[Prayers read by Pastor James Arch, JP]

The Speaker: Please be seated. The Legislative Assembly is in session. Proclamation.

PROCLAMATION NO. 2 OF 1999

The Clerk: Proclamation No. 2 of 1999 by His Excellency John Owen, Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, Member of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, Governor of the Cayman Islands.

“WHEREAS by subsection (1) of section 46 of Schedule 2 of the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order, 1972, it is provided that the Sessions of the Legislative Assembly shall be held at such time and place as the Governor may, from time to time, by Proclamation appoint;

“NOW THEREFORE, under and by virtue of the powers vested in me by the aforesaid Order, I, John Owen, Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, Member of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, Governor of the Cayman Islands, do hereby proclaim and make known that a Session of the Legislative Assembly of the Cayman Islands shall be held in the Legislative Assembly Building in George Town, Island of Grand Cayman, at 10:00 AM, on Friday, the 19th day of February, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety-nine.

“Given under my hand and the Public Seal of the Cayman Islands at George Town in the island of Grand Cayman, this 15th day of February in the year of our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety-nine in the Forty-eighth year of the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. God Save the Queen.”

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

MOTION TO ARISE AND AWAIT HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR

Hon. Truman Boddan: Mr. Speaker, I move that this House do rise to await His Excellency the Governor and re-assemble on his arrival to receive a gracious message from the Throne.

The Speaker: I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House shall suspend to await the arrival of His Excellency.

AGREED: THAT THIS HOUSE DO RISE TO AWAIT HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR AND RE-ASSEMBLE, ON HIS ARRIVAL, TO RECEIVE A GRACIOUS MESSAGE FROM THE THRONE.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 9.45 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 10.01 AM

ARRIVAL OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR

The Governor's Aide-de-Camp gave three knocks on the door.

The Serjeant-at-Arms: His Excellency the Governor.

Procession:

Serjeant-at-Arms

The Speaker

His Excellency the Governor

Mrs. Owen

The Aide-de-Camp

The Clerk of the Legislative Assembly

The Deputy Clerk

His Excellency the Governor: Please be seated.

The Speaker: Your Excellency, I have pleasure in inviting you to address this Honourable House.

THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR MR. JOHN
OWEN, CMG, MBE

Honourable Speaker, Honourable Members of the Legislative Assembly, it is with great honour and humility that I present the Throne Speech.

The year 1999 will be a year of challenges. The two key challenges facing us will be the OECD initiative and the implementation of the Vision 2008.

Public interest and support for Vision 2008 has been overwhelming. I am grateful to you all for your support, particularly the 250 people in the Round Tables who have been meeting regularly over the last four months, and the 30 member Planning Team. You have all invested of that most precious of commodities, time. We owe you all a debt of gratitude. I offer my personal thanks to you all.

The public polling exercise set out clearly the concerns of the people and their vision for the future. The challenge of 1999 will be to address those concerns and meet the people's expectations through prioritising, agreeing and implementing the Vision 2008 ten-year strategic plan.

Vision 2008, reinvention of government, fiscal reform, public sector management reform, and freedom of information initiatives have given the Cayman Islands the opportunity to break out of the straitjacket of a colonial style system of bureaucracy which seeks to control from the centre. The challenge to Cayman is to embrace the reforms which will provide for a better more responsive style of government which focuses responsibility and decision making where it can be the most effective to meet the objective of giving value for money for every dollar voted by this Legislative Assembly. The future is in your hands.

I am grateful to the Members of the Legislative Assembly for their support of Vision 2008. During her visit to Cayman, Baroness Symons also expressed the support and interest of Her Majesty's Government in Vision 2008 and the reform initiatives. One of the tasks of my successor will be to continue to work with all of you in the process of implementation and evaluation.

The other challenge is the OECD initiative on so-called tax havens. The Cayman Islands Government and all the Members of this House are united on the need for Cayman to engage in dialogue with the OECD. But in doing so we need not be defensive. Cayman has a good story to tell. Cayman is putting quality first and continues to be at the forefront of the fight against money laundering. We should therefore take advantage of the OECD initiative and send a clear message to the world, as well as the OECD, that Cayman is committed to maintaining itself as a quality jurisdiction, which also acknowledges its responsibilities to the international community.

Let me now proceed to report on the intentions of the Government.

THE JUDICIARY

The key target for the Judicial Department in 1999 is to improve the listing of cases in the Summary Court. The objective is to dispose of the more than 50 outstanding criminal cases over two years old by 1st July 1999.

A computerised file management system for all criminal and civil cases will be implemented in 1999.

The eligibility of clients for legal aid and alternative ways of recovering legal costs will be reviewed.

THE PORTFOLIO OF INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The Portfolio is committed to completing the review of the Public Service Commission Regulations and the General Orders in 1999.

The Support Unit of the Reinvention of Public Services will continue to assist those agencies, which are committed to improving their operations.

It is expected that the review of the Elections Law will be completed and a permanent Register of Voters established this year.

The Royal Cayman Islands Police

During 1999 the R.C.I.P. will focus on:

1. Handling Calls for Assistance from the Public

- ◆ Answering them in less than 10 seconds.
- ◆ In emergencies, to arrive within 15 minutes island-wide.

2. Managing Crime

- ◆ Reducing crime, particularly burglary of people's homes.
- ◆ Increasing the detection rate, particularly for burglary of people's homes.
- ◆ Targeting offenders, particularly those involved in drug related activities.

3. Keeping our Roads Safe

- ◆ Testing drivers for excess alcohol in all road accidents.
- ◆ Enforcing speed restrictions and road laws generally, including bicycles.
- ◆ Educating drivers on their responsibilities.

4. Community Relations and Community Problem Solving

- ◆ Appointing a constable to be specifically responsible for each community in the Cayman Islands.
- ◆ Arranging 24-hour police cover island-wide by returning officers to frontline duties through a civilianisation of backroom jobs that do not require police cover.
- ◆ Introducing specific drug related training in schools by specialist police officers.

The Prison Department

Northward Prison will continue to equip staff adequately to discharge their duties by providing more in-service training.

The overcrowding at Northward will be addressed in 1999.

The partnership formed in 1998 between the private sector and the Prison to improve skills training for offenders will be strengthened and encouraged.

Immigration Department

In 1999, the department will continue its re-invention initiative, which is geared toward positive attitudes and efficiency. The corresponding need for technological upgrades and the introduction of new processes will be addressed.

Government Information Services

Training programmes in media relations for the civil service will be implemented. The unit will investigate the development of a Government Website informing on and showcasing Government services.

Personnel Department

Heads of departments will be given greater accountability for a wider range of day to day human resource management through the introduction of a new resource data system—part of the Integrated Resources Information System project. This will be supplemented by changes in the Public Service Commission Regulations and General Orders, which will provide for greater delegation of responsibilities to operational managers.

Further, clerical and executive officer development courses have been scheduled for 1999, designed to enhance the skills of entry level Caymanians in the civil service.

The Personnel Department will provide an internal Human Resource consultancy service to departments in order to assist them in their preparation for reforms in staff management.

