is not left to one person. To me this is just mind-boggling.

Interestingly enough, the Chairman should be a lay person, Madam Speaker. We have changed the landscape of the judiciary to a point, and I think it is a good thing that we can have lay people and the judiciary coming together for the future and development of the judiciary. This is excellent, Madam Speaker. Again, it is about partnership, empowerment of the people of the Cayman Islands to nation build. This is good, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, it even spells out the public service as to what the public service must do. It says here, “Subject to this Constitution, all public officers must – (a) act in accordance with the best interests of the Cayman Islands and not in their own private interest; and (b) implement Government policy to the best of their ability and in accordance with the directions given to them by the Cabinet or other responsible person or authority.”

The people of this country deserve this. They have a Civil Service and they need to know that there is accountability and responsibility in the civil service. It is in their best interest. The people of this country like this. At the moment, Madam Speaker, people criticize the Civil Service because they say they do not know what is happening; do not know who to go to. But this here tells the Civil Service their obligation to the people of the Cayman Islands. This is just mind-boggling.

Madam Speaker, we have in our legislature a Public Accounts Committee. And I guess a lot of people will ask where its teeth are and what it does, and all sorts of reports are placed here and there about the people's life in the Civil Service and in politics and the Legislature.

And it says about the Auditor General: “. . . save that the Auditor General is answerable to the Public Accounts Committee of the Legislative Assembly and must attend upon the Committee at its request.” Madam Speaker, another relationship, another influence of authority; another area where the people's monies go into the Civil Service and everywhere else that the Auditor General works with the Public Accounts Committee. Madam Speaker, the whole question of watching the people.

You know, a lot of people think that in this Constitution because you have names like Premier and more responsibility by Cabinet that there can be a free for all. But there is a committee called Public Standards of Public Life (which is the watchdog of the politicians and the senior civil servants), the Central Tenders Committee boards, all of those. That is a big shift when you are going to have a body that is not made up of politicians.

Politicians or civil servants are not on that. Who are watching? This is good, Madam Speaker, because we are all human beings and there comes a time that our eyes are closed and you forget your heart and why you are here. And someone or somebody must bring you to reality. You are here to be the people's representative and [do] the business of the people.

This is not our home and our names are not inscribed on these seats. I hear some people say, Oh, you are not getting back in. And it is people in this House, as if they have a name called Lucille Seymour or somebody's name . . . I don't see a seat.

I will never forget when I wanted to run, Madam Speaker. I went to an old sage in the political sphere and asked him, Do you think I should run? I can tell you who it is, Madam Speaker. It is Mr. Norman Boddin. I have a lot of faith in him. And he said, Lucille, I want you to go down to the Legislative Assembly and look on those chairs and see whose name you see on it, because you won't see anybody's name. Madam Speaker, I wanted to say that as an aside.

But this Commission, this is a new thing for the Cayman Islands . . . politicians should be afraid of this. Really! Senior civil servants should be afraid of it. But, Madam Speaker, if you are doing the people's business for the right reason, to improve the people of this country, you should not have any fear about who is watching you doing what.

Madam Speaker, we have the Human Rights Committee. Again, that will be the Human Rights Commission and another body where we take some lay people, some people from the professions and put them to look and see how we treat people.

I have spent an inordinate [amount] of time with this Constitution. But the thrill of it, apart from my good friend who I love dearly, the Honourable Alden McLaughlin and his wisdom—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, please.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Sorry, Madam Speaker.

Honourable Minister of Education. My enthusiasm gets the better of me, Madam Speaker.

But, Madam Speaker, what made me feel so good in all of this process, was working with the Secretariat. I can safely say that if I die tonight I think the Cayman Islands is in good hands with the young people of this country; they are exemplary. And I want to tell you something, I don't know who brought in the Commission on the Constitution, but when I was down at the Westin, two persons were talking to me. I don't know who heard it, but they were talking to me about that this was perhaps what we needed. And I see that it has now become part of the Constitution. That is good—another instrument to ensure that we broaden our minds in terms of the changes in our Constitution with the will of the people.

Madam Speaker, I wish to thank sincerely the Secretariat, namely, Mrs. Suzanne Bothwell, Mr. Christen Suckoo, and Mr. Jason Webster. There were others who helped and they were good. I have never asked them to do any research that they did not come up with it. Wherever I asked them, whether it was in Turks or wherever, I don't care, they gave me a few days and they were there with it. I think it should not be said that they were biased, partial, or had interests of any political nature because I do not think that is true. Of course, we had Mrs. Doralyn Stewart, not in terms of the Constitution per se, but she was in the logistics and facilitating all of those things. We got things on time.

And, of course, Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Honourable Minister for leading the pack. We can be proud to know that our own people can negotiate and put things forward, and this had to come with a lot of skill. I have seen him in action, and the Leader. I would like to tell the Leader that I have never seen a meeting of this nature chaired as when he chaired it in Bodden Town. And the people of this country I am sure gave him 100 per cent kudos for the way he did that. I would like to express [my thanks] to this Government [for] the opportunity of being part of the process. Mind you, I did not go to the United Kingdom but that was at the tail end. I was there thick and thin, and not just by being part of the whole process in giving my input along with professor Jowell.

Madam Speaker, I would like to say to the people of this country that common sense was made before book sense and I have always rated them to have a lot of common sense. If they want any more explanation on the Constitution, I certainly would be available to help them with that. But I would like them to know that the people, including the Opposition, that they have entrusted to be the messengers in this House have done a wonderfully excellent job.

When they go to the polls on 20 May [2009] they can rest assured that there is nothing hidden in these documents to favour any individual. The only persons it will favour are the people of the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, with those few words, I commend the Bill.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [Pause] Does any other Member wish to speaking? [Pause] Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I had to wonder whether they thought they could really shut me out.

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But, Madam Speaker, I've been around a long time and I must tell you I thought about coming through that side door there, but . . .

The Speaker: That's because you have a good Speaker who protects the right of the minority.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Ah! Glad day! Glad day!

Madam Speaker, I listened to what Members so far had to say. I listened to the Third Member for George Town about the old contentious issues she raised.

When I opened with prayer this morning, Madam Speaker, I was asking God for guidance for his wisdom and patience. And I asked him to keep the Devil at bay.

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, why that Member choose to go on the kind of sneak attack—

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —reminds me of what my mother used to say, and I quote: "That child you hear screaming and crying their head off when nobody has done them anything is a bad child."

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I won't chase after the Devil.

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: There was one matter raised by the Member that I will speak to.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I said this morning that I am one who believes that referenda was not so much the way forward, and that was because referenda has been used more for issues such as independence in our region, and that the Westminster form of government did not lend to referenda. And we heard Mr. Ian Hendry say that at the meeting. But I was convinced, and it can be a good way for a government to air issues to ascertain. But it is a costly way.

Madam Speaker, the Third Member for George Town said 2001, but actually it is 2002/2003. But what I spoke about was many questions on the ballot and I knew then, as I know now, that all of those questions could only confuse and compound the problems people had in understanding the issues. So, while the Member might want to make much of the fact of the issues surrounding the then government's reason for not wanting that type of backwardness, she can go ahead. What she should understand, if she does not, is that we must have been right as a government because there is today only one question for the Referenda. One question! So, if you want to traverse the ground of going back, then you should not tell half truths. You should tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Even though we did not believe in referenda for a Constitution, as I said we since were convinced. We said that there should be one question. Can you imagine, Madam Speaker? What she should have highlighted is that fact, that one of the reasons [was] this same constitution was not allowed. This same Constitution! Not much difference in the points, planks or provisions, but this same Constitution was not allowed in 2002/2003.

Was the excuse for a vote for minor issues, such as the Speaker to be from inside or outside? At least seven or eight, perhaps even ten points. Maybe she should have asked the question why there was so much fluff and noise about wanting a Chief Minister, when today we have a more powerful being in a Premier.

Madam Speaker, none of them—and I don't care who else comes behind me—love this country any more than this man you see standing here. And none of them have done as much for it! And none of them have taken the stick! And none of them have taken the criticisms! And none of them have been faulted as much as this man in trying to get things done that was good for this country!

Inclusiveness and empowering our people, Miss Third Member for George Town, means giving a proper district council and to have our people involved and to watch over us such as a senate would have done. So, when that bad child comes here to raise these issues she might be walking on the fighting side of me, because none of them desired a better constitution for this country than what we have now, than me or people on this side.

Madam Speaker, there is no doubt about it. We are debating an important Bill that was never before this House at any time in our history. I can't think of any time, certainly not in my 24 years here. It is important as far as the Constitution is concerned. Once in a great while the affairs of men lead us to stand back to look at what we have and say, Can we make the changes that will better our people in the long run?

Madam Speaker, we support the one question on the ballot. If there is going to be a referendum then it must not be confusing. I can't understand, as I have heard recently, that there must be 300 people . . . and I admit to the House that I did not see it that way when we suggested that it should be at the same time as the elections.

As I saw it, you have two ballots—a ballot for the government you want, and a ballot for the constitution you want. And you were instructed what to do when you went into the booth. And you go into the booth and mark your ballots and bring them out and there are at least two separate ballot boxes, one for referenda and one for your government that either you are going to kick out or vote in. And when we examined it we thought perhaps two more people or another person to watch and help in the polling station. Why it is going to be 300 more people? I don't know.

And the matter of how many people agreeing would it take to be a majority. I must ask, why is there a difference in the per centum on the proposed referendum between that and the people initiated referendum (both of them in the Constitution), for this one is asking for a majority of people voting and on that one the Constitution says that the people initiated referendum is for 50 per cent of those of who are registered?

There is a difference, and I think I don't need to explain that to the House. I don't know why. As I said, at all times we have had high turnouts here in these Islands. And so, I am praying that we have that high turnout so as to not have a situation where if you only had a small portion of people coming out to vote, a low turnout, you might end up with 3,500 to 4,000 people saying yes to what is an important document that we all want.

Madam Speaker, I go back to what we said at the press conference. In spite of finger pointing, the successes made at Lancaster House is evidence that our system of democracy works. And when I hear people talking about the sad state of affairs, I don't think that we are any worse—and a whole lot better—than many countries that we would know and I could name. When [the] Opposition highlights to the public irregularities, inconsistencies or shortcomings, it does not bring the system to a halt. It does not derail the process, but just the opposite. It strengthens our democracy by bringing those issues to the table which in turn demands that as a country we deal with them head-on and in a fair and transparent manner.

Madam Speaker, I too could go back and [talk] about the big party at Pedro Castle, but I know what the George Town Member thinks about parties. You can knock two cream pans together and she is there.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: If you spend a million dollars on it, she is there.

It would have been tremendously better had the Government done at that time what they did at Lancaster House, and that was to realise that the Opposition—no matter if they are Opposition in our make-up of our Constitution today—is part and parcel of governance.

Madam Speaker, I was told that we did not treat the Opposition good when we were the Government. We never had an Opposition that was so informed as that one. Never! They could have been successful. Mind you, Madam Speaker, that worked out good, but we did not have the system in place until just before the elections. Today we have a more rounded system for the Government and the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, we had to be the same. We were in the cold too.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But we didn't have a secretariat, Madam Speaker.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But I will come to it.

The Constitutional discussions did highlight some very important areas. And when they said that it was consensus, my interpretation of it is that the meeting in London underscored that they did not listen to us but they listened to the UK. I listened keenly to all who spoke and many of the areas that we fought for they did not come out and say we agreed. They talked about the consensus. Madam Speaker, politics were put aside at that point, and the things that were objected to here, even editorialized in some papers as being a derailing exercise, were agreed to. And I'd like the [Cayman] Net News to hear that again.

Madam Speaker, despite the criticism that we were attempting to derail the process, it led to a Bill of Rights that, where it is far from perfect today, is miles away from what was originally proposed. I have said, and I will continue to say, that I have my concerns about the Bill of Rights.

One thing that the people who are in HRC can perhaps take comfort, not that I am taking comfort in it . . . but the Government's action in signing us up to the right to petition without saying a word to the people coupled with the United Kingdom's safeguarding their position with the words in section 16, "other status", will leave the door open. It may be ten years, it might be five years, but we will live to see [it]. It will affect us because the Government and the United Kingdom have left the door open.

Madam Speaker, if the Government is serious about what it said about referenda in the Constitution, which they say is giving in to the will of the people, according to some of them it is the best thing that could exist. They might have even been saying that it was the best thing because this Government is doing it. Might it not be the right thing to do, to give those who are petitioning the time to get to us if they are putting in writing exactly what it is they want? We might not agree and will not agree with some of the things that I have heard, but what is it they are petitioning for? Does the Government know? If they do, what is it?

Well, if the Government does not know, perhaps they should ask since giving people the right—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Who is it?

Madam Speaker, I will remain concerned about that section. And I am not just saying that here. I told the UK that. But the UK knows what they are doing.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You would be looking askance too.

Madam Speaker, I will not ever do anything that will change the way that the Church expects from us. We might not be the best Christians but we have a godly heritage.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: And a moral responsibility.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: And . . . Correct! We have that moral obligation.

So, I speak from my personal point of view because the party has given their point.

[inaudible interjection by Hon. Minister of Communication, Works and Infrastructure.]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: The Church has done so much good work in this country that I will not agree to take them on as I heard some people doing. While some people can be disgruntled because things have happened to them personally, and we will not say they don't have that right because they have that right, I certainly am not going to agree to it.

So, while we here can get up and beat our chests talking about the fantastic job that has been done, the deal that was done in giving and signing up to that right—and I know because when I went to England they came to me and that was one of those times I told them that I left my pen home, and I would not agree with [Governor] Dinwiddy. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why he did not like me. But I would not agree. And I believe that in the signing up of it, coupled now with this . . . The door is open.

Madam Speaker, the Government asked for unity and most Members have asked for it. As I said, the true test is not a measurement of words but the depth of our actions. And had the Government not gone the wrong way, had they started on time rather than 2008, we believe that today we would have had a Constitution even more acceptable to the people of these Islands.

Madam Speaker, we still have bills as a party that we have to pay.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No, Madam Speaker, I'm not going to do that because I asked publicly and I did not get a good answer.

But the Member for East End said that I could submit them to him—

Hon. V. Arden McLean: That's right! I'll pay for it.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —and he will get it done.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, we might just do that!

Madam Speaker, I am not going to complete without saying again that I believe modernisation does not mean the old type of Constitution [that we have] because we are [being] modernised by moving from virtually nothing to all these other things. The truth is that when you examine what the Constitutional Commissioner, the Right Honourable, the Earl of Oxford and Asquith said, we would have less confrontation in the country.

Not that people are not going to disagree, not that there is not going to be opposition on issues; but where more of the people in this House work together on policies and strategies for the betterment of the country and also to ensure that they are implemented for the good of the people of these Islands. Instead of what we are proposing, that proposal would have ensured more unity and results for the people. But instead, as I said, we have chosen a path that is the same as all the other territories, which is the confrontational and divisive type of politics and governance; that one which says, 'to the victor go the spoils.'

Madam Speaker, the Westminster model is made up of many different ways, not just an Opposition and Government. I don't know if it is because I'm getting older, but I believe that that would be a better way. We don't even have parliamentary secretaries in this proposal. So, the backbenchers are going to be backbenchers. They will have no input except for the right to pass a motion and sit with their government, of course. And the truth is that any government must listen to their backbenchers or they fail. But we don't have even that system where more people could be involved.

I believe that if more people are given the opportunity to participate, knowing our people, how they expect people to perform and be in the know of everything—when they are really not in the know of everything, you can't say that backbenchers know everything going on, some things they cannot know—that would then have given two or maybe three backbenchers the opportunity.

Madam Speaker, we are asked to endorse the document and ask the voters to support it. As I said, the decision is that they alone must make. What we intend to do over the ensuing weeks is continue to do what we have tried to do, and that is to inform the general public about the document which we have. And we are confident that once the people have been properly informed they will be able to make an informed decision knowing full well that their decision is one that will affect them, their family, as well as future generations.

We too have been honoured to represent our people, Madam Speaker. They have been fully appreciative that this is a document that hopefully will last many years. Therefore, what is of paramount importance is to get it right. Those things that we fought for and did not get—mind you, when we went to London the UK agreed with us on many of the things I was concerned about, and I will speak to some of them—but I will agree with the Government, that you are not going to get everything you want.

I would have preferred to have seen a Senate, because we probably could have gotten one Minister instead of two. And the Senate could have taken up a tremendous amount of work for Government because there would be Government and Opposition in that as well. But, Madam Speaker, that is not to be as yet. I have not given up on that idea, because I believe that there are many people in this country that we could choose from who are capable, able and willing to make an input but do not want to get into elective politics.

They don't want to get into the cut and thrust of politics. But they could be there to advise the Government on many treaties that are not constitutional in nature but business-wise in nature. We did not get that and, as I said, I have not given up and, certainly, I plan to be on the political landscape if the gods deal fairly with me the next time. God willing, my name will be on a ballot in West Bay.

Madam Speaker, as an Opposition we are proud of our accomplishments during the negotiations. We can thank those who have been involved. We made gains at Lancaster House. We believe that our positions were responsible for bringing greater transparency, accountability and political balance to the final Draft Constitution.

Madam Speaker, while the Government did not accept our position for a Constitutional Commission . . . I think it was the Second Elected Member for George Town who said that he could not remember how that started. The fact is that in September I raised it in Bodden Town at the Civic Centre, and it was raised again in February. I raised the discussions with people and brought it to the table, and the UK felt that this was a good thing having a Constitutional Commission with three people appointed by the Governor, the Leader of Government Business and the Leader of the Opposition. And [it was felt] that the Constitutional Commission would provide continuity with the modernisation of the Constitution despite changes in any government of the country, and that it would remove the day to day monitoring and other important recommendations for change or implementation.

Madam Speaker, this I believe is a good provision for us because it will be an institution that will take up and examine closely, with great scrutiny that is not afforded now, the treaties, laws, policies and other regulatory paraphernalia that exist in Europe, or between Europe and the United Kingdom and these Islands, and, in fact, other territories that have agreements which affect us. So, this is the right way to go about it.

Many Members, perhaps all of them, have mentioned the Secretariat. I want to thank the Cabinet Secretary, as a good public servant, for his guidance. I want to commend the young man, Mr. Suckoo, because he was always pleasant, informative, and non-partisan. At all times he was non-partisan! But I pushed for this because the way the Government set up the Secretariat was so that it was the Government's views that they carried at all times.

[Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I can never forget when our old document was being shown on the screen in the power point presentation.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is very scant in here. I hope they will come back and listen to us.

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: In fact—

The Deputy Speaker: Honourable Member, I have just been informed that we have to take a suspension for the changing of the tapes.

Members, we will suspend and remain in our seats for a few moments.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: In the meantime go and call your colleagues.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes you! Since you are the extension cord, go and tell them to come back in here.

Proceedings suspended at 6.48

Proceedings resumed at 7.17

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition continuing his debate.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I was dealing with the Secretariat. I have said that I am happy that we have a Constitutional Commission and how that will be appointed. I have extended my thanks to Mr. Suckoo because he has been a very good person on that Secretariat. Madam Speaker, I do not think he at any time showed any partiality. On behalf of the Opposition, I can commend him.

The National Security Council will never be able to make recommendations. It will not have any power over the police, as such, and the Council is better balanced because the UK accepted that the Governor should have the benefit of the advice from the Leader of the Opposition (whoever he is) or his designate.

The Judicial Commission will be chaired by a lay person and not the Chief Justice. It is something that I held strongly against in naming a Chief Justice as the Chairman. We do not believe that he should chair a body that is there to hold him and the judiciary accountable.

Madam Speaker, the Government has agreed [with] our proposal for District Councils. I believe it will increase the flow of information between the people and their elected representatives and improve accountability. It is a means . . . and the Member who talked about empowering, yes. When you threw the slur that we did not want anybody empowered, that was our recommendation.

So, Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Government took it up because what I find is that people want to have a say. And we know in our form of government it is impossible to listen to everybody. But in the districts where roads, buildings, schools, and other government initiatives are taken up people can have a say.

Of course, again, you just cannot have everybody on it. We can have one that can give any Member of the legislature feedback as to what they feel is good for the community. This is very important because I saw one newspaper saying that this was their initiative. But I do recall when that was made years ago. And I mean years ago. It was not district council. What they talked about was a system of local government.

I kept saying that this country is not there. That's a huge expense that we cannot get into and we are not there yet to go into a pure form of local governance. I believe this, again, is a step. Perhaps some years from now when we are not here, maybe when we are on the outside looking in those who are here will institute a more pure form of local government. But this is not that strict and constitutional form of local government as such. Many people have said to me that this is a good thing.

Madam Speaker, we supported the Standards in Public Life Commission. It will enhance the conduct of all those in public office. The elected official, meaning the Premier, as he will be known if this Constitution is accepted—

The Speaker: Or she.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: —or she, yes Madam Speaker, will be able to set the agenda of Cabinet in conjunction with the Governor. For the benefit of the Third Elected Member for George Town, this was one of those things that was said “this was independence”. I said back then it was not independence. I said back then that it is something needed because when an elected Member is appointed (which he will be), he’s elected now, but appointed; or when a Minister (to cut it short) wants something on the agenda—or the Government—the Governor should not be able to say it cannot be put on the agenda. We give him the authority, or he has the authority to say “no” after it is on the agenda. But as it stands now, elected Members can only ask that something be put on the agenda and if the Governor does not agree, it does not go on. What happens now is that it goes on, and then the Governor can have his say “yes” or “no”. He will take the advice.

We should have that. And it is not going independent. Unless anyone tries to say that I am changing my position, I am not because I have always held to that point. Always held to that point. But back in 2002/2003 . . . ? Uh-uh. She said she was part of that group that told us how wrong it was. I am glad the Third Elected Member for George Town changed her mind.

The UK must inform and consult with us on international treaties and issues that affect our interest. So, Madam Speaker, again, it was one of the things that was said in 2003, and [we were] told, “No, that’s dictatorship.” Remember how big that word “dictatorship” was?

The Speaker of the House will be able to be chosen from inside or from outside, as it is now in the present Constitution. It is the sensible thing to do because if somehow you cannot find a Speaker from outside, you cannot get agreement, because you have to get agreement by Members. Then that person inside who is most capable can be chosen. If they did not have the experience we can put them in one of the older parliaments, the UK perhaps, and they can learn the ropes from a short stay.

So, it is the best thing to have done. There was never any call for that to be on the ballot for referendum. Never any call for it.

Madam Speaker, importantly, guidelines for the Auditor General will be set in domestic legislation and I wait to see whether I am here or not what sort of guidelines will be set up. But we have to set parameters for the Auditor General, leaving his office independent, of course, but there must be guidelines as to what they do and how they do it, and how they conduct themselves.

The Attorney General will remain a Member of Cabinet and the Assembly. He or she will be ex-officio. Again, this was one of the things I told the Government. It was in our Position Paper. The UK is not going to remove the Attorney General from the Legislative Assembly because that is the last thing they do before they make you run up your own flag.

The system in Cayman Brac remains the same but the Constitution allows the Government to bring in any system for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman by a law. The people in Cayman Brac have stated quite plainly that they do not want to change their system, their vote.

Madam Speaker, I do believe that the preamble could have been done in such a way that it could have referred to “Caymanian” in the Constitution. It would not be part of the Constitution, but the preamble (which is not part of the Constitution) could have carried that. I do agree that the way we have our laws and so on does not lend to it. Nevertheless, it could have had that definition without being a Constitutional provision; the same way all those things are in the preamble which do not have the backing of the Constitution as such.

Madam Speaker, I believe I have covered all the points except for one last one. Most Members talk about how long it has taken us to get a Constitution, or change the present Constitution. I am not going to say to the world that this does everything that I want it to do, because it does not. I think we are lacking in far too many areas in it. I would have liked to have seen some things much different. I kept saying that when we looked at Hong Kong’s Basic Law (they call their Constitution), given to them by a communist country, China, that more innovation could have prevailed and that instead of taking the old route of what the other Territories have we could have gotten some more.

We do have some new things in here, such as a District Council, such as if a district is not represented then a special Cabinet meeting can be called and questions can be asked of the Government. I have yet to see how that will also pan out, but it is there. So there are some new things.

But there is far too much in what we have that I am not satisfied with. On the other hand, I cannot say that at the table . . . and I do not know what went on anywhere else, but at those tables we batted as strong for Cayman as we could.

Madam Speaker, when I think back on “Sleepy” Smith, who was the Constitutional Commissioner in 1991 (somewhere around there in the 90s), what was put forward I could not and did not support. The people in this country did not support [it]. They supported the National Team’s position that we were not rushing, but the National Team found that the people wanted a slower evolution of advances. And how does anyone believe that this thing called “Leader of Government Business”—which is a Constitutional provision today—got there?

The Government at the time would not hear of it. They had to have a Chief Minister. They had to have a Ministerial system, but there was no accountability to the public because there was no formal party system. I maintained back then that the only way that you can have that system working properly is to have the party system, and that was what would make it work. The accountability would be there for the public. They would be part of the party, if they chose. They would know who is likely to be their Chief Minister. I said there has to be something else.

And when I examined what had taken place in Bermuda, from where they were in the early days to maybe 68, 69, maybe 70 (I am not sure), when they got what they termed the “Leader of Government Business” . . . it is the same thing; they moved from nothing to that. I said let us do this.

Government said then too, “You are not the Government. You are not going to get any support from us for that.” How bad things were.

I say again, Madam Speaker, that the party system might not be perfect but it is better for the organisation than what we had before. There were people jumping up saying I’m the leader, and nobody had appointed them leader. Yet they became the leaders of Government.

Oh, Madam Speaker, it is just too much to go into today. The truth is that I know the history. I think the Speaker knows the history. It was not easy. But the problems with that Constitution that was put before us and that the National Team had to deal with was not so much demands from the UK from what I remember (because I was at the table in the UK in 1992 for a Bill of Rights) as against us getting a Constitution. It was discussed, and they wanted us to have something. But in the campaign, the National Team said we were not prepared to put that Constitution in place in full, and the people said so. They did not want it. The campaign in 1992 was about the Constitution in great part. And the people wanted a slower evolution to Cabinet Government. And that is how we moved.

I am not going to cry down in any shape or form what was done then, because while they did talk about the matter of a Bill of Rights—and it took some discussions—after a while we had to decide on . . . And what I believe is that section 16 today too had a great part of that particular aspect of the discussion. It did not hinder us from moving forward.

Madam Speaker, we are going to go to the public. We are going to explain what we have. We are going to allow them to make up their mind on this new Constitution that affects them. I ask one and all again to think about (and I have not heard yet) how we are going to carry out that procedure. But, as I said, my thinking was if you do not have two separate polling divisions, you don’t have two separate rooms, you go into your polling clerk and the referendum person is there watching over what is going on. A ballot is given to you to vote for the representative you want; a ballot is also given to you for the referendum that has one question on it “yes” or “no”.

You go inside the room. You vote and you come back out and you give it. Two separate boxes are there, one for the referendum and one for the usual election ballot.

I am worried, because I saw this thing in the papers and I am worried that if we try to give a person one ballot to go in one room and they come back out and go into the next room for another ballot . . . some people may take that up, Madam Speaker. But there are a lot of Caymanians, when you watch them go into that polling booth, they take their time but they want to get out in a hurry and go home. What I do not want is for the Constitution to fail on that ground.

So, I ask that we consider it more carefully and, as I said, I have not heard all of the reasons why they might want so many people. But I suspect there had to be some other form of handling it from the way I thought. I hope that they would look at it and examine it more carefully. We do not want it to fail on those grounds.

Madam Speaker, as an Opposition we are proud of our accomplishments during the negotiations. Personally, Madam Speaker, I have been through many different talks between 1988 and 1992, and then again in 2001. We did not know when we would get the Constitution—and we still do not know, because we do not know what the people are going to do at the polls. I am happy with a lot that is in here. There are areas that I believe will not help us. But it is here and we have to make the best of it.

Madam Speaker, when we could not get agreement by the Opposition in 2003/2004, and when we could not get an understanding with the public, I said I must stop here. I will put forward these suggestions and if they do not take them up we will talk about them in the election. If they support it we will move forward; if they do not support it we will not move forward. And even in the elections, some of the things I heard that we have here now, the people were still telling me that they did not support.

One thing the Leader of Government Business said that is true is that we are not going to get a document where you are going to get everybody agreeing.

Madam Speaker, as I said, once in a great while we come to these issues where we must put politics aside and do what is right for our people, get a Constitution that perhaps we do not all agree with, but there are areas that we can support and it is better than some of what you have. But never let it be said—because too often this has been said—that the present Constitution has not worked. All that we are today we can say came because we evolved from being annexed to Jamaica, to Westmoreland. We took it upon ourselves to manage ourselves and, Madam Speaker, we moved from that. We did not take part in the matter of becoming part of the Federation.

We chose to be a Colony of the United Kingdom and we evolved to the present Constitution. Caymanians did not have it so good, and people still cry how lacking we are. Yes, we know that many wrongs have been committed in not having a lot of institutions, probably a better education system. But still, when we look at all the various things, we can say that we have come a long way, baby! We have done well. So, let us not forget from whence we came. Madam Speaker, I hope those who will come behind will be as kind as I have been.

I saw the Minister of Education . . . and Madam Speaker, he was quoting Caesar. I am reminded of a show, a movie with Dean Martin and Bob Hope, who played Caesar. Dean Martin stabbed Bob Hope, and Bob Hope said, “You brute, you!”

[laughter]

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak . . . Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, let us see how long we are going to be. That is yet undetermined.

The Speaker: As long as you do not go over two hours, it is okay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Oh, okay, Madam Speaker. I forgot about that rule. But if you are going to enforce it, then I guess I won't be longer than two hours.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I say that in jest because the hour is some 7.45 pm.

The Speaker: [inaudible] all the way North Side.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I rise to offer some comments on the matter before us. Initially when I came to the Chamber today I was not quite sure whether or not I was going to speak. I sort of said I would wait to hear the tenor of the debate and what other Members had to say. Certainly, I knew that the words of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition would cover the matters of concern to the Opposition and matters that we wished to raise at this particular juncture as we debate the Referendum Motion and the Referendum (Constitutional Modernisation) Bill, which would be enabled coming out of that.

Madam Speaker, one thing that anyone who has listened to me around these Chambers [knows is] that I really believe in ensuring that [in] every debate, whether it is taken up singularly and read or listened to by the public, [I do] not tend to shift, skew or re-write history. Indeed, Madam Speaker, I heard some chatter today that talked about the constitutional process and its birth being somewhere in Pedro St. James. I believe that is a grave and deep injustice to all that has come before now, to all of the work that has happened before we reached this juncture.

I recall what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition spoke to as it related to the 1992 election. That was my first opportunity to vote in this country. Indeed, the Constitution featured heavily in the debate at the time. It was a major item. Certainly, if we are going to start talking about how we got to where we are and starting to pay all these kudos, I think we ought to start talking about the work that was started from then. Certainly, Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Would you all please allow the Member to continue his debate without interruption? Or we could be here until midnight!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I am not saying that some Members did not make mention, but, Madam Speaker, I listened attentively and carefully to this debate. Some contributions that were made, if read [all] by [themselves], would definitively lead one to believe that somehow in January 2008 this whole process was all of a sudden started and that is from whence we came. I humbly disagree. This process is rooted in 1991/1992.

I remember when I was trying to make up my mind as to whether or not I would offer myself up in the 2000 general elections, that one of the people I went to speak to was Mr. Benson Ebanks, to get his view.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I remember, Madam Speaker, that at the end of the conversation he pulled out a little yellow book and he implored me that if I—besides not running with McKeever—that if I did decide to run, and if I were successful, that in his opinion, having been a long-serving Member of this House, that a piece of work that I should be looking to be engaged in was to bring some form of constitutional modernisation to the country. He gave me a copy of the little yellow book as something to read to try to catch myself up to date. That little yellow book was the Draft Constitution at the time.

Madam Speaker, for me personally, besides having listened as a young voter in 1992, that was my first what I would call real introduction into this whole business of constitutional modernisation. Of course, all of this came on the heels of the White Paper. Naturally, during the 2000 general election in which I was a candidate, that White Paper and the tenets of the White Paper featured heavily in a lot of our debate and discussions within our individual districts as we sought election to this honourable House.

Madam Speaker, after the general elections in 2000, the then Governor, Mr. Peter Smith, appointed that same Mr. Benson Ebanks, Mr. Arthur Hunter, and Mr. Leonard Ebanks to be Caymanian Commissioners. As far as I know that was the first time that there was a Caymanian Constitutional Commission. That too ought to be mentioned in this debate because it formed the bedrock upon which we have built.

So they went district to district and did their work. A draft was produced. We had many political wars over that Draft Constitution. We had marches in the street. We had wheelbarrows. We had people in wawmpuhs. I must say that if it did nothing else, it brought back some of our old culture.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I am reminded that perhaps some of that is for people who still live in the past.

Madam Speaker, in December 2002, a delegation of Caymanians went to London to the same Lancaster House that we were at earlier this month to discuss constitutional modernisation. There were many people who were part of that process. Some of us are still here. I was fortunate enough to be a young Member, a new Member of the House, and to have enjoyed that experience because it all builds on you as a legislator as you go through those processes.

You get to really understand how the country works or, more importantly, that relationship between us and the UK, which we often only see a glimpse of in the newspapers by the fact that there is a Governor here.

Madam Speaker, many of those Members who went to London in 2002 were then, and still are today, very much supportive of constitutional modernisation. A lot of them would have been involved in the process from the 1980s and 1990s and advocating change from those days. So, while the mood in the country and the fact that we were trying to bring about a constitutional instrument that did not fit with the political system that we had, and even as there is today grave concern about a Bill of Rights, that would have been around from those days as well. The country had to go through those pains for us to stand here now and have the type of environment where many can feel confident that this referendum is going to pass.

This did not just happen, Madam Speaker.

At the end of the day, because of all of that work we got a 2003 Draft. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition went through what happened in 2003/2004, and I will not bother to repeat that. But it all forms part of the bedrock that has gotten us to this point, whether we like it or not; whether we liked some of those outcomes or not.

I firmly believe that if it were not for going through those pains as a country, those pains as a community, that we would still be in that particular predicament as it relates to the public's acceptance. It was a necessary journey. Many people, some outside not only in the public domain but former Members of this House, may be equally or more passionate about constitutional change than anyone who currently sits in the House. So, just because we sit here does not mean that we have any monopoly on the desire to have a new and modernised constitutional relationship.

Madam Speaker, I think because of the fact that we had such a political fight—and war I would call it—in 2003/2004 . . . that is the only reason I can come up with as to why the Government took the decision it did in January 2008 to, as I have called it, basically go it alone—because there was no engagement in January 2008 with the Opposition. The Government started the process on its own at Pedro St. James.

However, Madam Speaker, as with all these things, that necessary tension and friction wound up being a key contributing factor to us getting to where we are. Why do I say that?

Several months ago, the headlines would have been reading, Opposition Stalling. Opposition Trying to Derail Constitutional process. But, Madam Speaker, whilst—

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I will.

Whilst there was a call for a referendum last May and even as a heavily outnumbered, heavy underdog Opposition, we dug our heels in and we fought against it. I know that every one of them would agree with me that that was a necessary part of the process to arrive at where we are today. And it made the end result even better! Just as I will readily admit that the fight we had in 2002, 2003, 2004 would have done that.

Madam Speaker, it was delayed until July and it still did not happen. Again, that natural agitation between Government and Opposition shone through greatly. It shone through to prove how important the two sides of the political process are to each other, and how necessary.

The truth is . . . and the Minister of Education has admitted the same thing. As I heard him I had to smile, because he is 100 per cent right. Had this thing gone to referendum then, the odds of it passing were grim.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I hear the Minister of Works saying that I do not know who the unna is . . . he said there's unna opposing it. I do not know who the unna is, Madam Speaker, that he is speaking to.

But I know that whenever you try to paint a thorough picture in this House Members of the Government always get very agitated. There is always this feeling that however they paint history, [it] should just be the way it's told. But the record needs to reflect how we got where we are, Mr. Minister of Works. The record needs to reflect so that those who come behind us, 10, 15, 20, 50 years from now and read or listen to these Hansards can truly appreciate how it is that their country got to what they could consider agreement.

As the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has said, no one can say that at any stage of our negotiations around the table with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office that we did not bat collectively for the Cayman Islands. We did not agree on every point. No, we did not agree on every point. But, certainly, we batted from our hearts as to the position we felt was in the best interests of the country.

So, Madam Speaker, it is often quite interesting to have these types of reflective moments. In 2002, changing one's view meant you were flip-flopping and indecisive. These days it is called "compromise". There have been a series of compromises over an eight year period.

The Speaker: Honourable Members who have not spoken yet, you have the right to rebut anything the Member is saying at this time in your debate. So could we just get on with the debate of the Second Elected Member for West Bay so that we can get through? I have a long road to travel.

Second Elected Member, please continue.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Yes, Madam Speaker.

I must say that I do agree that it seems like the—

The Speaker: Second Elected Member, would you direct your debate through me, and continue with your debate rather than answering the Members on the other side? Thank you.

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I agree. And I bow to your ruling. I apologise.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, we as an Opposition have seen both sides of this fence.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: We have seen both sides of the fence. The truth is that in certain instances, in particular as it relates to the Bill of Rights if we look at where we have gotten to, that body of work that this country and we as legislators have gone through, it has gotten us to a position that we all can agree is one that is better for the country, more appropriate for the country, than would have been the case in 1991/1992 and back in 2003.

At the end of the day, it is very important that we have been able to engage civic society and important institutions, and important bodies like the Ministers' Association and the Conference of Seventh Day Adventists to come on board on these very important, but emotive points within the Constitution. That, Madam Speaker, creates the type of buy-in that is absolutely necessary.

I also believe that their being a part of the negotiating process in the UK also weighed heavily for the Cayman Islands as it related to meeting with the Minister responsible for the Overseas Territories, for her to hear directly from respected members of our community giving a particular perspective as to what is and is not going to be acceptable in this territory.

As was said earlier, we did the Cayman Islands proud in the sense that when it came to her actual participation in the negotiations they were minimal. There was not much left for her to decide when she actually came to the process. If I remember correctly, there were basically two or three points that she weighed in on. Three points. So, Madam Speaker, at the end of the day I must say we went from the de-railers to key contributors.

The other thing, and on this point I must give the Government credit. Mind you it was only after dragging them kicking and screaming . . . but after dragging the Government kicking and screaming, it was good to see that when we came home they did have a press conference that included everybody. Because up until then . . . they rolled it out in Pedro, there was no real formal engagement with the Opposition. They were off doing their own thing. We then had to bat off the back foot because as Opposition, often times in this system of government, you have to paddle your own canoe.

In paddling your own canoe you do not have the resources.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But Madam Speaker, I must say that even at this particular stage I think it would be only mature and good of the Government to also assist the Opposition in clearing up some of our final printing bills. They have spent millions of dollars from the public purse on this process as a Government. And I know that with all of the good will that has been circulating recently—there has been plenty of it! If it had been currency we'd all be millionaires.

With all of the good will that has been circulating recently . . . but that is something too that the Government is going to be more embracing of. It is those sorts of things.

Madam Speaker, we have very important work to do between now and May. However, when we look at how many key points there are I do not think there is a whole lot that the country has not heard repeated for the last eight years. My gut feeling, in terms of what people come to my MLA office and to my house to see me about, is that the people right now are really focused on this whole war that is going on, this war that has been waged by the Human Rights Committee, and so, naturally, that will cause an upset to the process in terms of where we get to.

But I must say, Madam Speaker, that the few people who have asked me about it as a representative, I have been very simple in my analysis and my answer to them. I do not try to get into trying to explain any constitutional language to them. Each time they came to me last week I gave them one simple answer. I said, "In the process, did you believe that the view and position that the Cayman Minister's Association and the Conference of the Seventh Day Adventists took is the right one for the country?"

In all three instances all of them said "Yes." I said that is what the draft has, plain and simple.

At the end of the day you are still going to have a lot going off on a tangent because the Human Rights Committee has an advantageous position to bat from. After all, if you ask someone, "Do you want more rights or less rights?" the average person will always tick the box that says "more rights". You do not have to explain to them all of the potential horrors that they were trying to avoid that could be contained in that box that's called "more rights".

Madam Speaker, as has been said, our job, as far as we are concerned as an Opposition, is to explain the points that we think are the highlights of this document and the public on 20 May will go into polling stations and make up their minds and determine the outcome of the process.

I thought it very instructive when we were in the UK and wrapping up, that Minister Merron, responsible at this time for the Overseas Territories, saw the end of the negotiations at Lancaster House as the beginning of the process. Because, as a territory, we had made the decision that a referendum would be the way in which we would determine the outcome and fate of the process.

Madam Speaker, all I can say is that the country has many, many serious issues and challenges to face. Whilst the Constitution and the modernisation process is very important, the people I see on a weekly basis at our MLA office and on a daily basis at home are really concerned about those [day to day] issues. So, having been involved in the process that was started in 2001, and still being involved with the process, it has been a long road. I think the country has been served well in terms of public meetings, explanations, and putting forward varying views on the 10 to 15 points that have been the sticking points from then until now.

I understand that the Secretariat is going to be involved in some sort of process going forward as well, so I think the country has every opportunity, anyone in the country has every opportunity to more than familiarise themselves with what is being proposed without having to read the entire document. We know the majority of people are not going to read the entire document. The reality is, from our standpoint all we should really be concerned [with] is that people understand what they are getting into. And there are many ways for that to happen. All we can do is show the public the highlights, show the public the points that we are concerned about, and they are going to decide.

Madam Speaker, I am happy that from a legislative perspective it seems as though we are finally getting to the end of the road as it relates to this issue of the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, I promised to be brief, and I always deliver on that promise whenever I say I am going to be brief. With those few comments, Madam Speaker, I take my seat.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister responsible for Communication, Works and infrastructure.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for West Bay, you have just finished your debate. Thank you.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Brief is what I will also be, Madam Speaker, on this Referendum Bill before us. But I notice that we have gone extremely deep into the Draft Constitution and I believe that so much has been said that there is very little for me to say except to try to get the people of this country motivated to go to the polls and participate in this historical event scheduled for 20 May, the same day of the general elections for the country.

Madam Speaker, I am very glad that we have reached this point in our constitutional modernisation where even though the Opposition at times seem to be talking out of both sides of their mouth, I believe they are convinced that we have a document that we can all put our collective efforts behind for the people of this country.

Madam Speaker, one of the issues that really came to the fore during this entire process was that this Government wanted independence, and that we were supporting the areas that we were trying to get in to the Constitution was the path to independence. Now, Madam Speaker, that is unfortunate. They say there is no future in the past. But, certainly, I think that we also need to lay the groundwork for future generations so that they too will know exactly how we got to where we are.

Madam Speaker, many of the things this Government was proposing in the modernisation process were novel proposals, novel provisions. But they were not very far from what the previous government proposed in their Policy Paper on 29 July 2004. Thus, I believe the reason why the now Opposition (the then Government) could at long last see the error of their ways and come to the table and agree with this, and agree with the Draft that is before the people of this country.

Madam Speaker, I believe it is quite rewarding for this country to now see the Government and the Members of the Opposition going into this campaign with one focus, particularly on the Constitution of the Cayman Islands, and that is to try as much as possible to educate the public on the contents of this proposed Constitution in order that the people will vote in the affirmative on 20 May.

For myself, I intend to distribute the Draft Constitution to every household in the district of East End. I believe that we need to make a concerted effort to make sure that that document gets into the homes of the people of this country. This is historical. There are not many people left in this country that were involved in the 1972 Constitution, much less the 1959 Constitution. Many of those former legislators have passed on. It is history in the making. Therefore, we must educate our people.

There has never been a referendum held in the Cayman Islands. That in itself is history in the making. Madam Speaker, I am eternally grateful to the people of East End, in particular, and the people of this country, to be able to attach my name to this modernisation process. I was not at the last set of talks in London. Maybe I should get that straight right here and now.

I made my decision long before that I could not go. But there is a rumour that I did not go because Ellio was going. No, Madam Speaker. I can assure you and this honourable House and the good people of the Cayman Islands that that was not the reason I did not go. To tell you the truth, I did not see any reason why he should have gone, but that was not the reason I did not go.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: That is a debate for another time, and we have a lot of time coming up between now and 20 May.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, I guess—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, can we stop the crosstalk and let the Minister continue please?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, [inaudible]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: I guess Alden would have shut me up like how Rolston shut up Ellio.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Anyway, Madam Speaker, I have been—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, I—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, I have been a part of this process ever since it started in 2001. I have worked alongside my colleagues. You, Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, I am not trying to beat up on Mr. Ellio Solomon. All I am saying is that I have been a part of this process from the very beginning and my eyes were wide open throughout the whole process that I participated in.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: [inaudible]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: I never said anything about anybody falling asleep.

The Speaker: Can we stop the crosstalk please, honourable Leader of the Opposition and Second Elected Member for West Bay, and allow the Minister to continue his debate? I do not intend to continue this argument.

Honourable Minister, would you continue your debate please?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible]

[inaudible interjections and laughter]

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, will you continue your debate please?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, thank you.

Madam Speaker, what I was saying is that . . . you know, many times in my eight years in this honourable House the Leader of the Opposition and I have really gotten a little heated around the collar. I believe we are both very passionate about this thing called politics and the people of this country. We get a little hot around the collar at times. But more times than not, we agree. I think this is historical—the Opposition and the Government agree on this constitutional process.

Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition and I believe the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are the two Members of the Opposition that have served in Cabinet; the Leader of the Opposition on more than one occasion. He understands quite well how difficult it is to govern this country, particularly when the people of this country hold the Members of Cabinet whom they elected thereto accountable for things done and things not done. He understands that in the majority of instances the elected Members of Cabinet have absolutely no authority, but we are held responsible—and rightly so—by the people who elected us.

Madam Speaker, it is not expected that the people of this country will understand the operation of the Constitution of this country. But those of us who work it every day understand how difficult it is, particularly when an individual comes here in the position of governor and has such authority to govern without consultation with the local people. Suffice it to say that all governors, regardless of where they come from and without any disrespect to them, are mere individuals who have a mind of their own and will apply the Constitution the way they see fit, or how they interpret the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, we find ourselves at odds with these governors. The best persons to advise on the local aspect of this country just happen to be those who jump on the soapbox and are elected once every four years through the democratic process. This Government has never asked to take power away from Her Majesty through the Governor. But, certainly, this Constitution allows us at least the courtesy now of the Governor having to consult with Cabinet before exercising his authority.

Madam Speaker, I know it was said by some of the Members of the Opposition (but they were just politicking at the time), that we wanted to take power from the Governor. Now, Madam Speaker, there could be nothing further from the truth. It is obvious, after discussions with England that England agreed to some degree for the Governor to have to consult with the locally elected Government prior to making decisions on his or her reserved responsibilities.

It very difficult at times, I have found it to be very difficult when in my opinion what is being done is not in the best interests of the people that I represent and that I love. And there is nothing that can be done about it. I am glad that England agreed with us, not necessarily the Government only, the Opposition was part of it too. I must say, Madam Speaker, that the NGOs did not weigh in that much on the intricacies of governance of the country because a lot of them, like most people that do not operate the Constitution, did not grasp the working intricacies of the Constitution. But the Opposition agreed and supported those areas of modernisation in the Constitution. We can now be thankful that whatever happens in the future that much of the Constitution will allow greater involvement by the locally elected government.

Madam Speaker, I know the Leader of the Opposition wants to go home. He does not want this vote to be taken. He's not here. I know he wants to do that to ensure that he registers his vote. I will soon be finished to allow him to register that vote so in the evening of life he can look back at it.

Madam Speaker, this document is not everything everybody wanted. And it certainly will not be for many years to come. But I think the first thing we all have to come to grips with is that what is contained in a Constitution for the Cayman Islands is the prerogative of England. As long as we remain an Overseas Territory, it is England that decides what happens and what does not happen with the Constitution. And we have elected to remain an Overseas Territory. Some would like to call it a Colony. Well, I am not prepared to be colonised like my forefathers were.

Madam Speaker, a Constitution for an Overseas Territory, whatever has been agreed here, even if we believe it was by the insistence of the Government, the Opposition, the churches, the Chamber of Commerce, Human Rights Committee, if it was going to be of any detriment to England, certainly we can trust that they were not going to allow it to happen. So, all of us, NGOs, Opposition, Government, negotiated on what we believed was in the best interests of the country.

If there is ever a time that the old cliché which says the art of politics is compromise, then this is it. Much compromise had to be done. But we did the best we could. We have done our job. It is now up to the people of this country to do theirs.

Madam Speaker, with all of those NGOs, with the exception of the Human Rights Committee, and I believe they will between now and 20 May (I hope) at least endorse the Constitution and understand that in time anything can happen and changes can be made.

But with all of us endorsing this Constitution educating the populace on its contents, Madam Speaker, I feel confident that we will see an affirmative vote from the general populace. I just hope that it is not so onerous that we will see people turning away. That is my concern. I fear that if that happens, if this referendum fails, it is eight years for naught, maybe more—maybe 16 years for naught. And almost 40 years of operating under one Constitution that will turn into eternity.

Madam Speaker, that is not a good thing for this country. So, whatever we have to do to enfranchise people to ensure they are comfortable with voting in this referendum, as long as they are informed and they make an informed decision, and that turns out to be a “no” vote, then we will just have to settle for that. If we do not have a good turnout that is going to be worse. It is going to put this country back 40 years. And going forward this country needs to modernise its Constitution.

I believe that over the last eight years we have educated our people on the Constitution to the point where they are more knowledgeable. We must stop underestimating the capabilities of Caymanians. We do it all the time. We think we know what is best for them and which way they are going to do it and the likes. Make it available to them and they will make the decisions. But if it is so difficult that they feel it is going to delay them, that it is going to disenfranchise them, they are not going to participate. That is my greatest fear in this referendum.

I am going to do all that I can to ensure that the people are informed. I would love for them to vote “yes”. And I believe they should vote “yes”. But if I do nothing other than tell them to vote “yes” I would have failed too. We would have all failed, if we only went out there and said vote “yes” or vote “no”. Madam Speaker, we would have all failed. We need to go further than that. We need to explain it to them.

People are going about their daily lives. They have no time to sit down and read the Constitution like we do, like we are required to do because we work with it. They do not have that time. The responsibility lies squarely on our shoulders and [on the shoulders of] the NGOs and the Minister’s Association.

The Minister’s Association has the biggest audience in this country. This is not about the time for the separation of powers. The time to lead this country requires that the churches, the preachers get involved in instructing and informing, in educating their parishioners. They have endorsed this document and they have a responsibility with us to do that in order that the future of this country . . . the last Constitution lasted us from 1972. What is that? That is 35 years. This one can last us 35 too. Thirty-seven years, sorry.

Madam Speaker, everybody has really gone through the Constitution. There is much more I could say but I would only be repeating what a lot of other Members have said, especially the Leader of the Opposition. He tried to fit in everything. He and the Minister.

I really want to appeal to the Human Rights Committee. I really have not had a lot to say to them other than one on one. Publicly I say to my good friends who I have a lot of respect for, particularly those two young ladies . . . now, Madam Speaker, those two young ladies are perfect evidence that if given the opportunity Caymanians can do anything they want to do.

Madam Speaker, we have to respect the position of the Human Rights Committee. They could not go out there and say anything other than what they are saying. If they did that, then everyone would look at them as being failures at their job. So we have to respect that. Whilst we may not agree with them, we have to respect the position they have taken. But my plea to them is let us give this a chance. No one in their right senses in any Government would disenfranchise people such as the elderly and children and women. No one in their right senses would do that. They are of the view that they should be enshrined in the Bill of Rights. Madam Speaker, age, sex and the likes are already enshrined in here which encompasses all of those people.

Like the Leader of the Opposition said, the churches in this country have been the moral backbone of this country. I am not, like the Leader of the Opposition, prepared at this time . . . if the churches are comfortable with it, I believe it is only fair, only reasonable to give it a chance. Madam Speaker, there are other ways of changing this Constitution. A people initiated referendum is now permanently enshrined in the new Draft Constitution. So, all and sundry can go out there and get 25 per cent of the electorate to sign a petition which triggers a referendum. And a referendum can be on amendments to this Draft Constitution and Constitution when it is enacted.

So, to the Human Rights Committee, all is not lost, if they feel so strongly about it. I understand that there is a petition going around, which now the civil servants are being asked to sign. I think people have a right to do as they please. But, certainly, every time there is a petition going around in this country it is the same people spearheading it. You give them an inch . . . what was it Bob Marley said? You give them an inch, they take a yard. You give them a yard, they take a mile. But that is their prerogative too. It is their right too. But it is always the same people. And it is people who are always, always complaining and are never ever satisfied with anything.

Madam Speaker, this world is not perfect. And if we were perfect, we would not be here. Certainly, this Draft Constitution is not perfect. This is not a perfect world. But if they expect perfection then we will never, ever move ahead. The 1972 Constitution was not perfect.

Remember, Madam Speaker, we did some 11 amendments thereto since 1972, the majority of which started in 1992. The previous government made about three amendments to that Constitution. We did not even go to the people of this country to do those amendments. The 1992 to 2000 Government I believe made something like five amendments to the Constitution. They did not even go to the country. Now this Draft Constitution has provision for people initiated referendum and provision for amendments to the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, nothing is perfect. But there is always room for change, the same way changes were made . . . the difference is that now it must be done through the processes of transparency within this country.

The Leader of the Opposition says we are going to regret it. I remember, Madam Speaker, him putting part of the previous Constitution in place without going to the populace, you know—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, would you continue your debate instead of talking across the Floor please?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Yes, Madam Speaker, but one thing about me is that I am like an elephant. I have a long memory.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Might be bad.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: It might be bad, but you have to correct it—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister—

Hon. V. Arden McLean: —you have to prove me wrong.

The Speaker: —continue your debate and stop the crosstalk.

Thanks.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, now I feel it is going to deteriorate soon. And that is something that I do not want to get into because in the spirit of cooperation we have been doing pretty good today.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: But you know, Madam Speaker, I remember the father of the Minister of Education giving him this little plaque for his desk: “Neither seek nor shun the fight.”

I trust that we all understand that. And, Madam Speaker, I do not want to get into the he said/I said situation.

One of the items I wanted to speak on (and this will be my last item) was the National Security Council. This is the same one that the Opposition claimed we wanted to take over the police force and direct the police force when it was proposed. Now, Madam Speaker, one of the good things about it is that the Leader of the Opposition (and I agreed with him) fought to get onto that National Security Council. The second meeting that we held here he stood up very strong that he should be on it. I opposed that. But nevertheless . . . so I had to compromise and the Leader of the Opposition was—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, on a point of Order.

Point of Order

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, can I hear your point of order?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: What I fought for was that the post Leader of the Opposition be included in that National Security Council. It is not personal. This post is not personal to me. He might be in that post the next time.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, that was my interpretation of what the Minister said. He didn't mean you, per se, he meant the Leader of the Opposition.

That might be me the next time around!

Honourable Minister, would you continue your debate please?

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

That is what I meant. And I do apologise if I insulted the Leader of the Opposition, but I said in his capacity too. I can go on to say in his capacity the Leader of the Opposition fought for the Leader of the Opposition to be on there—if he wants me to explain it—and, Madam Speaker, after the next election it may very well be him there in that position. That is what I trust.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended for 10 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 9.02 pm

Proceedings resumed at 9.08 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. The Honourable Minister for Communication, Works and Infrastructure continuing his debate.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I shall wind up shortly.

Madam Speaker, I promise you I will not go back in—I hope the direction I take in my conclusion will not invoke the wrath of the Leader of the Opposition with his unnecessary . . .

Madam Speaker, like the previous Government, the role of this Government was to lead in this modernisation process. We made that promise during the campaign and I believe we have fulfilled that promise to the people of this country for it has taken us our full tenure to get what we believe is a reasonable Constitution for the people to make a decision on. We believe that it is in the best interests of the future of this country in that the elected representatives, whomever they may be in the future—be that me or someone else—will have more autonomy, which is what we believe the people of this country would like to see, particularly in the times that we are currently living in.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that this country will do well to vote yes at the polls. Future generations will thank us for modernising our Constitution and bringing it in line with practices of the 21st century.

Like the Leader of Government Business said, it can truly be said that this is the people's Constitution. There have been lots and lots of consultations. People have spoken. Not everybody is satisfied at this point, but if we linger we will lose that which we have. I implore the people of this country to come out and take part, get involved, participate in shaping the future of our country. The light is at the end of a very, very, very long tunnel. It is left to the people of this country to make that light become a reality.

Madam Speaker, I believe that in years to come this country will look back and be glad that this Government spearheaded the Constitutional process and the Opposition will share in that as well. When all is said and done, the road started rocky; we have brought our collective minds and abilities together, and today the outcome is that we have a document that we as a people can endorse and move forward.

Little things like whether or not it is Chief Minister or Premier make no difference. That is nomenclature. There is nothing about Premier being more powerful than a Chief Minister. It is about the leadership of this country. And, Madam Speaker, I well recall the Constitutional Commissioners of the 1990s when they said that (and I am paraphrasing) to think that Caymanians have always sailed ships, were always seamen, and understood what it was to have a captain on board, and so many people at that time were against ministerial government where you had a chief minister. That is all it is.

But do you know what? The people have come a long way. The previous Government put provisions in the Constitution for recognition of Leader of Government Business and Leader of the Opposition. So it is not that bad after all. And people are becoming a little more receptive to this maturity that we are going through.

Many of us are light years ahead. Like the Leader of the Opposition. He has seen it all. This gentleman, Madam Speaker, has been throughout the Commonwealth. He understands the processes. He understands the structures. And in many instances he is light years ahead of me. So it is up to us as leaders of this country to lead and encourage our people to follow, but not follow us blindly where they do not understand. We have a responsibility to engage them. We have a responsibility to educate them. We have a responsibility to inform them that we move this nation together.

Madam Speaker, I believe that this document that we have today, which is the result of many years of negotiation is the beginning of moving this country in tandem into the 21st century and beyond. After we are gone, the generation behind us will have something to build upon. They will be looked upon as true leaders of this country under this new Constitution.

Madam Speaker, I recommend this Draft Constitution to the people of this country. You [remember] the 1999 Partnership for Progress and Prosperity? I really did not think we would have gotten this far [because of] the rocky road that we had getting here; but, we have reached one stage of it. I beg the Members of this honourable House to finish this part of the journey, that is the Opposition as well as all of the NGOs and anyone who understands the process and the workings of the Constitution.

Former Members of Parliament as well, who are now coming back out to get a chance to have a re-run at this, I beg of them to stop thinking of re-election or election. All the candidates in the upcoming general election make the education of the people of this country on this Draft Constitution a priority. If every one of us in here loses, ensure that the people understand what is at stake in this document for the future of their children and grandchildren.

Madam Speaker, it is extremely important that we get an affirmative vote on this Draft Constitution. I wish the best for us all and I look forward to the composition of the Legislative Assembly remaining the same with a new Constitution. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Leader of Government Business wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Madam Speaker, thank you.

We have heard all who have contributed. We have gone several roads and back. We have heard various points raised. We have heard the Opposition say that they take the position, especially with the proposed Bill of Rights, that they agree with the position of the churches. We have heard them say, and the Leader of the Opposition specifically said that while this Constitution is a constitution that everyone has signed off with, he would have liked to have seen other things included in the Constitution. Madam Speaker, I think we could all say that. But that has [been] gone over before now, and I do not have to go over the case for that.

I want to thank everyone for all of their contributions during the course of the long day. Madam Speaker, I also want to make sure that everybody understands that from here on in the Secretariat will be facilitating the printing of hard copies of the Constitution, the proposed Draft, [doing] enough to be distributed so that all those who are interested can get copies. The Opposition, unless I misunderstood, seemed to indicate in their contributions today that they would wish to be a part of the process seeing it through at the end.

Let me quickly say . . . as the Second Elected Member for West Bay has returned to his seat he reminded me of one of the statements that he made about dragging us screaming. And when we got back from London—

[inaudible]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Kicking and screaming, he corrects me, rightly so. I forgot kicking. That they dragged us kicking and screaming after we returned from London and we finally had a joint press conference.

Madam Speaker, in his own parrot-like fashion he chose to say the words he did to make us believe it was their idea to have this joint press conference. Madam Speaker, we were not kicking and screaming. I can assure the country that. I can assure the country that once we got to the point (and I am not going to go into all the details) where everyone was on board in the process, it worked well and it has continued to work well. I am not one of those who believe in going through the disposition of how we got there. I thank God that we got there.

In truth I can safely say, Madam Speaker, while everybody has to pick their little wickets to bowl at every now and then, the fact is that every elected Member during the course of the three rounds of negotiations played their part. Every elected Member in the House, including Opposition and Government, played their part in making their contributions to the debate.

The other point, which I was so glad that he made, was that he was touting the good wisdom of including civil society in the process. I am so grateful to him for willingly admitting that from the beginning it was a good idea! From 2002, Madam Speaker, when we gave up two of our seats to ask for civil society to be included at the table when they, the Government, were kicking and screaming “No, no, no!” But you see, Madam Speaker, again confession is good for the soul all the time. So—

The Speaker: Could we continue with the debate please?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I will continue, Madam Speaker, just to say I couldn’t resist making that point.

[inaudible interjections]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, the truth is that we all realise and accept now that it was good to do so. And that was part of the inclusion that I spoke to earlier on.

So, Madam Speaker, without going into any more of the details, I want to sincerely thank all of the Members in this Legislative Assembly for the various contributions to get us to this point. The Motion has been approved. The Bill, for all purposes and intentions seems to be accorded the approval of Members.

As we move into committee now, there are two committee stage amendments, which you have graciously allowed us to bring. The one amendment is simply a . . . it is a technical matter, but it is simply a correction in the marginal note of clause 6 where, instead of the word “elections” that will be replaced by the word “referendum” because this is a referendum, not an election.

The other committee stage amendment, which was inadvertently left out at the very beginning, was the amendment in clause 2(2) where we want to delete the words “have the meanings respectively assigned to those expressions by” and substitute the words “have the same meanings, respectively, as in”.

And in clause 4, by deleting subclause (3) and substituting the following: “The question specified in subsection (1) will not have been answered in favour of Constitutional Modernisation unless more than fifty per centum of persons voting in the referendum vote in the referendum in favour of the question.”

Simply put, it means that those who vote in the referendum any percentage above 50 per cent is an indication that the electors want to proceed with the Constitution. There are those who have their own ideas about it. The reason the committee stage amendment is here is because when the original Bill was drafted there was an error which spoke to 50 per cent of the “electors”. But the principle that was agreed on to be applied was 50 per cent of those who vote.

We looked at it and the history is as follows: within the last four general elections over a 16-year period, the average percentage turnout of voters in the country (not per constituency but throughout the country) is between 75 per cent and 76 per cent. The way it is going to be structured is that voters will not have two different efforts to vote. We expect that the turnout will be as good an average this time as any other time. There is no reason why not.

If 75 per cent of the people come out to vote in the elections they will begin the process by doing both items one right after the other. So when they leave they will have completed both. We expect that the vast majority, if not all who vote in the general elections, will also cast their vote in the referendum, hence why the agreed percentile is 50 per cent of those who will be voting in the referendum. I wanted to explain that, Madam Speaker, so that when we go into Committee we will not be starting from scratch with that.

Madam Speaker, again, my thanks to you and the staff for taking this long time allowing us to complete the process so that now the Elections Office can get on with their job making sure that they have the correct preparations for the referendum on May 20. Again, Madam Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. As we take the vote I am grateful to all Members who have contributed.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled The Referendum (Constitutional Modernisation) Bill, 2009, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.
Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, again, because this is such an important vote, we would ask, because we are not quite sure how loud the Ayes were, if we could have a division please.

Clause 7 Observers

Clause 8 Legal challenge

Clause 9 Application of Elections Law (2004 Revision)

Clause 10 Expenses of referendum

Clause 11 Regulations

The Chairman: The question is that Clauses 7 through 11 stand part of the Bill. All those in favour—
Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Chairman.

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: From [Clauses] 7 and 11 I have an observation, a question.

Clause 7 enables the appointment of persons to observe the conduct of the referendum. Madam Chairman, we have not heard how, although I mentioned it, this is actually going to be conducted. Government has not told the House how this referendum is going to be conducted. That is on [Clause] 7.

I made note and I would have thought that the Leader of Government Business would have taken the time when he wound up, but he was so intent on talking about who could go and who went that he did not get into that.

On [Clause] 11, this enabled the Governor in Cabinet to make regulations relating to the conduct of the referendum. I cannot believe that the Cabinet is going to make regulations and this is not going to be referred to this legislature inasmuch as it deals with the matter of people going and casting a vote. I do not believe that that is something that I can stomach, unless the Government—and it does not say here—intends to bring this matter of regulations back to this House.

The Chairman: Is that it?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Those two, Madam Chairman, Clause 7 and Clause 11. I would like to have some indication from Government as to what is going to take place.

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Chair, in the area of [Clause] 11 which refers to “making such provision as to the conduct of the referendum as may appear to him to be necessary or expedient, and make such other provision in relation to any other matter as may appear to him to be necessary or expedient for the purpose of giving due effect to this Law”, that is simply a copy of the Elections Law. It involves the Governor in Cabinet, but it is not anything new.

Madam Chairman, if we check the Elections Law, it says the same thing, but I believe that most of that part of it involves the Schedule.

With regard to the other point the Leader of the Opposition brought up regarding the actual format for how the vote is going to take place for the referendum, I have been advised by the Elections Office that they do intend to meet with all Members of the Legislative Assembly to walk through it. [They will] hear thoughts to make sure that they come up with the best and most speedy way for this to happen. But during the course of this Meeting they will meet with Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Chairman—

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —I am glad to hear that there is an intention to meet to discuss the way it is going to be conducted. I hope that that will not impinge then on the need for amendments to this Bill.

On the matter of regulations by the Cabinet, we cannot just say that this is just as the Elections Law because that has several regulations. Certainly, you would not want to get to the point where something important arises and those regulations are there for the purpose of putting important provisions in place.

Madam Chairman, the part that worries me is that elections are held every four years; this matter of regulations is for this very important one-time regulation—which is going to be held in another two months, roughly. It gives me some cause for concern. As I said, it has to do with the franchise given to people to be able to go in and cast a ballot. In this case on whether or not we should have a new Constitution.

To be kind, we could very well say that we would hope that the Government or the Governor will not make a regulation that puts any situation at a disadvantage. That is my greatest concern.

I was going to give the example of a person going to get registered, a young person, first-time voter, and that will not relate to it, but that just shows you how things can happen. The child went to get registered, all he had was a passport and a driver's license and did not have a birth certificate and, therefore, could not vote. It is so easy for things to happen.

I want to give the Government the benefit of the doubt here, because at this point in time I do not know what we would be able to do in any event at this late stage. But it does give me some worry because of the importance of the type of regulation it is.

The Chairman: Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chairman, I hear the concern of the Leader of the Opposition. The only thing I will say is that this process of Cabinet making the regulations in relation to the elections, generally, is something that has obtained for, I think, as long as there has been an Elections Law. So, in the drafting of the Referendum Bill, that provision was simply copied.

I hear what he says, that this is a matter of great import, a first time and so forth. But I certainly do not put this process above the process of electing your representatives. I would say that if a Bill for Cabinet to make regulations in relation to the general elections and bi-elections has worked so far—not just with this Government but with governments past—I do not think that we need to have any undue concern about the propriety of what Cabinet will do in relation to these regulations.

We know full well that the whole area of the elections is something that is . . . the conduct of elections, the issuing of the writs and the various notices and so forth is a matter entirely within the province of the Governor and, by delegation, the Supervisor of Elections. And we have a long history in this country of having very properly run elections where there is no hint of anything like impropriety.

So, I do not know that we would want, at this late stage—as the Leader of the Opposition has acknowledged—to something to change what is an established process.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Bearing in mind, Madam Chair, that whatever transpires within this Clause will be on the advice of the Supervisor of Elections and it certainly would make absolutely no sense to either disenfranchise or make cause for any difficulty in the process when the whole idea is to make it as easy as possible to allow people to vote.

Hon. W. McKeewa Bush: However, Madam Chairman, I for one do not like the “fifty per centum of the people who are voting”, okay? That is one thing. What I do have concerns about is that this is not like the Elections Law because in the processes . . . the Elections Law, we have four years to examine any regulations. With this, we are not going to have that opportunity.

Is there anything that the Deputy Supervisor and the two officers who are here might be able to think could be raised as a regulation? We are dealing with the Constitution, remembering that we have yet to be told how the process is going to work and it is proposed to get together after this Bill has been passed. Maybe there is something they know, or they can think about that could come as a regulation. If we could allow them to brief the Leader of Government Business or . . .

The Chairman: Most certainly.

Mr. Scott and Mr. Connor, could you brief the Leader of Government Business on that question please?

[pause]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of Government Business .

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am advised by the Deputy Supervisor of Elections that there is, at this point in time, nothing that can be thought about, bearing in mind the dissolution of the Legislative Assembly, and it is just a measure in case something totally unforeseen might turn up that, in order to conduct the process in a proper manner, it might be needed. In other words, we could delete it, but then there would not be any . . . something might turn up. But the fact of the matter is, there is nothing at all that is foreseen at this point in time that will cause for any regulations to be made.

Hon. W. McKeewa Bush: Madam Chairman, I am wondering whether the Government would be willing to give an undertaking that should something of real importance out of the norm arise, that they would bring Members together and inform us of that matter before a regulation is promulgated.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Chairman, totally, totally, totally honest, I was going to suggest that. He just beat me to the draw by two seconds.

The Chairman: Okay.

Hon. W. McKeewa Bush: All the time.

[laughter]

Hon. W. McKeewa Bush: Madam Speaker, one more question to do with Schedule 1.

I heard—

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, we have not gotten there yet. Can I just put the question on Clauses 7 through 11?

Hon. W. McKeewa Bush: Oh, sorry. Thank you very much.

The Chairman: The question is that Clauses 7 through 11 do form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Chairman: The Ayes have it.

Clauses 7 through 11 passed.

Deputy Clerk: Schedule 1. Form of ballot paper. Schedule 2. Part 1: Application and modification of provisions of the Elections Law (2004 Revision). Part 2: Application and modification of provisions of the Elections Rule (2004 Revision).

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you.

On Schedule 1, I have a question on this ballot paper. I heard someone mention that this was a national ballot rather than a constituency ballot. But are we not saying on the ballot paper in which district the vote is taken. Why not?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Simply because the way the voting, as I understand it, will take place it will be all of the ballot boxes for the referendum together, not distinguishing how many people voted in what district for the ballot, and simply doing it at a national level. I would certainly believe, or I would hope, that the Opposition would see the wisdom in that rather than trying to do it by district.

The Chairman: Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chairman, if I might assist.

From our discussions with the Elections Office, they have done considerable research into how national referendums are held. It is important, it seems from the precedents, that it is not possible to identify which district voted yes, or which district voted no because this is a truly national referendum. One would not want the possible scenario of a particular district having been identified as having voted down the Constitution and the balance of the districts having been identified as having voted for it and any stigma, or worse, that might flow from that particular result.

So, we have been guided by the Elections Office and their research into matters like this.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Chairman.

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you.

I am not too sure that I can accept that because the one thing that this country lacks tremendously is statistics. This would be an important statistic. I certainly would want to know, and I believe the district of West Bay, which I represent, would want to know how they voted.

Maybe in other places it is that way, but I really believe, and I do not know . . . well, at this point in time I did not know what the Bill would be, so West Bayers . . . I have not got a feel for how they would accept this. As I said, my feeling is that we would want to know how the people in our districts feel about the Constitution. And this for certain, when we said it was going to take a vote and you do not get a turnout at a meeting, but, certainly, you expect you would have a turnout for the vote on the referendum and, certainly, that would give you an indication of where your people are with it. Otherwise, as legislators, we are batting in the blind.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Chairman, if I might just add—

The Chairman: Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Certainly I would think that some of that information, and whilst I understand some of the extreme scenarios that have been drawn out as underlying the reasoning, certainly that type of information would help guide this creature that we are going to create called the Constitution Commission. They are really going to know how the country feels and are able to target, perhaps educational efforts, et cetera.

Whilst I understand the whole concept of calling it a national vote, and that it is a matter of national importance, et cetera, certainly in the counts that I have seen on certain referendums . . . and of course we are looking at a slightly different jurisdiction in the US. They are able to report by precinct how some of their referendum counts are going. So, I think there is wisdom in us being able to have that information.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: As I understand it, it is a national vote for the referendum. The polling book will at least tell us how many individuals in each district voted. It will not by any stretch of the imagination deal with who voted for or how many voted for and how many voted against.

With regard to education in the Constitution, that is something that you would not want to spare any corner. That process will be throughout the three islands, I would expect. Just having that specific knowledge, I do not see the argument that is being put forward strong enough to want to turn around from the position espoused by the Elections Office, which generally we have accepted.

The unfortunate part of this is that even if we say let's have a meeting to thrash it out, it leaves us at Committee stage with this, which really puts the whole business in a bind by way of timing of everything that has to be done. I do not know how important it is to the Members. I hear what they are saying, but I am sure that they also hear the other side of the argument. The question is how important is what we are talking about.

As I said, we will get numbers; but those numbers will only indicate the numbers that voted on the referendum in the district, not how many Ayes or how many Noes.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: No. But if you are saying that in West Bay we will know if we have 3,500 voters that 3,000 people voted—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: —in the referendum, yes.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —in the referendum

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The poll book will say that.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I know that.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The poll book will give you those stats. We just do not know how many voted in West Bay for, and how many voted against.

The Chairman: Could I ask a question?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am so sorry.

The Chairman: And I guess I may be accused of being political . . . when this voting is all complete in the district of North Side you are not going to count the referendum ballots?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes. All the referendum ballots will be counted. But they are not going to be counted at the same time the election votes will be counted; they will be counted there and then in North Side. The referendum ballot boxes, as I understand it from the Elections Office, will be taken and secured and counted afterward because it was physically impossible for them to set up the system to be able to count two at the same time.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You see, in talking that this is a national vote, and I understand what we want, but the fact is that we do not have a national list. What we have is a constituency list.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: And, therefore—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: And the vote is taken based on that constituency list.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Right. And the constituency list, the polling book for the referendum will tell all the numbers that have voted. And when the counting is done it is just that it will be done all together, not separating the districts. It is physically impossible (as was explained to us) to do the count for the referendum at the same time they do the count for the elections.

The truth of the matter is that everybody wants to get the elections out of the way as swiftly as possible. It is taking enough in the number of bodies as it is to do what has to be done and if there was a separate and distinct effort to do that all at the same time, even at a different location, it means tons and tons of more bodies.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: How many people voted yes and how many people voted no in the district of West Bay.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: That is what I am saying. You will know how many people voted, but you will not know how many voted yes or how many voted no.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But I certainly . . . because, you see, in times to come . . . as I said, one thing that we do not have in this country is statistics. Certainly, that helps you with so many different areas of governance. In time to come, you have provision in here where you can go to single member constituencies. When people vote, they are not just voting for one item here; they are going to be voting for the entire Constitution. Those are the kinds of things that would give you and would give the Constitutional Commission, I think, good information.

Right now we all come here and we laud the idea that we should have a new Constitution. But do we know how many people support it in our Constituencies? Certainly, we want to get the majority so that we can get elected. We want to know that there is a majority in our districts that are supporting this thing. When we go out to explain it to them and leave it to their good judgment, we would hope that they would make the best judgment, and we believe they would. But I do not believe that it is a good thing for us not to know what percentage in our districts voted for or against. I do not believe that.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Chairman, I have to admit that this is one where the arguments come for, the arguments come against. We have trusted the Elections Office and their judgment and wisdom with regard to the process of elections.

I understand what the Leader of the Opposition is saying. Of course, the thoughts of the Elections Office are . . . actually you would have to say the converse in that you are not sure you want people to know what the vote was per district rather than at a national level because they would not want for the result of that vote to cause, depending on who the government is, or whatever position is taken. I am only telling you what they have said.

What I do not know is physically if it matters to them about the numbers being done by district. I do not know that. Perhaps if you give me a second and let me find that out.

The Chairman: Mr. Wright.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: I wonder if you may for a moment contemplate the results of other referendum, whether it is on the entire Constitution or any particular topic where a district votes it down, but the other districts vote in favour and it passes; and that district who knows that they voted it down feels that they are not obligated to abide by the national vote that was taken. Might that not help us to come to some understanding as to why you should not seek to identify the number of votes in each district?

The Chairman: I understand what you are saying, Mr. Wright, but that district, if they voted it down, would have to abide by the majority. But I personally feel that if a district is not in favour, why would they hide that they voted it down?

What I am saying is if the district of North Side votes it down, that is what they wanted to happen. Well, I am sure then they would abide by the majority rule.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Any district that does not give it a majority vote will have to abide by what the majority voted in the country, the same way you form a government.

I have not heard any good reason why I should not know, and the people should now know how many people voted yes or no. I do not see the reasoning in that. Somebody is going to know! That's the trouble. I, as a representative, will not know. Somebody is going to have that powerful information and I do not believe that we should leave it alone.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Mr. Chairman, the point of knowing has to do—

The Chairman: I am Madam Chairman, or Chairperson, but not Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Chairman, sorry.

The Chairman: It's twelve o'clock, okay?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I think one of the key points that has been made is the whole issue that certainly these ballots are going to be numbered. So that is the way in which you would know where certain numbers went to in the districts.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: And that is the next point. That is a very serious point, as far as I am concerned, because on the ballot is a number linked to what? Linked to the—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yeah?

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddin: Madam Chair.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: There are a lot of people who worry about that number.

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddin: Just my two cents.

Now that that discussion has taken place in relation to the fact that somebody will know, then I think that my position changes.

My understanding was that this stuff would go into . . . it does not matter. I have to say what I feel on this issue.

I thought that all of the various district votes were going to one thing and then it would be counted and nobody would know. It would be a national result.

[inaudible interjection] . . . that's exactly . . .

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddin: But if it is that somebody knows, then I think we have to reconsider this.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Somebody is not going to know? The Elections Office would know.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: No.

The Chairman: Somebody's going to know because you have to put the initial of the presiding officer on the ballot paper by the number.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: But the—

The Chairman: See it right there? "Initial of presiding officer"

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Chair.
I do not suppose—

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam—

The Chairman: Ms. Seymour.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Chair, I do not suppose there will be any anonymity with the elections either because you could follow through the same way with a counter foil and know who voted.

But, Madam Chair, I think we need to look at this in a different way. I think this is a national . . . you see, this happens every time we do it—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: No. It is not.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Just please listen.

I think this happens every time we do something that we all do not know much about. And since there is some issue that we might not know too much about, may I ask if . . . the night is long. We have been here a long time Madam Chair. It seems we have a lot of discourse on this.

Would protocol allow for us to suspend at the hour and let us go back and do some research, all of us, because this is all new to us. Talk with Mr. O.C. and his people and instead of arguing over the things .

. . . I know, Madam Chair, that all of us have our own opinion, but I think we need to get a little more research on this.

The Chairman: Ms. Seymour, I hear what you are saying, but it is now after 10 o'clock, and I am the only Member in this Chamber that has one and a half hours to drive, so I would ask if this Committee would allow Mr. Connor or Mr. Scott to take a microphone and explain this to the Committee, if that is in order with the Committee.

Are there any objections to Mr. Scott taking a microphone?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Chair, if you are okay with that, I think that would be helpful. I do not know if that will change anybody's mind, but at least we will understand very clearly what the position of the Elections Office is and why they have taken that position if we would simply allow them in short order to do so.

The Chairman: Mr. McLean.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Chair, I think that is the purpose of the Committee, to have someone discuss things. But I am not concerned about that. Where my concern is, is that we have to be extremely careful that we do not encroach into areas that would deteriorate the integrity, 1) of the general election in this country; and 2) of the referendum we are trying to do in the minds of people. We have to be very, very, very careful. Even though Committee meetings are not aired, somewhere they are recorded. The press is in here. We have to be very, very careful that the wrong message does not come out of this Committee.

The Chairman: Will the Committee agree for—

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Chairman, certainly we would like to hear from the election officials.

The Chairman: Mr. Scott.

Mr. Colford Scott [Deputy Supervisor of Elections]: Madam Chairman, in assisting the legislative draughtsperson in coming up with the Bill and in the research that we have done, it is our understanding that we were going to poll the electorate to determine a question of national importance. The result that we would come up with was what number of persons throughout the three islands voted for "yes" and the total number that voted for "no".

The statistics that we would have would show the number of persons that attended the various polling stations. So we would have numbers as to who turned out at the various polling stations who voted by post . . . the number of persons that voted by post—not who voted by post. . . and the number that voted at a mobile station. So we would have those sorts of statistics by polling station, by polling division, and we could show the turnout by district. But as far as the number of "yes" [votes] and "no" [votes] went, we would only have a total number for the three islands of "yes" and a total number for "no".

From that we would determine, based on the criteria set for determining whether the question has been answered in favour of constitutional modernisation, we would be able to say that the question has been answered in the affirmative or otherwise.

The Chairman: Does that satisfy?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: No. I understood perfectly what the election official said. But it does not satisfy my fears.

Madam Chair, there is no real reason why we are taking a vote based on a district list, a ballot that is initialed by a presiding officer who will know and, as I said, they are saying they are going to take this and put that ballot in with other ballots so somebody is still going to know. And somebody needs to know.

I cannot agree, and I am not going to agree that we should not have the statistics from each district. I just do not see what sense it makes. Maybe I am in the minority, but I am not going to put myself on record as supporting something that I do not agree with.

The Chairman: All right.

Honourable Members, I have allowed this to be aired, debated. I am now going to put the question.

The question is that Schedule 1 form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes and one audible No

The Chairman: The Ayes have it.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: I will have a division, Madam Chair.

The Chairman: Madam Clerk.

Ayes: 6

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts
Hon. Alden M .McLaughlin, Jr.
Hon. Arden V. McLean
Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson
Ms. Lucille D. Seymour
Mr. V. Alfonso Wright

Noes: 2

Hon. W. McKeever Bush
Mr. Rolston M. Anglin

Abstention: 1

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden

The Chairman: The result of the division is 5 Ayes; 2 Noes, 2 Abstention.

[inaudible interjection]

The Chairman: Well, any Member who does not vote Aye or No abstains.

[inaudible]

The Chairman: The Honourable Minister of Communication and Works.

[inaudible]

The Chairman: Well, if Members say the Minister voted Aye, can someone get him to come back into the Chamber? Because I did not hear any answer at all, and neither did the Clerk.

[pause]

The Chairman: He said that he said "Aye"?
The Minister says that he said Aye.
So, that would be 6 Ayes, two Noes and 1 abstention. Schedule 1 forms part of the Bill.

Schedule 1 passed by majority.

The Chairman: The question is that Schedule 2 form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Chairman: The Ayes have it.

Schedule 2 passed.

Deputy Clerk: A Bill for a Law to make provision for the holding of a referendum on proposal to modernise the Constitution of the Cayman Islands; and to make provision for incidental and connected matters.

The Chairman: The question is that the Title form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Chairman: The Ayes have it.

Title passed.

The Chairman: The question is that the Bill be reported to the House. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Private Member's Motion No. 11/08-09—Parental Responsibility

The Speaker: I recognise the Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Private Member's Motion No. 11/08-09, entitled, Parental Responsibility, standing in my name, reads:

BE IT HEREBY RESOLVED that The Affiliation Law (1995 Revision) be revised to remove any time restriction on the proof of paternity.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?
Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Madam Speaker, I beg to second the Motion.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Affiliation Law (1995 Revision) sets out a framework in which affiliation is proved within the Cayman Islands. Section 3(1) of the Law reads: “Any single woman who is with child or who is delivered of a child may- (a) either before or anytime within 12 months after the birth of such child; (b) at anytime thereafter upon proof that the man alleged to be the father of such child has, within the 12 months after the birth of such child, paid money for its maintenance or contributed to its support; or (c) at any time within the 12 months next after the return to the Islands of the man alleged to be the father of such child upon proof that he ceased to reside in the Islands within the 12 months next after the birth of such child, make complaint, an oath or affirmation, before a Justice of the Peace alleging some man to be the father of the child.”

Madam Speaker, I must say that this particular piece of legislation is not one that, in my normal course as an elected Member, I would have picked up and read. However, several months ago a rather distraught young lady called me. She was distraught due to the fact that the alleged father of her child—who had fled the jurisdiction because of a run-in with the law when the child was very young—had subsequently returned to the Islands and for a period of time that fact had not come to her knowledge.

After she became aware, she then set in train motion on her own part to try and figure out what she needed to do. Now, this young lady is not of means or of a family of any real sophistication so she tried to go it alone.

As matters would turn out, some two plus years after the father had returned she finally made it to court. To her dismay she was told that, under the relevant law, her application was time barred and that the child, now age 14-plus, could not have her rights in any way brought about under this particular piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, as she explained this to me I sat and listened carefully (this was by telephone). I was shocked, to say the least, because I never dreamt that in this day and age we would have such a law on our statute books which puts such restrictions in place as it relates to something that is fundamental to humanity—a father and a mother.

Madam Speaker, as I read from an international perspective what obtains in this whole debate, we can see that from the 1960s this whole issue became something of an international highlight. Various international organisations, such as the United Nations and the Council of Europe, have weighed in heavily as to thoughts on what are some of the major issues surrounding persons who are born out of wedlock. So much so, that there is a [European] Convention on the Legal Status of Children Born Out of Wedlock promulgated by the Council of Europe.

Madam Speaker, I am not going to go into any long, technical details as it relates to what has happened and what these international bodies have said because I honestly and truly think that, as it relates to us in Cayman, this ought to be a matter that we look at from a conscience perspective and say from within our conscience do we believe that there should be any form of time bar placed on a mother to prove this affiliation in a court of law.

Internationally it has been long accepted, and people who live in societies [as] we claim to be, which is a modern, fair society, [where] children are deemed to be equal irrespective of whether or not that child was born in the institution of marriage or outside . . . Humanity has come to that conclusion for a simple reason. If a man fathers a child, that child is his. That is the most important act and responsibility that any male on this planet can carry out because no child has ever asked to be born. No child has ever asked to be conceived.

For a long time in our community we have had situations that have been allowed to happen—and in my opinion, some should shock the conscience of any reasonable human being. We have allowed them to happen with very little (in some instances, not all) care by the wider community and society.

Madam Speaker, after speaking to the young lady I quickly called two attorneys-at-law whom I know personally. I was still in West Bay and had not gotten down to the Legislative Assembly to actually see the law for myself. So, I called them to see if this was indeed the case, and they both confirmed it to me.

I also took the opportunity to speak to a member of the judiciary to get their perspective. The very simple question that I asked was whether or not in their view there was a reasonable justification for this time bar to be in place. The unambiguous answer that I got was, No, there was not.

Madam Speaker, as I have looked at some of the history behind some other jurisdictions in this regard, I saw that in some societies, because of certain religions practiced these matters do not get dealt with at all. But we do find that in more modern societies, like ours, every one of them have dealt with it in some form or fashion.

If we look at what we have in our library here at the Legislative Assembly, it clearly says 12 months. However, there is one bit of confusion. And my understanding is that the UK has increased its own domestic legislation and it deals with it on the basis of now 24 months.

Madam Speaker, there are many groups, in particular human rights groups, who advocate that the rights of women and children are deeply disenfranchised by legislation like this that places these types of restrictions and really basically allows a man to, as it relates to paternity, to fatherhood, to do as he pleases, as it were. In a lot of instances a lot of people do not know or do not understand what the legal obligations are within the country they live. Naturally, you can easily hear stories about people who get frustrated and are not able to exercise their particular rights in a timely manner for whatever reason. In some instances it is out of fear. I think Cayman is growing up a long way in that regard. Perhaps we could say that particular aspect of this issue has greatly diminished if not almost completely disappeared—certainly since the 1960s, if you compare 40 years ago to today.

Madam Speaker, I called the young lady back, because I told her I would double check. She herself was in a state of shock and was calling me because she really believed that the judge must have made an error, that there must have been a mistake, that there was no way in the world that that could have been the case. When I called her back to tell her, she was disappointed and distraught, to say the least. In fact, I broke the news to her and her younger sister who had taken a great interest in this whole issue, because for a long time she had helped her older sister with the raising of her niece.

Madam Speaker, even within our small community this whole issue of paternity and the traditional and accepted methods of the establishment has been one that has resulted in certain longstanding rumours. The first method of establishment is the assumptive method. The assumption is that once a couple is married and they have a child, the child is for the husband. Realistically, we know that is not always the case.

Is it not rather ironic that we have a system that basically says you can have a situation where a child is not for a particular man, but because of their legal status to a woman the law automatically by assumption bestows upon that child certain rights and benefits? Yet that same man could have a child—indeed his biological child—and because of this time bar, that child—who did not ask to be conceived and come into this world—is treated completely differently.

Madam Speaker, for a long time men took advantage of the fact—not the belief, but the fact—that this was a man's world and everything, from the crafting of legislation to employment, to entrepreneurship, was slated and geared towards men and for the benefit of men. For a long time the world just accepted that for what it was, because it was just that—a fact!

We have seen in the last six to seven decades that international paradigm shift where we have done things that at the time would have been so controversial—giving women even the right to vote. We just celebrated here in our Cayman Islands the marking of our becoming mature and removing the Sex Disqualification Act from our books.

Madam Speaker, is every piece of legislation we have perfect? No. And there are those who make the argument that we should not touch things because we might have unintended consequences. Madam Speaker, I say to those people who think that way that, in my humble opinion, this law was crafted in this way for intended consequences—intended and deliberate consequences!

Whilst the House may not accept the Motion (we will wait and see), the reality is that I do not believe that any of us who can search our consciousness on this 26th day of February 2009 would say that we believe that this type of legal infrastructure is the right thing to have established in our country. I cannot believe that in this day and age where we are at war, as it were, with the Human Rights Committee, while they eloquently put forth the point that so much of our legislation is so inadequate and geared toward men and not encompassing enough to completely enfranchise women, children, the disabled and the elderly, that we would continue to believe somehow that this is good.

I personally believe that it does not come down to any technical exercise; I think it simply comes down to what is in your conscience and what you see as fair and equitable.

Madam Speaker, despite the fact that there are volumes of information on this subject . . . In fact, I did two particular searches. The first search was on the history and comparative law in this regard. The volume of information was overwhelming. Certainly, there is no absence of it. What I can say is that the [European] Convention on the Legal Status of Children Born Out of Wedlock, as promulgated by the Council of Europe, does say that the particular rules which individual territories come up with should be a matter of internal law.

That is what we have. We have our particular policy written out in the Affiliation Law (1995 Revision), internal law to the Cayman Islands.

I decided, after having looked at the volumes of information . . . and most who know me know that unless there was an absolute necessity, there was no need in my contribution to get into all sorts of technical aspects of which country has five years, ten years or whatever system. I personally believe that this ought to be about what we as individual legislators feel is fair to unborn children—human beings who are brought into this world and never asked to come. But, by God, Madam Speaker, they should not be discriminated against by the very law of their own land, and they should have every opportunity to be seen as equal in the eyes of the law. I can tell one and all that despite what they may feel and think, they are certainly seen as equal in the eyes of the Almighty.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I believe that the Motion before us is a good one and, I dare say, a necessary one. There are many things within our small communities that we take for granted. It would shock many of us if we had any idea of the number of birth certificates in this country for members of well established families whose fathers are missing on the register. In many instances there was no good reason. No problems within a family, or with the mother and father, but similar to the message made by the mover of this Motion, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, while this particular father he is speaking about fled the jurisdiction, in many other cases the father was off island for work reasons and unable to attend or assist in taking care of getting [the child] registered. In so doing, many of our Caymanian people know who their fathers are, but they are simply not listed on that birth certificate and the time bar prevents them from doing it.

I am in agreement. I would venture to say also that there are a lot of other reasons why things do not happen. Sometimes a young woman gets pregnant and there are issues with significant others before the child is born and things happen to prevent the father from being registered. But as time goes on these wounds are healed and people come to accept their situation. Again, [they] would be quite willing to make the necessary adjustments, but the law, the time bar, also prevents that.

Madam Speaker, I am very familiar and close to a similar situation. A lot of times children are born and the father is not, for whatever reason, notified at the time, while we will say that many times the reason these things are not done will be because the father has not lived up to his end of the responsibility.

But I am very familiar with a case, Madam Speaker, where a young lady got pregnant (and I know there are many other cases like this) and did not inform the father. As time went on, the child grew to adulthood and began asking questions about who her father was. She was connected with her father when she was 23 years old. At that point, Madam Speaker, the time bar was in full effect. Although the father would wish to be shown as the father of this child, [he] cannot do so.

I see no good reason why we should not allow for the amendment to the law. I see a lot of good reasons why it should be done. However, I would also like to suggest that we proceed cautiously.

I also know of many stories where over a period of time there could be a few individuals who are considered a child's father. Sometimes it's okay to say that this one is the father, and sometimes it's okay to say another one is the father. Many individuals go through life not really knowing exactly what the situation is. I believe that any changes made to the register, or [for] any late registrations we should probably consider a mandatory DNA testing so that we do not go through that rollercoaster with kids where people attempt over the life of a child to change the name of the father more than once. A lot of crazy things happen in our societies. So, I would say that for the peace of mind for families, especially for the children, that we put whatever safeguards we have to put in place to make sure we get it right the first time.

I believe that we should make whatever efforts we can to regularise situations like this. It is one of those things that I believe has existed for a long time. I believe there were good reasons at the time, but times do change. Customs that suited us in days gone by are no longer societal norms. We can step out of what we do on a daily basis; things that we have become used to when the changes are necessary and will improve the quality of life for our people.

Again, I am in support of the Motion providing that we take whatever necessary precautions we need to get it right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I too would like to lend my support to this Private Member's Motion on Paternal Responsibility and the whole issue of a 12 month time bar.

In this day and age where we are crying out for parental responsibility and, in particular, that of fathers and all of the talk of dead-beat dads and such, I think it is very important that we try to regularise and sort out any mysteries that this type of legislation creates at the moment.

Obviously, this was done back at some point in time when whoever was here thought it was the right thing to do. Back in those days DNA [testing] was probably quite unlikely as that is a fairly recent science. We can see where, not being in the heads of those at the time, there may have been justifiable reasons.

As the mover of the Motion (the Second Elected Member for West Bay) and my colleague (the Fourth Elected Member for George Town) have rightly articulated, there are many reasons why we need to have the parents of children on the birth certificate. Many times that by itself will force responsibility if there is a dad out there who probably knows in his heart of hearts that he is responsible. But for whatever reason, maybe embarrassment, lack of resources, or pressure from other angles, he may prefer to let sleeping dogs lie, and his name is not involved. At least there's no proof and he can walk away and not have to deal with this.

Unfortunately, these days we have more and more single parents. We have young ladies becoming pregnant more and more out of wedlock. Sometimes there are different fathers involved. If we do not seek to regularise these types of situations, then I think we are failing in our duties as responsible legislators.

This is obviously an anomaly that has existed for some time. The Second Elected Member for West Bay, to his credit, has picked up on it through a personal experience. Whatever we have to do as legislators to correct these types of situations, that is what we are here for.

The law is not static. Laws change as times change. In these days all of the talk of human rights and the rights of children, in particular, are spoken of and indeed are very, very important. We need to ensure that that child who comes into this world and will likely have this stigma of “fatherless child”, and not only the stigma but the lack of support in many ways, financial and otherwise . . . Madam Speaker, I think it is incumbent upon us to do the right thing.

There are many facets to this, but I think the bottom line is that we have a situation on the books that simply is not right. No matter how long it takes, I think that once that fact becomes known, and as my colleague the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said, with the assistance of DNA [testing] I see no reason why this cannot be removed and a lot of these situations rectified. Going forward that is hopefully one problem we will not have.

Madam Speaker, with those few words, I would like to lend my support to the Motion.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to lend my support to Private Member's Motion No. 11/08-09, Paternal Responsibility.

Madam Speaker, perhaps apropos would be “Woe is me, shame and scandal in the family”, which is an old West Indian song. But when I go back to my childhood and the era that I grew up in, a lot of people in my time came from what we would call illegitimate families or where people cohabited but never married. And when you look at the birth certificates of a lot of the children, their father is absent. As the honourable Member said, the era was pro men.

As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, we have a lot of fatherless children. I have met many people . . . and I believe I know the young lady the Member is talking about because I believe that she brought it up to us at one time.

We have a lot of people that would really like to know who their father is. It has affected a lot of young people. It is sad that everybody has a father . . . you are in school and this one has a father, that one has a father, but you do not know your father because of restrictions in laws that prevented your mother or someone from registering you. If we go back in time we will see a lot of this. It is unfortunate.

As the honourable Member said, you can hide under a marriage too. Things happen. We are all human beings. I know of instances where people in their 30s and 40s realise that the person whom they called father was not their father, because the mother then had the stomach to say so.

Madam Speaker, I know the Honourable Minister is here, and you may correct me if I am wrong, but the CEDAW (Convention for the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women) was passed in this House. I also believe it was given out to the various departments to look at the laws which would have discriminated against women. I dare say that if it had been completed and presented to this House, maybe they would have caught this aspect of the Affiliation Law.

All I wish to say is that we expedite that revision—whether it is this House or the next House—and that we bring it forward, and comb all the laws with a good fine-tooth comb so we do not come up with these limitations. In this modern day, to put such a limit on this is absolutely ludicrous. We, in this House as modern thinkers in the 21st century must be able to flag the injustices that have been bestowed upon women, in particular, by some set of laws or regulations. So, I would ask the Honourable Minister if he would use his good office to ask the Attorney General to immediately, or ipso facto, try to complete the research on all the laws that would prove discriminatory against women so that we will not have to come to this House again and debate this because we would have had the offices of the Attorney General and his staff with a fine-tooth comb go through this.

I would like to thank the Second Elected Member for West Bay for bringing this up. Again, it shows that we are bipartisan when it comes to equality and justice for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I too rise to offer a few words of support for the Motion brought by my colleague, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, and seconded by my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Madam Speaker, I think it is fair to say, as the Third Elected Member for George Town just said, that we are bipartisan when it comes to recognising the need to support our women and children in our society. As times change, we need to adapt our laws to be in line with the rights, privileges and protection that needs to be afforded to those individuals.

Listening to the presenter, I too have been approached with many instances where fathers and mothers have faced the challenges under the current Law. I agree that the Motion is very timely and we look forward to a solution.

Thinking through the process and having done some reading, I recognise that while we talk about Cayman being removed, this is a challenge that a lot of other countries have gone through very recently as well, namely, the UK, in recognising this as a problem and making amendments to further allow for the representation, going so far as removing the whole stigma attached by taking away the word “illegitimate” as far as children would be concerned.

One question that I want to raise is the whole issue of, while we are proposing to improve the law to recognise that fathers are parents, we want to ensure that it is not necessarily giving parental responsibility to fathers by simply allowing them to get registered. As I am sure you will be aware, Madam Speaker, if a mother has custody and has raised a child, and a father comes along, proves from a DNA perspective that he is the father, [gets] registered on the birth certificate, [is allowed] to have custody or residence, or share parental rights, it could cause great difficulty, especially on a single mother who has raised a child for a significant number of years alone. So, we want to ensure that while giving recognition, allowing the father to be recognised as the father, [that this] will not necessarily take away in our attempt to protect the rights of the mother. That has been done, and the first step, obviously, is allowing recognition of the father.

I noticed we talked about this being a right, to recognise the father, for the mother giving recognition to who the father of the child would be as well. But if we think through the process, it is also a benefit to the child. We have also been made aware of many instances where, for inheritance purposes for example, a child would have difficulty down the line proving that he is a child of the father.

Madam Speaker, we obviously have quite a bit of work to do as far as bringing our laws in line. It is complex because when you start talking about rights, obviously [it is about] giving one individual more rights without negatively impacting or infringing on the mother's rights, because in these cases we are talking about unmarried couples. We know that when a married couple has a child the assumption is made that the husband is the father. When he is registered as such, he is given parental rights and parental responsibility.

In this case we are talking about unmarried couples. If it is within the first 12 months . . . but if it is getting into extended times, we can envision a 12- or 15-year old that has lived with and been raised by the mother, the father comes along and proves he is the father and gets registered as the father and then starts saying that he needs custody or wants shared custody. We know the way that that is done in other territories, Madam Speaker. It would be that he would then have to apply to the court that would look at all the particulars of that individual's situation and make a ruling. Maybe not necessarily giving custody, but maybe giving contact to the father at that point in time.

We just want to make sure that when we are amending the law that we do not do it in such a way that [it] would give any kind of automatic equal rights to a father just by being registered.

I know that was the intention of my colleague because we discussed this going forward. I am sure he will discuss it, but I just wanted to give some other information in regard to the concerns that could come about.

Madam Speaker, with those short remarks, I too want to give my support to the Motion and again congratulate my colleagues for bringing such a timely motion forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, I rise also to give my support to this Motion before the House, brought by the Second and Fourth Members of our constituency. I certainly want to thank them.

There is no doubt, Madam Speaker, that we need to address the challenges that women face when they bring a child into the world. In talking to both of them—one (who is the mover) has already spoken—they have set that out correctly. There are other matters that must be looked at.

There are cases that I have also come across, even faced because of family matters. There are cases certain mothers who do not want the father on the birth certificate. When they go to register the child they do not put the father's name on. They register without the father and they do not put the father's name on, even though the father has taken a parental test and has borne his responsibility. So, in amending legislation there are many attendant matters that need to be addressed.

More than anything else, I believe that the court needs to address this matter of the responsibility if parents are separated, as to the rights of fathers and mothers, whether we do it by legislation or by rules. Sometimes they do set out visitation rights as to when parents can have a child, whether it's weekends or certain weekends. I think it needs to be looked at better than it is.

Also, what needs to be looked at seriously is when money is paid into the courts for children, or when they are making the order for how much money is to be paid. I have had complaints from constituents on both sides, mothers and fathers. They pay money, the mothers take it and the children are not getting the benefit of it. And also mothers not getting anything from these deviant (for want of a better word) fathers who are not taking up their responsibility for their children. They can bring the child into the world and then after that forget all about it. And some mothers are reluctant to go to court because they say there's no good in going to court because they get no benefit. It is a serious, serious situation.

I believe that all legislators come across this. The truth is that with such a catastrophe of children becoming parents before they are adults in this country, they wind up on our doorsteps. They talk to us about it. They come to us because sometimes they have nowhere else to turn. I guess many of the legislators here are finding what I found over the years. They land on your doorstep and ask for assistance. Or then end up with Government. And the truth is they do not get from Government, they get from us. Not from the Government's social services, but from us as legislators. Teenage pregnancy is a catastrophe in the Islands.

Hopefully, any new administration will take this law and look at it across the board because there are attendant matters that seriously need to be addressed, Madam Speaker.

I will stop there. I congratulate our Members on this side for going through the law and asking for amendments at this point.

Thank you.

Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As the seconder of this Motion I too want to support what has already been said, and to make the point that research shows that in other jurisdictions the courts had to make special provisions. In cases where fathers who were not registered as the father at the time of the child's birth [but] wanted to become the legal guardian or be recognised as the father of the child and were not able to do so, special provisions had to be made to accommodate this.

Madam Speaker, with all the changes that have been taking place, it is time that we adopt and let the father assume the role of the legally recognised father rather than being denied that through this loophole in the law.

I support what has previously been said and I give this Motion my wholehearted support.

Thank you.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, thank you.

I just rise to say that the Leader of Government Business intended to reply to the Motion currently on the Floor moved by the Second Elected Member for West Bay. Unfortunately, again he has had to go off to a very important meeting and is currently engaged in that meeting.

If no other Member would like to speak, I certainly would like to reserve the right for the Leader of Government Business to reply to the Member for West Bay who brought the Motion. In so doing, I would request that we adjourn the House until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock so that he be given that opportunity to reply on behalf of the Government.

The Speaker: Thank you, Honourable Minister.

I do understand the situation because I guess the Government has . . . and I am sure that the honourable mover would like for the Government to accept or deny his Motion . . . so the question is that this honourable house do now adjourn until 10 am tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

'A New Focus' for Cayman Islands Tourism –A Revised National Tourism Management Plan 2009-
2013

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for the Ministry of Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House a document entitled, 'A New Focus' for Cayman Islands Tourism—A Revised National Tourism Management Plan 2009-2013, which has appended to it the Go East Initiative Policy and Strategic Framework.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

There can be little debate about the importance of tourism to the Cayman Islands. It directly underpins thousands of jobs and small businesses and indirectly supports a wide array of professional fields, including accountants, auditors, marketers, consultants, insurers, supermarkets, dry cleaners, security firms, and the list goes on and on.

Tourism both educates and employs many Caymanians and has provided a world stage for local talent in areas ranging from culinary skills, sports and the performing arts. Tourism both draws upon and complements our natural competitive advantages and paired with financial services, the other pillar of our economy, there are currently no alternatives which rival the contributions of this industry.

Therefore, the strategic management of tourism continues to be of critical importance. Whether the industry is in a period of fast-paced growth, or when it faces unprecedented global economic distress, as currently prevails, a coordinated plan is necessary to manage the industry.

The National Tourism Management Plan (or the NTMP) delivers such a plan having drawn upon widespread consultation including town hall meetings in all districts throughout Grand Cayman, including the Sister Islands. Guiding input was received from members of the civil service, the public and private sectors and the community at large. In addition to the public and stakeholder meetings, over 200 surveys were submitted. This broad-based feedback was reviewed and consolidated by the Tourism Company, the same UK based company which prepared the former 2003 policy framework and which is well known for similar work it has conducted around the world and in the UK.

In general terms, Madam Speaker, the policy outlines the current state of tourism, agreed recommendations going forward, and, finally, lists action points—67 of them—that are recommended to take place over the next five years. In addition, the new NTMP includes for the first time a section outlining the policy on cruise tourism and an addendum establishing the Go East Initiative Policy and strategic framework to shape the way the eastern districts are developed, heeding lessons learned from the tourism and development along the Seven Mile Beach.

The National Tourism Management Plan 2009-2013 is not entirely a new document, but, rather, it builds upon and revises the former five-year management plan. Part of the issue with that plan was that almost immediately after it came into force we were struck, unfortunately, by Hurricane Ivan. Many of the objectives that were contained in the original plan are still relevant today and were not able to be implemented simply because the country had to focus on recovery from Hurricane Ivan.

Madam Speaker, given the direct and indirect affects of this industry, tourism touches every resident in these Islands. Directly, it creates employment and entrepreneurial opportunities, but it also helps to support a range of local services which sustain the quality of life that Caymanians and other residents enjoy, such as the extensive network of transportation available to and within the Islands, a wide range of shops, restaurants and services, excellent telecommunications and utility services, and a wide range of heritage attractions, such as the Turtle Farm, Botanic Park, Pedro Castle and the National Museum.

Areas which have seen significant progress in the past three and a half years include the area of human capital development. Subsequent to Hurricane Ivan, the Department of Tourism added the position of deputy director responsible for product, thus elevating the management of Cayman's human capital and product on par with that of the marketing and promotional efforts.

This policy has allowed us to focus on programmes such as the Tourism Apprenticeship programme (established two years ago) which for the first time provides vocational training for persons seeking to enter an advanced career in the hospitality industry. The Apprenticeship programme is a well-rounded programme which includes both academic and practical training under the supervision of experts within the field. Apprentices are given a stipend to offset living expenses while they learn.

Students who successfully graduate are not only recipients of the regionally recognised CaribCert

Qualification, but must perform sufficiently well in the academic aspects of the programme to also earn college level credits from the University College of the Cayman Islands, thus paving the way for continued education which some of our apprentices are already pursuing.

In only its second year, this new vocational training programme complements the ongoing scholarship programme of the Ministry of Tourism which at any given time is supporting approximately 30 students pursuing degrees in tourism related fields. While such programmes do not guarantee success for the scores of students who have benefited from this free education, the likelihood of a fruitful career is vastly improved, and these students are contributing at all levels to the industry within both the public and private sectors. I am pleased to say that a significant number of our graduates have returned working within the Department of Tourism. We are very proud of their performance.

The second important training programme which touches upon all facets of the tourism industry is the PRIDE Programme—Personal Responsibility In Delivering Excellence—a customer service programme. Relying upon mystery shoppers, the programme benchmarks service levels and through target training, seeks to instil higher customer service standards consistently throughout the industry.

Other areas of the former NTMP which have been improved include cruise tourism management with agencies, including the private sector's Association for the Advancement of Cruise Tourism, emerging to better organise the sector and contribute to policy development.

Madam Speaker, many of the issues identified in the NTMP are ongoing matters which require constant vigilance and analysis. Most topics raised in the 2003 NTMP do not lend themselves to ever being closed or completed, but, rather, require continued focus. In the 2009 NTMP, such areas of continued interest include policies governing cruise tourism management, environmental protection, development planning and human resources. Also, the method of implementation was an area of concern for us. All of these matters are addressed in the new five-year plan.

The new implementation model adopts a revised approach to the initial launch which called upon more than 100 members of various committees to meet regularly and be responsible on a daily basis for the implementation of the policy. The revised approach maintains the structure of having a steering committee and subcommittees, but will streamline membership to more manageable numbers.

The role of the NTMP committees will also change from being charged with implementation to instead being responsible for oversight and reporting. As you would expect, Madam Speaker, the plan continues to require cooperation from various government agencies to implement ongoing action items.

In partnership with the Minister of Tourism and Cabinet, the NTMP Steering Committee and various government agencies are about to embark upon the process of identifying priority action items to commence work on over the next five years. The benefits of this new approach include increasing the rate of successful, sustainable implementation by assigning responsibility for implementation to agencies of the Cayman Islands Government who have the budget, resources and authority to effect the change. This revised approach aims to ensure that resources are allocated and priority given to the respective action items thereby demonstrating increased results and generating momentum and support for the National Tourism Management Plan.

Secondly, this approach optimises the benefits of the dozens of committee members, an external consultative and oversight role, by redefining the expectation of the subcommittees and standardising reporting templates.

As I indicated earlier, there was significant public consultation on this document. The main issues that were cited by members of the public and stakeholder groups included the issues relating to control of cruise numbers, preservation of our natural resources, control of costs and prices in the Cayman Islands, cost of access to the Cayman Islands, getting more Caymanians into the industry, control of development, issues with respect to the capital of George Town, quality of service and control of crime and maintaining safety.

The main opportunities identified by those consulted included focus on sustainable development, promotion of Caymanian culture and heritage, developing new and/or alternative forms of tourism, and improving air access.

In answer to some specific issues, 84 per cent of the people consulted felt that there was a need to control cruise ship arrivals and to reduce the negative impact. This has been done by the Port Authority adopting a policy to control the daily number of cruise visitors.

Eighty-one per cent of those consulted felt there was a need to control new accommodation development. They also felt there was strong support for more education, better pay and increased awareness to encourage more Caymanians to enter the tourism industry.

Madam Speaker, they also indicated that strong support would be there for law enforcement and the management of the destination to ensure that our marine environment is protected and properly policed. There was strong support for a range of initiatives to manage and protect sensitive sites on land including support for law enforcement to ensure that these sites are properly policed and protected. There was less certainty about the need to reorganise tourism with a large portion of respondents unsure on this point.

The respondents, individuals and agencies that were consulted included, but were not limited to, the Ministry of Tourism, the Department of Tourism, the Department of Environment, the Planning Department, the Cayman Islands Investment Bureau, the Department of Agriculture, Cayman Airways, CUC, the Water Authority, Hazard Management, Cayman Islands Tourism Attraction Board, the National Trust, Chamber of Commerce, the Cayman Islands Tourism Association, Sister Islands Tourism Association, Recycle Cayman, and more than 14 individual companies, plus 6 separate district public meetings were held.

The original nine policy objectives have been restructured to provide a new framework for a range of detailed action points. The key policy objectives, with some inevitable overlaps are:

- 1) To sustain the quality of the environmental product.
- 2) To manage the visitors and their impact.
- 3) To provide a high quality, sustainable Caymanian tourism product.
- 4) To manage the Sister Islands as a destination for nature-based tourism.
- 5) To develop a highly skilled Caymanian tourism workforce.
- 6) To attract a more discerning and higher spending visitor.
- 7) Research and monitor tourism more effectively.
- 8) Organise tourism in the Cayman Islands more effectively.

As such, Madam Speaker, the National Tourism Management Plan 2009-2013 is largely about staying the course with new priorities and, very importantly, 67 action points.

Madam Speaker, the Go East policy framework seeks to promote and preserve the distinctly Caymanian product that exists within the eastern districts of Bodden Town, East End and North Side to develop a tourism model which benefits the inhabitants of these districts while also boosting the overall diversity of experiences offered by the destination, the policies based upon the best principles identified in the NTMP as well as the aspirations voiced by the residents of the eastern districts.

Madam Speaker, we know there has been some criticism about the Go East Initiative policy and the time it has taken to prepare this policy. The Government certainly makes no apologies for that because this was not going to be a knee jerk reaction to the concept of sustainable tourism development. This is a policy that we deliberately took time with. We consulted people in the eastern districts, extensive public consultation, to make sure that we did not repeat in the eastern districts some of the errors that were made particularly along the Seven Mile Beach, and that we developed for the eastern districts a tourism product that was firmly based on the principle of sustainable development.

After public consultation, which included broad input during individual meetings as well as numerous public meetings, as I indicated, six strategic objectives were agreed for the Go East policy, as follows:

- 1) To raise awareness of the eastern districts as a distinctive alternative destination for visitors and of the Go East Initiative as an opportunity for local businesses.
- 2) To redevelop the eastern districts as a scale appropriate sustainable tourism destination.
- 3) To develop the eastern districts as a network of sustainable local communities.
- 4) To support local businesses and residents in the development and improvement of facilities and services.
- 5) To provide and manage the infrastructure to support the previously cited initiatives.
- 6) To establish Go East structures responsibilities and procedures.

Physical planning emerged as a central theme during public consultations in Bodden Town, East End and North Side. Residents of those districts wanted to ensure that new development would be suitable in scale and style. This included calls to restrict the height of new developments to three stories as opposed to the current, allowable height of five stories, among other things. These recommendations are endorsed in principle for new developments and it is intended that this approved document would serve as a material consideration for decision-making boards and departments until such time as these matters can be adopted in law.

New activities which residents advocated for include promoting nature tours, deep sea and reef fishing, agri-tourism opportunities, craft outlets, and beach retail and concession areas. The policy also calls for instituting new regulations to enable bed and breakfast establishments and to adopt plans to provide adequate public access points for watersports.

Madam Speaker, since 2006, when the vision for this policy was first announced, there have been (as I indicated previously) significant expressions of business interests. This has come in the form of increased tours by cruise visitors to attractions in the eastern districts, expansion of existing accommodations and the development of new accommodations and visitor attractions.

The new White House project is in the advanced planning stages, a new bed and breakfast has been established and Planning approval was just recently received for the redevelopment of the CoeWood Public Beach in Bodden Town, to name a few projects.

Madam Speaker, the CoeWood Public Beach, which has been expanded from one to three parcels, will include a boat launching ramp for small local vessels, a children's play area, enhanced bathroom and parking facilities to cater to visitor traffic, four small kiosks for crafts and food sales, and improved signage explaining the history of Bodden Town and the location of other interest points awaiting guests in the districts of East End and North Side.

This policy will be coordinated by the Ministry of Tourism working through the Go East Joint Strategic Committee made up of representatives from Bodden Town, East End and North Side, the Department of Tourism, the Department of Environment Investment Bureau, the Ministry of Health and Human Services, Planning and the private sector tourism interests.

The main role of the Joint Strategic Committee will be the strategic vetting of all initiatives in the eastern districts. The formal adoption of these two plans governing tourism both at the national level and focusing on the eastern districts marks a significant milestone. The Government and private stakeholders are working in tandem to manage mature areas of our tourism industry, enhancing the benefits while having to actively mitigate the undesired effects which have also accompanied our progress. We have in the Go East policy a rare opportunity to renew the way we look at tourism and to set an ambitious goal of infusing resident feedback into the daily management of how the sector works.

Madam Speaker, speaking of the future of the industry it would certainly be remiss of me not to address the concerns which no doubt exist about the world's economy and how it is impacting the outlook for tourism locally. Obviously, the deep recession which is ravishing the United States and shrinking economies around the globe will have an impact on the short- to medium-term prospects for tourism. The tourism industry will be challenged in ensuring short-term wins while driving visitation goals and also identifying scarce resources towards preserving our brand awareness and product renewal.

Madam Speaker, earlier this month the Ministry of Tourism and the Department of Tourism, organised their regular marketing meeting to assess the state of the US economy and the global climate. Present at the meetings were the Ministry of Tourism, the Department of Tourism, Cayman Airways, the Cayman Islands Tourism Association and the DoT's US marketing agencies.

We also invited representatives from our European and Canadian offices so that we could get a global perspective on the outlook for the tourism sector. The meetings were conducted to bring the teams together to inform and develop the marketing strategies of the Department of Tourism for 2009 and 2010 to remain as strong as possible in the marketplace, especially in light of the current challenges and continually changing US economy. Tourism and economic experts were also consulted during this time.

As far back as the tourism conference in September 2007, I spoke about the fact that we had noticed a worrying trend with respect to foreclosures in the US. We had begun to see the signs at that point (and this was in September 2007) and we were monitoring that very closely, devising strategies and programmes to deal with it. So, following on from that, in February 2008 we had Dr. Lalia Rach, who is the dean of the Tisch Centre for Hospitality, Tourism and Sports Management at New York University in the US, speak to us about those issues. That was in February 2008. She indicated at that time, notwithstanding the fact that the US Government had not acknowledged that the US was, in fact, heading into a recession.

Upon our return to Cayman, subsequent to the February 2008 meetings, we invited members of the tourism private sector to two full days of meetings to discuss possible mitigation strategies. One of the big ideas that came out of the meeting was the Nickelodeon partnership which helped to shore up some of our business in 2008. Before the three hurricanes impacted our shores last year, we posted very strong results over the summer period tracking at that time almost 9 per cent ahead of the previous year.

At that same meeting, airlift was unanimously identified as the most strategic concern facing the industry. While the global airline industry struggled to stay airborne in the midst of unprecedented fuel prices, Cayman Airways, very fortunately, has the support of the Caymanian people who recognise the significance of Cayman's own airline and so the support for our national flag carrier continued.

In December 2008, Cayman Airways launched its new non-stop service from the US Capital, Washington DC, to Grand Cayman, and reintroduced our seasonal service from Chicago. Also, with the exception of Spirit Airlines and Air Jamaica, the core airlines remained in place with some adding frequency and/or capacity on the Cayman route. The result was a small increase in the number of seats to the destination even as some of our competitors saw a sharp decrease in airlift.

This year's meetings in Miami welcomed several high calibre speakers including Dr. Rach, as well as the CEO of the Harrison Research Group, Mr. Doug Harrison. Dr. Rach discussed the state of both the US and the global economy and its projected impact on tourism worldwide and on the region.

Very importantly, she said that in her view the recession will be continuing and transformational. She indicated that in her view the world will not go back to the way it was before. What was also interesting was that while she shared the view with most experts in the field that the world is halfway through this crisis, that notwithstanding the fact that the global economy is likely to be emerging from this crisis next year, that the emergence from the crisis is going to be so gradual that it will be 2012 before you begin to feel like you are essentially close to where you were before the recession. Those were her views, Madam Speaker.

Ripples have been felt throughout all industries and sectors. Most of Europe, Russia and Japan are in recession with China, India and Brazil slowing.

Consumer confidence is at an unprecedented low, driven by fear, uncertainty and concern.

Within less than a year, consumer confidence had shrunk by almost 50 per cent, according to Dr. Rach. She provided some statistics. She indicated that in March 2008, consumer confidence was at 75 per cent; and by January 2009, consumer confidence had dropped to 38 per cent. Her key advice during this time of economic uncertainty and loss of consumer confidence is to remain realistic in terms of goal setting, and, as marketers, work to ensure that as a destination the Cayman Islands remains connected to its loyal customers and visitors.

Consumers will still choose to travel, though not as much as they used to. It will take great cooperation on the part of marketers to ensure the destination continues to stand out among the crowd and, indeed, the region.

Mr. Harrison provided additional insight to consumer trends by sharing findings from research conducted by the Harrison group and American Express on affluence in America in 2007 and 2008, reporting on how the market is leaning and forecasts for 2009/2010. Key takeaways included the recognition that select luxuries remain important for consumers throughout this recession and they will still be looking for life enhancing experiences and travel. However, the current economic situation will undoubtedly have an impact on travel to the Caribbean throughout 2009.

The known impacts include a much shorter booking window from an average of some 90 days some years ago, sometimes to just as little as a few days. In fact, we had examples given by our private sector at the meetings in Miami that they have been experiencing individuals calling on a Thursday, for example, for travel on Sunday; so, just a few days in terms of advanced bookings. It makes it very difficult in that type of environment to make projections for the future.

Public and private sectors resolved at the meetings in Miami to head into 2009 with confidence by continuing the investment in education and training of our people by insisting on enhanced customer service standards, by continually improving our tourism product and by increasing the number of seats and direct routes into the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, as I have always said, we should see in every challenge an opportunity. That is the way that I work, and what I believe in. Given all of the research that we have been provided, and given the attitudes and behaviours of consumers and how they have shifted, particularly over the last six months, we believe, notwithstanding the challenges, that there are many opportunities. And some of those opportunities lie in the fact that consumers have said that they are still going to travel, but may travel closer to home.

When we examine that thought we immediately recognise that US consumers, as an example, who would normally travel to Europe for a vacation, are more likely to look now to the Caribbean—which is a lot closer—for that vacation. That presents an opportunity for us. Hence, the policy decision to require Cayman Airways to increase airlift and to open new routes from our primary market into Grand Cayman to support and sustain our tourism industry.

Madam Speaker, the Department of Tourism continues to research viable opportunities to diversify our source markets for visitation by exploring other secondary markets whose economic prospects remain relatively strong and where impediments to travel are relatively low. The Department of Tourism also made notable progress in 2008 with marketing strategies to maximise growth in the secondary markets of Canada and Europe.

The investment paid dividends with numbers of stay over visitors from both regions reaching their highest levels in over six years. For the period 2008, over 2007, Canada saw numbers increase by 6.2 per cent and Europe by 7 per cent.

New ad campaigns which speak to the affluent market were developed. The Department of Tourism is also conducting research into the viability of South America as a secondary market. The results of this research will be available in a few months. This information will be shared with Cayman Airways who also looks to expanding into this market.

The Department of Tourism continues to bring the finest events to Cayman spanning from sports, music, culinary and, of course, the best in world class scuba diving. Cayman's tourism industry remains cautiously optimistic about performance in the short term while expectations for significant growth in the medium term have been tempered in favour of strategies to preserve market share and brand awareness.

The National Tourism Management Plan provides an agreed measuring stick for evaluating our short-term actions to ensure they are aligned with our long-term goals. This cohesion of action and clarity of purpose has served us well in the economic performance over recent years with continual growth in air arrivals over the past four years, resulting in the industry welcoming more than 300,000 visitors to our shores via air in 2008.

In these uncertain times we will have to revisit our immediate performance expectations, but we cannot abandon our long-term goals. Even as overall visitation to the Caribbean has been forecasted by the Caribbean Tourism Organisation to decrease by as much as 30 per cent this year, by staying true to our brand, informed with cutting edge research and disciplined in our approach to business, the Cayman Islands stands to gain in its share of visitors to the region, even if we do not see same levels of growth as experienced in past years.

This is certainly not a year of business as usual. But we know what the Cayman Islands stand for and all of our research confirms that product remains relevant and desired by our target audience who, while travelling less than before, are still going to travel. They have said so. They have said that they have worked very hard for their money and, notwithstanding these challenges, there are other things they might give up but they are not going to be giving up their vacations, particularly family vacations.

As we set strategies and tactical promotions to survive this global recession we are also setting long-term strategies to ensure that our tourism industry remains healthy and that new development can be influenced by the lessons learned and practices identified over the past five decades.

Madam Speaker, the public and private sector partnership is as strong as it has ever been. It is that level of partnership that has ensured the successes which we have been able to realise thus far. On that point I wish to say, in concluding, that we believe that the time is right now to resurrect the plans to transition the Department of Tourism to a Tourism Authority, and we will be doing exactly that in the coming weeks.

It is going to take some time to achieve, Madam Speaker, but we are restarting the process because we believe that the time is right and that it is the right thing to do.

Madam Speaker, I wish to thank all of my staff in the Ministry, the Permanent Secretary and all of her staff, the Acting Director of Tourism, Mr. Shomari Scott, and all of his staff for the very hard work that they have done over the past several years to help us achieve the objectives we have been able to achieve, and to remain very competitive in this industry.

Madam Speaker, there are not many destinations in this region that can boast of having a national flag carrier. I can stand here today without fear of contradiction to say that it is that national flag carrier, Cayman Airways, that has built the tourism industry and that has sustained it over the last 40 years. Madam Speaker, on that note, we certainly need to take some time out to thank all of the hardworking staff at Cayman Airways—both past and present—for their efforts in ensuring that our national flag carrier, Cayman Airways, has remained the pre-eminent air carrier to the Cayman Islands.

With those few words, I thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this document.

Health Insurance Commission (Amendment) Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Health Insurance Commission (Amendment) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister of Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I beg to move the second reading of the Health Insurance (Amendment) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: The amendments to this Bill will remove certain challenges faced in implementing the Law and are related to the membership of the Health Insurance Commission Board on the management of monies collected for the segregated insurance fund.

Honourable Members will note that the following provisions are included in the amendment Bill. Clause 2(a) of the Bill seeks to amend section 4 of the principal Law to vary the composition of the Health Insurance Commission Board to include both senior officers from the Health Services Authority and the Superintendent of Health Insurance.

Madam Speaker, presently the Law specifies the Chief Medical Officer to serve on the Health Insurance Commission Board. However, it is considered to be more prudent to allow more flexibility in the terms of appointment so that the Ministry can determine the senior officer from the Health Services Authority who would at the time of the appointment have the most relevant hands-on experience of general management and/or financial operations of that Authority to best serve on the Health Insurance Commission Board.

The purpose is to allow for input of informed advice drawing from these critical areas of expertise. The appointment of the Superintendent of Health Insurance or the Board will ensure ready availability of the technical health insurance regulatory expertise required by the Board including insight into the enforcement of the Law and regulations.

Madam Speaker, clause 3 amends section 8 of the principal Law to remove the requirement for the Commission to cause a periodic actuarial review of the segregated insurance fund. Such review is now unnecessary since the fund is considered coercive revenue.

Clause 4 of the Bill repeals section 9 of the principal Law to remove the requirement for the Commission to establish custody accounts into which the assets of the segregated insurance fund are to be deposited. Since the fund is considered coercive revenue, custody accounts cannot be established.

Clause 5 amends section 12 of the principal Law to remove the ministerial power to examine and report on the accounts of the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority. The exercise of this power is unnecessary since the Health Insurance Commission now has responsibility for the segregated insurance fund.

Clause 6 repeals section 13 of the principal Law to remove the requirement for an actuarial review of the assets and liabilities of the segregated insurance fund as custody accounts for the assets of fund would not be in operation, as I alluded to in the other amendments.

Clause 7 just contains savings and transitional provisions.

I would ask that this honourable House give due consideration to the passage of these amendments.

Thank you.

Prisons (Amendment) Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Prisons (Amendment) Bill, 2009. Second reading.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Acting First Official Member.

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to move the second reading of the Prisons (Amendment) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

This Bill seeks to amend the Prisons Law, a Law which is now some 30 years old and which is currently being worked on to produce a new Law, but to make a further amendment in the interim to provide for release of prisoners on licence to assist in the maintenance of the prison population and prevention of overcrowding.

Madam Speaker, it is fair to say that the Bill seeks to reinstate a programme which had been introduced almost 10 years ago, and which had been referred to as the executive or early release programme and to properly legitimise that arrangement.

The programme was introduced immediately following the disturbances at Northward Prison in late 1999 as a means of trying to urgently reduce the prison population and make the situation more manageable. It was done with the concurrence or the approval of the then Governor and essentially remained in place over the past nine years, but without specific legislative provision having been brought to this honourable House, as this Bill now seeks to do.

While the situation at Northward is not as acute as it was ten years ago when we had those unfortunate events, it is fair to say that Northward is currently substantially overcrowded. This is due to a number of reasons. Among them there is deterioration in the prison accommodation. In fact, there was a dormitory building that had to be taken out of service last year due to structural failure. The buildings there are all now certainly in the 30 year age bracket. It is to be expected that they will continue to deteriorate quite rapidly over the next few years.

To this end, while there is a capital initiative underway, being that essentially reconstructing or providing new accommodation facilities within the distant perimeter, that effort in itself will require a regular shifting and taking out of service of facilities. In other words, we are not moving to a new site to construct a 250 to 300 prisoner capacity prison, but, rather, are working within the confines of the perimeter we have taking buildings out of service, demolishing them and constructing new ones.

So that deterioration in existing stock was one of the contributors. Another one has been the change in the parole eligibility that was enacted in 2005. We think [that] is contributing to some prisoners opting not to take parole but rather to serve out the remainder of their sentence beyond the new parole eligibility period. Obviously, the discontinuation of this programme some six months ago has also been a contributor.

Under this programme, the Director was able on average to give early release to probably one prisoner a week, about 50 prisoners per year. While it is obviously not a large number, it all contributes when you are faced with the situation of trying to manage the numbers that we have.

Madam Speaker, the basic arrangement that currently exists by law is that prisoners who are sentenced to a term of three years or more can qualify, can become eligible for parole, and, as such, if they so agree and are deemed eligible by the parole board, can potentially get out of prison before the end of the term to which they have been sentenced.

Eventually every prisoner is afforded what is referred to as one-third remission of their sentence which is intended to serve as a motivation for good behaviour and compliance with the rules and regimes. That remission can be forfeited for failure to comply.

Essentially, any prisoner who goes in is eligible to have a third of his sentence automatically remitted and we have what we call his earliest date of release, which would be two-thirds. So, a prisoner who is sentenced to a term of three years or more would normally serve, it had been two-thirds, and would normally have been eligible for parole at one third. The amendment in 2005 identified certain offences for which that minimum period one would have to serve was increased from one-third to five-ninths. But parole has only ever applied to prisoners whose term was three years or more.

This executive early release programme, as it was referred to, and as the current Bill seeks to legitimise, caters to prisoners whose sentence is less than three years. These are prisoners who may be sentenced to two years, two and a half years, one year, whatever, and who have no eligibility for the normal parole facility.

The criterion that the Bill seeks to introduce is that a prisoner would have to be serving a term of less than three years. He would have had to have served at least half of his sentence. And he would have to be not more than three months away from his earliest release date in order for him to qualify to be released under this arrangement.

For example, a prisoner who had a sentence of one year, under the automatic one-third remission his earliest date of release would be after eight months. He would have obviously served 50 per cent of that one year after six months, and three months before his earliest date of release, which is eight months, would be eight minus three, which is five months.

So, a prisoner sentenced to a term of one year under this programme could get out after six months. But he has to fulfil all three of the requirements. He has to be less than three years, so his one year sentence fulfils that. He has to serve 50 per cent of his time, which six months fulfils that. And he cannot get out earlier than three months before his earliest date of release. That's five months, but because the six months is greater he would not get out until six months.

Likewise for a prisoner sentenced to a term of two years. The earliest date of release would have been 16 months, in other words 8 months off of 24. Three months prior to that would be after 13 months.

His 50 per cent of sentence would be 12 months, so that prisoner would be eligible to get out after 13 months. That is essentially how the criteria would be applied.

Madam Speaker, there is one slight problem with the Bill for which notice of a committee stage amendment has been given. I would ask, Madam Speaker, with your permission, even though that was circulated yesterday, if I could speak briefly to explain to Members what occasioned that amendment.

Madam Speaker, thank you.

The current legislation says that “. . . a convicted prisoner serving a sentence for an offence which is not specified in the Schedule at any time after he shall have served at least one year's imprisonment, or one-third of his sentence, whichever shall be greater . . .” Madam Speaker, that wording clearly provides that a prisoner who has been sentenced to a term of three years can be eligible for parole because one year and one-third of three years is the exact same amount. So, that eligibility currently exists for parole for a prisoner who has been sentenced to a term of three years or more.

Unfortunately, the wording in this Bill refers to a term of three years or less, so there is an overlap of the exact three years or 36 months. The amendment will simply seek to change that from “three years or less” to “less than three years”. So this new Bill will apply to a prisoner who has a sentence of two years 11 months and three weeks, but not one who has a sentence of three years. It has to be less than 36 months.

Madam Speaker, let me finally say that having practiced this arrangement we are confident that the cadre of people to whom it has been applied and to whom the prison staff would apply it are people who have learned their lesson from being in prison. Not everyone who goes there becomes a habitual offender. There is certainly an element of people who for whatever reason end up making a mistake and learn from that first night or first week that they spend in prison and what has been proven over the years by carefully selecting those who the staff are confident have learned from their experience who are committed to staying the right course, that we can practice this programme without having people find themselves in trouble within that short extra period that they have got by virtue of it.

That is not to say that there are not mechanisms, and this Bill provides that obviously the director is entitled to and will impose conditions on releasing someone. If those conditions are violated, individuals can be recalled to Northward and required to serve out the remainder of the term until their earliest date of release.

So, Madam Speaker, with those few words I recommend the Bill to honourable Members and crave their support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to offer a contribution to a Bill for a Law to amend the Prisons Law to make further provision in respect of the release of prisoners on licence; and for incidental and connected purposes.

As was just introduced by the Acting First Official Member, this is indeed welcomed provisions in our Law to formalise a process that was once known as the early release programme and implemented some ten years ago, as was said.

The demise of that probably came about as a result of an unfortunate incident. But we all recognise in this Parliament that we have an overcrowding situation at Her Majesty's Prison. We recognise that a lot of our young people in particular are constantly getting themselves on the wrong side of the Law for various reasons, whether it is a breakdown in our society or just making juvenile errors or looking to do things that will get them rich a little quicker. Whatever it is, Madam Speaker, we unfortunately have an increasing prison population.

I think it is incumbent upon us as representatives and as a government to find a way of reducing prisoners and I dare say even reducing prison size. We do not want to be constantly increasing that area. This Government, of which I am a part, has put a lot and continues to pour a lot into social programmes and the whole area of education. Yes, we are spending a lot on education in the facilities.

But, Madam Speaker, this is one of the reasons why, because we see the efforts that we are putting into a lot of our programmes through the education system, through social programmes, through working with NGOs in regard to society in general and in particular our youth to reduce the amount of people serving time either at Fairbanks or Northward.

We have a small Island state, three islands, small population. We do not need a bunch of our people incarcerated because there goes the future; there goes the productivity from each and every one of them. And a lot of these young people and middle-aged people are very able and very capable of contributing in our society today.

As I said earlier this week, we did a recent tour of the prison facilities (just last week I think it was). The Third and Fourth Elected Members for George Town and I were given a tour by Mr. Rattray the Commissioner of Corrections. He and other senior officers took us on an extensive tour of the grounds of the prison and showed us the conditions there.

We saw the overcrowding. We saw the deteriorating buildings as the Acting First Official Member alluded to. There are some buildings that have been condemned. There are some that I was scared to learn that if you kicked a part of the wall too hard it could actually . . . thank God it does not open up to the outside, but you could kick that piece of wall out.

So, Madam Speaker, this is what we have currently at the Prison and we do not need increasing prison population at this time. We simply do not need it at this stage in our Islands' development. We will always have people going on the wrong side of the Law. We cannot curb that entirely. But we certainly can stop the increase, as I see it, of our own people.

When you go through that prison population, it is Caymanian ladies and young men, generally. There are a few foreigners in there, but a lot of people in there are our people. And it hurts. You talk to some of them, . . . and there was one prisoner who said to me, "No more prisons. Build less prisons. That's the answer." It hit right to the core of what I am talking about now, Madam Speaker. More prisons/more prisoners, is not the answer to what we are trying to do here in these Islands.

Madam Speaker, this release on licence programme, it is not as if there is going to be a huge reduction in any sentence where someone is serving a prison term below three years. But, as the Jamaican man says, 'one-one cocoa full basket.' When you take a month off here and a month off there, a few months, they all start to add up and you will find that it will result in a lower prison population.

I know that if they implement this, the selection process must be one that is well carried out. But the fact that the sentence is three years or less to start with means that the offence was probably not a very serious one, not a grave one, not something along the lines of murder or rape. So we are looking at a lesser degree of crime when we are talking about people who are being released during that period. Madam Speaker, the risk is therefore that much less.

I would assume though that the Bill (and I know it does) would speak to the fact in 31(b)(2) "the director acting in his discretion may recall to the prison a convicted prisoner who has failed to observe any condition imposed on his licence and thereupon he shall be liable to be detained until the earliest date on which he could be discharged pursuant to section 29 . . ." et cetera. So apart from any consideration to that, it does provide for the director to have that ability to recommit someone to his full sentence.

Madam Speaker, I have long been (at least since I have been a Member of the Legislative Assembly) someone who has been in favour, in huge support of alternative sentencing. I know this is another aspect of that. Certainly, I know that is being looked at quite seriously. There have been proposals.

I am urging those who deal with this particular area, between the First and Second Official Members of this House, under their remit, to ensure that alternative sentencing comes about as quickly as possible. This is another area that we can ensure we reduce the amount of people behind the prison walls.

Alternative sentencing will be where someone is released with a monitoring device (I do not know what the proper term is) of whatever type that is approved. That monitoring device will be worn at all times. Of course, it is exactly what it says, a monitoring device. You will know exactly where that person is 24/7, and they will have areas where they are allowed to go and areas where they will be restricted from going. But it will allow those individuals to serve time outside the walls of the prison and make amends to society during that time, carry out community work, the likes, and become productive citizens (hopefully) with proper training and monitoring and allow employers the chance to have these people on staff and hopefully utilise the skills they already have or retool them to do work that [provides] new employment opportunities for them.

Madam Speaker, again, the release on licence: I see a similar opportunity for persons to know that as long as they behave themselves and do what is called for they can work towards being released a month or two earlier to get out and utilise some of the skills that they have picked up in Northward because there are a lot of good initiatives in the prison. The people who work the Prison are doing a good . . . from what we can see there have not been any major events at the prison. We see young men and young women there doing things, productively, learning computer skills, trades. So there are lots of initiatives, and there are a lot of people who go into the prison and work, giving of their time with these prisoners.

Madam Speaker, a lot of times they come out but when the support falls away, especially when it comes to people who have a drug problem, they end up back in their environment. Even if they do have skills they are back in the environment they left and in no time they are back behind the walls of the prison.

I certainly am in favour of this provision to amend the [Law], to release prisoners on licence as long as it is a careful selection process as well as a careful monitoring process. Again I would like to appeal for alternative sentencing that we have discussed within these walls before, that it be given serious consideration and be pushed along as quickly as possible by those who have responsibility for that, that we can reduce the amount of people we have sitting behind prison walls that could be making a difference in our society, being more productive, assisting their families and simply being better citizens.

With those few remarks, Madam Speaker, I lend my support to these changes and I thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would certainly like to thank the Member who did speak and who lent his support, and to comment very briefly on his plea for the advancement of the alternative sentencing regime.

That is certainly something that is being worked on. Yes, the Portfolio that I represent and the agency 911 are involved, as is the Department of Community Rehabilitation and the Judiciary who are ultimately the ones to impose those alternative sentences. Work is progressing and we are hopeful that we will soon see the advent of that type of sentence being handed down by our Courts and people will be able to serve time at their own expense on their own property, but restricted in certain privileges.

Madam Speaker, I wish to thank other Members too for their implied support.

Thank you.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 12/08-09—Amendment to the Development Plan 1997—Proposed Rezoning—AIP Ltd.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I beg to move Government Motion No. 12/08-09, entitled, Amendment to the Development Plan 1997—Proposed Rezoning—AIP Ltd.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, before I make any comments, with your permission I would like to read the Motion:

WHEREAS in 2008, the Central Planning Authority received an application for the rezoning of Registration Section, George Town East, Block 20C Parcels 84, 85, 89, 90, and 102 – 111 [inclusive] from Light Industrial to General Commercial, and Block 20C Parcel 112 from Light Industrial/Mangrove Buffer to General Commercial/Mangrove Buffer;

AND WHEREAS the CPA originally considered the application on May 7, 2008 (CPA/16/08 Item 4.1), and resolved that the rezone application be put out for public comment.

AND WHEREAS the proposed amendments were advertised in the Caymanian Compass on May 26, 28, and June 3, and 6, 2008, in accordance with Section 11(2) of the Development and Planning Law (2008 Revision) and the application was placed on display in the Planning Department. During the comment period no letters of objections were received.

AND WHEREAS on September 3, 2008, the CPA again considered the application in light of the public review process (CPA/28/08 Item 4.1) and it was resolved to forward the proposed amendments to the Ministry with the recommendation that the proposed amendments be forwarded to the Legislative Assembly for approval.

AND WHEREAS on February 10, 2009, Cabinet approved the rezoning application and further that the matter be referred on to the Legislative Assembly;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT in accordance with Section 10(2)(b) of the Development and Planning Law (2008 Revision), the Central Planning Authority hereby recommends and submits to the Legislative Assembly the following proposal for alteration to the Development Plan 1997, a summary and map are attached hereto;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that, Registration Section, George Town East, Block

20C Parcel 112, be rezoned from Light Industrial/Mangrove Buffer to General Commercial/Mangrove Buffer, and Block 20C Parcels 84, 85, 89, 90, and 102–111 [inclusive] be rezoned from Light Industrial to General Commercial.

Madam Speaker, Members will have had a copy of the proposed rezone map. This property is owned by a company called AIP Limited. Unfortunately, I do not know who the principals are. But I know of the application because I took the proposal to Cabinet.

These parcels as they are zoned presently, are not in keeping with the intended use by the owners. The fact of the matter is the parcels are located very close to the Airport, as I understand it. I suspect the direction would be to the northeast of the airport and their access is through the Airport Road, as I understand it.

Comments were sought from the Civil Aviation Authority and the Cayman Islands Airports Authority and neither of those two entities had any difficulties with the application and, hence, after approval from Cabinet the proposal has been brought to this Legislative Assembly.

I know of no other facts to deliver to this House to shed any light on the matter. I know of no other difficulties based on all the information that my Ministry received. So I would recommend the Motion to honourable Members.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, according to Members, it is time to go home. So, obviously, everyone is in support of this Motion. I want to thank all Members for their support and for its successful passage.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT in accordance with section 10(2)(b) of the Development and Planning Law (2008 Revision), the Central Planning Authority hereby recommends and submits to the Legislative Assembly the following proposal for alteration to the Development Plan 1997, a summary and map are attached hereto;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that, Registration Section, George Town East, Block 20C Parcel 112, be rezoned from Light Industrial/Mangrove Buffer to General Commercial/Mangrove Buffer, and Block 20C Parcels 84, 85, 89, 90, and 102–111 be rezoned from Light Industrial to General Commercial.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Government Motion No. 12/08-09 passed.

OTHER BUSINESS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

Private Member's Motion No. 11/08-09—Parental Responsibility

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: Continuation of the debate on Private Member's Motion No. 11/08-09. Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I have listened carefully to the mover and seconder of this Motion. I have also listened to my other colleagues who in their debates were in obvious support of the Motion. They used various examples to give strength to the rationale behind the Motion and, as you rightly said in our crosstalk outside of the Chamber regarding the Private Member's Motion, which reads, "BE IT HEREBY resolved that The Affiliation Law (1995 Revision) be revised to remove any time restriction on the proof of paternity", is a Motion which if not in its entirety, its main thrust is dealing with the ability of parents to deal with the continuing problem of maintenance for their children.

I say "parents" because there is the odd occasion where the good father will need to get some sort of maintenance from a mother. While that is not very common, it is not an impossible case where custody is vested with the father.

Madam Speaker, in many instances there have been difficulties experienced by mostly single mothers or estranged mothers. Sometimes it is a common law situation. Sometimes it is a situation of a marriage gone bad. But the net end result in both of those instances is the same when there is difficulty with the father taking responsibility for the child or the children.

In looking at the Motion itself, and the section of the Affiliation Law to which it refers (which is section 3), it brought to mind the Private Member's Motion that was brought in March 2001 by the now Minister of Education and seconded by the now Minister of Communications Works and Infrastructure. While that Private Member's Motion dealt with the Succession Law and sought certain amendments thereto, there is a relationship because the proposed amendments sought were tied in with the Affiliation Law.

That is not to say that what is being sought by this Private Member's Motion has any direct bearing on what that Private Member's Motion was seeking.

And that Motion itself gained approval. In fact, if memory serves me right (it was some seven or eight years ago), it did get unanimous support in the Legislative Assembly. I want to refer to that, with your permission, just to shoot two short sections of the verbatim Minutes so that we can make sure that we have the full picture of all the ramifications.

Madam Speaker, where I wish to quote from (as fate would have it) was when the Honourable Attorney General was replying on behalf of the Government, that is, the Honourable Second Official Member. And it is the same Second Official Member who is here now, not the one who was there then. So, I suspect the Honourable Second Official Member was acting at the time.

Madam Speaker, I am quoting from the Hansard of Thursday, 15 March 2001. He said: "It is Government's position that no one wishes to encourage common-law unions, but where they exist and give rise to a child, the father should be encouraged to voluntarily accept paternity instead of being coerced by the Court. In its current form, one could argue that the Succession Law in fact discourages such voluntary affirmation, and it therefore creates an anomaly."

He went on to say: "The proposed amendment will bring the Succession Law in line with already existing provisions in the Adoption of Children Law, the Maintenance Law, and the Guardianship and Custody of Children Law, and with relevant UK legislation all of which makes no distinction between children born in wedlock and those born from a common-law relationship." [2001 Official Hansard Report, page 96]

The mover of the Motion referred to subsections (3) and (4) of section 35 of the Succession Law. He said these two subsections relate specifically to fathers and their illegitimate children. Essentially these two subsections require proof of paternity. But under their provisions, proof of paternity can only take the form of an affiliation order made under the Affiliation Law (1995 Revision), or any other law relating to affiliation which had previously been in force in Cayman.

I quote those sections remembering what my colleague, the honourable Fourth Elected Member for George Town, said in his contribution when he mentioned proof of paternity.

Madam Speaker, in all of the various laws that refer to this type of situation, there is also in the Status of Children Law, 2003, in Part 2, section 3, under the heading "Equal status of children", subsection (1) reads: "Subject to subsection (2). . .". And subsection 2 reads, "Where an adoption order has been made under the Adoption of Children Law (1996 Revision) or the law of any other jurisdiction the child is in law the child of the adopting parents as if they were his natural parents."

"For all of the purposes of the Laws of the Islands . . ."

Let me read it over again. Subsection (3) reads: “(1) subject to subsection (2), for all of the purposes of the Laws of the Islands a person is the child of his natural parents and his status as their child is independent of whether he is born inside or outside of the marriage and all other relationships shall be determined accordingly.”

So, with the combination of those pieces of legislation, and with what the Motion is seeking to accomplish now, Madam Speaker, I believe that the only additional link, based on what I have read, is the proof of paternity.

The Government is quite willing to accept the Motion with its intent and, as I said, my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, brought up the point of proof of paternity. Madam Speaker, I believe we do need to tie in the need for proof of paternity in some form or fashion, but it does not necessarily have to be attached to this Motion; I am simply saying that when we go to make the amendments that are necessary that we should find a way to include that in the process.

If we look at the Status of Children Law, there are several circumstances where a child is declared (or should I put it the other way around?) . . . Where the putative father, or mother, or both are declared the parents of the child or the child of those parents vice versa. And without going into any detail, there are some areas where affidavits and other forms of evidence can be put forward and a declaration made. But in truth and in fact it simply relies on a lot of trust. So it is important for the proof of paternity to be established.

Madam Speaker, the section that the mover of this Motion . . . I am reminded that it is in section 12 of the Status of Children Law (and there are various categories) . . .

Hon. Samuel W. Bulgín: The Affiliation Law.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The Affiliation Law, sorry. And there are various categories. But, Madam Speaker, as I said, those categories do not give any specific instructions as to where the proof lies.

It speaks to methodology, of how it is accomplished. It speaks to affidavits. It speaks to the fact that people are married and suchlike. But the proof of paternity in all instances needs to be established. And while some areas are classified, there are some areas which are not. But I do not propose to go into those details for the purposes of the Motion.

Section 3, which is being sought to be amended, reads: “(1) Any single woman who is with child or who is delivered of a child may either before or at any time within 12 months after the birth of such a child at any time thereafter upon proof that the man alleged to be the father of such child has within the 12 months after the birth of such child paid money for its maintenance or contributed to its support, or at any time within the 12 months next after the return to the islands of the man alleged to be the father of such child upon proof that he ceases to reside in the islands within the 12 months next after the birth of such child make complaint, or oath or affirmation before a Justice of the Peace alleging some man [I suspect that is a typographical error and should be “same man”] to be the father of the child.”

So that’s another correction when we are doing the amendment, Madam Speaker! This word “some” I am sure should say “same”. The letter “o” should be replaced with “a”.

So, we see even where in the law, that is the Affiliation Law itself, that there is relevance in making sure that there is proof of the paternity.

Madam Speaker, the way that is crafted, I certainly agree with the mover of the Motion because while in many other jurisdictions what is in the Law now is what obtains, and while you may find some jurisdictions have it different, there are many jurisdictions that still have it just as this is worded in the Law now. I am sure the reason why that is the case in our Law is simply because it was something that was accepted in many other jurisdictions.

But that does not necessarily mean that in this day and age, Madam Speaker, it is the right thing to do or the right statute to have. So, certainly, we can think of many, many instances where people actually would be disenfranchised because of the way the Law reads now. As the Motion presumes, if it is accepted—and, as I said, we will accept the Motion—is that that restriction will be taken away totally.

What that means in essence, Madam Speaker, is that there will be no timeline attached. That means that a person can establish paternity or maternity even after that person is an adult. And there are other provisions which cause for it to be able to be done posthumously.

Once we take away the restriction of the time limit, as the Motion seeks, then that will take away any and all restrictions regarding time, to be able to establish who the parent of a child is or vice versa.

Madam Speaker, the Government is quite willing to accept the Motion. I am sure the Honourable Second Official Member is within earshot of hearing the Motion and will certainly move forward to do the necessary amendments to the relevant legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If not does the honourable mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I think that today marks a good day for women and children in the Cayman Islands because these sorts of archaic ways in which society lived cannot continue to be the order of the day in a modern society.

Madam Speaker, a number of points were raised during the debate. All of them have merit and are worthy of consideration. Certainly the issue raised by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town and the Honourable Leader of Government Business as it relates to the proof of paternity is a crucial one. We have seen also in our community, instances where means other than scientific evidence, such as DNA testing, have been used. In other words, people just look at a child and say, Yes, that is my child. And later on the trauma brought on to the entire family, especially the child, is not what any one of us wants to continue to allow. Simply put, in some instances someone else was proven to be the father, once the actual testing was done. That is not healthy, not good.

Madam Speaker, at the end of the day, other issues that were brought up that are connected, such as custody, visitation rights and those sorts of matters are also important. Needless to say, this will not impact it from the standpoint that the courts still deal with that, the courts still do their social inquiries and determine, based on the circumstances, the fitness of both parents and then make the determination as to what rights will be ascribed to the mother and to the father.

I note that the Honourable Leader of Government Business also mentioned, and it is one that on the face of it would not necessarily be something people would think of as it relates to maternity. But certainly in the research I did, in these days with what science is able to do, such as invitro fertilisation, et cetera, there are cases where that has come into play. Naturally, the majority of times it will be obviously paternal, who is the father. But we need to cater to both because we just do not know what the situation would hold in a particular family.

I would encourage the Government when this work is done—and I presume the normal process will be that the Honourable Second Official Member and legal draughtspersons will review the debate. In fact, this entire piece of legislation, as you look at it further and as one of my colleagues pointed out, there are other sections that need addressing, such as section 10, which calls for maintenance to only be up to age 15 and with leave of the court a continuation to age 17. That, I believe, would have been because in the old days what was deemed to be the normal age when people left school and would have been supporting themselves. We know that has changed. From what we understand the community wants that to change to go even higher. So, instead of 16-plus people are saying that they want our children coming out of school at age 18, which is what we accept as the age of majority and adulthood.

In truth and in fact, when you allow children to leave school before that and go out into the work world we will be having a system where we are forcing minors, as it were, to go into the field of work to support themselves. So that has to be tied, I believe, with the attainment with the age of majority.

There are some fines in there. I will not even mention what they are. I am sure the legal draughtsperson will see how archaic they are for some of the sections and whether a person breaks certain sections of the law.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank all Members who contributed, and all Members who did not for their tacit support. As I said earlier, this is indeed a good day for women and children, a step in the right direction. It goes to show that at all points in time when legislators find inadequacies in legislation we are able to work as one to ensure that real issues are addressed, real issues that impact our people on a day to day basis.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT HEREBY resolved that the Affiliation Law (1995 Revision) be revised to remove any time restriction on the proof of paternity. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Private Member's Motion No. 11/08-09 passed.

The Speaker: That concludes the orders of the day. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

While I am waiting for the motion to adjourn, I would like to remind the executive members of the CPA that we will have a short meeting immediately after everybody has had their lunch.

Thank you.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, with your indulgence, I am just advising Members that there are three pieces of legislation which we have to conclude. One has been distributed on a Business Paper, which is [The Children (Amendment) Bill 2009]. We also have two other pieces of legislation from the Honourable Third Official Member, and we also have the Adoptions Law from the honourable Minister of Health and the new Education Bill which is almost finished.

Madam Speaker, we also have to do Finance Committee.

Rather than us coming back as (the quickest way for me to term it is) "pitchy patchy", we would much rather adjourn sine die and ensure that all Members are given several days' notice of when we resume, understanding full well the date of dissolution.