Computer Services

The Computer Services Department will continue to give priority to making computers and other IT equipment and software systems within the Cayman Islands Government Year 2000 compliant. A Year 2000 Project Office has been set up to provide controlling officers with effective tools to meet the millennium commitments. In March there will be a two-day Year 2000 Contingency Planning Workshop presented by the National Computing Centre from Manchester UK. This comprehensive workshop will help controlling officers prepare for any unexpected consequences as well as equip them with key skills and techniques needed to combat the Year 2000 "bug."

Legislative Department

The Select Committees will continue to hold meetings during 1999 with the hope of concluding their studies or reviews and tabling their Reports during the current term of office.

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association

The 24th Conference of the Caribbean, the Americas and the Atlantic Region of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association will be held in the Cayman Islands from the 26th – 30th July, 1999.

THE PORTFOLIO OF LEGAL ADMINISTRATION

There will be a greater focus on:

- ◆ sound and timely legal advice;
- ◆ international co-operation in criminal matters;
- ◆ confiscation and forfeiture of the proceeds of crime, including drug offenders' assets;
- ◆ law reform;
- ◆ resources will be added at a senior level to augment legislative drafting capabilities to enable a fast track for financial services laws the scheduling of laws on a legislative calendar for enactment.

PORTFOLIO OF FINANCE AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The primary areas of focus of the Portfolio for 1999 are:

- ◆ the continuation of the financial reform programme;
- ◆ the provision of support for the continued implementation of the Integrated Resource Information System;
- ◆ the successful resolution of the challenges posed by the EU/OECD initiatives;
- ◆ the development of a health insurance scheme for civil servants; the chairing of various plenaries and training sessions of the Caribbean Financial Action Task Force; and
- ◆ the successful hosting of the October 1999 Commonwealth Finance Ministers' Meeting.

Economics & Statistics Office

The focus of the Economics & Statistics Office in 1999 will be on the 1999 Census of Population and Housing with Census Day being 10th October. The Census was last held in 1989. Nationals and residents are urged to play their part and be counted.

The office will also produce economic and fiscal updates for medium-term analysis and strategy formulation for use in developing the Medium Term Financial Strategy and Public Sector Investment Plan; examine in detail the island's revenue structure; and produce quarterly and annual debt forecasts.

General Registry and Shipping

The General Registry will concentrate on:

- ◆ developing regulations to the Companies Law to cover fee related matters;

- ◆ researching electronic storage measures for companies files;
- ◆ developing a procedures manual; and
- ◆ introducing and consolidating same day express service.

Building on the success of a record 38% growth in 1998, the shipping registry anticipates a continuing increase in tonnage during 1999. The main sector for growth is expected to be oil, gas and chemical tankers. Amendments to the Merchant Shipping Law and a new Marine Pollution Law are among the legislative goals for 1999.

Internal Audit

In 1999, the Unit will focus on government's revenue collection and regulatory systems. This will involve ensuring that sufficient controls exist for the timely collection of revenue; Year 2000: that departments' revenue and regulatory systems and their control structures are adequate and that regulations are enforced by the departments.

The Monetary Authority

The government is taking the necessary action to give full independence to the Monetary Authority. Legislation to give effect to this will be brought to the House during 1999.

To comply with international supervisory requirements and facilitate cross-border supervision Memoranda of Understanding will be entered into with a number of countries whose banks are operating from Cayman.

The programme of on-site review of banks, trust companies, insurance companies and mutual fund administrators will continue in 1999.

Additional currency note issues by the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority will take place in 1999. The new C series issue will include the $100 bill and the $25 bill and, as in the case of the new $10, $5, and $1 issued in 1998, they will carry the existing design but with enhanced security features.

Public Service Pensions Board

The Government contribution to the public service pension fund in 1999 will be $9.7 million, bringing the balance in the fund to approximately $50 million by year-end.

The Public Service Pensions Bill is expected to be considered during this meeting of the House.

Other objectives for 1999 include ongoing training for staff and trustees, the development of an educational programme for plan participants, updating the financing plan, an actuarial review as well as other consulting services required to implement the proposed Public Service Pensions Law (1999).

The Stock Exchange

The Cayman Islands Stock Exchange now has 140 listings and hopes to reach the 200 mark by its second anniversary in July 1999.

The Exchange has established its reputation in the international marketplace as a first class listing facility. Combining clear, concise regulation, and a swift, efficient service, the Exchange has attracted business from the world's leading financial institutions. Wider international recognition for the Exchange will be sought in 1999.

Treasury

The Oracle General Ledger and Accounts Payable modules of the new Integrated Resource Information System were implemented on 4 January 1999. Further modules will be implemented during 1999.

Debt recovery continues to play a significant role in the work of the Treasury. As at mid-January 1999, debt recovery by the Debt Collection Unit amounted to $2.6 million, an increase of $1.4 million over last year.

MINISTRY OF TOURISM, COMMERCE, TRANSPORT AND WORKS

Tourism Department

This year efforts will focus on the areas of tourism training and development, research activities to produce a detailed profile of the Sister Islands, further improvements to the department's web-site, and more relationship marketing activities particularly with the travel trade.

Pedro St. James and Botanic Park

Pedro St. James National Historic Site is a national treasure, combining restored historical artefacts with state-of-the-art technology. It is an attraction that captures the history of the Cayman Islands.

The Queen Elizabeth II Botanic Park has reached the stage in its development where it can be aggressively marketed as an established land-based attraction. The Botanic Park and Pedro St. James will in many instances be jointly promoted.

Vehicle and Driver Licensing Unit

As part of a decentralisation of services which began in West Bay, a unit will be set up in Bodden Town which will serve as a 'hub' for the districts of Bodden Town, East End, and North Side. A new computer system will be implemented early this year.

Legislation will be introduced this year, which will remove the need to inspect private cars which are under three years old or which have less than 36,000 miles on the odometer. In conjunction with the decentralisation programme this will reduce the congestion at the unit in George Town.

Fire Department

This year a number of middle managers and supervisors will be attending advanced courses in fire fighting and rescue at institutions in the U.S.A. and U.K.

Due to an upgrade in the category of the Owen Roberts International Airport to accommodate larger aircraft such as the Boeing 777, the Fire Service will acquire another Airfield Crash Tender and hire three additional staff members this year.

The department also intends to enhance its fire safety and prevention programmes through additional public educational programmes and the publishing of a fire prevention booklet.

Department of Vehicle and Equipment Services

Initiatives to reform and improve efficiency will commence this year aimed at creating a more modern, customer focused commercial entity. Additionally, the department's computer hardware and software will be upgraded to ensure the efficient processing of bills and that a proper accounting system is in place.

Public Works Department

In January of this year, the department re-activated its agency Reinvention Team, which is working in conjunction with a consultant to produce a reinvention plan by mid-1999. This plan will serve as an agenda for improvements and adjustments to the services currently provided by the department.

Building Section

On new building construction, PWD will continue to provide project management, architectural, quantity surveying and construction supervision services to the various government departments and authorities.

The building maintenance unit will continue to service and implement various improvement programmes related to school buildings, government buildings, staff houses, recreational facilities, and other buildings during the year.

Funds are provided in the 1999 budget for the design and development of the West Bay hurricane shelter and civic centre.

Roads Section

District Roads Programme

The upgrading of various residential roads in the districts will continue.

Main Roads Resurfacing

In 1999 PWD will commence a programme of rehabilitating the hot-mixed asphalt pavements on the existing main road network throughout Grand Cayman.

Traffic Improvement Programme

The signalization of the intersection at Bobby Thompson Way and Smith Road will be completed in March. Other major intersections where upgrades are planned for 1999 are:

- ◆ Crewe Road and Owen Roberts Drive Intersection;
- ◆ Crewe Road and Smith Road Intersection; and
- ◆ North Sound Road and Dorcy Drive Intersection

Capital Construction Programme (New Roads)

PWD will construct Phase One of the Crewe Road Bypass, from near Tropical Gardens Road to Bobby Thompson Way. In addition, the Harquail Bypass will be extended to the Galleria Shopping Centre on West Bay Road, and the roundabout will be constructed at the south end of the Harquail Bypass at the intersection of North Sound Way and Nixon Road.

Major Reconstruction Programme

Dorcy Drive will undergo reconstruction.

Planning and Studies

PWD will continue working to prepare a National Roads Plan with the main focus this year on developing a proposed plan for managing the development of the roads corridors.

Port Authority

In accordance with the Port Master Development Plan, the Authority plans to construct an expanded finger pier this year. The longer pier will accommodate larger ships and allow for the simultaneous working by crane of cargo ships on both the North and South piers. In addition, a two-acre landfill will be developed to the north of the present dock to be used as an additional cargo staging area to support expanded pier operations. The estimated cost of these works is $12.4M.

In an effort to improve services to its customers and improve the working conditions for its staff, the Authority plans to construct a billing office at the Cargo Distribution Centre.

The Little Cayman dock area is now vested in the Authority. The Port will shortly investigate the feasibility of providing full Port services in Little Cayman.

THE MINISTRY OF HEALTH, SOCIAL WELFARE, DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION AND REHABILITATION

The Ministry of Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation anticipates the achievement of the following objectives in 1999: The Ministry will continue to place emphasis on the implementation of the Strategic Plans for Health and for Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

Health

Health Practitioners' Law

A revised Health Practitioners' Law will be presented to the Legislative Assembly for approval.

Health Services Fees Law

Amendments to the Health Services Fees Law relating to the cost of new services will soon be presented to the Legislative Assembly.

Mental Health Law

A revised Mental Health Law will be presented to the Legislative Assembly in the second half of the year.

Public Assistance

The policy for the provision of public assistance to the needy will be reviewed and updated in the first quarter of the year.

Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation

The main house of the Hawley Estate in Breakers will be renovated and opened as a residential drug rehabilitation centre to serve the needs of addicted persons in the Cayman Islands.

The Ministry will establish a department of Substance Abuse Services to upgrade the provision of substance abuse treatment and rehabilitation in the islands. This will bring the present staff and facilities of the outpatient Cayman Counselling Centre and those of the residential drug rehabilitation centre at Breakers under one department of government.

An inter-agency team building process will be completed and the roles, responsibilities and accountabilities of all the entities concerned with treatment and rehabilitation in the Cayman Islands will be clearly defined. Included in this process will be the Cayman Counselling Centre, the National Drug Council, Canaan Land Home, the Health Services and Social Services departments and Her Majesty's Prison at Northward.

Counselling services in the schools and at other locations will be increased for the adolescent substance abusing population.

The National Drug Council will co-ordinate the implementation of the Cayman Islands National Strategic Plan for Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. Its goals will be to:

- continue to focus on drug abuse prevention with emphasis on the education of young people;
- establish district councils in order to increase the awareness and participation of the public in planned activities;

- further strengthen the Quest drug education programme in schools by co-ordinating the necessary training programmes and providing periodic drug awareness campaigns for students, in co-operation with other local agencies;
- co-ordinate a comprehensive media campaign to further educate the general public on the dangers and ill effects of substance abuse;
- ensure that programmes and initiatives will be extended to the Sister Islands;
- continue to monitor the nature and extent of the existing drug abuse situation in the Cayman Islands by initiating and publishing studies and reports on the substance abuse situation.

Health Services

The new Cayman Islands Health Services Complex will be officially opened in March. With greatly improved facilities and equipment and a renewed emphasis on meeting the needs of patients and their families, the community will receive an enhanced level of health care.

The accident and emergency unit will be physically separated from the outpatient services and the department will be able to provide enhanced general practice service with additional "by appointment" doctors' clinics.

The significant improvement in the dental services achieved in 1998 will be further consolidated by an emphasis on dental health promotion programmes, particularly through the schools' dental service.

An additional ophthalmologist will be employed at the Lion's Eye Clinic to further increase the level of services provided and to reduce the waiting time for eye care appointments.

Health care surveys of prevalent diseases will be conducted in order to assist the department to further improve the level of patient care and types of treatment provided.

Revenue generated by the department should increase significantly this year, partly brought about by health insurance and improved collection of fees.

Additional diagnostic services and increased specialists visits will be provided to the health services in the Sister Islands.

A Health Services Foundation will be established to encourage the donation of charitable gifts and to foster community-wide support of health care services.

The department will implement recommendations arising from the report of a consultancy carried out last year. These relate to value for money issues such as efficiency of staffing and space allocation, as well as quality assurance.

Emphasis on the Caymanianisation of the Health Services department will continue through succession planning and an effective local training programme.

Social Services

A Remand Centre for the care of juveniles will be designed in the early part of the year with construction beginning by the last quarter.

The drafting of regulations for the Children Law 1995 will be completed within the year to enable the implementation of the law.

Once planning approval has been granted, construction of a Boys' Home will commence in the second half of the year.

The Probation and Aftercare Service will expand its key role as the government agency most concerned with the rehabilitation, supervision and integration into society of people convicted of crimes in this jurisdiction and, in particular, of those who are at risk of further offending.

All policies and procedures relating to the Residential Care Programme which are currently in place will be reviewed in accordance with the Children Law 1995, and programmes will be developed to prepare residents who are leaving residential care.

A recruitment drive will be undertaken shortly for at least ten new foster parents by December.

The Social Services department's Adult Special Needs Programme will establish a Day Care programme for seniors at the Kirkconnell Community Centre in Cayman Brac. On Grand Cayman, a suitable vehicle will be acquired to provide transportation for elderly and disabled clients.

The architectural design will commence this year on the Adult Care Centre for the elderly in the district of North Side.

THE MINISTRY OF EDUCATION, AVIATION and PLANNING

Education

The Education Department is continuing with the implementation of the strategic plan that was developed and approved in 1995. The third annual update will take place in April this year, and modifications will be made to the plan so as to ensure that it meets the educational needs and challenges of the Cayman Islands into the new millennium.

The national curriculum continues to be developed. In addition to the work being done in Language Arts, Mathematics, Science and Social Studies, curriculum teams are proceeding with the design of a national curriculum in Art, Music and Physical Education. Work is also continuing in developing the assessment tools that will measure student success in mastering the required learning outcomes. On the secondary level, work is commencing on curriculum revision so as to strengthen vocational opportunities for students, as well as beginning an examination of graduation requirements.