I suspect not next week but the following week, we will meet back. But because I do not know exactly when, I move that this honourable Legislative Assembly be adjourned sine die.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn sine die. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 12.44 pm the House stood adjourned sine die.

The Speaker: The motion has been duly moved and is open for debate.

Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Honourable Members of the Legislative Assembly will recall that the Children (Amendment) Bill, 2009, was tabled in the Legislative Assembly as a white paper for public input and discussion on 5 December 2008.

The primary aim of the Children (Amendment) Bill, 2009, is to embody at a domestic level certain articles and provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. Hence, with the planned successful passage of this Bill, which complements the Children Law (2003), the Cayman Islands will demonstrate that it, too, like many other countries around the world, is committed to ensuring that children in these Islands are protected, a duty which is of great importance among all of our people.

Madam Speaker, during the public consultation process, which, as I alluded to earlier, began in December last year, the Ministry received responses from members of the public as well as organisations such as the Department of Children and Family Services, the Justices of the Peace Association, the Cayman Islands Crisis Centre, the Department of Counselling Services and the Youth Services Unit, all of whom demonstrated strong support for the Bill.

After a thorough review by the Ministry and the Legislative Drafting Department it was determined that the majority of the concerns raised are not strictly legislative in nature, but would be more appropriately dealt with through administrative systems and processes, as well as through public education and sensitisation programmes.

The Bill before us today for debate is a well considered, closely reasoned instrument. It is the culmination of collaborative work between private individuals and key government and non-government agencies. It is therefore anticipated that this Bill, if brought into law, will more than adequately provide the relevant regulating authorities with some powers which are essential to ensure that the principle of the best interest of the child is upheld. Madam Speaker, I will say again that this is the main focus of the Bill. It is about the child.

Before I speak to the details of the proposed amendments, I think it is appropriate that I first discuss the broader context and issues which have made the need for such a Bill a necessity in our Islands. We bring this legislation because there is a need for it.

Over approximately the last four decades, Caymanian families have had to adapt to increasing demands placed on them by economic, social, cultural and environmental changes. The challenges of change remain a feature of life, and with such a reality the need to have a supportive, loving and strong family system has arguably gained even greater importance. It is vital, therefore, that we build and sustain strong families to ensure that our children are properly protected and nurtured.

One way in which public policy can assist is to establish formal standards and guidelines for the treatment and care of our children. In an ideal world, those blessed with children would honour this most important responsibility. As we are all aware, however, there are those among us who fail in precisely that sacred duty. There are those who act through the abuse of children to attack the essentials of human respect and decency, and so erode the strength of our families and communities.

Certain existing social attitudes and beliefs about child abuse, especially abuse within the family unit, make this problem particularly persistent. If anyone thinks that they are ultimately doing the best for a child or a family by not speaking up about abuse, by treating it as a 'private matter', it is time they were told they are very, very wrong.

This is a deeply wounding experience, Madam Speaker, when it occurs, and families are traumatised by it. So they often act out of a misguided attempt to 'protect' the child. Sadly, when the matter is kept secret, it is the perpetrator who gets protected, and all too often continues their abuse.

We must all understand that there is no room for tolerance of child abuse in a Christian society. It is our sacred duty, to not only speak and act against it, but also take responsibility for preventing it, whether we are private citizens, public policy makers or workers within key agencies. Already there are those who distribute information regarding child abuse prevention, and conduct education and awareness campaigns. What this legislation seeks to do is put the force of law behind these efforts.

To have a legal instrument such as this Bill that establishes mandatory reporting requirements for child abuse to the relevant authorities sends a powerful and unequivocal message to those who would do harm to a child. The Cayman Islands does not tolerate child abuse!

In addition, it has been found that with the introduction of mandatory reporting, the awareness of child abuse and the sense of empowerment to act against it increases exponentially in the community at large.

Hopefully, once this Bill is passed into Law, professionals who deal with children will be duty bound to report any suspected cases of child abuse. This Bill provides them with a legal protection that has been lacking.

Furthermore, when a child is in need of emergency protection, the responsible agency will be able to authorise the conduct of medical and psychiatric examinations without the consent of the parent or in absence of a court order. Naturally, there are safeguards built in here against possible inappropriate use of these powers. This step is very important.

I must stress again, however, that the Bill is not designed as a substitute for the essential role of parents and families; in fact, fundamentals of parental responsibility and accountability are key to the proposed legislation. The Bill, for example, makes provisions to extend parental responsibility to a step-parent or unmarried father.

Also, very importantly, parents will be required to attend any and all court proceedings that involve their child. Parents may even be required to successfully complete an approved parental programme if the Courts see fit to make such an order.

These provisions seek to enhance and ensure the continuity of parental input in their children's lives. All too often, in dealing with children who have behavioural difficulties, it has been found that the timely absence of the parent has inhibited their child's successful rehabilitation.

The Bill also clarifies that it will be the role of the agency with primary responsibility for child welfare to manage the placement of a child in care. At the same time, it addresses those cases where contact between a child and parent has been refused, to provide that parents are granted recourse to request information on the wellbeing of their child, from the responsible agency.

Madam Speaker, this legislation is all based on the perspective that a Government should only be called upon to the extent that families cannot genuinely provide for the care and guidance of their children. A similar point may be made with regard to voluntary organisations, who continue to provide a range of services that are beneficial to children.

This is not to suggest that either Government or voluntary agencies would or should slacken in their vigilance, or their readiness to respond to the needs of children and families. Quite the contrary, Madam Speaker: the role of public agencies should be to strengthen, support, and where necessary, correct families, not to substitute for them.

I would like to encourage members of this Honourable House to pay close attention to the details of the legislation. The amendments are as follows:

1. New definitions, including a definition of abuse, have been inserted.

2. Section 4 has been amended to give a father who is not married to the mother of a child at the time of its birth, parental responsibility where he, along with the mother, registers the birth of a child. (And we dealt with this in the last session.)

3. New provisions on acquisition of parental responsibility by a step-parent are introduced. This is particularly important given the current reality of so-called 'blended' families. As some of us may know, blended families, also known as stepfamilies, occur when persons with children involved in previous relationships unite to form a new family.

4. A duty is placed on the Department of Children Services ("the Department") to promote the educational achievements of the children it looks after.

5. New provisions on mandatory reporting of possible abuse and neglect of children are introduced, setting out who is required to report, and specifying the obligations of the Department following such a report.

6. The Governor in Cabinet is permitted to issue a certificate to a foster parent providing refuge to a child.

7. Madam Speaker, we discovered this yesterday. The Bill now before honourable Members called for a Part X of the existing Law, which deals with child minding and day care for young children to be repealed. I have circulated . . . and thank you, Madam Speaker, for your permission to waive the two days' notice to make a committee stage amendment. Because it is now felt that child minding and similar provisions are better retained in this Bill rather than the new education legislation as was envisioned when this Bill was drafted. The House, therefore, will be asked to consider a Committee Stage amendment to ensure that these scenarios are adequately provided for.

8. A new section 88A places a duty on the parents of a child appearing before the Court to also attend Court for the duration of the proceedings.

Lastly, the additional revisions made subsequent to the public consultation are as follows:

9. Clauses 5, 16 and 17 of the Bill remove the power of voluntary organisations to place children in a home. This means therefore that the Department, which is responsible for the welfare of children, is the only agency which can make a petition to the Court for a child to be placed.

It is expected that naturally such matters may, and should be brought to the Department's attention by others, such as voluntary organisations, for necessary action.

10. Clause 9 provides the Court with the option to order parents to undergo and successfully complete a parenting programme approved by the Ministry responsible for the welfare of children.

Madam Speaker, additionally, in circumstances where contact between a child and their parent or guardian has been refused, it specifies that the Department, if requested, may be required to provide information on the wellbeing of a child to said parent or guardian; and

11. Clause 10 permits the Department to authorise the conduct of medical and psychiatric examinations on a child in the absence of a court order, or the consent of the parent, where the child is in need of emergency protection to safeguard his or her wellbeing.

The Department in so acting is obliged to act reasonably, and if the child is of an age to express a view about the proceedings, to take that view into consideration.

Madam Speaker and Members of this honourable House, let us not forget that at the very core of this legislative process lies what we hold most dear to our hearts, our most valuable asset—our children of the Cayman Islands.

The task of protecting children is a particularly challenging prospect for all, especially in this day and age. However, it is absolutely critical that we seize this opportunity now if our Islands are to advance in any meaningful way.

I hope that you will give your wholehearted support to this legislation as this is part of the machinery necessary to make our Cayman Islands a safer place for our collective future, above all including our children's future.

Finally Madam Speaker, I wish to commend and thank all the parties who provided input from the public and other agencies, and to thank all the staff involved in bringing this piece of legislation forward. I recommend the Children (Amendment) Bill, 2009, for the favourable consideration of this honourable House.

Thank you and God bless us all.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

The Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Obviously, as the honourable Minister outlined in his presentation to the House, this Bill is one that would find favour, I believe, with our entire community. Having said that, obviously the Opposition sees that this Bill is one that we can support.

It is indeed important at this juncture of our history that we underscore the commitment of this particular class of legislators to furthering the interests of those in our community who often times find themselves at the will and mercy of others. I know that in these times where there are raging debates about rights and protection of persons under legislation that some are arguing ought to have constitutional status, it is important that we continue to move along the pathway of creating legislation that addresses those real and legitimate concerns. I believe that this Bill is one that works in that vein.

Madam Speaker, no piece of legislation is going to be able to ultimately do what is required for every single instance in every single situation. However, I believe it provides an overarching type of framework that moves the Cayman Islands and moves the interests of children in the Cayman Islands forward. It also goes a long way in trying to ensure that along with moving children's interests forward that the entire family's interest is moved forward. We see the provisions in there that relate to parenting, step-parents, and other important institutions that are in society that are the bedrock of society and that itself should form the nucleus in which a child is able to develop, be safe, and have an opportunity to have a useful and productive life.

We know from our experiences that certain behaviours and activities of adults toward children have indeed had extremely negative consequences and influences on a child's life to the point where in a lot of instances it practically ruins the child's life, where [their] behaviour is unacceptable to the community. This Bill seeks to provide the type of legal infrastructure in which those sorts of instances can be more effectively dealt with so that we are indeed protecting children.

Madam Speaker, a few days ago the House passed Private Member's Motion [No. 11/08-09—Parental Responsibility]. That sought to provide that people do not, from a legal standpoint, wind up going fatherless their entire lives. I have had a number of calls since then, and I see some provisions in this particular piece of legislation that will go towards addressing some of the concerns that people talked about. Once you start talking about the whole issue of parenting, there is a wide range of concerns out there that people would like to see addressed in some form or fashion.

I would ask the Minister to try to ensure that at the passage of the legislation the Ministry or the Department of Children and Family Services comes up with a small pamphlet that educates the public about some of the specific provisions in this legislation. I raise that point because someone called me after the Motion I spoke about earlier, the Affiliation Law Motion, and painted a scenario that was quite unusual. So people need to understand very clearly what their legal responsibilities are once they engage in certain behaviour as it relates to children and supporting children, and the fact that the courts can and will often hold you responsible once you establish to society and through the raising of a child that you are indeed accepting the role of a parent, and that it is not as simple as saying, Well, I want to do a DNA test to prove that a person is not for me, and therefore that should allow me to simply get out of any responsibility I might have.

I believe that well-intentioned and well-meaning people get themselves caught up in those sorts of issues and do not realise the legal implications and ramifications of their behaviour. The type of instance I am talking about is where a person takes on a parental role with another individual and that child may not be their biological child but in the eyes of society, and in the eyes of the court, because of their behaviour they have indeed formed a "moral" and in some instances (as this person found out) a "legal" contract that is not as easy to get out of as people may think.

Certainly, there are other provisions in here that I think could quite nicely be articulated in a very simple bullet-point type brochure. I think it would help parents a lot; it would help society a lot. But certainly when it comes to reporting and what is expected of people who are expected to report certain instances of abuse, et cetera, that sort of information would be very useful. Whilst the Minister can elaborate on that point when he winds up, I am sure there has already been consultation, et cetera, so there would be knowledge by persons in certain professions already of what the implications of this might be.

It would be good, for people who are new to the Islands or who enter this profession after the passage of this legislation, if a very clear concise type of pamphlet or brochure were developed to ensure that people understand clearly what role they are expected to play under this legislation. I think that is a point that we are not the strongest on in Cayman in that we often times pass very good legislation and believe that people are going to take the time to read it—especially with this kind of amending legislation where you have to read between the Bill and the Law and try to figure out what is being inserted, what is being amended. It is not easy to navigate. It is not easy to follow. I think that would be something very, very useful, Madam Speaker.

Obviously, the Minister in his outline of the specific provisions of the Bill has covered those matters I think quite extensively. So I am not going to actually get into that aspect of it.

I will end by saying that when we do this sort of work as a body of legislators, irrespective of who is Government and who is Opposition, this is a good day in my view for the children of the Cayman Islands. This is a good day for families in the Cayman Islands. This is not going to be any silver bullet or any magic wand, because people are going to behave how they will behave. But this Bill seeks to also strengthen parenting, which is one area that is so crucially important. The one thing that I hope comes out of this is that we identify at very early stages of children's lives when things are not going as they ought to, that the Ministry and the Department of Children and Family Services use these tools to really make the intervention as early as possible.

All of us know from our own personal experiences and friendships, and from things that have been reported to us in our communities, of people who lead unproductive lives and make poor choices. Very often the pattern of that sort of behaviour starts extremely early. Sometimes people have certain things happen in life later on, something that occurs once they have reached adulthood. But in most instances, those behaviours are exhibited at a very early stage. If we are going to continue to not intervene at that stage, at that point in the child's and the family's life, I believe we will continue to be frustrated by the instances of persons falling between the cracks as it were. And we try to remedy and help them at the tail end, by which time they are often at Northward, and we are spending so much more money and the hope of recovery is so much less.

If we can do it early, if we can get the type of assistance that parents, in particular, need . . . I would venture to say that the vast majority of cases, if not all, when we look at specific instances it is the parents' capacity to cope, to train and to lead their children and establish and ground them with a very useful skill. We oftentimes think that humans are born with it; but I personally believe that the ability to make wise choices and the right choices is a skill that is developed, that is shown to you and that you get from your society. And the primary place in society is your family. It is not something that humans are innately born with.

A lot of times when we see people who are on the “wrong track” or making poor choices in life, we somehow believe that they ought to just be able to do different and to do better. You hear people say “They ought to be able to do better. They are big adults. They have been doing this so long, why can’t they do better and make better choices?”

But, Madam Speaker, if we use these tools we can really go a long way at achieving some semblance of social reformation and engineering in the country. That is a difficult job, but one that every government has to take on. You do your best and you hope that the professionals involved are courageous, use the tools that are given to them.

I believe there are certain tools in this Bill that are going to [allow] Government and government workers the capacity to assist families and get families to a more productive state. I believe there are some very good tools in this Bill that will allow that to happen.

Madam Speaker, my colleague, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman is also going to speak to the Bill, but to more of the technical aspects of the provisions of the Bill. So with those few comments I can say that we ought to feel good about the work that we are doing this morning because it is providing the country with the type of enhanced legal infrastructure that can have a positive impact in our society.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O’Connor-Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to give my support to this proposed Bill.

For the purpose of clarity and avoidance of confusion let me take this opportunity to indicate the negative vote as it related to the suspension in that as far as my understanding was concerned it came as a grouping with the Children (Amendment) Bill, the Cape Town Convention Bill, and the Residential Tenancies Bill. I have no problem with the first one, but a problem with the late notice on the second. I voted collectively against them because it was not separated.

So, for any doubt that may have arisen, my negative vote was not to the Children (Amendment) Bill. Indeed, I am happy to support the Government in this venture. I do have some observations that I would like to share either for further elucidation or clarifications. Madam Speaker, on the provisions that I wholeheartedly support I will remain silent. I will only make comments on the ones that I have specific observations on.

Commencing, I will turn my attention to the proposed section 4, which deals with the acquisition of parental responsibility by a step-parent. Although from a strictly personal and biblical perspective I may have different conclusions to draw, I am not speaking in that capacity but in the capacity of the wider context of the society and community in which we live. It is a reality and we therefore have an obligation to deal with the realities as they exist.

Madam Speaker, I would, however, ask the Government to pay closer attention to this effort. I concur that there is a necessity to ensure that all and sundry, as far as it relates to the partnership in taking a holistic approach to ensure that our children are perhaps our greatest asset not only in this jurisdiction but worldwide, but to ensure that in so doing that we have the best situation at the end of the day.

When one looks at section 4A(1)(a), it refers to “. . . parent A or, if the other parent of the child also has parental responsibility for the child, both parents, may by agreement with the step-parent provide for the step-parent to have parental responsibility for the child; [and then it goes on to say] (b) the court may, on the application of the step-parent, order that the step-parent shall have parental responsibility for the child.”

I would wish for some clarification, Madam Speaker, in the response by the Government as to whether it is deemed necessary for it to be mandatory just for a sole application to be made by the step-parent, or whether there would be circumstances where we would envision a joint application by both natural parents and the step-parent, for obvious reasons. It would certainly cut down on the onus of providing the circumstantial evidence or a consent order, and certainly with expense. But, more importantly, should this commencement order ignore the wishes and the feeling of the child? Certainly, Madam Speaker, as it is written it is my personal interpretation that it does. If that is not the case, then I would be happy to concur after satisfactory explanation.

If, in fact, the legislation is silent on what I think is an important part of this tripartite relationship—that is, the child’s feeling—and seeing that we are moving into the rights of the child and the wider acceptance that the child should have perhaps more than our culture has hitherto accepted that a child should have, I believe it is a move in the right direction. And while we are here, rather than having to go back and do a cleanup with auxiliary legislation if it is silent, and from my understanding it seems to be, that I would respectfully ask the Government to give due consideration to it at this stage and perhaps clean it up if that is necessary.

I congratulate the Government in this attempt, which was made in section 4A(b) where it is dealing with termination, or the ending of a parental agreement and an application by the step-parent. Provision is made here for not only the person who has the parental responsibility for the child, but the child himself or herself with the leave of the court. I have no problem with this additional condition, subsequent, where it is not particularly just left to the child herself or himself. Obviously there are age considerations, but we also have to be fully cognisant that the children of today appear to be much wiser, much more observant, and therefore the age level of accountability needs to be revisited. It just cannot be a mandatory thing; it has to be on one consideration. But I have no problem, and neither would my colleagues on this side, having that provision that it must be subject to the court, just to add that extra level of accountability to ensure that the overriding factor in all of these considerations is the welfare of the child. That must be our paramount consideration.

Madam Speaker, I wish to look briefly at [clause] 5 [(a)] where it says “[4A] Before determining what, if any, services to provide for a particular child in need pursuant to the functions conferred on it by this section, the Department shall, so far as is practical and consistent with the child’s welfare (a) ascertain the child’s wishes and feelings [again, a good move in the right direction] regarding the provision of those services; and (b) give due consideration, having regard to his age and understanding, to such wishes and feelings of the child as they [may] have been able to ascertain.”

I just query here whether this set of circumstances does not warrant some type of consultation for the parent. For example, I would put forward to this honourable House, if it dealt with services requiring particular information or training when it comes to protection from sexual activities or contraception, et cetera, is the Government proposing that the child—and only the child—should be consulted with regard to the provisions of these services? Or is it significant enough for a parent to have some say or control?

Perhaps, Madam Speaker, there may be circumstances where the parent is unreasonable. Certainly that is not what I am purporting; but are we moving to a state of liberalisation in our culture, ideals and ideology that we are going to leave the parent completely out in an attempt to make it better for the child? If that is not the case, then I am happy to be convinced otherwise. But if it is the case, then perhaps the Minister or a member of his Government could attempt to convince me and the wider public why it is absolutely necessary for the parent to be left out in this particular provision.

I also wish to comment briefly on Part IIIA, which deals with the notification and investigation of abuse. Of course, it is the standard onus of reasonable suspicion where the law now would make it “[32A. (1)] if (a) a person to whom this section applies has a reasonable suspicion that a child has been or is being abused or neglected; and (b) the suspicion is formed in the course of the person’s work, that person shall [again it is mandatory, which is absolutely necessary in this particular set of circum- stances] notify the Department of the suspicion as soon as practicable after he forms the suspicion.”

There is nothing wrong with that. It is a good provision. It is good duty to notify, Madam Speaker.

Then an attempt is made in 32A(2), where it seeks to set out a long list, a long category of various persons who will now have this new duty. But I would particularly like to draw Government’s attention to (2)(i) and wonder whether they deem it necessary as it relates to a minister of religion, considering what has happened in some particular religions worldwide, in particular in the United States perhaps more than any other jurisdiction, to add words to the effect of “a minister of religion or other officers or members of the church” rather than just particularly a minister of religion.

Certainly, in the churches that I am familiar with, they will often have a youth minister or a youth director, a Sunday school teacher, all of whom have high morals. But, we live in a real world, Madam Speaker. And human beings being what they are, I would not want to see us create a statutory bar that somebody could slip through and commit such a heinous offence against children or persons under the age of majority.

Of course, in so saying some further extension of the definition [could] include persons such as deacons, elders, directors or owners who would not necessarily be employees of an organisation. Although I think it was a very valiant attempt at trying to specify all of the various categories, if the Government is convinced that it is not tight enough, based on what I said, I would be extremely happy to know that we are able to tighten it up a bit more. We ought to do everything we can to ensure that our children are absolutely protected from these heinous persons who seem to have no conscience whatsoever in committing these acts.

I also would pose the [question] as to whether or not this section is wide enough to have covered clubs and associations that also deal with various youth activities, because relationships will grow. The more you get in contact with anyone, relationships grow. Human beings are creatures who have a need for love and affection. It is just a natural end result, so we need to ensure that if we are going to list it, rather than making a very wide-sweeping general clause that would encapsulate all of these circumstances, if we could just have a general clause or an extension of the existing listed categories to make sure that it is as tight as possible while we have an opportunity today to so do.

Madam Speaker, as it relates to the same section, but to subsection (4), it says, “A person does not exhaust his duty of care to a child by giving a notification under this section.” And (5), “A person who contravenes this section commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term of six months . . . .”

Madam Speaker, certainly speaking from a personal perspective, I do not for one minute believe that this most lenient penalty will go anywhere close to being sufficient as acting as even a reasonable deterrent for persons who would fail to notify. Often we find situations where the act of omission is a bit greater than the act of commission. Children go through horrible psychological scarring and damage just from the fear factor itself when someone in authority, who they know, knows, and who has every right and every duty to go and notify but, for whatever reasons—and I can only categorise them as selfish reasons—they may not come forward.

I believe that just as was done with the Environmental Law where we had an atmosphere, an ambience of a silent code treatment. You know, it was culturally good to do X, Y and Z. So when it came time to conserve and preserve it had to be an attitude and a mind change. Likewise, with this type of legislation, there are certain cultural areas in our society where it is a taboo, especially if it is an incest type of relationship, parents—mothers included—would be fully cognisant that such an abuse, sexual and otherwise, is ongoing, but because of financial reasons, the need to have that other significant person there, they will trade off the rights of the child. I thought that if we would somehow find a way of increasing this penalty so that there would be no provision for a person to wiggle out of it because they would say, If I am caught, what is $2,000?

Yes, we are in an economic meltdown and downspin, but in the Caymanian society when you have to go up against those competing factors of family being disgraced, or a family member being put in a position where they might be incarcerated or lose their job, then I would respectfully submit that $2,000 is not a sufficient or reasonable penalty for such an offence. I would ask the Government to perhaps look at this again with a view to making it a more meaningful penalty.

Madam Speaker, as it relates to 32C, dealing with Confidentiality of notification of abuse or neglect, I am happy to see that the Government did include a section which will protect the notifier from liability. Of course there are certain provisos that the person would have to take [note] of, but Cayman is a small community and if this process of notification is to have any meaning whatsoever, most persons would need to know that when they notify every effort is taken to protect their confidentiality.

Again, we live in a real world. It is no good going forward being valiant and being a hero notifying if you are going to find yourself exposed to imminent danger, including your own life. Perhaps you might find one or two of those brave souls in our community, but it would not be as effective as it would have been if it had not been for the inclusion of this provision here.

Madam Speaker, as it relates to 32D, it says, “. . . nothing in this Law requires the Department to take or initiate any action under this Law in relation to a notification of suspected abuse or neglect of a child if the Department is satisfied- (a) that the information or observations on which the notifier formed his suspicion were not in the opinion of the Department, sufficient to constitute reasonable grounds for the suspicion;”

My only inquiry here is whether or not this piece of legislation should be placing the onus on the Department to satisfy themselves, or should this be placed on the Legal Department as is perhaps a similar case with any criminal offence. Does that mean that we are going to supply the Department with sufficient legal minds, or give the existing members of the Department additional training on legal matters relating to this specific area where they can decide whether or not there is sufficient evidence?

You see, Madam Speaker, not that I have a self interest in being an attorney myself, but with such training there are certain things that may not readily be conspicuous to the ordinary man on the street. Hence the reason we have a Legal Department or attorneys that are hired in house.

Maybe the Honourable Minister and his Department may have taken the position that staff can be expanded, as we have done with the Chief Officers or Human Resource Persons, where we have an in-house attorney. I certainly would have no problem with that. Maybe it would expedite matters. And there is a need for expediency dealing with children and sexual offences. But I just wonder if some comment could be made by the Government as to why it was deemed necessary to put this onus on the Department rather than an onus to continue, once that notification is received by the Department, onward to ensure that for whatever reason a child who had been abused did not lose his or her right because it was deemed not to be reasonable grounds by someone in the Department. That is the only reason for that observation, Madam Speaker.

There was another provision, 88A, which deals with the attendance in a court by a parent. It says, “Where under this Law a child is brought before a court, the parents of the child shall attend the court at all stages of the proceedings and any child care training programme ordered by the court, unless the court is satisfied that it would be unreasonable to require their attendance.”

When I first read it in the explanatory sections I was happy to quickly turn and see that the proviso or the conditional prescient had been added where the court would have a say, whether it was unreasonable to go. But I say, as a woman and as a parent myself, that I am also cognisant that these types of cases are not necessarily short. They can often result in protracted litigation. If we are going to expect the parent to attend to all of these proceedings, and any good parent would want to, especially in the economic condition we are in . . . but also because a lot of these children will come from single-family backgrounds where it is a mother alone working, or perhaps even a father, and there is only one income. Can we reasonably expect that parent to attend court and then, by extension, can we reasonably expect the employer, if she is not self-employed—which would make the matter even worse—to be in court for that duration not having the certainty of an income for the time that she is in court?

We see this, Madam Speaker, even with a juror (the Government has recognised this over the years) where they are paid a stipend. I do not believe it is enough, but that's another argument for another day. I believe that if we are going to move in this direction to try to mandate parents to be in court, and I understand the reason why, if for nothing more than moral support, but also to have an understanding and to illustrate and demonstrate that they have concern and a vested interest in the life and outcome of their child so that they can become productive citizens and that they can have a second chance at life and at being successful in our Cayman jurisdiction.

I think that in creating this necessary onus, duty and accountability in a parent, we must at the same time create a way to allow that parent to carry out that duty. It is like a double punch at the parent, from my respectful submission, in that if the parent decides that because it is going to cause financial hardship . . . that is a difficult argument to go to convince a judge that [the parent] cannot come today or for the next two weeks because there will be financial hardship.

How will our small community look at such a parent? Is the parent then going to be branded that her income or her financial wherewithal is more important than the child? Perhaps so, but I do not think that any parent should be put in that position.

Just as we have a provision for "criminals", where they can get legal aid assistance from the court, then I think we need to come up with a very innovative and creative programme to allow this provision to work properly whereby the parent, whether through application or through the department, can say, Look, I am here. I am ready to sit out for one day, two weeks, two months for this hearing, but can I be somehow compensated so that at the end of the day I can have it?

I know we can say there are vouchers, but you know and I know, Madam Speaker, that that is not the best mechanism to deal with this situation. It should be a separate vote within that Ministry or within the Courts, wherever Government sees fit to put it, that they know that they will not have to be competing with rental assistance or burial assistance or what have you, that they can do what they ought to do best—be there all the way without having to consider these considerations.

Madam Speaker, one may say, Well, does Government have to do everything? Well, Government is creating this obligation. Obviously Government has found through the ages, and through their experience, expertise and professionalism that perhaps some parents have not stepped up to the plate and have not been there in court and in other important circumstances for their children, and they have now deemed it necessary to put it in. But I would say to the Government, consider that request and, if necessary during the committee stage, see if we can find some way of including a financial provision to make this new duty a possibility for parents.

Madam Speaker, with those observations, I am happy to support this aspect of the amendments dealing with the Children Law and I look forward to hearing the response from either the Minister or other members of the Government in the discussion as we go into committee stage.

I also look forward to the speedy implementation, seeing that time is now of the essence more than ever before. Before we even have an opportunity to be nominated it would be a wonderful thing for every Member, putting parties aside, to be able to say we have left this legacy for our children. And that as we have deemed it necessary, great care was taken to expedite the drafting to put the requisite human resources, and spending long hours.

With that regard, I wish to thank the Honourable Minister and his associated auxiliary staff, included but not limited to that of the Legal Department, to put aside perhaps other competing legislation to ensure that this was put before the House at this time. I look forward to the safe passage thereto.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to offer my support for the Bill to amend the Children Law (2003) in order to provide for the mandatory reporting of possible cases of child abuse; to provide for the acquisition of parental responsibility by unmarried fathers and step-parents; and for incidental and connected purposes.

Madam Speaker, I am certainly happy to be here as we as a collective parliament try to do our best to protect the most vulnerable and most valuable in our society. It is our duty as a parliament and certainly our duty as a country to offer protection for all those in our community who cannot speak for themselves and who are unable to help themselves the way they previously could, such as our elderly, even our animals, and certainly our dear children.

This is a good example as we are in the process of Constitutional modernisation and the implementation of a Bill of Rights, as we get hammered by the Human Rights Committee who has said that we have not gone far enough with full fledged human rights and the rights of so many are being neglected.

Here we are today strengthening legislation to do exactly what they have said is being eroded.

It goes to show that regardless if something is enshrined in our Constitution or not, we as responsible leaders in our community, as parliamentarians, certainly have the good sense and the vision to offer protection for any vulnerable areas. There is a lot of work to do in this area, not just with children's rights, but certainly we do have other areas where we need to beef up legislation. It is not as if this is being ignored; it is just that everything cannot be done all at once, Madam Speaker.

Therefore, I am happy to see, and I am sure the various agencies involved in working with the protection of children's rights, people in our crisis centre and other such agencies that deal with the abuse and neglect of children, will be happy to see that we are refining, updating legislation to assist with ensuring that the rights of our children are protected.

Madam Speaker, we live in a Cayman Islands that is certainly a lot different from 30, 40, 50 years ago. We live in a Cayman Islands that has many broken families, many merged families, many different cultures that think in many ways different from the indigenous Caymanian. Things that at one time we never really had to give a second thought to, have now become important to us.

Madam Speaker, we have so many different people and agencies involved with care giving for our children. I mean, when I grew up I do not know if we had a daycare centre in this country. Maybe Ms. Kippy and those who have come lately will not know who I am talking about, but a dear old lady who did that on Goring Avenue, her real name was Muriel Syms. The Honourable First Official Member is nodding his head to me and saying that he attended Ms. Kippy's.

So we have come a long way in a short time, Madam Speaker. I am 47 years old so I am not talking about a long, long time ago. Yes, I know I am old. I still have a young mind! That's important.

Yes, Madam Speaker, I am saying that we now have to look carefully at all of the different interaction that we have for our young people. It is incumbent on us as parents and . . . primarily parents, to ensure that we know who is looking after our children. We here as legislators have to ensure that we have provisions in place to protect the various activities and control the potential for various abuses.

Madam Speaker, when we hear the court cases (and sometimes we know the names), we hear the gross actions against children, unspeakable crimes—physical abuse, sexual abuse. As a society, we have to take a firm stand against this. That is what legislation such as this is seeking to do. We are seeking to give those in authority the ability to disclose information that may have come to light in their work.

When we look at section 32A, and the long list that this section applies to, from medical practitioners right down through police officers, probation officers, social workers, ministers of religion and so on and so forth, so many people, care givers, preschool workers, and the list goes on, there are a lot of people who interact with our children.

Like the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, I would ask that maybe we reconsider what I see under 32A as the penalty for a person who contravenes this section. It speaks to a fine of $2,000, or to imprisonment for a term of six months or both. Madam Speaker, that to me is a little bit on the light side. These sentences need to be a deterrent to someone who has such grave knowledge and does not disclose it. Two thousand dollars is not the easiest thing to find, I know, but I do not think it is quite enough.

No one wants to be imprisoned, but a six month sentence, again, you serve three or four months and you are out. I think that we need to ensure that that is at least a minimum. We need to have discretion in this area, maybe, or a higher minimum for such a grave omission or inaction by such individuals.

We have many families where abuse takes place and the biological parent for some reason that is often times hard to comprehend by others will know that abuses are taking place with their child by the adopted parent or step-parent. And that parent will remain silent, and, in fact, chastises and further punishes the child for disclosing to them that they are being abused. That is quite disheartening and heart wrenching. One can only imagine what that child must feel when the one person in the world that the child has and holds dear, who should believe in the child, and the child goes to that person and that person turns their back on the child and chastises the child and maybe even beats the child because the child says she is being hurt by this other person, and they remain silent on the issue . . . what torment, Madam Speaker.

What must go through that child's mind? How can that child grow up to trust society? How can that child be productive in life and not hold a grudge? This is what we are dealing with, Madam Speaker, real, real issues.

I once attended a workshop put on by the Crisis Centre. I listened in awe and dismay with a torn heart at some of the stories of abuse that the public does not hear about. We, who live what we consider to be ordinary lives where all is well around us, do not have a clue as to what is really happening with some of our young people and children.

Madam Speaker, this is a very emotional piece of legislation because, like I said, it goes to the core of protecting our most valuable and prized asset—our children. Therefore, I want to ensure that as legislators and as this class of legislators that we put in all the teeth we can to ensure that when someone commits these grave injustices that they are punished to the fullest extent of the law. I want to see heavy tariffs in this area, Madam Speaker.

It is good that under this Bill we have defined a notifier as a person who notifies the Department that he suspects that a child has been or is being abused or neglected, under 32C(1). Through the proposals in this Bill, various protections are now offered to ensure that the person is not castigated or victimised or violated for disclosing the crucial information that will make a difference to action being taken in protecting our children.

Madam Speaker, as I said, we cannot legislate for all possibilities. It is just not possible. Not just with this legislation, but with any other piece. When we do make attempts to legislate, we have to do our best to cover as many of the scenarios as possible and we have to ensure that the legislation has teeth. There must be penalties, especially when it comes to social injustice in regard to our children and adolescents. Madam Speaker, I hope that we have gone some way with this Bill to doing just that.

I implore all honourable Members to support this important Bill. I am proud that the Government of which I am a part has been working hard at trying to protect our children. I hope that those who work with our children, the many agencies and caregivers out there will familiarise themselves, parents as well, with what protections there are. I hope that we as people of the Cayman Islands will work hard collectively at protecting our most prized asset—the children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to make a short contribution to the Bill now on the Floor of this Honourable House and to maybe begin where the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town left off in speaking to the workshop that I also attended, facilitated by Ms. Carol Graham.

One of the things in that workshop was that they were real-life stories. We sat there and listened to testimonials from individuals who had been affected. True stories. One of the things in that workshop that haunts me to this day is the story of a lady who as a child was molested by her father. As this continued the child, hoping for rescue, attempted to talk to her mother who simply ignored the situation.

One of the chilling things was of this child saying that one night while her father was in her bedroom she could hear her mother's footsteps coming down the hallway. She said to herself, At last, I am going to be rescued. And the footsteps stopped. She then heard the footsteps walking away.

Madam Speaker, I am elated that we have brought some amendments to the Children Law. But if I had my way, I would have human beings altered [so] that they would not even contemplate abusing children. That is not possible. But there is no other crime, there is nothing else in this world that hurts me more than abuse of children by adults, parents in particular who are supposed to be the ultimate protectors—who abuse their children or otherwise ignore the fact that they are being abused. I will never be totally happy and satisfied that we have done enough to protect our children, but we have to do what we can. And we do the best we can as we move along.

I am happy that some efforts have been made. We are all responsible in some form or fashion [for] whatever happens to our children. We need to take the responsibility seriously and assist where we can empower our agencies, where we can educate our people and our agencies wherever we can, and continue to impress upon them the importance of protecting our children.

Too often, there are stories of individuals who commit crimes, who become a menace to society, only to find out there was psychological damage from being abused as a child. It is very, very real. So no efforts should be spared in doing what we can to protect our children.

There are things that continue to concern me. At times, we become idealistic over the things we think should happen; and many times the things we want done are not possible. They do not work the way we envisage them. I am a bit of a radical thinker when it comes to things like this and whatever has to be done to protect children. I am one who questions the notion of secrecy in courts where we keep things confidential and private because we say we are protecting the child because they do not want society as a whole to understand that this particular child has been abused.

What we do in turn, Madam Speaker, is to somehow protect the perpetrator by saying to a child that a horrible wrong has been done to them by Uncle Tom, but they cannot talk about it. So, the child feels that while he was wronged, he needs to protect Uncle Tom as well. I believe that that is something we all need to sit down and take cognisance. We need to look into that and understand if we are really helping the child.

I believe that the most impressionable period of an individual's life is when they are young. If there is any bending or changing [possible], we need to work with them at that time. They [need] to go on to live normal lives as best and as quickly as they possibly can and not [have to] carry these burdens with them for the rest of their lives and begin to express it in other ways that are non-productive when they become adults.

Madam Speaker, another thing that I continue to question is, at the point of establishing that a child has been abused, what is the right thing. If it happens in the home, which is normally where these things happen, do we remove the child from the environment? Or do we remove the perpetrator? Again, the child has been wronged, and you then remove the child from its comfortable surroundings, family, friends, peers. That can be seen as another form of punishment. I've done nothing wrong, but you're removing me from my friends.

Should it not be the other way around? where the perpetrator is removed from the environment and the child be given every opportunity to live out a normal life.

These are some of the things . . . I have no objection to anything in the Bill, but I want to say that I believe we need to go further afield with our thoughts, and not simply look at the conventional way we have done things. We need to look at this much deeper. We need to understand that it is everybody's responsibility.

One of the things that I have been advocating is mandatory reporting. We have it here. This is a major step forward. I believe that we should not only put the legislation in but we need to promote this and make sure that every individual within these shores understands what this is and how they must use it.

Madam Speaker, we speak of all of the connected agencies where a child can possibly be abused. And we also need to understand that the majority of abuse with children takes place right in the home. We need to find a way to wake individuals up who are somehow connected, somehow related and able to detect that and find a way to help them report that, whether it is an older sibling in the home who believes there may be some abuse going on by an adult, to empower them to understand what needs to be done.

I am saying that the educational process that we have to go through here is simply not with the agencies of the schools or the Sunday schools, the playgrounds, or the Cub Scouts or the Girls Brigade, they are not the only areas that we need to concentrate on. The home, by far, Madam Speaker, is where most of these atrocities go on.

I believe that our neighbours also have a responsibility. If they notice something going on next door, they need to be empowered to be able to make the report or the proper assessment.

One of the individuals we may simply overlook because we consider it a position of insignificance, just about every home in this country has a helper. These are people that we need to empower. We need to give them the ability, the strength, whether or not it has to be a provision on a work permit, a question on the work permit, or a directive that they are required to report any belief of abuse in the home. I am saying we need to broaden the way we think about this whole thing.

I have mentioned relatives already. I believe that we ought to do whatever we can to let our children know how important they are to us. We continue to fight battles in our country with deviant behaviour and antisocial behaviour.

I know it is one of the things that continue to excite and drive our Minister of Education. This is something that he has been fighting for, for years, from even before he became an elected Member.

Ever since he was an Opposition Member this has been one of the fights he has carried to the community, that of antisocial behaviour, in his efforts through the educational system to see what we can do about remedying that. We have to pay close attention to this and make our young people believe and make them feel as if someone cares about them.

I concentrate my thoughts on that of sexual abuse, Madam Speaker, and there are many different types of abuse that our children do go through. But I believe that the time has come where we simply accept that the registration of sex offenders must be done. It must be done.

We have to stop believing that there is a taboo on that. If people make that mistake, if they take that step to abuse children, they must be exposed and we should not put any additional children or adults . . . sex abuse against children is one thing; but there are those who abuse adults as well. They must be known. We should not put other individuals at risk by allowing them to settle into communities where people do not know.

Now, people can change. But you must prove yourself. But people must know who you are so that I do not leave my little child with you living as a neighbour next door. I must be aware of that information.

Madam Speaker, we need to broaden our perspective and step out of the box with the way we go about protecting our children.

I am in support of the Bill and I beg other Members to support it as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.30 to allow the Minister's technical staff to get some answers to some very important points that have been raised on this Bill. I think they need a little more time. So we will suspend until 2.30 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.41 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.54 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

Does any other Member wish to speak?

[pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the honourable Minister wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

First of all, I would like to thank you for allowing us to take the luncheon break to look at some concerns as expressed by Members who spoke on the Bill. The Second Elected Member for West Bay made some very good observations. My colleague from Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the First Elected Member, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

On the break we met with the people from Legal Drafting. I must say it was a very productive meeting. Madam Speaker, I would ask you to consider waiving Standing Order 40 for those amendments which will come at committee stage.

Madam Speaker, this legislation is one of the most important things that has come to this House in a long time. For a significant amount of time people have been talking about the Children Law. I know that when the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman was a Minister, and also you, Madam Speaker, these were all things advocated by you to protect our children.

In recent times we have seen some of the abuse that has taken place. This Law will now force under serious penalty that reporting must be done and the consequences, as indicated by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, will be changed. We will deal with that at committee stage.

The Law up to now had been fine tuned, but we did a little more work on it. I will say that it will be something beneficial to our people. I know that the regulations that will accompany this Law are being worked on very diligently. We look forward to moving this through expeditiously once everything is put in place.

I see that my colleague, the Minister for Education, has just stepped in. I know how he has felt about accountability of parents and he has advocated that very strongly. This is in light of some of them not even showing up when their precious children have to go to court. I know all of us on this side and the entire parliament have those feelings. But we have to stop playing around. There are always variables when parents cannot attend at court, but within reason it is now required of them to be there to show support for those children which is no less than what they should be doing.

Madam Speaker, there are many more things I could say, but the hour is moving. I thank all of those who worked so diligently on this Bill—my Chief Officer, Deputy Chief Officer. I know that the Director and Deputy Director of the Children and Family Services have been dealing with this for donkey ages. I know they will welcome this and the ability with which they will be able to carry out their duties and with much more support across the board.

I would like to thank Sophy Broad, who has worked along with us at the Ministry; Mr. Griffith, Ms. Cheryl Neblett, so sterling, and today I want to say a special thank you to the honourable Acting Attorney General, the Second Official Member, Mrs. Cheryl Richards, for sterling performance as they worked diligently with us to getting all of the amendments in place.

Madam Speaker, I thank you, as you have also picked up in one of the amendments where we went back to make it much clearer.

And, just to finally say thanks to all of my colleagues in this Legislative Assembly for passing and dealing with this legislation in due course to make things better for the future of these Islands, our Caymanian children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled the Children (Amendment) Bill 2009, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Children (Amendment) Bill 2009 given a second reading.

Cape Town Convention Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Cape Town Convention Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I beg to move the Second Reading of a Bill shortly entitled, The Cape Town Convention Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Bill has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker, the Bill that is now before this honourable House seeks to give domestic effect to the Cape Town Convention.

Madam Speaker, the Cape Town Convention and related Aircraft Protocol is an international private law treaty designed to facilitate the cross-border financing and leasing of high-value aircraft objects. The Convention establishes the criteria for the creation of an 'international interest' in aircraft equipment and an International Registry for such interests and associated rules.

The Convention entered into force on 1 April 2004, and the Aircraft Protocol (which is the procedural steps by which the Convention is put into operation or put into force) entered into force on 1 March 2006. Both are heavily promoted by the major international aircraft financing entities, for example, the Export-Import Bank of the United States.

Our private sector firms in the Cayman Islands that specialise in setting up aircraft financing vehicles fully support the introduction of the Bill, as it will help protect Cayman's global market share, which was estimated in 2006 to be around 15 per cent of an industry that was expected to generate over US$1,200 billion in demand for new aircraft equipment over the ensuing 20 years.

Madam Speaker, the FCO has confirmed that the Cayman Islands can give domestic effect to the Convention and Aircraft Protocol, which is the purpose of the Bill, despite the fact that the UK signed but has not yet ratified the Convention. The ratification by the UK is now proceeding via the EU. Upon ratification of the Convention and Aircraft Protocol by the UK, extension of same to the Cayman Islands will be requested.

While it is intended to seek extension at the appropriate time, it is not necessary for the Convention and Protocol to be extended to Cayman for us to be able to gain certain commercial advantages from it in relation to aircraft financing transactions; it is only necessary that we give recognition in our domestic law to 'international interests' and the International Registry. The Bill closely follows the Aviation Working Group model legislation, in order to promote uniformity of implementation and thus commercial certainty.

The salient points concerning the Bill are as follows: Clause 3(2) of the Bill requires a 'Cayman Entity' (defined in clause 2) to make a specific election in writing to be covered by the legislation. The voluntary coverage route was chosen because it promotes commercial certainty and freedom.

A key feature of the Convention and Protocol, as mirrored in clause 17(2) of the Bill, is that it provides that interests in aircraft objects that are registered in the International Registry have priority in an insolvency over all other rights or interests, except for a 'priority non-consensual right or interest' (as defined in clause 2).

Madam Speaker, it should be noted that the proposed legislation will not impose any operational obligations on the Cayman Islands save for the establishment of procedures pursuant to clause 11(4) of the Bill to enable the Civil Aviation Authority to honour requests for aircraft de-registration in certain circumstances. This does not present any difficulties for the Civil Aviation Authority.

The Bill also preserves the potential for the Civil Aviation Authority's aircraft register to derive a marketing benefit from Cayman's implementation of the Convention and the Protocol.

Madam Speaker, I therefore commend the Cape Town Convention Bill, 2008 2009 to this Honourable House for passage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, very briefly.

I just want to say that this is an important piece of legislation which has been waiting in the wings for some time. I know that there has been considerable criticism from, among others, the Opposition, about the time it is taking for Government to deliver on some important pieces of financial services legislation.

To simply address that, I say that by and large that has been and continues to be an issue of resources, of adequate personnel, not just at the legislative drafting end of it, but also from the technical end in terms of the Portfolio of Finance and Economics and the secretariat there; an issue to which Government has for some time turned its attention, and an issue which really must be resolved. We need to beef up our ability to deal with these technical bits of legislation. That is something the Government acknowledges and something that the Government has been working on for some time.

In this particular instance, the delay in getting this important piece of legislation through has been the need to ensure that we have the approval of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office because this particular Convention and Protocol, as the Honourable Third Official Member said, has not yet been ratified by the United Kingdom Government itself. So we needed their approval to put this piece of legislation to this House.

I am delighted that we are able to do so before the House is dissolved. It is something that the financial services sector has looked forward to and has welcomed when I briefed the industry earlier this week about the legislative agenda.

Madam Speaker, with just those few words I say that we are delivering on another key piece of legislation which is of real commercial significance to the financial services industry. I urge all Members of this honourable House to give it their support.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Opposition bench can certainly support any legislation that enjoys support from the industry, and legislation which we believe will further the interests of the Islands and opportunities within the Islands. However, the honourable Minister mentioned the fact that there has been and continues to be criticism about the lack of timeliness in delivering key pieces of legislation that the industry has been agitating for.

Certainly, given the climate that we are in, and given the fact that a number of these key pieces of legislation have been waiting for some time and, as I understand, some real opportunities have been lost by the sector within the Cayman Islands because other jurisdictions have moved forward and taken advantage of some opportunities, the Bill will enjoy our support. But we will underscore our grave concern about passages of Bills that do not meet with the timeliness that used to be one of our key competitive strengths over many other financial service centres.

One of the real criticisms of other jurisdictions has been the delayed process and the delayed reaction of government when there is a necessity to produce the tools that the industry needs. And a lot of the tools are the legal infrastructure that allows you to conduct certain types of business and offer certain products. We can only hope that this is not a case of too little too late.

However, we do—at this very late stage in the game, in the twilight of the administration—support the Bill.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

My colleague has already put forth the position of the Opposition, in that we will be supporting this Bill. Obviously, Madam Speaker, I wish to put on record my concern over the lateness of it, not providing the amount of time necessary to fully canvass opinions from the sector and then finding myself on the position of totally relying on the Government that the consultation was there for this important legislation.

Even more so, Madam Speaker, one of my grave concerns while listening to the Honourable Minister of Education was the fact that, yes, it has come late, and I realise that when dealing with international financial legislation time is always of the essence. But from my perspective (and I would dare say other Members of the Opposition) we find it hard to sit here and concur that that blame should be directed toward the Portfolio of Finance and/or the Legal Department.

We realise that the legislative framework is competitive and from many Ministries and Portfolios. But it would be good to hear from the Government as to when this request for drafting was put forward, or when the request for this to be made a priority by the Government and then the jury would not be out as to the full cause of this delay. We find ourselves this afternoon having to support based solely on the representation made by the Government rather than doing some of the necessary homework that the Opposition likes to do for itself.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I simply rise to thank all honourable Members for their contributions and the points they have raised. I would comment briefly in respect of the last point raised as to the delay in the Bill and drafting dates, et cetera.

Madam Speaker, I can say from memory that this particular Bill went before Cabinet in 2006. It was deferred by Cabinet because we wanted to get input from the United Kingdom. The UK had not ratified this particular Convention at the time, and therefore was unable to extend it to the Cayman Islands. We wanted to get the view of the United Kingdom as to whether we could bring this Convention into local legislation absent the ratification of the Convention by the UK and, by extension, the Cayman Islands. We posed that question and it has taken considerable time to get an affirmative response to that, meaning that, yes, we are able to bring the terms and the contents of the Convention and the protocol via this piece of local legislation into effect.

Madam Speaker, with those few words, I thank all honourable Members for their contribution and their support for the Bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled, The Cape Town Convention Bill, 2009, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Cape Town Convention Bill 2009 given a second reading.

Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the table of this Honourable House The Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The motion has been duly moved and open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

This proposed legislation is entitled: "A Bill for a Law to Reform the Law Relating to Residential Tenancies; to Define the Rights and Obligations of Landlords and Tenants of Residential Premises; to Provide for a Commissioner to Mediate Disputes Arising between Landlords and Tenants; to Repeal the Landlord and Tenants Law (1998 Revision); and for Incidental and Connected Purposes.” That name is a very long name, Madam Speaker, but the short title is The Residential Tenancies Bill 2009.

As a background focus, Members will recall the situation that we found during the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan, where the availability of rental housing was drastically reduced due to the damages which were sustained. The result was that many of our residents found themselves without accommodation, and, as would be expected in a situation of reduced supply, the market forces resulted in escalating costs for the housing that was available.

We heard stories of tenants fortunate enough to be renting a property that was still habitable finding themselves suddenly homeless when they were evicted by apparently unscrupulous landlords who wished to capitalise on the potential to get higher rents from new, desperate tenants. We also heard complaints from landlords who found that their tenants had entrenched themselves in the rental property and were refusing to move out despite their leases being expired and, in some cases, rent being in arrears.

I do not need to remind everyone of what a tumultuous time it was here in Grand Cayman following Hurricane Ivan, as I am certain the Members of this honourable House remember it all too well. Suffice it to say that in many instances the stress of the times was evident in the relations between the landlords and their tenants.

It was against this backdrop that in October 2005 I tasked the Law Reform Commission to undertake a review of the landlord and tenant legislation which existed here in the Cayman Islands. The laws which currently deal with these matters include the Registered Land Law (2004 Revision), the Landlord and Tenant Law (1998 Revision), and the Common Law Rules for those situations not addressed in these statutes.

Over an 11 month period, from October 2005 to September 2006, the Law Reform Commission conducted research into this matter. This included reviewing the existing legislation.

For Member’s information, the Landlord and Tenants Law (1998 Revision) was originally enacted in 1838. I want to repeat that, Madam Speaker. It was enacted in 1838. Its purpose is to protect the interest of the landlords by making it easier for them to collect rent arrears. It deals with how a landlord may recover rent where there is no written lease, circumstances where the tenant leaves the premises with arrears of rent, and those situations where the tenant gives notice to quit but subsequently refuses to vacate the premises.

Upon reviewing this law, the Law Reform Commission was of the opinion that it does not provide modern regulation of tenancies and it should be repealed. So, upon reviewing the relevant local legislation, the Commission was of the view that there should be a separate legislation regulating residential tenancies, and that the Registered Land Law should be amended to reflect this.

As part of their research, the Commission carried out an extensive comparison of the legislation in other jurisdictions and investigated the successes and failures of such legislation. This included reviews of legislation from the United Kingdom, Australia, Bermuda, New Zealand, Barbados, and Canada.

On October 2, 2006, the Commission published a discussion paper and a draft Bill for public consultation. Upon releasing this draft, the Commission invited comments from all stakeholders, such as those professionally involved in the real estate industry, as well as the general public.

Written submissions were received from a number of stakeholders representing the public and private sectors. These submissions represented the perspectives of landlords, tenants, investors, the legislative branch of government, some government departments, and other private individuals.

As a result of the submissions received, the Commission again reviewed the draft Bill. In considering the public input, the Commission redrafted the Bill with a view of providing a balance between the rights and obligations of landlords and tenants. The result of this extensive review and public consultation is the Bill that is before us today.

Madam Speaker, I will now speak to the purpose of the Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009. As is evident from the long title of this Bill, The Residential Tenancies Bill generally deals with reforming the law relating to residential tenancies. Upon coming into force, this Law will clearly define the rights and obligations of landlords and tenants, it will create mediation opportunities for any disputes that may arise, and it will repeal the existing Landlords and Tenants Law (1998 Revision).

In summary, Madam Speaker, this legislation will make it clear to all parties involved what their rights and obligations are, and I believe it will ultimately result in improved relations between landlords and tenants and an improvement in the quality of the rental housing stock.

The Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009, is made up of eight parts and deals with a wide spectrum of issues relating to residential tenancies. The Bill provides for the following:

Part 1 is the preliminary section, and includes a number of definitions for interpretation of the legislation.

Part 2 deals with the application of the law, outlining which parties and which situations will be subject to the provisions of this law.

Part 3 makes provisions for the creation of a Residential Tenancies Commissioner and gives guidance regarding the conduct of mediation hearings and their outcome.

Part 4 outlines the proposed provisions for residential tenancy agreements and details provisions for security deposits, rent, and the rights and obligations of all parties.

Part 5 deals with the termination of tenancies.

Part 6 outlines proposed legislation governing the recovery of possession and compensation for same.

Part 7 provides for the registration of certain tenancy agreements.

Part 8 makes other general provisions, including destruction of premises, abandonment of chattel by tenants, unlawful acts, provisions to make regulations, a transitional clause, and the repealing of the existing Landlord and Tenant Law.

The Bill also includes a schedule which outlines the forms of the notices and the provisions for services of notices.

I would also like to take this opportunity to outline some of the parts of the Bill in greater detail, particularly those sections dealing with the proposed Residential Tenancies Commissioner, and tenancy agreements.

Part 3 of the Bill makes provisions for the creation of a Residential Tenancies Commissioner. Under the existing legislation, should a dispute arise between a landlord and a tenant, the only available recourse is either complaints to the police, or a civil case in Summary Court. In their research and consultation, the Commission found that many of the tenants who approached them with concerns indicated that they would not be able to afford attorney fees to pursue their dispute in court, and were intimidated by the prospect of representing themselves in Summary Court.

The Commission felt that something should be put in place that would allow for a clear, accessible path for dispute resolution for tenants and landlords. It was noted that going to court can be time consuming, expensive, and indeed emotionally draining, and often resulted in a complete breakdown of the landlord/tenant relationship. The Commission felt that a preferred vehicle would be to establish a facility whereby landlords and tenants would take their disputes to a mediator. It was felt that mediation would be preferable for several reasons:

- Mediation hearings are informal;
- It emphasises cooperative problem-solving and direct communication;
- It is usually much quicker swifter than a court process;
- Mediation is significantly less expensive than going through a court proceeding;
- It is confidential to the parties unless specifically agreed otherwise;
- It generally results in an outcome which has a greater level of satisfaction for all parties versus a court-imposed judgment that may leave all parties dissatisfied.

Accordingly, the Commission has proposed that a Residential Tenancies Commissioner be created. This would be a public officer, appointed by the Governor, who would be responsible for mediating disputes between landlords and tenants. Under the provisions of this Bill, all disputes must go to mediation by the Residential Tenancies Commissioner prior to be elevated to court.

The Law Reform Commission also believes that the creation of the Residential Tenancies Commissioner will assist in fostering more positive relationships between the landlords and tenants, and discourage the quick resort to police complaints and illegal "self-help." And I do not have to go into any details as to what that means, Madam Speaker.

As outlined on page 3 of the Bill, and I quote: "A Commissioner shall enquire fully into any dispute referred to him and all matters affecting its merits and shall make such suggestions and recommendations and do all such things as he thinks right and proper for inducing the parties to come to a fair and amicable settlement."

When a settlement is reached, the Commissioner will put it in writing and it will be signed by the parties involved. This signed agreement will then form part of the tenancy agreement.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to draw Member's attention to Part 4 of the Bill, which deals with Tenancy Agreements. Under Part 4, every tenancy agreement will need to be in writing and signed by both the landlord and the tenant. I refer Members to page 4 of the Bill, which outlines the contents of a tenancy agreement. As you will see, this does not mean that every landlord and tenant will now need to enter into a long lease document full of "legalese", rather it is to ensure that the basic parameters governing the tenancy are clearly outlined, understood, and agreed by both parties. I dare say these agreements are not necessarily agreements for which expert legal advice has to be sought.

Part 4 also deals with security deposits, rent increases, and details the rights and obligations of both parties in the tenancy.

Clause 36 outlines the specific responsibilities of the tenant, including paying the rent, keeping the unit clean and tidy, reporting damages to the landlord, and provisions for conduct upon termination of the tenancy.

Clause 40 sets out the responsibilities of the landlord, which generally are to keep the rental unit in a habitable state and maintain it in a reasonable state of repair.

As I mentioned previously, the other parts of the Bill deal with termination of tenancies, recovery of possession and compensation after a tenancy has expired or been terminated, and the registration of certain tenancy agreements.

I would also like to mention Clause 74, found on page 59 of this Bill, which deals with transitional arrangements. It is proposed that this Law will not be applied retroactively to existing tenancy agreements. Upon commencement of the Law, in cases where a tenancy agreement is not in writing, landlords will have three months from the commencement date of this Law to provide the tenant with a written tenancy agreement.

Members will note that Clause 74(3) makes provision for a landlord to be fined if he either fails to provide a written tenancy agreement or provides one which offers less favourable terms than those previously orally agreed to or provided for in this Law.

In closing off the introduction of this Bill, Madam Speaker, I believe that this legislation will benefit landlords and tenants alike—it clearly outlines both their rights and obligations, and creates a forum for the mediation of tenancy disputes. By balancing the rights and obligations of the parties in a residential tenancy, I believe it will prevent a repeat of the problems we witnessed after Hurricane Ivan.

Accordingly Madam Speaker, I would respectfully ask for the support of this honourable House for the proposed Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009.

I await to hear comments from Members in regard to its contents. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Again, I wish there was more time allocated for the Opposition to fully peruse and make a better informed decision. I listened keenly to the presenter and from what he said, and from what I have been able to personally peruse, I can say that I certainly lend my support to the Bill.

I have a number of short observations from what I have been able to peruse in detail. With the leave of the House I wish to use this opportunity as part and parcel of my debate to bring those to the attention.

Clause 4 provides that this legislation relates to residential tenancies. I did not recall hearing any specific reasons as to why the Government saw fit to limit it to residential tenancies. Perhaps some clarification could be given. Perhaps there are overriding factors that I am not fully aware of that I would like to be so persuaded.

My main concern that I have with what I have been able to peruse, Madam Speaker, relates to Part 3, dealing with Residential Tenancies Commissioner, where clause 9 provides for the appointment by the Governor of one or more persons as Residential Tenancies Commissioners. I was under difficulty to fully understand the deviation of policy in respect of the formation of this clause. In fact, I looked to see whether “Governor” was under an interpretation clause or definition section, and whether it was an indirect or a direct inclusion.

Certainly in the last 18 months the move has been to move away from this traditional concept, whether it is in this public officer or a Security Advisory Commissioner or the Commissioner of Police. I wondered whether or not Government had given some time in their deliberation of this piece of legislation to consider whether it would not be prudent for this particular creation of a Residential Tenancies Commissioner to add the words, “either on consultation with” or “on advice with”, whether it is Cabinet, the Leader of Government Business, the future Premier, what have you.

In my respective view, it does not go in line with what is being proposed and with the monies in advertisement and promotion to go along that line.

Madam Speaker, those are very brief observations. Generally speaking, from what I have been able to peruse, I think it is a step in the right direction in that security deposits have been used for all sorts of things except what they were intended to be used for, and the fact that clause 21 has specifically stated that the landlord holds the security deposit in trust, that it is not for their absolute use, it is not some type of side door rent that they can take away from the tenant, and I think that it would also behove the Government or the Commissioner, whatever is established, to do a lot of education and promotion of this particular piece of legislation, although time is somewhat short, so that both the tenant and the landlord would have no doubt whatsoever as to their entitlement.

Many, many substandard tenancies and landlord agreements and infrastructure have sprung up in the more commercial areas of Grand Cayman. And knowledge is power. Unless some attempt is made immediately as this piece of legislation comes into force it could create some uncertainty by the very ones that we are trying to help. So, I look forward to the Government taking that recommendation on board and perhaps they could give some explanation as to why it was thought necessary to deviate from the modernisation process or momentum that has been built up within the country.

Thank you.

If no other Member wishes to speak—

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to give my support to the Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009. We are all very familiar with the many horror stories that followed Hurricane Ivan, and the many atrocities that were committed mainly against tenants by some unscrupulous landlords. There are many recorded cases of tenants who found ways to take advantage of landlords who were perhaps not as ruthless as some, allowed people some degree of leniency, and were taken advantage of.

This was asked for in so many areas and it is one of the things this PPM Government promised the people of this country and I am extremely happy that we have managed yet again to make good on another of those promises.

While I can see that the Bill is extremely extensive and has gone a long way in making sure that the relevant areas are covered, I wonder if at some point, maybe in the winding up, the Honourable Leader of Government Business would speak to . . . for instance, we have a situation at times where families are renting. And when I say families, I want to make a distinction that a lot of times it is not just one individual but it may be a parent and three of or four children renting a premises, and there is an approaching hurricane, for instance, and the landlord refuses to protect the place.

Now, while it is their building, in many instances it is the tenants' furniture and so on inside the building. It is a bit difficult at times for tenants to deal with that. Many times it may even force them to move to other locations or otherwise attempt to secure the landlord's premises—sometimes at risk of damaging the place—but having no right to do so.

Madam Speaker, just so we make sure that we understand what I am talking about, when you are renting from someone it is the landlord's responsibility to do whatever is necessary to protect the building from the elements, the approach of a hurricane, for instance, where the belongings of the tenant would be at risk because windows and doors are not addressed by the landlord. The family's belongings can be put at risk and they may even lose them.

Madam Speaker, insurance on belongings is not mandatory for people renting. While a landlord may have a mortgage on the building and be insured, they have no financial interest in the contents because that belongs to the tenant. I am not sure if this is the right place for that, Madam Speaker, but that is one of the things that we can perhaps get some form of clarification on.

I am grateful to see that we have made some detailed attempts to ensure that premises are habitable because even now, Madam Speaker, there are still many rental properties on this Island not fit for human beings to be living in. But some people, because of financial issues, find it difficult to live anywhere else. I believe that we have to maintain some level of minimum property standard to make sure that people are not allowed to rent facilities that are not up to a particular standard.

Perhaps there needs to be a grading system in certain areas or for certain types of developments, or structures where we might want to consider a rating system where you know that a particular premises has the Authority's permission to actually be rented or leased, that it is at a standard where when you go to rent a property from someone they show you some form of permission (for want of a better word) that they are allowed by the Authority to rent the property, because landlords do make every attempt they can to rent properties that are not up to standard and collect as much rent as possible.

It is probably in here, Madam Speaker, but I am going to take the chance (because I have personally not taken the time to go through this entirely) to just mention whether or not there is anything to protect landlords from individuals renting a property and then subsequently bringing additional people to live on the property and putting an extra burden on the infrastructure, sewage and so on. That has become a serious problem in this country where you suddenly find yourself with a rental property but the number of vehicles that have no place to park on the property because it was not designed for 20 people, it was designed for maybe 5, and Planning agreed to a certain number of parking areas for the number of people who are supposed to live on the property. So we then have in small developments this problem of vehicles parking on the side of the roads and causing problems for emergency vehicles. I think we need to look at this.

I am support of the Bill, Madam Speaker. I trust that other Members will offer their support as well. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to give a short comment on the Residential Tenancies Bill, 2009. I speak in support of this and believe that it is timely and important.

This Bill brings balance to the tenant and balance to the landlord because it spells out the rights of each one. I believe that after Hurricane Ivan and certainly after Hurricane Paloma these are times when it is a concern to all of us.

I wanted to just mention in this Bill that it makes things easier to rent a residential property. It also makes it easier for the person that is renting it to feel comfortable that there is a Law and someone, so to speak, to look after them. My constructive statement would be that I would like to see a form that would make it very easy for both parties to have a document put in front of them.

Madam Speaker, I am completely at ease that everybody in this honourable House today can take this Law and interpret it and understand what they can and cannot do; but what I can factually say is that it would take a period of time to read through this and feel comfortable that you know it completely.

I believe that in our effort to get business done quicker and easier in this country [it would be helpful] if we had a balanced quick document available to the landlord and the tenant. And it is almost a checklist . . . as you look at Part 4 it sets out the contents of a tenancy agreement. It is very simple in this Bill: The full name of the contact and the address of the landlord, including any person with superior title to the landlord.

It goes to the full name, contact, address; the address of the premises, the date of tenancy agreement. Very simple items, issues, listed here.

Madam Speaker, I would think it would make it even easier if a form were provided in this that would be the recognised minimum standard, so to speak. If a tenant prepares the document, I am sure the tenant is going to look at it and see what would suit them. And if the landlord prepares the document, I am sure the landlord would look at it and see [what suits them]. So, before someone else prepares a standard form which may not be exactly to the letter of the Law, my suggestion is that maybe we consider that as part of this to make things easier and very efficient when people look to rent premises.

Madam Speaker, with that short comment, I am happy to support the Bill.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] I think I will suspended suspend proceedings for five minutes to allow the technical staff who have heard the comments on this Bill to prepare a reply for the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Proceedings suspended at 4 pm

Proceedings resumed at 4.21 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.
Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Madam Speaker, first of all, before I respond to some of the queries raised and some of the points raised I just wish, before we get in the Committee stage, to take a moment to clarify to Members the committee stage amendments that have been circulated.

The first amendment is simply in the marginal note for clause 1. The marginal note should have read "Short title and commencement" rather than as it is, just "Short title".

Also, there is an addition to clause 1, which means we have to renumber clause 1 as clause 1(1) and the addition will be clause 1(2). That addition simply reads, "This Law shall come into force on such date as may be appointed by order made by the Governor in Cabinet and different dates may be applied for different provisions of this Law and in relation to different cases." Madam Speaker, simply because once the Law is passed, several things have to be accomplished. So, it would not be expected to be enacted immediately once it is assented to and gazetted.

The commencement date will be whenever . . . and when I say "whenever" I do not mean an inordinate amount of time, just the length of time that it takes to put everything in place.

Also, the new Commissioner will have to be hired, which moves me straight into the point raised by the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. She raised a point which bears relevance with regard to the appointment of the Commissioner being made by the Governor. The reason it is stated like that, Madam Speaker, is simply because in the Law the Commissioner will be a public officer. And under the Constitutional arrangement, the Governor is the one who would be hiring public officers. That is simply the answer to that one.

Madam Speaker, there was a question about not allowing tenants to sublet premises that were leased or rented from a landlord. The simple answer to that is in any agreement that is made between the two parties for there to be a section in that agreement which either stipulates that it can or cannot be done.

There is also the question of why this Bill is limited to residential tenancies. The simple fact is that when the Law Reform Commission began their investigation into the situation which prevailed, they found that there were no real concerns expressed with commercial tenancies, so they did not see a need to expend their energy in that direction.

The point raised by the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman regarding a standard form for the tenancy agreement is a very insightful observation. The Government certainly takes it on board, although I do have to say that that is the intention of the Government . . . if you will recall, I said in my earlier comments that it was certainly not a situation where people were going to have to hire legal expertise to engage in these tenancies. So, either by regulation or otherwise, that would be done in such a way that both tenants and landlords will have access via a website or on hardcopy in standard form. Once the Commissioner's office is established, I am sure that part of the operation will be that the forms will be readily available.

Madam Speaker, once again, I commend the Bill to this honourable House. I wish to thank all Members for their comments and, certainly based on those comments, I wish to thank them in advance for the safe passage of the Bill.

The Speaker: It is two minutes away from the hour of interruption. If it is the intention of the House to go into committee on these three Bills this evening, I would entertain a motion for the suspension of the relevant Standing Order, as the Standing Order says that at 4.30, if we are in committee, the Presiding Officer shall rise and return to the Chair.

Is it the intention of the House to go into committee stage this afternoon?

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I do not believe committee stage will take very long. Once it is convenient for all concerned, we are happy to do that. Unless there is a problem . . . and I do not see any clear indication that there is.

Is there a problem, or can we go into Committee?

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Speaker, it is not a problem on this side except to concur with what you just stated. We have a few minutes before going in, unless we have to go in and come out like a jack-in-the-box, I think it would be good to take an adjournment, based on what I understood you were trying to say.

The Speaker: If I go into Committee stage at this time, Standing Order 10(2) says that at the hour of interruption . . . the Presiding Officer shall return to the Chair unless the proceedings in Committee would only take a few minutes. With a Bill the length of the Tenancy Bill, and with the relevant amendments, I think we need suspension of the Standing Order to continue beyond 4.30. That is all I am asking for.

But before I do that, I think I need to put the question on the Second Reading of the Tenancy Bill (thank you, Second Elected Member for West Bay, you always keep me on my toes, don't you!)

The question is that a Bill shortly entitled The Residential Tenancy Bill, 2009, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Residential Tenancies Bill 2009 given a second reading.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, I know what all has been said. And I know that you will allow me, but I just want to remind Members, first of all, that on Monday we have the Michael Foot expedition from London, which is the group coming down to deal with the—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of Government Business, are we suspending Standing Orders to go into Committee, or can we adjourn?

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: No, Madam Speaker, I am going to adjourn. I want to advise Members, that is why I was—

The Speaker: All right.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Just one second. [pause]

Thank you. I had a blank moment there.

Madam Speaker, there is the Michael Foot review which was ordered by the Treasury to review the Crown Dependencies and the Overseas Territories. It is not something new for us. We met with Mr. Foot and his team when we were in London last. But he is on island on Monday and he is expecting to meet with all of Cabinet from 9.30 until 11.30 [in the morning]. So, when we call for the adjournment now, I just want to advise Members that we will not be able to return until Monday afternoon.

I suggest that we still have lunch here so that it will not be difficult to have a quorum to resume. I would ask that this honourable House be adjourned until 2.00 pm on Monday, 16 March 2009, and I trust Members will be prepared to work late.

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn until 2.00 pm Monday. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

At 4.32 pm the House stood adjourned until 2.00 pm Monday, 16 March 2009.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

Report of the Legal Subcommittee for Persons with Disabilities

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I too would like to welcome two of my students here today.

Madam Speaker, today I wish to lay on the Table of this Honourable House the Report of the Legal Subcommittee for Persons with Disabilities which was commissioned by the Ministry of Education, Training, Employment, Youth, Sports and Culture in 2007.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin: This Report lays the foundation for the implementation of new legislation which will transform current provisions and have a positive impact on the lives of persons with disabilities. Further, it will be a helpful instrument in mainstreaming disability in the Cayman Islands development agenda so that our society may be as inclusive as possible for all.

Madam Speaker in laying this Report I would like to take this opportunity to speak to it in some detail to provide an overview of the detailed work which has been undertaken in order to find the best possible template for comprehensive legislation for persons with disabilities within the Cayman Islands. The objective of this new law is to bring about tangible change for persons with disabilities in the Cayman Islands so that they may enjoy the same rights, freedoms and protections that others of us take for granted.

Over the past few weeks, the issue of services and provisions for persons with disabilities has been widely reported in the media, and it has been inferred that little attention has been paid to the needs of this particular sector of our society. The delivery of this Report shows that the opposite is, in fact, true, and that a great deal of meticulous care and attention has gone into developing new provisions for a comprehensive continuum of care for all such persons.

Madam Speaker, in 2007 my Ministry commissioned and established a steering committee for "Planning the Future for Persons with Disabilities in the Cayman Islands." Their work culminated in a report which outlined the limited provisions that existed for persons with disabilities, and detailed the areas needing improvement.

This initial report established that in order to provide the requisite improvements and grant long overdue protections for persons with disabilities, a new legal framework would need to be put in place to underpin the progressive revisions that were clearly required. Thus, a Legal Subcommittee for Persons with Disabilities was formed in January, 2008, to begin the process of legislative reform. Given the nature and importance of this mammoth exercise, the committee comprised health service providers, technical and medical professionals in the field of disabilities, and persons whose lives had been touched in some significant way by disabilities—either personally or in the form of parenting or guardianship.

Their specific terms of reference were to consider the wide-ranging issues affecting persons with disabilities in the Cayman Islands and to provide the necessary infrastructure for the creation of a comprehensive legal framework that would serve to enhance the rights of all persons with disabilities.

After carefully reviewing existing laws and identifying the woeful inadequacies of current legislation pertaining to this sector of our community, the Legal Subcommittee turned their attentions to other laws and policy documents from around the world—including other Caribbean Islands, the United States, United Kingdom and Canada. This search, however, proved futile as no single piece of existing legislation could be found that was considered comprehensive enough to meet our particular needs here in the Cayman Islands. The focus was then shifted to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

This piece of legislation covered a vast number of scenarios including, but not limited to, personal mobility, freedom of expression, education, health, rehabilitation, and participation in cultural, political and social life.

The Legal Subcommittee perused the UN Convention article by article in order to identify the areas that could be improved upon to fit the specific needs of persons with disabilities living in the Cayman Islands. Although the UN Convention provided the best template overall, it too had limitations, such as, having no formal definition of disability, and some of the areas it addressed were vague. The Subcommittee then compared disability legislation from Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Antigua and Barbuda, and Barbados to the UN Convention to determine commonalities and differences.

Finally, to augment the new Cayman Islands legislation even further, sections from other pieces of Legislation such as the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (UK) were incorporated. This Act specifically addressed the formation of a National Disability Council and went into greater detail on issues such as discrimination in the areas of employment, education and transport.

I could go on, Madam Speaker, to name the extensive list of documents that have been meticulously researched to ensure that the foundation of the proposed Cayman Islands legislation is a sturdy, comprehensive and effective one. But, suffice it to say, I am confident that given the Committees' deep understanding of the difficulties that persons with disabilities can face on a daily basis within our present societal structure, this Report fully addresses all of the principal needs and issues.

As I have said, this Report outlines each of the Articles from the UN Convention and provides relevant recommendations by the Subcommittee for amendments which are necessary to bring about equal rights and a continuum of care for persons with disabilities in our Islands. It also goes as far as specifying which areas should be addressed in law and which should be dealt with at the policy level.

Notwithstanding the fact that a study was conducted in 2001 on the existing Mental Health Legislation in the Cayman Islands and the limitations of that particular law, this is the first time that there has been a full and comprehensive review of all legislation pertaining to persons with disabilities in the Cayman Islands. Further, this is the first document that has ever been prepared that covers all walks of life for our persons with disabilities.

At long last, with this Report in hand, legislative drafters will be able to create a customised, wide-ranging disability law. Once this work is legislated, this comprehensive disability law will be the first of its kind in the Caribbean—and for most of the world—making the Cayman Islands Disability Law a model framework for other countries.

Madam Speaker, neither I nor the Legal Subcommittee thinks for a moment that the transformation process from what we have now to what is envisioned will come about quickly or easily. A law of this stature affects every aspect of life as we know it—from education to healthcare, to building regulations and recreational participation, to employment, housing and safety to name just a few. Further, it covers the number of persons with disabilities a company should employ, to the special training of police officers so that they know the correct way to approach and/or detain a person with a disability in a safe manner.

Undoubtedly this law will bring many challenges with its implementation, and some of these challenges will be at a legislative level where other laws may have to be revised to fall in line with the new disability law. Additionally, its implementation will require large scale public awareness about the specifics of what has changed and who will be affected. Notwithstanding these challenges, this day is a historic day for persons with disabilities in the Cayman Islands.