Three Caymanian teachers will commence study leave this September as they undertake advanced studies in their field. Three teachers will also be returning in September from a year's study overseas and will bring their increased skills into the classrooms.

The Education Department will be providing assistance to those schools that have recently undergone the Schools' Inspection programme. The assistance will take the form of training materials and monitoring of the action plans developed by the schools.

The Ministry will continue to assist private schools by grants.

As a result of the growth of student enrolment in our schools, several new capital projects will be started as well as some being completed. Five primary schools on Grand Cayman have now been completely air-conditioned and work is continuing on fully air-conditioning the other two primary schools on Grand Cayman as well as the Brac primary schools. Work will begin on air-conditioning the remaining classrooms in the high schools. The playing field at Red Bay Primary has been completed and the administration building will be completed in mid-March. Work will commence on the multi-purpose hall for Red Bay Primary School as well as the long awaited hall for John A Cumber Primary School in West Bay. A new primary school will be started in Prospect, which will eliminate the overcrowding in primary schools in the area from George Town to Bodden Town.

Construction will finally begin on the much-needed Lighthouse School this year. The plans are being finalised, and construction should begin by late summer with an occupation date set for September of 2000.

The Education Department has assisted in the creation of a National Parents Teachers Association and Home School Association, so as to improve the communication between parents, schools, the Education Department and the Ministry of Education.

The Schools' Inspectorate will continue to inspect government and private schools and ensure their findings are made available to parents. This year John Gray High School, St Ignatius High School and Triple C will be inspected. In addition, the five schools already inspected will be revisited to assess and report on the progress made.

The training of seven occasional inspectors will be completed. This will substantially increase the level of trained expertise available on the Island and reduce the need for overseas inspectors.

In 1999 the Ministry of Education will amalgamate the Scholarship Office and the Guaranteed Student Loan Scheme Office in order to improve the service to both programmes and to provide a strengthened Careers Advisory Service. Considerable groundwork on a National Training Initiative has been done in collaboration with the Department of Labour, utilising the services of a consultant funded by the Commonwealth Secretariat. This drive to strengthen both vocational education and vocational training will continue.

In the current academic year, registration in the programmes offered at the Community College was greater than anticipated. As a result the number of college graduates in 1999 will be significantly more than in previous years.

During the current calendar year, construction of the third building in the Phase II expansion of the college campus—the Multi-Purpose Hall—will be completed, and the Cayman Islands Law School will be started.

The college is currently investigating the possibility of introducing four-year degree programmes in Business and Accounting. In conjunction with the Ministry of Education, the college intends to introduce a Teacher Education Programme in September 1999.

The Agricultural and Industrial Development Board under the Ministry of Agriculture, Communication, Environment and Natural Resources will continue to serve as administering agent of student loans for the Government Guaranteed Student Loan Scheme in 1999.

Aviation

The Civil Aviation Authority's primary focus for 1999 will be to continue working on and to complete projects initiated in 1998, including the development of the master plan for Owen Roberts International Airport and Gerrard Smith International Airport. In addition to this, the Civil Aviation Authority is continuing its work on navigational aids and other relevant airport equipment in order that they are Year 2000 compliant. Other projects earmarked for 1999 include conducting the necessary works to rehabilitate the runway at Gerrard Smith International Airport and to proceed with the development of the airport in Little Cayman.

Cayman Airways is considering purchasing a third jet to increase capacity.

Planning

The Planning Department will continue to utilize the Reinvention exercise to examine additional ways to improve processing of applications and the provision of greater customer service.

This year the department will continue drafting Development Plans for Grand Cayman, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. The amendments to the Grand Cayman plan will introduce new zones. The Development Plan process for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will give residents the opportunity to help shape the future of their islands, as well as providing an overall framework for development.

Vision 2008 is on target. Last week the 16 Round Tables presented 234 action plans to the Planning Team. Based on the action plans, the Planning Team is now working on drafting a phased National Strategic Plan for presentation to Executive Council by early April. The Plan will then be tabled in the Legislative Assembly.

When the Plan has been approved by this Honourable House, the Strategic Integration Group made up of senior civil servants as well as politicians from both sides of the House, under my chairmanship, will ensure that the National Strategic Plan will be implemented and will be integrated with other on going and proposed reform initiatives of government.

MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, COMMUNICATIONS, ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

One of the Ministry's key priorities in 1999 will be the completion of an environmental study called the Provision of Construction and Fill Material for the Cayman Islands. This will be a multi-disciplinary study to address various key issues related to offshore dredging and onshore mining and quarrying. The study will make recommendations related to the supply of these materials based on demand projections over the next ten and 20 years.

The designation of the proposed Ramsar Site in Little Sound, Grand Cayman will be completed in 1999.

A study will be conducted on affordable housing and a full report and recommendations presented by September of this year.

Telecommunications

A high priority for 1999 is the regularisation of all broadcast licences. This will also provide additional revenue to government with royalty collections expected to increase. A regulatory authority that is to be established under the new Telecommunications Law will come into effect and become the primary body that will deal with issues affecting any licensee who operates under the law.

Agriculture

The year 1999 has been designated the "Year of Agriculture" by the Ministry of Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources. During the year a review and evaluation of the roll over Agricultural Plan (1996-2000) will be conducted.

Department of Environmental Health

The department of Environmental Health will replace and expand its waste collection vehicle fleet in 1999. New vehicles will also allow the department to implement a regularly scheduled bulk collection service.

New biomedical waste incinerators will begin operation in Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac. These facilities will be utilised for burning waste oil, hospital waste and other special waste.

A new waste management facility for Cayman Brac will be designed and a closure plan prepared for the existing landfill.

The department of Environmental Health will prepare a feasibility study for alternative disposal technologies suitable for use in the Cayman Islands. The department will also explore alternatives for landfill cover material to extend its supply of onsite marl.

The department also plans to upgrade and expand the environmental services on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman with new offices and a water quality analysis laboratory.

Postal Services

Projects for 1999 include renovation and refurbishment of the East End post office, construction of a new post office at Bodden Town and architectural design work of West Bay and West End post offices.

Lands And Survey

The Lands and Survey Department is currently carrying out aerial photography to allow the preparation of up-to-date topographic mapping, facilitating the publication of the first ever Street Atlas of the Cayman Islands. Steps will also be taken to permit on-line access of the various data sets maintained by the department.

Mosquito Research Control Unit

In 1999 the Mosquito Research & Control Unit will concentrate efforts to protect residents and visitors from the threat of mosquito-borne diseases. Such efforts will endeavour to maintain Cayman's status as the only country in the region recognised as free of the Yellow Fever mosquito.

In addition, MRCU will expand the range of modern mosquito control methods.

Environment

In 1999 the Department of Environment will launch a new project to assess the current status of adult lobster populations, as well as levels of juvenile recruitment, in the north sound. The department will also collaborate with all relevant agencies on the introduction of a code of conduct for the prevention of pollution from small ships in marinas and anchorage.