This report is an expression of this Government's unswerving dedication to proactively address the needs of all sectors of our population, and is a resounding assurance of our commitment to facilitating equal opportunity, full-participation and the wholesome development of persons with disabilities.

Coincidentally, it has come at a time when there is a heightened awareness within the community on the subject of disability, fueled by the constitutional discussions and the draft Bill of Rights. In the context of these discussions, it is important to note that this new customised legislation will complement the draft Bill of Rights by having the potential to ensure that the rights of persons with disabilities will be factored into the social and institutional operations of this country.

Further, the provisions in the Report relating to equality and non-discriminatory treatment provide protections that should allay any concerns about the absence of a freestanding non-discrimination clause in the draft Bill of Rights.

In addressing those concerns, the Report speaks on the collective behalf of persons with disabilities and goes to great lengths to ensure that all such persons are facilitated in living independent, meaningful, socially connected lives in an environment that is more accessible and understanding of their needs.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to present this Report to this honourable House and would like to take this opportunity to thank the following members of the Legal Subcommittee for their stellar work and dedication in completing this invaluable and timely report. They are . . . and a number of them are sitting in the Gallery:

- Mr. Brent Holt (Chair), Head of Student Services—Department of Education Services
- Dr. Angella Glidden, Deputy Director of Health Regulatory Services—Health Practice Commission
- Nurse Hazel Brown, Chief Nursing Officer—Health Services Authority
- Mr. Kenneth Farrow, Lawyer—Mourant
- Mrs. Kimberly Voaden, Occupational Therapist—Department of Education Services
- Ms. Kimberly Huggins, Ministry of E,T,E,Y,S & C
- Mrs. Lidia Futter, Human Rights Analyst—Human Rights Committee
- Mrs. Mary Trumbach, Parent of PWD
- Mrs. Maxine Everson, Special Olympics Cayman Islands
- Mrs. Mitzi Callan, Parent of PWD

- Ms. Odia Reid, Government Legal Department
- Ms. Sophia Forbes, Person with Disability
- Ms. Danielle Coleman, former Human Rights Analyst, Human Rights Committee

Because of the tremendous amount of work and research that has been done in preparing this Report, the work of legislative drafting will be made much easier. Madam Speaker, God and the electorate willing, it is my intention that a bill to protect and promote the rights and interests of persons with disabilities will be ready for discussion by this House very early in the next term.

Thank you for your indulgence, Madam Speaker.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received notice of a statement by the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Environment, Investment and Commerce.

Tourism Outlook 2009

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, there can be no doubt that the global economic recession is having an impact on international travel. Consumer confidence, as I have said before, is at an unprecedented low driven by fear, uncertainty and concern. Booking windows have shrunk, making it virtually impossible to predict future travel, and even the most affluent of consumers are looking for deals.

But there is good news. According to the latest American Express Harrison Group research, families will do whatever it takes to keep travel in their plans because it is the only time that they truly get to spend together. In the same study, 66 per cent of parents admitted that children were very influential in vacation decision making.

The household income of our target demographic for the summer shoulder season is lower than that of our target for the winter months, so potential visitors may be more affected by the US recession. It is imperative, therefore, that we have compelling offers in the marketplace to break through the competitive noise and give visitors comfort that a vacation in the Cayman Islands is "worth it".

Madam Speaker, this does not mean discounting and devaluing the Cayman Islands product, however, as several of our regional competitors are still struggling to get back to the price level they were at before 9/11 due to pursuing an unsustainable strategy that focused heavily on deep discounting.

The DoT's summer strategy, in addition to offering the regular fifth night free, will extend value where families cherish it most. The package offers targeting the US market will allow kids travelling with adults to eat, stay, and play free at some of our best attractions including the Cayman Turtle Farm at Boatswain's Beach, Queen Elizabeth II Botanic Park, Pedro St. James National Historic site, and a wide variety of private sector owned water sports.

This year, for the first time kids aged 12-17 will be able to dive free. Sea School will provide a welcome distraction for kids aged 5-11, where they will learn about Cayman's marine life and become "protectors of the environment". They will also create their own authentic Caymanian crafts and receive a Sea School certificate from Sir Turtle himself.

While an attractive summer offer, we need something more to cut through the advertising and PR clutter if we are able to effectively compete with Caribbean and US beach destinations and hotels, many of whom are offering deep discounts.

This summer, the local tourism industry is partnering with Cayman Airways to implement a Kids Fly Free promotion which, in today's environment, will be a direct motivation for families to travel. If the current economic environment is forcing some families to consider whether or not to even have a summer vacation, or how to maximise their value in doing so, a Kids Fly Free programme will serve us well.

Cayman Airways, which was instrumental in bolstering this winter's performance by introducing Washington DC and Chicago as new gateways, will continue to play a pivotal role this summer.

The Acting Director of Tourism recently conducted a media blitz in New York City, and I can tell you that if the reaction from the media is anything to go by, the Kids Fly Free programme will be a great success.

We are also offering families another reason to travel this summer—the first ever world class Skate camp programme in the Caribbean. According to research, there are more than 20 million skateboarders. Skateboarding has eclipsed baseball as the national pastime of America's youth. 'Skate Cayman' will reinforce Cayman's leadership position in the region by creating an authentic, credible programme geared towards families by teaming world class athletes with a world class on-island asset—the Black Pearl Skate Park at Grand Harbour.

While we are still in negotiations with leading skating athletes and cannot, therefore, release specific details, I can tell you that we expect some of the top names in skateboarding to endorse the programme.

Although not officially part of our summer programme, another event which will help to increase business is 'Something Blue', a luxury wedding summit for the toastmasters and influencers in the Romance Market. This event takes place in June and will (through great PR) let brides know that the Cayman Islands is the perfect place for a summer, fall, spring or winter wedding.

In summary Madam Speaker, consumers will still choose to travel, but it will take great cooperation on the part of our tourism stakeholders to ensure the destination continues to stand out among the crowd and region. This summer, we are giving great value as families will receive the fifth night free and other discounts including child-related activities and airfare. The rest of our competitors have deep discounts in the marketplace so we have also included other incentives to travel, including our Sea School and the Skate Cayman activities.

I would like to thank the tourism stakeholders in the public and private sectors for having the foresight to develop such an aggressive summer programme—the best to date—and for the unprecedented level of consultation and participation. The tourism industry realises this is not a year of business as usual as I have said before. We have been working together for the past three years to continuously grow air arrivals and to attain arrivals of over 300,000 visitors, the highest in six years.

While in recent months (and, in particular, since October of 2008) we have had some impacts from hurricanes threatening the region and the global economic crisis we are still doing relatively well and we have fared much better than most islands in the Caribbean. There is more to be done in components of our sector which remain vulnerable, and we will continue to dedicate ourselves and our lives to moving forward with this dynamic industry.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

MOTIONS

Government Motion No. 14/08-09—Government Guarantees in respect of debt refinancing by the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I beg to move Government Motion No. 14/08-09, which is captioned Government Guarantees in respect of debt refinancing by the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited. And, Madam Speaker, with your permission I would like to read the body of the Motion. Thank you. It reads:

WHEREAS in March 2006, the Governor in Cabinet and the Legislative Assembly authorized the issuance of a guarantee of an amount not to exceed US$5 million for the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited to obtain financing for additional direct construction costs and to meet current operational needs as a result of the delayed Grand Opening of Boatswain's Beach, post Hurricane Ivan;

AND WHEREAS in September 2006, the Governor in Cabinet and the Legislative Assembly authorized the issuance of a guarantee of an amount not to exceed US$8.8 million for a loan for operational and capital requirements of the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited from a local banking institution or, from local banking institutions;

AND WHEREAS in February 2009, the Governor in Cabinet approved the cancellation of the existing Guarantees approved by the Legislative Assembly in March 2006 and September 2006 totaling US$13.8 million in favor of the issuance of a new Government Guarantee. The new Guarantee shall be for an amount not to exceed US$14.8 million in order to secure the transfer and refinancing of debt of the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited from one local financial institution to another;

AND WHEREAS in February 2009, the Governor in Cabinet also approved the issuance of a new guarantee to secure an existing US$5.5 million overdraft facility used by the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited at a local financial institution;

AND WHEREAS section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005 Revision) provides that, as a general rule, no guarantee may be given by or on behalf of the Government unless it has been authorized by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly;

BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that, in accordance with Section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005) Revision, the Legislative Assembly hereby authorizes the Financial Secretary to do the following:

- A) issue a Government Guarantee to a local financial institution, for an amount not to exceed US$14.8 million, in respect of the transfer and refinancing of debt of the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited from one financial institution to another; and
- B) issue a Government Guarantee to a local financial institution, for an amount not to exceed US$5.5 million to secure an existing overdraft facility used by the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, this Motion seeks to put in place two new guarantees for the Cayman Turtle Farm in order that the company can transfer and refinance the locally financed portion of its debt portfolio. As outlined in the first two sections of this Motion, in March and September 2006, the Legislative Assembly authorised the issuance of two separate government guarantees totaling US$13.8 million in respect of financing for the Turtle Farm.

These guarantees were used by the company to obtain two separate loans from a local financial institution. One loan was for US$5 million and another for US$8.8 million. In addition, the company also has an existing local loan for US$1 million that is secured by a charge over a parcel of property owned by the company. And because of that charge there is no government guarantee in respect of that US$1 million loan.

Currently, the Cayman Turtle Farm Limited is in negotiations with another local financial institution to refinance its local debt portfolio, and while no deal has yet been finalized the proposed refinancing is in the amount of US$14.8 million, and its terms are such that it will allow the company (that is the Turtle Farm) to realise significant cash outflow reductions in the amount of cash spent on servicing the local portion of its debt portfolio over the next several years.

Madam Speaker, part A of the resolve of the Motion seeks the approval of the Legislative Assembly to issue a new guarantee for the Cayman Turtle Farm Limited in the amount of US$14.8 million. This new guarantee will be used to facilitate the transfer and refinancing of existing debt held by the Cayman Turtle Farm Limited, and to also provide the company with approximately US$2 million in additional cash to finance its operation. The issuance of this new guarantee for US$14.8 million will cancel the existing guarantees issued in March and September of 2006.

In addition to the issuance of the first guarantee, part B of the resolve of the Motion seeks the approval of the Legislative Assembly to issue a second new guarantee for the Cayman Turtle Farm 1983 Limited in the amount of US$5.5 million in order to secure a revolving overdraft currently being used by the company. This overdraft facility is not new debt; it has been in place since 2007, and the balance outstanding increases and decreases based on the company's cash inflows.

Madam Speaker, the issuance of the two new guarantees represents a net increase of US$6.5 million in government's contingent liabilities, and this will impact the government's financials by affecting the government's net debt ratio specified in the principles of responsible financial management, which are set out in the Public Management and Finance Law. However, the impact is fairly negligible.

The Public Management and Finance Law states that the net debt ratio cannot exceed 80 per cent. Prior to considering these guarantees, the Government is forecasting that its net debt ratio at 30 June 2009 will be 73.6 per cent. After factoring in these new guarantees the net debt ratio would become 74.4 per cent, which is certainly below the 80 per cent ceiling limit, and represents a marginal increase of 0.8 per cent.

Madam Speaker, with these brief comments I ask all honourable Members for their support of this Motion in order that the Cayman Turtle Farm Limited can proceed with the transfer and refinancing of its local debt portfolio. And, Madam Speaker, it is precisely that. There is not a tremendous increase in the amount of new debt that is being sought for a government guarantee; it is simply a refinancing of existing debt and a guarantee being sought for an overdraft which has been in place for quite some time, and for which, previously, the local banking institution was content with a letter of comfort in respect of that overdraft but they now seek a guarantee.

So, I ask all honourable Members for their kind support of the Motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Just to say thanks to all honourable Members for their silent support of the Motion.

The Speaker: The question is: BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED that, in accordance with Section 8 of the Public Management and Finance Law (2005) Revision, the Legislative Assembly hereby authorizes the Financial Secretary to do the following:

(A) issue a Government Guarantee to a local financial institution, for an amount not to exceed US$14.8 million, in respect of the transfer and refinancing of debt of the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited from one financial institution to another; and

(B) issue a Government Guarantee to a local financial institution, for an amount not to exceed US$5.5 million to secure an existing overdraft facility used by the Cayman Turtle Farm (1983) Limited.

All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

SECOND READING

Education Modernisation Bill, 2009

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, it is my honour today to bring to this House a much needed Bill that seeks to modernise the management, supervision, and regulation of education across the Cayman Islands. If enacted into law this legislation will make provision for education across the board; from early childhood education through the compulsory sector, to tertiary education in Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, in government schools and in non-government schools alike.

And so, Madam Speaker, I move the Second Reading of The Education Modernisation Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is opened for debate.

Does the Honourable Minister wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, The Education Modernisation Bill, 2009, will marshal all of the relevant governmental authorities: All those responsible for school management along with all of the dedicated educators who work every day in our schools and strategically focus their collective efforts on our students and the improvement of each student's learning experience. This student-set approach has been the hallmark of this Government's efforts to transform our education system into a truly 21st Century education system, which, as I have previously said, must find a way to meet the complex challenge of preparing students for jobs that do not yet exist using technologies that have not yet been invented in order to solve problems that have not yet arisen.

Madam Speaker, I make no apologies—nor should I—for believing in and focusing on the individual and collective futures of our people, for the two are inherently linked. Young or old, rich or poor, we all deserve the opportunity to learn, to better ourselves and ultimately to make the best of ourselves. In short, we all deserve a brighter future, and a brighter future founded on increased educational opportunities for all of our people will mean a better future for the Cayman Islands as a whole.

Is this a challenge? Undoubtedly, it is, Madam Speaker. But it is a challenge that this Government has met head on. It is a challenge that this Government has prioritised, and it is a challenge that this Government has rightly dedicated much time and significant resources to. In so doing this Government has established a sound basis for improved educational performance in years to come.

Madam Speaker, it is also a challenge that this country has put off and delayed for far too long, and one that this country must continue to meet head on, for if we depart from this path to success I fear for the future of these Islands. If we return to this disorder and mismanagement, if we stop listening to our stakeholders who have done so much to shape this reform process, if we fail to value our education professionals and, having engaged them and demonstrated that we believe in them, if we now devalue those efforts, then the future of this country—our future—will be worse, not better, and dimmer as opposed to brighter, both metaphorically and, I'm afraid, in reality too.

This legislation, if enacted, will enshrine in law many of the reforms that have been successfully introduced over the last four years and will, therefore, go some way to securing the continuance of the reform process. As I said towards the end of 2007 when I first presented to this honourable House the legislative plans for modernisation of education, we need a new law which will secure systemic change, increase accountability and at the same time liberate the teaching profession. Madam Speaker, this is precisely what this Bill now seeks to do.

Much work has gone into the creation of this Bill. In the course of its development, every effort has been made to capture both the essence of the reform process while, at the same time, accounting as far as is possible for the ever-changing and increasingly rapidly changing paradigm that is 21st century education.

When I took office, Madam Speaker, the premise of the operating legislation was already over 20 years old. If you can cast your mind back 20 years and recall how different these Islands were then, that will give you an indication of how out of date the current legislation has become and, therefore, how important this Bill now is.

When I took office I also inherited a draft Education and Training Bill crafted by the last government to replace the old legislation. While considerable work had clearly gone into what is a lengthy document, it quickly became clear to me and [my] advisors that this was not the best way forward. The reform process initiated by the National Education Conference in September 2005, and propagated by the National Consensus on Education shortly thereafter, inspired all those with an interest in education to contribute to the future shape of education in these Islands. It was evident that any new legislation should seek to embody this inspiration and encompass it.

Unfortunately, the draft Education and Training Bill (apart from the pervasive practical difficulties that themselves would have required significant remedial attention) was quite very clearly out of kilter with this new dawn in education. Indeed, it could be said that the objectives of the two were in some ways about as different as night and day.

This view was articulated in the Cayman Islands Education Law review of 2007, which I presented to the Legislative Assembly on 21 November 2007. This report identified that the current Education Law (last revised in 1999) was more a set of general rules on matters which have from time to time received attention rather than a fully coherent structured enactment. Furthermore, the Education and Training Bill was largely an expanded version of the existing Law and therefore had a similar tendency.

The Education and Training Bill still had no overarching structure and, as the report asserts, it really was “much more a thesis than a law; more a charter than a statute; more principled than structural” and that it did not “serve the desired purpose”.

Madam Speaker, this report which was produced in conjunction with the Education Law Team from the National Union of Teachers in England and Wales, following extensive consultation with all of the local stakeholders, including teachers and other educators, parents, students, members of the Legislative Assembly and the general public, concluded with an outline of the legislation that is now before this honourable House in the form of the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009.

In the subsequent year this first draft was further refined and tailored to local needs, which enabled me to return to this honourable House with a more complete draft. This was delivered in the form of a paper entitled “A Legislative Framework for Educational Entitlement in the Cayman Islands”, which I presented to this House on 13 October 2008. This included not just the final working draft of this Bill, but also explanatory notes on each of its parts.

In addition to the work of the local legislative drafting team, Madam Speaker, the Ministry was pleased that the lawyers from the National Union of Teachers in England and Wales (headed by Mr. Graham Clayton) continued and still continue to retain a healthy interest in the development and ultimate passage of this Bill.

Madam Speaker, as I previously explained to this House, this support has been provided on an expenses only basis to the Cayman Islands. And in spite of no expenses being incurred since July of 2007, we have continued to draw great benefit from the sage advice of a team of lawyers whose knowledge of education law is second to none.

For this assistance the Cayman Islands owe a great debt of gratitude primarily to one man who is no longer with us. His name is Mr. Steve Sinnott. And as the general secretary of the National Union of Teachers it was he who authorised the provision of this support.

Madam Speaker, my meeting with Mr. Sinnott was one of those fortuitous events. I first met him at a conference in the Bahamas just after I took office but actually got to know him quite well at a conference held in Cape Town, South Africa, in 2007. As a result of the discussions and the friendship that we forged, ultimately he came to agree to the National Union of Teachers assisting us in the development of new education legislation for these Islands. And over the course of the following couple of years and by visits by the NUT team to Cayman and visits from those of us in Cayman (myself included) to the National Union of Teachers in London we developed a piece of legislation that we currently have.

Madam Speaker, tragically, Steve died of a massive heart attack last year. I have to say his loss is great. And I have to also record my personal gratitude to him for ensuring that we have before us the quality piece of legislation which we currently do.

Madam Speaker, the Bill that is now before the House is set out in 16 parts. It is a Bill for a Law to make provision with respect to education in primary and secondary schools, in career and technical institutions, in tertiary institutions, in early childhood institutions and for lifelong learning. In addition it seeks to promote high standards in education and the teaching profession; and to make provision for related matters.

Part I simply deals with the preliminaries in the legislation, namely, its short title, arrangements for its commencement and the interpretation of various terms utilised in the Bill.

The substantive provisions in the Bill begin in Part II with the Education Functions of Governmental Authorities. The current Law vests power for the management of education in these Islands in an Education Council and a Chief Education Officer. However, in a democratic system with an elected Minister with constitutional responsibility for education, this is clearly unsatisfactory. The main powers and attendant responsibilities must lie with the elected Minister and not a semiautonomous governing council. As such, the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009, begins with the duties of the Minister responsible for education.

In line with the Public Service Management Law the Minister is primarily assisted by the Chief Officer in the Ministry and it therefore follows that the Bill should logically proceed to detail the duties of the Chief Officer. Included in these duties are a number of reporting requirements which will ensure that the people of the Cayman Islands are regularly provided with extensive information on the position of education. This is an important commitment which reflects the centrality of education and learning to the future success of these Islands.

The Minister and Chief Officer will still be assisted by a Chief Education Officer, although in light of the new governance model for education introduced by this Government, and the new service orientated focus of the department, this post will now be entitled "Director of Education Services".

The Director of Education Services will report to the Ministry and its Chief Officer, and, with the assistance of the new governance model, will be directly accountable for the conduct of government schools. A combination of the outdated legislation and institutional inertia previously made it difficult to hold anyone accountable for education. It is anticipated that this new organisation and alignment will have a positive impact on morale in schools and student performance.

While the old Education Council will be shorn of its administrative powers, this Bill recognises that it is still important to retain a similar body of experts to advise the Minister on matters pertaining to education. A council has therefore been retained, but it is termed an Education Advisory Council to reflect the nature of its role in this new more efficient organisational structure.

Part III of the Bill requires that both government and non-government educational institutions are registered. An educational institution is defined in Part 1 of the Bill to include a school or an institution that provides tertiary education, career and technical education, or education to prepare for the award of a degree qualification or certification. This provides some clarity as to what institutions need to be registered in lieu of the circular definitions and confusion in the current Law. Moreover, in an era where education is increasingly a commodity, this registration process also puts in place some quality control thereby recognising the importance of high standards in education.

Part IV of the Bill deals with School Attendance, Admissions and Access to Education. In line with the resolution of this House following a Private Member's Motion proposed by the Third Elected Member for George Town, my colleague, the compulsory school age has been extended at the upper end to 17. This will enable all Caymanian students to have an opportunity to embark upon one of the pathways identified in the Better Pathways, Brighter Futures Initiative.

Conceived by this Government, the Better Pathways, Brighter Futures Initiative is planned to come into operation in the academic year commencing September 2010 along with the new secondary campuses. And it is envisaged that this will give students the opportunity to pursue the International Baccalaureate Diploma programme or career and technical options, or to re-sit some examinations to augment their portfolio of qualifications, or to be assisted in their transition to the workplace through supplemented and supported workplace learning.

Madam Speaker, the development of the new secondary campuses is critical for many reasons. Clearly foremost among these is the way in which their design and agility will facilitate the improvement of the learning experience for all students at the secondary level. However, it is only with these additional spaces that we will also be able to cater for this exciting range of post-16 options at the existing George Hicks campus. This is also a good example of the complexity of the planning that forms this new legislation and which has underpinned the reform process in general.

It is easy to say, for example, that I support an additional year of education or we need to better prepare our students for the workplace, as indeed I do. But the difficulty arises when one seeks to implement these policies. The planning of the secondary campuses, as I have just explained, is intricately linked to the Better Pathways, Brighter Futures Initiative. It is more complex than that, however, because the construction of the secondary campuses is also integral to the new governance model for the more efficient management of education, the introduction of learning communities, which will ease the transition from primary to secondary, and the elimination of the Middle School which has inhibited the development of students at a secondary level, to name some of the other ingredients in this complex recipe.

This is a good example, Madam Speaker, of why I often refer to the education continuum, and why this Bill refers to the concept of lifelong learning. We must provide opportunities and facilitate learning, not erect barriers and artificial constraints. And where there are transitions we must do all that we can to make those transitions smooth so that the learning process is not unduly hindered. This is why this Government has chosen to look holistically at education and, in so doing, to provide greater opportunities at every stage—greater opportunities in early childhood, in primary, in secondary, and in tertiary. This is why this Government has designed secondary campuses which will value the individuality of each student and their particular learning style. And it is why this Government is now bringing this Bill before the House.

Returning to the substance of Part IV, Madam Speaker, this part of the Bill also establishes a parental duty to secure school attendance. Parental choice is nevertheless maintained by an exception which will facilitate home schooling if desired. However, it is important that this exemption is closely monitored so as not to give rise to the possibility that any child may miss out on an education. This Bill therefore establishes that regulations may be made to manage and monitor any application for an exemption from this duty.

Part V of the Bill provides for a national curriculum and key stage testing. The development of Cayman's first ever national curriculum for key stage 1, key stage 2 and key stage 3 represents a massive step forward in the provision of equitable education across the Cayman Islands, and also provides students, teachers and parents with a clearer understanding and appreciation of student attainment. It is therefore important that this national curriculum is enshrined in the proposed new legislation. This it is, and it is mandatory for all government schools.

While recognising that there are non-government schools in the Cayman Islands which follow an American system or a Canadian system of education, it is hoped that some non-government schools will still adopt all or part of the national curriculum and the Bill certainly permits this. Although the national curriculum will not be mandated in private schools, all schools will nevertheless be required to assess the standard and level of each student at the end of each key stage and the outcomes of these assessments must be made available to parents and legal guardians.

Part VI of the Bill provides for the evaluation of schools and replaces the important work of the Education Standards and Assessment Unit (formerly the Schools Inspectorate) on a statutory footing for the very first time. The work of the Education Standard and Assessment Unit will apply equally to government and non-government schools and these independent evaluations are intended to operate as a significant contributory factor in the school improvement process. As a senior educator in government's employ, the Director of Education Standards and Assessment Unit will also serve as an independent source of research and expert advice to the Ministry of Education.

Part VII of the Bill addresses professional standards in education and establishes a council on professional standards in education for this purpose. The council will be responsible for the register of teachers and no person may be employed to work in a school as a teacher unless registered. And that, Madam Speaker, is in relation to all schools, both public and private. In addition, the council on professional standards in education will also deal with the removal of persons from this register where there is just cause to do so. In doing so the Bill ensures that the principles of natural justice are adhered to and that all persons who face the possibility of removal will receive a hearing. As such, this council will uphold professional standards and promote the high standing of the teaching profession.

Part VIII of the Bill permits the Minister to provide funding to non-government schools. If a school is in receipt of funding it will be termed an assisted school to rightly reflect this assistance. Funding to assisted schools has been significantly increased by this Government and much of this additional funding has focused on school improvement. In keeping with this policy of monitoring and accounting for such funding this Bill permits the Governor in Cabinet to make regulations governing the terms and conditions applicable to any grant to an assisted school.

Part IX of the Bill makes provision for career and technical education. Career and technical education is defined as education that prepares students for specific careers, trades or occupations, or allows students to develop expertise in a particular group of technology relevant to specific careers, trades or occupations. Career and technical education or what is traditionally known to some people as technical and vocational education and training, has seen significant development in recent years.

With increased support for, and take up of such courses at the University College, the introductory of new exam options in auto mechanics and leisure and tourism at John Gray, and the centrality of careers in technical education, is the Better Pathways, Brighter Futures, Post-16 Initiative. Building upon these achievements it is important that the Minister is able to provide funding for the further enhancement of this sort of education, and this Bill therefore provides for such powers.

Part X of the Bill addresses tertiary education and outlines a number of ways in which tertiary institutions may come into existence and receive support. In the future the Cayman Islands may need to guard against unscrupulous tertiary institutions that seek to establish themselves in these Islands. This Bill therefore establishes a power to regulate the conduct and management of tertiary institutions and the quality of the courses of study provided.

Part XI of the Bill makes provision for early childhood education. While the developmental work on this overarching education law was going on, my Ministry has also been working on bespoke early childhood legislation. Ultimately, however, it was determined that it made practical sense to include all provision for the entire education continuum, including early childhood education in the one Bill.

Early Childhood Education is defined as education provided to children under the compulsory school age in early childhood institutions and includes the care, stimulation and socialisation necessary to support development and learning. This provision of the Bill, Madam Speaker, empowers the regulation of registration of early childhood institutions; the prescription of academic and professional qualifications of teachers and other persons employed in early childhood institutions; the prescription of standards with regard to safety, security and sanitation in early childhood institutions; the inspection of early childhood institutions; the development of a curriculum framework for use in early childhood institutions; the regulation of funding provided to early childhood institutions, and for the attendance at such institutions.

Part XII of the Bill addresses discipline in schools and prohibits corporal punishment in all schools. This formal prohibition enshrines the policy that has operated in government schools for some time now. While corporal punishment is prohibited, the Bill does permit physical restraint where restraint is necessary for the physical protection of the student or any other child in the school. Part XII then proceeds to require all schools to establish a student's behaviour and discipline policy.

Madam Speaker, the division of the old George Hicks High School, where ill discipline was rife, into four smaller separate schools, where discipline has notably improved and performance indicators have in turn also improved, demonstrates that there is a tangible connection between behaviour and performance. It is therefore anticipated that the requirement that all schools possess a student's behaviour and discipline policy—provided that these are properly administered—should have a positive impact upon performance.

Part XIII of the Bill makes provision for additional education needs. This term has been preferred to special education needs because all students should be considered special. Indeed, the Bill specifically notes that all persons have a unique combination of talents, aptitudes and abilities which necessarily impact their learning. This is an important new addition to the legal provisions relating to education, and is perhaps the best example of how the proposed legislation will enshrine a more inclusive education system.

To this end, Madam Speaker, the Bill anticipates that provision for additional educational needs will be made in all schools where students require this assistance. At the same time, these provisions also mirror this Government's significant additional commitment in this area which means that all government primary and secondary schools now have at least full- or part-time dedicated services provided by an educational psychologist, a school counselor, a speech and language therapist and an occupational therapist.

Part XIV of the Bill regulates the use of school premises so that school premises, together with its equipment and facilities, may be used for purposes other than for school. In the context of government schools and the development of the new secondary campuses this is clearly necessary to realise the vision that these new facilities will be community facilities and will provide numerable opportunities for lifelong learning, sporting and cultural activity, the hosting of elections and, in the unfortunate event of a hurricane, much needed shelter.

Part XV of the Bill makes special provision for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Madam Speaker, this should not be misinterpreted to mean lesser provision, but rather that it simply permits, where circumstances require, more appropriate provision. As Minister of Education I am very conscious that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman have not always had a fair deal when it comes to education. I am proud that during my time as Minister, Cayman Brac has seen significantly increased support for additional educational needs. The Little Cayman education service has, through the increased use of technology, been brought more into the mainstream of education service.

Part XVI of the Bill is the final part and makes various miscellaneous provisions, including the creation of an offence of causing or creating a nuisance or disturbance at a school. Once again, this speaks for the importance of good order and appropriate behaviour at schools, and the relevance of this to an environment that is conducive to learning.

Madam Speaker, as I have moved through each part of this Bill I trust that Members who are here will have appreciated how each piece of the jigsaw has been put together to provide a fully coherent and structured Bill. In addition, and in conclusion, Madam Speaker, I commend the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009, to this honourable House because it places the learner at the heart of the process; because it envisages [inclusion] and equity in the Education system; because it encompasses the entire learning continuum and supports lifelong learning, and because, Madam Speaker, it provides an overarching commitment to high standards in education.

Madam Speaker, this Bill represents an immense amount of work by a large number of people, both within and outside these Cayman Islands. To them all I convey my heartfelt gratitude. This Bill has taken almost four years to develop, but its genesis was the determination, desire and zeal to improve outcomes for people within our education system.

Madam Speaker, the Hallmark Conference of September 2005, which produced the National Consensus on Education document, is the heart of this legislation. Essentially, and perhaps for the first time in this country, what we have in the national consensus document is a document that represents the views of the key stakeholders in this particular area of endeavour.

This legislation which comes at the end of this term has the benefit of having been drafted in an environment where the changes were taking place so that the legislation is designed to underpin the fundamental changes in the education system to represent and reflect the efforts to transform education in this country rather than us having, as I think was the case in the past, a draft piece of legislation which was developed in an academic environment with little or no regard to what the ultimate objectives and outcomes of the process were to be about.

Madam Speaker, much of what this legislation covers has already been implemented, is already in effect. This legislation will provide the legislative basis and underpinning to ensure that those changes are firmly entrenched, and that there is a basis to ensure the enforcement, where necessary, of the relevant provisions to improve education and, ultimately, outcomes for teaching and learning.

I trust that what I have said so far will assist Members in understanding the provisions of the Bill and the objectives that it seeks to achieve. I look forward with much anticipation to the various contributions from both sides of this honourable House to this very important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to offer a few comments on the business before the House, which is the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009. And this is one of those occasions in which Members of all sides of the House can certainly agree with the overarching goal in creating the best possible framework for the dispensation of formal education within the Islands to our people.

Not just today, but certainly for the last few decades, every administration has sought to improve and enhance upon whatever educational framework it has inherited. That framework would have included the existing legislation and all of the relevant policies that have been created over the years and, certainly, all of the other institutional frameworks that have been adopted and practiced within the Islands.

Madam Speaker, education is one of those topics that causes the vast majority, if not all, of any community to sit up and pay attention. Everything that you do and every move that you make in terms of the legal framework, curriculum and standard setting, is seen as having great potential to give citizens the greatest potential or opportunity to maximise their potential.

If we look at the development of our Cayman Islands we will see that in a very short space of time, relatively speaking, these Islands have made some very positive strides as it relates to education. I think oftentimes when we speak about education we sort of lose the historical context in which the debate ought to be framed. Madam Speaker, the truth is that the economic development of the country and the necessity to import relatively large quantities of educated and skilled labour to take up very lucrative and prominent positions within the Islands causes us to sometimes lose focus of where we have come from, and to also lose focus on some of our limitations as a country. In fact, sometimes we perhaps do not give ourselves enough credit for achievements that our small community has made as it relates to educating Caymanians over, as I said, a relatively short period of time.

Madam Speaker, especially when it relates to this topic of education we cannot ever be satisfied at where we are. We cannot ever pat ourselves on the back for too long, because the truth is with the changing world and times in which we live we must do our endeavour best to stay ahead of the curve. So, education and the disposition of education to our people, like all things, has had its good days and in some instances not such good days. But all in all we have done a relatively good job on the academic front.

Many will certainly argue, and I believe with great merit, that our system has promoted and catered to students with the capacity to learn in the traditional sense, methods and, certainly, the traditional standards, but not so much to persons who may have other types of skills and may learn very differently different types of things.

So, Madam Speaker, when we go to the graduation at the John Gray High School and other high schools we will see each year a lot of young people who make us all very proud by having become honour students. From the context in which most people try to assess how well students have done, those would be the shining stars as it were. However, all of us who have gone to school will recall people who, while they may not have had the highest of aptitudes for math, science, social studies, they may have been extremely skilled artists; people who are just naturally good with their hands. And so while those on the academic front have progressed, we see that there has been a real vacuum as it relates to persons who learn very differently and have very different skill sets.

Madam Speaker, just to round off the point in terms of our achievements in education as a country, one only needs to look around and see the number of Caymanians who have gone on to become lawyers, accountants, teachers, architects and engineers. And if Cayman were simply a small town in a much larger country perhaps we would not be as tough as we have been on ourselves at some points in history as it relates to our achievements.

I believe that given how life works, we have to recognise one thing about humanity: A certain percentage of our population will be high achievers from an academic standpoint. Others will perhaps have other interests, and others, through no fault of their own, may not fall into any of those categories. Like every other species God has put on this planet, we are each very different, have different strengths, different capabilities and capacities.

So, in my humble opinion we ought not to try to tell ourselves and the wider community that every single person who has ever been born in these Islands and is Caymanian is going to have a plethora of natural talent in any specific area. That is not how God has created and made humanity. I can't give a reason for that, I have simply observed it.

Madam Speaker, from that backdrop we must ensure that the systems and policies that we have in place give our people the best tools and the greatest possibility to maximise their potential within the confines of their God-given talent. In fact, Madam Speaker, we ought as a country to seek to inspire our people to go that extra mile, take that extra step and really apply and push themselves.

Now, Madam Speaker, we also have another very important facet of every person's life. In fact, some would say as important, and in some instances more important, than one's natural and biological makeup, and that is the social environment in which one has to operate—that is, the home. All of us will know personally people we could point to and say, Boy that person, had it not been for their circumstance, could have been X or could have been Y. We all know about those stories. We all know people who fall into that category.

In a utopia we would have a system where every single person (given their God-given talent and potential) could be brought into our education system and not just utilise it, but have their God-given talent enhanced and pushed in such a way that everyone would get the five-star rating and be that classic over-achiever who has gone beyond where they might have otherwise gone. But, Madam Speaker, we know that that is not the case. We know that that is not what happens in the real world as we humans live our daily lives. If that was the case there would be very little need for us to even be standing here debating a piece of legislation, because everyone would be, as I said, going above and beyond and exceeding what would be just that God-given raw talent that they have.

Madam Speaker, the Opposition can say that we certainly believe that this Minister and all of his predecessors have done their endeavour best in what they thought was the right thing as it relates to education. No one can convince me that we have ever had any person who occupied that chair as minister who willfully and knowingly tried to somehow not ensure that the children of the Cayman Islands were not going to be given the greatest opportunity for success.

We have seen the work that has gone in and the emphasis that this Government has certainly made to education in terms of their words. And we get to this point where we are going to vote upon the framework that would move the prospects of education forward and modernise it.

Madam Speaker, in looking at the Bill, the one thing that is quite obvious is that the Bill is just that—it is a framework that has a number of fixed institutions, but it gives the Cabinet the possibility—via regulations—to drill down and really create its specific policy as it relates to some very important aspects of the educational spectrum.

We see that the Bill deals with the traditional areas. We also see some new areas. But, certainly, we see the whole issue of registration of educational institutions, attendance and admissions and access to those institutions, the whole issue of the national curriculum, and the evaluation process. We also see our professional standards in education which deals with those who dispense education. We see the crucial aspect that you never ever win on, I believe—the funding. We also see a section dealing with career and tertiary education, early childhood, discipline and prohibition of corporal punishment in schools and, Madam Speaker, additional needs. And in all those sections, whilst a framework is there, there is the possibility for the Cabinet of the day through whoever is charged as a Minister of Education to ensure that their specific policies are adopted via the use of regulations.

Madam Speaker, I am going to attempt to go through the Bill with a number of observations, some of which I hope the Minister and his Government are going to take on board, because some of them I believe ought to be dealt with in primary legislation versus matters that could be simply left to regulations. The reason I say that, Madam Speaker, is because I think there are certain additions to this framework that are absolutely necessary and should form a part of what would be the foundation and the bedrock for the educational framework of the Cayman Islands.

In Part II of the Bill, Madam Speaker, section 4 deals with the duties of the Chief Officer of the Ministry of Education. But more specifically [section] 4 (2)(a). I will read it, Madam Speaker: “The chief Officer shall, at least once in each year, prepare and submit to the Minister a report containing such information as the Minister may specifically or generally, from time to time, require and at least the following.”

It gives three provisions, (a) through (c). And (a) reads: “information describing the standards of achievement of students receiving education in government schools, assisted schools and independent schools, together with such information as may be available about the achievements of home schooled students and other students educated otherwise than at schools;”

Madam Speaker, as you move through the Bill and get to the section that deals with (let me get the terminology right) additional education needs other than . . . there. I was trying to envision precisely what category of students that last phrase was envisioning where it says, “. . . other students educated otherwise than at schools” and I was hoping that the Minister could inform the House of precisely what is being envisioned by that language.

Madam Speaker, also in this part, in section 6 it calls for the establishment and duties of the Education Advisory Council. In section 6(2) we get to the creation of the Education Advisory Council and it says, “The Governor in Cabinet shall make regulations with respect to (a) the membership and proceedings of the Education Advisory Council.”

Now, Madam Speaker, one of the things I certainly believe in and am a strong advocate of, is getting away from this old system that we employ in the Cayman Islands in which important institutions are often simply lined with persons who support you during general election time. I believe that the whole issue of education and this important council ought to draw from the widest and deepest array of available talent and minds within these Islands.

Any of us who are true to ourselves, Madam Speaker, would profess that what traditionally happens when we appoint these types of bodies under legislation is that governments typically and hopefully search for the best minds from the community as it relates to a specific area. I said hopefully, Madam Speaker, because we have seen from time to time where, in varying aspects of administration of the country, governments have selected people for membership/chairmanship of some very important bodies simply because they were a political supporter, and not necessarily because they were the best person available for the job.

What also happens often, Madam Speaker, is that the talent pool in the country becomes diluted. We already have a very small community and a limited base from which to draw from, so if you go just on the basis of averages . . . let us say at the time of appointment you have an incoming government and key supporters and people that they know and trust represents 55 per cent of the population: 45 per cent may not be seen in that light.

Lost in that percentage oftentimes are very bright and able minds who, simply because of their affiliation from a political standpoint, get excluded from the whole process of appointment to these important institutions and bodies. I believe that the country deserves better. We as legislators should recognise the grave limitation the system in which we operate in allows for.

Madam Speaker, let us use again just a raw number. Let us say that a council like this was going to have five members (pick a number). What oftentimes will happen is that a government will appoint by district and try to get the minds they believe can contribute from a cross-section of the Islands. And oftentimes you will wind up with, let us say, a strong chair person and two or so other strong members.

And then, as you look at the appointment process, you see that as government tries to draw people from the community to assist in the administration of the country. Let's not forget; let's make sure we frame this in the context that it is real and is but one appointed body that assists any government in the administration of the country. You have areas like Planning, Immigration, Water Authority, and I could go on and on with the important institutions and boards that are appointed and have to be appointed by law, which assist every government.

So, if you start looking at the numbers of boards and the limited pool from which we have to draw, any time you start dissecting that even more, you will automatically see that your possibility for the best outcome becomes very limited.

From my personal perspective I would like to see us get to the point that as we appoint important bodies and institutions we draw and take appointees from the entire gamut of the legislature; Government, Oppositions, and even if you have independent members in the Chamber. Because when you do that, Madam Speaker, you wind up giving greater potential for ensuring that indeed [you have] the brightest minds and the best persons for whatever facet of civic/governmental administration is required.

For example, let's say that this body was going to have seven members and the government was going to appoint four or five of those. Automatically the Government has to appoint the best possible people for the job. And, Madam Speaker, the other membership in the House will naturally seek to do the same thing. The one thing I have noted is that when people are brought together to do a job and do these types of jobs where there are committees, councils and other important bodies within the country, irrespective of background and political affiliations, the reality is that when you sit on these boards you pay attention to the work at hand and do the very best you can for the agency or entity to which you are representing.

Some would say, Well that is a cute argument for a Member of the Opposition to make.

Some might say, Well what else would you expect from a Member of the Opposition?

But I think anyone who has heard me talk about these types of issues and institutions will know that from my observation in my eight and a half years as an elected Member that this is a point that I truly, from the depths of my heart, believe to be the best way forward for this country. What you do is to create the framework and the possibility for all the best minds the country has available to be engaged and to play this critical part as it relates to civic responsibility, giving back to the community.

Madam Speaker, I would move on to section 7 which is Part III—Registration of Educational Institutions. Section 7(4) reads: “A non-Governmental educational institution that was authorised under the Education Law (1999 Revision) may continue to operate as if registered under this Law but only for one year from the date that this section enters into force, during which period the institution shall apply for registration under this Law.”

And section 7(5) goes on to say, “Where within the period of one year referred to in subsection (4) a non-Governmental educational institution makes a valid application for registration under this Part and the application is acknowledged, it may continue operating until a decision on the application is conveyed to it.”

So, you take the two of them together, Madam Speaker, and you have a soft grandfathering in of all non-governmental entities that were licensed under the previous Law being given the possibility to apply. Until a decision is made on their application, they can operate. And, Madam Speaker, that seems to be a fair way to go about things.

One thing I hope is that any institution having real potential to make a positive contribution to the educational landscape within the Islands would be given assistance where possible. And I know there are many limitations—financial not being the least of which. But there are other limitations as well. But, Madam Speaker, I hope that once this section comes into force, any institution that can really make a positive impact and has the potential to do so, that government will work to try and ensure that institutions have the greatest possibility to be able to survive and continue.

I say that to say this: Certainly, any institution that might not be able to continue because of their inability to meet new standards simply because of financial reasons or human resource reasons, government will work very closely to try and ensure they are given the greatest possibility to continue. Irrespective of how many students an institution may have, it is more than likely playing a positive role in education. If it is not, that is a different story. But if it is, they ought to have the greatest possibility of continuance under the new regime, because we know that as soon as any entity disappears off the landscape parents have to find another option.

Certainly, if you get to the point where the other option is only government, that in and of itself will cause real implications for government; implications in terms of provision of physical plant, et cetera.

So, Madam Speaker, that transitional period I certainly hope will be one that will be administered in the spirit of trying to ensure that all entities which are making positive contribution to the educational landscape within these Islands are given that real possibility for continuity.

Now, the registration process for these non-governmental educational institutions is one that is very important. [We need to ensure] that anyone not making a positive contribution is also dealt with. If they cannot, or refuse to, attain the standards to make a real positive contribution, ultimately those entities would not be licensed. The last thing we would want is for this section to look good in law but not be carried out in the spirit which it is meant to. [We need to] ensure that the standards necessary are upheld, because we could easily see the possibility for institutions to use parents to try to sway the Government into ensuring their continuity. And by that I mean, obviously with a lot of these institutions they would have a pretty high percentage of parents who actually have the right to vote. We know the world in which we live.

The bottom line is that if an operator wants to continue, but wants to have his way and not do what is required to bring [his operation] up to the requisite standard, we could easily see the possibility that they simply use parents to try to influence Members of this House to put pressure on the relevant Minister. And, Madam Speaker, that is not something that we want to talk about sometimes, but that is just the reality of how some people will and do behave.

Madam Speaker, I am reminded that sometimes (not all the time) the people who behave this way or who have tendencies toward this type of behaviour tend to play one side of the House off against the other, and oftentimes use an uninformed public to get their way. This is a real, real serious issue because at the end of the day when that is allowed to happen it is the children who attend those institutions, through no fault of their own, that are not given the possibility to achieve their greatest potential.

Now, Madam Speaker, one thing that I was hoping the Minister could expound upon a bit is the whole issue of the registration of governmental institutions. How we are going to ensure that? While government has the ability to influence and put forth its might on non-governmental entities and force them to achieve certain standards, we would not want there to be the case that because it is committed (government naturally has a built-in commitment to its own schools and its own schools being open) the reality is, unlike a large country, the Cayman Islands does not have the capacity for any government to look at, for example, a primary school that may not be making the standard, to be able to shut that school down. Where are those students going to go?

That is a real issue, Madam Speaker. It all comes back to some of the old arguments that you hear traditionally about in Cayman where government tends to apply the high standard to the private sector but does not necessarily keep its own house in order as it should be. And that is probably the most important aspect of the entire exercise, because the vast number of students in the country attends government institutions.

So I hope, Madam Speaker, as it relates to section 9, which is the Register of Governmental educational institutions, that the Minister would expound upon that point and give the House some idea as to how government institutions will also have to go through a similar process as outlined in section 7 for the non-governmental institutions.

Madam Speaker, Part IV deals with school attendance, admissions and access to education. Now, if we look at the framework that this Law is creating, and look at the duties of the Chief Officer, duties of the Director of Educational Services, the creation and duties of another very important office that is going to be created, which is the office that deals with standards within the educational sector (and I am looking right now to get the exact title of the individual) . . . I will get to that in a minute, Madam Speaker, because I am not seeing it quite readily.

The whole issue of attendance and the scheme that Part IV creates, the same framework is also established as it relates to the whole issue of additional educational needs. When we look at Part IV and Part XIII the whole matter of attendance in school invokes a parental and guardian accountability mechanism where any person who is a parent or legal guardian of a student violates the law if the student does not attend school. If you look at section 11(3) we see some carve outs for non-attendance, which is all good and fine.

So, Madam Speaker, we have very clear standards and accountability through a specific office as it relates to policy, standards in schools and all these other things. But when it comes to attendance I was certainly hoping to see that the Government—whilst I understand that parental responsibility is crucial—would have given consideration to ensuring that somewhere within the governmental system there would be a specific office or entity that would be charged with ensuring that no child got left behind within the system.

Madam Speaker, section 11 (20), which says that any person who contravenes subsection (10) commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of two thousand dollars, and subsection (1) of section 11 says, “Subject to subsection (3) [which is the carve out section] a parent or legal guardian of any child of compulsory school age shall ensure that such child receives full-time education suitable to his requirements either by attendance at school or otherwise as provided in section 12.”

Madam Speaker, that is good and fine. And I think all of us would agree that we need to have that in there and we need to put the onus on parents and legal guardians and ensure that they are going to be accountable and recognise their important responsibility in ensuring that those for which they are charged to attend school.

I do believe that we ought to also have some measure in here and some entity from the Government’s standpoint as to who is charged with this specific responsibility, because we all know how life really works. And while this is all very good on paper, we know that there is the real possibility for people falling through the cracks and a blind eye being turned. The reality is that if the student does not go, if the parent does not insist that they go, if the state (that is, the government) does not intervene and do something—and the one thing that is available under 11(2) is to take them to court and fine them up to a fine of $2,000—then what happens? What happens and who is accountable?

So, I believe, Madam Speaker, just like we have as a clear framework within this legislation, standards for creation of implementation of policy, advice on policy, we have an institution that relates to going back to the schools and ensuring that those standards are adhered to. We are developing a very important new institution within the educational sphere, which is the Director of Educational Standards and Assessments. That was the post that I was struggling to find a while ago, Madam Speaker, which I believe is a very crucially important aspect and key peg within this framework that is being developed. I think that we need to put and shift more onus to ensure that attendance is adhered to and complied with.

We must look at ourselves and ask, Is government, through its own law, going to force itself to a greater level of accountability and be held to a greater level of account as it relates to the student being in class in the first place?

It is all good and fine to create policy. It is all good and fine to have a curriculum. It is all good and fine for assessments of the schools versus being graded against their implementation of that curriculum and the end result in terms of students. All necessary, good framework. But if we are allowing a possibility for the students not to be in the classroom in the first instance, then it is all gone for that particular student. I believe that we should give real consideration to including in this legislation a specific named person who is also going to be held accountable for students being in school. Because when you do that, Madam Speaker, in my mind that greatly reduces the possibility to a blind eye being turned.

The truth is that in more instances than not, the people/children who could fall into this category, more than likely are coming from poorer homes anyway, and so oftentimes government would only be exacerbating the situation if it were to invoke section 11(2) (and I repeat), “Any person who contravenes subsection (1) commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of two thousand dollars.”

And, Madam Speaker, the majority of people, I would venture to guess, that would find themselves in this situation, are people who can least afford to pay the fine in the first instance. And besides that, this blind eye that is often turned in societies often comes down to political will. So that is where the rubber meets the road.

Now, Madam Speaker, if we move on within the same Part and go to section 11(3) it reads: “It is a defence to any charge under this section (this is the same section that deals with mandatory attendance) if the failure of a student to attend school on any day on which the school is open if- (a) the absence is caused by illness or other unavoidable cause making his attendance at school not reasonably practicable; (seems fair enough). Subsection (b) the day is recognized as a religious holiday by the religious denomination to which the student belongs; (seems fair enough). Subsection (c) the student is suspended from school and the suspension is still in effect; (that is pretty clear). Or (d) the student has been expelled and has not been given permission to enrol in another school.”

Now, Madam Speaker, if we were to turn our minds to what can and does happen in Cayman, like everywhere else (this is nothing unique to Cayman), the reality is that students from time to time get expelled. However, if we look at this section and how it is working, from what I have seen, certainly, I would encourage the Minister to take another look at the precise wording of 11(3)(d). You could easily see this being one of those cracks that children who can least afford it could fall through.

Not only would they be expelled and not have given permission to enrol in some other school, now that parental accountability in subsection (2) (which I thought needed to be strengthened anyway) is gone.

At this point the parents or legal guardians can't even be held to account because the Law says so. I believe that, while on expulsion, that certainly for the immediate term there would be some issues; but, Madam Speaker, normally a student does not get expelled from school over night. That expulsion is usually at the tail end of a series of events. That series of events usually would involve previous suspensions.

So, if the system has within it a student who is on the road to expulsion, the system, I believe, ought to have the mechanism within it that forces itself—that holds someone into account—to ensure that that student is transitioned and done in such a way that someone is going to be held accountable for their attendance.

Naturally, if we look at the entire framework we will see that more likely than not, students who find themselves in this unfortunate circumstance of being expelled would be captured by Part XIII, which deals with additional educational needs. And Part XIII itself has that same parental responsibility framework that puts the onus on parents or legal guardians to be accountable for the children within their charge.

So, Madam Speaker, I have two points on this section that I would like for the Minister to give some consideration to. Firstly, as it relates to the accountability for attendance, and that accountability is covered in Part IV, specifically section 11; but also in Part XIII, I think the system should name and hold to account a specific person within the government sector to ensure that attendance to school or educational facilities where persons are still within the legal limits of this Law is observed.

Secondly, Madam Speaker, 11(3)(d) should be reworded because it is difficult to envision specific circumstances where you would just have an expulsion and a person being in a scenario in which they are not being given permission to enrol somewhere else. So, there is basically, from the legal perspective under the framework I am seeing here, no variance.

Madam Speaker, for those who do something that is urgent and sudden, more than likely they would be dealt with under some other piece of legislation. Let us say that someone goes to school and is a good student every day, had never been suspended, never had any issues, and they show up one morning and do something dramatic at school; something really bad. More than likely if that something which is so bad causes them to be expelled—not suspended, but expelled—that something they would have done would be covered under some other piece of legislation because more than likely it would be a criminal offense that you would be talking about. So, I would hope that the Government would give consideration to that point.

Now, Madam Speaker, section 12 is the exemption from duty to secure school attendance and it reads, “The Minister may, upon the application of a parent or legal guardian of a child, authorise a child to be schooled at the place where the child is normally resident or at the home of another person approved by the parent or legal guardian.” And in subsection (2) we see again the Government having the ability to create regulations to cover this area.

Now, Madam Speaker, it would be good and perhaps ideal, and I'm not sure if the Ministers would be able to do that . . . I would think so because currently this is allowed anyway. I wanted to ask the Minister if in his windup [he could] give the House the assurance, first of all, that the standards that are going to be created by those regulations would naturally be at or higher than the standards that are set for every other educational institution. We want to ensure that any child being home schooled is given that potential to achieve their individual maximum potential. So, I just wanted to get some idea as to what currently exists and an assurance that what is to come will, if anything, be a higher standard.

Now, Madam Speaker, this point is one that I believe needs to enjoy the real support and possibility that, again, if you have an environment like this, and let's say that it exists now before any change in law, that if there is going to be any enhancement of standards in this sector that students who are currently being home schooled will be given the real possibility to continue once government is satisfied that there is a very high standard being achieved. Because the one thing that all of us want to ensure is that the student at the end of the day is not disadvantaged. Sometimes we will see (and we know that this is how real life works) that parents can sometimes get an idea of what they believe is right for their child, and there are a lot of people who take their child very seriously, and they should! They should!

I am not criticising people for that, but sometimes we take it a little too far and certainly we want to ensure that at the core of this are the interests of the child and not the wishes of the parent. And unreasonable wishes I should say, Madam Speaker, if I left that to any doubt.

Madam Speaker, if we move on to Part V, a very important part—National Curriculum and Key Stage Assessment—we see the framework for development of a national curriculum that would be mandatory for all government schools.

We also see in Part II the key stages in relation to students. Each key stage is tied to specific years in school, and on this point I just had a query: [section] 15(2)(d), which is the last subsection, deals with the fourth key stage. It makes it clear that this is secondary school education in years 10 to 11. However in the definition section of the Bill, “secondary school” means education provided for students in education years 7 to 13. And I just wondered why there is gap (that is the fourth key stage being years 10 to 11 and what happens to years 12 to 13.)

Madam Speaker, Part VI, a very important part to the educational framework—Evaluation of Schools: Irrespective of students and their capacity and parents and guardians in playing their important role, we must have an independent and objective evaluation of the schools themselves, and how well schools are doing. So, we see in 16(1) the establishment of a very important post, a Director of Education Standards and Assessment. And, Madam Speaker, we see the duties of this post holder outlined in 16(2). We also see what happens when a school is not up to snuff as it were, either overall or in a specific area.

On 16(4) I wanted to ask a question on whether that provision would apply also to non-governmental schools. And 16(4) reads: “Where upon re-evaluation it is determined that the required measures have not been taken or, if taken, have not been effective and the Chief Officer, after seeking the advice of the Director of Education Services, is satisfied that it is necessary or expedient to do so, the Chief Officer may appoint a suitable person to attend at the school for such period as may be considered appropriate with authority to give directions for the implementation of such remedial measures as may then be consid- ered necessary.” I was not quite sure if within the framework that was purely for government schools.

Now, Madam Speaker, if we move on to the same section, 16(8) says, “Any person who obstructs the Director of Education Standards and Assessment or any person referred to in subsection (7) in the execution of his duties under this section commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of two thousand dollars.”

I wonder if the Minister could give the House an indication as to precisely at what level this specific subsection would deal with, whether it is at the teacher, school level or the administration level.

Madam Speaker, Part VII—Professional Standards in Education—is obviously another very important aspect to the educational environment that this Bill is going to establish, because, of course, we cannot underplay the vital importance that teachers and those who are charged with dispensing education will play. And so, we see the establishment of another important institution, that is, the Council on Professional Standards in Education. This section gives the framework, and we see in section 17(2) the establishment of this Council via regulations.

I will not repeat the arguments that I put forward related to the establishment of governmental entities. I think I covered that earlier in my debate. But obviously, my feelings would be the same as it relates to this particular and very important council that will be charged with maintaining this register of teachers in schools and regulating the profession in accordance with whatever standards that are set by the Minister responsible for education. It is very important that we do draw from the widest and deepest talent within our very narrow and limited talent pool within the Islands simply because of the size that we are. We are approximately 53,000 people. So, it is not like we have this plethora of people we can choose from for carrying out in particular this very important function.

Part VIII—Funding of Assisted Schools. I am sure that this is going to be an area that (whoever is the Minister of Education at any point in history, as long as these Cayman Islands are here and as long as this is a part of the educational framework) is going to be very difficult to please all parties. But I do note in section 20(2)(b) that the regulations that are going to be established to govern the terms and conditions of assistance provide for different categories of schools and different levels of grants to schools in a category depending on need.

I believe that is going to always be an impossible task, to put it gently, to satisfy the relevant players, because you will always have complaints from people who will quickly say, Yes, I may be in the same category but here are my peculiar circumstances; here is the role that I play. The only thing I can say is that in the development of these regulations it is going to be of crucial importance that they are clear, transparent, and applied uniformly across the board.

Madam Speaker, as it relates to Early Childhood Education, this is a section that I have a small question on as well. In the definition section of Early Childhood Institution it reads: “early childhood institution’ means an institution that provides early childhood education to children under the compulsory school age for at least four hours per day but does not include a private residence in which care is provided to up to four children.” Perhaps the Minister could give the House some idea. I think we can guess what we are getting at with this and saying that if you are up to four children that somehow that would cause you to not be of a size and magnitude. If he could just give the House some idea as to the thinking behind the selection of that specific number, it would probably make a lot of us a little more informed as to the thinking on that specific section.

I note, Madam Speaker, that in this Part, section 24 (because we are talking about very young people, small in age) we have a framework outlined for punishment and we say that corporal punishment cannot be administered. We know that that is outlawed. And subsection (2) deals with the exception, and it says, “Subsection (1) does not prohibit action taken for reasons that include averting an immediate danger of personal injury to, or death of, any person, including the child himself.”

Under Part XII that actually deals with discipline and prohibition of corporal punishment in schools, there is an added subsection, which is 26(3), that says, “A teacher or any other employee authorised under this Law may physically restrain a student where restraint is necessary for the physical protection of the student or any other child in the school and not as punishment.”

I notice when I look at sections 24(1) and (2) and 26(1) and (2) that they are identical except that 26 has an additional section. I wonder if that is simply because Part XI is dealing with young children, so it is not envisioned that it is necessary to have that additional point included. But perhaps, Madam Speaker, given what we have seen happening in other countries, we might want to not take it for granted that 26(3) may not be necessary to repeat in 24. I am not sure if it would do any harm to repeat it.

Now, Madam Speaker, moving on to Part XII we see the framework for discipline within the schools. As the Minister made mention of during his presentation, this whole issue of a written student behaviour and discipline policy is one of crucial importance. Certainly, I agreed with him when he spoke on the experience in Cayman. I’m sure this applies everywhere else that there is a direct correlation between student behaviour and discipline and achievement.

Within this framework developed in section 28 we deal with the disciplinary authority of teachers. But 28(2) is one that I have a small question on and it reads: “The Director of Education Services may, after consultation with the school leader, authorise any person on the staff of a Government school, other than a teacher, to effect discipline with the same authority as is conferred on a teacher by subsection (1) if, in the opinion of the Director.” And it gives certain criteria that must be met. I wondered if the Minister could give us some idea as to what sorts of persons who are on staff that section 28(2) is envisioned to capture. One that would jump into my mind would certainly be teachers’ assistants who themselves may not be qualified as teachers per se. So, if the Minister could give us some indication as to precisely what is envisioned there and what sorts of people that particular section is referring to.

Madam Speaker, Part XIII—Additional Educational Needs—is one that is crucially important. Certainly, within every community and country there is the necessity to ensure that the system covers persons of all abilities, capabilities and circumstances. And obviously that is good and bad. You would want to ensure that you have an infrastructure that deals with those students who are, for their age and year in school, overachieving or ahead of the curve. You would want to ensure you have the capacity to challenge and deal with them so that they reach their fullest potential.

In fact, I was reading an article on the Internet just over the weekend which was dealing with a Caribbean student who, if memory serves me correctly, is a Barbadian national of Guyanese descent. She is going to be graduating from a university in New Jersey in the United States at the age of 16 as a medical doctor. So, certainly, the system that she was exposed to provided for her to achieve at her level and so there should not be any artificial barriers to simply hold people back for the sake of holding them back. That should not be a part of the way forward.

Madam Speaker, on the other side of the coin, for those who are challenged and those who [are affected] through their own behaviours and choices they make, we must also ensure that we have institutions within the system to accommodate them so that they too can have the real possibility to achieve at whatever level they are capable. Also of importance, that there would not be a minority who would cause for the disruption of a particular classroom or school and cause other students to be disadvantaged simply because they are kept stuck in the system because there are no alternatives able to deal with them.

So, Madam Speaker, having given those few introductory remarks—

[laughter]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: —but perhaps more detailed in terms of my analysis of the Bill itself, I would say that certainly if we look objectively at the Bill it does provide a framework that can give real possibility for there to be a system that is workable for the Cayman Islands.

However, as I said, if you look at the important institutions that are created within the Bill and dovetail with the fact that ultimately the Cabinet, via the Minister of Education, has the authority to make regulations under all of the important parts and sections of this Bill, we see that it does still give the possibility for any administration to be able to make and create the type of educational framework that it believes is in the best interest of the country via the setting of curriculum, via the holding to account the Chief Officer, the Director of Education Services, the Director of Standards.

We see that when you put all of those things together and the fact that the Government (whoever is the Cabinet at any point and time) can adapt/change at its own will the regulations that govern those important activities, we then see that it will still be a specific government's education policy and agenda that will ultimately determine whether or not we have an education system that truly provides and gives opportunity for all and truly gives the country the greatest possibility for producing the types of citizens that we wish for, but as important, the types of citizens that the economy needs.

Madam Speaker, ultimately, this Bill and what the teachers and all the persons involved with education do is but a part of the process. Ultimately, no law, no minister of education, no cabinet, can take the place of parents in providing that bedrock at home that oftentimes is as important, sometimes even more important, than what God-given potential, talents and skills the individual student may have been born with.

So, Madam Speaker, what I can say is that at the end of the day the Bill, while it is coming to the House at a very late stage, does provide what seems to be a framework that is of high level in nature and gives the possibility for an education agenda that will be set by successive administrations.

With those comments, Madam Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to have made my contribution to the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

On behalf of the Minister—I know he will do his own thing—I certainly would like to thank the Second Elected Member for West Bay for that very detailed and comprehensive review and support of this very important Bill.

I know that education to us all here is very important and that the time he took was time that he genuinely researched and gave his own views and input into. Certainly, it is good for us to be working together for the sake of our children, because that is what this is all about, Madam Speaker. This is not about the PPM or the UDP. At the end of the day this is about the children of the Cayman Islands having the very best education opportunities. And we do that through a framework such as this, which is a Bill that is set out to improve the Education Law and to make provision with respect to education in primary and secondary schools for careers in tertiary institutions, in early childhood institutions, and for lifelong learning.

Madam Speaker, the PPM came into office on a mandate which, amongst many things, included a number one priority—being the development of education in this country. This is another step in that direction. The Minister and all who have worked very hard—the Chief Education Officer, the staff of the Ministry, teachers and all the others, and the legal fraternity who have worked on this important Bill—should all be commended for the efforts made bring this, yes, even at the eleventh hour, to this honourable House.

Madam Speaker, this is not legislation that could be rushed. We have gone through three education conferences since we got elected where the Minister and his staff brought together all stakeholders at the Mary Miller Hall. On each occasion a packed hall, Madam Speaker. A really good sight to see that everyone in attendance was there to come up with a national curriculum and to plan the way forward for all that we are trying to do with education.

Madam Speaker, what came out of the very first conference was the fact that the student had to be put at the centre and nowhere else; be the focal point for our efforts, otherwise we were really just spinning the wheel and reinventing it.

We have chosen to take the high road and push education and make no apologies for what we are trying to do for the development of our people. For too long I think in this country, yes, we have had education ministers and administrations work towards the development of education. And we have come a long way, as the Second Elected Member for West Bay said, and done well for a small island nation. But, Madam Speaker, I do not think that ever before the priority which is being put on education has been put by an administration. I see this as something that I certainly am very proud to be a part of.

Madam Speaker, we are looking to improve education for the young child as well as for adults for lifelong learning, as the Bill says. We have done this with the assistance of world renowned educational specialist, Professor Heppell, on board who has pretty much contributed his services at very little cost to this country in terms of actual payment. I think it is safe to say that it has been minimal. He has given his whole resources, knowledge and expertise to developing a world class education system in these Islands.

We have been getting many knocks for building two brand new high schools at this time, one in Frank Sound and one at John Gray in redeveloping that site. We have unfortunately had to postpone the West Bay High School because of financial reasons. We're also hoping that we will have the George Town Primary which I think is out for tender now. We have found a way to get the George Town Primary School completed.

Madam Speaker, we are putting our money where our mouth is. We need top class facilities for our top class children. We do not make any apologies for that. We are developing facilities that will not only make good students but well rounded citizens in this country; the type of citizen that this country surely needs. We have heard for so long that we are not preparing our kids the way that they should be for the workforce; the way that they should be to go on to university. But, Madam Speaker, this PPM Administration is seeking to change that.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay did a very thorough job, something that I sort of had in mind to do by going through the Bill and looking at clause after clause. But he has done such a good job on that I don't think that there is any need for me to repeat. He did highlight the very important areas, but there are one or two things I would like to touch on in the Bill.

Madam Speaker, the creation of a director of education services who shall be responsible for executive decision-making authority in relation to the conduct of government schools and performing functions as provided in the law. That is an important position and a new one that is being created by this legislation.

Also, Madam Speaker, we are calling for a body to be created as an education advisory council, which will advise the Minister on matters pertaining to education and perform other functions under the law.

Madam Speaker, the whole idea of registering of educational institutions is another very important area. We have many other agencies offering educational services and it is incumbent upon us to ensure that everyone is up to scratch and properly monitored and performing.

Legislation is dynamic, as I have said many times in this House, and it must be changed as time changes. We have to constantly look at the scenario in front of us and update our legislation as need be. And that is what this Bill seeks to do, Madam Speaker. We are tailoring our educational framework for the 21st century to take us to where we will be—a country with world class educational facilities that will be a role model and the envy of many. That is the vision of this Government and the Minister who I know has poured his heart and soul into his Ministry since taking office in 2005.

Madam Speaker, we do have some parents who are interested in home schooling in this country. That is an area that is very important for us to consider under this legislation, which is set out here as other non-governmental services. All parents would like to have control of their children and their educational future—I should say some parents. But, sometimes, if not carefully monitored, we could be impairing the future of these children rather than improving it. As much as we would like to say, Well we don't want them to get mixed up in this and that and we are keeping them from this and that behaviour, the fact is that we live in the real world and cannot protect them indefinitely. Socialisation at early ages is very important.

So, Madam Speaker, what those kids are taught while being home schooled certainly lacks some of that socialisation because they are at home with their parents studying. Hopefully, they will get it through other forums. It is important that the development of those children is carefully considered, and I think this Bill goes somewhere towards ensuring that that is the case.

We have also identified in this Bill a compulsory school age which now will range from the age of 5 through 17. This is something that we have spoken about in the past, where it is important to extend the school leaving age because a lot of times children leave school at too early an age (that is, high school) and they find themselves in a bit of a difficult situation—they and their parents—in terms of their age and the maturity needed to go on to tertiary education if so be the case.

At times they are also at risk of [not] finding employment (if that is the route they choose to take) because of the young age. Especially, if the kid is a high flyer and he may even have come out at the age of 15, 16 usually, but sometimes 15 depending on time of birth and all of those other factors. So, it is good that we have put in the Bill the fact that we are now looking at a compulsory school age of 17 years.

I think at that time those young people . . . and certainly, we will not be in a situation going forward where we are lacking physical space, because that was one of the considerations as well; the amount of students in school at any one time and being able to accommodate all and sundry. But now hopefully with the development of the new infrastructure of schools we will have the physical capacity to allow us to retain kids in school up until the age of 17 at which time I think they are much more prepared. A year or two makes a large difference at that stage of one's life when one considers how quickly maturity improves.

Madam Speaker, the Bill speaks to the fact that any person who contravenes sending children to school during those years between the age of 5 and 17 is guilty of an offence and summary conviction to a fine of $2,000. That is a penalty and some may look at it and say it is a bit harsh but I don't think so. We have to ensure that there are penalties for not doing the right thing when it comes to our young people.

Madam Speaker, I wish there was some way of taking that even further but I know some things are just not possible to legislate. I hope that parents will see the wisdom in not only sending their kids to school but ensuring that they are involved with their kids while they are in school. Parents need to know what is going on with school work, friends and all of the other crucial elements during those formative years.

I wish there was some way of forcing them to attend PTA (Parent Teachers Association) meetings and school functions and be there for their children. I know that we cannot legislate that, Madam Speaker, just like we cannot legislate aspects of morality. But, certainly, we want to encourage through this forum as a government, that people see the wisdom in not only sending their kids to school and waiting for them to come home in the evening or finding them home when you get home in the evening and putting them to bed and sending them the next day, but taking an active interest in the schools.

I hear the teachers—because I have children and I go and get involved—bemoan this fact over and over and over again: How good it is to see you guys. But it is always the same faces. Where are the other parents? You will go to PTA meetings and see 20 per cent of the parents and you have 80 per cent that are somewhere else. And, yes, there are genuine excuses at times but I think we as a country can do a lot better in that area.

Madam Speaker, another important aspect to this Bill is the whole issue of the council on professional standards and the review of the teachers who teach our children, in the registration of those teachers. This is a very, very crucial area because the two people who influence what a young person becomes are the parents and the teachers.

That is why we have PTAs. It is such an important aspect. We have to have the very best teaching fraternity for our children. We have to ensure that if there is a teacher in the system who is acting untoward, acting in a manner that is not beneficial to the interest of those children, that that teacher is dealt with. We have to ensure that we are careful as to who we hire as teachers. We have to look at background and ensure that we are not putting people in a compromising position. We have to ensure that we know who our teachers are and listen carefully to the feedback in relation to those teachers.

Madam Speaker, early childhood education is another crucial area of any good education plan and is something that has become more and more a feature as times have developed. There was a time when children stayed home until they were five years old and then went off to school. That does not happen anymore. We have now what is called pre-schools, daycare centers and there are serious times in a young person's life; very formative years and it is important that those institutions are monitored and carefully regulated.

The Bill states clearly that corporal punishment shall not be administered in any early childhood institution. Of course, it also does not prohibit action that would be taken for reasons that include averted and immediate danger of personal injury to, or death of, any person including the child themselves.

We all watch the news and hear the stories, Madam Speaker, because we live in a changing world. Unfortunately, a world that is influenced a lot by television and many other factors. Oftentimes we hear of amazing stuff being done by very young children:

kids picking up a gun and shooting the other one and taking serious weapons to school and all of that. Yes, we have been fortunate in these Cayman Islands but we hear this stuff taking place in the US that is next door to us, and in other countries. So, we have to be careful and watchful, and certainly, have to ensure that when we create legislation that we do close those gaps and allow necessary action where such is deemed.

Madam Speaker, under this Bill every school shall have a written student behaviour and discipline policy. That is another very important caveat. Very important, because we hear of the ill discipline and we see it, especially in the whole mannerisms of our young people today; the way they wish to dress. Of course when we came into office one of the things the Minister addressed was the fact that the young men were wearing their pants half-way off. I am glad to say that has reaped some reward. We see some efforts in that area and we have not stamped it out entirely but these are all things that speak to discipline and the way that you conduct yourself. Because when the time comes that you leave school and move on, whether it is to the workplace or to further education, the world unfortunately is one of stereotypes and you are judged by your appearance.

You are judged by your appearance, Madam Speaker and sometimes wrongly so, but that is the way it is. Therefore the education system should seek to prepare our young people because that is what we are doing here. We are preparing young people to take an active role in their community and to have a productive life. That is what education is; it is about preparing the child. And if we do not bend that tree when it is small, we certainly will not bend it as it gets older, stronger, and shaped and settled in its ways.

Madam Speaker, the Bill also speaks to the area of additional educational needs of persons not of compulsory school age. That is coming back to the lifelong learning, as I mentioned in the beginning. That is an important area, because it allows the Minister to look at particular situations and make decisions based on what is deemed necessary, whether it is a case of someone who has been expelled or someone who has passed school leaving age who is seeking education.

Madam Speaker, this Government has quadrupled, or at least tripled the amount of funds put in for scholarships and further education over the last few years. That is significant and it speaks to the fact that we see the importance of everyone getting an opportunity to be trained and get their degrees and come back to this country and be productive.

Madam Speaker, although a lot of people will say, Oh you don't have a technical and vocational school, as such, this Government recognizes the importance of technical and vocational studies. This Bill speaks to it as well and all of our schools have a technical and vocational component in them. The University College has a large component of technical and vocational studies. The new schools that are being built will have it built into them.

We have looked at the possibility of when we move away from the George Hicks campus of using that site as possibly a specialist technical and vocational school. But this is not something that we can just do over night. Everything that we talk about takes resources. People cry for this and that but then they tell you that you are spending too much. But they are asking all the time for more. Madam Speaker, this is the difficulty of being in government. This is the challenge we face and we as a government have to constantly prioritize and look and reevaluate what we can spend on and what we get the best buying for the buck as it were, and how we manage the dollar.

It is just like how you manage the dollars in your household and in your personal life. Government is no different. We worked to a budget and we have to do what we can do when we can do it.

But this Government understands the importance of technical and vocational studies. This Government understands that not everyone is an A student and just simply going to get up there with 13 passes or 10 passes at graduation. But there are those young people from a young age who can be identified with the skills that they are good at. You can see that that little boy or girl likes to play with wire, so that is an electrician. You can see that that one loves a hammer or saw, and that may be a carpenter. Madam Speaker, you can tell.

Up until today I had a grandparent say to me that one of her young grandchildren is so unbelievable with wiring and has a little clubhouse that is wired, hopefully in a safe fashion. But this kid did that and it tells me that that little child should be trained to become an electrician.

Madam Speaker, I'm no teacher; but teachers tell you all the time that they can spot which kid is leaning which way and what they are good at. And the system must be conducive to allowing them to fulfill their potential and be the best that they can be at their chosen career. This way we will provide a large part of the employment needs in this country. We will cut down on some of the people that we have to bring into this country that are being complained about every minute about permits. But we need permits now because right now we can't do the jobs. People are not going to hire you if you can't qualify and do the job that is needed for that business to survive. They can't do it because the businesses will fail.

So, once we prepare them through our education system, Madam Speaker, those people can say, I demand that job. Not only am I a Caymanian but I am a qualified Caymanian and am willing and able to work. That is what we are looking at as a country. That is what this Government is about.

Madam Speaker, the last thing that I would like to speak on is the use of our school premises apart from just being for teaching purposes during the day and then being locked up until the next morning.

This Bill provides for the use of those educational facilities outside school hours, whether it is for sport and activities, meetings or after school learning or whatever it is, Madam Speaker. This Bill provides help to build our society and utilise our scarce resources to the best of their ability. When we spend millions of dollars on a building we don't want to shut it at 3 o'clock in the evening and open it at 8 o'clock in the morning. That is a whole lot of money—millions of dollars—that would have been used for seven hours per day. We can do better than that. And this Bill allows us to use those facilities to maximise the potential from them and to enhance our learning and socialising within our communities.

So, Madam Speaker, with that short contribution I certainly would like to once again pay kudos to the development of this important Bill. I would like to say to all those within the sound of my voice that this Government remains steadfast to its pledge to provide top notch education in this country to our young people and to develop a Cayman Islands that will be fitting for the 21st Century, and one that will take us forward with pride.

With that short contribution, Madam Speaker, I thank you.

[laughter]

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Third Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise really to give short comments on the Bill for a law to make provision with respect to education in primary and secondary schools, in career and technical institutions, in tertiary institutions, in early childhood institutions and for life-long learning; to promote high standards in education and the teaching profession; and to make provision for related matters.

Madam Speaker, this is certainly a great moment for me. And although I will be short, I wanted to say that I have been through many education laws in my lifetime. As you know, I have worked in education. And what I like about this law is that it gives a lot of empowerment to the political directorate who will through the Cabinet guide the development and the processes of the educational process. I like that!