Water Authority of the Cayman Islands

The Water Authority will continue work on two major infrastructure projects, the extension of the public water supply system through the district of East End, and the expansion of the wastewater treatment works in Grand Cayman, which presently collects and treats wastewater generated in the West Bay Beach resort area. Construction of these two projects will continue through the year 2000 and represent a total capital investment by the Authority of $9 million over two and a half years.

The Water Authority will implement new procedures in 1999 which are designed to improve customer satisfaction.

Turtle Farm

The Turtle Farm continues to attract visitors. Renovations to it will be carried out this year.

THE MINISTRY OF COMMUNITY AFFAIRS, SPORTS, WOMEN, YOUTH AND CULTURE

Cayman Brac and Little Cayman

Government's initiatives to revive the economy of Cayman Brac will continue in 1999. The existing concessions of import duty and stamp duty on land transfers will be extended and a new package of incentives will be considered.

A civil service working group will be set up to identify back office work that can be transferred from Grand Cayman to Cayman Brac. This work will provide much needed employment for high school graduates as well as other Cayman Brackers.

Efforts to diversify the tourism market will continue and a strategy for the development of the Sister Islands as a Nature Tourism destination will be further developed and implemented.

Work will continue on the development of a football field and plans will be prepared for a hurricane shelter on the bluff. The building will enable the island to provide safe shelter at a higher elevation to a further 350-400 persons.

Accommodations for Public Works employees in Little Cayman will be completed and work will commence on a new workshop adjacent to these living quarters.

Community Affairs

In 1999, the Ministry will continue to promote community participation through financial and logistical support and policy guidance to the Community Development Action Committee and District Beautification Committees.

Monthly financial assistance will continue to be provided to the ex-servicemen in continued recognition of their bravery and dedicated service during the islands time of need.

Culture

The Ministry will continue to liaise with the cultural bodies to ensure that Caymanian heritage is maintained throughout the school system in conjunction with the Ministry of Education.

Art Development

The recipient of the first Art Scholarship will complete a Masters of Arts degree in dance education in May of this year.

Cayman Islands National Museum

During 1999, the Cayman Islands National Museum will be analysing its long range staffing, facility, and programming needs. A five-year strategic plan will be finalised. Plans will also be initiated for a purpose-built museum to complement the support facility with interactive exhibition galleries focusing on Cayman's maritime heritage and natural history.

Cayman National Cultural Foundation

The Cayman Islands Festival of the Arts will continue in each of the districts. The festival will again celebrate the religious heritage of the islands.

The theatrical season will include four full-length productions: three of them local plays.

The Foundation's youth programmes will offer after-school training in the disciplines of instrumental music, choral singing, acting and dance. Community-based educational programmes, particularly in the area of dance, will be offered regularly.

For the first time, the Foundation will be maintaining an expanded grant fund, to which Caymanian artists may apply. This will enable them to engage in projects, involving research or to upgrade their skills.

Cayman National Archive

In 1999, the Archive will continue to pursue funding for its expansion, which will greatly improve its services to the public and government.

Substantial progress on writing a new history of the Cayman Islands is expected, with a draft text of twenty chapters completed for review by the new history committee at the end of the year.

Public Library

The Public Library in George Town will celebrate its 60th Anniversary in 1999. Renovations to the library will be completed as part of these celebrations.

Work will continue on the conversion of the Bodden Town town hall to a district library this year.

National Gallery of the Cayman Islands

By the end of March the National Gallery will have chosen a conceptual design for its new facility and selected a local architect to carry the project through. Following the recent acceleration in the number and scope of art workshops involving members of the public, the National gallery will rent new workshop space that will be used on a daily basis throughout the year. The number of classes and lectures run by the National Gallery will increase, as will art programmes offered to schools.

Labour and Labour Relations

The Department of Labour will recruit an additional Labour Inspector for Grand Cayman, as well as a professional accountant who will inspect the records of hotels and condominiums in respect of gratuities and the distribution thereof. The amendment to mandate the payment of gratuities twice monthly will also be brought during this meeting.

Project Prepare, a programme intended to facilitate the re-integration of ex-prisoners into society, has begun to show positive results. The Ministry, through the Labour Department and in conjunction with employers in both the public and private sectors, will continue to develop and if necessary expand this project.

Three labour tribunals were reconstituted and began conducting hearings in July 1998. The number of tribunals will be increased to six this year in order to reduce the backlog of cases.

National Pension Legislation

The Ministry, through the National Pensions Board and the Office of the Superintendent of Pensions, will complete the initial registration process and institute the first renewal procedure, which is due on 20th June 1999.

Sports

Priority will be given to the reorganisation of the Sports Office to promote better management and maintenance of the sporting and recreational facilities.

The Ministry will seek to introduce the concept of user fees for sports facilities to help offset the recurrent expenditure needed to provide and maintain sports and recreational facilities.

Work will continue on sports and recreational facilities for most of the districts and will include the Cayman Brac Football Field, Bodden Town Playing Field, Old Man Bay Playing Field, Airport Park in George Town and the Frank Sound Park in North Side. The playing fields in Bodden Town and Old Man Bay will be completed during 1999.

The Family Sports and Recreation Centre in Spotts is a long-term project which will be phased in, as money is allocated, and it is expected to include a national headquarters for our youth.

Women

"Women of Cayman"

The entire month of March will once again be the focus of "Women of Cayman" with activities focusing on the contribution women continue to make to the development of the Caymanian society.

Cayman Islands Advisory Committee on Women

The Ministry will set in motion the activities of the advisory committee on women, which will be comprised of representatives from various disciplines/agencies working towards the enhancement of women and the family. The role of the committee will be to make recommendations to the Ministry regarding programmes and the improvement of the well being of women.

Youth

The development of a National Youth Policy is to be completed by December 1999. Dr. B. Ivan Henry, former Regional Director of the Commonwealth Youth Programme, has been retained as the technical advisor to the National Youth Policy Task Force.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Speaker and Honourable Members, as I conclude my final Speech from the Throne, I should like to record my thanks to the many persons who were involved in providing me with the material for it.

I should also like to take this opportunity to thank the Cayman Islands civil service for their hard work and dedication to duty and for the support they have given me. The Cayman Islands can be proud of its civil service.

Sadly, in six weeks time Carol and I leave the Cayman Islands. I want to take this opportunity to tell the Members of this House and the people of Cayman how much we have enjoyed our time with you all. The warmth and friendliness that you showed to us on arrival has continued unabated. We feel close to you all.

Finally, as you embark on the first meeting of the 1999 Session of the Legislative Assembly, I pray that Almighty God will bless and guide your deliberations. May He always direct and prosper the people of these islands.

HOUSE RESUMED AT 11:06 AM

The Serjeant-at-Arms: Mr. Speaker

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. I call upon the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment, and Natural Resources.

MOTION FOR THE DEFERRAL OF DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move the following motion:

“BE IT RESOLVED that this Honourable Legislative Assembly record its grateful thanks to His Excellency the Governor for the Address delivered at this meeting;

“BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the debate on the Address delivered by His Excellency the Governor be deferred until 24 February 1999.”

The Speaker: The question before the House is that the House do record its gratitude to His Excellency the Governor, and that the debate on the Throne Speech be deferred until Thursday, 24 February 1999.

If there is no debate, I shall put the question. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The motion is passed.

AGREED: THAT THIS HONOURABLE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY RECORD ITS GRATEFUL THANKS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR FOR THE ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE MEETING;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT THE DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR BE DEFERRED UNTIL WEDNESDAY, 24 FEBRUARY 1999.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 24(5)

Hon. Truman Boddan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before moving the motion for adjournment I would like to move a motion to bring forward the business of the last session to this session, sir. And to do so I would ask that there be a waiver of the notice under [Standing Order] 24(5) so that I can put the following motion. I would just read it thereafter.

The Speaker: The question is that we suspend Standing Order 24(5). Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 24(5) SUSPENDED.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Boddan: Mr. Speaker, I move that it be resolved that this Honourable House hereby waive all relevant Standing Orders, including Standing Orders 21(1) for questions; [Standing Order] 24 (5) for motions; and Standing Order 46(1) for all bills, motions, and questions from the previous meeting (which were not completed thereat) to be placed on the Business Paper of this meeting of this House.

The Speaker: The question is that all relevant Standing Orders, including Standing Orders 21(1) for questions; [Standing Order] 24 (5) for motions; and Standing Order 46(1) for all bills, motions, and questions from the previous meeting (which were not completed thereat) to be placed on the Business Paper of this meeting of this House. I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The Motion is passed.

AGREED: ALL RELEVANT STANDING ORDERS, INCLUDING STANDING ORDERS 21(1) FOR QUESTIONS, 24(5) FOR MOTIONS AND 46(1) FOR ALL BILLS, MOTIONS AND QUESTIONS FROM THE PREVIOUS MEETING WHICH WERE NOT COMPLETED THEREAT BE PLACED UPON THE BUSINESS PAPER OF THIS MEETING OF THE HOUSE.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Monday morning, 22 February 1999, at 10 o'clock.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Monday, 22 February 1999. I shall put the question: Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House stands adjourned until 10.00 am Monday.

AT 11.09 AM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 22 FEBRUARY 1999.

EDITED

[Prayers read by the First Elected Member for West Bay]

Mr. Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

Item number 2 on today's order paper, Administration of Oaths or Affirmations. Oath of Allegiance to be administered to Mr. A. Joel Walton, JP to be the Honourable Temporary Acting Third Official Member.

Mr. Walton would you come forward to the Clerk's table? Would all members please stand?

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS
OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE
by Mr. A. Joel Walton

Mr. A. Joel Walton: I, A. Joel Walton, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors, according to law, so help me God.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Walton, on behalf of all honourable Members I welcome you to the House for the time of your service here. Please take your seat as the Honourable Temporary Acting Third Official Member.

Please be seated.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

Mr. Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable Third Official Member who is performing other official duties at the moment and cannot be present.

Honourable Members, I wish to apologise on behalf of the Legislative Department. The Business Paper covering today's Order Paper is not in your hands with the accompanying bills and motions. I ask for your indulgence while this honourable House is suspended until 2:30 p.m. in order that we would have sufficient time to prepare them and put them in the possession of all members prior to debating them.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Do we need until 2:30 p.m. sir?

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, what we were able to deal with on Friday did not have with it the Business Paper. Apparently, there is other business beyond what we dealt with during the meeting on Friday. I think there are about eleven of the Private Members' Motions. Apparently, there are more of those. I understand there are more questions as well, and bills.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, those of us on this side certainly appreciate the gesture you have made, and I wish to thank you for the courtesy extended to us. It certainly would help us if we had an idea of what was forthcoming on the Business Paper in view of the fact that we have more than a full agenda. I see this morning that there are no questions, although we have a full encyclopaedia of questions as well.

Might I crave your indulgence, sir, by asking that we set our reconvening time at 11:30 a.m. rather than 2:30 p.m.? That should enable us to probably finish this bill before the House.

Mr. Speaker: My real concern is that I would rather, out of an abundance of caution in respect to the Press and members in the gallery, give a time that we feel confident we will be able to reconvene at. We can probably say 2.15 p.m. if that makes it more comfortable. But I don't want to say we will come back here at 11:00 a.m. and find out that we are not ready, and then just have to wait again. I ask the indulgence of honourable members that we suspend until 2:15 p.m.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: With all due respect, we are beginning this year and we have a lot of business to attend to. I am planning my time around what I consider to be the schedule here. I have postponed meetings this morning with members of my constituency to be here at this particular time. We have to have respect for members' time.

I expect that everybody understands that when I come here, I come here to do a particular function. And if it is not going to happen, I believe that I should have been notified. I have other obligations besides the obligations of meetings in this House.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Mr. Speaker, if I may just explain the agenda brought over, . . . and whenever the department could have it ready, obviously we will be ready to start, if you so wish, before 2:15 p.m. But maybe I need to explain that the business that is coming over . . . and it took a lot of typing I understand. Staff was in even over the weekend.

There are five papers, 68 parliamentary questions. This is just from last time. I think there are 11 Private Members' Motions; there are ten bills. . . I guess what I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a lot for the department to get out. I think members need to understand that it is not a matter of. . . as I understand it they did work over the weekend on this. But, whatever you feel is necessary, we could adjourn until then, sir.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, please, please.

Mr. Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: You know, if we did not have an Order Paper this morning it would be a different matter. But we do! And that's the difference. The Business Paper can always come along afterwards.

We know—and the Press knows—what was on the Order Paper from months ago being carried over. There was some new business, but so be it. We have an Order Paper, we have Government Motions that we can begin with, and so the Business Paper can always come later on.

As far as I am concerned, it's no big thing. This is not the first time it has happened, and we understand why it has happened. So I would say let us continue and conduct our business this morning.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: If that's the wish of the House, so be it sir. We are ready to move on if that is okay with you.

What I would suggest we do then, Mr. Speaker, is move a Standing Order to waive the relevant section relating to the Business Paper, so at least that is taken care of. I would move whatever relevant motion to waive the necessity for a Business Paper until it can be prepared.

Mr. Speaker: Honourable members, I have listened carefully to what both sides have said. I prefaced my remarks by an apology on behalf of the department. Had we had come here this morning and attempted to proceed, I would have been told we were railroading affairs. I am following standard procedure as set down, and that is that we shall now suspend. When the paper is ready, we will resume. Proceedings are suspended.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 10.42 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.29 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Administration of Oaths or Affirmations. Oath of Allegiance by Mr. Samuel Bulgin to be the Honourable Temporary Acting Second Official Member.

Mr. Bulgin, will you come forward? All members please stand.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE by Mr. Samuel Bulgin

Mr. Samuel Bulgin: I, Samuel Bulgin, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors, according to law, so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Bulgin, on behalf of all Honourable members I welcome you to this Honourable House for the time of your service. Please take your seat as the Honourable Temporary Acting Second Official Member.

Please be seated.

Government Business, Motions, Government Motion number 1/99. The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 24(5)

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Permit me, sir, to now move the Suspension of Standing Order 24(5) with respect to Government Motion No. 1/99 so that the motion can be carried at this time.

The Speaker: I shall put the question that Standing Order 24(5) be suspended as the allotted time has not elapsed. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 24(5) SUSPENDED.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, please continue.

GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99

INCREASE OF FINANCIAL GRANT TO VOLUNTARY
EX-SERVICEMEN AND THEIR WIDOWS

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg to move Government Motion No. 1/99. Increase of Financial Grant to Voluntary Ex-servicemen and their Widows.

The Speaker: Government Motion number 1/99 has been duly moved. Do you wish to speak to it?

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Yes, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Perhaps I can first start with reading the ambit and the two accompanying resolves of Motion No. 1/99, which state:

“WHEREAS Civil Servants, Pensioners and persons receiving financial assistance have all been granted financial increases in 1999;

“AND WHEREAS Veterans or their widows are only receiving a mere Two Hundred Cayman Islands dollars per month;

“AND WHEREAS the Veterans have placed their lives at risk by defending our freedom around the world;

“AND WHEREAS most of these Veterans and their Widows are now in their senior years with little or no fixed income or dependable means of livelihood;

“AND WHEREAS some of these Ex-Servicemen and their surviving Spouses have expressed a desire for an increased consideration and further that the government is also desirous of granting an increase to Veterans and their Widows;

“BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Veteran’s monthly grant be increased to Two Hundred and Fifty Cayman Islands Dollars in 1999 and to Four Hundred Dollars in the year 2000;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Members of the Legislative Assembly do not accept, at this time, funds previously appropriated under Head 10-07 109 being a grant for MLAs’ Offices, and that this said sum of seventy-five thousand dollars be utilised in 1999, to partially fund the increase to Veterans or their Widows and that Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount.”

Mr. Speaker, it is the position of the government that Motion No. 1/99 is a very timely and important motion. Nonetheless, sir, I will say on behalf of the government that it is our view that this motion will continue to display the genuine concern for the human element and, in this particular case, the very well deserving veterans and their widows.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of government’s consideration to provide financial grants to the ex-servicemen surfaced by way of Private Member’s Motion No. 15/94, moved by the late Mr. G. Haig Bodden. I would just like to take some time to remind members of that particular motion.

When the late Mr. Haig [Bodden] brought the motion it read, and I quote:

“WHEREAS during the Second World War some Caymanian men volunteered for service in the Trinidad Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve;

“AND WHEREAS the Trinidad Royal Volunteer Reserve was an adjunct of the British Royal Navy;

“AND WHEREAS most of these volunteers gave commendable service and received honourable discharges, service medals and ribbons at the end of their service;

“AND WHEREAS these kinds of servicemen are held in high esteem among many countries;

“AND WHEREAS many of these Caymanian volunteers are now in their senior years;

“AND WHEREAS some of these volunteers have died leaving spouses with no fixed income or dependable means of livelihood;

“AND WHEREAS some of these volunteers and the surviving spouses have expressed a desire for consideration;

“BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government investigate the possibility of providing some form of financial assistance to the deserving cases of these people.” [1994 Official Hansard Report, page 304]

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all honourable members vividly recall Mr. Haig’s presentation, as well as the other ancillary contributions that came from honourable members of this Parliament when this motion was duly passed back in 1994. Subsequent to that, the former Minister (now the First Elected Member from West Bay), together with the rest of the National Team Government, with the support of honourable members in this House, put in place the necessary arrangements for this contribution to be made to veterans and their widows.

As of now, the veterans are getting a monthly grant of $200 Cayman Islands dollars. From the feedback that I have received, they are greatly appreciative for the effort made by the now First Elected Member from West Bay and his colleagues. But in light of the recent increase to the indigent, handicapped and other persons in need (I believe it was with Private Member’s Motion No. 8/98), coupled together with the rising cost of living that has since increased, government has come forward with this important motion as we believe it will go a very long way in assisting persons in the category of veterans and their widows, to live as comfortable a life as possible.

It is also the government’s view, that it is only a fair and equitable gesture in favour of the veterans and their widows that they should see an equal increase as well.

The late Mr. Haig Bodden, when he was making his contribution (together with all the other honourable members) ably set out various justifications and reasons as to why this particular category should be receiving a financial subsidy or assistance from government. I concur with the various justifications as were then clearly set out. I believe, as I am sure all honourable members here today, that these men were indeed valiant men. They placed their lives at risk not only defending the peace, tranquillity, and liberty of us here in Cayman, but indeed, in a wider perspective, the entire world.

I feel that the proposed increase is in keeping with the recent change, and it is but a small token of our appreciation to the veterans and their widows. Further, I believe that any sacrifice that we may now be called upon to make in their time of need is but one way of putting our money where indeed our mouths are, and showing our genuine concern, love and appreciation for the veterans and their widows.

Mr. Speaker, if I may now briefly deal with the second resolve of Government Motion No. 1/99, which reads as follows:

“AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Members of the Legislative Assembly do not accept, at this time, funds previously appropriated under Head 10-07 109 being a grant for MLAs’ Offices and that this said sum of seventy-five thousand dollars be utilised, in 1999, to partially fund the increase to Veterans or their Widows and that Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount.”

Mr. Speaker, when we were in the last Finance Committee, all received a Constituency Assistance Form. I know I did. I am sure other members did as well. And this was basically making the provision for MLA offices in respect of rent, telephone, water, equipment, furniture and a number of other sub-heads. If I recall correctly, the allocation for George Town would have amounted to some $2,000 per month. West Bay was a different figure, approximately $1,900, and all other districts I believe were in the region of $1,850.

So, an average calculation and in accordance with the letter that came out in the very beginning, I believe that this same vote, whether actual or perceived . . . and I will explain the latter, perceived being that if we look at this particular head we will see that there is only some $75,000, but to be able to properly fund the arrangement and in accordance with the letter we will be looking at some $360,000 to fund the MLA’s Offices for this year.

When we look at the amount needed to give an increase of $50 per year for the veterans in an attempt to keep them in line and on an equitable and fair footing with what we just did for the indigent, the handicapped and other persons in need—which, by the way, did not include veterans—government then came to the conclusion that rather than increasing the recurrent expenditure any further we would ask honourable members to use the existing $75,000 towards this proposal which we believe is a worthy one.

When the need arose for the remaining supplementary under that vote, rather than recreating two more supplementaries to use that potential vote for this year, it would be our small way of showing the veterans and their widows that we were prepared to make a financial sacrifice—some 50 odd years after the war—as a small token of our appreciation for their bravery and courage.

Many of these veterans and persons who went across to fight during the world war, whether it was in the supply or Merchant Marines (whatever category has since been extended them), unfortunately had to do so at a very high cost indeed. Many of our Caymanians lost their lives and paid the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom. So it is the government’s position that although we would perhaps like to have the money previously allocated as well as the conceptual agreement for the potential rising of the balance in Finance Committee for the benefits of our MLA’s Offices, seeing the situation and the other overriding and extenuating circumstances we are therefore proposing that this vote be stayed, as it were, and used to set off the amounts needed.

From the calculations provided in the Executive Council paper, which was duly passed before bringing this motion to this honourable House, it is estimated that there is going to be some $356,600. I believe a mere increase of $50 this year, being 1999, will see a potential and actual combination of some $360,000 in the MLA constituency grant or allowance vote.