Let me say also that when the Minister came in here to form the Government in 2005, he had a conference for consensus building in education. And as a result of that a lot of things have been completed and a lot more things have to be completed. But the last thing which would put the framework in place for the educational process would be this Bill. And I like the fact that a lot of things have been shaped and more things are to be shaped. But what has to be shaped is the will of the Cabinet who are the political directorate and who really should be responsible for education in the country, because it is through education, Madam Speaker, that we are able to shape the country. Perhaps if years ago we had looked at it that way, a lot of our young people would not be crying that people are taking away their jobs because they would have been better equipped to take a lot of the high income-earning posts that are now available in the Cayman Islands that are occupied by others.

Madam Speaker, I am sorry that the Opposition Leader is not here to give his submission. I don't know if I am border-lining by saying what I am saying, that in the three years and ten months he has been beating us on wastage, building three schools that are unnecessary, doing this that is unnecessary . . . and if he were here, like the Second Elected Member for West Bay, I believe he would have agreed with us as well and would have gone through the different points in the Bill to see the rationale for why the PPM Government is doing this. So, I'm very sorry that he is not here.

But I must say that I certainly give the Second Elected Member for West Bay kudos for delineating his point, agreeing with 99.9 per cent of what was there and for showing some mature wisdom, if I may say something like that, in his submission.

Madam Speaker, the Minister has outlined, and I am sure the listening public will understand, how the functions of this Bill will be. He has done that quite eloquently, so I need not do that. But there are a couple of things in my short submission that I would like to say I am glad he has put into the Bill. And I would say that I am glad he has opened the schools as community schools. That is something that the whole Island has been looking forward to. And not only government schools but he has also opened it up that perhaps even the independent schools can be opened as community schools; and in his own wisdom if he sees the necessity for reception classes in schools, especially government schools, he can do so. I dare say that is very good.

Madam Speaker, I think it is good that they are empowering the schools and the standard committee to look at discipline in schools. And when they do that I think they are empowering not just teachers, but parents, to sit together and work out a discipline plan for their schools. I think that is excellent that parents and teachers and the stakeholders will get together to look at the discipline of the schools.

I am happy that I was able to bring the motion which extended the school years for the students, particularly those in high school. Madam Speaker, I believe that we made a mistake when we allowed the financial services to lower the entrance level so that our youngsters could go into the world of work. I think that we made a terrible mistake. We are trying to rectify that now by extending the years so that our young people when they have finished their 11th year and done their O levels or GCE, they have the pre-university year to either look at doing pre-university courses, going on to university, or the pathway to repeat if they fail. Nothing in this dispensation here that we have requires the child to repeat. But I believe the Minister did say some time ago that that would be one of the avenues, that the youngsters who did not do well in their O levels could repeat those exams. That is excellent.

Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister (I'm coming to the end of this) if somewhere in our curriculum building that there is something to help the man-child—the boys of our nation, the young men. I am not saying that we must have a separate school or classroom for boys, I am just saying that we must pay close attention to the curriculum for the man-child. It would please me and you and everybody to know that we have really taken on our young boys, because they have their learnable moments. Age 12 and 13 and maybe even 14 may not be that time. But 15, 16, 17 and even 18 might just be that time. So, when we are looking at building a curriculum we have to remember that our girls are doing exceptionally well, but we also want to make sure that the boys of our nation will have an opportunity to do well in school and that they will be able to make a significant contribution to the Cayman Islands.

I want to thank the Honourable Minister who has done an exceptional job, and to thank his staff, Mrs. Wahler, and his Assistant Chief Officer—I can't quite remember the nickname that he is called but I dare not say that here.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I too would like to go on record expressing my support for the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009. I would like to say how grateful I am for the way the Second Elected Member for West Bay articulated during his debate, which allows us to not have to go into that kind of detail, and to congratulate him because he did an excellent job, Madam Speaker.

I would like to express my disappointment that the Leader of the Opposition is not here. We have had our differences over the topic of education with the Leader of the Opposition over the last four years, and I only want to say that in times like these when good debates go on down here on the topic of education somehow or the other the Leader of the Opposition is always missing and thereby misses out on being able to learn something about the importance of education in the country.

Madam Speaker, while we have talked a lot about the progress of education in this country over the last few years, I must make the point that while we have not gone backwards I think it is clear to see that the progress made in the last four years by far out-paces any progress that had been attempted or made within the 25 years prior to that. I believe that that is how we ought to look at this and understand that because we have not done as much as we should have over the years, and have not paid the attention that we needed to pay to educational services, it has now become a crisis for us and we have to do what we need to do in a short period of time so that we can catch up.

We need to understand that the construction of the physical plant is extremely important. As the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town just spoke about, some people are saying that maybe we should not have gone ahead the way we did with the buildings, and then say in the same breath that we need a technical school. I don't think that we have preached enough for people to understand that our plan is that until you get the new buildings done, and we can vacate the George Hicks campus, we will not be able to move into that phase of the new system where we look at starting the technical and vocational studies. So, one complements the other.

We need to understand that that is part of the progress that we are making. And the longer we take to get the buildings done, the longer it is going to take us to get our education system on stream and begin to do the things we need where we can continue to roll out well accomplished students who are capable and mature enough to take the jobs within this community.

Madam Speaker, every year our number of graduates continues to increase. We have to be cognizant that the Government has to do its part along with the viable partnership of the private sector to make sure that we create enough jobs; that there is enough job creation within the community to take care of those students who are coming out of our schools. And we have to bear in mind that we must qualify them so that we are able to reduce the work permits and some of these students can take up some of these jobs. We must be able to provide meaningful employment for our young people.

Madam Speaker, I would like to mention a point here that I would simply ask for consideration of. I know that at this stage the Education Department has what is called a Child Abuse Reporting Policy where just as we see on page 20 under Discipline and Prohibition of Corporal Punishment in Schools, section 27(1). It says, “Every school shall have a written Student Behaviour and Discipline Policy.”

I refer to the Children Law that was just passed in this House last week, Madam Speaker, where we talked about the mandatory reporting of any form of abuse with children. I see this as a companion to this piece of legislation. While it does not directly relate to the topic of education, it is a topic nonetheless that is related to children in school. Teachers are [among] the individuals who have been named here who are required to comply with the mandatory reporting. I would like to ask that consideration be given to—just as this section 27(1) has been inserted here—the fact that the school does have a new child abuse reporting policy is made mention of in the Education Law, Madam Speaker. When a parent or anyone else is looking for such legislation, once the child is a student they are going to firstly look in the Education Law.

This is a topic that is near and dear to the hearts of advocates who are doing their best to stop all forms of child abuse. I must congratulate the Education Services for providing and developing that child abuse reporting policy. I believe it will go a long way in easing a lot of the fears of these individuals who are helping to prevent child abuse. I am just asking. Maybe they won't see the need for it. But I believe that it would be an excellent line to insert into the Education Law.

I also would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the amount of hard work and dedication that has gone into producing this new Education Bill. And to say, Madam Speaker, that the PPM Government campaigned heartily in 2004/2005 that education was going to be our number 1 priority. And I recall the Second Elected Member for West Bay making the comment that this piece of legislation was a bit late.

Yes, Madam Speaker, but we came in office and began the term speaking about the importance of education and at the last sitting of this term I think it is only appropriate that we have ended on the fact that education is still our number 1 priority.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Minister wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I wish to start by recording my grateful thanks to all Members of this honourable House who have spoken. To those who are present but have not spoken, I thank them for their tacit support of this very important piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, I wish to particularly thank the Second Elected Member for West Bay for his contribution and his very technical analysis of the Bill. I am hopeful that the approach he has adopted to this legislation is indeed an indication of general support by the Opposition of this important piece of legislation.

He has raised a significant number of issues. We have taken careful note of them. And, Madam Speaker, given the lateness of the hour (it is now almost 7.15 pm) I believe that we would all benefit—and certainly I would—from the opportunity overnight and indeed tomorrow (since we have Cabinet tomorrow), to consider the points raised by the honourable Member carefully and to prepare an appropriate response. This is a very important Bill and it is important that we do everything we can to get it right.

Education Modernisation Bill, 2009

(Continuation of debate thereon)

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister of Education continuing his winding up debate on the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I too would like to join in welcoming the students who are here, and to say to them that I hope that their observation of the proceedings in this honourable House today might assist them a little bit in understanding how our local government works and how our Legislative Assembly works.

When we took the adjournment on Monday evening, I had started winding up the debate on this important Bill, the Education Modernisation Bill, which is designed to underpin and promote the significant changes, indeed, the transformation of our local education system. As I said at the start, the Bill under which education is currently administered is some 20-plus years old and there has been a huge shift in the way education is administered, a huge shift in the approach to teaching and learning across the world.

Over the course of the past four years, we in Cayman have striven to adopt many of those new approaches to teaching and learning, those new approaches to how education is administered and, indeed, in some instances we have ourselves developed new and novel approaches to education through consultation, through a great deal of careful thought and consideration. The purpose of this new legislation is to underpin and provide the legal framework for those new approaches, those new standards to be adopted and enforced if necessary.

Madam Speaker, I started by commending the Second Elected Member for West Bay—who was the only member of the Opposition to speak on this important Bill—for his careful analysis of the relevant provisions. I was delighted, and I wish to say so again, that notwithstanding the tremendous criticism the Government and I as Minister, in particular, were subjected to by the Opposition over the course of these four years, that at this pivotal moment when we are putting to the country on the eve of the elections the legislation which will underpin all of the changes that we have made and allow other changes which are yet to be implemented to come into effect, it appears that (if we can take the speech of the Second Elected Member for West Bay to be representative of the view of all Members of the Opposition) that there has been an epiphany of sorts on the part of the Opposition.

While they have had to be dragged kicking and screaming to agree with anything that has been put forward by me or the Government to improve education, to improve outcomes for students, to improve teaching and learning in this jurisdiction, finally at this late stage they seem to have agreed that the approach of the Government and me, as Minister of Education, is in fact the right approach. At this late stage, Madam Speaker, a mere two months before the next general election, they have not put forward any alternative education plan. They have not taken issue with anything of consequence that has been proposed by the Government or by me in this Bill.

Madam Speaker, I am hopeful that what the Second Elected Member for West Bay has said is indeed representative of the views of the Opposition, generally. I say I hope so, Madam Speaker, because the Second Elected Member for West Bay is without doubt the most progressive thinker on that side of the House. Indeed, Madam Speaker, I would have been disappointed if he had taken serious issue with what is proposed in this Bill because over the course of the past eight and a half years, I have come to know that gentleman quite well. I know he gives very careful thought to these matters. And I know he has a deep and abiding concern for the future of the young people of this country.

Madam Speaker, many in this community have said to me that the views of the Second Elected Member for West Bay accord generally with the views of this Government. And often the question asked is, Why is he on that side and not on this side of the House?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I value, as do my colleagues on this side of the House, the contributions of the Second Elected Member for West Bay.

The gentleman has much to continue to offer to the people of this country because of his insight, his ability, his education, his interest in the development of young people. Before I go on to deal with the concerns he raised, the opportunity will present itself again very shortly for that good gentleman, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, to decide where he should cast his lot and his allegiance if he truly wants to achieve his full potential as a leader in this country and truly contribute powerfully to the development of policy, particularly as it relates to our young people and as it relates specifically to education. Madam Speaker, I would not want him to spend the best years of his life wandering in the political wilderness, ensconced on the Opposition benches for eternity.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay raised an issue in relation to clause 4(2)(a) of the Bill. He asked, Madam Speaker, I think understandably, what was meant by the phrase "otherwise than at schools". For everyone to be able to understand that, I think I need to refer to the particular clause.

Clause 4(2) provides that: "The Chief Officer shall, at least once in each year, prepare and submit to the Minister a report containing such information as the Minister may specifically or generally, from time to time, require and at least the following- (a) information describing the standards of achievement of students receiving education in Government schools, assisted schools and independent schools, together with such information as may be available about the achievements of home schooled students [and this is the phrase that he questioned] and other students educated otherwise than at schools;"

The question asked by the Second Elected Member for West Bay was, What is contemplated by "otherwise than at schools" since home schooled students are dealt with in the same sentence.

Madam Speaker, what is contemplated there is that there may well be other types of educational provisions outside of schools as we know them, and outside of the home schooling arrangements. What we have in mind are situations which now are rather inadequately dealt with through the alternative education facility that we have.

In looking, as we try to do at all aspects of education as we have gone through this transformation process, we have visited other countries and have looked at ways that students who do not fit neatly within the confines of that traditional school setting or home school are tutored. There is a concept in the United Kingdom. It is actually called "Not School" because it is not a school. It is essentially assisted virtual learning, if I may put it that way, and it is a concept which is working very well for many students. In fact, we have now had I think two instances where students who were unable to conform, or unwilling to conform, or whose circumstances did not allow them the wherewithal to attend traditional school settings, and who essentially were outside the traditional educational provision, have actually gone on to attend Cambridge through "Not School".

The fact that a young person finds it difficult to work within what we consider to be the traditional school setting does not necessarily mean that that individual is not very gifted, very talented or does not have significant ability. It just means that for whatever reasons may obtain, whether it is their social condition or even their psychological state, they just do not work well within traditional school settings. So, one of the initiatives that is underway which is part of this transformation exercise [and] which must continue over the course of the next two, three, four years, is better provision for students in Cayman who do not do well in traditional school settings.

As I said, there is an acknowledgement on my part that what we do now in terms of alternative education is simply not good enough. I say all of that to say that the use of "otherwise than at schools" in clause 4(2)(a) is put there to cover these other possibilities which do not yet exist, but which are very much within the contemplation of this administration and my advisors.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay also raised an issue in relation to clause 6(2)(a) which provides for the establishment of regulations with respect to the membership and proceedings of the Education Advisory Council. I believe that his concern was that the number of potential members with the kind of experience and training which he felt would qualify them for this council was quite limited. Well, all I can say is that it is what it is. The population we have is the population we have. The various abilities, interest, and education of the people is what it is. So, we have to use individuals from the pool that we have.

I should also say that that acknowledgement was one of the contributing factors to the decision to re-establish this body as more of an advisory body rather than an administrative one, which is currently the case. So we are satisfied that the Minister will be properly advised by a combination of persons who serve on the Educational Advisory Council as well as his technical . . . his or her, for that matter, for it may not be me in this post next time around . . . as well as his or her technical staff in the Ministry and the Department of Education Services.

The same Member also raised an issue in relation to clause 7(4). He was concerned about the transition arrangements for the registration of non-government schools. I think the inference was that he was concerned that perhaps in this process of raising standards of ensuring that all schools meet the criteria that the possibility existed for non-government schools to become de-registered and therefore unable to continue as schools.

Madam Speaker, I wish to allay any concerns that that Member or anyone else listening to him may have because of what he said. This administration, in particular, has been very supportive of non-governmental schools, not just in the financial context, but also in a range of other ways offering support, guidance and assistance to schools as they have needed it. Therefore, it would be entirely wrong to suggest or imply that the purpose of this clause is to put private schools out of business.

The reality is that all non-government schools are already subject to a valuation under the auspices of the Education Standards and Assessment Unit, which was previously known as the Schools Inspectorate. We know and acknowledge that there are standards to which all schools are held. Even though at present there is no statutory requirement that they subject themselves to these evaluations, all private schools have cooperated over the years in this regard.

All schools have been inspected at some point. All schools have received a report. All schools know what it is they need to do to improve the various aspects of their operation, whether it is teaching and learning, whether it is administrative, or whether it is in terms of facilities as the case may be. So, Madam Speaker, none of these schools will be surprised by anything that is now required of them as we move through the process of having all schools, including the non-government schools, come under this new regime provided for in the Education Modernisation Law (as it will be when we pass it in this House, I hope shortly).

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I know we started proceedings late, but it is normal for Members to allow visiting students to mingle in the Chamber with them. Would this be a convenient time for me to take a five minute break? The class has to leave by 11.30.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I am very happy to oblige, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: I crave the indulgence of this honourable House to suspend proceedings until 11.25 am.

Proceedings suspended at 11.15am

Proceedings resumed at 11.31am

The Speaker: Please be seated.
Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE SPEAKER OF MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Condolences extended to Mr Gould and family on the loss of his niece

The Speaker: Before I call on the honourable Minister to continue his winding up, I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of all Members of this Legislative Assembly as well as the staff, to extend our deepest condolences to Mr Gould, who operates our equipment, on the loss of his niece, as well as to the entire family.

Honourable Minister of Education.

Education Modernisation Bill, 2009

(Continuing)

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

When we took the brief suspension, I believe I had just begun responding to the Second Elected Member for West Bay on the point he raised in connection to Part IV of the Bill. I think the point the Member was pressing there was the need to ensure that in addition to the parental duty to secure attendance at school by all children and young people, that perhaps we needed a more robust provision and actual acknowledgement in the Bill of this responsibility by Government or by the Ministry as well.

Madam Speaker, we have looked carefully at this again. What I can say, which I hope will offer some assurance to the Member, is that while there is no specific person named in the Bill as responsible for monitoring attendance the Bill places a duty on the Minister to promote education of the people of the Cayman Islands. It also establishes a compulsory school age so that all persons within that range are required to attend school. It is one of the fundamental duties of the Minister to ensure that that happens.

In the transformation process we have established what are now called "learning communities". We have appointed a number of registration and attendance offices in each of these learning communities. It is their specific duty to monitor school attendance, to assist in projecting school population numbers and so forth. It is their duty also to assess the potential reasons why a particular student is not attending school and to look into the social issues which usually lie behind that non-attendance.

So, while there is not an actual officer appointed, or a provision under which an officer may be appointed under the Bill, in the administrative arrangements which have been established there are these officers called "Registration and Attendance Officers". It is the view of the people who advise me that that is adequate, that we do not need to make specific provision in the Bill because the overarching duty of the Minister is sufficient so that ultimately the Minister himself, or herself, is the one responsible for ensuring that children attend school. Whatever administrative measures are necessary, whatever offices need to be created, and whatever persons need to be appointed to those offices is really a matter for the Minister to determine in his or her discretion. But ultimately, if there are issues with non-attendance, they are laid at the feet of the Minister responsible.

Madam Speaker, another point raised by the Member was in relation to clause 11(3)(d), which provides a defence to a charge against a parent or guardian of a child that the child had not been attending school as required under the Bill (in this case). I think that what the Member was concerned about was the possibility of . . . I had better read the whole subclause so that we can all understand what it is I am trying to address.

Clause 11 deals with the duty to secure attendance at school. Clause 11 (1) “Subject to subsection (3), a parent or legal guardian of any child of compulsory school age shall ensure that such child receives full-time education suitable to his requirements either by attendance at school or otherwise as provided in section 12.

(2) Any person who contravenes subsection (1) commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of two thousand dollars.

(3) It is a defence to any charge under this section if the failure of a student to attend school on any day on which the school is open if-

- (a) the absence is caused by illness or other unavoidable cause making his attendance at school not reasonably practicable;
- (b) the day is recognized as a religious holiday by the religious denomination to which the student belongs;
- (c) the student is suspended from school and the suspension is still in effect; or
- (d) the student has been expelled and has not been given permission to enrol in another school.”

Madam Speaker, as I understood it, and I might be wrong about this, but as I understood the concern of the Member, it was that there may be situations which allow students who have been expelled to not be required to make attempts to go on and continue their education. That is not something that we would wish to encourage. We would want for there to be a real incentive for students who have been expelled from one institution to seek, or their parents to seek to have them enrolled somewhere else, or by some other means ensure that they continue to get an education.

Madam Speaker, we have grappled with this. What we are proposing at the moment, and it will come perhaps with some refinement in the form of a committee stage amendment, is adding another subclause, subclause (4), which would read something along these lines: All relevant authorities shall ensure that the permission referred to under subsection (4)(d) is granted expeditiously. So there would be no lapse or a very short lapse in the time between when the student is expelled and when they have actual permission to resume school somewhere else.

Madam Speaker, the next point I have a note of is in respect of clause 12. My understanding of what the Second Elected Member raised was that he wanted to ensure that standards as they relate to home schooling were in place, and that we were careful to ensure that perhaps by omission we did not wind up with a situation where those who were engaged in home schooling somehow got less of an education than those enrolled in traditional schools.

I just want to draw to his attention that we are concerned about this. That is precisely why the Bill specifies in clause 12(2)(a) through (e) a range of matters that regulations must be developed to cover. I am happy to give the Member an undertaking that these regulations will be developed in such a way to ensure that no child is disadvantaged simply because he or she is being home schooled rather than having their education provided for in a more traditional way.

The Member also raised a question in relation to the key stage provisions. I just need to find where they are referred to in the Bill. My understanding of the point he raised is that under the new Law compulsory education extends all the way up to age 17 now, and that there is the possibility of a Year 13. Not the possibility, there will be a Year 13 provision, which will actually go beyond the compulsory age to 18. Key stage 4, which is referred to in Part V, clause 15(2), actually only talks about the fourth key stage, that is, secondary school education in Years ten to eleven.

Madam Speaker, I need to explain what that means. As I said, the Bill provides that Year 12 will be compulsory. But the Brighter Futures Better Pathways initiative (the development of which is underway and which will actually begin in September 2010) anticipates that some provision will also be made for Year 13. For example, the International Baccalaureate Diploma Programme, which is a two year post-16 course.

The way the system will work is that students will do what we call their end of school exams, as we know them, at Year 11. They will then have the opportunity to do a range of things, but they will be required to stay on an additional year. They can re-sit examinations where they have not done terribly well so they can build their portfolio, if that is what they want; they can engage in a range of other things. They can go on and do A-levels (advanced levels) through their private school government subsidised programme, if that is what they want to do. They can engage in a number of work programmes which will involve significant work experience. They can do a range of technical and vocational courses, or they can go on and do the IB (International Baccalaureate Diploma Programme) which is a two year course.

Those who choose to do that or any other course which is ultimately adopted as part of the Brighter Pathways programme will have that additional year of provision, if that is what they want to do. But Year 13 would not be a compulsory year. It is a matter of choice.

Madam Speaker, the next point raised was in relation to clause 16(4), which is in the context of the evaluation of schools. And that is the evaluation of all schools, not just government schools. As I said when I resumed this morning, under this Law a valuation of all schools in the Cayman Islands will be for the first time a mandatory legislative requirement. Under the present system, non-government schools have to agree to be evaluated and assessed. As part of creating the legal framework for this, we concluded that there must be the ability, there must be the power under the legislation for the Chief Officer in the Ministry, after taking advice from the Director of Education Services, to actually be able to do something to ensure that the standards in all schools are satisfactory.

There is little point in us evaluating and writing reports if ultimately Government is unable to do anything to ensure that attention is paid to those reports and requirements, in terms of improving the standards, are being met. So, clause 4, which caused the Member some concern because it essentially permits Government to put someone into the private schools to ensure . . . this is something of a last resort measure, but if after all of the relevant attempts are made the school is still not performing at a satisfactory level, this will allow the Ministry to put someone into the school essentially to take over control and direction to ensure that those standards are met. That is quite deliberate.

Aside from the fact that Government subsidises virtually all non-government schools substantially—now to a tune of $2 million in direct contribution—the reality is that every student in our system is entitled to at least what Government regards is an acceptable standard of education. And every parent who pays good money to send their children to those schools will expect and are entitled to expect that their children will be properly educated.

There must be provision in the Law to ensure that schools which do not perform, after every possible measure is taken, every effort has been made through other means to get them up to the required standard, that if that does not work then something short of closing the school down must be available. And this is not about closing the school down, this is about putting in the necessary administrative officer or education professional to ensure that the school gets to where it needs to be.

Madam Speaker, there was also some concern raised by the Member about the proposed creation of an offence of obstructing the work of the Education Standards and Assessment Unit, in clause 16(8), which says, “(8) Any person who obstructs the Director of Education Standards and Assessment or any person referred to in subsection (7) [which is someone who is working under the authority of the Director] in the execution of his duties under this section commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of two thousand dollars.”

Madam Speaker, I am not sure what the precise concern was, but, again, that is a deliberate provision because we cannot have people obstructing the work of the Director in these circumstances and there must be a consequence when that occurs. One would hope, and I do not think that in general such a provision would have to be used very often, but the Law intends to be comprehensive and there must be consequences to people's actions. This will ensure that we have the ability to prosecute if people are being unreasonable or obstructive.

Madam Speaker, a point was also raised about the establishment of the Council on Professional Standards in Education. My recollection is that the Member actually lauded the creation of this particular council because he understands and acknowledges that we do need to ensure that those who teach our children are up to scratch, are able to convey to our children the kind of education that is necessary and that in the case of the private schools parents pay for directly and in the case of the other schools all of us pay for indirectly.

I think his concern raised there was whether we have a sufficient pool of sufficiently qualified and experienced people to be able to carry out these very important functions of monitoring teacher performance and being able to deal with disciplinary issues and so forth that arise in the context of the performance of their duties. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to report that the one thing the education transformation process and significant consultation that has been undertaken has clearly revealed is that there are indeed many education professionals in the Cayman Islands who are demonstrating really good practice and high standards day in and day out.

I think we only need to look at the evolution of the National Education conferences since 2005 and the introduction of practitioner led workshops to see the increasingly important role that our own educators are making in professional development and in the improvement of learning and in the transformation of education. While we no doubt still have much to do in spreading this good practice and these high standards, it is significant to note that in my experience there is always some evidence of good practice in every school. As such, I do not believe that there is likely to be any shortage of suitably qualified persons to serve on this important body.

In terms of Part VIII of the Bill, I am happy to confirm to the Second Elected Member for West Bay that my Ministry's policy of developing clear and transparent guidelines for the funding of assisted schools will continue, and that where regulations are created this clarity and transparency will be incorporated into these regulations.

As the Member knows, and I think every other Member of this House is aware, in a relatively recent Finance Committee I made available to Members the guidelines we had developed in relation to how Government allocates the significant funding to non-governmental schools. We had developed some guidelines which actually rewarded (if I may put it that way) schools that have effective plans and programmes dedicated to specifically improving teaching and learning in their institutions, as opposed to simply saying that each school will get so much per student as has been the case in years past.

Just about everything we are doing is with the ultimate goal of driving schools, whether they be government or non-government schools, to seek higher standards of performance in relation to their teachers, their administrators, and ultimately—because that is what this whole exercise is about—better outcomes for the students.

Madam Speaker, the Member also raised a point in relation to Part XI of the Bill, which deals with early childhood education. I think he wanted some explanation for the rationale behind the definition of “early childhood institution” and why that did not include a private residence in which care is provided for up to four children.

Madam Speaker, this is one that has caused a great deal of debate, discussion, concern over quite a number of years. As I indicated when I introduced this Bill, for quite some time we had gone down the road that there should be separate legislation dealing with early childhood education. We ultimately came around to the view that provision for education ought to all be contained in one Bill. Some of the other aspects of childcare, which are not education specific, are contained in the amendments to the Children Law, which was passed in this House earlier this month. The bits that are in this Bill are the education components of the overall care of children who qualify for early childhood education.

This Bill is for an Education Law. We have concluded that it should not—and so it does not—seek to legislate for childminders or babysitting services. Madam Speaker, ultimately a line has to be drawn somewhere. The use of four children for the threshold that we have adopted is typical in other jurisdictions and was recommended by early childhood experts. Effectively, if there are more than this number of children being catered to somewhere other than their own home for more than four hours a day, then that place is operating as an early childhood institution and will be caught by this Law.

The reason clause 26(3), which deals with discipline issues, is not mirrored in clause [24] is that discipline is considerably different in an early childhood setting as compared to a school setting. Early childhood teachers may, as a matter of course, have to restrain children in their care, whereas this is very much the exception in a school setting. In other words, if a two-year old child is doing something that he or she ought not to be doing and you tell them to “come here”, and they do not come to you, then the instinctive response of every responsible adult that I know is “if I tell you to come here and you do not, I am going to get you and bring you here.” You can do that without any problems with a two- or three-year old; but you ought not to be doing that in relation to a 12- or 13-year old because I think the response would be quite different.

That is why we could not simply export the discipline provisions from clause 26 into clause 24 because of the difference in ages of the children who would be covered by those respective provisions.

Madam Speaker, there was a point raised in relation to clause 28(2). I think the question asked by the Member was who, other than a teacher, may be authorised to effect discipline in the same way as a teacher. As the Member suggested, this would include assistant teachers, teachers’ aides, educational psychologists, and counsellors, others who are working with the students in the context of the school setting.

The Bill provides a mechanism of checks and balances to ensure that this authorisation is properly administered. As I said when I introduced the Bill, every school—government and non-government—will be required under this Law to create and administer a written student behaviour and discipline policy. Corporal punishment will be abolished legally by this Bill, when it is passed. So it is important that expectations in terms of student behaviour and consequences in terms of the discipline policy are made very clear to all concerned—the parents and guardians of those who attend the school, and those who are required to administer the policy, that is, the teachers and others provided for in this particular clause.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay also discussed at some length Part XIII of the Bill and the provision for additional educational needs. I would like to reiterate that this is a significant new addition to the existing education legislation. The Education Law that we are operating under now does not make any specific provision for additional education needs. We felt that it is critically important that the Law does address this issue. There is a huge issue in relation to additional education needs and a significant percentage of those who attend school in these Islands do require some form of what people currently refer to as “special education.” We believe that “additional education” is perhaps a better term, and that is what we have adopted.

Madam Speaker, there is already a code of practice in operation which we have developed. With some minor refinements, this should serve very well as the code required when this Bill comes into Law. I cannot help but say that the principal responsibility for provision of additional education needs falls on government and on government Schools. By and large the private schools do not have the wherewithal and perhaps in some cases not the desire to deal with students who require something other than the standard provision for education.

So, while it is often said that the cost of education in government schools per student is much higher than in private schools, there are a number of very good reasons why. This is a big reason why.

If you look at the makeup of the government school population, you will find that the number of students who have been assessed as requiring additional education needs is significantly higher than that in the private schools. The reason for that is that the government schools are better equipped to deal with it, but also in the case of many private schools there is a lot less enthusiasm about having as part of their school population significant numbers of students who require a great deal of differentiated teaching.

Madam Speaker, I was pleased to hear from the Second Elected Member for West Bay repeated recognition of the relevance of career and technical education. This Government has consistently sought to highlight the importance of career and technical education and to improve recognition of the value attached to it. I believe that we have made significant progress in dealing with this issue and in reducing the stigma often attached to what we are calling "Career and Technical Education." Some call it "Technical and Vocational Education."

The complex and intricate plans for the future development of education certainly have career and technical education at the heart. When I introduced this Bill, I said that this was one of the pathways envisaged in the Better Pathways post-16 initiative at George Hicks Campus. This is critically dependent on the completion and utilisation of the two new high school campuses. Until we get those completed and the children presently at George Hicks as part of the cohort of students at the new schools, George Hicks will not be available for this particular purpose.

I say all of that to say that over the course of these four years and in this silly season which is upon us I have seen—and I am sure we will see and hear lots more in the next couple of months—about why we ought not to be doing this and why we ought not to be doing that; we could have done this and this would have been enough. This whole exercise, every aspect of it, including the Bill which is before us, is part of a very carefully thought out plan and programme to improve teaching and learning outcomes for students. That is the heart of it. All of these things are to get to that ultimate objective.

But all of these pieces hang together. When one bit of it does not continue, or one bit of it falls behind the schedule, it creates major issues for us. I say that to say this: The fact that we had to take the hard decision not to proceed with Beulah Smith has created the possibility of major operational issues for us in the next year or two. The whole programme was contingent on the complete evacuation of John Gray and George Hicks so that the Better Pathways programme could be initiated and the George Hicks campus would be available for the students who are coming through into the Year 12 and Year 13 programmes.

We have to work to make sure that that happens, and a big part of that is to ensure that Clifton Hunter (which was originally planned only to have three of the academies completed) be fully built out so that we will build all four academies. If we do not have full capacity at Clifton Hunter, we are going to wind up with a situation where some students in the high school system get to go to these new schools and others have to be educated somewhere else.

So, Madam Speaker, I could only smile wryly when I read the statements attributed to that old political dinosaur, Mr. Ezzard Miller, in which he was saying, among other things, that the children of the eastern districts do not need an expensive school like the one we are building at Clifton Hunter, and he wonders where we are going to find 2,000 students in the eastern districts to put at Clifton Hunter. Well, not only does that demonstrate a complete disconnect from the reality of what is transpiring in the education transformation process, Madam Speaker, but it is short sightedness at its worst.

Madam Speaker, none of the schools are designed to accommodate 2,000 students. At a maximum, each academy will accommodate 250. So if we do achieve four academies at Clifton Hunter we will have a capacity for 1,000 students. The plan initially was for 750 there, 500 in West Bay, and 1,000 in George Town.

I say all of these things to say that it is important for the country and elected members, and for those who wish to be elected, to understand that the process we have been going through and need to continue for at least another three to six years, as I see it, before we get the whole thing properly implemented (and by then we will be revising this and revising that because things change) . . . they need to understand that this is not some sort of piecemeal reform that we have tried to put a Band-Aid here and a patch there and introduce a new programme here. This is all part of a big, long-term programme—a master plan, as my colleague says—to improve the outcomes of our people in this jurisdiction.

It is not something that can be done in one fell swoop. It is not something that can be done in two, three or four years. It would be a tragedy of the most enormous proportions if this country were to put into office people who care less, who have no understanding or desire to understand what we are trying to do. In fact, because we can point to positive indicators in terms of performance already right across our system, what we are doing to improve the next generation of Caymanians in terms of educational ability, it tears my heart when I hear some of the nonsense put out there.

I do not mind at all, in fact I love it (the truth of the matter is) when I am engaged on these issues with people who have some desire, who have some concern about it, who challenge what we are doing in a positive way, as the Second Elected Member for West Bay has done today, and in the past has done. I cannot say the same about the rest of his colleagues; but I can say that about him. That causes us to think or rethink what we are doing.

But when I read the complete nonsense about people who have no interest until this point, who had no care about the future of our young people but, because they decided to run for election—people like Walling Whittaker—writing nonsense, Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Can we get back to the Bill?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

—writing nonsense in the paper that we have achieved nothing in relation to improved education performance, it tears my heart, Madam Speaker.

I wish that any of them—from the Leader of the Opposition to Elio Solomon, and all in between—would come and debate any of these issues with me in any forum and tell me and tell this country what their education plan is. What would they do that is different? Where we would get to, Madam Speaker, is where we are today—where the Opposition, after much sound and fury, concedes that what we are doing is at its heart the right thing.

Madam Speaker, I want to come back to this issue about career and technical education. Part IX of the Bill specifically provides for career and technical education and provides the Minister with the necessary powers to ensure that this type of education is suitably provided for in these Islands. There is an important point that I want to make, because I hear the debate: I hear it even among people close to me. There are a lot of people who seem to believe that we ought to decide very early in a child's life where they should go and what they should do because we say the early indications are such that they are bound to be brilliant at that. Madam Speaker, I do not subscribe to any such, what I call, limiting philosophy about what people are capable of, what they should do, and how we ought to educate them. That is why my philosophy in relation to the development of career and technical education differs from what I hear being propounded by many people.

The new national curriculum and the new campuses are designed to ensure that each child in the system gets an opportunity to have proper exposure to a wide range of education and subjects. Those who are naturally good at something will usually migrate naturally to that. But every child who comes through our system must have a sound, basic education. That is what the new schools that we are developing are designed to do.

When those who have had the basic education, who have had the exposure to technical subjects and vocational subjects as they come through, reach 16, then we will provide them with the opportunity to decide what it is they want to do in terms of education at age 17 and 18. If they want to pursue technical and vocational courses at UCCI or through the Better Pathways Programme, if they want to go into work experience, those opportunities are available to them.

What we ought not to do, is decide when children are 6, 7, 8, 9 or 10 that this is where they ought to go. Many of us never saw the light or whatever it was that needed to trigger our interest and enthusiasm for learning until later, particularly in relation to boys. I know, because I am speaking from my own personal experience in terms of where I wanted to get to and what I wanted to do . . . you are talking about late in life? You are talking to somebody who found all of that late in life.

I was 22 years old before I woke up one morning and said, "I am never going to get where I want to go if I do not go beyond what I have done. I need to go back to school." I was 22. There was never any doubt in my own mind (and I think in the minds of most people) that I had the ability. Nothing ever sparked it. I was content to get the basics, get some decent O levels and a few decent A levels. So, Madam Speaker, I know all about that.

That is why I cringe every time I hear people say, "That one ought to be an electrician; and that one ought to be a mechanic, and that one ought to do this." Let's give them the opportunity to be that if they want; but let's also give them the opportunity to do anything they want to do because of the basic education foundation they get through the primary and high school system. That is the philosophy that underpins what it is we are doing.

Madam Speaker, I think I have dealt with just about all of the issues that the Second Elected Member for West Bay raised. I am sure he will forgive me if I have missed anything.

I want to thank my colleague, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, and my other colleagues who spoke as well. But he raised a valid point in respect of the importance of a reporting policy for child abuse. He noted that there was an absence of that particular provision in this Bill. Madam Speaker, it is an important point, but the omission is deliberate.

It is deliberate because this provision is actually incorporated in the Children [Bill], which we passed earlier this month. That subjects teachers to the regime of reporting so it was felt that it is not necessary to repeat that particular provision here. There is already in place a policy for Government schools and this will now receive any statutory support necessary or required from the Children Law.

Madam Speaker, I have spent quite some time dealing with the matters that have been raised by my elected colleagues. I want to thank them very much for taking the time to go through this Bill carefully as we have obviously all done. I hope what I have been able to say goes some way to explain further the provisions and make them clearer and addresses and allays any of the concerns they may have had about any errors or omissions in relation to what this comprehensive piece of legislation proposes to do.

Madam Speaker, there are still a number of other related points that I would like to make to round off my winding up on this very important Bill. I have just been handed a stack of papers—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, is this a convenient point to take the luncheon break?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: That is where I was going to, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Proceedings will be suspended until 2.00 pm.

Proceedings suspended at 12.31 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.49 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Let me apologise for the late start of the Legislative Assembly. I was of the opinion that it had already started. I had an eye doctor's appointment and I am quite upset that the proceedings have not continued.

The Honourable Minister of Education continuing his winding up on the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Over the break and as a result of some discussions I had, I thought that I should say a bit more about the whole question of what we are calling "career and vocational courses" that are presently part of the curriculum.

As well as the usual academic courses, the following accredited vocational courses are now offered to all students at John Gray:

- Applied GCSE in Leisure and Tourism, which is an O-level course designed specifically for Cayman.
- Applied GCSE in Hospitality and Catering.
- Applied GCSE in Performing Arts.
- Applied GCSE in Health and Social Care.
- A BTEC in Music Technology.
- Institute of the Motor Industry Motor Vehicles Studies course is also offered now at level 1 and level 2 at John Gray.

This particular course is an industry standard internationally recognised course and the awarding body is the same one that is also used by UCCI.

Those are new courses that have been introduced as part of the transformation process over the course of the past four years dealing specifically with career and vocational study.

In addition, we are still offering:

- CXC Construction
- CXC Electrical and Electronics Technology
- CXC Technical Drawing
- GCSE Design Technology
- CXC Electronic Document Preparation and Management
- CXC Office Administration
- CXC Principles of Accounts
- GCSE Business Studies
- GCSE Food and Nutrition
- GCSE Child Development
- GCSE Dance

Madam Speaker, the reason I have spent some time on this is to deal with the common misconception that there is not a sufficient diet of technical and vocational or career and vocational studies available within the national curriculum and the offerings within the government high schools. These allow a proper base to be built for whatever it is that the student wants to ultimately pursue beyond the examination years.

Madam Speaker, I want to close my winding up on this important Bill by saying that all children are important. Along with the broader reforms in education this Bill has attempted to cater to individual student needs. The premise of the old Education Law (the one we are operating under) is now 25 years old. It was designed in another time for another era. Since that time, and particularly over the course of the last four years, much has happened to render this legislation inadequate to deal with the regulation of education in the Cayman Islands and the challenges and opportunities this presents in the 21st century.

A new legislative framework that provides for educational entitlement in the Cayman Islands, that empowers and liberates education professionals, and that fully reflects the degree to which education is central to the future of these Islands is therefore required. This, I believe, is achieved in the Bill before this House.

Madam Speaker, I want to conclude with some pretty stark realities about where we are in terms of adequate provision in terms of facilities for our students. This I hope will go some way towards having those in the community and particularly some of the recent crop of political aspirants understand why the construction of the schools, which are underway, is so critical and why, in fact, we need to do more.

The secondary intake for government schools, based upon the number of students in government primary schools, will soon reach 400 in each academic year—400 new students coming into the government school system every year. We are now projecting 398 in the year 2011-12, and 402 in 2012-13. This does not take into account students who move from non-government primary schools. This will mean at least a further 5 per cent increase in the total secondary student population on top of an already overcrowded provision over the next two to three years.

These capacity issues also impact our primary schools. For example, Prospect Primary has 45 students in Year 6, currently, and 76 in Year 4. Savannah has 39 in Year 6, and 56 in Year 4. These trends indicate that the secondary school population is going to grow significantly over the course of the next two to five years.

So, Madam Speaker, if I were in the Opposition or on the outside this House seeking to get in, I certainly would not be saying (as part of my case why I ought to be in here) that the Minister should not be making more provision for students in the government school system. I would be making the case that somehow, somewhere, Government ought to have found the means to build the high school in West Bay. That would be my case.

The reality is that for far too long we and successive governments have ignored the critical need for more physical plant in this country in relation to education. That is why things are as critical as they are now.

Madam Speaker, I want to conclude by simply saying this: This Bill before the House, which appears to have support of both sides, is a hallmark piece of legislation for these Islands. It underpins much of the transformation process that has occurred over the course of these four years, and it provides the legislative framework and basis to continue this transformation exercise. It is critical, Madam Speaker. It is critical to continuing to improve provisions for education, critical to our continuing to improve outcomes for our students, which is the ultimate objective of all that we do.

Madam Speaker, this House will be dissolved in a few short days. In about two months, the people of this country will go to the polls again. In that election process, that campaign process, everything that the Government has and has not done will be the subject of scrutiny. That is proper and right. It is the way the system should work.

Madam Speaker, I say to this honourable House and all within the sound of my voice, that when coming to judge the performance (or otherwise), of this Government and (or otherwise) this Minister, in relation to Education (for which I am constitutionally charged with responsibility), I want everyone to ask those who are offering themselves to be representatives in this country what is wrong with what has been done by this Government and this Minister in relation to seeking to improve education provision in this country.

I want them to ask the Opposition, in particular, those who have had four years of mostly criticising what has been done or what was not done, what is their plan. What would they do differently? Ask them if the apparent position of the Second Elected Member for West Bay is, in fact, the position of the entire Opposition—that after all is said and done four years down the road, what the Government has done, and the Bill which the Government has brought to this House to underpin the transformation process is not so bad after all. And, in the end, when all the rhetoric is over, whether or not they accept that education has moved forward on my watch. If there are things wrong with what I have proposed or done, and perhaps there are, I am but human; what are they? If given the opportunity to sit where I sit, what would they do differently?

Will they carry forward the programmes, the policies and the legislation that have come on my watch or will they seek to dismantle it all and roll education back to where it was when I took office in May 2005? That is the critical question the people of this country have to answer.

So, Madam Speaker, I simply want at this stage to offer my thanks to all who have contributed to making this Bill a reality. I spoke at some length at the start about the assistance from the people of the National Union of Teachers in the UK. But, I cannot begin to say enough about the staff in my Ministry and the Department of Education Services and, indeed, even more broadly than that, particularly Mr. Vaughn Carter, the Deputy Chief Officer in the Ministry with responsibility for Education. Without his determination, drive, and interest, without that, this Bill would not be here today. It was a mammoth undertaking.

I also want to pay particular tribute to Mr. Bilika Simamba, legal draughtsman, who did what was necessary over the course of the past few months to turn the early draft into the Cayman Islands compliant piece of legislation. He has worked long hours under very difficult circumstances with a deadline looming, a deadline that none of us could turn back, which was the dissolution of this House. I want to pay tribute to him and to whoever assisted him in Legal Drafting for their dedication, determination, co-operation and willingness to see this through to the end.

Madam Speaker, this is a signal achievement for the Government, but more importantly for our people and particularly for our young people in this country. I shall forever be grateful for the confidence reposed in me those years ago for me to have the distinct honour and privilege of being able to pilot through such an important piece of legislation.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, and all Members of this House for your indulgence.

The Speaker: The motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Honourable Minister for Health.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Yes, Madam Speaker, thank you.

I would just like to read the actual title of the Bill, which is quite informative, and so that the public can know what we are doing. "A Bill for a Law to amend the Health Services Authority Law (2005 Revision) to change the composition of the Board of Directors of the Cayman Islands Health Services Authority, to establish a fund raising agency for the Authority; and for incidental and connected purposes."

Madam Speaker, honourable Members of this House will be aware that the governance model of the Health Services Authority has required scrutiny for some time and there has been a need also for changes to be made to change the functioning of the organisation. The principal purpose of the Authority is to optimise wellness to the people of these Islands by providing patient-focused care that is affordable, accessible and of the highest possible standard.

With the rising cost and complexities of healthcare, this task would be challenging even in the best of circumstances. However, as we are all well aware, this organisation has had some rather turbulent episodes in its history. Much has been done in the past few years to attempt to stabilise it, and this is beginning to bear fruit in a number of ways, not least in improved staff morale. However, this does not mean that we have merely attempted to smooth things over, Madam Speaker. This Bill itself is evidence of that. It indicates clearly that we are making tough decisions where tough decisions are needed.

A major problem has long beset the Authority is that its basic Board constitution and framework for action has been too much of a mix of different models. This Bill would clear away some of the muddle and streamline the overarching directional functions of the Board, an essential change if the Authority is to properly mature as a body.

I will pause here briefly, Madam Speaker, to thank the gentleman from Impact Consultants for certain observations and assistance that he provided in some of the preparations and decisions we made in these changes.

Accordingly, the decision was made to amend certain sections of the Law in order to improve the governance of the Authority, by new stipulations with respect to the nature of the Board, and create a properly regulated fundraising mechanism to support improvements of the healthcare facilities and programmes of the Authority, as well as contribute to operational funding requirements as and when necessary.

Madam Speaker, I will speak briefly to each of the major aspects of the Bill in turn. There are minor committee stage amendments, which I will speak to later.

Clause 4 seeks to amend section 8 of the Health Services Authority Law to vary the composition of the Board. This amendment will more clearly define and make necessary distinctions between the roles and responsibilities of the Minister of Health, the Board and the Chief Executive Officer of the Authority.

Honourable Members will note that the Bill seeks to establish certain criteria for the selection of directors. The demands placed on the Board are of such a nature that business can no longer be properly managed by generalists. The most recent Board appointments were in fact selected in part based on having certain specific skills.

I would like to pause here to thank all of those Board members, past and present, for their contribution in assisting and for their dedication and for sacrificing their time to help us with this.

It has already proved its value in the recent performance of the Board, which has validated the view held in principle that specific areas of expertise should be stipulated to create eligibility for appointment to the Health Services Authority Board. This is the immediate background to the proposed new requirements for substantial knowledge and experience in the areas of finance, human resources, law and information technology, which have all been found to be quite critical areas of skill for the Health Services Authority. I would also ask honourable Members to note that those proposed legislative changes are part of an ongoing strategy to strengthen Board governance.

Another example is the short term appointment of a deputy chairman (which took place toward the end of last year) made with a specific intent on drawing on specialised skills of the appointee in that area. By all accounts the Board has benefited appreciably from the resulting exercises in terms of an enhanced understanding of their role in the organisation and the community.

Another change with regard to Board composition calls for a clear distinction to be drawn between the operational duties of the Authority management and the broad governance responsibilities of the Board establishing that employees of the HSA shall not be eligible for appointment. Naturally, the Board will continue to be advised by responsible employees of the Health Services Authority in their technical and professional capacities via the Chief Executive Officer.

Madam Speaker, similar to the amendment I was referring to, a provision will be called for in moving the relevant amendment to the effect that no public servant will be eligible for Board membership. Acute conflicts of interest arise when senior civil servants are called on to advise the Board on its approach to the Government. Then, on the other hand, when the matter comes to the Government, the same person may be called on to advise the Government how it should respond to the Health Services Authority. This certainly has not and does not lend itself to good governance. So we propose to change that.

Finally, it is proposed to establish that persons who receive more than 10 per cent of their annual remuneration from employment or other pecuniary interests in the health field will not be eligible for appointment to the Board. This is to ensure the establishment of a basic safeguard against conflicts of interest in the conduct of the business of the Board.

The second principal amendment is that clause 8 of the Bill seeks to amend section 17(1) of the Law to manage the approval process for applications by the Authority to increase fees for its services. Madam Speaker, the Board is responsible by law for prudent fiscal management of the Authority.

Currently, the Law provides that proposed fee increases must be submitted for approval by Cabinet. But if in a stipulated time they are neither approved nor disallowed by Cabinet then they shall be deemed to have come into effect. The amendments in this area seek to respond to problems occurring in the past. In the first instance, an obligation is created on the Health Services Authority to validate the financial need for any proposed fee increase. Secondly, the role of the responsible Ministry to review any such application is clearly spelled out with a specified time for its performance. Cabinet would similarly be required to make a decision in a specified time.

As to the final disposition of a requested fee increase, however, we propose a cleaner provision. Madam Speaker, it is proposed that either the fee increase will be approved by Cabinet or, if disallowed, then the equivalent amount will become a charge on the public revenue subject to the approval of this honourable House.

It will be apparent that the amendment aims for a balance to require accuracy and fiscal responsibility of the Health Services Authority, but provided this is satisfied to ensure that a responsibly managed Authority is not left without the means necessary to meet its primary responsibility for maintaining standards of patient care.

The financial stability of the Authority is further attended to in the amendment Bill by the third principal provision which allows for the establishment of the Cayman Islands Health Foundation and its governing entity, the Cayman Islands Health Foundation Committee. Madam Speaker, we in this honourable House all know how difficult it is to finance healthcare—not only here, but throughout the world. For those of us who visit hospitals, especially in the North America region, we see how effective a hospital foundation can be in providing assistance in raising funds for the operation of that entity.

In order to assist the Authority to remain financially viable, this Foundation would solicit and accept donations as well as actively raise funds for the facilities and programmes of the Authority. The committee would consist of seven members appointed by the Governor in Cabinet. Madam Speaker, no person could be a member of the committee if he is a director or an employee of the Authority, or an employee of the Ministry of Health.

Supporters of this concept in the business community attest to the value the Health Services Authority provides to Cayman as an investment and tourist destination, as well as its value to the resident population through provision and upkeep of high standards of care as well as readiness of access.

In recognition of this value, it is felt that strong support will be available to the Authority. But a specific structure is needed to ensure appropriate boundaries are maintained. This Bill would accomplish that and give the Health Services Authority a clear pathway to extra governmental support.

The proposed amendments will improve the functioning of the Authority to provide good governance for the people of these Islands. It is also hoped that with the establishment of the Foundation additional resources can be sourced through the generosity of the community for the operational funding of the Authority and the health needs of these Islands, and that this will be met.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues in this honourable House to give favourable support to these short amendments which we know are much needed, and to provide a better source for our healthcare here in the Cayman Islands as we continue to strive to maintain international standards.

In closing I would like to thank all of those who assisted in preparing this legislation—legal drafting, the honourable Attorney General's office and especially under the leadership of Mrs. Myrtle Brandt, who put in some significant time on short notice.

I commend this legislation to the House.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

In looking at this amendment Bill and listening to the Minister's presentation, I can say that the financial viability of the Health Services Authority is one that is of continuing concern.

I recall during this term during a meeting of the Finance Committee of this honourable Legislative Assembly we were given a specific timeline as to when the Health Services Authority could look to have some semblance of independence as it related to its own financial survival. Much has happened since then. Certainly, all of those matters would have to be answered in what I understand to be the upcoming meeting of the Finance Committee and, as we move forward, in the election process.

Madam Speaker, the establishment of the entity that would allow private donations to the Health Services Authority is one that I do not believe one can reasonably argue against. However, I hope that the Government does not intend to send the message to our residents that access to and the provision of quality health care is being reduced in some way to the good heart and good will of our community and perhaps those who might be outside of our borders who might have an affinity to the Cayman Islands or to the whole issue of the provision of health care.

In clause 8 of the Bill, the amendment of section 17 (which relates to fees) provides for a framework that I hope the Minister and his team can expound upon so that this honourable House can understand precisely how this new regime is going to work.

It provides a mechanism in which the Board can make a recommendation to the Minister with responsibility for health services as to any increase in fees. It gives the Minister some 60 days after any submission of a fee increase request that would “(a) require the Authority to verify the validity and reliability of the calculations which are the basis of the Board's determination; and (b) submit the fees to determined to the Governor in Cabinet.”

My reading of that section (a) where it requires the Authority to verify the validity and reliability of the calculations, which are the basis of the Board's determination, is that it obviously puts the onus on the Board to show and justify why the increase is necessary.

Madam Speaker, we have seen in the past where there were certain services that were not on a charge master, I think is the terminology used, and thus certain services being offered and revenues not being collected. This basis, I presume, is going to be such that the onus is put back on the Board to justify the increase by showing the cost of provision of service. For example, if there is a specific procedure and the Authority determines internally through its cost accounting regime that that procedure costs $150 to deliver, and it may be only charging $100 at the time, that that sort of detailed calculation would form the basis for which they would be requesting of the Minister to increase the charge master to $150 to cover the cost.

Madam Speaker, once that is done from an internal costing perspective, if the Minister refuses something else gets triggered. And that something else is that where an increase is disallowed, [clause 8] “. . . an amount equivalent to the disallowed increase may be defrayed out of the general revenue of the Islands, subject to the appropriation by the Legislative Assembly of the requisite funds.”

Madam Speaker, I hope the Minister can also tell us how they are going to ensure that an accurate number can be given for us to deliberate upon. If we use the example I just gave where procedure X is currently charged at $100 but the Authority's internal cost to provide that service is $150, it is not the $150 that would be required to come to the Legislative Assembly. It is going to be the $150 multiplied by the number of procedures.

That is where I am hoping the Minister can give us some explanation as to how we are going to feel comfortable coming to the Legislative Assembly through Finance Committee to ask for a block amount. That block amount is more than likely not to cover just one procedure. There will be multiple procedures and items on that charge master that may be seeking an increase. But we will then need to have some semblance of an idea that the block we will be given is not simply a wish list, but is grounded in some sort of empirical data so that we can feel very comfortable that that block amount is . . . because after all, the Minister is going to have to come and ask us for, for example, $1 million. That $1 million will be broken out by procedure and by this proposed fee increase by procedure or line item of service in that charge master.

Madam Speaker, we also see that the Bill is strengthening patient privacy as it relates to access of documentation by certain offices, namely the Internal and External Audit Offices. Certainly, I believe that is something that is necessary. I do not think any of us can argue that point because, the truth of the matter is, all of us should be concerned about persons having their right to privacy as it relates to data contained in their medical records.

Obviously, when it comes to the financial side and whether or not a person owes the Authority money, that is a completely different line of argument. But in terms of medical records and the customers of the HSA, those ought to have as much protection as possible.

With those very brief remarks, I wait to hear the contributions of other Members and the winding up by the honourable Minister.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak?

Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to make a few comments on the Health Services Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2009.

I am sure it is the wish of every Member of this honourable House to improve our health services to everybody in this country. The Minister responsible has brought this Bill with that intention. He has explained it in a way that will have my support, Madam Speaker. I understand the new model and I certainly understand what he is trying to do when he talks about a Foundation where monies can be actually paid in and used for the good health of our community.

I turn to clause 4. It says, "The Board shall consist of seven directors . . ." and this is really the thrust of my contribution because I want to mention one of the things this Minister has done since he took over health services of this country. He recognised the unique need for input directly from Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. He appointed a member of the Board now sitting, Ms. Nola Bodden, who has given excellent input and has been valuable from the standpoint of health for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. It is also her input that has driven the $3.5 million upgrade that is now going on at Faith Hospital. When completed, kudos must go to the Minister and all those involved in that upgrade.

Madam Speaker, it goes on to say, "(a) all of the directors shall be persons of honesty, integrity and good reputation, who have skills in management, motivation, organisation or negotiation; and (b) six of the directors shall have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Governor in Cabinet substantial knowledge and experience in one or more of the following areas: (i) finance; (ii) human resources; (iii) law; (iv) information technology; and (v) other related fields."

Of course, my colleagues will all know that I and would loved to have seen the seventh identify Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

In these remarks I am asking the Minister, in his reply, to just give his vision. With what he has already accomplished in the last four years I know that he has taken this under consideration, and I am quite sure that he has a vision of how input will come and how Cayman Brac's Faith Hospital will continue to be protected in a way that it directly has representation on the Board that is now going to be replacing the existing Board.

Madam Speaker, that is my concern. I am sure it will be answered in a very constructive way because I am sure it has been taken under consideration. But I just want to say that to my knowledge it is the first time we have had direct representation on that Board and at the end of this Minister's term he must know how well that has worked for my constituents.

With those few comments, I will vote in favour of this. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to make my contribution to the Bill presented by the Honourable Minister of Health and Human Services as it relates to amending the Health Services Authority Law to change the composition of the Board of Directors of the Cayman Islands Health Services Authority; to establish a fund raising agency for the Authority; and for incidental and connected purposes.

I wish to commend my colleague and school friend, the Honourable Minister of Health and Human Services, for this amendment. I would like to talk on two points: one is the composition of the Board; and the second is on the corporation which is a fund raising committee.

First, the makeup of the committee: Madam Speaker, whereas I agree about not having any person who works in the Health Service or the public service on the Board, I wonder if the Honourable Minister has thought about who the stakeholders of the Health Services are. I refer to civil servants. I wonder, despite the fact that you might not want a civil servant who is directly involved in the Health Services, if the Honourable Minister might not think about putting someone from the Civil Service Association. They are very competent people who are not part of the Health Services. That is a large group of people that directly affect the Health Services. So I would ask if he would think about that because I believe it is fair to have that representation on the Board.

The second part is the whole question of fundraising. When he brought this I told him it was good. I believe that is the way we should go when we have these government companies which in themselves can raise funds. And this is one of them. It is an entity that augurs a lot of social responsibility. A lot of people in this country and elsewhere would give to the hospital services.

I am glad about this because our population, because of the demographics of the world, has seen the most ageing people in this history. We call them the Baby Boomers. Judging from what happened recently, a lot of them will end up poorer. We certainly have our share of elderly that will require a lot of help from the state where health is concerned. So I am happy that we will put together a foundation that will supplement what the Government does so that our elderly and people who suffer from chronic diseases and our poor will be able to optimally utilise the Health Services without any question.

As my colleague said some time ago, you tell the ethos of a country when it looks after its children and its elderly.

With those few words, Madam Speaker, I would like to support the Bill. But I would also repeat and ask the Minister if he would reconsider someone from the Civil Service Association on the Board. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for the district of Bodden Town.

Mr. Osbourne V. Boddén: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to offer support to the Bill brought by my colleague the Minister for Health and Human Services. I would like to pay kudos to him and to his team at the Health Services Authority and the Hospital which has recognised the need to improve the framework for the Board of Directors, and to also address the issue of our Foundation.

I actually spoke to the Minister about this and he told me it was something that was being worked on. I must say that I am extremely pleased that it has gotten here so quickly—not that I did not believe him, but I know these things take time.

Partly because of my past life in the captive insurance industry I have known for a long time about the way that hospitals and healthcare institutions in the US are largely funded. Cleveland Clinic, the institution that my family and I use, in my mind is one of the best that the US has to offer. When you walk in there you see a plaque that tells you clearly that it is a not-for-profit organisation. It depends upon the good will of the community to a large extent.

There are many people who contribute to various charities and good causes in Cayman. Oftentimes we see the overwhelming support that, for instance, the Hospice Care receives. I know for a fact that as long as it is properly structured and people have faith in what is being done, that we will see a tremendous outpouring of support by members of our community for such a cause.

Healthcare is very expensive, Madam Speaker. We complain all the time about the tremendous burden that is placed upon Government to fund it. We keep getting more and more demands, as the Third Elected Member for George Town said. People are living longer and the need for healthcare continues to increase.

There are many wealthy individuals that pass on from this life and sometimes they are alone. They have tremendous resources and they would like to leave those resources to an institution that they know will continue to do a lot of good will in the community and further something as important as healthcare. There are other benefactors who, simply because of their tremendous wealth, would like to donate to worthwhile causes. Therefore, I believe it is important, certainly timely, for us to be looking at putting this into legislation for this to be facilitating. It has to be promoted. It has to be structured so that people have faith in what it is there for, and not abused in any way.

Madam Speaker, it is also important to underscore the fact that this is not to replace Government's responsibility. Certainly, it is only there to supplement. We would love to think that we could depend on this, but I know that would not be the case. It will take time for this Foundation to build up its funds and to invest them properly. That is another important area. We have to ensure that funds are invested properly and conservatively. In time it will ease the burden. I think it is a very forward-thinking move and I want to congratulate all those involved with bringing it to the Floor of this House.

Madam Speaker, another very important aspect in relation to how such a foundation should be structured (and I am sure this has been given consideration, but I would like to highlight it) is that we may have US citizens, in particular, who may wish to donate to such a cause. Often we have long-term residents and visitors to our shores who simply wish to assist in one way or the other with our community. We know that oftentimes they do. It is important that this is structured in such a way that when they make donations to such an institution that they receive tax credits back in the US. That will encourage them because, as we all know, the tax system is convoluted. But receiving tax credit to whatever institution you donate to, has to usually be a not-for-profit organisation. It is something people use in their tax planning mechanisms.

Madam Speaker, this is really the thrust of my contribution on this important Bill. I think that it is certainly a move in the right direction. Again, I want to commend the Minister, the leadership of the Health Services Authority, and Ms. Yearwood at the hospital, all those involved, and the staff in the Ministry, for getting this here. I am looking forward to the day when some of the pressure can be eased from the ever-increasing cost of healthcare in these Islands. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes to speak, does the mover wish to exercise his right of reply?

Honourable Minister of Health.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I thank all those who contributed to the debate. In response to my colleague, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, I understand his concern. One of the reasons we made some of these moves—especially in reducing the size of the Board—[is that] the Law [specified] 13 members. It proved quite unwieldy and much time was consumed in just getting everybody together and some of the meetings would go for significantly long periods of time.

Madam Speaker, I said sometime last year that throughout the world—and it is a known fact that the highest percentage of GDP in the world is spent on healthcare costs. This is another driving factor that [led us] to make these changes. It has always been my dream from way back when (not the least of which when I took part in the People's Progressive Movement Government) to go about looking at a different way of funding the hospital. This brings more structure, Madam Speaker . . . And he is probably aware that towards the end of last year a comprehensive charge master was developed. As a matter of fact, it did not take effect until the first part of this year. For the first time it brings the Cayman Islands up to the same level playing field of the rest of the world where anyone who looks at a code on a [hospital] invoice knows what it means. One of the great difficulties we had in the past was coding for the insurance companies. If it was not the right code, we did not get paid for it. This is unacceptable.

I just want to say that another area we have been able to deal with is the standardisation of health insurance fees. There is a set amount for this, which will be incorporated into these charges, that by law the insurance company has to pay. So, it brings a better business relationship to the operations of the Health Services Authority.

For the information of the House and the Second Elected Member, and just to read what was there before, “The Board shall from time to time determine the fees to be charged for the services provided by the Authority which shall become effec- tive 90 days after their submission to the Minister unless disallowed by the Governor in Cabinet; and where an increase in fees is disallowed, the Governor in Cabinet shall identify a mechanism for the payment.” This was another change that we have there. But we knew that we could not tell the Cabinet or the Legislative Assembly that they could do that. Prior to that it was a 90 day time period, and if those fees were not approved by Cabinet, or if they were not denied, they would automatically come into effect. But we wanted to put something with more structure.

As we all know, there are not many hospitals in the world that make a profit. But we wanted to gather and use to the best of our ability the limited funds that we have. We all know the situation around us throughout the economies around the world and we will be in a similar situation.

Our commitment, Madam Speaker, is looking at how we deal with our elderly and our youth, as mentioned by the Third Elected Member for George Town. We will be speaking a little bit more about this before the House is dissolved next week. But one area that we can be looking at which is very costly to anyone, is the treatment of diabetes and how we can handle and assist with that to help reduce these overwhelming costs.

I want to thank the Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. It was really on his insistence, I must say, that the individual he suggested that we put on the Board has made a very positive contribution. I can tell you that she very well represented the people of Cayman Brac. One of the people in the designated category can easily come from Cayman Brac. I would be committed to seeing that this happens, or whoever comes here after me, whatever happens. I would hope they would look at this.

Just to note what my colleague, the Third Elected Member for George Town, said in regard to civil servants. The specific amendment prohibits that. But I know there are many good retired civil servants who would certainly still share that feeling of helping pensioners, making sure that their input on this Board would make a lot of difference.

My Chief Officer and I felt that on these boards it is important that we have not only technical people experienced in whatever field—finance, human resources, law, IT—but also a lay person who can represent the man on the street and give that input. This is one thing that we have started doing in recent times, making sure that we have someone out there who would represent that part of the population.

In closing, I want to thank all of those who have spoken in support this Bill, and for the tacit support of those who did not speak. A special thanks to my Chief Officer, Deputy Chief Officer, and also present with me today is Ms. Janet Flynn and Ms. Sheila Watler. These ladies have put a lot of effort into helping to get this Bill ready so we could get it down here.

I thank all members of the present Board under the chairmanship of Pastor Al. We have come a long way. There is a long way to go, but with the support of my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly and with God's help, we can make a difference. It is about making things better for our people in Cayman and I know that is the committed work that we have done over the last three years and a few months.

Whatever happens after this that commitment will be there. Sickness is something that we all must face at some time or the other. When I started here back with the health insurance, I saw that as an investment to be used in times of great need; not just to go and get an aspirin or Tylenol. But health insurance was designed for when it is greatly needed. That has been the focus—not to put the strain on our people, but to make life better for our people; to keep them from serious trauma where they get their savings wiped out.

Thank you, Ma'am.

Cayman Islands National Insurance Company
(CINICO) Annual Report 2007-2008

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Minister responsible for Health.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Cayman Islands National Insurance Company (CINICO) Annual Report 2007-2008.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Minister of Health wish to speak thereto?

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

It is with pride that I table this Report. I am informed that this could be one of the first reports now finalised for the fiscal year 2007-2008. I want to thank the staff at CINICO for their endeavours.

Madam Speaker, as honourable Members are aware, CINICO is a licensed Class A insurance company wholly owned by the Cayman Islands Government primarily established to manage health care costs incurred by the shareholder. Madam Speaker, the company is also responsible for assisting other persons who reside in the Cayman Islands to gain access to affordable quality healthcare services, and for maintaining reinsurance to cover part of the cost of the catastrophic events.

Since inception the number of persons insured by CINICO has increased from 10,577 members as of 30 June 2004, to 13,511 members as of 30 June 2008. This represents a 28 per cent increase over a period of four years.

Operational Highlights

CINICO is a fairly small organisation currently consisting of a staff complement of nine employees. In July 2007 the company moved its operations from Elizabethan Square in George Town to the Cayman Centre opposite the airport Post Office. This provided far better accessibility to our elderly and disabled policy holders, and much needed office space.

During the year in review, CINICO developed a robust disaster recovery process which enables it in the event of a natural disaster to remotely resume operations in a short period of time. In continuing to strengthen this relationship with its reinsurance provider, and as a testament to the reinsurance company's confidence in CINICO's ability, the company was able to negotiate lower rates in 2007 and 2008 with slightly better terms.

In the past budget year, Madam Speaker, the company collected over $1.2 million in claims from its reinsurance policy. For the financial year ending 30 June 2008, CINICO successfully negotiated direct contracts at preferred rates with several US providers. These agreements will allow the company to achieve its goal of minimising its dependency on outside parties once implementation is complete.

In addition, CINICO has one of the best Jamaican network agreements in the industry enabling it to offer quality medical care much lower than US prices.

Members of this honourable House will be aware that one measure of operating efficiency for an insurance company is the ratio of administration expenses to premium. Compared to similar size companies in the United States, I am told that CINICO's administration expenses to net premium were 11 per cent versus an industry benchmark of 15 per cent.

Financial Report

From a financial standpoint, CINICO's performance in terms of net income loss has improved during the past year as it incurred a significantly lower loss in 2007/2008 than it did in the prior year. The company's equity position improved from negative $6.2 million at 30 June 2007, to $200,000 at 30 June 2008. Madam Speaker, the increase is due to $8.5 million in additional paid in capital from the shareholder to rectify previous year deficits. The equity injections were received to subsidise losses for the 2005/06 and the 2006/07 financial years.

Madam Speaker, as a Class A insurance company, CINICO is subject to the regulations of the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority (CIMA) which requires a minimum equity position of $3 million. Thus, for the 2007/08 financial year the company was not compliant with this requirement. One of the continuing challenges that the company faces is the rising utilisation and healthcare costs which, coupled with the insufficient premium, has led to historical losses. However, CINICO is committed to addressing rising healthcare costs and other issues surrounding its profitability.

February 2008 the company commissioned its actuary to conduct a financial sustainability study. To date, management and the board are addressing some of the issues surrounding the historical negative performance. For example, management has made a presentation to government on how premiums could be decreased with limited cost sharing from participants. In addition, the shortfall in premium has already been rectified in the 2008/09 year to better match the risk the company insures.

Madam Speaker, I am happy to report that for the six-month period ending the 31 December 2008, CINICO earned a profit of $1.7 million. Furthermore, coupled with an additional $3 million equity injection received to subsidise previous losses, the current year profitability has allowed the company to accumulate for the first time (I am made to understand) $4.9 million in equity. And, as a result, the company is now fully compliant with CIMA's minimum equity requirement.

Madam Speaker, Members of this honourable House can clearly gather from information in this Annual Report that the Cayman Islands National Insurance Company is not only now financially sound, but it is in fact carrying out its mandate as a Class A insurance company.

It is with appreciation for the work done by the Board of Directors and the management of the company, that I have just laid on the Table of this honourable House the 2007/08 Annual Report of CINICO.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received notice of a statement from the Honourable Minister responsible for Health and Human Services.

Community Well-being in the Face of the Economic Reality

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I have entitled this: Community Well-being in the Face of the Economic Reality.

Madam Speaker, for some while now we have all been hearing about the global economic crisis, the subsequent slowdown in business and the effects that it will have on countries around the world. We cannot deny that we in the Cayman Islands are in for some rough times. Indeed, some of us are already experiencing these rough times.

Madam Speaker, recognising the serious nature and the scope of the current issues, my Ministry is actively pursuing cross-ministerial partnerships to align programmes and share resources as a means of dealing with the interlinked issues that are and will be facing us for some time to come. However, government agencies cannot and should not be expected to weather these storms alone. As the Minister tasked with ensuring that health and human services are provided to the people of these Islands, I am acutely aware that my Ministry has a role to play in protecting the most vulnerable within our population while ensuring the wellbeing of all.

Human Services

Madam Speaker, I wish to comment first on services which are aimed at enhancing social and emotional wellbeing. It is clear from recent statistics compiled by the Department of Children and Family Services, that the economic slowdown is already having an impact on the demand for their services. Financial assistance provided by the Department in the form of rental assistance, food vouchers, school lunches, and uniforms for the last six months (that is from July 2008 to December 2008) already almost equals the entire amount spent on these categories of assistance for the previous fiscal year.

Through the current financial year we have had to literally double the resource allocation for this department. But that, Madam Speaker, is the commitment of the People's Progressive Movement Government, to make sure we take care of our people in the most vulnerable positions.

Madam Speaker, as part of a long-term strategy the Ministry has been reviewing the criteria used to determine who gets financial and other assistance, and the demographics of the individuals involved. What we do know, which is also confirmed by the National Assessment of Living Conditions study, is that assistance, such as food vouchers, is predominantly utilised by female headed households with dependant children. Thus we must make the focus.

Informal discussions hosted by my Chief Officer with senior administrators from other ministries have also brought other challenges to the fore, such as unemployment, work for our returning graduates, the impact of the economic stress on our nation's mental health and especially on our young children, and securing adequate health insurance coverage.

Madam Speaker, departments under my Ministry have reported that they are already seeing the effect that the increased stressors have on our families. And I commend the proactive steps taken and thank the heads of departments for the input they have given to the Ministry resulting in the formulation of policies that will have a positive impact on the wellbeing of our people. It is clear that the economic issues we are currently facing have the potential to impact our nation's physical and mental health, our children's education and their current and future employment.

The NALC (National Assessment of Living Conditions) Report documents that 1.9 per cent of our population is poor and another 1.8 per cent is classified as being vulnerable. We are paying serious attention to these statistics and doing everything we can to prevent these numbers from increasing.

Madam Speaker, in my view, only cross-ministerial collaboration and public/private initiatives will allow us to find opportunities in the current situation and allow us to address the challenges holistically. We are also promoting personal responsibility, especially in regard to the family. People need to own up to the responsibility of taking care of their family members, in particular our elderly, our disabled and our children. And just to pause there: the legislation we passed in this House recently addresses many of these areas. Whatever we spend now should be an investment in the future and not just a stopgap measure.

Health Services

My Ministry further recognises that access to healthcare services and sufficient healthcare insurance is a crucial part of ensuring that people feel safe and secure. And as such it is a subject that I wish to draw attention to.

Currently, the Health Insurance Commission collects approximately $2.2 million to cover the healthcare costs for those who are uninsured and classified as indigents. However, in the current financial year, 2008/09, local healthcare cost for this group of persons is budgeted at $5.8 million. Work is well underway to implement policies that will help to narrow the gap between the amount collected and that which is paid out.

Madam Speaker, the Health Insurance Commission has recently received an increasing number of inquiries regarding what happens to your health insurance coverage if you loose or should change your job. All employed persons should make sure they maintain their health insurance coverage through these tough times.

Madam Speaker, I have sympathy for the fact that when one faces possible termination of a work contract, or has actually lost their job, health insurance might be one of the last things a person thinks about. However, it is imperative that employees and employers do all they can to keep the health insurance coverage in place. As such, employers are reminded that their health insurance obligations do not end when they decide to terminate an employee's contract. Equally, employees should not assume that continued coverage is automatic and they should know their rights under the law.

According to the Health Insurance Law employees health insurance ends on the first day of the month following departure from a job. However, if employees loose their jobs and are not immediately employed elsewhere they can keep the existing health insurance for up to three months from the date of termination of work, or until they gain new employment, whichever occurs earlier.

Madam Speaker, employers are also encouraged to ensure that premiums are paid on the first of every month. While some approved insurers provide reminder notices, premiums must be paid in a timely manner to ensure that there is no lapse in employees' health insurance coverage. It is imperative that employers proactively engage their staff on the issue of health insurance.

As soon as you know that you have to let someone go, do the right and decent thing. Sit down and discuss the matter immediately with them. I'm also aware of the criticism about the standard health insurance contract. I know that especially with our low wage workers face difficulty in getting robust health insurance coverage.

There is a general consensus that the current level of healthcare benefits listed in the standard health insurance contract is not in line with today's healthcare cost. However, Madam Speaker, I caution that any legislated increase in benefits will be matched with increase costs of premiums for employers and employees.

Madam Speaker, if we want to ensure optimum wellbeing for all, we need to ensure affordable health insurance. This is why my Ministry and the Health Insurance Commission are consistently working to improve the system. The Health Insurance Commission Board made recommendations to the Ministry on an enhanced standard health insurance plan of benefits. In accordance with my directive the Health Insurance Commission engaged an overseas company to derive a premium rate for providing benefits under the new proposed standard health insurance contract.

The Actuarial Report states that the expanded benefits under the new plan would lead to increases in premium rates, and the segment of the insured population that would be most affected by the premium increases are persons insured only for the SHIC benefits (Standard Health Insurance Contract), that is, those without supplementary benefits. Madam Speaker, the current premium rate for the standard health insurance coverage ranges from $67 to $120 per month. Before revising the law, Government must ensure that the mandatory plan of health insurance benefits is not only adequate but is also affordable to the average employee/employer in these difficult times. Amending the standard healthcare plan is clearly not a decision that Government can make in a vacuum.

Madam Speaker, as the Minister who introduced mandatory health insurance coverage in these Islands—probably one of the first in the world—I wish to remind everyone that the standard health insurance contract was meant to cover on-Island care, brought in to transfer some of the cost from Government to the private sector. It was never meant to cover catastrophic care overseas, but provide people, at the very least, [with] access to impatient service at our local hospitals.

Madam Speaker, I wish to emphasise that to the best of my knowledge no one—Caymanian or non-Caymanian—has been denied access locally to urgent healthcare services due to a lack of adequate health insurance coverage. A myriad of plans are offered by insurance companies so anyone can obtain enhanced benefits over that offered in the standard health insurance contract. I must interject that it is a matter of priority, Madam Speaker. However, the question that still needs to be answered is how best to cost-effectively bridge the gap between the benefits in the basic standard plan and those in what is called the premier plan; a plan which I understand is purchased by a large segment of our population.

Madam Speaker, Members of this honourable House should note that having received the report and feedback on the various questions surrounding the introduction and implementation of an enhanced standard healthcare plan, I assure you that the issue of affordable healthcare insurance for all remains high on my Ministry's agenda.

In a related matter, Madam Speaker, the Ministry is also working to introduce a primary healthcare package of services to be delivered through the district health centres on all three Islands. These services would include, among others, GP visits, routine diagnostic tests, some medication and basic dental service. A policy paper will be sent shortly to Cabinet recommending the delivery of this package of services at little or no direct costs to a segment of our population. This will, in fact, also have an impact on the benefits structure of the proposed standard health insurance contract.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion I want to make it clear that simply increasing health insurance coverage or providing social assistance is not the answer. The Ministry of Health and Human Services is not looking for quick fixes, but instead we want to find solutions that will put social development on par with the physical development of our Islands. There must be a national strategic approach to deal with the economic slowdown—and I know my colleagues are diligently working on that—and its effects. My staff is exploring ways to meet the growing demands creatively. The recent restructuring of health and human services and its department has laid the groundwork for such a response and has already proven to be a sound investment.

While agencies under the Ministry, Madam Speaker, are committed to supporting those who are most vulnerable and are well positioned to maintain the current range of services during these difficult times, if we are truly to achieve optimal wellbeing for all we will need public, private, and personal partnerships. As such, the community and businesses are encouraged to get involved in supporting our people during the difficult times ahead. Madam Speaker, we need to ask ourselves what can we do to get through this and how can we as a people stand together to weather some of the storm.

Today I would ask all Members of this honourable House to join in this crucial venture of ensuring optimal wellbeing for all.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Chairman: The amendment has been duly moved, does any Member wish to speak?

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Just on a matter of clarification, I do not particularly wish to speak on this amendment, I do not have any problems. I do have when you go back to clauses prior to 11.

The Chairman: You have a question on the clauses prior to 11 that I have already put the question on?

There is nothing I can do about that now.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Well, Madam Chairman . . . never mind. I can find another clause that I can deal with.

The Chairman: You see, in committee stage, my interpretation has always been that we deal with the amendments, because when one debates the second reading is when they go through the Bill and make their comments and so forth. But anyway, we will leave it to the committee.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: That is correct, Madam Chairman, but I did indicate to those concerned that I was not able to get a flight on Monday, and because there was a suspension on Monday evening for the business to be completed, when I did get a flight on Wednesday the winding-up procedure had started, so I did not have an opportunity to speak on it, and I tried other avenues. The only avenue that was left was to deal with it in committee.

I must apologise. I just recently sent a note in the hope that there would have been some of the concerns taken on board. That is not to be the case, so it then put me at this last minute to go back and look at those concerns having thought that maybe it would have been taken on board. So I did not hear when you put that.

That is just to explain.

If the committee feels that they want to go ahead with it, obviously I do not have the numbers to stop it. But I believe it would be a grave mistake as it relates to the two issues I discussed with the Ministry.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chairman, the draft of this Bill has been out for four-plus months. There has been more than ample opportunity for anyone to comment on it. Notice was given that the Bill would be debated on Monday. The Bill was debated on Monday.

The Member has explained why she was not here. We have to take her at her word in that regard. And I am sorry that she was not here to debate it.

I am deeply sorry that the Opposition generally, with the exception of the Second Elected Member for West Bay, chose not to really participate in any debate on this very important Bill. That has troubled me greatly.

But, Madam Chairman, the Member would not even vote for the Bill.

Notwithstanding all of that, I listened at length to her concerns. I discussed them with my technical team. We are satisfied that the clause to which she refers is satisfactory. Essentially, that is the end of the matter.

She did not choose to speak to it even in committee stage at clause 10 just now when the opportunity availed itself. The question has been put and the question has been voted on.

I really do not know what more we can be expected to do at this very, very late stage. I really do not know.

The Chairman: First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, you have other questions as we go along? Because the question has been put and carried on those previous sections.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: That's fine Madam Chair. I still hold to the belief that section 10 is unconstitutional, so that will work itself out. But I have a concern, a question on clause 15, which we have not yet reached, and I can incorporate my previous concern which has been passed. I thank you for your indulgence.

The Chairman: Where am I now? Did I put the question on the amendment?

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: You put it, but it was not voted on.

The Chairman: All right.

If no Member wishes to speak, the question is that the amendment form part of the clause. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Chairman: The Ayes have it.

The Chairman: The question is that clauses 12 through 16 form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye.

Ayes.

The Chairman: First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you.

By way of clarification I wish to ascertain from the Honourable Minister . . . as one reads clause 15 which says: "The Minister shall establish a national curriculum, which shall be mandatory for the Government schools, and which shall comprise the core and other foundation subjects and specify in relation to each of the subjects . . ." Is this meant to substitute the provision in the previous Education Law (1999 Revision) section 27, which read: "Non-denominational religious worship and instruction shall be given in every government school." I have not been able to find an equivalent to a statutory right for our schools to have religious education taught in them.

The Chairman: Honourable Minister responsible for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chair, the structure of this particular Bill is such that for the first time there will be established by Law a national curriculum. The national curriculum, which is already prepared—in fact, it is already operational as of September last year—has in it as part of the subject content religious instruction as part of the core subjects which must be taught in government schools.

So, the concern expressed by the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman is addressed that way. The subjects are not dealt with specifically in the Law; they are dealt with in the national curriculum. The national curriculum is mandated under this provision, section 15 in the Law.

So I believe the concern is addressed that way.

The Chairman: First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you.

Can the Minister explain what guarantee this parliament or this country has that the protection given under the old section 27 will be equally protected? Or has this protection been diminished to the mere discretion of whoever is drafting or directing the national curriculum.

The Chairman: Honourable Minister.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I think the concern which the Member has, or not the concern, the belief that the Member seems to have that there was any mandatory requirement in the old Law that religious instruction in the Christian faith (which is what I think she is getting at) was required under the old Law is misplaced.

All the old Law required was that there was religious instruction in all government schools. It could have been instruction in relation to the Moslem faith or any other faith. So, I believe that those who drafted the legislation and most people who have read it, because of the Cayman context in which this was drafted (which is that the dominant religion is the Christian one) might have been misled all these years to think that there was a requirement that we teach the Christian faith in government schools. That has never been the case, although that has been the practice.

That practice continues. As I said, the structure of this particular Law . . . the Law does not deal with the specific subjects that must be taught. That is a matter for the national curriculum. The national curriculum has already been established. Part of what the national curriculum requires at the moment is religious instruction in all government schools.

So, I do not share the concern that the lady Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman appears to have, that we must write specifically into this Law that there should be religious instruction. That would go counter to the way the Law has been set up and the structure. That would be the only subject which was dealt with in the legislation.

Madam Chair, we have talked about this at some length overnight, and we are satisfied (as I believe is everybody else who has had a look at this) that the issue is appropriately dealt with in the national curriculum which is already established and is operational.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Chair, I know I am perhaps encroaching on your patience, but I think this is a very, very important matter—certainly to me, and I would hope to more than myself. Seeing that we have said far and near for many, many years that we have been established upon the seas, and with the removal of section 27 from the old Law, although the Minister has attempted to explain that there is a way that it could be put into the curriculum has, in my respectful opinion, absolutely diluted our tradition and our culture.

My opinion is in no way misplaced. When I read it, it does say "non-denominational religious worship". And yes, traditionally, that has been Christian worship. But I am not advocating that we put that in because I understand the Human Rights move and whatever else that has been going on in that regard. But, Madam Chair, this removal is not just a removal against me or any particular one; but I am here to say without any fear of contradiction that this removal here today, although it is being made to seem as minor and trivial, is a slap in the face of Almighty God himself.

People who do not believe in Him and those who come from other cultures who feel that God and the Christian heritage are not important to Cayman need to find a jurisdiction where they can do their little playing with.

And, Madam Chair, I will finish with this here: I believe that if at all possible we need to think today not about party, not about legislators, but [about how] our forefathers and previous legislators saw a need to set apart . . . just as this provision has set apart a separate section, part 15, dealing with Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the current Government saw a need for the uniqueness of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman where the standard provisions here may not in all circumstances apply. I do believe that was the justification why the previous drafters set aside religious education. They had the vision and foresight to see that this black, sad day would come upon our Cayman Islands where a move would be made—and quite deceitfully, I respectfully say, without being insulting in any way to any of my colleagues here, or to the technocrats—to not include it.

Obviously, I am only one person, and my vote cannot change it; but I would certainly like to go on record before man and before God that I do not think that the high statutory level—especially with the Human Rights innuendos that have been going on here in Cayman—should be taken out without the public fully understanding that it is taken out from a higher statutory level to one where it is completely discretionary in the curriculum.

I thank you so very much for your indulgence and for the indulgence of my colleagues.

The Chairman: Honourable Minister.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chairman, I have to say that I object to being called deceitful, particularly in this House.

What the lady Member has said is disingenuous. Truly disingenuous. She has proceeded on the premise that something has been taken out. Madam Chair, I said before that the national curriculum has been established. The national curriculum provides that it is mandatory for religious education to be taught. That national curriculum is operational. It has been operational since September 2008.

The draft of this Bill has been in circulation for four months. The lady Member demonstrated, at least to me, no interest whatsoever in its content. She never even bothered to come to debate it or to vote on it. And at this moment, because we are on the eve of election, she stands up on her pulpit and preaches her pious sermon to this House and to me inferring that somehow those of us on this side—in particular me—have less regard for Almighty God than she does.

Madam Chairman, I take this job very seriously. I wish that others in this House spent as much time thinking about these things as I do because then we would not be here discussing this at this late stage.

Madam Chairman, we are satisfied that adequate provision and protection is provided for in the framework of the overall legislation and the national curriculum to ensure that it is mandatory that religious education be taught in government schools. And I am satisfied to defend that anywhere.

The Chairman: The question is that clauses 12 through 16 form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes and one audible No (Ms. O'Connor-Connolly)

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Chair, is it possible for divisions in committee?

The Chairman: Madam Clerk.

Honourable lady Member, are you asking for a division on the entire 12 through 16?

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: If that is the only way we can do it; if not, on clause 15.

The Chairman: Then I will put the question differently so that we can get the division, if I may.

The question is that clauses 12 through 14 form part of the Bill. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: It's okay, Madam Chairman. I was equally confused!

I move the following amendment to the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009: A new clause— "Child abuse reporting policy."

"40A (1) Every school or early childhood institution shall have a written Child Abuse Reporting Policy which shall comply with the Children Law.

"(2) It is deemed to be a condition of a grant of Government funding to an assisted school or early childhood institution that there shall be for that school or institution a Child Abuse Reporting Policy.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chair, before we get . . . are we at the end of the Bill?

The Chairman: Just the Title is left.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Chair, I crave your indulgence in relation to the controversial [clause] 15, which led to the exchange between the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and me.

I have had a quick confer with my colleagues here. We have looked at subclause (3) in the Bill. We would like to recommit [clause] 15 and propose that we add to there the simple word "religion" which I think—I hope—would satisfy the concern of the lady Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and will not do violence to the structure which has been established by this provision.

So, we would like to recommit [clause] 15.

The Chairman: The question is that clause 15 be re-committed. Those in favour please say Aye.

Ayes.

The Chairman: Those against, No.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Madam Chair, can I just make one quick comment please?

concern, and I am eternally grateful for that reconsideration.

The Chairman: Let's see if we can get it right now, Mr. Minister, because I am totally confused also.

I think you have to move the amendment to it.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Yes, Madam Chair.

I move the following amendment to—

The Chairman: I have waived the two-day notice for the benefit of the Committee.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I move the following amendment to the Education Modernisation Bill, 2009: By amending clause 15(3) so as to add the word "religion" after "to" and before the word "the" in the second line.

So that subclause (3) will read "The core and other foundation subjects shall include studies relating to religion, the history and culture of the Islands and shall otherwise be as prescribed by regulations made under subsection (5)."

PRAYERS

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings Resumed at 11.27 am

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE HONOURABLE
SPEAKER OF MESSAGES
AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Apologies

The Speaker: I have no messages or announcements, but I would like to apologise to the press for the late start. It was matter that we had no control over. I humbly apologise to Members and to members of the press.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ending 30 June 2009

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, let me also apologise for the late start of the House. The reason for the late start is [because] the document that I am about to lay on the Table is quite a big document—it is 200 pages—and having to bind 40 copies of that document took quite some time. So, the delay was actually caused by the Portfolio of Finance binding quite an extensive document.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ending 30 June 2009

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, just a brief contribution.

In accordance with Standing Order 67(1), the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates that were just laid stand referred to Finance Committee. As the estimates will be considered in Finance Committee at the conclusion of today's business in the House, I do not need to say any more at this point in time except, with your permission, to move a motion in connection thereto.

Motion to Approve Supplementary Appropriations Standing Order 67(2)

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Section 10 of the Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates just tabled contains the proposals for supplementary appropriations in respect of the 2008/9 financial year. I beg to move, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), that Finance Committee approve the supplementary appropriation proposals set out in section 10 of the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the Government of the Cayman Islands for the financial year ending 30 June 2009, just tabled.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, having been here a long time I can understand the Government is experiencing severe management problems at this time. It is as plain as the nose on your face the kind of situation we have to deal with.

I do not know when we will be given time to go through this document that is Finance Committee papers—at least 200 pages long. We have been a reasonable Opposition. I certainly would crave time to go through this document. I say “I”, meaning the Opposition.

The Speaker: The Motion shall stand referred to the Standing Finance Committee.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I only rose . . . and I beg your indulgence. But I only rose to solicit a reply on this matter. This is of extreme importance. The Opposition is only seeing this . . . I guess even the Speaker just saw it. It is of extreme importance that as the Opposition we get to examine this document.

The Speaker: Honourable Third Official Member, or Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will be quite aware from his own experiences—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: It was never this bad, though!

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: —that this is not something that has happened for the first time.

Madam Speaker, the House will be dissolved midnight on Monday. The technical people in the Portfolio of Finance have been working very hard, like all of us, to prepare these documents. They could not have been prepared before. We have the Bill—

The Speaker: Could I have quiet please, between the Government and the Opposition so I can listen to what the Leader is saying?

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: —before the House, and we will be completing the Bills today. We will be dealing with Finance Committee right after that to ensure that we are not caught by the Monday deadline without completing the business of the House.

It is not something that we have set out to do; this is just the way the cards have played themselves and everyone will simply have to do the best they can with the time we have.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I crave your indulgence so that we can have this discussion because we have not, really. This should have been taken care of in Business Committee. But even with that the Government has been lax.

Madam Speaker, we, as the Opposition . . . at this point I must demand that we be given some time to go through these 200 pages of expenditure.

[inaudible]

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I think the Leader of Government Business has said the Government's position, so we will move on to the next item.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You do not think, Madam Speaker, since I am begging, there should be some sort of reconsideration of what he said?

The Speaker: I think he made the Government's position very clear.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I think, Madam Speaker, he is hearing me. Reconsider his position. We need time!

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received notice of a statement by the Honourable Minister—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I do believe before you enter the next item that there should have been a vote on that matter.

The Speaker: On what matter?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Was there not a motion moved?

The Speaker: The motion stands referred to the Finance Committee. There is no debate in this House under Standing Orders.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Okay, Madam Speaker, I was just trying to make some sense for the Government.

The Speaker: I know.

I have received notice of a statement by the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

CoeWood Public Beach

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I would like to provide an update on the redevelopment of CoeWood Public Beach. The plans for the new CoeWood Public Beach have been influenced by sustainable design and focus on the scale appropriate community based tourism concepts outlined in the Go East Policy document.

When I launched the Go East initiative, I explained the aims were to stimulate sustainable development in the eastern districts of Bodden Town, East End and North Side. The broad objectives were to:

- Distribute the economic benefits of tourism across a wider geographical and socio-economic sector at a scale and in a form appropriate to local residents.
- Embrace cultural and heritage tourism and put the spotlight on relevant attractions and activities.
- Improve the country's carrying capacity for tourism, including the better management of cruise tourism.
- Receive input from area residents on the various development and operational models which could be adopted.
- Identify ways to increase the level of Caymanian ownership of and participation in the tourism industry and then to work with these partners to enhance their delivery of a truly Caymanian experience.
- Increase the levels of local employment in the tourism industry, and by extension social improvements such as enhanced pride in the Cayman Islands history and heritage.

Madam Speaker, Go East endeavours to target five specific areas of tourism for development in these districts. These are: nature based tourism, health and wellness tourism, adventure tourism, agri-tourism, and community based tourism to complement other core areas such as diving, romance and families. These all serve to attract a discerning, socially responsible, higher-spending visitor and to strengthen the ties between visitors and their host communities.

The plans for the CoeWood Public Beach are based upon consultation that began from the early planning phases of the Go East policy and culminated in a public meeting on 6 October 2008 to specifically discuss the plans for the site.

Broad-based community support was received for the project. On this basis plans were subsequently finalised and Planning approvals were recently obtained. The coastal works application was approved this week for the dock and launching ramp component of the facilities and the tendering processes have commenced for this project.

Steadfastly, and in consultation with residents, plans are proceeding to realise this enhanced public beach for the residents of Bodden Town, and for the guests we wish to welcome to our district, whether visiting for a few short hours or those who overnight with us.

Over the past four years, investments in and enhancements to the tourism product in Bodden Town have significantly increased the international recognition with international recognition having been received for the turtle nesting and with new projects being established in the district, including the National Trust Mission House, the Nurse Josie Senior Home, the Harwell McCoy Senior Community Park, and the Retreat at Lookout Gardens, a bed and breakfast.

Other new and exciting projects are underway such as a new bed and breakfast and new attractions including the White House in Pease Bay, which will specifically target cruise passengers.

Clearly, the current condition of CoeWood Public Beach is in conflict with and does not complement the blossoming tourism products in the district. The new CoeWood Public Beach will help to anchor the Go East initiative in Bodden Town by increasing the attractiveness of tourists into the eastern districts by providing enhanced facilities for residents and visitors to enjoy our beaches, by providing boat launching facilities for fishermen, and by offering entrepreneurial opportunities for residents of the districts to conduct light tourism businesses, such as food or craft sales in the dedicated kiosks on the site.

Other key features of the project include an enhanced car park capable of accommodating several tour buses as well as boat trailers, fully renovated bathrooms with access for the disabled, facilities for families, showers and a children's playground area to provide first-class family oriented facilities in the Bodden Town community.

In order to maintain best practice in environmentally responsible construction, careful attention has been given to sustainable design using LEED's (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) certified architects and recycling materials wherever possible from the existing structures on the property.

Madam Speaker, native plants are an essential part of the landscaping plans. Also included in the plans are kiosks influenced by historical Caymanian architecture from which artisans and food vendors from the local community can sell their products. Signage that highlights the significance of Bodden Town as the country's first capital and the gateway to the eastern districts will also add to the cultural authenticity of the project. Enhanced beach facilities, including a roped-off swimming area and cabanas will also be established on the site.

As mentioned, Madam Speaker, there will be a small but significant coastal works component as part of the proposed redevelopment of the CoeWood Public Beach. A dock and launching ramp will be constructed as part of these plans. The lack of these facilities has been an issue for generations of local fishermen in the Bodden Town community. The launching ramp facilities have been designed to accommodate fishing boats up to approximately 21 feet in length.

To date, Planning approval has been secured for the land side portions of the project. The plans are now being reviewed by the Planning Department's Building Control Unit. Invitations to tender from qualified general contractors are now being advertised. This process is being conducted via the Central Tenders Committee. Furthermore, as I indicated earlier, Cabinet has also approved the coastal works portion of the project.

This project has the strong support of the people of Bodden Town. The Bodden Town community has openly expressed their frustration with the illegal activities that frequently occur at the CoeWood Public Beach which deter law abiding citizens and their families from enjoying these facilities.

As evidenced by the strong support at the public meeting held in October 2008, the CoeWood Public Beach means a great deal to the Bodden Town community. Many years ago it was the concerned citizens of the Bodden Town community who rallied support for and participated in building some of the same facilities that remain on the original site of CoeWood Public Beach today.

By moving forward with this enhanced project, and by acquiring the additional property we will once again turn the CoeWood Public Beach back into a hub of activity in the community and make it an attraction which the entire community is proud of and able to fully utilise.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, let me take this opportunity to make it clear that Government fully plans to back this investment with the necessary security to ensure that no illegal activities will take place at these enhanced facilities so that the good people of the district of Bodden Town and throughout these Islands can enjoy some wholesome activities with their families at the new CoeWood Public Beach facilities.

Finally, Madam Speaker, we expect that within the next few weeks construction contracts for the project will be awarded and a groundbreaking ceremony will take place at the site tomorrow at the commencement of the project. A public invitation to the event will go out as soon as we have a confirmed date and time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, under the Orders, I would like to ask a question or two.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Short Questions Standing Order 30(2)

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Minister seems to be aware that there is unlawful activity taking place at the public beach. Can he specify what will be done to ensure that these go away?

He mentioned some coastal works component. Will that mean just a launching ramp will be built on it and a dock? Or is there some further component?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

First, in relation to the security issues, we have had—I've said this publicly before—dialogue with the police in Bodden Town on this issue and there are ad hoc checks at this location to attempt to deter some of the illegal activities that go on there at night. We will continue to encourage the police to better monitor that situation.

However, we are saying that when we close this site in the near future to begin the redevelopment, when it is reopened as a completed facility it is going to re-open under new rules and regulations and with a security system in place. There will be some level of investment required to ensure proper security at this site, but it is a bit premature at this time, Madam Speaker, to talk in any detail about the type of security that might be installed there.

In relation to the question on the coastal works component, there are actually three different components to the coastal works. One is a launching ramp, as I mentioned in the statement. That is designed to accommodate boats up to approximately 21 feet in length. There will also be a small dock adjacent to the launching ramp. The third component is a designated swimming area which will be roped off on the west side of the beach. We want to separate the swimming area from the launching ramp and dock area.

I hope I have answered the questions, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Madam Clerk.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

BILLS

Suspension of Standing Order 46(4)

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

I move the suspension of Standing Order 46(4) to enable the Bills upon the Order Paper to be read a second time.

The Speaker: The question is Standing Order 46(4) be suspended to enable the Bills upon the Order Paper to be read a second time. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 46(4) suspended to enable the Bills upon the Order Paper to be read a second time.

SECOND READINGS

Public Management and Finance (Amendment) Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Public Management and Finance (Amendment) Bill, 2009. Second Reading.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I beg to move the Second Reading of a Bill that is shortly entitled The Public Management and Finance (Amendment) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker and honourable Members, at present, by virtue of sections 57 and 64 of the Public Management and Finance Law, the Director of Internal Audit and the Auditor General respectively could access the medical records of a patient at a healthcare facility during the conduct of an audit. I placed emphasis on the word "could" because I am not aware of any patient's medical records being requested and accessed during an audit. Nonetheless, that possibility exists.

The purpose of this simple Bill is to effect the need for the Director of Internal Audit and the Auditor General to obtain the written permission of the Chief Executive Officer of the Health Services Authority to access a patient's medical record which may be required during an audit.

It is very important that I make it clear that access to financial records remains completely unencumbered during the course of an audit.

This Bill is a companion to the Health Services Authority (Amendment) Law, 2009, passed yesterday by this House. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I would respectfully ask all honourable Members to support this simple Bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Third Official Member wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, only to say thanks to all honourable Members for their tacit support of the Bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled The Public Management and Finance (Amendment) Bill, 2009, be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Public Management and Finance (Amendment) Bill 2009 given a second reading.

Customs Tariff (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Customs Tariff (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I Beg to Move the Second Reading of a Bill shortly entitled, The Customs Tariff (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the honourable mover wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker, the Bill that is now before this Honourable House seeks to amend the Customs Tariff Law (2002 Revision) to temporarily reduce the duties payable in respect of various goods. These various goods can be classified under the general heading of Building Materials.

The objective of the measures contained in the Bill is to provide a stimulus to the local economy and is to be considered in conjunction with certain reductions in stamp duty which I will speak to in my presentation of the Stamp Duty (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009, which is on the Order Paper today as well.

Madam Speaker, the amendments contained in the Bill reduce the current import duty rates as follows:

Description of Item	Import Duty Current Rate	Import Duty Proposed Reduced Rate
Cement	20%	15%
Lumber	15%	10%
Veneers, plywood, compound or constituted wood	20%	15%
Iron and steel bars, rods, angles, shapes, sections and other iron/steel basic products	20%	15%
Structures/parts of structures of iron, steel or aluminium	20%	15%

Madam Speaker, these are temporary measures, and the Bill, if passed into Law, will come into force on 1 April 2009, and will cease to have effect on 1 January 2010.

Once again, the sole purpose of this Bill is to stimulate the local economy by lowering the rate of import duty on the various types of building materials that I have just mentioned.

Madam Speaker, I therefore commend the Customs Tariff (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009 to this honourable House for passage. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, last year we asked Government to not only redraw their capital budget, but to redraw their plans for the way forward in this country, for we saw what was on the horizon. Well, I think they are famous for their sharp quip: that Not on the kindest of mornings would [they] consider our request, because it was an insult to the Financial Secretary (who just sat down) and his staff.

We made it plain that there was no insult meant. But obviously, something needed to be done—and the Government has acknowledged that at long last, albeit at the twelfth hour before they go to the polls.

Also, Madam Speaker, back in 2006 I stood here and said they were going to damage the economy if they put the 10 per cent back on, which we had taken off after the hurricane. It was too early and the country needed that period.

What has happened is that every year since the advent of this Government the economy has gone down. Every year! That means that people are worse off than they had been. This is a fair move from what we can see because you can believe, Madam

Speaker, that people are in trouble. And the worst is yet to come. But it shows that the Government should have taken note, should have listened to what the Opposition put forward back then.

We will support this only to say it's a little bit too late.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak . . .

The Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I presume after having sat on the Opposition Bench for the last four years, that the Government is going to make an attempt to convince the public that this Bill and the Bill to follow, which deals with stamp duty, is their way of trying to stimulate the economy, and that this is their way to try and help people.

Madam Speaker, I remember the PPM's first budget in 2005. I voted against that. I could see this sort of mismanagement coming. The Government brought a tax package, I think to the tune of some $28 million. The justification at the time was that they were going to embark upon the most ambitious capital development programme that the country had ever seen, therefore, the monies would be needed. I clearly remember articulating the position at the time that, if and when the country needed to be taxed, we look at the situation and then we could say whether we agreed or disagreed. Many of the projects have not come to fruition to date.

After those initial missteps and blunders we again, in December 2007, tried to convince the Government all was not well. I am not going to stand here and try to make anyone believe that during the debate on the Strategic Policy Statement upon which the 2009 year end budget was based that our non-agreement was based on us having any crystal ball because we don't have it. It does not exist! However—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member, could you get back to the matter before the House and not previous debate?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker . . .

The Speaker: The Customs [Bill].

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: The Customs (Amendment) [Bill] which reduces duty rates . . . I am forced to inform the House why we are in this position and why this, in my humble opinion . . . because the Honourable Third Official Member who introduced this to the House has introduced it as an economic stimulus package. The fact that he said it is an economic stimulus package tells me that I need to debate the confines in which the economy currently exists and, therefore, to paint a picture as to why I don't think this is going to be effective.

So, Madam Speaker, how we got here is of crucial importance, and I am also going to tie how we got here to why I don't believe this is going to work or indeed help poor people.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for West Bay, I just want you to stay within Standing Order 48 which says: “. . . there may be a debate on the general merits and principles of the Bill”. All right? That is the Standing Order I am asking you to stay within.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Merits.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: All right, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: And I'm not going to sit here and allow any Member to argue with me. I'm just reading the Standing Order based on what is in here.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: He is not holding any argument with you.

The Speaker: You hush.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Madam Speaker, you know, really, we are not holding any argument with you and you should not make people believe that we are, because—

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, please, let us not continue with the argument. Let the Second Elected Member continue his debate please. Thank you.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: We have a right, Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: I understand that.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: —under the Orders to give the merits, and that is what the Member is doing.

The Speaker: Would you please sit down and allow the Second Elected Member to continue?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Throw me out if you want!

The Speaker: I'm not going to throw you out. That's what you want me to do, but I'm not going to do it.

Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, the economy and the people are in really, really bad shape.

So, Madam Speaker, all informed commentators that were worth listening to were telling the world that what was to come in terms of the economic fallout, particularly in the United States of America, was going to be grave. They argued for about three months as to whether or not they were in recession in the United States of America.

In fact, history has always shown that if you simply look at the stock market you will oftentimes be misguided because markets tend to not react very quickly to certain changes and erosions in the fundamentals within an economy. So, Madam Speaker, there were those who simply looked at the Dow Jones Industrial Average and saw it going up to record highs and thought all was well and that the wave would continue forever.

In February of 2008, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and I moved a motion asking the Government to take a cold look again at where the country was. And not only at the budget, or some of the discreet items that we have in here (which we will argue whether or not it is enough money), [but] we wanted a wholesale look at where we were. Re-evaluate the projects and programmes; try to ensure that the priorities aligned with where the country needed to go, could afford to go, and re-evaluate precisely where the economy was and try to ensure how we matched up Government's position and policies. Once you look at things like duty rates, the continuation of a duty rate is a continuation of a specific policy.

Madam Speaker, the truth is that the Motion did not pass. But one would have thought that to ensure that we were not some 14 months later coming to the House to say that we are going to reduce rates on specific items—mainly construction materials and stamp duty from the 1 April 2009—that the Government would have accepted the Motion. The truth is that even if they had accepted the Motion and done nothing, at least that would have been a tacit and real indication that the Government recognised all was not well and they were willing to do something about it.

Madam Speaker, thus far, in the presentation of this important Bill at this critical time, we have not heard one iota from the Government about who was consulted on this. What sectors of the economy did they speak to? Who informed this decision that it was going to be reduced from 20 [per cent] to 15 [per cent]? What private sector participants gave them information which suggests that this would actually do what it is disguised to do (which is to supposedly stimulate the economy)?

Madam Speaker, I know that after I sit down we are going to hear some of the usual uninformed rhetoric. We will hear things such as, Well, if you reduce duties that means that people have to consume more. Well, has the Government ensured that people are having more access to capital to build? Are they ensuring that people's plans are getting through Planning so that they can actually do something in this country and not be held up, not have projects frustrated—in some instances, for months? Not have people unable to move into their house because 10 windows were three inches smaller than they should be?

Have they ensured that the people who were intended to benefit are going to receive this benefit? How many people in this country are going to import cement? How many consumers are going to import cement? Because, absolutely, Madam Speaker, this has—

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I hear mumblings about it is going to be sold.

Madam Speaker, you know what? I really hope and pray that the Members who are mumbling are really listening and recognising that their vote in February 2008 showed that they fundamentally did not get the point of economic performance and indicators!

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yes!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: And I say that with the greatest of respect. The greatest of respect! So, I don't why they are mumbling now and saying it is going to be sold. Sold to whom?

If people do not have access to capital to build, Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and Fourth Elected Member for George Town, how are they going to build? How are they going to build? How do we know they are going to purchase? How is it going to get passed on? What mechanism is there to pass on the 5 per cent reduction?

Again, who has been talked to? What systems have been put in place to ensure that after this is done, firstly, the duty concessions are going to be passed on because that is of crucial importance? Because if it is not going to get passed on all that is going to happen is that we are shifting the monies from the coffers of government to the merchants. That is all that would be happening. Consumers are not going to benefit.

Madam Speaker, I observed very carefully the body language in the House: After you asked the first time, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition rose. After you asked the second time, it was almost about to shut down, and I noted that the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town was about to rise.

Now, Madam Speaker, this needs explanation. We need to understand as the Legislative Assembly who has been consulted so that we arrive at the point where we say that codes numbers 25.11, 44.01, 44.11, 72.01, 73.01 are indeed the items that we need to be reducing at this point in time to ensure that we are going to have economic stimulus and the lives of people made better.

Madam Speaker, if we think about what is happening within the country, and about the fact that people are being laid off . . . We have companies that are closing or reducing staff. Some have left the jurisdiction. All of that creates less demand for construction. From what I can see, this is now domestic construction politics.

Madam Speaker, the gap between what we have been told so far and what we have been told is going to be the end result—which is economic stimulus—is so wide. How in the world should any of us as elected representative of the people even dare to prefer a vote without some form of explanation?

How do you get from simply reducing a number of tariff codes for these specific items—all of which are building materials—to saying, Oh yes, this is going to stimulate the economy. This action is going to cause people to jump up and down in the streets and they are going to go and build. We have so many of our constituents who have so much money they are sitting on, that they are just waiting to spend it because Cayman is the land of milk and honey. All we have are a bunch of rich people hanging waiting to spend their money. Rich Caymanians waiting to spend their money and now the Government has come and reduced stamp duty so they are going to buy land and build. So, that is going to stimulate the economy?

Madam Speaker, if the Government had come here and made a passionate plea to this House admitting that people are hurting and struggling to make ends meet . . . Social Services are turning people back saying they don't have money for rent assistance, they don't have money for food vouchers. That tells us that people are struggling and hurting. Any elected Member in here knows how much people are hurting because as elected Members we are a very good barometer.

We all know the numbers of people who are coming to our homes. People we never dreamt would come to us seeking assistance, finding themselves in trouble for basic necessities; people coming and saying, I don't know where to go. I don't know where to turn to. I don't know what to do.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Yep!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, on a daily basis we have new people coming to us, some of whom—this is the good one—do not even know where the Social Services Department in our district is! They have never been there. Never been there! Never been in this situation in their lives!

Madam Speaker, the Government can get up and say whatever they want behind me. I know that what I am saying is fact.

Madam Speaker, if the Government had come with discreet items that they thought were basic necessities of life and said, Here are some items where we believe we need to pass some savings on to our people because in tough times we have sat down with the retailers and asked and they have given us an undertaking that they will work very closely with the Portfolio of Finance, and they will pass these savings on and ensure with their managers if they see that certain items have gone up they will drop the portfolio a quick note . . . Come on, Madam Speaker, this is not the day of messenger pigeons. We can communicate. Communication is quite easy. Inform the Portfolio and say, Look, you may get some complaints, but X products have gone up in price. That is why that particular category is still at X price. This is not rocket science, Madam Speaker.

If there was a genuine attempt to help the people of this country, the Government would not be coming with this at the twelfth hour talking about reducing duties on building materials.

Building materials?

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I cannot take this Bill to West Bay to the people who come to me for desperate help and say [to them], Go eat some cement and lumber.

Madam Speaker, I hear the cries about playing politics, but this Bill should have been entitled the PPM Re-election Political Ploy Bill! Talk about playing politics.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, you see, there are certain fundamental differences with us in this House. Some of us who are only glad to be here because we believe that that means the Honourable McKeeva Bush is not going to be Leader of Government Business. And there are some of us who are here because we have given up our lives for our country.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Correct!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Given up our lives for our country.

I am talking this way because the Government has failed miserably. And what makes me even more irate is when Members who should know better—should know better!—are then going to have all this chatter.

Madam Speaker, whoever is here on 1 January 2010 (which is when this is scheduled to expire) will look back. This Bill is going to have absolutely no affect. This is going to be an unequivocal failure. This is not going to stimulate the economy.

What is going to stimulate the economy is people who believe and who have the confidence that this country is going somewhere and is not a freight train heading down the track and going off the edge of a cliff. That is what is going to stimulate this economy.

I am here to say that I get around this country as much as these other Members do. I speak to as many people as they do. And I can say that the lack of confidence in the economy, the lack of confidence in the Planning Department and in the Planning processes, and how they just hold people up unnecessarily—so unfriendly, making people feel as if they are doing them a favour—that the fundamental problems which have plagued this country for years have not been dealt with.

But we have had some good times. If you look over the last decade or two we have had some good times, and it has masked a lot of the fundamental issues. There are people right now who tell me that until they have some confidence that processes are going to be improved and the prospects of this economy are greatly improved they are not going to do anything. I can think of two people right now. One, who would be looking to do a major office building, said that the plans are off. And the plans were off before the global financial crisis. That just sealed the deal for right now. They are now just waiting and seeing precisely how that will continue to play out.

Madam Speaker, I was hoping that the Government would say that they had sat down with people, not only within these industries but with people generally, especially developers who can make a big impact. If you have a developer who is going to build an office building or an apartment block, that has a really big impact in terms of employment, et cetera. Housing does as well, but as we know that is a single site much smaller in scale. Important, but smaller in scale in the scheme of things.

So, if the Government had come and presented this and said, Here are the consultative meetings we have had, here is what we did, here is what we know. After hearing that this is the way we were thinking about going, people were encouraged and it seems as though they are going to move forward.

Madam Speaker, there are people in this country whose appetite is so whet to hear something from the Government. There are people who have said that if they at least called some form of cross-sector meeting that they could get invited to and get some glimpse, view, or ray of hope, perhaps they would put some of their plans back on the drawing board.

Just this week I was speaking to a constituent. He is an honest man, so I can quote him. He has been battling some 24 months trying to get a project off the ground. Twenty-four months!

An Hon. Member: Whoa!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, he made it quite clear that he has reached the end of the line.

On the 20th day of March 2009—61 days from the general election—the Government comes to the Legislative Assembly and proposes that from 1 April 2009 until 1 January 2010 they are going to reduce by 5 per cent the rates on certain building materials.

Madam Speaker, I have not heard anything from the Government in terms of their ongoing projects. I hope this means that they have also negotiated with the contractors so they will see some reduction in the price of materials that have not been procured as yet for those contracts for the schools and government offices.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh yes.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: If there is going to be a savings, some of those contractors are big enough and have the wherewithal to bring in materials and secure some of these savings, which should then be passed on to Government. I mean, that would be useful information for the House. Have those discussions been had? Have any commitments been given? In my opinion, this could have been a very neat exercise here today if the Government had actually done the work necessary to ensure and secure revitalisation of the economy.

Madam Speaker, this is why I brought the Motion up. Let us tie the Motion directly to this Bill. Had the Motion that we moved in February been taken on board, and had the Government at that time charged the Portfolio of Finance to go far, near, broad, deep and wide, run the gamut of this country, consult, find out, investigate what is happening with people, why projects are being held up, who is sitting on projects, who is not going to build, they could have also dealt with some of the other things, such as, people finding it difficult to stay in homes, et cetera.

Another novel idea would have been how we are going to secure capital to get more people into homes, and then come with a well established case to say, Look, for the last 13 months here is what we found, here is what we believe can reasonably be expected to happen once we have passed this piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, the biggest fallacy and the most ignorant of positions is to simply assume that if you reduce a consumption tax it means people are going to spend more; if you reduce a consumption tax it automatically means that people are going to consume more. This Government cannot show any empirical evidence to show that. They can come and beg and plead in the House and hope that the public hears and will say, Oh yes, that sounds kind of commonsensical that if you reduce the duties on these building materials people will automatically buy more of it.

Madam Speaker, when you have an economic downturn, when people are struggling to make ends meet, when people are being laid off jobs, when there is a clear uncertainty in the air and people do not know what to do, these types of stimuli packages meet with very little success. In fact, any of them who will admit it would tell the House that 60 days before the election is a most uncertain time for most developers and businesses. In every country this is a global phenomenon. During an electoral process people will usually stand pat and wait for the results of the elections. They will then know who the government is and that gives an indicator of what people will do in terms of their queue.

It has been very clear to the participants in this economy and very clear to those outside the economy that, certainly, if the PPM are returned to office the economic prospects of this country are non-existent, which is basically saying they are dead.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Dead!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: You see, Madam Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Prophet of doom!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: A prophet of doom—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member, please do not debate across the Floor. Debate the item before you.

An Hon. Member: They are on that side. Quiet them!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess sometimes the only thing that will help is about 18 muzzles.

You can smile, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the one thing that I will not be muzzled on is what I do not fundamentally . . . when I really see something that I know in my heart of hearts is bad and it is not going to work.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You go back to sleep. You were all right until you woke up.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Speaking of sleep, certainly the PPM seems to be trying to awaken from the slumber they have been in. We tried, we hollered, we moved a motion, we did what an Opposition ought to do—try. But, Madam Speaker, we were not successful.

Madam Speaker, let us go back to the point. Anyone on the Government bench who does not realise that this is the stand-pat time for people, that this is the time when developers are waiting to see what happens on May 20 . . . even having knowledge of this Bill is not going to help this country if the PPM Members are returned.

They can reduce this to zero, but if people do not have confidence, if people do not see that there is reasonable prospect to make money, a return on their investment, if developers of apartment buildings and office buildings see that (and we are going to deal with this in a couple of minutes) the financial services industry has been ignored as much as the Opposition has been ignored, and that they are continuing to shrink and their business prospects have been compromised because of legislation coming to this House two years after it has been requested, and they keep hearing about businesses downsizing, why would they develop? Who are they going to rent to? Who are they going to sell the properties to?

Madam Speaker, we said to the Government from 2005 (and I remember using this phrase and almost running into trouble at the time), do not see the post-Ivan spending as bedrock economic activity. I remember calling it fool's gold. This Government and this country have skated for the last four years. The only reason this Cayman Islands economy was not in worse shape, and not in the shape it is currently in probably from about 24 months ago, was because of Ivan rebuilding.

That Ivan rebuilding created and sustained . . . There was no real new confidence in the economy. There was no real provable fundamental confidence in the prospects of the country. We have heard so many plans come and go. They said they were going east. There was a hotel that was going to be built in East End.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Go East has gone south!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: The Go East is gone!

And so, Madam Speaker, when we start to think clearly about all that has transpired over the last 48 months, whilst the Government has pulled a very cute political ploy, I would have advised them to throw in some stuff that ordinary people need to survive on a day to day basis. That might have helped them a little bit.

Madam Speaker, they do not care about what is going on in the country because we are only here, now, today, with a meeting of Finance Committee before us. We know that critical departments, like Children and Family Services, have been waiting for months to get additional money to help people who are really finding it difficult. The one thing that is hidden in this economy—and it is going to become more evident over the next 12 months . . .

Check the record of the Member who said “prophet of doom and gloom.”

Let us give another prediction. The other thing that is happening—and we have gotten massive complaints over the last four to six weeks in this vein—is that a lot of people's time on jobs is being cut. So, when the Department of Employment Relations went Island-wide and registered hundreds of people (in all fairness, some were looking for a new job, the vast majority were out of work), the one thing that has really not come completely to the surface yet is the number of Caymanians whose work hours have been cut. These are hourly wage earners.

If their time is cut, how is it that they are going to build on that room they might need to build? How is it that that single mother who needs to build on an additional room, because she and her three children are all cramped into a little one-bedroom place that she was lucky enough to get, going to do it if her time at her job has been cut?

Madam Speaker, the other thing we would have loved to have heard was for Government to say they also had a deep understanding of what is happening in the labour market and that they felt confident that this Bill would have some prospect of real economic benefit to the country.

Madam Speaker, they are going to get up behind me and say, Shame on the Second Elected Member for West Bay, because he should know that if you reduce the price of something then people can buy more.

Well, you know, that is a real amateur argument to make because the truth is that when it comes to building people do not decide, Oh well, tomorrow the price is reduced, I can simply build another house or another set of apartments; I can simply erect an office building. Madam Speaker, it does not work that way. Not in this sector.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Not on the kindest of mornings.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Not even on the kindest of mornings, evenings, or noon times does it work that way!

Then, they are going to start talking about reducing stamp duty and how all of this is going to work—

The Speaker: We have not gotten to the Stamp Duty Bill as yet.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Oh, I am sorry.

The Speaker: Can we stick with the Customs? Thank you darling.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Oh, I am sorry, Madam Speaker.

I hope, though, that in the future what Government would do is . . . I think there is a provision for us to bring omnibus legislation when it is all related so we could debate it all at once.

The Speaker: When it happens.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: But that's another cue we will give. But come 21 May, those are the sensible things that will happen in this Legislative Assembly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh-oh!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay, is this a convenient time? because I would like to take the luncheon suspension at this time.

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Going for lunch already?

The Speaker: Is it a convenient point for you?

Would you answer me on the microphone so that I can hear what you are saying?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Proceedings will be suspended until 2.00.

Proceedings suspended at 12.40 pm

Proceedings resumed at 2.21 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay continuing his debate.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Before we took the luncheon break I had provided a brief historical perspective as to how we arrived at this position and what the Opposition has sought to do to assist the process over the last couple of years. We will continue to be as helpful as we can be. That is something that we take seriously.

Madam Speaker, obviously there are some actions that governments have tried over the years in regard to stimulating economic activity. One that has been commonly used has been the reduction in land transfer taxes, stamp duties. That has usually been met with a flurry of activity when that happens, particularly close to the date of expiration of such reductions.

As it relates to the temporary reduction of these various duties under the Customs (Tariff) Law to principally surround building materials, we believe that this is too little too late. We also believe that given all of the other economic conditions that prevail the probability is that this will not have the outcome that the Government is seeking. We must look at all things within the context in which matters arise and the circumstances in which we operate.

If you look at the global conditions and the impact that they have already started to have on our local economy, it is our view that there is very little prospect that these amendments—proposed one day before the House is set to be dissolved as a last gasp attempt—will be seen as doing something. In these sorts of times we need to have well thought-out and considered approaches.

In my humble submission, this is almost as desperate as the deadlines that I saw on the CaymanNewsService website a few days ago where the reporter was proffering that I, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, was being invited across the Floor. It all seems to be coming clearly into focus now as to the desperation of the Government to secure a majority on 20 May. They obviously feel very confident that they do not have the numbers to secure a majority so you see these sorts of plays in the press.

Then you see these sorts of measures hurriedly being brought to the House at the last minute. You see a plethora of legislation that relates to the financial services industry being brought at the last minute. Education Bill being brought at the last minute.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh yes.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Finance Committee, last minute. It seems like everything is last minute, last ditch attempts.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, I heard the Minister say that I was saying nothing but—

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member, would you continue your debate on the Bill and not across the Floor, please?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you for your sterling guidance, Madam Speaker.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I shall ignore them. I know that, too, is a strategy to distract.

Yes, desperation.

But, Madam Speaker, I thank you. You always treat me that way, so . . . thank you.

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, the Bill is a desperate, desperate, desperate attempt. I know that the Government is going to come behind me with all guns blazing. They will say all sorts of bombastic things, things like, Well, what else could we do?

They have the entire Civil Service at their disposal. They have the entire Portfolio of Finance at their disposal. Right down to trying to assist us to print simple documents a few months ago . . . they did not offer any assistance to the Opposition. I hope they will resist the normal temptation, which is, to get up and say, Well, the Opposition does not agree with this, what do they propose?

They very well know that in our democracy, which is still so immature, that we do not have a properly funded and organised Opposition as most other countries do. But, Madam Speaker, contrary to what the Minister of Education proffers—that I think like them—I thought this Government would have offered improvements in maturing democracy. But that too fell off the train somewhere in June 2005, if not before.

So, Madam Speaker, those are the sorts of very important things that the new administration after May 20th is going to need to turn its mind to. The uplifting of this country, the uplifting of institutions (important institutions, democratic institutions) in this country has seen no improvement under the PPM. They still see it as winner-take-all and you do not seek to advance, heighten, and uplift democracy and how the country ought to be managed from an administrative standpoint as it relates to us as legislators. Their thinking is as bankrupt and backward as it has ever been in the country in that vein, Madam Speaker. So, I am not surprised that we also have this Bill.

They will also get up and say that with me being a qualified accountant, I should know that once they reduce these duties that there must be an increase in economic activity. Unless they are able to give us evidence to the contrary, everything that we have seen and heard indicates that people in large measure (people in general) are in a holding pattern. Many people have shelved and put projects on the backburner. We still do not know what happened to the cornerstone of the Go East Initiative, which was supposed to have been the hotel in East End, the Mandarin, which I understand is one of the top line hotels, very high end.

Madam Speaker, I certainly hope that when we hear from the Government they are going to give some assurance to the House that with the passage of this Bill (and they have the numbers so I presume it will pass) any savings derived by contractors who are engaged to complete the large capital projects, like the schools, and the government administration building, will indeed be passed on by those contractors to the Government.

I am still at a loss as to why the Government would have chosen to bring this and not, at a minimum, also bring some sort of reduction to duty as it relates to people's everyday living, that could really assist people who are desperately struggling in our communities. Our constituents are struggling. There is absolutely, positively no doubt about that.

Madam Speaker, the only measure I have seen that has done that, was the rebate on the fuel surcharge as it relates to CUC. But we know how that story went as well. I can recall either one or two of the Ministers chiding me at one of their press conferences saying for me to suggest that was amateur and obviously meant that I did not understand how the system worked. So it could not work. Yet, lo and behold, some weeks later that, too, was dressed up red and called a PPM initiative.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh yes, they are good at that!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, this Bill provides no hope, little prospect for economic stimulation, and is a sure and certain sign of desperation and really, in my view, grasping at straws.

It will be interesting to hear precisely what the Government has to say. Thus far, the mover has told us what the Bill says in plain English, but not what the projections are. Certainly, we would hope that in addition to offering this Bill, underpinning it would be some form of projections based on data that Government has gathered from the consultations that they should have conducted to have some semblance of an idea as to what this stimuli would mean in real dollar terms.

We look forward to hearing the details and all of the proof. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to make my contribution to the Customs Tariff (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009.

So far the Opposition has offered only confusion in their debate. It is certainly not clear what direction the Leader of the Opposition wished to go in when he got up to make his brief remarks. And the Second Elected Member for West Bay introduced much more confusion to the debate because he got up and he started to criticise the Bill before the House and talked at some length as to why it was going to fail, and about sometime in January 2010 we would all be suggesting or concluding that in fact this was one great failure.

Madam Speaker, I do not know what the Second Elected Member for West Bay had to eat for lunch, but he made a complete 360. Upon resuming the proceedings following lunch, he started off by talking about how this level of stimulus package had been offered by previous administrations whenever there were concerns with respect to the economy, and how it had created a flurry of activity, particularly towards the expiration of the incentive.

Then, Madam Speaker, he just concluded his debate by going in another circle and coming completely back to his original position, which was, that it was going to fail.

Madam Speaker, sometimes I think we give that Member more credit than he deserves with respect to what his understanding is of what makes an economy work. He ought to know, when he makes statements like, "how is the Government going to ensure that the incentives being put in place now are going to be passed on to the ultimate consumers", that market forces dictate what happens with respect to the prices.

And, Madam Speaker, we are certain because other governments faced with this situation that have put similar measures in place have understood that when this type of incentive package is put in the marketplace, the suppliers who are on Island understand that if it is not passed on to the consumers, if the consumers are not able to benefit from it, that it would simply frustrate the intention of the incentive and there would not be any additional volume for them to make business from. It is in the suppliers' interest to ensure that the benefit is passed on to the consumers; otherwise it would be the suppliers who will in the end not benefit from it.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay also asked the question as to how our people are going to benefit from cement; and how is the resulting reduction in the cost of cement and other building materials going to benefit our people. Madam Speaker, I do not understand why that question would have been asked because the benefits to our people are obvious. If the cost of building materials goes down, it makes the cost of building cheaper and it gives an opportunity and makes it easier for Caymanians, particularly Caymanians who are perhaps building a home for the first time, to take advantage of those opportunities.

The Government has been criticised on a number of fronts in relation to this, and we have had all sorts of comments made with respect to the economy. In one instance the Opposition is taking the view that the challenges that the Cayman Islands economy currently face are unique to our country, and that somehow they have completely disregarded the global economic crisis, and they do not seem to link that to the situation in Cayman.

Of course, when it is convenient for them to do so, they are more than happy to do so. They make all sorts of comments about the Government's spending plan and the capital development plan and how we should not have embarked upon this robust capital development plan. Madam Speaker, this Government makes no apologies for the capital development plan and programme.

This country has suffered from a neglect of our infrastructure for at least 20 years. So, when we hear those types of comments coming from the Opposition, I hope that the people of this country are listening. I hope that the people of West Bay are listening. Madam Speaker, all of those projects—and we can examine them one by one if you wish. I will not go through all of them, but I will hit some of the highlights.

Let us start with the West Bay Bypass: What would have happened if this Government had not taken the bull by the horns and said we have to do this, and do it now? People simply spent too much time to get to work in the morning and back home after work. Look at the impact it had on the tourism industry. The Seven Mile Beach area is the tourism Mecca of the country. Look at the delays getting to and from the airport; of people going to their homes in West Bay, going to work in the morning. Look at the economic impact that level of congestion had.

We are criticised for it, but we make no apologies because we knew it was the right thing to do, and we did it because it was in the best interest of the country. And we did it even in the face of comments from developers of the Ritz Carlton that they were not expecting to have to invest in their portion of it because they had been told that they did not have to build that road for 10 years.

That was what we were facing, Madam Speaker. But we sat down and negotiated with them.

We worked it out and they paid for their portion of the road. The road was built, and now the people of West Bay and the tourism industry are reaping the benefits of that.

What would have happened in this country if we had not started the East/West Arterial? When you consider the amount of time the people of Bodden Town, East End and North Side had to spend in traffic every single morning of their lives before they could even reach their workplace. We dealt with that. And, yes, that is the first phase of the East/West Arterial. A second and third phase will come. It has to be phased, and we had to start it because the level of congestion on our roads was stifling our country and economy, and was going to bring this economy to its knees if we had not addressed it.

They criticise us for educational development programmes. I am saying all of this because they claim that we would not need to have this type of stimulus in place if only we had not spent money on anything and we have all this money available to use on various programmes and other projects and to help bridge the gap during these difficult times.

Madam Speaker, again, education is a subject that was neglected in this country for so many years. So many years! It was this Government that took the bull by the horns and addressed the educational needs of this country. We understand as a Government that education is the key to our future.

I take my hat off to our Minister of Education who has spearheaded that. He has our full support, and he knows that. The country is certainly aware that we have taken this very, very seriously. It was a campaign promise and a promise that we are delivering on.

Madam Speaker, we upgraded all of our health facilities in the districts. We built post offices. We built a post office in West Bay, or I should say we upgraded the post office in West Bay. These are all essential services, and services that the public demands. These projects cannot be done without funding.

Look at the level of investment we had to make in Hurricane Ivan recovery efforts. Look at the number of homes rebuilt in each of our districts. It had to be done. It could not be delayed. Can you imagine if that kind of investment had not been made? And we are doing the same thing now in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman in respect to Hurricane Paloma. The Government does not have the luxury of sitting back and saying, Well, you know what? This global economic crisis is perhaps not going to turn around and we are not going to return to where we were before until 2012. So, we are just going to have to wait until then before we can do anything meaningful in terms of infrastructure and catering to the needs of the country.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay made other comments with respect to this Bill and talked about the impact that it would have on developers and how developers were sitting back waiting to see what was going to happen on 20 May, and that this Bill was really not going to make any difference. Perhaps he is right in relation to developers sitting back at this time and waiting until 20 May. Perhaps he is. And perhaps, Madam Speaker, they are waiting to see whether this country is going to return to that era where a developer would come into the country, have an interest in a development, and have to sit in a room with a politician who is asking for his 5 per cent, 10 per cent, or 15 per cent before he can get approval.

Madam Speaker, let me tell you, when this Government took office in May 2005, we had no end to the number of investment interests and developers who came to us and spoke to us about this issue and about how pleased they were to have this level of integrity sitting in public offices and that they were now comfortable in investing in this country again. So, they do not need to sit down and talk to us about 20 May and about developers waiting until then to decide on what they are going to do.

Perhaps they are, as I said, because they do not want to go back to that era of our past. And we are not going back there, Madam Speaker.

The Opposition, in their debate on this Bill, Madam Speaker—and I have to address this as well, because I do not understand what the objection is to a Bill of this nature, a Bill which is obviously going to assist the people of this country and give them the opportunity to build their houses and their businesses cheaper than they were able to before.

Is it one of timing? Because the Second Elected Member for West Bay mentioned that. But you see, Madam Speaker, again, perhaps he does not understand. This level of incentive is, in fact, all about timing. It is about timing because if you do it at the wrong time, the country will lose revenue. So the timing must be right. It must be right! And now is the time because we understand the challenges that are ahead. If we had introduced this prematurely, the country would have lost revenue, of course. It would not have had the level of impact it will have now.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay mentioned the Go East initiative and that the Government should have done more on that to stimulate more activity, et cetera. He mentioned what he termed the poster child, so to speak, the project that would essentially brand the Go East Initiative which he has identified as the Mandarin Oriental Development. All that says to me is that the Second Elected Member for West Bay simply does not understand the Go East Initiative. I do not know why that is the case, perhaps he has not read the policy document. Perhaps he was not even paying attention just this morning when I read that statement in the Legislative Assembly with respect to the update on the Coe-Wood Public Beach.

I took the time during that statement to again outline the key objectives of the Go East Initiative. And while the initiative is there to accommodate and facilitate physical development, the focus of the Go East Initiative is about the development of our people. We have made that clear from the beginning. We said that there is talent in the eastern districts, whether they are fishermen, tour operators, artisans. There are crafts, and artisans, and talent in those eastern districts that were, up until this point, hidden. We needed an initiative that would give those individuals the opportunity to benefit from the tourism industry and get their share of the economic pie from the tourism industry.

Madam Speaker, we have made available the agencies that will assist with this. We have encouraged the people to go to the Investment Bureau if they have an idea with respect to tourism. And the Investment Bureau will help them develop a business plan. Once there is a feasible business plan, that triggers the next move, which is to the Cayman Islands Development Bank to secure the funding for that business. All along the way, the Department of Tourism is there to assist them with the advertising and marketing plans.

Madam Speaker, I explained all of this more than once. It is in the policy document. I went over a number of examples this morning—at least five physical projects, small businesses in the Bodden Town district that have developed since we launched this initiative. So they sit down there and start with their rhetoric about the Go East Initiative is going south.

You see, Madam Speaker, they do not like it because it is a positive initiative. They do not like it because it is an achievement of this Government. They do not like it because the people of the eastern districts are going to benefit from it. And they don't like it because the fact that the people will benefit from it is not in their interest at this time. But, Madam Speaker, it is an initiative that this Government is certainly very, very proud of and it is one that we are going to continue to follow through on and achieve a lot for the people of Bodden Town, East End and North Side.

In concluding my remarks on this Bill, I say again that it is not clear to me because the Opposition seems to be completely confused in debating this Bill so far. It is not clear to me how they are ultimately going to vote on this when we get to the vote. I heard the Second Elected Member for West Bay saying, Well, you know, the Government is going to get it through anyway because the numbers are on their side. What that says to me is that the Opposition intends to vote against this.

How can they, Madam Speaker, in good conscience, vote against a Bill like that? A bill that is going to give the people of this country the opportunity to build houses, businesses, and to make life easier, for them to build houses and businesses cheaper than they could before. How can a Member of this House in good conscience vote against this? They have to be accountable to the people.

If they want to vote against it, tell them to come and vote against it. But they are right on one thing: the Government has the numbers on this side to pass it, and so it will.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause].

Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, it is a pity that the Second Elected Member for West Bay, my good friend, has left the Chamber. But I am not at all surprised by his approach to this particular Bill because his political master is back in this House today and I know some reassuring was necessary on his part.

Madam Speaker, he is still a good man, and one that with the right influence and in the right company will still do wonderful things for this country.

Madam Speaker, this Bill, the Customs Tariff (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009, is part of a package which this Government is bringing to this House at this time in an effort to stimulate development, construction activity in the country in these difficult times.

As some of my colleagues who spoke before me have pointed out, it is convenient for the Opposition to ignore the fact that the world is in the worst economic condition it has been in since the Great Depression of the 1930s. While in Cayman, thus far, the impact of it is nowhere near as serious as it is in most other places, there is no question that this country has felt and is feeling the adverse impact of that all around—from the impact on Government revenues to the loss of jobs, in some instances, on the part of some of our people.

Madam Speaker, the number of private sector development projects, construction that has been halted or not proceeded with is staggering. We have had as recently as last week, correspondence from one of the major construction companies who essentially pleaded with Government to press on with some of its capital projects which we have had to take the hard decision not to go ahead with. They tell us that many of their major projects, most of them, are coming to an end in the next few months. They are going to have to lay off construction workers, many of whom are Caymanian.

Unless the Opposition is living in a different Cayman than the Government is, every day we are met as representatives by people coming to us, particularly in the field of construction, saying they are having difficulty getting employment as construction workers. When people cannot work they have no income. They cannot pay their rent. They cannot pay their mortgage. They cannot spend money in the local economy. This is basic stuff.

Madam Speaker, we are not for one moment suggesting that this is some magic bullet that is going to fix everything and create huge energy and excitement. In the present global condition, that is unlikely. But what we believe it will do, for those people who do have access to money, the combination of cheap money or access to money which they already have, plus reduced rates in terms of import duties on construction material, together with reduced stamp duty on the purchase of property (which is all part of that overall package) will have . . . and, Madam Speaker, I should say . . . No I will leave that for the next Bill. I will get in trouble, so I will not go ahead with what I was about to say.

The combination of those things plus some others (which will be debated in this House before the end of today, God willing) will have the effect of stimulating some real estate development construction activity. That is what this is all about.

The reality is that with the tax structure we have in Cayman, the fact is, because Government has to rely so heavily on inward investment, the tools Government has (whichever government it is) are very limited to be able to do anything in the local market. Very, very limited.

Madam Speaker, in relation to foodstuffs, there is virtually no duty on any foodstuff now because successive governments have taken this bit off and that bit off. It is only really what I may call luxury foods which attract any duty at all. So, in terms of what government can do to stimulate economic activity, it is very, very limited.

Looking more broadly, there are things which can be done and which we are doing to make the overall environment for business in Cayman friendlier, more attractive. Things like improvements in relation to the immigration regime. Those are all part of an overall approach to what we do. But to make things better, to bolster the economy, to prevent wide scale unemployment, as is the case in many other places, including the United States—some States are now in double digit unemployment numbers—we have nothing like that at the moment in Cayman.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay, my good friend, said it is too little too late. I have just dealt with the too little, but too late for May 20th? Madam Speaker, the world does not come to an end on May 20th, I do not believe. But that is perhaps indicative of the thinking of the Opposition. It is all about the election.

In everything we have done, Madam Speaker, this Government . . . and we get criticism from it, even from our closest supporters sometimes—you all haven't thought enough about the election in what you were doing. Madam Speaker, that has never been our approach.

If you read the manifesto of the PPM, there is no way that any government with all the resources in the world could achieve all of that in one term. But it was never intended that that document was a document for one term. This Government is building for the future, for the next generation and the ones to come after that. The institutions we have sought to either improve upon or to establish are about creating a better Cayman, a more vibrant Cayman, a more democratic Cayman—even to our own detriment.

The Second Elected Member for West Bay says “you’ve done nothing to improve democratic institutions.” Madam Speaker, I know he knows better.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: We have spent so much time and effort, and in many cases (because we are the Government) it serves to our detriment, but we believe that is the right thing to do—whether it is weekly press briefings, so that we can be quizzed and criticised, even press briefings to which for a long time they were sending one of their candidates to ask us questions under the guise that he was a journalist. Even that we subjected ourselves to because we believe that openness and transparency and accountability are part of building the foundation of this country as a young, progressive democracy.

Madam Speaker, the Freedom of Information Law . . . the Government is being assailed by requests for information. And by and large everybody seems to give it credit and full marks that the information is being given.

So, I do not think we should pay too much attention to those. I really did not understand those remarks in the context of this debate anyhow, Madam Speaker. But as they were raised, I thought I would mention them. I will not spend a great deal of time on them because whatever people may think about this Government and its members, no one seriously says that we have not improved democratic institutions, accountability, transparency, openness, fairness, due process, all things, Madam Speaker, which were missing in large part from the last administration.

Madam Speaker, too late? I do not think that anyone who is building a house, proposing to build a commercial building, or doing any kind of development for which construction material is required will regard this Bill, which reduces import duty on a range of construction material, as unnecessary, too late.

Madam Speaker, I am a realist. Perhaps sometimes one of the greatest criticisms of me is that I speak too frankly and I do not soften it, and I am not as diplomatic and wishy/washy as some might think I should be. But I believe firmly in the democratic process. If it is the will of the people that this Government should be ushered out, so be it. God willing, we will all wake up the next day, brush ourselves off and get on with our lives. But the good ship Cayman will continue, and whether or not the next captain and crew are up to the job it will continue.

So, Madam Speaker, we do not think about provisions such as this as being too late, too little. It will all contribute to the overall benefit of Cayman in these most difficult of times.

Madam Speaker, the Second Elected Member for West Bay is right when he said he knew that I would come and ask where their plan is. But it is not the duty, he says, of the Opposition to say what they would do differently. Madam Speaker, two months before the election they ought not to be positioning themselves as the Opposition—although they are eminently qualified for that job. They ought to be positioning themselves as the government-in-waiting. And I, as someone who has the right to vote, want to know what the plan of the government-in-waiting is!

If I am being asked to vote for you, and not to vote for the Government that is there, whose plan I know—I might not agree with all of it, but I know what it is. They have written it down, articulated it, defend it and get criticised for it. I know what it is. But what would the Opposition do differently? Where is their stimulus plan, as he called it? We do not elevate these provisions to being the stimulus plan; nothing so grand, as far as we are concerned. It is a measure. It is a measure to improve the opportunities and the desirability of pushing ahead with construction and development in these difficult times. That is what it is.

What is it, exactly, that the Opposition would do? In fact, not even exactly—broadly. What is it that the Opposition will do (assuming they take office after the general elections) to change the course of the country to improve the economic fortune of the country?

Madam Speaker, for almost four years they have stood over there, and from every platform or pulpit that they could get access to, and beaten down virtually every proposal, measure, policy and programme that this Government has put forward. He talked about bankrupt? Madam Speaker, the country has been waiting for nigh onto four years to hear what it is that they would do that would be different in any respect, not just in relation to the economy—which is critical now—but in education (we just went through that), in health care, in tourism. What is it that they would do that is different? We are still waiting.

I suspect, Madam Speaker, that we will be waiting the night before election as we wait now. And when they get into office—if they get into office—they will be running around like chickens with their heads chopped off asking their handlers from somewhere else, What do we do about this now?

Madam Speaker, these are the most serious of times. These are times that the Opposition ought to be reaching its hand out to the Government if they have any ideas, saying, This is what we think should be done, can be done to improve the prospect of Cayman riding out this economic tsunami without truly dire consequences. But, Madam Speaker, nothing. Nothing! Lots of loud thunder, but very little rain.

Madam Speaker, these are not the times for the country to take chances on a Government led by the old and tired supported by the inexperienced and naïve. These are times when a steady hand, an experienced hand at the helm is what this country needs to guide it through the rough waters of the next year or two years to come.

So, Madam Speaker, I do hope that for all the noise, for all the sound and fury that has ensued from the other side in relation to this Bill ( which all of us quite frankly thought would be uncontroversial) that they will not purely on the basis of political expediency vote against a proposal which is going to reduce the cost of lumber, steel, construction material in the hands of our own people; and, that they are [not] going to insist that our people, the men and women of these Islands, as well as those who we hope will come to develop, should pay more for construction material, should be charged more to build their homes, commercial buildings and otherwise.

Let there be no doubt about it, if the Opposition votes against this Bill (because they cannot vote it down), that is what they are doing. If they vote against this Bill they are insisting that instead of paying 15 per cent duty on some construction materials, the people should continue to be required to pay 20 per cent, and in other instances they are insisting that instead of paying merely 10 per cent for some material, they should be paying 15 per cent.

Madam Speaker, if they vote against this Bill they give the lie to their position that they are about making life easier, making life better, assisting the people of these Islands. It could only be spite or political expediency that would cause any Member of this House to insist that our people pay more for critical things they need that would require them to go against a Government which tries to make things easier for its people, which tries to stimulate development and construction activity in a time such as this. It would be heartless. It would be callous of them to take that position.

Madam Speaker, I wait with bated breath to see when the roll is called how each Member of the Opposition votes on this matter. I thank you for the opportunity to offer this brief contribution to what is a short but very important Bill.

Stamp Duty (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Stamp Duty (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I beg to move the Second Reading of a Bill shortly entitled, the Stamp Duty (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the Bill that is now before this honourable House amends the Stamp Duty Law (2007 Revision), that is, the present Law. It seeks to amend it to temporarily reduce the rates of stamp duty in respect of the conveyance or transfer of certain immovable property.

This Bill is an integral part of the Government's strategy to stimulate the economy and is to be considered in conjunction with the reductions in certain import duty rates on building materials, as we just debated.

The Stamp Duty (Amendment) (Temporary Provisions) Bill now before this House amends the Schedule to the principal Law under the heading captioned "Conveyance or Transfer of immovable property". It does so as follows:

The rate of stamp duty for properties located in certain corridors of the Island in item (1) (and item (1) refers to the area along Seven Mile Beach and certain parts of George Town) where the current stamp duty rate payable by both Caymanians and non-Caymanians is 7.5 per cent, the Bill now before the House proposes to reduce that rate of 7.5 per cent down to 5 per cent. So, both Caymanians and non-Caymanians (if the Bill is passed) will pay stamp duty at a rate of 5 per cent in those particular areas.

The Bill goes on to say that the rate of stamp duty for Caymanians in areas other than what I just said, other than the Seven Mile Beach area and certain parts of George Town, presently those areas attract a 4 per cent rate of duty for Caymanians. The proposal in the Bill is to reduce this 4 per cent stamp duty rate for Caymanians to 3 per cent.

Finally, the stamp duty rate for non-Caymanians in areas excluding the Seven Mile Beach area and certain parts of George Town is currently 6 per cent. The proposal in the Bill is to reduce that to 5 per cent.

Madam Speaker, the proposal in the Bill is that the changes come into force on 1 April 2009 and will cease to have effect on 30 September 2009. Therefore, unless a similar piece of legislation is brought at a later stage, from 1 October 2009 onward the rates will revert to those rates specified currently in the Stamp Duty Law (2007 Revision).

Madam Speaker, the stamp duty reductions in the Bill have the support of the Cayman Islands Real Estate Brokers Association (CIREBA). For the benefit of this honourable House, the Government Ministers (and I was a part of that meeting as well) did meet with certain major real estate agents to discuss the proposals contained in the Bill. These reductions have the support of the Cayman Islands Real Estate Brokers Association.

Madam Speaker, I should also say that CIREBA will assist the intentions in this Bill by also offering a 20 per cent rebate of the commission that they, as real estate agents, earn on property sales to the buyers of properties. They have advanced the argument that it is important to bring the buyers to the table. And in order to bring buyers to the table it is important to offer them some incentive. So a rebate of commission from the real estate brokers themselves to the buyers was deemed to be an attractive incentive to stimulate real estate activity in the market.

Madam Speaker, with those few words, plus an additional comment, that the concession for first time Caymanian property owners . . . previously, the highest rate of duty was 4 per cent. Of course, that would now decrease to 3 per cent if this Bill is passed.

Madam Speaker, the Brac stamp duty concession remains unaffected and in place. It is not affected adversely in any way by this Bill.

I therefore seek Members' support for the passage of this Bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise on this side to offer our support as it relates to the proposed amendments contained in the Bill now before this House, dealing with stamp duty reduction. I would like to offer a few short comments in that regard.

We fully concur with and are cognizant of the reason and justification of the 2.5 per cent reduction as it relates to the West Bay area set out in the Schedule. However, we would all quickly recognise that that area of Cayman is the high-end area, and it would not actually directly affect the majority or any significant percentage of Caymanians as it stands, in that that is for the most part the beach area and the gated community area.

Obviously, we recognise that there are possible spin-offs. Certainly the real estate agents would have a vested interest in any advice that they gave. Obviously, with the stamp duty being reduced one would hope that it would stimulate or increase the turnover of the transfers which would enhance or augment their commission.

Madam Speaker, we also took note and would like to briefly comment on the other attempt with the reductions as it relates to the transferee, if it were a Caymanian, and the consideration that would be applicable in the other case, that case being a non-Caymanian. Previously, there was a 2 per cent variance between the two. We note that with this amendment, for whatever reason the variance now is only 1 per cent. We wondered if that was in the best interest in the balance of probabilities to change the variation if we were attempting to assist the Caymanian prospective purchaser of property.

In fact, Madam Speaker, we on the Opposition would ask the Government if before taking the vote they would be so minded to look in particular as it relates to the Caymanian and carve out a bigger niche insofar as it relates to the duration of this period that is proposed, to make it a 12 month period for the Caymanian and consider whether within this framework of the current economic meltdown it would not be in the interest of all to not charge any consideration as far as it relates to the Caymanian. We are not just saying that for the sake of saying it. We are cognisant that although the full impact has not hit, as the Honourable Minister of Education (I believe) mentioned in his contribution, the world stage and meltdown has not fully impacted here, and there is probably worse to come even over the six or nine month period.

There is a good side to that in that the banks and loans and access to available capital is perhaps the best it has been in a very long time where there is not very high interest rates. If there was a way that we could rebalance the whole exercise where for the period of the next 12 months the Caymanian would not have to pay any stamp duty at all, when combined with the low interest rates, I believe we would be giving them the best opportunity to go and purchase property or build their homes.

Madam Speaker, I recognise that this will have an impact on the bottom line. But I believe as we try to nation build—and I believe that is the interest of all Members. Regardless of what side we sit on we are very interested and eager to do so during our tenure here. The best way to do that is to ensure that every single Caymanian who is capable and who has the desire, bar none, has the very best possibility to do that.

In normal circumstances we would not have asked for that because it is a package that goes together. We know that in the history of an economic meltdown there are peaks and valleys. We believe that because there is a valley here now, no government has been really successful in satisfactorily negotiating with the banks to cut down the interest they charge. But because of the global market forces they have no choice in that being extremely low now. We would ask the Government if they would consider from a holistic approach to extend the period of this benefit to Caymanians—and Caymanians only—and, secondly, if they would see fit as an attempt to maximise the possibilities that the economic downturn has brought for the Caymanians, and reduce what is being proposed, as opposed to by 1 per cent, to nil.

There is a precedent already set in the recognition in that the first time Caymanian owner has it. But that in itself, we believe at this particular time, is not good enough in that there are some Caymanians who are aspiring to climb into that middle economic strata. We believe that would also allow us to reconstruct and rebuild our middle class, which is very vital for any longevity or any sustainable development within our country.

So, I would be most grateful for a favourable consideration from the Government if they feel having the benefit of knowing all of the financial figures, which we do not quite know ourselves because of being on the Opposition and not privy to the day to day financial activities, if they would give that favourable consideration. We would be most grateful.

I thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

As the Honourable Third Official Explained, this Bill is part of a wider effort to bring a bit of increased activity into the local economy. As my colleague the Minister of Education stated when he debated the other Bill, while we do not wish to fully classify it as a “stimulus package”, the fact is that it is meant to stimulate.

I listened carefully to the representative from the Opposition, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. I just want to go through a few things by way of the requests she made on behalf of the Opposition.

Madam Speaker, let me just quickly summarise what the Bill is doing. The Bill is saying that in areas where stamp duty is now 7.5 per cent, which is mostly on the Seven Mile Beach but there are one or two other areas. There is one on Eastern Avenue, and I cannot be specific, but whatever areas are classified that the stamp duty on any transfer of land is 7.5 per cent, that now comes down to 5 per cent.

Whereas non-locals are paying 6 per cent across the board everywhere else, that is moving down 1 point to 5 per cent. Then Caymanians, generally speaking, who now pay 4 per cent transfer fee will, after this Bill is passed and comes into force, be paying 3 per cent. So there will still be a 2 per cent margin between what locals pay and what non-locals pay. The 6 moves to five and the 4 moves to 3, so there is still a 2 point difference.

Madam Speaker, what that means for first time Caymanian homeowners is that we will still have up to $200,000 waiver on all stamp duty, and with a value between $200,000 and $300,000 then that first time homeowner will pay 3 per cent as compared to 4 per cent now.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am missing out between $200,000 and $300,000 because I believe as that stands now it is 2 per cent. Now, is there any differential between the $200,000 and $300,000?

Madam Speaker, just give me one second to make sure of something.

[pause]

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

What the Bill does not say now, but we will have a committee stage amendment, and this is what I realised when I was talking and was the reason I asked you to pause, Madam Speaker.

What happens now with first time Caymanian homeowners is that there is a complete waiver of stamp duty up to $200,000. Between $200,000 and $300,000 value the stamp duty paid by the first time homeowner is 2 per cent. That is also going to go down a point to 1 per cent. So there will have to be a committee stage amendment to that.

I quite understand the very last request in itself. Certainly, that would be the utopia that we all desire. But I am also certain that everyone—Opposition, Government, everybody—knows the Government has to function. It takes a certain level of revenue for it to function. When we go into Finance Committee a little bit later on, we will be discussing much of that with what conditions prevail today.

So, it is not going to be possible for us to bring a stamp duty waiver for all Caymanians across the board, as per the request. That would put us to the point where even the very agencies that operate to perform the functions to facilitate those processes would not be self-sufficient. We really cannot go that far with it. The benefits will not outweigh the difficulties that would ensue.

It is, as I said, the utopia of any type of package we will be putting forward. But we certainly cannot responsibly make that decision, Madam Speaker.

The other aspect I wish to speak to, I would certainly ask the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and indeed the Opposition and my colleagues, to fully appreciate what I am going to say. One of the purposes behind this effort is to create activity within short order. It is a known fact, and when we had our meetings with the industry they expressed clearly from their own experiences that many people engage in contracts and wait out the whole effort to try to take advantage of whatever the window is and try to deal with closure as close to when the window closes as possible.

So, if we automatically extend that period of six months to a year that means (by the nature of the businesses and experiences of those transactions) you would probably take 10 months before you get the flurry you are looking for. Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that in times gone by when situations like these were put forward the matter can always be reviewed depending on the result it is bringing. And it can be done again.

What we do not want to do from the very beginning is state it for that time because we do not think that would bring the desired results. But it does not mean that at the end of the day it could not be repeated. I just want to explain that it does not allow what is being [sought] to happen; it just makes the possibility of that happening in a different fashion. That's all it does.

So, Madam Speaker, we have done our very best to achieve two things: to create confidence in people with a desire to spend to give an incentive for not only Caymanians but inward investment to occur; and at the same point in time we have looked to try to create enough activity that would generate revenue for the Government so that all of the various social programmes and everything else we are doing can be assisted in these trying times.

Madam Speaker, from the point of view of the Bill itself, I think that what we have done creates the best balance as we have thought it through and we have talked through with the industry. Which brings me to a point, Madam Speaker, [and if] you will allow me, please, because it is relevant.

I noticed in a contribution earlier, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, the guru (that's the name he was dubbed with for a while) . . . I am going to have to find a different one for him now though because he certainly did not display any guruism today!

He stood up, Madam Speaker, and was pontificating and trying to make the Government appear to have simply awakened one morning and thought up these things and, bam, just did it. Madam Speaker, we are continually interacting with all sub-sectors of industry. When these Bills are passed and become laws, as early as next week we will be interacting with suppliers to say to them (when this comes in force on 1 April), Here are the mechanisms we are going to use to ensure that the decrease in the duty is passed on to whoever the purchaser is.

We will be speaking to the contractors so that they have a clear understanding, Madam Speaker, that we will be using measures jointly because we expect collaboration and cooperation so that that is passed on to the homeowner.

These items have been carefully chosen because we have consulted industry, because these are the items that the industry says that no matter what you are doing these are the items that are used most. That is how we arrived at those.

The Speaker: Yes, but Honourable Leader, I cannot allow you to reopen a debate.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, very much, Madam Speaker. I quite understand.

But having said that, Madam Speaker, the real point that I wish to make is that in all of these measures—including the Stamp Duty (Amendment) Bill—industry and the various sub-sectors have been consulted and the consultation will continue. So, it is not for the Second Elected Member for West Bay to say at any point in time, or to presume that the Government along with the Official Members has not done their homework. And, Madam Speaker, the exercise is not over yet.

This exercise is not about too little too late. This is but part of the package. The Council of Associations is meeting. I am made to understand by the CEO of the Chamber that they have a meeting on Monday where they are going to be finalising recommendations from the various sub-sectors within the economy. [They] are going to be passing those recommendations on to the Government, whereby we will meet with them. I do not know what they are because I have not seen them. But those are the things that make the Cayman Islands a resilient territory, and it makes our economy a resilient economy—because there is collaboration.

As much as the Second Elected Member for West Bay would like to suggest that there is no interaction between industry and Government, that is absolutely not the truth! He either has his head stuck somewhere or he does not know what the truth is, Madam Speaker.

Back to the subject, Madam Speaker—

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: This Bill is one that the Government certainly supports. We welcome the opinions expressed by the Opposition. I am certain the mover will wind up and we will move on to the other Bills. But, Madam Speaker, certainly, we continue to press on in these trying times making every attempt and working in collaboration with private sector in order to be able to weather the storm and, in fact, to thrive.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister for Education, if you are going to be more than 10 minutes, I will take a suspension because I need to take a suspension!

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I am totally in your hands, but I will not be 10 minutes.

The Speaker: All right.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: I won't.

Madam Speaker, I just want to add a bit to the debate on this Bill which, as I signaled when I spoke earlier on the Customs Tariff Bill, is part of the package aimed at stimulating more activity in relation to development generally.

I believe when the Honourable Third Official Member introduced the Bill he said that the Bill was developed in conjunction with and as a result of consultation with Cayman Islands Real Estate Brokers Association (CIREBA). And, Madam Speaker, I was not in the Chamber when the Honourable Third Official Member spoke, so I do not know how much detail he went into in relation to the agreement we reached with CIREBA. But, as Mr. Linford Pierson used to say, repetition bears emphasis. So, Madam Speaker, if I am repeating anything that was said, I do hope it will serve to emphasise the point.

We indicated to CIREBA that in order to ensure this does have the required effect, it would need more than just Government taking steps to reduce the cost in relation to land transfers and the cost in terms of construction. It would require a concomitant effort on the part of the real estate brokers in relation to their commissions. Their commissions on land transfers or real estate sales are significantly more now in most instances than is the stamp duty on land transfers. So, Madam Speaker, they have agreed, as I understand it, to a 20 per cent reduction in their commissions in relation to land transfers.

It is believed that the impact of these three measures together will be significant, and that it will cause people who otherwise might be waiting out the present conditions to say, Well, now is as good a time as there ever will be for us to purchase property, for us to develop property, for us to build structures.

Madam Speaker, I say that in answer to what the Second Elected Member for West Bay said, as to whether or not there has been any consultation about this and how much does Government believe this is all going to yield, and so forth.

I listened to the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman when she asked about completely removing stamp duty on land sales for Caymanians. Madam Speaker, that is a wonderful thought as far as making things easier for Caymanians. But it is precisely the kind of expression you would expect from an Opposition Member who is not charged with any responsibility for ensuring that Government has the wherewithal to meet its obligations.

Madam Speaker, the reality is, as we will come to see shortly in Finance Committee, that Government is challenged in terms of revenue. There has been a significant fall off in revenue as a result of what has happened around the world in terms of the recession. Government is struggling to ensure that it has sufficient revenue generated to be able to continue to conduct the affairs of this country and to administer government properly.

It is not possible, Madam Speaker, to simply entirely write off a major revenue stream. And, the effort is not just to benefit directly participants in these transactions. It is also the belief that these measures will stimulate more economic activity and more transactions and, therefore, improve government's revenue stream. Although the yield from each transaction will be less than is currently the case, it is expected that this will significantly increase the number of transactions.

Madam Speaker, I do not fault the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman for her proposal. Perhaps if I were in the Opposition—with the luxury of no responsibility for the budget—I might make such a proposal as well. But it is not really the kind of proposal one would expect from an Opposition which plans to be steering this country in the next couple of months.

Madam Speaker, perhaps that is indicative of something.

ues as the surviving company; whereas in a consolidation, the constituent companies combine into a new company.

Madam Speaker, this Bill responds to requests from the private sector in relation to merger and consolidation provisions and reflects extensive consultation with the private sector as well as the review of Bermuda, BVI, Delaware and UK legislative precedents.

Madam Speaker, the salient clauses of the Bill are as follows:

Clause 251B requires the directors of constituent companies intending to merge to draw up a plan of merger or consolidation and specifies what it shall contain. It also sets out other procedural and technical requirements, including the shareholder and secured creditor authorisations and consents required to be secured by the constituent companies and submission requirements to the Registrar of companies.

Clause 251C enables the effective date of merger and consolidation to be deferred for up to 90 days from the date of filing of the plan with the Registrar.

Clause 251D provides a procedure whereby a plan of merger or consolidation filed with the Registrar can be subsequently terminated or adjusted as long as this is done prior to the effective date of merger or consolidation.

Clause 251E sets out the legal effect of merger and consolidation.

Clause 251F provides for additional procedures and checks where a foreign constituent company is involved in a merger or consolidation.

Clauses 251G and 251H set out fair value share buy-out procedures for minority shareholders who have not agreed to a merger or consolidation.

Madam Speaker, this Bill, along with the Cape Town Convention Bill, which was passed into Law by this Honourable House yesterday, and the Exempted Limited Partnerships Bill, 2009 (which is listed next on the Order Paper), is keenly awaited by industry. The Government is satisfied that the legislation fills a commercial need in a responsible manner.

Madam Speaker, I therefore commend the Companies (Amendment) Bill, 2009, to this Honourable House for passage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I recognise Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Madam Speaker, I beg to move the Second Reading of a Bill shortly entitled, The Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, this Bill responds to requests for upgrades to the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2007 Revision) from the private sector and reflects extensive consultation with the private sector.

Clauses 2 to 9 and 11 of the Bill make miscellaneous simple clarifications to the existing Law. The most significant aspect of the Bill is in clause 10.

Clause 10 upgrades section 15 of the principal Law in relation to winding-up and dissolution of exempted limited partnerships. Industry has advised, and government has agreed, that in the current climate the existing section 15 fell far short of a meaningful dissolution framework for exempted limited partnerships.

The revised and improved section 15 was developed in close consultation with the Cayman Islands Society of Professional Accountants (CISPA). The provisions in clause 10 take the benefit as far as possible of the provisions for winding up and dissolution in the new (2007) Part V of the Companies Law, and cross-refer to those provisions to the extent sensible. The ultimate, longer-term objective is to have a self-contained framework for winding up and dissolution within the Exempted Limited Partnership Law itself (that is, without cross-referral), but in the interim, clause 10 is a significant and necessary improvement that addresses a current gap in the Law in the immediate term.

Madam Speaker, I therefore commend The Bill now before this House to all honourable Members and ask for their support of the Bill.

Thank you.

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

We are happy to see the long anticipated arrival of these Bills, that is, the amendment to The Companies Law and the amendment to The Exempted Limited Partnership Law. Whilst we are on the 20th of March, a mere one business day away from the dissolution of the House, the financial services industry has been agitating and wanting these proposed amendments for quite some time.

Madam Speaker, I think it is very fair to say that even the Honourable Minister of Education has recently admitted to such when he said to the press that whilst the amendments were requested some time ago it was due to, as I understand it, delays in the Legal Drafting Department as to why some of this legislation was not brought earlier. Or, as I understand it, he is saying resources generally.

Madam Speaker, I must say that when one looks at the contribution the financial services sector makes to the economy generally, but if we even look specifically at government revenue and the tremendous contribution that that sector makes, one would think that whatever resources are necessary would be allocated to ensure that legislation is brought in a timely manner.

As with all things, Madam Speaker, the longer you wait the more problems are not dealt with in a timely manner. Opportunities are missed because the jurisdiction does not have the legislative framework in order for industry to be able to produce and make products available that can enhance our capacity to increase business. As we know, with increase in business, not only does government receive additional fees from structures that are created, but it increases the possibility for employment and we know the knock-on effect that has on the general economy.

The participants in this industry make a real, tangible impact on the general economy. So, I am happy to see these pieces of legislation finally reach us because one can only assume then that the general lack of resources must now be sorted out because it was not long ago that I heard those utterances in the media. So for us to now have these pieces of legislation before us, we must really be making strides. I am happy to now have the possibility to offer support for these necessary and requested changes in legislation that have come from industry.

Madam Speaker, I must say that this has been quite an impressive last few weeks. It seems as though whatever lack of resources that existed must in large measure have been corrected.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for West Bay, merits and principles of the Bill, please. I can find that nowhere in the index.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: So, would you deal with them please?

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you for your guidance, Madam Speaker.

As I said, the Bills are requested by the industry. Certainly, they are happy that they are here and are hoping that they can still take advantage of opportunities. Certainly, on the limited partnership side, the changes are going to be very useful.

Madam Speaker, with that said, I must say that this has been quite an eventful eleventh hour for us as a Legislative Assembly. More to come [in] Finance Committee.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I would not have said anything except that I have been provoked to do so by the Second Elected Member for West Bay. I feel duty bound to indicate the Government's position in relation to this.

Again, Madam Speaker—and the Second Elected Member for West Bay was not in the Chamber when I said this in relation to the last Bill—the world does not end on 20 May as the Opposition seems to believe. There is a lot left, I believe, after that. At least I hope so.

The benefits that these various bits of legislation which are being passed, will provide and inure, I believe, well into the future. So, the reality is that a huge amount of work has gone into all of the legislation before this House in the last couple of weeks. There is nothing like a deadline to concentrate people's minds on getting things finished. And this Government is determined to complete the tasks we by and large set out for ourselves.

Madam Speaker, if I can speak to the resourcing issue I do not want the impression to continue that somehow the Legal Drafting people here are responsible for the delays and so forth. The issue is one of resources generally, specialists' knowledge of these important pieces of commercial legislation. That is what Government does not have sufficient of. We do have some really good and critical people who work on these matters, but they are stretched to the max because of other duties and responsibilities in relation to a range of things.

One of the benefits of the new Constitution (assuming we get one) will be the ability to have a Minister with specific responsibility for Financial services, to have a directorate, or a unit directly under him or her, as the case may be, with the necessary personnel to be able to deal with these matters. It is not just a case of legislative drafting, it is a case of having people with the knowledge of the industry, of how these specialised products, services, and mechanisms work to be able to contribute to the overall piece of legislation that comes out. It is not just a technical matter of drafting.

Madam Speaker, I just want to say that the Government acknowledges that these are two Bills in particular that we would like to have had passed quite some time ago. We do not try to say otherwise. But they are here and it seems they will have the whole-hearted support of this House. I know from my almost daily discussions with people in the industry that they will be happy to have them, particularly in this time when unfortunately there is a tremendous amount of dissolution work around and, all indications are, with more to come. So, better regimes to be able to deal with these issues are very important to our industry.

With those few words, Madam Speaker, I want to thank you for your indulgence.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Second Elected Member for West Bay spoke on our behalf over here. And were it not for some of what was said by the Minister of Education, I would not rise.

Madam Speaker, I cannot leave it to be said that because we do not have a new Constitution with a Minister directly responsible, that we do not have these things quicker. Those are some of the things that have caused the Constitution to be put into question . . . because of what the Government has said.

There is no need for any unit or department if Government thought it necessary (we hope it would not, but . . .) to have been created or not created because we do not have a Minister. What we have under the present Constitution is that the Minister of Education is responsible for policy for this type of business.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Point of Order

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education.

Hon. Alden M. McLaughlin, Jr.: What the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has just said is misleading.

I have Constitutional responsibility for international financial services policy. I do not have responsibility for these types of matters. The clearest indication of that is that the Financial Secretary, the Honourable Third Official Member, is who has introduced these Bills. He has Constitutional responsibility for that.

But that is in no way my attempt to duck the Government's collective responsibility for matters such as this. We do accept responsibility. I did that when I stood up. I am just making it clear that what the Leader of the Opposition said is not correct.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, he does have a point of order in that the Honourable Third Official Member is the person responsible for the legislation.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, if I had made that point, I would have been told that was not a point, that it was an explanation.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, please—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: But I accept the Member's explanation.

What I do not accept is the red herring he is drawing across the whole issue. He is directly responsible because he is a Minister of Cabinet, and while he does not have that responsibility for finance, he has policy for international matters. And when you take one, you take the other because they cross paths.

And to say at this late stage that this work is not done because we do not have the unit to do it, and that a new Constitution which is not going to come into force until 2013—three years hence—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: When is it going to come into force? When?

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, from the letter that Mr. . . . they are asking where did that come from?

The Speaker: Could we get back to the Bill before us—the Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Bill, 2009, and not the Constitution please?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: In a debate, Madam Speaker,—

The Speaker: Would you stop—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —in a debate—

The Speaker: —Honourable Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —I am allowed to debate—

The Speaker: Would you please, Honourable Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —I am allowed to debate what Members have said.

I am allowed under the Standing Orders—

The Speaker: Please take your seat.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: —to debate what Members have said.

The Speaker: Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I am asking to get back to the Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Bill, 2009. I have heard what the Member said. You have already covered what the Member said about the Constitution, but now we are getting into the time that the Constitution is coming into effect and so forth.

Could we return to the item before us please?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I have not finished what I want to say on what the Member said. And that is my prerogative!

I have not finished. And I would like that prerogative, even if it is just a word or two. I need to say what I want to say, debate what the Member said. That is my duty here, because we can't just have this stuff being left hung in the air so that people get the wrong impressions about the Constitution. And when he raised it, I need to say what I have said.

And, Madam Speaker, I thank you.

The Member is wrong. He knows he is wrong. But he is good at that. He is wrong that we need a unit to have gotten this work done. What we needed was for him to have paid attention to these matters that have been raised for some time by the sector—over two years, Madam Speaker, that I know about. So, it is absolutely wrong. They are running for cover at this late stage.

I suppose when I sit down one of the bright stools over there will say that I did wrong or something else, as I heard the Minister of Tourism cackling about. But, as usual, Madam Speaker, he was out of his depth too.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: [inaudible] me off.

The Speaker: Children.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Only, I believe for the fifth time today, to simply thank all honourable Members for their support of the Bill and for the contributions they have made.

The Speaker: The question is that a Bill shortly entitled, The Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Bill 2009 be given a second reading. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: The Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Bill, 2009, given a second reading.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: This late stage in her life she wants to . . .

House in Committee at 4.58 pm

The Chairman: Please be seated.

[addressing the Honourable Leader of the Opposition] The person that needs to be replaced is you, since you want to get that way about it.

PRAYERS

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Let us pray.

Almighty God, from whom all wisdom and power are derived: We beseech Thee so to direct and prosper the deliberations of the Legislative Assembly now assembled, that all things may be ordered upon the best and surest foundations for the glory of Thy Name and for the safety, honour and welfare of the people of these Islands.

Bless our Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth II; Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Charles, Prince of Wales; and all the Royal Family. Give grace to all who exercise authority in our Commonwealth, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us. Especially we pray for the Governor of our Islands, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Official Members and Ministers of Cabinet and Members of the Legislative Assembly, that we may be enabled faithfully to perform the responsible duties of our high office. All this we ask for Thy great Name's sake.

Let us say The Lord's Prayer together: Our Father, who art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the Kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace, now and always. Amen.

PRESENTATION OF PAPERS
AND OF REPORTS

Report of the Standing Finance Committee on the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the Financial year ending 30 June 2009

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table of this honourable House the Report of the Standing Finance Committee on the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates of the Government of the Cayman Islands for the Financial year ending 30 June 2009.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, Finance Committee met last Friday, 20 March [2009], to consider two main items: the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for the year ending 30 June 2009; and it also met to consider a motion that the Committee approved, the Schedule of Supplementary Appropriations requested for the financial year 2008/09 (which was shown at section 10 of those Estimates).

Madam Speaker, section 10 of the Estimates is a schedule that contains 200 items of appropriation request; the vast majority of which were reductions to existing appropriations. Details of the individual appropriations were considered and approved by the committee on Friday evening. Therefore, I do not need to repeat such details now.

The Committee approved an increase to one of the appropriations, that is, DAP-9 which is the Management of Executive Assets in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman—an increase over and above the amount shown in the Schedule by $466,255.

Madam Speaker, the Committee also approved the motion raised in the Legislative Assembly that Finance Committee approve the Schedule of Supplementary Appropriations requested for 2008/09 as shown in section 10 of the 1st Supplementary Annual Plan and Estimates for 2008/09.

The Committee also approved, as I said, but increased one of the appropriations contained in the Schedule by $466,255.

The Committee also met this afternoon to review its Chairman's Report that has just been tabled, and the Committee approved the Report that has just been tabled. The Committee also agreed that I report the results of its deliberations to this honourable House.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

STATEMENTS BY HONOURABLE MINISTERS/MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

The Speaker: I have received notice of a statement by the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Update on the Owen Roberts International Airport Re-development Project

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to give an update on the Owen Roberts International Airport Re-development Project.

Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands Airports Authority (the CIAA) is steadily moving forward with the redevelopment of the Owen Roberts International Airport. In 2004, the Civil Aviation Authority was split into two agencies—the CIAA, which is responsible for managing our airports; and the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), which is responsible for regulatory matters.

Dating back to the formal creation of the Cayman Islands Airports Authority in July 2004, a number of important legal and financial matters remained unresolved preventing the actual separation of historical assets and liabilities. Following lengthy negotiations, a final settlement of assets and liabilities was achieved in 2007 paving the way for both the CIAA and the CAA to proceed with their audits for the years in question.

Since then, the CIAA has embarked upon the redevelopment project by using a portion of its operating surplus to complete Phase 1 which was preparatory site works valued at more than $4.1 M. The completed site works include a new staff parking lot, re-designed traffic flow, which has resulted in one way traffic in front of the Terminal building, and reconfiguration of both Short and Long Term parking lots to facilitate increased capacity and optimize traffic flow.

In respect to the overall redevelopment, the CIAA has employed local financial expertise to help it assess and ensure the project's long term financial feasibility. Local firm, KPMG, performed a strategic and operational review of the CIAA, which included the preparation of a 25-year financial forecasting model. During this review, a calculation of the newly implemented Passenger Facilities Charge (PFC) was completed and in January 2009, this new PFC was brought into effect to help fund the Terminal Expansion project.

Having secured the necessary revenue streams to augment its operating surpluses, the CIAA continued its due diligence by enlisting Deloitte to assist it in reviewing various financing options.

The initial Request for Proposal (RFP) for the financing package was issued in December 2008. Initial proposals have been evaluated and the decision taken to repeat the tender process so as to refine and maximize the competitiveness amongst financial institutions. This ongoing tendering process for the financing package is due to close on 3 April 2009. The process is similar to the process utilised by the Cayman Islands Government.

The revised RFP has been issued to local Class A banks and one overseas bank. The Central Tenders Committee (CTC) is providing oversight on this project to ensure value for money and necessary due diligence. This financing package is also expected to facilitate the construction of the required new airport in Little Cayman and some enhancements at the General Aviation Terminal.

The next steps call for the tendering process for the six pre-qualified local contractors to commence at the end of April 2009 once the designs are finalised by architects Chalmers Gibbs Martin Joseph (CGMJ) and RS&H. Construction is scheduled to commence in September 2009 and is expected to conclude in 2012. The redevelopment of the main terminal will result in the tripling of the floor space from 80,000 square feet to 220,000 square feet to accommodate projected traffic levels for approximately 20 years. Key components of the redevelopment include an expanded ticketing and flight check-in hall, a new arrivals hall, a domestic arrivals and departures hall, a new international departures hall on the second floor, and an expanded tarmac to accommodate three additional aircraft parking slots.

Additionally, the Government is presently involved in discussions that could lead to a public/private sector partnership that would facilitate a 2,000 foot extension to the runway at the Owen Roberts International Airport.

Welcoming the start of the preparatory works in early 2008, I stated that this proposed facility will better reflect Cayman's market positioning both as a high-end tourist destination and as a major global financial centre. The contemporary design will improve the aesthetic appeal and will assist in expanding passenger and airline capacity as overcrowding regularly occurs when passenger and aircraft movements are high.

Today, I reiterate the fact that our Islands' airports are the first and last part of the tourism product that people see whether they are here for leisure or investment purposes. And, in 2012 I expect that we will have a much larger, modern, user-friendly airport for the comfort of our visitors and residents that will pave the way for the continued development of the Cayman Islands. Further, the CIAA is commencing the project on solid grounds having a healthy balance sheet, positive cash position, secured additional means for financing the project and having already funded the completion of preliminary works from its operating surplus.

Madam Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation to the Board and to the Management and staff of the CIAA for their perseverance, careful and prudent approach to this project and for their continued efforts to enhance the travelling public's experience both now and in the future.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

BILLS

FIRST READING

Supplementary Appropriation (July 2008 to June 2009) Bill 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2008 to June 2009) Bill 2009.

The Speaker: The Bill is deemed to have been read a first time and is set down for a second reading.

SECOND READING

Supplementary Appropriation (July 2008 to June 2009) Bill 2009

The Deputy Clerk: The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2008 to June 2009) Bill 2009.

The Speaker: I recognise the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for the Portfolio of Finance and Economics.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I beg to move the Second Reading of a Bill shortly entitled The Supplementary Appropriation (July 2008 to June 2009) Bill, 2009.

The Speaker: The Motion has been duly moved and is open for debate. Does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to speak thereto?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a brief contribution.

The purpose of this Bill, as all honourable Members will know, is to seek the Legislative Assembly's approval for the supplementary appropriations in respect of the Government's financial year that will end on the 30 June 2009. In order to undertake these transactions, the approval of the House is required and that approval is sought via this Supplementary Appropriation Bill.

Madam Speaker, the Bill is very simple. It consists of three main parts: Clause 1, which gives the name of the proposed Law; clause 2, speaks to the Appropriation authority which, if the Bill is passed into law, would provide so that the supplementary appropriations can actually be incurred; and the third part is the Schedule to the Bill.

Madam Speaker, the details of the supplementary appropriations are shown in the Schedule to the Bill. Those items in the Schedule to the Bill have been considered by Finance Committee and that Committee has in fact approved those supplementary appropriations, that they be authorised in respect to the year to the 30 June 2009.

Madam Speaker, one of the items in the Schedule to the Bill, output group DAP-9, was increased by the Committee and thus the Schedule in the Bill will be accordingly changed in respect of this one item. And as those items were questioned and scrutinized in Finance Committee on Friday, this does not make it necessary for me to comment any further on the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I therefore respectfully ask all honourable Members to support the Bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I have stated my objection to some of the Government's paths on expenditure. Certainly, I do so at this point, for I believe that the country is moving along a path where we can say it is dangerous.

We have more and more expenditure while there is an imbalance in our revenue. We see the debt servicing coming mighty close to its limit. The country stands at over $29 million deficit, whereas projections were for a surplus of $15 million. Therefore we can say that the swing has been well over $40 million. This is not a good position to be in.

We acknowledge the crisis going around the world. However, we must acknowledge the failure to deal with matters in the early stages, when better plans could have been put in place instead of a rushed Finance Committee where we could not even study what was put before us.

To make matters worse is the fact that Government has not published any audited accounts in the past four years. And we may think light of it, and the Financial Secretary will make excuses because he might have to, but the fact is that we do not have those accounts. So, as Members of this House we cannot say what we have from what we do not have.

Madam Speaker, we all want to get out of here as quickly as possible, therefore I do not intend to carry on. But I must say that I am disappointed—to say the least—that those accounts have not been given to us, because that is the proof of the pudding as to what the true position of this country is financially.

In no other way can it be tested. In no other way can any excuse clear the muddy waters with the finances. While we can say that we have had a Finance Committee—as I said, albeit a rush one where I could not have a chance to really peruse to the extent we would have liked to so as to get information—we say flatly that all is not well in the finances of this country.

Oh, I know somebody will probably rise behind me to tell me they have this and that, but where are the facts in the audited accounts?

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? If no other Member wishes to . . .

Honourable Leader of Government Business.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, the Bill before us was made very clear during Finance Committee. And I did not intend to speak to it, but the Leader of the Opposition has spoken and he has chimed along on the same points that he raised during Finance Committee, or at the beginning.

Madam Speaker, I just want to take this opportunity to explain so that there is no misunderstanding regarding the operational deficit, and I will do so as quickly as I possibly can.

When the budget was prepared for the 2008/09 fiscal year, Madam Speaker, the projections were that there would be a $13 million operational surplus. Many events have taken place during the course of this fiscal year, and many of them were events over which we had no control. Many of them have incurred costs as a result. And to top that, Madam Speaker, there has also been a noticed downturn in the global economy which naturally would begin to affect our own local economy, thus causing the projected revenue at the beginning of the year to be revisited and for the new projections to show a shortfall of some $22 million in revenue.

So, Madam Speaker, when we began to see that downturn (meaning the downturn in revenue) we know that there are two approaches which would be used. One would either be to find ways and means to increase revenue, which, normally, is through revenue measures or taxation—and certainly this Government was not going to be irresponsible and take that approach during these times. The other option would be to cut expenditure and that we did.

We called in our chief officers and CFOs and outlined the situation, and they went back and responded. And there was some $17 million in savings that were realised. So, if it were left just to the shortfall in revenue, which is now projected at $22 million, and the savings which were realised by the operations of government, we would still have had a surplus.

Notwithstanding that, Madam Speaker, there have been extra pressures put on the Department of Children and Family Services, and also on our overseas medicals. And to top all of that off we had the devastation caused by Hurricane Paloma in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman; more so in Cayman Brac. And, of course, the Government would have no choice but to respond to the rebuilding and recovery efforts over there.

Madam Speaker, as if that were not enough, we had, and still have, the ongoing police investigations racking up a nice chunk of money as extraordinary expenditure. And then because the challenges were to be great this year, we also have the Governor calling for a tribunal to do an investigation of a senior magistrate, which too will have cost being incurred in the millions of dollars.

When we add all of that up, Madam Speaker, we have a deficit of close to $14 million operationally before extraordinary expenses. And for the Government to have not allowed that to happen, it would have meant that, given all that has faced us, we would have had to look to cutting the services that the people of the country not only are used to but deserve, and the Government made a conscious decision not to do that.

So, while the Opposition will rant and rave and chime about too little, too late and whatever else they have said, the facts are as I have said it and I dare say that given the same circumstances, if they were the Government, they would not have been faced with anything different.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: We would have done different though.

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Madam Speaker, the facts are the facts.

The business of the Government accounts I would prefer to leave that response to the Honourable Third Official Member who is piloting this Bill through. But let me say this: From the time we took office in May, the Elected Government has cajoled, requested and resorted to everything that we know how to try to get this situation rectified, Madam Speaker. Unfortunately, it is not one over which we have control.

The Opposition when they were the Government saw small signs of this because of Hurricane Ivan. And this has just been a situation that has extended itself for too long. I know that the situation is being rectified but, of course, that is something that is going to take several months to get finished. We have spoken about it on many occasions. But, as I said, I will leave the facts to be aired by the Honourable Third Official Member.

Madam Speaker, this is the last day of this House before dissolution takes place. We move from here into the campaign into the general elections. The country will know the facts. The Opposition will continue to say what they feel they have to say; the Government will outline all the facts to the people and the people will decide.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

If no other Member wishes to speak, does the Honourable Third Official Member wish to exercise his right of reply?

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Just to thank the two Honourable Members who spoke for their contributions to the Bill.

Specifically on the topic of the accounts and financial statements, I made my remarks in Finance Committee on Friday evening and outlined that in respect of the financial year ending June 2005 there have been in fact audited financial statements presented in this House for each of the individual 13 ministries and portfolios. The remaining step is for those audited financial statements to be consolidated to produce one overall set of financial statements. And the fact that this is not the same regime as in previous years . . . and, Madam Speaker, none of these comments should be taken as an excuse; they are simply an explanation.

The regime that we currently operate under is a totally different regime than in previous years. In previous years we operated under a cash basis of accounting, meaning that transactions were recorded when the particular transaction culminated in cash being paid or cash being received. That is not an appropriate basis in which to record transactions. The current basis that we operate under is one of an accrual basis in which we account for a transaction, not when it is received or paid in cash, but when the particular transaction arises, therefore we accrue for that transaction.

Madam Speaker, we had the previous regime in which the treasury controlled all of the payments of the entire government. We have moved away from that situation and we now have the current regime in which each ministry and portfolio has its own budget and is able to make decisions regarding its own budget.

Madam Speaker, the cash basis of accounting involved the situation in which major items of capital expenditure were actually accounted for as though they were operating items. And, again, this is not appropriate. The accrual basis of accounting does not operate as such. There was a clear distinction made between operating expenses and capital expenditures.

Madam Speaker, we had the situation in which moving to the accrual basis of accounting involved the Government having to compile a fixed asset register. That was a mammoth undertaking because previously items of capital had been expensed under the cash basis of accounting. So, there was a considerable exercise taken to essentially reformulate the fixed assets of the Government.

All Government properties had to be brought on to its balance sheet. All of its items of machinery, be they vehicles or otherwise, had to be brought on to the balance sheet. All of its computers and furniture had to be brought on to the balance sheet. All of Government's buildings had to be brought on to the balance sheet. And so the exercise was a mammoth one and this was done by individual ministries and portfolios.

Madam Speaker, we also had the situation in which this new regime took effect on 1 July 2004. Two and a half months later, we had Hurricane Ivan (in September 2004). Madam Speaker, that was a major blow to the new accrual regime working smoothly.

The new regime required that by 1 December 2004 we had to be producing a strategic policy statement for the year that was going to start 1 July 2005. So, ministries and portfolios were then faced with the almost impossible circumstance of data and information being lost and destroyed because of Hurricane Ivan. Ministries and portfolios were faced with a decision: Do I attempt to maintain and report quarterly transactions for July to September 2004? Or do I attempt to produce a strategic policy statement for the following year?

Madam Speaker, I believe the sensible decision taken was that we needed to produce and concentrate more so on the Strategic and Policy Statement for the following year.

We then got into the calendar year 2005 and, again, we had the decision to make: Do we concentrate on producing quarterly reports for the fiscal year 2004/05? Or do we concentrate on producing a budget for the year starting 1 July 2005? We did the latter, Madam Speaker.

We also had the general election in May 2005.

So, Madam Speaker, the new accrual accounting regime started in very difficult circumstances.

Madam Speaker, the most recent position is that a decision has been made that an accounting task force consisting of existing civil servants will be put to the task of bringing the financial statements of individual ministries and portfolios up to date. Those internal accountants within the civil service will be joined by accountants hired in from outside the Government starting in the financial year 2009/10. So, from 1 July onward the existing internal team will be augmented by external accountants.

Madam Speaker, it is also the case that financial statements for individual ministries and portfolios do not just stop at 2004/05, but they continue on beyond that. And it is the case that some ministries and portfolios have in fact produced their financial statements for those subsequent years and have been, in fact, audited. The audit process obviously takes some time.

Madam Speaker, the position with respect to financial statements is well understood. The importance of having audited financial statements is well understood by the Government and the matter is taken seriously. As I said, the decision has been made to put a special task force onto this exercise and allow the chief financial officers to continue with their task of keeping a current year current.

With those words, Madam Speaker, I simply wish to commend this Bill to all honourable Members.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I have to move the adjournment of this honourable House sine die.

The Speaker: Before I put the question I will allow those Members who would like to say a few words.

Does any Member wish to speak? [pause] If no Member wishes to speak I shall put the question—Fourth Elected Member for the district of George Town.

Mr. W. Alfonso Wright: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to say a few words at the last sitting of the Legislative Assembly for this term.

Firstly, I am extremely blessed and grateful for the opportunity given to me by my constituents in the district of George Town to be of service to them over the past four years. I am a much more enlightened and mature individual. The time spent here has been good for me. I also believe that I have done my part in improving the lives of the people whom I represent in the district of George Town and throughout the country.

Before I came in here there were many things that I took for granted, many things that I believed legislators could correct and make happen by the flick of a switch or by [saying] aye or no. I did have the opportunity, thank God, to have been close to the current Leader of Government Business for quite some time. On many occasions he helped to sort things out for me and showed me the way that things really were, and that the ideal world that we think exists on the outside really does not exist.

I had some inclination as to how it works in here, but you can really only know that, Madam Speaker, when you experience it through being here for a period like I have been. It is always easier from the outside. I believe that all in this new group, which have just served their first term, will probably say the same thing. I dare say that even the older Members who have been here for multiple terms still find themselves in a position where they continue to learn something each time. It would be totally worthless time spent here if we did not learn something new all the time.

I have had the opportunity to become acquainted with many more individuals that maybe I just saw along the way. Being involved in politics as a representative for my district has exposed me to a lot of different scenarios and has caused me to meet many, many interesting persons. Many of them have made a positive impact on my life in my term here, and I dare say that, hopefully, I have done the same for at least some of them.

I believe that as a government, Madam Speaker, we have done extremely well with running this country under the circumstances. I believe that the country is on the right track. I understand that we were not perfect during our four-year term, and I dare say I don't think there is anyone who expected us to be. Then again, maybe there are those who figure that we should be perfect. That is just not possible. But I believe that we did the best we could do under the circumstances.

We have embarked on many projects and services during the last four years that have positively impacted the lives of our people. Some of those projects and services have been completed; some are in their infancy and underway.

Madam Speaker, I am a convert to political parties. I had my reservations about party politics before I got involved in it. We all know that the Cayman Islands have been involved in party politics for many years, we just did not have proper organisation in party politics. I dare say that I would have much preferred that it was not rushed upon us the way that it was, but I believe that party politics has been good for this country and is here to stay.

Madam Speaker, the notion of independents running for politics is one that scares me. One cannot even move a Private Member's Motion in this House without the support of another Member. So to think that this country should look towards independents to be in control will simply set this country back decades.

Any business or household must have some form or organisation. Companies must have managers, middle-level management, lower-level management and labourers. There must be some form of organisation. Someone must be in charge, and whoever is in charge must have help to run whatever organisation. Even in a family, where parents are in charge and older children are given responsibility to help with other kids, everyone must play their own role within a household to make sure that things work perfect. And that is done by members of that household or business understanding one another and knowing what it takes to keep things ticking.

Now, an independent can win an election—that happens all the time. But what do they have to do the first morning after they are elected? They have to go and look for someone. And the country benefits when individuals who get elected to office have common goals and have worked out what it is they want to do for the country before they get elected and not have to madly scramble and horse trade after election. The country's business is compromised by people getting together who really don't understand what they want themselves, [let alone] what the country wants.

Madam Speaker, I have been blessed to work with my colleagues in the Government. I dare say that for the most part I have had a very good relationship with most of the Members of the Opposition. For the most part we all understand and have a common goal.

I am grateful for my colleagues in the Government who have assisted me and taken my ideas on board showing respect for the things that I believe in. In the same way, I have learned a lot by sitting and listening to each and every one of them. And I believe that this country has benefited from the way that we have worked together, the way we have stayed together as a unit.

Many individuals figured that after we were elected that we would not see it through to another general election as a party. Well, I dare say that we are as tight now as we were then—maybe even a little tighter, because we know each other a whole lot better. I will never try to say to anyone that we don't have our differences; we have them all the time. As a matter of fact, we have some downright ugly arguments at times. But our respect for one another and our goal of understanding where we should end up always comes in to play and we end up with the best possible product simply by everyone being allowed to speak their mind and give their views.

[I am] so grateful for the type of leader that we have who respects the views of others and does not try to force his feelings or convictions on everyone else. So, whatever product that we come by, I can tell you that it is one that everyone has contributed to.

Madam Speaker, we continue to hear about the Cayman Islands being worse off, and people trying to blame the global financial crisis on the PPM Government. It seems as though everything that has gone wrong in the world is the fault of the PPM. But I want to remind everyone that the slowdown in Cayman's economy is primarily [due to] the decline in the US of sub-prime loans and bankrupt insurance companies which have led to many huge banks of household names failing. And we know that trickle down effect will always reach the Cayman Islands in some form or fashion. I dare say that right now the Cayman Islands is a lot better off than countries such as the US, Ireland, Greenland and many other countries.

Madam Speaker, last year alone there were over 1,125 billionaires and, because of the global financial crisis, that is now down to under 800.

So, I think we ought to understand exactly what is happening here and that circumstances always alter cases. We have a country to run. I believe that the PPM is the right party to be re-elected to run this country. We know and are familiar with what is happening. We have our finger on the pulse. I do believe that it is quite clear that none of the other groupings out there, including the current Opposition, have even come close to explaining what their plan is for moving this country forward, and can only set the country back if the Government changes. Worst if independents are in control.

At least the Opposition are a part of the current Legislative Assembly and know some of what is going on. But imagine this country being run by a bunch of independents. It would take them probably 12 months to understand what is happening. What happens to the Cayman Islands in that time?

Madam Speaker, I want to thank all of those who I have come in contact with during my tenure here. Many positive, some negative, but I thank them nevertheless, because I have come to accept criticism of the way I do some things as being just and have been able to understand and accept that for what it is and not become angry with people who have a different version of what they think you should do.

I want to improve the way I do things and a lot of times you have to sit back and listen to what people tell you. So, I have learned a lot through criticism, and I thank all those individuals. I am not bitter with any who oppose what I do or who have said negative things about me in the past. I have learned from a lot of them. Some simply oppose for the sake of opposing, and we will not be able to change their minds.

This is a job that I have enjoyed and I believe I have made a positive difference in this country. I am so grateful for the way that my other Backbench colleagues and I have worked and supported one another. We are a good team.

Madam Speaker, I thank you so much for your support and for all that you have done, and for your sage wisdom. You are always there willing to give advice and answer questions whenever we come to you regardless of the hour of the day or the time of the night. I am so grateful to have had this opportunity to work with you and to say that this country is a lot better off.

This country is a better place because you took the time and made the sacrifices to serve your country. I would like to take this opportunity to thank you on behalf of all of the people of this country for the services, Madam Speaker, for the good job you have done in serving the people of North Side and the country.

I want to personally say thank you to the 1,646 individuals who voted for me the last time, and to remind them that I need that support again—and more—to be re-elected as their representative for the district of George Town.

I am grateful for the way that I have been treated at the Legislative Assembly. I have gotten along exceptionally well with all the staff here. Some of them are no longer here, but most of them who were here when I came in are still here and they have treated me with much respect and have helped me along the way assisting me in being able to make a contribution to this country.

Whatever the results, Madam Speaker, I am eternally grateful to God for showing me the way and helping me through in dark times here. I have had some disappointing times here. I have had some times when I sat back and wondered why. But none of that was God's will; that was human beings who believe that it is their lot in life to make others miserable. And I can forgive and forget that. My thanks to God for all His many, many blessings.

If, at the end of the day, the people of George Town make a decision not to return me to office, I want to say that I will still be thankful. I will not be bitter. I have done much for my country since being a boy, and not being a Member of the Legislative Assembly will not stop me from serving my people. But I have embarked on a journey that is not yet complete and I ask the people of the district of George Town to consider re-electing me and my three other colleagues for the district of George Town—indeed, the entire PPM family—back to their respective districts.

Madam Speaker, I implore everyone to please make an effort to run a meaningful and sensible campaign. Let us deal with the issues that are at hand. The world is going through difficult times. What we need is cohesiveness. What we need are people who understand that it is the country that comes first, and that we do what we can to be civil to one another. Let us go through this campaign without any of the mud flinging or any of the dirty politics that have gone on in the past. Let our young people see that we as politicians can be kind and gentle to one another. Let us set an example for them.

Once again, Madam Speaker, I am grateful, I am willing, I want to serve; I have made myself available to my people of George Town and will continue to do so.

God bless! Good luck!

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. G. Kenneth Jefferson: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Official Members in the House I wish to thank all honourable Members on both sides of the House for their sterling efforts and contributions they made in the last four years, approximately. Madam Speaker, much business has been conducted and concluded during this parliamentary term and this has been for the advancement of these Islands.

I also wish to thank you, Madam Speaker, and the staff of the Legislative Assembly for all of your assistance and guidance that was rendered during the course of the last four years or so, and to say that often times you have acted as a mother hen pushing us along to get the business of the House done and we certainly wish to thank you for that.

Madam Speaker, the unrelenting march of time means that the work of parliamentarians will continue until our Heavenly Father brings life on earth to an end.

The Honourable Attorney General, the Second Official Member, who is presently on vacation, has asked me to extend his personal best wishes to all MLAs and to [express] his gratitude for their help during the past four years.

Madam Speaker, one of my favourite adverts is one that goes something like this: "You never actually own a Patek Phillipe", which is regarded by those who know as being the best watch in the world. "You never actually own a Patek Phillipe; you merely look after it for the next generation."

And so it is, Madam Speaker, with parliamentarians. We simply look after the Cayman Islands for its future generations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I rise to say thank you, bon voyage, hasta luego, sayonara, arrivederci!

[laughter from the Speaker]

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: But I will be back with God's help and the people who put me here. However, before I go into that, Madam Speaker, I would like to say to you, thank you very much for your guidance, wisdom, humour, your way of handling us and keeping us on our toes, and last but not least, for being an excellent Speaker.

I was wondering the other day whether you were a better Speaker or a better politician. When I weighed the points I think they came out evenly. Therefore I would assume by my tally that you are not only a great Speaker but a great stateswoman and politician, and I thank you.

I thank you in particular because you are a woman and you have done a lot of things for women in this country. And you yourself know that this honourable House needs a lot of mother hens. Not to rib my colleague, the Third Official Member.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to thank my family, in particular my sister who really pushed me along to be here; and my childhood friends who still say to me that this was the best thing that I have done; to the netball fraternity that has given me an identity in this country; to the Central Scranton Community, a place where I grew up, for helping to be a great community leader; to my constituents and residents of George Town. I thank them for holding me up, taking me up by the legs, the arms, the feet, in guiding me and bringing me and sitting me in this seat which does not have my name, and for making me their representative, the Third Elected Member for George Town.

To my colleagues who sit on my right and on my left and immediately in front of me, I thank them for being there and bringing me back to earth many times when I became like a Don Quixote, because I perhaps have a lot of idealistic cues for this country.

Madam Speaker, my first address when I came in less than four years ago was to the people, thanking them and to say that the job that they had given us was a monumental task—and so it was, and so it still is. There is a lot to be done because there was a lot that was not done.

But who do you blame for that? Do you blame the system? Do you blame people? Who do you blame? Do you blame uncaring politicians who do not have the will to come into this honourable House and fight for the destiny of the Caymanian people? That is debatable, Madam Speaker. That is debatable! But it is also a good point because that is why we are here—to work for the people.

Madam Speaker, in my first address I also encouraged parents to continue to work for their children, and for them to change their own educational course so that they could empower themselves to get better jobs so they could make much more money. Therefore, they would not have to have two or three jobs and would be able to stay at home and work with their children. I remember that, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I also encouraged the frontier Caymanians and the new Caymanians to come together for the benefit of this country. Irrespective of ethnicity or nationality we are all Caymanians—some of us are frontier and some of us new Caymanians. I encouraged us at that time to come together to make this country a better place.

What have I learned in the last four years, Madam Speaker?

I have learned that politics is a nasty business with nasty politicians. But I have also learned that because of the PPM fraternity—

Suspension of Standing Order 10(2)

The Speaker: Would you give me one moment so that I can get a suspension of the relevant Standing Order, as it is 4.30 pm?

Honourable Minister for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I move the suspension of the relevant Standing Order to allow the business of the House to continue beyond the hour of interruption.

The Speaker: The question is that Standing Order 10 (2) be suspended. All those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Agreed: Standing Order 10(2) suspended.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for George Town.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I was speaking about what I have learned in the last four years. I have learned that politics is a nasty business with nasty people hiding behind politics.

But I have also learned, Madam Speaker, that it is a great avocation, that if you are in it and you really care you can do a lot—small things, though, Madam Speaker, for the people. I have also learned that the closer you get to them the more of a human you become. That is what I have learned from the people of George Town. I have become more human than when I came in to this hallowed hall.

Madam Speaker, what else have I learned? I have learned that we have neglected skilling—S-K-I-L-L-I-N-G—people in the Cayman Islands, and that is unfortunate. And perhaps that is why there are the issues between the frontier Caymanians and the new Caymanians, because the perception is that the new Caymanians are more skilled.

The destiny of the Caymanian lies in this House. Therefore, when the Honourable Alden McLaughlin puts his projects and proposals with the support of the PPM—

The Speaker: Minister of Education.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Sorry, Madam Speaker, Minister of Education.

His intention was that we must have a skilled and trained Cayman Islands. And for the last three years, ten months and something days, that is what he has been doing. And if there is a heavy heart that I will leave from this honourable House with, it is the perception of some people that he is wrong. That he should not go about skilling Caymanians, the frontier as well as the new; that he should not go about training up Caymanians. That is what I have learned, Madam Speaker.

I have also learned that this economic miracle was not evenly spread in its effect. It came down not like water but like cement, so that some Caymanians did not profit off of this economic miracle that we have put here. But, Madam Speaker, when I go back to 2005 I did not see a plan to encourage and develop more entrepreneurs and more local persons to develop so that they would not depend on a 40 hour work week. I understand that I will be lambasted and darts thrown at me afterwards, but this is my observation. I have spent an inordinate amount of time moving around this country on foot, in car, on bicycle, every means I have done. And I think I am factual, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, what else have I learned in the years I have been here? That education must be the passport to wealth, to success and to social transformation. Social transformation and economic enhancement go hand in hand. And when you see a decrease in wealth then there is also an increase in a social slide in the country.

What else did I see and learn over the four years? That we must honour our aged, that we must bring the youth and the aged together. Madam Speaker, there must be an integration. Boy, the Honourable Minister, Madam Speaker, has gotten me quite nervous now. (That was just a joke.)

Madam Speaker, we need to honour our aged. And I am glad that a lot of my motions were on the whole question of the enhancement of the aged senior citizens and we brought forward a commission for the aged. They built this country. They allowed us to have warmth and harmony in this country.

I can think back on the Cayman of yesteryear and why people came here. They did not come here because it had all of these flashy buildings when they first came. They came here because we had beautiful warm people, lovely and honest people, Madam Speaker.

I grew up in the days when people were taught to fish. Today we want to hand them out fish. I believe that you must help people to stand up. I certainly do, and I will support anything that the Honourable Minister of Human Services brings here to help people to stand up. And with the economic times, we need to do that even more. But, Madam Speaker, we have generations of people to whom we have given fish. And I question that. I question why it is that we as politicians, in particular, are not encouraging our people to learn to fish [but], more so, giving them fish.

Madam Speaker, I think that where the Honourable Minister of Education is going will alleviate that. Perhaps not in this generation or right now, but when I look at the plan I think that is where we are going. We want to enable people. We want to empower people. We want people to be entrepreneurs.

Madam Speaker, what have I seen in our workforce? I can repeat almost the same thing.

You know, people sit down and talk about it's the PPM's fault that the people do not have jobs. You know I think sometimes and wonder if I'm an angel or an earthly person, because it would appear the PPM has to be angels because they are miracle workers. But I am an earthly person. I think the PPM are earthly people.

When you go back to our life, say 10, 15 years ago with our workforce, the people who sat in these hallowed halls who made the decisions should have seen all of this coming. We could have seen it more than we would have seen the global economic crisis, because not even the USA saw that. But we could have seen that our people were not as skilled as those we were bringing here to work in this workforce that we have. We could have seen that and we could have done something about it.

Madam Speaker, that is what I saw when I came in. And this is why we must emphasise education, education, education. And, Madam Speaker, that is it. It is the passport to liberalisation, to democracy, to success.

What did I see over the last four years in terms of our cleanliness? It is better now! But it can be even much better than it is. Cleanliness is next to godliness and, Madam Speaker, notwithstanding that we have a department and a ministry that is responsible for the enhancement and tidiness of the Cayman Islands, that is something. And it is not irrelevant you know.

I will tell you something: When you do the research on crime there is close similarity between crime and untidiness. There is a close similarity between crime and places that are just rejected and looking derelict and look like a dump. We have to be careful with that. This is not just a government's job—it is our job. This is all of us.

Madam Speaker, what else have I seen since I have been here in the last four years? I have seen an increase of churches, Madam Speaker. And that is great. It means that the Cayman Islands people are keeping close to God. Hopefully, we are trying to be moral and Christian. And that is good. But what I have seen is that the churches, along with the community, must come together, extend that social arm so that the social transformation of the people, youth, children and everybody else is not just the responsibility of the Cayman Islands, is not just the responsibility of the Government in power.

And, Madam Speaker, this is very close to my heart, because I am the person I am because of a great church instruction, community instruction and a good mother. And I believe in that and I don't think we should move away from it. The Government was not in it at the time when I grew up. It was the building blocks of community. And, Madam Speaker, I believe that as a country we need to talk more with our faith based organisations in how to help our people, not just with their spirituality and their Christian ways, but also in terms, for example, with AIDS. We do not see a lot of the extension of the arm with that.

Madam Speaker, when we came in here, those are the things that we found. And these are the things that we have worked on. But it tells me that it takes time to move these things.

It takes money.

[inaudible interjection by the leader of the Opposition]

The Speaker: Pardon?

Hon. W. McKeever Bush: Is this a general review?

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, these are things in my four years that I have seen. I am saying to my people, bon voyage, and these are what I have seen.

I know the Leader of the Opposition perhaps opposes my way of speaking, but he will have his turn, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker—

[inaudible interjection by the Leader of the Opposition]

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: —I am comfortable in my skin—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Carry on.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: —when I'm doing what I'm doing. I'm not cursing people berating them at all, Madam Speaker.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Madam Speaker, I thought she was just speaking to me alone.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, at the end of . . .

Madam Speaker, can I speak alone please.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: You shouldn't call my name then.

I don't think this is a general [inaudible]—

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: Madam Speaker, what else have I learned in my four years? I believe that I have learned that the Cayman Islands people are more politically savvy. I think they do not see politics as a dirty word anymore—that it is about the aggregation of interests. It is about their interests, our interests, everybody's interests. Therefore, I am more comfortable and they are more comfortable with me talking about politics. They don't see politics as a politician, and that is good.

Madam Speaker, I think what enhanced that is that we have gone in the hamlets in every nook and cranny trying to talk to people about the Constitution, which is the framework for our development.

Madam Speaker, my tenure here has been a wonderful one. I was 99.9 per cent happy, and I owe that to the people of George Town and also to the people of the Cayman Islands. Through this medium I want to say to them that my journey is not yet finished.

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Oh yeah?

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: But at the end of the day, I have done well with them and they have done well with me. They have taught me and I have taught them. I have listened to them and they have listened to me. They advised me and I advised them.

So, Madam Speaker, my relationship with the people of George Town was a good relationship—and still is. They know where my heart is, that my heart is for the uplifting of the Caymanian people, that where I am they may be also—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: Yeah?

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: —that their children will be better than me; that their sisters and brothers will be better than me—

Hon. W. McKeeva Bush: I hear ya, Lulu.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: —that they will not have the challenges that I had.

Even though, Madam Speaker, the majority of the people in this country that are Caymanians were not born into wealth, we have seen them ascend into wealth and into success, which means that with the right political concepts, with the right heart, with the right programmes, with the right mindset, all of our children can do well.

Madam Speaker, the evening is going. I could stay here all night. It's a topic I like.

The Speaker: I can't, though.

Ms. Lucille D. Seymour: But, Madam Speaker, I know that you have to ride to North Side and you also have to say your piece and I await that.

But, Madam Speaker, I say to my people and I say to the staff here, who have done so well, and the Serjeant, thank you.

I say again to my people that if they entrust me for another four years that I will fight for them that where we are now, their children, their family and their friends will have the same opportunity seeking peace, progress and prosperity for the Cayman Islands.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister responsible for Health and Human Services.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise to briefly speak on this winding up of Parliament.

First of all, I would thank God, my Heavenly Father, for giving the health to continue to serve the people of Bodden Town, my constituents, and the Islands in general.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank you. You and I and the Leader of Government Business are second only to the Leader of the Opposition for longevity in this Parliament, which would indicate to me that in those four terms we have served the people of these Islands.

I want to thank the staff of this Legislative Assembly for the hard work, dedication, long hours that they have had to put in, not least of all Saturday morning when this Parliament stopped in Finance Committee at approximately 12.50 am (Saturday morning)!

Madam Speaker, there are those out there who say that we do nothing. And the hours that they plan to serve . . . I think they are in for what a good friend of mine calls [it], a shock of "surprisation".

Madam Speaker, as we all know, for every one of us this is a 24/7 job 365 days a year. It is about the dedication to our people and to making these Islands a better place for all.

I would like to take the opportunity to thank the staff and all of the departments that fall under my Ministry for the hard work and dedication that they have given to me to make these Islands a better place for all of us to live in. It is for all good intentions, Madam Speaker. There is no doubt in my mind that whatever happens after the next general election we will all continue to serve and do that which is right and best for our people.

I would encourage all to continue to serve for the betterment of our Islands and its people. Let us better serve and take care of our elderly and youth.

In my wind-up I would like to once again take this opportunity to admonish and beg parents and guardians, I beseech you to monitor your young children. Know where they are and whose company they are keeping. Make sure you know what they are watching on both television and the internet. As I have said dozens of times, the greatest investment a parent can make is the quality time you spend with your children.

I jotted a little note here, Madam Speaker. Just this morning I was speaking with Ms. Reba Dilbert. I promised her that I would offer congratulations on behalf of this Parliament for the accomplishment that she did. Certainly an ambassador for these Islands in what she has been able to accomplish in the arts and crafts and whatever.

Finally, in closing, Madam Speaker, let us all remember our Heavenly Father who has so wonderfully blessed these beautiful Islands in so many ways. We must not depart from His ways, always follow His guidance, and never, never compromise His standards for those of corrupt human beings.

I would like to take this opportunity, Madam Speaker, to wish to both sides of this House good health, including their families, blessings upon them. Always remember in this upcoming election that it is about the people we serve, our choice to make them better.

Going into two decades now, Madam Speaker, I have put myself forward for the people of Bodden Town. Once again on 20 May I go before them in humility and integrity as someone (as I have always said in many of my statements) [who is] always there for you.

They know where I come from. They know what I stand for. I never, ever compromise my standards for anyone. That was the way my dear departed parents raised me and I will live that until I go to join them at some time in the future.

Madam Speaker, this has been a special House. We have worked very closely and done much in these three years and almost ten months. I would encourage all of us to think along in that vein. We all had our misgivings.

For those of my competitors in Bodden Town who have said that we have done nothing, I would just request them to look at our last manifesto and see what we have done. I estimate between 22 to 25 different projects, Madam Speaker, which we promised that we would do and then some more. There are still a few left, not the least of which is the Savannah Gulley. But I am hoping once all of the bureaucracy, the opportunity of democracy in which people have the opportunity to object, that we will get that going.

But we have come a long way, Madam Speaker. There are rough times ahead. But I say that if we could survive Hurricane Ivan, with God's help we can survive anything. It brought out the best in all of us Caymanians, but we tend to forget so quickly. He blessed us so wonderfully, so very wonderfully. But we seem to have short memories.

And I will just remind my Caymanian people, remember the Israelites when they came out of Egypt, how they rejected Him. He kept them marching that mountain for 40 years until they finally listened to him. He is sending a couple of messages to us here in Cayman. Our future is ours. We can make the decisions and do the right things, but always remember how our ancestors lived, their closeness to God, their respect.

Let us get away from all the trash and rubbish on the television and the Internet. Let us get back to the standards we were brought up that brought these Cayman Islands, with our men at sea and our women at home managing our affairs to one of the most successful nations on earth.

Madam Speaker, as I know, you are heading for retirement. I want to wish you the best of everything. It has been an enjoyable experience working with you. Madam Speaker, I have the greatest respect in this world. May God bless us all!

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I do not think I need to elaborate on the comments offered by my colleague, the Third Official Member, who ably spoke on behalf of us. But I felt that as it was possibly your last time in the Chair that I should personally thank you for the warmth, kindness, and guidance that you have afforded me as an occasional visitor to these Chambers, and to say that I have never taken any exception to the fact that you always double check my allegiance every time I come. I understand why, Madam Speaker.

Let me also add my thanks to other Members who are here for the collegial warmth that they extend to me as a visitor. I am indeed grateful for the relationship that I am able to enjoy with all of them. I would like to wish all of them good health and success in their endeavours, whether they are in this arena or elsewhere.

If you would allow me, Madam Speaker, I think I should also, as one who has had the privilege to enjoy Bodden Town status for the last 27 years, but who, by birth, is a North Sider—

The Speaker: Hutland!

Hon. Donovan W. F. Ebanks: —and a Hutlander! to not miss the opportunity on behalf of—since I'm the only North Sider in the Chamber besides you—to say on behalf of the good people of North Side how grateful we all are to you for your extended term of service, and of how proud we are of the level to which you have ascended and the way you have conducted yourself in representing the community.

You have been an outstanding model to us. We are proud of you and wish you good health, much happiness and whatever the future holds for you.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Does any other Member wish to speak? Does any other Member wish to speak?

Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, over the past three years and ten months the people of Bodden Town have given me the privilege to serve in this honourable House as one of their representatives, and I want to take this opportunity to sincerely thank them for that privilege and support over this term.

Madam Speaker, I have spent only one term in this Legislative Assembly, but in terms of public services, this year (2009) marks 29 years of public service for me. I want to say a few words about that because I do not know that there is anything more satisfying and gratifying than public service.

Madam Speaker, as all Members of this honourable House will know, I started that service in 1980 in the Royal Cayman Islands Police Service (RCIPS). I just wanted to say a few words about that, because at this point in our history the RCIPS—which is certainly near and dear to my heart—is facing some challenges. While these are not challenges that are insurmountable, they are challenges that need to be addressed, and addressed quickly.

I speak about the police service, Madam Speaker, because I believe that the only real opportunity for us to get things where they ought to be in the RCIPS . . . and let us acknowledge here that we have some great police officers in this country. But we also have other great police officers in this country who are no longer in the Service. And while I am not going to stand here today to suggest that all of the former police officers are suitable for rehiring in the RCIPS, certainly a large number of them have left the Service in circumstances and for reasons which really should not have caused them to leave the Service. Madam Speaker, there ought to be and there needs to be a programme of incentives to try to attract more of those officers back into the Service. And one just walked in front of me, Madam Speaker.

I say to the Serjeant-at-Arms and, indeed, all former police officers—particularly those who have left the Service more recently—that they need to consider rejoining the Service and helping to reinstate the confidence that is needed in the RCIPS.

Madam Speaker, I have to tell you that I have a great deal of gratitude for the Police Service. It has afforded me many, many opportunities; many training opportunities. I had opportunities to train with various other police services around the world, including the FBI, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Scotland Yard.

I was also very fortunate during my time in the Service to be able to study law at the Cayman Islands Law School to get my law degree and pass my professional practice course. I say all of that to say that there are great opportunities available for Caymanians in the RCIPS and I want to encourage those who had been there before and those who may be interested but have yet to make the move to apply to do so and to do so for love of country and with service in mind.

Madam Speaker, while I was in the Police Service (and again, this speaks to opportunities that can open up in the Police Service) an opportunity became available because the last three years of my 17-year service in the Police Service were spent in police administration. So I had the opportunity to work closely with central government, people in Finance and Personnel and other areas. And so, Madam Speaker, when the opportunity came for me to move out of the Police Service and into central government, I decided after 17 years to make that move and to join the Ministry of Tourism as the then Deputy Permanent Secretary and from there to Permanent Secretary. I eventually resigned from that post in 2004 and decided to seek political office subsequent to that. At this point in time I now serve the country as the Minister of Tourism.

Madam Speaker, serving the country as Minister of Tourism has certainly given me a much broader perspective on governance issues in the country. I want to take a few minutes to talk about tourism. I want to say that the strong public and private sector partnership that we enjoy today in the industry is something that we should all be very proud of, whether we work in government or in the private sector. It has served the country well and it is why we have had the successes that we have had in the last three years and ten months.

Madam Speaker, however we want to consider it, I have had to serve the country as Minister of Tourism during some of the most challenging times. When this Government took office the country was still very much devastated from Hurricane Ivan. The tourism industry for the most part, with the exception perhaps of the cruise sector, was still very much in ruins and in need of recovery. We worked tirelessly at that effort and the tourism industry emerged with a much stronger tourism product than we had before the disaster.

I have served the country as Minister of Tourism during what we all know now was the international airline crisis, when airlines around the world went belly-up, closed down, returned aircrafts. In cases where the airlines did not go bankrupt and did not close their operations, there were significant reductions in airlift and in their route networks bringing additional challenges to destinations like the Cayman Islands.

More recently, Madam Speaker, we have been faced with Hurricane Paloma. While it has had more of an impact on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, our Sister Islands are very much a part of this country, and what they had to face and continue to face with Hurricane Paloma during the recovery process is almost exactly (if not exactly) what Grand Cayman had to face following Hurricane Ivan. As I stand here today we are poised to reopen Cayman Brac to tourism in the very near future, and we are very pleased to be in that position.

Now, Madam Speaker, as if all of that was not enough, like all other countries in the region and around the world we are facing the global economic financial crisis. Notwithstanding all of that, Madam Speaker, the Cayman Islands tourism industry, despite what the naysayers may say, is performing well and has fared much better than most countries in the region. The numbers speak for themselves, and they are available for those who are interested.

Madam Speaker, I understood from the very beginning that in order for me, as a representative of my constituents of Bodden Town, to achieve the things I needed to achieve for the district, it was important for the economy of this country to do well. As we all know, the economy of this country is essentially supported by two industries, tourism and financial services.

So I understood very, very clearly from the beginning, that in order for me to have the funding that I needed for my other two colleagues, the Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, to carry out the projects and programmes that we needed to do in our district, it was important for tourism and financial services to do well. Neither Bodden Town nor any of the districts would have done well unless we maintained a robust economy.

But these are challenging times and now more than ever experience is what counts. Now is not the time to change to the unknown and the unproven. Nobody in this country, Madam Speaker, should gamble with that. These are difficult times, and it is going to take a steady and consistent hand, a hand with experience to see us through these times.

Madam Speaker, those who will be opposing us in this upcoming general election have already begun the rhetoric. I am going to speak now specifically about my constituency of Bodden Town, because all you have heard day and night is that Bodden Town has been neglected and that the three representatives have done nothing.

Madam Speaker, the East/West Arterial, the first phase was opened within the last three years and ten months. I wonder who did that. It was this Government—the People's Progressive Movement.

Madam Speaker, we have repaired, refurbished and upgraded many roads in the district. We have installed speed bumps, we have installed street lights. None of us are going to stand before this honourable House today and suggest that all of the work is done. That is never the case. No government has ever been able to achieve that. And so there is still a lot of work to be done. We understand that but we have proven that we are prepared, willing and able to do it. And so continuity is important.

We have repaired, rebuilt and renovated too many houses to count in the Bodden Town district damaged as a result of Hurricane Ivan. I wonder who did that. It was done within the last three years and ten months. Madam Speaker, it was the PPM Government.

Madam Speaker, when I came into central government in 1997 (I think it was) in the Ministry of Tourism, from that point . . . and I understood that even before 1997 there was talk about the issue with respect to the Savannah gully and the problems that the residents of Savannah and Newlands faced as a result of that. Madam Speaker, from 1997 there was a budget in this country to address that problem. And it was never addressed in any real way until this term—in the last three years and ten months—when we got the expertise on board that we needed to study the problem. They have completed the study. We have had public consultations in Savannah and Newlands. They have recommended the solution. We have identified that the funding will come more than likely from the Environmental Protection Fund and so, once we get now beyond the Planning permission—and I understand as well that there are one or two objections to the proposed solution, and the objectors must have their say as well. But once we get beyond that point we then move to the solution and to the installation of the seawall for that community.

So, I say all of that to say that regardless of what our critics might say about us, this Government—the PPM Government—has done more in relation to that project than any other government in this country. And I can say that here today without any fear of contradiction. The truth of the matter, Madam Speaker, is that nothing was done in the past. And the same is true in relation to the flooding issue in the Cumber Avenue area of Bodden Town.

We have had the issue recently again, as you know, and while many residents in that area will tell you that this has been a problem they have been experiencing from the time they can remember, we brought the National Roads Authority in. They have done the study. They have prepared a report and have come up with what they believe is the most appropriate solutions—because as we understand it, there is more than one component to the solution that they are recommending.

So, Madam Speaker, again, the next phase with that is to move to the implementation to address that problem.

Madam Speaker, the little Post Office in Savannah that had existed there for so many years and served the community well, while it was an attractive little post office, the Bodden Town community, in the Savannah and Newlands area, in particular, being the fastest growing area on the Island, very rapidly outgrew that post office and it could no longer cater to the needs of the community. And so, Madam Speaker, we built a new post office in Savannah with, I think, 2,000 post office boxes.

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Twenty-five hundred.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Twenty-five hundred post office boxes. Again, Madam Speaker, done in the last three years and ten months. So, who would have done that? The People's Progressive Movement Government.

Madam Speaker, in consultation with the three MLAs for Bodden Town, the Ministry of Agriculture established market at the Grounds in Lower Valley, a weekly attraction and one which is well patronized and certainly attended by many people on the weekends. There are plans for a much more enhanced agri-tourism attraction at that site. I certainly thank the Minister of Agriculture, the Leader of Government Business, for his interest in that. And as he knows, he has my Ministry, the Ministry of Tourism's full support in moving forward with that project.

Madam Speaker, I have spoken more recently about the establishment of a coast guard, and while that is not a district project, I mention it simply because the marine base that will support that enhanced Marine Unit will also be situated in Savannah and Newlands, and is now under construction.

Madam Speaker, we became aware even before we were elected that the rather informal arrangements for launching boats in the Newlands area was inadequate for the demand presented by the community. And so we have established a proper launching ramp in Newlands. As I now speak, the dock which will be adjacent to that launching ramp is under construction. Those who use those facilities will know that, particularly on weekends, there is significant demand for them and they are well appreciated by the community. Again, done in the last three years and ten months. And I wonder who did that! The People's Progressive Movement Government.

As part of the Go-East Initiative, Madam Speaker, we also announced that we would be enhancing the beach facilities in Bodden Town—the gateway to the eastern districts. So, we purchased two parcels of property, one on the east and one on the west side of the CoeWood Public Beach. I won't necessarily go into any detail here because I gave an update on that project in this honourable House just a few days ago. But we have all the property that we need to proceed with that project and we are certainly proceeding with it. As I indicated recently, we will be doing a groundbreaking ceremony for that shortly. All of the permits are now in place with the exception of the building control permit which is now being considered by that unit. The coastal works licences are in place and we will be breaking ground there very shortly. Madam Speaker, again, all done in the last three years, ten months.

When we took office in May 2005, no attempts had been made to rebuild our destroyed civic centre in Bodden Town. We took this project on board and we very rapidly got the plans developed and proceeded to repair and upgrade the facility. I say upgrade because the Bodden Town Civic Centre, while it has been reopened for some time now, actually has an additional floor. What we have been able to do as a result of that is to reserve space on the bottom floor of the facility for the Vehicle Licensing Unit for the eastern districts. And as I speak now, the partitions are being installed on the second floor of the civic centre for the Vehicle Licensing Unit.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Sorry?

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: The bottom floor. What did I say?

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: On the bottom floor of the civic centre for the Vehicle Licensing Unit for the Bodden Town, East End and North Side districts.

Madam Speaker, when we took office the Library in Bodden Town was also still laying in ruins; completely destroyed from Hurricane Ivan. We moved rapidly to get that repaired and reopened, and not just as a library, but as a library and learning centre with computers and learning areas.

I should take a moment here to thank Mr. Bob Watler for donating the labour and materials for the roof on that project, and on behalf of the community I wish to offer him our thanks and appreciation for his community spirit.

Madam Speaker, just yesterday we reopened the G. Haig Bodden playing field in Bodden Town. I will stick my neck out here to say that the most exciting part of the ceremony was the two (should I call them) accurate penalties that were scored by the Minister of Education and myself.

[laughter and interjections]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: The keeper didn't stand a chance, Madam Speaker, but it was certainly a very nice occasion. The facilities have been upgraded and I want to thank our colleague, the Minister of Education, for focusing on this project and for repairing the facilities and the bleachers and the stand for the enjoyment of the Bodden Town community. I also take the opportunity to congratulate the Bodden Town team for their victory yesterday—a four to one victory in the quarter finals at the Bodden Town playing field.

Madam Speaker, the Bodden Town Primary School field was also relit in the last three years and ten months. Again I ask, who did that? It was the PPM's Government!

Madam Speaker, when we took office in 2005 the only district in this country not to get a "Dart Park" was the Bodden Town district. We asked why. Why was it that the Bodden Town district is the only district that did not benefit from that programme? And so we started work on that programme and, again, in the last three years and ten months we were very, very grateful that we were in a position to open the Harwell McCoy Senior Community Park in Bodden Town.

Madam Speaker, we take the opportunity to thank the Dart Foundation for their contribution to that. As I understand it, the facility now is in the operational control of the Parks Unit.

Madam Speaker, the Nurse Josie's Senior [Center] was opened in Bodden Town in the last three years and ten months. Again, in opening that facility and the Park itself, there was a house which was actually encroaching on the Park and had been extended onto a portion of Crown property. I took the decision to use funding from my Ministry to purchase that house so that it could be incorporated into the Nurse Josie's Senior Center and the Park and in consideration of where the Mission House is in proximity to all of that, that we would bring all of those components together.

Working closely now with Ms. Tessa Bodden from the National Trust, will essentially become an opportunity for us to offer some dedicated tours around that area which will involve the Mission House and the Nurse Josie's Senior Center.

Madam Speaker, I wonder again who did that! It was this Government—the People's Progressive Movement!

The playing field in Breakers was upgraded with new playfield equipment, and work is continuing on that site. Again, done in the last three years and ten months! There are also plans for a postal kiosk in the Breakers area.

Madam Speaker, they say we have done nothing. I wonder who did that!

We have installed guardrails in the Breakers area. Those of us who would have gone up there after Hurricane Ivan will know that there was significant damage to the road in Breakers as a result of Hurricane Ivan. The road had to be essentially rebuilt in that area and we have now installed guardrails in the Breakers area.

Madam Speaker, we have completed site works for the Bodden Town Emergency Services Centre, and this project began originally as a fire station for the Bodden Town district because that is a project we had committed to during the campaign. But, Madam Speaker, lessons were learned during Hurricane Ivan and we all know that the police officers had to evacuate their Bodden Town Police Station during Hurricane Ivan due to flooding from the sea. So, we decided to enhance this project and not just build a fire station, but build this Emergency Services Facility that will house the fire station, the new police station and a medical emergency response unit.

Madam Speaker, while that project, as was announced by the Honourable Leader of Government Business, has been temporarily put on hold, it is obviously going to be proceeding. We have completed the site works, we have ordered the fire trucks for the facility and the fire service is in a position to staff up for that station whenever the appropriate time is in order to ensure that there is adequate staff when the facility is opened.

Madam Speaker, we have also completed the site works for the new Bodden Town Civic Centre which will also double as a category-A hurricane shelter. This project has been temporarily put on hold but the site work continues and will be completed shortly. This project was necessary because the original civic centre (the one which we have repaired recently and is now used as a meeting centre) is not suitable as a Category-A shelter. And we learned lessons from Hurricane Ivan. But it is in fact a Category-B hurricane shelter that will be used to house individuals following an event, particularly individuals who may have lost their homes.

So, Madam Speaker, again all done in the last three years and ten months! I ask again, I wonder who has done that. The People's Progressive Movement Government.

We have recently vested property in the National Housing Development Trust for the construction of affordable homes in the Pease Bay area. So, the property has been vested, plans are being developed and the programme is advancing. I wonder again who has done that. The People's Progressive Movement Government.

When we took office in May 2005, our national historic site, Pedro St. James, also was there in ruins, essentially destroyed by Hurricane Ivan. We rebuilt it, reopened it, and it has been used very heavily for community events since that time. I wonder who did that.

Madam Speaker, we see what we term a small town blossoming in the Savannah and Newlands area, where you can go to that little Countryside Shopping Village and essentially access just about any kind of service that you would need. We see other restaurants in the area and we participated in and facilitated the opening of the Countryside Shopping Village. It is certainly something that the Savannah and Newlands community and, indeed, the eastern districts appreciate because now they don't necessarily have to go all the way into town to access those services.

So, Madam Speaker, I mentioned all of that to get back to where I started in relation to district projects. Because when they go to the community to claim that the PPM Government—and specifically the three Elected Members for Bodden Town, myself, the Honourable Minister for Health and Human Services and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town—have done nothing for the district, they really ought to look at our record. They ought to speak from facts and stop attempts at misleading the people.

Madam Speaker, I have also been reminded that through a partnership with St. Matthews University, they have established a veterinary school adjacent to the Department of Agriculture in Lower Valley. This is a great example of the type of public/private sector partnerships that can and should be undertaken in this country to ensure that we achieve the type of infrastructure we need.

Madam Speaker, I was not actually going to speak about this issue today (this next issue which I am going to talk about), but given recent events I believe that I ought to say something about it. I am not going to be long on this subject, at least, I hope not.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, if you are going to be another 20 to 25 minutes I think I have to take a suspension.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I'm going to be at least 10 to 15 minutes.

The Speaker: Okay.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: So, if it is convenient now we can . . .

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Okay.

The Speaker: But if everybody is going to speak for an hour we will be here until midnight.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I want to mention the Commission of Enquiry, because there was much said about that.

What I did in 2004, when I resigned from office as Permanent Secretary and decided to seek political office subsequent to that, is certainly no secret to this country. What I had to say I said very clearly and very loudly from the public platform during the last election campaign. The then Governor, Dinwiddy, clearly saw nothing wrong with that.

Madam Speaker, when these allegations were originally made about me removing files from the Ministry I said very clearly and very publicly from the very beginning that I had taken my personal files with me. I even wrote a letter in the newspaper that said that. The then Governor clearly saw nothing wrong with that. In fact, he even wrote me a letter indicating that he understood this to be the normal practice and that, therefore, he did not see the need for any further action.

Madam Speaker, when his successor decided to establish this Commission of Enquiry, I wondered about it. I wondered about it because I certainly did not have anything to hide; I said what I had to say during the last campaign. As I said, I said it very publicly. But I decided it is best to allow this to run its course, and so it did, Madam Speaker. But I have to tell you that there were times during that Commission of Enquiry that I began to ask myself the question whether I had done the right thing; whether it was right for me, in seeing certain irregularities in government, to challenge them in the way that I did.

I began to question that and to question myself. Questioning notwithstanding, I came to the conclusion that regardless of how my opponents felt about the situation, what was more important than anything else to me was sticking to those traditional Caymanian principles of honesty, integrity and doing what had to be done without fear or favour.

You see, Madam Speaker, I feared that this country was rapidly heading down the road of institutionalised corruption. And that is not something that I could have lived with without trying to address it in some way.

Madam Speaker, I have to tell you that while that was a challenging time for me, I believed then and I believe now that I did the right thing. No one can convince me that the people of this country have lost their moral compass. No one can do that! And I am convinced that the majority of people in this country are law abiding citizens and are people who would have preferred to have the knowledge that they did leading into the last general election, than to go into that general election without that knowledge.

Madam Speaker, it was a significant risk that I took, and a sacrifice that I made leaving what was a relatively comfortable job in the public service as permanent secretary for the very, very unpredictable and uncertain political waters that I entered into subsequent to my resignation.

Madam Speaker, I mention that because I want to contrast the approach here to what has recently happened in the Turks and Caicos Islands. But before I go there I want to say this: In establishing the Commission of Enquiry here in Grand Cayman in relation to this matter, what happened there was one of the worst possible messages that could have been sent to the public servants in this country. Because what it said, Madam Speaker—albeit perhaps in a rather indirect and disguised way—what it said to public servants was: If you see irregularities in Government don't you dare expose it, because if you do you are going to face something like this (a commission of enquiry).

I want to say to public servants today, Madam Speaker, because I think I owe it to them, I want to say to them today that this Government's position is, if you see irregularities anywhere, expose it! No one can do anything to you. We have moved on from that era, Madam Speaker. This is now a government in the sunshine. Freedom of information is here to stay whether people in this House like it or not!

An Hon. Member: Whether some people.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Whether some people in this House like it or not, because I am clear that the people on this side of the House like it—we brought the legislation, Madam Speaker.

But I wanted to say that to public servants because it would be most unfortunate if this situation sends that type of message to them. That needs to be corrected, that they should not expose irregularities because this is what they will face.

So, let us contrast that to what happened in the Turks and Caicos Islands. What happened in Turks could certainly be very, very instructive to Her Majesty's representative here.

Madam Speaker, what happened here was a Commission of Enquiry into the exposure of the irregularities in government. What happened in the Turks and Caicos Islands was actually what a commission of enquiry should be used for, and that is to enquire into the actual corruption itself.

What happened, Madam Speaker? Why did that not happen here? Why was there not an enquiry into the irregularities?

There are a whole series of Auditor General's Reports lying on the Table. Yet, while we hear statements that the Royal Cayman Islands Police Service is not equipped and cannot be trusted to investigate corruptions within its own ranks, it is somehow good enough to investigate it in other areas. Madam Speaker, I wonder about all of that and why there was not some special team of trusted advisors or investigators to look into this matter.

Madam Speaker, what has happened in the Turks and Caicos is that the Government has been brought to its knees. The British Government has taken direct rule of the Turks and Caicos Islands. I feared, Madam Speaker, if we had not changed course in 2005 we could possibly be facing a similar situation.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: And the suspension of the Constitution.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, the Turks and Caicos Islands' Constitution has been suspended with the exception of those parts that relate to the Governor, the police, the judiciary and other essential services, such as that.

What we suspect is going to happen next—

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, can we move off of Turks and Caicos Islands?

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: I am going to move off—

The Speaker: We are just singing swan songs this evening.

[laughter]

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Well, Madam Speaker, I said I was not going to spend much time on this so I just want to complete my thoughts on this because we believe that what is going to happen next, based on the press release, is a full fledged criminal investigation in the Turks and Caicos Islands. And I suspect that net is going to spread rather wide. And we already know that at least one local company has been implicated in that.

So, as I said before on national radio, I encourage the people of Cayman to pay attention to that, look at the reports and let's see where that all leads.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: I never been there in my life.

Hon. Charles E. Clifford: Madam Speaker, I have certainly outlined our achievements in the district. I want to take this opportunity now to thank all of the staff in my Ministry and, indeed, in all of the agencies and departments under my Ministry, the Department of Tourism, Department of Environment, Cayman Islands Investment Bureau, Cayman Islands Development Bank, Tourism Attractions Board, Public Transport Unit, Liquor Licensing Unit, Port Authority, Airports Authority and Boatswain's Beach.

I take the opportunity to thank all of the hard-working staff in all of those agencies for their support and implementation of this Government's policies.

Madam Speaker, I am very proud to stand here today as the Minister of Tourism in a ministry that has an all Caymanian management staff. Madam Speaker, I have a team of dedicated, qualified and energetic Caymanians at the helm in the Ministry; the Permanent Secretary, Mrs. Gloria McField-Nixon, the two Deputies, Mrs. Oneisha Richards and Mr. Samuel Rose; the Manager of Corporate Communications, Mrs. Andrea Fa'amoe; the Human Resources Manager, Mrs. Dawn McLean-Sawney, and, of course, I would like to thank my personal assistant, Mrs. Natasha Bodden for her support over the course of this term.

Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the broader civil service and public service for their commitment to the cause and for their hard work over the course of this term, in particular, the staff in the Legislative Assembly for their very, very hard work, on behalf of the Members of the Legislative Assembly. We know that at times it is challenging for them, but we certainly appreciate their diligence and hard work.

There are things that I look forward to in the future, Madam Speaker, such as the promotion of another one of our very young Caymanians, Mr. Shomari Scott, to the substantive post of Director of Tourism. I certainly hope that that will happen in the not too distant future. He is very capable and has the support of the private sector.

Madam Speaker, you have announced your retirement from politics. I have had the privilege of working with you, both as a public servant and since May 2005 as Minister of Tourism. I want to sincerely thank you, Madam Speaker, from the bottom of my heart for your wisdom, your counsel and your guidance to all of us in this honourable House.

Madam Speaker, we know that you are tough sometimes. But that is how a Speaker is supposed to be. And we understand that when we get in the heat of debate it takes an effective Speaker, like yourself, to keep us all in line. And so, Madam Speaker, I too take my hat off to you and thank you very much for your advice and guidance, and for your long service to this country and to the people of North Side.

Madam Speaker, we wish you the very best in your retirement and as always, we are here for you if you need anything.

Madam Speaker, I just want to close by saying that what we have managed to achieve in this country and, in my case, in my constituency in Bodden Town particularly, has been the result of team work—the Minister of Health, myself and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town working together. And I want to, in particular, thank the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town because as the Backbench Member of the team he has been on the ground doing the work, providing the feedback, carrying the dialogue with the Minister of Health and me. Madam Speaker, we have worked as a coherent team and the results, as I have indicated, speak for themselves.

Madam Speaker, as I said, this is certainly not the time for us to change direction. Experience counts now more than ever, and we have proven that we have that experience and we can deliver on our promises. So, I humbly ask in my concluding remarks today for the people of Bodden Town who have given us the privilege to serve them for the last three years and ten months to support us again in the general election on 20 May [2009] so that we, the three MLAs for the district of Bodden Town, can continue the very important work we have started on their behalf.

Madam Speaker, I wish God's richest blessings on all Members of the honourable House, on yourself, Madam Speaker, and on the people of Bodden Town and indeed the wider Cayman Islands community. I ask God to continue to protect these beloved Islands that we all call home.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Third Elected Member for Bodden Town

Mr. Osbourne V. Bodden: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I stand here this evening very honoured and, indeed, privileged to have served my country and the district of Bodden Town for the past three-plus years. It seems not long ago when we came in here and sat against the opposite wall and waited to be called to take our seats with nerves wrangling and so much to learn and so much to do. Here I am now, Madam Speaker, having served my rookie term, thanks to the people of Bodden Town, a much wiser and much more able representative.

The learning curve was steep. There are no books to tell you the Do's and Don'ts. We are governed by our Standing Orders in this parliament and we get by with that and with the assistance of our colleagues. We learn the demands of the job every day, which are many.

Madam Speaker, it has been a very gratifying and educational period for me, one where I feel I have given it my all and I have served well along with my two colleagues, the Minister of Health, [the Honourable] Mr. Eden, and the Minister of Tourism, [the Honourable] Mr. Clifford. We formed a formidable team in the district of Bodden Town, one that works hard and that works well together.

I see that the Opposition's campaign sign is up on Guardhouse Hill. On the bottom of that banner it says "Bodden Town deserves better." Well, what I say to that is that it is a pity that the sign came out four years late. Madam Speaker, Bodden Town has had better.

As I said at a recent meeting, when people were asking about what we were doing to stimulate the economy and the stimulus package we have been working on as a government, we are not handing out funds as they are doing in the US. We have put our money where our mouths are and put money into projects for the betterment of this country. As I said then too, the US was still playing catch-up in many ways because we got rid of Bush in 2005! It took them until 2008.

We have worked hard, Madam Speaker. This is an honest, hardworking Government. I am so grateful to my Minister of Tourism who outlined the many projects. I do not have to go over that. Anyone listening can tell what Bodden Town—especially the district of Bodden Town, which was neglected for so long—got during this administration. We make no apologies for that. We have a lot more to do, but we have achieved much.

Bear in mind, Madam Speaker, that we came in the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan with everything in chaos—government, society, and infrastructure. Everything needed to be rebuilt. The previous administration had started the process, but we had to wrap that process up, Madam Speaker. And that was not easy work.

Not long after that we then embarked on a constitutional modernisation process, which took a lot of our time in the planning stages. Although we launched the actual public segment of that back in January 2008, the work on the constitutional modernisation process and all of our behind-the-scenes work with our consultant and our secretariat had been going on from 2006. There was so much work being done. Unfortunately, we are now exiting office in the midst of a worldwide economic downturn.

We had Hurricane Paloma [hit] our sister isle of Cayman Brac. We have had our share of challenges, Madam Speaker. In three years and ten months, to have overcome so much and to have achieved so much is phenomenal. Maybe we have been too ambitious for our own good. Maybe we did not take enough time to boast and talk about what we were doing; hence, we get accused and [people say], We didn't know that. You guys should have said that. You guys should have told us that.

We have had a Government that has held weekly press briefings—the first time in the history of this country—telling the people what is going on. We have had our Ministers and MLAs on talk shows on TV. We have had articles in the newspapers. We have spoken from other public forums, such as meetings. Yet there are those who prefer not to hear, just so that they can criticise and say, The Government has done nothing, we need change.

Madam Speaker, as I said, we had our change in 2005 and we are moving on. The good people of Cayman understand the need to keep the good ship Cayman stable.

We cannot be blamed for everything that is broken in these Cayman Islands. We have had to embark on a serious and very ambitious infrastructural project. We are accused of putting the country in debt and mortgaging the future of our young people. Madam Speaker, our children know better because they understand that this Government is concerned about developing them through its educational policies, through its opportunity for all Caymanians, through its fair policies, through the large number of scholarships granted [by] the Minister of Education with his drive and his zest to improve and offer a first class education in these Islands—the number one priority of the PPM, one that we make no excuse for, Madam Speaker.

We are constantly working to find ways and means through immigration policies and all of our work related policies to find ways and means to improve the lot of each Caymanian. I firmly believe, and I make no excuses when I say this, that once they are prepared academically and mentally to take their rightful position, Caymanians should have it. This is their country, Madam Speaker. Any country that does not take care of its own I do not think is any country at all.

We welcome foreigners. We embrace people who wish to come and reside here and make this their home. This is the only sensible way we can grow as a country. We have to get over this mentality that, you know, I am Caymanian but you have Cayman status. The great USA is a country of immigrants. But I maintain that the people to whom we give Cayman status should be the right people. This country is small enough to know who that is, Madam Speaker. And once we do that we will benefit from what people are bringing to us and they will benefit from being a part of us. We can be a strong island nation, Madam Speaker.

My vision for this country is for our people to do the very best, not just to sit at the edge of the table and pick up scraps, but to sit at the table. There are those who wish . . . and they are not necessarily in this House because I believe that what I am saying here is shared by both sides of this honourable House, Madam Speaker. It is a common view. But there are those among us who would say that it is sufficient for Caymanians to simply develop these islands and get the spill-off benefits, as it were.

I say we should be at the forefront of that development, Madam Speaker. I make no excuses for that. I believe that if we prepare our people, and it will take time through education, but there is no reason why we cannot have 90 per cent, 95 per cent literacy in this country. We should strive for 100 per cent, for that matter, but we have to prepare our people academically and otherwise and re-tool whoever needs re-tooling to ensure that they take their rightful place.

Madam Speaker, that is my vision. I hope that I will be part of the next Government because I am confident that the PPM will be returned to office. We have served well. And with all of our detractors, the sensible people know that there is always a silent majority in this country. Those who run up their mouths on the talk shows day in and day out are not the only voices; they are not the only votes out there, Madam Speaker. The people voted us in, in a large landslide victory and I believe that the people will return us to office to continue the good work.

The one thing we do not need at this time, Madam Speaker, is shifting direction. Yes, we have borrowed and we are financing a lot of what we are doing. But we are doing that within limits that are set out in the Public Management and Finance Law. It is not unlike your home, where you borrow sensibly what the bank will allow you.

As revenue shrinks, we shrink our projects. We do not like to, but we have to cut back. And we have done that, Madam Speaker. We have shown prudent management. We have shown reprioritising of projects. We have taken on the most important stuff and left the rest to come behind. That is why we have a lot more to do.

As my good friend, the Minister of Tourism, said, no government, no administration can come in here and do all the work. This is one job you cannot work yourself out of because there will always be need for more and more work to be done. An administration will be judged on its merit.

Madam Speaker, I have been honoured to serve in this honourable House with colleagues on this side and with colleagues on the other side of the House. I believe we have been a good class of legislators. Yes, we have had our times when things have gotten a bit heated, but generally we are a fraternity and we have to look out for one another.

Many people do not understand the work of what it takes to be a representative. And a lot of people are shouting up now saying that the country needs change, and they are going to come here and bring in all this experience. Madam Speaker, the experience is here; it is a proven team that we have working together. My colleagues and I in Bodden Town have an excellent relationship. There are no hidden agendas. We work openly and transparently with one another. I know that applies to all of the districts in which we have representation.

So, Madam Speaker, I want to thank everyone that has made my first term in office an enjoyable one. I will start by thanking the good people of Bodden Town. I have enjoyed working with them and working for them. I think I have listened. I have answered. I have gone the extra mile. Nothing more than what is expected, Madam Speaker. But it has been a very humbling experience and one where it is the ultimate in public service. I have served publicly in terms of community pretty much all my life in community groups through the Lions Club. But when one comes to political office, you are then at the wishes and fancies of everyone 24/7. You also have to consider your own family at the same time.

I want to also thank my family who have stood by me every step of the way and continue to do so. I thank them for their patience and understanding the long hours away from home.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the staff of the Legislative Assembly who I have had an excellent relationship with. They have made my stay here comfortable and serviced all my requirements as needed.

I would also like to especially thank you, Madam Speaker. You remind me sometimes of my mother—tough, but loving! You are the mother hen of this House. You take your chicks in the right direction. Your advice and gentle nudges now and again prove so useful. We certainly enjoyed having you as part of our team, although, because of your duties as Speaker, not the way we would have liked. But you made it clear that your duties as Speaker were separated from your representative duties. Therefore you kept a respectful distance. But you did represent well all the same, Madam Speaker. You fought for your district and you performed admirably as the Speaker of these Islands.

So, Madam Speaker, as you move on from political life . . . I won't say retirement, because I know you. You're young and fit and still ready to rumble! But as you move on from being a political representative, I would like to take this opportunity to wish you all the very best.

Madam Speaker, I know there is much more to be said and I have pretty much outlined what I have observed and what I have tried to do in my first term here. I am hoping that, with God's help and the good people of Bodden Town, I will be returned once more on 20 May to be a representative of Bodden Town and a representative of these Cayman Islands that I love so dearly.

I thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak I will do the final remarks from the Chair—

Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Capt. A. Eugene Ebanks: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker and honourable Members of the Legislative Assembly, first I would like to congratulate you, Madam Speaker, on your retirement. You have served the country well for many years, and for that we applaud you. I want to wish you every success in your future endeavours. At the end of this legislative term I want to take a brief moment to thank all of you for the hard work and dedication you have shown in managing the affairs of the country.

A big thank you to all the hardworking staff of the Legislative Assembly. It has been a pleasure working with you and I look forward to working with you in the future.

I would especially like to thank God for giving me the health and strength, and to the good people of West Bay for their continued support and faith in me. I want to assure the good people of West Bay that I will continue to serve them in the future as I have in the past eight years. Even though there have been many challenges, I have enjoyed my years of service and my colleagues and I have achieved many legislative victories on behalf of the good people of these Islands. God willing, I look forward to the opportunity to serve, if it is the will of the people, for yet another term.

As we move from the Legislative Assembly into this campaign season I implore each and every one to remember the people of these Islands. They are hurting due to the effects of the global recession, the crises in the financial services and the rising cost of living. There is a storm brewing, and at the eye of the storm is the financial mess that began with businesses abroad, but was made worse by our Government's inaction.

There is another set of equally important issues that also deserve our attention. There are hundreds of people living in poverty right here in these beautiful Islands. Education still does not prepare our students for the jobs of the future. And drug abuse continues to destroy our families and hinder our forward progress. People are being left behind and they are waiting for their Government to lend a helping hand to pick them up, to dust them off and to tell them it is going to be all right. They need leadership now more than ever. And it is imperative that we work together to provide good leadership for the people of these beautiful Islands.

Although we may not always agree, I pray that we always have the wellbeing of the Cayman Islands at heart. May God bless each and every one of you and every person in the Cayman Islands.

Madam Speaker, I thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, I will make the final remarks from the Chair.

As all Members of this Legislative Assembly—

Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

First of all, Madam Speaker, let me say thank you for your service. Your commitment to this House and to this country has been unwavering. No matter who you ask in this country about the Speaker, or Edna Moyle, they feel like they have a very special relationship with you. Sometimes when they have heard you on the radio they ask about you. I like to say her bark is a little bit worse than her bite!

But I have had the good fortune over the last three-plus years to have actually travelled abroad with you. They ask, What is Ms. Edna really like? It is always pleasing for me to brag about you, Madam Speaker. I brag about your service to this country, your service to the people of North Side, and your service to the people of the Commonwealth; the positions you have held worldwide. For me, personally, when you introduced me as a freshman member, people respected that introduction. They would know it had come from somebody who had served well and it opened doors.

I believe one of the biggest qualities that you bring is that you are so willing and you so want to pass down your knowledge and your experience and your global influence to people who come after you and to help us be better at representing this country. Madam Speaker, this House and the people of North Side will lose a great Statesperson upon your retirement. Your daily responsibilities will be eased, but I know that they will be no less because that is the type of person you are. I will tell you that I am so happy for your family who will now have more time with you and they will enjoy that time.

With those words, Madam Speaker, from the bottom of my heart I wish you God's richest blessing for the balance of your long life ahead.

I also want to thank the competent staff of the Legislative Assembly; the Clerk and her able staff; the Serjeant (and the Serjeants who were here before). He has treated us all extremely well, even today, allowing us access a little bit longer to the building.

Madam Speaker, one of the most unique jobs I believe in this country of ours is what Ms. Anita has. If there was ever a person that should know what is going on . . . sitting in the dining area as debates finish when she so ably puts out food to nourish us into the afternoon; the conversations that she overhears and what she sees as far as the camaraderie and the fraternal relationship, the back-and-forth, and the friendships that develop in that room. I believe she would be very willing at some point to share some of those very positive things that happen.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman who elected me to this honourable House. I will be forever grateful for the immense opportunity to represent them and speak for them on the Floor of this House. These four years have given me an education in governance and human condition that could never be duplicated by classroom schooling or purchased with all the gold in the world. I thank God for this opportunity and for His guidance throughout my term.

Madam Speaker, I wish to thank all Members of this honourable House for their help and support. The Official Members have been helpful and forthcoming with information. The Opposition has certainly taught me the Westminster system of governance and the role that they play and what they do.

My colleague from Cayman Brac and I have logged more miles than most back and forth during our time here. My fishing conversations with Captain Eugene, and travelling with others has been a good time to learn and understand the system of democratic governance the Commonwealth has.

Madam Speaker, being on the backbench allows me to see the responsibilities of the Ministers and the work and time that each one of them puts in 24/7, and some of the victories and things they have achieved for the country. I take great pleasure when the Minister from East End was dubbed the Minister that fixed Malfunction Junction! It was so quickly done, and he's done more with different roundabouts in this country.

Madam Speaker, the other Ministers have been helpful to me, and I must thank them for all that they have done and for the times they have gone out of their way in helping with the requests that I have brought here for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and my contribution for other things in this country. They have always been willing to listen and take much consideration of my input.

My class of backbenchers here have allowed me great friendships, friendships that I would not have been blessed with had I not come to this honourable House, had I not been given this opportunity by the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. The Third and Fourth Elected Members for George Town have given me much help. I have enjoyed exchanging information and thoughts. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town sits next to me and, although we came at the same time, for some reason I thought he knew a little bit more about the House. I always had to ask him questions. What I liked was that whether or not he knew the answer, he always gave one!

[Laughter]

Mr. Moses I. Kirkconnell: Madam Speaker, we have enjoyed the camaraderie here in this House on both sides. With the advent of Paloma, our daily routine has changed for me and for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. I take this opportunity to thank the Members of this House, elected on both sides and Official, for their help and support in making sure that the immediate and future needs of the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are being met.

Madam Speaker, as we move through the first Paloma period our purpose must be clear. Our commitment to rebuild and upgrade our infrastructure and homes must be steadfast and our continued assistance to those in need, unwavering. The resilience of our community has certainly been hastened by community spirit and by sharing the workload between church groups, Red Cross, private sector benefactors and the Government. Paloma has taught us once again what is so important and what it means to be a community. But make no mistake, Madam Speaker, we still have a long road ahead of us.

Madam Speaker, our country has to face a world crisis, a financial crisis and un-trodden waters where nobody knows the direction. But the Government has stood up and taken a course to better the lifestyles in this country.

The Sister Islands must continue to rebuild. And each of us must take personal responsibility for our actions. As each of us goes about campaigning for the 2009 election, let us be mindful of our Caymanian brothers and sisters, let us deal with the serious issues at hand and let us offer solutions. As we point out needs, let us remember that we are all part of these great Cayman Islands and must be committed to acting for the good of this country to build it, not tear it down.

Madam Speaker, in closing I again thank Almighty God, the Members and staff of this honourable House, my family, co-workers and all the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman who have encouraged and supported me these last four years. I especially want to thank my committee and extended committee for their commitment to making Cayman Brac and Little Cayman a better place. I appreciate their hard work and insight.

They have allowed us to accomplish much in these four years. They have taught us that when we all work together as a team is when our Islands succeed.

Madam Speaker, may God's richest blessing follow everyone in this honourable House.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

We have five and a half hours before dissolution. Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Second Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

We are at that stage in the process where we get to give our final words. I must say that this is my third time. If memory serves me correct . . . second time, sorry. If memory serves me correctly, this one seems to be taking on a new twist in that we are certainly speaking at some great lengths. I will do my best not to be too long.

[laughter]

An hon. Member: Oh Lord!

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: First, Madam Speaker, I need to give thanks. Every day in parliament we start off by praying. So I give thanks to Almighty God for these four years that all 15 of us have been allowed to be here to serve our people. Whilst we have had some personal setbacks within our respective households we have also had some personal joys. So, as I reflect back we have much to be thankful for as individuals.

Madam Speaker, let me also thank the good people of West Bay for these last four years that I have had the distinct honour and privilege to be one of their representatives. For in this form of government people go to the polls and select who will be their voice. As said earlier, there is no nameplate on the back of any of these chairs. These are identical, and they are here to simply facilitate the passage of time. Every four years until Christ returns, absent some major event like Hurricane Ivan, these Islands will hold elections.

Madam Speaker, I also want to give thanks to the wider Cayman Islands community. Certainly, in these last four years I have, from a personal standpoint, gotten to meet and interact with a lot more people. I think all of us who have been here longer than one term will attest that the longer you serve, the more people get to know you, the more people get to hear you, and it certainly increases the scope for that interaction outside our respective districts. And that is good for the country. It is good for us, for we are one Cayman Islands.

I want to thank our hardworking committee for the district of West Bay for all of the work they have done, all the guidance they have offered, the friendship they have afforded each of the four of us. I thank them in advance for all of the hard work they will do for us. In fact, Madam Speaker, as we speak I was just in communication with a member of the committee. They are meeting right now.

Madam Speaker, the four of us, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the Third and Fourth Elected Members for West Bay and I, are going to attempt to continue to write history. Never in the history of our district has the same group, the same team, been re-elected for three consecutive terms.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to thank you and the entire staff here at the Legislative Assembly for the last almost four years. The guidance and assistance has been much appreciated. So, from the bottom of my heart, I would like to thank you all.

I would also like to wish you well, Madam Speaker, for whatever the future holds for you. May it be fruitful and may whatever you wind up doing be enjoyable, something that will be challenging for you, nonetheless. My feelings are that while you would have earned a well deserved break after having served your district for four consecutive elections, certainly I would presume that there would be enough to keep you busy.

Madam Speaker, I thank the members of the press that we have met over the last four years. We are a transient society, so one of the real frustrations that we do have is that we also have a transient press. It is often times frustrating from our standpoint because they will be reporting on an issue that has raged in terms of debate, points and counterpoints that have spanned years when they were not here. So, often times when they are reporting they are at a grave disadvantage because they report what was said on one debate here without having the benefit of having the historical context in which some of the issues we debate are surrounded. But I thank them for the work that they do because they are an important part of any free and fair society.

Madam Speaker, last but not least, I would also like to thank my family, in particular my wife. Without their love and support I would not have even gotten involved with politics eight and a half years ago. Over these past eight and a half years, without that love and support, I would not have made it thus far. They keep me going.

Not to brag, but I am reminded that I am in a household filled with women—my wife, and three lovely daughters. During this term, we had one addition ourselves. I must say that four years ago, whilst I thought the family was set, time and God's work only go to show us that whilst we may plan, we do not know His master plan. I must say that He has been extremely good to me, as he has been to all of us; but He's been extremely good to me. God's protection is so important to us and our families.

Madam Speaker, if I have omitted any important persons or institutions in my long thank you, I apologise. But those are the ones that come to mind as I am here on my feet.

During the last week, in particular since last Wednesday, I had been tempted to put together a short personal explanation because if there is one thing that the press does well here in Cayman, is to create good headlines. Sometimes those headlines can be very catchy.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: I am reminded [of the word] "sensational".

Madam Speaker, as we know, for the last two years one of the Government's ploys has been, at every opportunity, to seek to cause strife and division amongst our camp. I see that as a conscious, strategic move. After all, when one is at war, and the prize in this case is a majority at the polls on 20 May 2009, they say that all is fair in love and war. I know that there has been a concerted effort on the part of the Government to try at every opportunity to somehow give praise to some member of the Opposition and in the same breath discredit others to create friction and strife internally.

Madam Speaker, one thing I can say is that the Government has succeeded at being consistent at that. The Minister of Education in his debate on the Education Modernisation Bill made some comments, the majority of which in my mind were strategic, some in half jest, but certainly 100 per cent in desperation, which caused two media houses to have a sensational headline that said that I, the Second Elected Member for West Bay, was invited to join the Government.

Madam Speaker, in truth and in fact, there was no such invitation. But what the Honourable Minister did was very strategic in nature. I do not believe (although there is no way for me to be 100 per cent sure) that the press was involved with the conspiracy. But certainly, they took the sequence of events and sensationalised it so that it has caused a furore and a lot of discussion in the wider community. Whilst it happened here, what it has done is cause a lot of people to read . . . because you know how people are. People often times see a headline and do not read the details in terms of the article. So, whilst it was a complete desperate attempt by the Government to cause strife, they were ably assisted by sensational headlines, and so we got this little fire storm.

Madam Speaker, I took it as the Minister's admission that he is confident that he and his party will not be successful at the polls on 20 May. So, as a strategy [he] tried to drive a wedge—divide and conquer—between me and my party.

Madam Speaker, one thing continues—

[inaudible interjections]

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Madam Speaker, if there is one thing I can say about the Honourable Minister of Education, it is that that young man is consistent. If he believes that he needs to convince the world that the sky is purple, he is going to be unrelenting in trying to convince the world that the sky is purple.

But, Madam Speaker, I can say unequivocally that I—a founding member of the United Democratic Party—am going to go into this campaign season and give it everything I have to ensure that there is a change in government in this country. I believe that in these four short years the collective future of the Islands has been shaken and greatly compromised. As a young person myself, but in particular a young father, that has to give me grave cause for concern. It will naturally cause me, with the kind of makeup that I have, to give it 110 per cent (if there is such a thing) to ensure that we get the necessary change. For, Madam Speaker, there is a better way forward in this country.

Madam Speaker, as I look back on these four years, whilst there is no four-year span in the history of mankind that has not had challenges, I have seen so much opportunity lost. Due to a lack of productive vision I have seen decisions made and work not done that could have put us on a much firmer footing than we are. So, Madam Speaker, the Government is going to continue to make the point that there is a world recession, and that so much has happened internationally that the public should not “blame” them, and that they need to have an opportunity to try to turn things around. Madam Speaker, that is the only plea that the Government can make at this particular point in time, for so much has happened in these four years that could have been avoided.

One of my colleagues on the Government bench said a little earlier in his contribution that he has his finger on the pulse. I would like to believe that all of us get around our communities and have our fingers on the pulse. And, Madam Speaker, the pulse is weak. There are long breaks in between. This country is in desperate straits.

Madam Speaker, there are some notable events that the People’s Progressive Movement have seen during their four-year tenure: local events. We had the ill-fated government and Royal Cayman Islands Police helicopter debacle. We had the infamous Caribbean Catastrophic Insurance Fund debacle. We saw last Friday hurried and last-ditch attempts to try to smooth over the neglect of the financial services industry by hurrying through legislation that has been requested for some two years.

We see that the Government is now trying to get in place information exchange agreements as it relates to tax matters with other countries. Yet, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom is making it quite clear that, as far as he is concerned, that type of “cooperation” is not what he sees as the way forward in the new world order. So there is real doubt as to what good that is going to do us long term. As far as he is concerned, you can have as good a regime as you want, but he believes that there is a better way forward for the big countries. And that better way would be to not have to mess around with any of these information exchange agreements, and that we ought not to exist—period—because we distort international markets, we allow, under the guise (according to him) of legal structures, people to behave in certain ways in terms of what they can move on and off of their balance sheets to reside offshore as a way forward that ought not to exist.

The Speaker: Honourable Second Elected Member for the district of West Bay, I am going to take a suspension of 15 minutes.

Proceedings suspended at 6.54 pm

Proceedings resumed at 7.12 pm

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Second Elected Member for West Bay continuing. When I so suddenly interrupted you, and I am sorry, I think you were talking about Gordon Brown, just in case your memory may have slipped you. But I had been sitting in here since 3.00.

Mr. Rolston M. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I hear chatter from the other side saying that I misquoted. But I think it is clear to all concerned, and I am not surprised that the Minister would think so because I really believe there is a complete disjoint between what the Government thinks it needs to be doing and precisely what the international world is saying that we should be doing and where they are heading.

Madam Speaker, the one thing we have seen in the last few weeks is a real admission by the Government that they have left everything for the last minute. We have had an extremely heavy legislative agenda over the last several weeks. We have seen last ditch efforts to go to Washington to have people understand the Cayman story and the Cayman message, according to what we understand. We hear that they have a large PR firm engaged. However, there needs to be continual and consistent dialogue and relationship building with the movers and shakers in the US House of Representatives and Senate. We must ensure that we are not seen as a distrusted small population with a very large financial services sector.

When you just wash up on someone's doorstep every once in a while, you are naturally going to be received with suspicion. The fact is that there is no PR firm in the world that is going to be able to tell the Cayman story the way it needs to be told. PR firms can help with some messaging, but we know that the world of politics works most effectively when politicians talk to politicians. We are like any other fraternity in the world. And when we take real notice is when we engage and talk to each other face to face.

Madam Speaker, some of the lame excuses about there being a campaign in the United States and this and that . . . the bottom line is that in four years' time we ought to have recognised that there needed to be consistent representation with our counterparts in places like London and Washington. Consistent, Madam Speaker! There is only so much that our agents can do.

Madam Speaker, those who can provide real access to our counterparts in major countries and our counterparts that actually have a say is of crucial importance. The reality is that we need to build as many strong relationships as possible because as recent history has shown, people can and do have meteoric rises in the world of politics. Five years ago, most of the free world did not know who Barack Obama was.

When you engage consistently with consistent face time . . . we have to change the way in which we do business from an international perspective. We must. We have much at stake. We offer the world much. But as long as we are seen as the pirates of the Caribbean, and as long as that is the only message, and as long as we are not going to take a different approach, we will not be successful.

At certain times in certain countries we all know how politics work. We know that people will get up and say and do what they please no matter how much you talk. But, Madam Speaker, when you build real relationships, and when you get trust and when you actually penetrate and not just have superficial relationships, you can make impact. And this country has the wherewithal to do it. We have resident in this country some of the brightest minds.

I would put our lawyers, our accountants and our other professionals in the private sector, particularly in the financial services, up against anyone in any country. I personally saw that myself when I lived and worked in New York. During that secondment I also had opportunity to work in Canada and Curacao. This country has untapped potential and capacity. But we cannot continue to act small, play small and then expect to be taken for real players, taken seriously. We cannot expect that is the way the world will receive us. We have to be engaging.

We know there are people who are going to be naturally suspicious. And some many never ever change their minds. But the truth is, Madam Speaker, the more you engage and the more you are able to prove and the more people are able to see the proof of what you have said, the more human beings are apt to accept and have their minds changed. This has to be done consistently, Madam Speaker. We cannot just have this as an exercise that is seen to be done on one-off occasions.

I know that someone will get up behind me and say, Well, how do we have time to do all of this and all of that? Madam Speaker, the reality is this: If we recognise the importance of the industry to the economy, to our collective future, to the bottom line of Government's budget, we would recognise that that time is time well spent. This country cannot under any circumstance afford to lose the industry. It is that simple. If we look at nothing more in the Government budget, we will see that Government does not have the capacity to survive absent the monies this country collects in fees from the financial services industry. It cannot. It is plain and simple. It cannot.

So, Madam Speaker, some might say, Well, if the industry is not here and many of the professionals that are here leave, then that's reduced cost to government. Someone might try to make that sort of silly, insane argument. But the reality is that that industry employs many professionals that are positive economic contributors. In other words, many of those people have wage-earning capacity and therefore purchase and rent properties, and very rarely cause any direct charge on the public purse. So they are positive contributors. Their presence and the presence of the industry allow the Government to do what it needs to do by way of provision of services to the Caymanian community. None of us can overstate the importance.

Everything that we can humanly do has to be done. I believe that the Government has not done that. I am not saying that they can pick up and live in Washington or in London; but I am saying that what has been done has been way too little, way too late.

Madam Speaker, let us look at the state of the budget. Let us look at the state of the economy. Let us look at the level of borrowing. Let us look at the commission of Enquiry, otherwise known as Cliffordgate. Let us look at the true state of tourism.

I am amazed at the contribution offered by the Honourable Minister of Tourism. Amazed! If one thing has been proven, it is that it is possible in four short years to really compromise the industry. We need look no further than the state of affairs in our relationship with the cruise sector. We need look no further than that. Madam Speaker, our collective future has been greatly compromised over the last four years. We need a new way forward. There is, Madam Speaker, a better way forward.

Madam Speaker, what the country has clearly seen is that it is possible to put together a well orchestrated campaign. It is possible to easily put together the best orchestrated smear campaign, but miss the fundamental point, which is that after all of that, governance and leadership is what will move the country forward. Painting the Honourable Leader of the Opposition black, painting the Second Elected Member for West Bay black, painting any of my colleagues on this side black is not going to assist the country. Trying to tarnish reputations is not going to move the country forward.

Madam Speaker, all we heard about was the necessity for this audit or that audit, this investigation, that investigation. What has the country gotten? Where is the country four years later? Yes, they rode in on a high horse and on a high note. But it certainly has not moved the country forward in the way that it needs to be moved.

As I said, the smear campaign is the long suit of the People's Progressive Movement. I hear them chattering even now, talking about the Turks and Caicos Islands. But, Madam Speaker, I want to know what does that overseas territory have to do with the failures of the People's Progressive Movement Government? It is yet another tactic—the usual tactic, to point at somebody else, point long enough and consistent enough and say the same thing over and over and over, and you hope the public believes you and trusts you.

This Government had four years. They came in as the first party to run in current times under a party slate and win the elections. They formed a strong majority of 10 to 5. They had the numbers to make whatever changes needed to be made. They said it was going to be honest government, a government in the sunshine. Madam Speaker, whilst there was some legislation mooted and some was being worked on even as the elections approached in 2005, they have not come up with one single new piece of legislation that would move the country forward in terms of open and transparent government.

Freedom of information? Motions were moved on that so long ago. The legislation was being drafted as the elections happened last time. I know they want to say that that one is theirs. All right, it was passed on their watch. What new have they done?

Board meetings are still closed. You still hear all of the whispers and rumours about who took advantage of their position on boards. You still have people calling you because they are trying to figure out what stage this plan is at, that plan is at . . . Madam Speaker, a lot of things that should have happened in the last four years given the mandate and the platform the PPM ran on . . . so much was promised, so little was delivered.

Madam Speaker, I can say without fear of contradiction that we do have our finger on the pulse, but the pulse is weak. The country is haemorrhaging. We have seen what we predicted from 18 months ago. Eighteen months ago we predicted what was coming down the pike in terms of Government's budget position.

Prophet of doom and gloom, they said.

All I can say is that we are now in deficit. We see monies being voted as it relates to important social service programmes at a time when unemployment is on the rise. People's hours are being cut.

They are not showing up on the unemployment statistics. I was talking to a gentleman over the weekend. He was telling me the situation at his workplace. He was lucky. His hours have only been cut from 45 to 40. A friend of his working in the company in his department—last one in the door—had his hours cut from 45 down to 25 hours. He is not going to show up in the unemployment statistics. But that is a person whose family is not going to make ends meet.

Another colleague had his hours cut from 45 to 35 hours a week. The company did it in a way they thought fair—the longest tenured employee had the less amount cut; the newest person in the door had the most hours cut. But our people are hurting. Yes, we have our finger on the pulse. The pulse is weak! If we do not recognise that, we are not living in reality.

Madam Speaker, the people of this country are going to go to the polls on May 20th, God willing. Quite honestly, they have two basic choices; they either vote for a government that has proven that it cannot get the job done as it relates to managing the economy and government budget, which is the crux and cornerstone of the country. You can promise as many promises as you want in terms of services, but if the economy is weakened and government's budget and financial position continues to deteriorate at the rate in which it has, we cannot deliver on the promises. Let's look at it, Madam Speaker. In the last four years we had a tax package of $20-plus million. Yet we are now projecting a $29 million deficit. If it were not for that $20-plus million tax package, that deficit would be in the region of some $50 million.

The other choice is to vote for a party that has proven that during difficult times . . . look at what we had to live through. We had to live through the attacks on the World Trade Centre, our greatest trading partner, the United States, going to war in Iraq and Afghanistan. We had disease outbreaks that negatively impacted tourism—hoof and mouth disease, SARS in Asia—Hurricane Ivan. Madam Speaker, we have proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that when it comes to tough times we can manage. We can get the job done.

At the end of the day, it is that simple—our people are either going to vote for a Government that had everything going their way when they took office, who rode the momentum of the Hurricane Ivan rebuilding and did nothing else to secure the economy, and as soon as that collapsed, you see the state we are in. It is exacerbated by the fact that the world itself has gone through an economic downturn. Made worse, compounded!

Madam Speaker, at every election people will say that this election is important. Every election is important because the country selects for four years the direction the country is going to take. I am of the view that the choice is quite simple.

Madam Speaker, I like challenges. I look forward to the next 50-something days of campaigning. I feel very confident that the good people of the Cay-man Islands are going to make a change for a better way forward.

Will I pick up licks? We are all going to do that. That is the nature of the game. I care not about that because the truth is that if we care about that, then this is the wrong thing to be in. If you are worried about a couple of licks, the shadow boxing is about to end and we are going to get ready to rumble. Whilst the money might have been pulled from under the rug of one of our local heroes, boxer Charles (the "Killa") Whittaker, what I can say is that the United Democratic Party is ready for the fight. We believe that we offer the country the greatest possibility and the best chance to secure our collective future.

Madam Speaker, I wish God's speed on the Cayman Islands, that He will continue to bless us. I wish that God will continue to protect our young people. I wish for all of us, outside our political lives, to do whatever we can to assist in that process. Madam Speaker, I wish for God to continue the way He has blessed these Cayman Islands despite the challenges we face. And Madam Speaker, I look forward to those who will return here May 27th, God willing.

I hope and pray that the good people of West Bay will continue to see fit to support me, for I will continue to work on their behalf. I wish for the good people of West Bay to continue to support my colleagues and me because we will be seeking an unprecedented third consecutive term as the same team. The good people of West Bay have blessed us and kept their faith in us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause] If no other Member wishes to speak—

First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Ms. Juliana Y. O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I rise first of all to thank Almighty God for the wonderful privilege of having served my constituents some 12-plus years, and for the strength and integrity to be sustained for the duration of that time.

I wish to take this opportunity also to thank you, Madam Speaker, the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly and all of her staff, in whatever capacity they have served, for all of the help they have given to me during this time in the various capacities that I have served.

I wish to thank all honourable Members of this House both on the Government side as well as on this side. It has not been an easy four years. This is the first time during my political career that I have been on the Opposition backbench for the entire term. Whatever experience, I believe is one that the soul needs. It has taught me patience and tolerance; it has taught me to establish a deeper faith in the Lord God himself, and it has taught me that we are a resilient people and that we will overcome.

I wish to thank my immediate and extended family for agreeing for me to work long, arduous hours, to be away from home for quite a bit of time. I wish to once again thank the people of Grand Cayman who during and certainly after Paloma came to our rescue, and who continue to give even as we speak here tonight.

Madam Speaker, when I first decided to run for public office I quite easily attached to the scripture that said "it is not by might or by power, but it is by my spirit, thus saith the Lord." It is with that background and inertia that I look forward to commencing this campaign in 2009. I look forward to being nominated on Wednesday of this week by my constituents in Cayman Brac. They know, without a shadow of a doubt, that I have made their goals and objectives my primary concern. I have sacrificed quite a lot financially and otherwise, but that is what I set out to do.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to campaigning, as I have done in previous years, to run a clean campaign, to realise that first and foremost that regardless of what party we are in we are all Caymanians. I would ask that we exercise due diligence to ensure that it is a safe campaign. While we get into the heat of campaigning and everything else, and adversarial politics, there are young Caymanian eyes looking upon us. We have the older Caymanians who also do not come from an aggressive type of cultural background and they expect us now as the trustees of governance for the next few weeks to perform in a way that would be pleasing, first and foremost, to Almighty God.

At the end of the day, yes, there is an election to win. And, yes, both parties and independents will have their own perspectives which will be varying in many respects. But, Madam Speaker, I would hope that we would see that we are not our greatest enemies. We are now on a global stage and there are many competing factors that would like to see the Cayman Islands, our beloved home, go down. If we do not save it, Madam Speaker, then who [will]?

So, I urge all of my colleagues on both sides of the House, those outside of the House, to campaign to the best of your potential; but not to the extent that it leaves a divided country. We see neighbouring Caribbean countries where that has been allowed to go on and crime has just gone out of control to where the very persons that each party thought they were protecting had to leave the jurisdiction to seek a better livelihood.

Madam Speaker, not only was I born here, but I have every intention to be laid to rest in my beloved Cayman Brac. I would like to leave a better legacy than I inherited when I came along, so I ask Members to search deep into their souls as they get ready to campaign and do not try to retain or obtain power at whatever cost, because there is a cost to every action. I ask us to remember that "He hath founded it upon the seas." We are a Christian nation. We can be angry but sin not. And in whatever we do, remember that at the end of the day we are still our brother's and sister's keeper.

I wish the best for all of my colleagues. I wish for God's will to be done. At the end of the day, whoever is the best man or woman successful at the polls, I believe those are the ones for that appointed time. We are instructed that God raises up in authority those whom he wishes to. And if we would seek his will and his righteousness, he will always direct our path and our steps. We can rest assured that we will have done what he has set out as his purpose.

Madam Speaker, hurricanes have a way of giving us a different perspective about life. Not only was it a second blow for me, having seen the destruction to my own property and otherwise by Ivan, but with Paloma we have lost a significant number of constituents, people whom we knew very well. I mean, even as recent as last Sunday, a very dear friend of mine, Mrs. Joyce Ryan . . . when she called me the night before coming to Cayman, she did not even herself realise that within two weeks she would no longer be here. That is just how our lives are—like a flower that fadeth away. And do you know what? Fifty years from today most of us will not be here.

So, let us take time, first and foremost, to make sure that we set our priorities right as we go into this election and that we exercise every sense of reasonableness in our arguments, that we try as much as possible to stick to the issues to the things that we feel would give us a better way forward and that would make a better Cayman Islands. I realise it is politics and we have to defend our positions and our names, but let us . . . come Wednesday, we are going to defend our positions as eloquently and as well articulated as we can. But let us do so against the background that we are trying to nation build. As part of that process, education in the schools is very important. And I have always supported that. But the greatest education we can give is by our actions, because they always speak louder than words.

Madam Speaker, as in all elections, I shall do so prayerfully not only for myself but I can honestly say for all Members, all of my colleagues here and all those who wish to be politicians. We had to start somewhere. We did not gain our experience over night. All of us had our first day, first speech, and our first motion here. If we are going to transition this country there has to be room for other new and innovative ideas. But, Madam Speaker, let us not try to elevate or promote ourselves by pushing others down. Let us do it from a debate perspective. And may it be known that Members in this House go down as not only the best campaigners but the best debaters that this country has ever seen. I believe that we have the audacity for hope and that we have the building blocks for a better Cayman.

Madam Speaker, in closing I can honestly say that win, loose, or draw, that is what I have committed to do. As a single representative I know that I cannot control, neither would I seek to control, but it would be my earnest desire and my continued prayer that we would look at the bigger picture, the economic and sociologic crossroads that our Islands are at and see what we can do to improve it. I believe that if we do that, Madam Speaker, regardless of who forms government or where we sit (if we are privileged to come back), when history is written we can rest in tranquillity that we truly did not attain personal elevation, but in everything we did it was for the betterment of these Islands we call home.

Again, I wish everyone the very best and I trust that if it is God's [will], we will have the privilege of coming back here to carry on the business of this country. I thank you, and I thank my honourable colleagues.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

Honourable Minister responsible for Communications and Works.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

With that plea from the First Elected Member of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, I guess there is very little else to say in here tonight. But I will try to keep mine brief and to the point.

Madam Speaker, as we bring this legislative session to a close, it will be the last one for this term, and this honourable House will be dissolved in about four hours and ten minutes. I take this opportunity to thank God Almighty for giving me the strength and good health to see another four years through in these hallowed halls.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to thank the people of East End for electing me for a second term as their representative. I have been the representative for the district of East End for about eight and a half years. It is with great gratitude and a sense of humility that I thank them. Madam Speaker, were it not for the people of East End, I would not have matured the way I have thus far. I probably would not have had as many grey hairs if I were not in here, but that is part of this life!

Because of the people of East End, I have had the opportunity to dine with kings and walk among the poor. It has given me a broader understanding of this life. I have seen life, I have witnessed death; I have seen it all. Tonight I walk away from these hallowed halls with the hope that I continue as a representative of East End. I know that I can hold my head high, knowing that I came here with one goal, one simple goal, and that was to represent the people of East End, in particular, and this country in general, to the best of my ability. I believe that I have done that.

When I set out to go into politics, my father told me one thing. He said, "The only thing that you have that you can call your own is your name." He paused and he said, "I gave it to you. Do not destroy it." I hope as he lies in his almighty rest that he can look down upon me and be proud that I followed what he asked me to do.

Madam Speaker, I could not have gone through these eight and a half years without the help of my family—my wife, my two children, my mother, but very importantly too, my siblings. I have said in this honourable House before that I am not overly concerned about how the public measures me in my behaviour or in my conduct. I am more concerned about how my siblings measure me. They are my greatest critics. If I do anything wrong I could get away with it from the public much quicker than I would get away with it with my siblings.

My father gave me an instruction again, and he said, "One at a time. No brothers, no sisters involved in politics. You are in it; you go forth and do what you have to do." I have kept that promise too. I have never once made either one of my brothers or sisters get involved in politics. They were taught to work hard and get what they wanted. Not one has even been on a board, Madam Speaker. I am very proud of that.

Madam Speaker, I have worked very hard for the last eight and a half years, but, in particular, for the last four. We have had many challenges in this country. My family has been there to support me and I thank them from the bottom of my heart. If one does not have one's family alongside of him, one has lost the central piece of the jigsaw puzzle. Tonight I am eternally grateful to them for their support.

Madam Speaker, I say to all of those newcomers that this is not a joke. A friend said to me a few days ago that sometimes it appears that people are taking this for a joke and that it appears that some may consider this a ticket to their financial security. Madam Speaker, the 15 of us in this honourable House know that it does not go like that. If you have no social conscience, and if you do not have a big heart, there is no place in politics for you.

If you do not want to work towards making your fellowman's life better, then find something else to do because that is what this is about. And I have thoroughly enjoyed helping people. That is one of the things I remember most about my father. And all my aunts and uncles who have passed on taught me a sense of community. If you do not have that, this is not the place to secure your financial future. Be paid for what you do, but do what you are required to do.

I have worked very hard, Madam Speaker. There are very few mornings when I did not go to my office before 8.30; and very few evenings when I left it before 5.00. But I approached this as a job where I could help the people that I love—the beloved people of the Cayman Islands. Madam Speaker, I am going to be around here for a long time. I do not need any honours, nor do I need any pat on the back. This is but for a time in my life. At some stage I am going to move on too. I do not know when that is, I just hope the people of East End will see fit to consider me as their representative for another four years.

No one in this country can say that I came in here on the heels of anyone; nor can they say that I did not stand and do what I had to do. Madam Speaker, I had no one in front of me to teach me how to do it. But there are Members of this honourable House who were here when I came here, such as the Leader of the Opposition, the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, the Leader of Government Business, the Minister for Health, and your good self, Madam Speaker. Madam Speaker, I am eternally grateful to you all. Whilst you may think that you did not teach me much, trust me! I captured it all. And there are a number of conventions that I have perfected as a result of your teachings.

Madam Speaker, there are a number of challenges facing this country that I would like to continue to work on. There are things that fell under my ministry that I would like to continue. In particular, if I am returned here as a Minister I can promise this country that on day one I am going to work on Mount Trashmore. And just in case I am not, I have left sufficient information for whoever goes there as Minister to continue to remove Mount Trashmore from the eyesight of the people of this country.

We have the global financial crisis on our hands. We have the G-20 and, in particular, the G-8 who seems hell bent on going on any financial centre in this world. That is a challenge for us, Madam Speaker, but we have made many strides in the right direction to ensure the future of financial services for the people of this country. This Government has done much work in that direction. And I would like to come back to continue that. I believe it is fair to say that this Government deserves another term.

Madam Speaker, what I am about to say . . . I am very conscious that the Standing Orders tell us about not speaking ill of Her Majesty, but I am very concerned with the direction that the Prime Minister of England is going in when it comes to the Cayman Islands in particular. I know that this goodly gentleman is looking to prop up his popularity in England. But I say to him that it should not be at our expense. Is it that this gentleman wants us to be holding our hands out to him or his government, or the next government, whoever that may be? Madam Speaker, that has never been a part of this country. We have done what we had to do to ensure the security of the people of this country. I take it as an offence for the Prime Minister to be so direct, so blatant and so cruel to an Overseas Territory.

Another challenge that I hope we have overcome is negotiating a new constitution for the Cayman Islands. The people of this country will go to the polls on May 20. But for the very first time they will have the added responsibility (other than voting for their representative) of voting on a new proposed constitution. Madam Speaker, since this constitution has been negotiated and has the green light, so to speak, from both sides of this honourable House I encourage the people of this country to return an affirmative on the acceptance of this constitution.

Madam Speaker, it makes no difference who is elected. Fifteen people have to be returned here on the 27th day of May (or thereabout). I beg this country to give them a new constitution to work with. The current Constitution has been in place for 30-odd years. There is no document in the 21st century that governs anywhere that does not need some kind of tweaking. No one says that the new proposed constitution is perfect, but we have to start someplace. It is much better than the one that is currently in place.

Madam Speaker, I encourage the Members of this honourable House and all of the newcomers to talk, to debate the new proposed constitution. We have to understand that the future of this country transcends each and every one of us, and that it matters not who is here. If we are returned, so be it; if we are not, there will be—that is a given—15 Members here. But it does not mean that there will be a new constitution if we do not educate our people on the benefits of a new constitution. My plea to all of those who are standing in this general election is to ensure that the people of this country understand as far as possible the proposed new constitution.

Madam Speaker, all of us will be campaigning in the upcoming process. I do not wish to cast any aspersions on anyone, but I know that in 2005 this country set a course with the PPM at the helm. The one thing that I know is that I am comfortable with every member of the PPM. They did not in any way take anything from this country. I know people have made their accusations. But I can assure this country that honesty was at the forefront of the governance by the PPM Government. We have kept the faith. We have run the race for four years. We have steered the same course.

Madam Speaker, a couple of hours ago I received an email about how the Premier of Turks and Caicos resigned today. Somewhere in that farewell resignation speech to the general public he said that to those to whom much is given, much is expected. Madam Speaker, I believe the PPM Government has given much to our country too. It was expected of us and we have delivered.

The infrastructure of this country had been neglected for many, many years. For instance, 20 years prior to my taking office a little over 5 miles of new roads were built. The country has grown in all of those years and no one paid attention to the infrastructure to accommodate all of those people who were coming, be that through indigenous births or otherwise. For 30-odd years we have talked about a high school in Frank Sound. At long last it is on its way. This country can be proud of the achievements in the last four years. There is much work to be done, Madam Speaker. I look forward to being the Minister responsible for Communications, Works and Infrastructure. I look forward to representing the people of East End for another four years.

There is much time to talk about our accomplishments and achievements over the last four years because we have two months of campaigning to do. For all of those who for whatever reason thought that this campaign was over, my message to them is that it has only just begun. I do not know who else is going to roll over and play dead, but I will not! And I am sure that it will not be any of the 9 in here and the 1 outside, that is, the 10 of us.

So, my good friends on the Opposition, remember, whilst I do not advocate acrimony, I will not roll over. I am not prepared to do that. I deserve to defend my tenure. These grey hairs around my temples did not just come so; they came from worrying about doing something for the people of this country and I deserve to defend that. So, when you plan your trip to the eastern end, be prepared to understand that I am coming back.

Mind you, that is not to say that you are not welcome in the community. If you want to come and campaign, that is fine by me too! But speak the truth because when you start encroaching on Arden McLean's integrity, you are going to be answered. Trust me. Regardless of whom it is. It could be my brother, it could be my sister. Do not question my ability to get the job done. I am going to reply to anyone who questions my integrity.

Madam Speaker, I know when I start I do not like to stop. But I am going to stop, Madam Speaker.

The Speaker: Good, because I have to go to North Side.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: All right. Thank you.

Madam Speaker, all that is left for me to do is to thank you on behalf of the people of North Side, in particular, and on behalf of the people of this country in general. I would like to thank you for your tenure. You have served your country well. You have managed this House very well. We have had moments of tense response, we have had moments of questioning your ruling (in my mind), but at the end of the day everyone in here has had respect for the Chair while you were there.

There were times when you may question that, Madam Speaker, but regardless—

The Speaker: I'll carry that to my grave.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: —I believe that we in this honourable House have had one of the best relationships that I know, and that is across the aisle, Madam Speaker. But for you, Madam Speaker, I thank you. This country can be proud and the people of North Side can be proud.

That is not to say that I expect you to fade into the sunset.

The Speaker: Going to plant roses!

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Well, if you are going to plant roses, Madam Speaker, I certainly will come and tear the thorns off the roses with you. Or trim them off so that we may present them to the Members of this honourable House.

The Speaker: We will have tea together in the rose garden.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Tea together in the rose garden. Wow! We are getting quite higher up in the Atlantic, eh?

The Speaker: Mm-hmm.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, I really appreciate your time. Again, I appreciate all of those little things that you taught me. I will never, ever, forget them.

Madam Speaker, there were other Members in here when I came. They have since gone. But there was one Member here (who is gone now) that I always had that affinity to, and that was Captain Mabry [Kirkconnell]. He served his country well too. I am extremely proud of Captain Mabry.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the staff of the Legislative Assembly. I have always been afforded a very good relationship. The lady from East End, if she does not get me on the phone the first time she will call me about four or five times to make sure that I get the message about a committee meeting and that kind of stuff. And I appreciate that. I really appreciate that. And if they did not get me they would call my ministry, and if they did not get my ministry they would call the other phone. But they made sure they got their messages to me.

Madam Speaker, all of them have shown me the utmost respect in here. I would like to go on record to thank them for that respect shown to me. Even though the Deputy and I grew up together, she never once called me "Arden" in eight and a half years.

The Speaker: I trained her.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: She has always said, "Mr. McLean." Never once has she called me "Arden", and we grew up next to each other. We are family. She has never lost the respect for the position. And I am thankful to you, Sharon, for that.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the press. I know that I have had my time with the press. I have really had some times over the last four years where I questioned objective journalism in the press. But I recognise that they were merely doing their job and that they were questioning my job. Nevertheless, by and large I found them to be okay. I see Mr. Stoner is in the press gallery. He has a lovely young lady, his wife, and I believe she is a little better than he is.

And, Madam Speaker, another one that I really need to make mention of is Wendy Ledger. She is not here tonight. I was going to rib her a little bit, but she is okay too.

The Speaker: You don't have time to rib anybody.

Hon. V. Arden McLean: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank her for all of her reporting. I look forward to them all.

There are many others. At Radio Cayman, Jay Ehrhart is a very capable young man. All of those at CITN are very persistent, particularly the young fellow that went there just now, Kenneth Bryan. Oh Lord, Madam Speaker, he has more enthusiasm than an elephant! He will not give up. But that is what reporters should do, and I believe that he will go far in this world of reporting.

Madam Speaker, last but by no means the least, my staff at the ministry. What would I have done without my PA, Leisa Welcome? Madam Speaker, there is nothing I asked Leisa for that she could not put her hands on immediately. She has kept me sane. I would like to publicly thank her. As my colleague said, that is not an easy job—keeping me sane!

Madam Speaker, I have challenged many young men in my ministry. They came from the private sector to work with me and I have challenged them. Some from the public sector as well. I know sometimes they must regret that they came to me because of my demanding attitude, but I was very glad a few days ago when one of them publicly thanked me for teaching him as much as I have. That tells me that I have done a stellar job. Even if only one got something from me, then I believe I have done something. I believe I have done a job worth doing.

Madam Speaker, I know that the chief officer, the deputy and all of the ladies in my ministry, all of the staff from all the departments and authorities have seen working for me as a challenge. But the one thing we can rest assured of is that we got the job done. Madam Speaker, my tenure as a Minister has been a very challenging one. Thank God for the staff that I have had some ease in those challenges.

There is much to be done in the ministry. I have thoroughly enjoyed the subjects that I have had as a Minister. Those are the only ones that I know. I do not know anything about tourism, I know less about teaching anyone, and you know they cannot give me health!

[laughter]

Hon. V. Arden McLean: And Cayman Brac District Administration . . . hands off. But that is what I know. That is all I know—the technical things in life. I believe with the help of the staff I have done a fair job.

What I do know, Madam Speaker, is that whether I measure [up to] that or not, I will know how good my stewardship was on May the 20th. I look forward to that democratic process because that is what this is about. At the end of the day, not one of us can do anything about it. The choices are for the people. But I promise you, Madam Speaker, that on the morning of the 27th . . . the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman said “win, lose or draw”. There are no draws in this. To the victor go the spoils. It is the first one past the post. That is not to be disrespectful to her.

On the morning of the 27th whoever is sworn in here I will be sitting somewhere along this wall—on either that side or this side. I will not walk away from the democratic process in this country. My children are here and their children and their children’s children will be here. I hope.

Madam Speaker, all that is left to be said now is to say thank you to my colleagues for four years of friendship, and that is across the aisle. I look forward to all 14 of us coming back here. I do not know how we would operate without the kind of friendship we have had. And I mean that sincerely, Madam Speaker.

I wish all the best to my colleagues and they should not be so acrimonious on the campaign trail. Someone has to win and someone has to lose. Madam Speaker, I look forward to the campaign which begins in about three hours.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thanks to all honourable Members.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Before the dissolution of the Legislative Assembly I would like to say a few words about my term here as well. I would like to start my contribution by thanking God for his support, guidance and continued blessings to me and my family. This last term, these last four years, we have seen some good times specifically as a family, and some real difficult times as we all have—we all have some good memories and some not-so-good memories of events that have occurred in each of our lives during this period.

Madam Speaker, after thanking God, I would like to thank my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly, both on the Opposition and very much so my colleagues on the Government side, and especially you, Madam Speaker. The Members of the Government have placed their confidence in me to serve as Deputy Speaker. I take that as an honour that Members have placed that trust for these four years in my abilities. I hope that I have been fair in the periods of time it was required of me to deputise for you.

Madam Speaker, I specifically want to thank you for your guidance during this time. As all Members have said, there were times that we would have questioned within our own minds . . . of course, none of us like to be questioned or challenged. But you have done your job, Madam Speaker, and you have assisted especially us younger Members who needed that guidance and that motherly support during that time.

Madam Speaker, I know you will have your comments, but I have been asked by my family, specifically by my father who was your Serjeant for a period, to extend his good wishes to you. I am sure he will speak to you but also publicly he wanted me to extend his thanks for your support while he was the Serjeant-at-Arms.

Madam Speaker, we all here wish you well in your planting of roses and your enjoyment of tea in your rose garden!

I too would like to thank the staff of the Legislative Assembly for the respect and support they have shown to each and every Member during these difficult times. As mentioned, sometimes we go on real long. For example, on Friday night we were here until 1.00 am. And the staff were there as pleasant as ever doing whatever was required of them. While it may sometimes seem that we take them for granted, I can honestly say that we do not. There is appreciation and respect from all Members.

Also, the civil servants we have had to call upon and make demands of during our term. Sometimes as members of the Opposition we know that we put the civil servants, especially, in difficult positions, making those demands and not being sure. But I can say that they have always done their best to accommodate those requests that might have seemed oh so unreasonable at times, I am sure. For the most part they have been around here for a long time and we know that we have a strong civil service.

Madam Speaker, as we come to the end of this term of legislators, we have had acrimony. There has been heated debate, but never a lack of respect or understanding for us as individuals. As politicians we will disagree, but as human beings—as Caymanians—we are all in this together working toward the same goals even though we might disagree and have a different method of getting there.

Madam Speaker, there will be the democratic process on 20 May, and a contested election. As usual we will have people contesting the seat I was so privileged to have been elected to in the district of West Bay. For people in that district who are running, I wish them well in their campaign. Hopefully we will have a clean, safe, honest campaign. Come 20 May the people will decide whether my colleagues and I are deserving: the Honourable McKeever Bush, the First Elected Member for West Bay; Mr. Rolston Anglin, the Second Elected Member for West Bay; and my colleague, Captain Eugene Ebanks, the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay. Also the First Elected Member for the district of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, Ms. Juliana Y. O’Connor-Connolly, as well as our other colleagues who are running on the United Democratic Party’s slate in the various districts around the Islands.

Whoever is given the good fortune of being elected come May 20 will have significant challenges.

We see that the financial service [industry] is under attack. We see there is a need for proactive strong leadership on that front. We saw the release today showing that through proactive leadership and required lobbying the OECD is proposing to remove Switzerland, Austria and Luxembourg, from the black list currently being drawn up by the OECD for the G-20 Summit.

It shows that there is still time to negate some of the negatives that could come from being black-listed on that list that we keep hearing about. So far, we have heard about meetings. We have heard about trips to Washington. And we do not know yet what the results of that will be. We do know that from all appearances it seems that we will appear on another black list which could be detrimental to our financial industry.

Madam Speaker, the next group of legislators will have to deal with concerns in the community about crime. We have seen just in the past few days that serious crime has taken a significant toll on the Cayman Islands. People are scared. People are shocked. This is not something we will ever get used to. With the callous murders we have had in recent times, the community is worried.

We see on the front page of today's paper "Government sees red." We have a deficit and we are worried about our revenue streams, which seem to be getting more and more restricted as we go along. There is an expectation that things will get worse before they get better. There is much concern with the national debt. As our revenue streams continue to restrict, the spending requirements continue to out-strip the revenue. Our national debt will continue to increase. Our country is in a difficult time, Madam Speaker.

The last time we stood here and had these farewells, we had just gotten past Hurricane Ivan. Everyone felt that we had gotten through that pass, there has to be a much better time. We were looking forward to an improvement. But, Madam Speaker, the situation now is that people are concerned. Jobs are being lost. We have had increasing unemployment. Caymanians cannot make their payments. I am sure all Members are inundated with people coming to their doors who cannot meet their bills, utilities being turned off. Times are hard, Madam Speaker, and getting harder.

We see that the Government is doing what they feel is necessary to do. We have a stimulus package. The people coming to me are saying that they do not see how that stimulus package is going to help them. They are reducing duty on cement and on steel and lumber. We are hoping that in some way that will trickle down and assist those people who are losing their homes and cannot pay their utility bills. Only time will tell, Madam Speaker, if that stimulus will actually help; but the indications are that while the Government is trying their best, their best obviously has not been good enough.

Madam Speaker, the Member is asking me what the answer is. I think we will get the answer on May 20th. I think we will get new representation that will give us an opportunity for a better way forward.

Madam Speaker, we have to acknowledge that they have tried their best, and I do not doubt that they have tried their best. I think that all Members have tried their best. I think after seeing the best that they have to offer is when most people determine that they are now in a worse position than they were four years ago. The only logical conclusion for the smart people of the Cayman Islands will be that, yes, you have tried your best, but the best was not enough. So we have to try something new.

Madam Speaker, we were hoping this was going to be just the normal farewells and best wishes. But, as usual, while most Members would have found it plausible to do that, we recognise that some Members have decided to make the same attacks. It is hard to understand how certain Members can get up and start talking about corruption, and those same Members will be the Members that should have the least to say on those issues.

We heard the Minister of Tourism speak about corruption and institutionalised corruption, making reference to what occurred in Turks and Caicos. Madam Speaker, I find that ironic because the process in Turks and Caicos started with a Commission of Inquiry. I am sure, Madam Speaker, you and all Members in here will remember our own Commission of Inquiry which was called on for that same Minister who referred to corruption. When we talk about those skeletons—it's not even a skeleton in the closet because it is out of the closet, Madam Speaker.

He talks about what could have occurred in Cayman. We have to wonder, if we had had such an aggressive investigator as the one in Turks and Caicos, what would have happened to the good Cayman Islands under the leadership of the PPM based on that Commission of Inquiry because that Member was found wanting in the Commission.

That Member was found guilty of official misconduct and all for personal interests. When we try to talk about the reasons for it, supposedly it was for whistle blowing. It was made very clear that the only reason for it was for his own personal gain and that of his party to get elected.

That would be the Minister that would stand on the Floor . . . I heard it in the last debate and I was tempted at that stage when we were talking about the incentives and the stimulus package. He got up and started talking about all this corruption. Madam Speaker, it is similar to what occurred in 2005. We heard there were going to be all of these investigations, and that all of this information was coming forward, and that the Leader of Government Business at the time was going to be found guilty of all these matters.

At the Government's hands, the country went on these witch hunts. We had this investigation here, an investigation there, an investigation over there, and an investigation everywhere. At the end of the day, what came out of those investigations? It was found that nothing was done wrong.

So, while all the allegations were made, lo and behold, Madam Speaker, those people making the allegations of corruption ended up getting a Commission of Inquiry. Even though attempts were made to stop it—there were challenges to the funding and all the rest—the Governor insisted that we needed to have a Commission of Inquiry. Lo and behold, those same Members who were talking about corruption were found guilty of official misconduct.

Madam Speaker, you would have thought that after getting those kinds of findings that that particular Minister would have left the talking and the allegation making to other people this time. But you see, Madam Speaker, we do not seem to learn from those mistakes. So, we get back to the same old corruption again.

Madam Speaker, one thing we can say is that in all of this PPM Administration we have not had any investigations. That is true. But the reason why we have not had any investigations is because we cannot get audited accounts. If we did not get audited accounts for the Auditor General to investigate, we cannot get any investigations. So those investigations from the audits will have to come at a later time. But out of the one thing we did get—the one Commission of Inquiry—we got a finding of wrongdoing. If we got a finding of wrongdoing for that, Madam Speaker, I can only imagine what we will get later on.

I hope that when we talk about people who live in glass houses should not throw stones, I hope that the particular Minister, while I know there are concerns . . . Madam Speaker, I have heard there are concerns. And you know that when desperation sets in we understand that all kinds of things have happened to those positions, that seat for Minister of Tourism has been all around. Promises are being made . . . I understand that desperation will set in.

People on that side have gotten up regularly and have talked either about their achievements or their accomplishments during their term. But it is obvious when one particular Minister has to get up and start talking about corruption—

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Well, Madam Speaker, maybe there were achievements thrown in there. But the point is that when you have those kinds of skeletons that would be an embarrassment to the rest of the group, when you have the Minister of Communications getting up next to that Minister and saying there was this virtue, purity and honesty in his Government, when the only finding of dishonesty so far has been the Honourable Minister of Tourism. In all these other investigations going on there has not been any.

Prior to that the Minister of Education said he could feel good about all his Ministers and know they will do nothing untoward, nothing questionable, because he makes them know that if there is anything questionable either they will be resigning or he will be resigning. He should not force us, by finding the need to talk about corruption, to have to remind the public about those statements. If they had those achievements, the Member should have been happy to discuss those.

Madam Speaker, I understand the Member wanted a corruption commission of inquiry. Maybe he is talking about things to come. I do not know. Maybe we will find, when we do get those audited financial statements . . . I hope that we will not end up like the Turks and Caicos thing where we start a commission of inquiry and then we run into significant problems. But, only time will tell because even with the openness and transparency of the Government we have not been able to see those financial accounts. And the Public Accounts Committee has not had the opportunity to get into any of those investigations.

Madam Speaker, if we had stuck with accomplishments . . . but I can see why there would be a challenge with that. We see what has occurred. We saw the statement this morning. We see that the Minister of Tourism is worried about the lack of accomplishments. We see that we still do not have a cruise ship port. We see that we have some proposal out there somewhere. I do not even know if there is support for that proposal within Government. But we do know that the numbers are down.

I can remember two years ago expressing how we had heard the cruise line saying that they were going to be cutting the numbers, that ships would stop coming. After I had spoken, after I gave that warning (and we talk about prophet of doom), the Minister got up and said, Oh, no, no, no. This is just normal. Some of the ships are being redeployed but there will be no overall loss. This is for a short period of time. Lo and behold, Madam Speaker, what do we see? We see the numbers down significantly over the four-year period. And we are expecting them to drop further.

Madam Speaker, we had a situation with air arrivals. I know now we are going to try to use all of the excuses to go on. We have the concern with the airport. We see that the Minister has, again, tried his best I am sure, to get the new airport. But so far we have a new parking lot. We do not know what else is happening with that and then we hear about this great Go East initiative. Supposedly all of the development was on the other side of the Island and we were going to do some tourism development there. So far I have not heard any raving improvements or endorsements of that initiative.

I guess what this discussion has shown me is that the reason why that Minister talked about corruption is because he has little else to talk about. I can only assume that he found that he was successful in doing it three years and a bit ago—he figures that that was his main ticket here the last time. It was not on a track record, it was on corruption and his expectation that if he was going to expose all this corruption (I assume he thinks) that that is the way he will be successful again.

Madam Speaker, he has been given an opportunity—an opportunity that is not afforded to too many people—to prove himself. He has had four years to do that. I have confidence in the smart Cayman people that when the grades are given there will be a big F on the part of those accomplishments in tourism.

We see that there will be games played as to who will step in. We saw the Minister of Education trying to show up those numbers a few weeks ago in offering seats to Members on this side. Madam Speaker, of course the press would pick up on that. One single Member, Madam Speaker. I assume they just need to replace the one they feel pretty sure they are going to lose! I am sure that as it gets closer there will be requests for additional Members, but are they looking for—

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Maybe, Madam Speaker.

We do have challenging times ahead for the next group. I want to assure the Cayman public that the United Democratic Party has an able and willing team to take on the significant challenges that will be here facing the next group.

Madam Speaker, the Leader of the United Democratic Party has a track record of taking us through difficult times. In 2001 when we had that same deficit, or maybe a worse deficit, we came forward with a plan that allowed the country to get back on track, allowed us to get back to having surplus budgets. It was a difficult time. We knew that we had just borrowed some $52 million to get us past the . . . even the recurrent was $26 million, I think. The solution offered was to borrow again.

Madam Speaker, the United Democratic Party, under the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition, made a very difficult decision. I remember when the current Minister of Education got up and talked about killing the goose that laid the golden egg and that this package was going to destroy the financial centre and destroy the stability of the Cayman Islands. And we have seen, Madam Speaker, that that did not come to pass. We have seen that the country has benefited significantly from that increase in the revenue base. We saw that that increase actually allowed the People's Progressive Movement to carry on what would be termed the "spending spree"—an acknowledged biggest capital investment programme the country has ever seen. And even with all of that we have seen that the PPM has got us into unprecedented debt, even with an increased revenue stream.

We have seen that that increased revenue stream allowed us to embark on the ambitious school projects that will supposedly, and hopefully, be the saviour of our education system for the Cayman Islands. Even though there were other Ministers who came before, whether it was Mr. Truman Bodden, Mr. Roy Bodden, Mr. Benson Ebanks, in my opinion they all had the best interests of the Caymanian students. They all attempted to improve the education system of the Cayman Islands. We have seen supposedly under the PPM Administration what will be a new day in education. We can only hope—because we came here and voted for that money, and supported education—we can only hope that it will create an improvement for our young people.

But so far, Madam Speaker, even with the money in place, we have not seen one new classroom yet. What we can say is that under the Minister of Education under the United Democratic Party we did get a new school in that term. We got a new school even though there was Hurricane Ivan, even though there was a change of Government after 2001. Even during that period we got a new school. And guess what. It only cost some $10 million to do. I think it was $13 million.

Time will tell whether or not the Minister of Education has made the significant contribution to education that he feels he has made. I will say that just like the Leader of Government Business, the Minister of Works, the Minister of Health, the Minister of Tourism, I do feel that he genuinely thinks that what he is doing . . . but I keep saying, Madam Speaker, that while it is fine to plan, and while the intentions are good, only time will tell. So to get up and start talking about the same system that gave him his education, that gave us our education, and to say prematurely, in my mind, that he is doing something dynamic and greatly improving education, is a bit premature.

All the other previous Ministers can in their minds all look at the achievements they made. We hope that the new Minister of Education—the United Democratic Party's Minister of Education—will be doing things that will also give results and give a bright future to our young people.

Madam Speaker, it is late. I recognise that this is the start of what we commonly refer to as the silly season. The campaign will begin in some three hours. I look forward to and pray for a safe, honest and peaceful election.

The Speaker: Hope so.

Mr. Cline A. Glidden, Jr.: Madam Speaker, I look forward to continuing to serve the wonderful people of the Cayman Islands if I am chosen to do so. It has been a privilege and an honour to have been given the opportunity for the past eight years and ten months to serve in the Legislative Assembly. I too can say that I have learned a lot from my colleagues in here: the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, you, Madam Speaker, the Leader of Government Business, the Minister of Health and my other colleagues, those who have been here, my colleague the First Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, those here before me, those who came in with my same class, the class of 2000, and also those who came in, in the class of 2005. This is a continuous learning process. I have much appreciation for all those who have helped and assisted me to learn the system that we refer to as the legislative system and this democratic system of government.

Madam Speaker, I hope I have done my job to the satisfaction of the good people of West Bay, who have given me the honour of being their representative. I know I have not been able to achieve everything they would have wanted or expected me to achieve. I do not know how long it will take, so I cannot make any promises of when I will achieve everything I am expected to achieve. What I can say is that I look forward to continuing with my colleagues in working hard to better serve the people of the Cayman Islands after 20 May, and to better serve specifically the people of the beautiful district of West Bay, of which I am proud to be the elected representative.

Madam Speaker, I wish you well with your future plans. I wish my colleagues on this side of the Legislative Assembly and also on the Government bench well. I wish for them good health. I look forward to a clean, safe and honest election. Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak? [pause]

If no other Member wishes to speak, I would just quickly like to thank the staff of the Legislative Department, particularly Ms. Sharon. She and I both live the furthest from this building.

I will address the people of North Side through television as I am certain they prefer me to get safely to North Side before the wee hours of the morning.

The question is that this honourable House do now adjourn sine die. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

Ayes.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. This honourable House is now adjourned sine die.

An hon Member: Hip, hip hurray!

At 9.15 pm the House stood adjourned sine die.