Mr. Speaker, the government respectfully submits that the motive in which this motion was brought is in the interest of honour and respect to these honourable gentlemen and their widows, and not to introduce adversarial or bipartisan politics.

With those few remarks by way of introduction, I now take pleasure on behalf of the government to commend Government Motion No. 1/99. I trust that all honourable members will kindly support the same.

I thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The floor is opened to debate. Does any other member wish to speak?

The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say that I am in support, and I think all members on this side of the House are in support of the motion—at least in the first part. While I am in support of the motion in the first resolution, I am somewhat puzzled by the motion.

I listened to the minister moving the motion as she called for non-adversarial politics. Mr. Speaker, I couldn’t believe my ears listening to her ask for non-adversarial politics when that is exactly what she has done in moving the second resolution. It is nothing but dirty politics! And adversarial politics! I shall not be a hypocrite and say otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, this House accepted a motion in June which was supported by all of us on this side asking the government to keep our campaign promise and to increase the financial assistance to the elderly, handicapped and others. Now, as that minister knows—and I trust she and her colleagues would listen at this point, so that they will understand where we are coming from.

Hon. Julianna O’Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. One does not have to look at a person to be able to listen. I am listening to every word he is saying.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, please continue.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I love that interjection because it is true. You don't have to look at someone; but if the bunch of them are over there chatting away, I don't see how they can listen—including that minister!

Mr. Speaker, as all of us in this House know—and that minister knows. . . in fact, the whole Executive Council knows that whenever we speak of the elderly it is all encompassing. There was no such thing as leaving anyone out. Now, after the passage of the motion, that is, the motion in June of last year, the same minister moving the resolution came over to my desk and asked whether the motion included veterans as well. My reply to her was it certainly did.

I heard her speak, as she did last week Thursday, about the need of others, and government's genuine attempt, and genuine this, and genuine that. I don't know if it is genuine at all. I think it is downright dirty politics!

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said, she came to me and asked whether our motion included the veterans, and I replied to her that "it certainly did." That was in June last year. In between that time and now—some eight months!—the government—including that minister moving the motion, the minister responsible—has had time to put together its budget.

Of course, no increase came as they had promised. And in today's paper on the front page, they said it was paid from January. That is not true! They paid nothing! They brought the budget, they agreed for the increase, but they did not do anything about it. They were too busy doing something else. Then they came down here after the presentation of that budget and, lo and behold, another budget was produced!

They said, Mr. Speaker, in the presentation of the first budget that there was nothing, although they agreed. And then they brought their second budget. Still no increase came for January as they had promised. Today's newspaper (as one of my colleagues graciously pointed out) says the increase on Tuesday, 23rd February, government's payday, will be retroactive to January 1999.

I don't know what happened to the first budget, and I don't know what happened to the second budget which the Minister of Tourism brought. But neither of those budgets included any increase for veterans or Social Services!

Mr. Speaker, when we moved the amendment rejecting the salary increase I asked them what they were doing about the promised increase to the elderly and others. That was the query I made. The Honourable Minister for Social Welfare said they were going to put $50 per month on the grant. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am glad that he found his footing and gave the undertaking at that point because I really don't know what happened with the first two budgets.

[Inaudible comment]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: But you agree it was not paid, right?

Good!

Now, Mr. Speaker, they had from June last year to do so, and nothing up to now has been done. January payments have been made to everybody, still no increase.

I want to give the Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture—the one moving this motion—the benefit of the doubt. And perhaps, Mr. Speaker, she did have some problems at Executive Council level. I have no problem with her bringing the motion to make absolutely sure that the permission is given and she is within legal bounds.

She said in her short address just now that our motion did not include the veterans. Mr. Speaker, while you might look at the motion and say explicitly it did not say "veterans," it did say increase of financial assistance to the elderly, the handicapped and others in need. And while it was not explicit it was implicit, and I told her that was what I meant.

Here is what I had to say in the debate on the motion. I hope she is listening—she said she can talk and hear at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, I asked (on the 17th July 1998) what about those who went to sea? And let us now include the veterans, because that does include veterans who went and faced battle—veteran seamen who travelled in wartime. And I went on and spoke about them, I said, "Where did we have an income from to keep up the country? The Meskito Banks. Swannie Shipping Company." And I pointed out, Mr. Speaker "Your family . . . had a big shipping company and hired a lot of people. But they never had any pension. They travelled during that time. You are a master mariner. I think you are old enough to know something about it. We have at least one other in this House, the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay, who knows about it. These people built this country! Yes, the banks came and the trust companies and the investors came with their money, it was good for us. Then tourism came and it was good for us but those people set the foundation. Let us put it this way, they did the dirty work so that all of us today could be better off."

And for the court, Mr. Speaker, "Who went to see starting out at the Meskito Key Banks? Swan Island? These are things that have to do with our history. In wartime, there were those willing to go off and up front, so that this world could be free today. They fought the Axis Powers at the time, the Germans, and others that were united. There is not much question about those who went to Trinidad because everybody recognised that group. But there is some grumbling that they should not get it. I wonder if they know what it was like? I wonder if they ever faced 40-foot seas between here and the Meskito Key Banks, when they had to chop out the vessel's mast to save lives? When lives were taken in the Majestic and the Hustler do we forget that? There are people still living from that era who have nothing, or they call them old drunks. They say, 'They are drunks. You don't need to give them anything.' But when this country and the world needed saving they were the iron men in wooden ships; men who went down in the sea. Don't forget." [1998 Official Hansard Report, page 728]

I further quote, Mr. Speaker, "There are veterans who not only went to Trinidad but they were in Bermuda, they were in England. The truth is that England should be giving us something to give them." [Ibid]

I further quote, "There were veterans who faced battles, widows today of husbands in foreign prison camps. I had a grand uncle who spent many years in a prison camp in Germany." [Ibid]

And I believe it was the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who reminded me of the nickname. They used to call him 'Captain Goshore.'

To further quote, Mr. Speaker, "There are other families who are affected by it. Can we as a Legislative Assembly put politics in the way of these kinds of things? No! We should join hands and do anything we can to see that this is increased to a level that makes our people comfortable." [Ibid]

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that minister over there—who claims that she is a Christian—gets up and pounds down the church door, comes in here making all kinds of prayers asking for peace, she, Truman Bodden, and the rest of them over there come over here and tell us that I didn't ask for the veterans . . . you want to tell me . . .

They are sitting with their backs to me now, Mr. Speaker, against the Standing Orders. I want to point out those who are doing it.

Do they want to come and tell me that I didn't ask for the veterans? What is that, Mr. Speaker? How plainer can it be? And if it was not explicit in the resolution, you can believe it was very, very plain in the motion. Very plain!

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have had the weekend to think about this, and I didn't know what we were going to do. I could see the politics being pushed into it. And they are trying to get at a few others and me. I know that. But we will deal with that in due course. Happily, this morning our colleague, the Third Elected Member from George Town came [up with] a good suggestion and therefore we have an amendment to the resolution that the member is going to move, and I will be seconding that. I know that all of us here will support it.

Mr. Speaker, that woman has the audacity, the temerity to come and ask us not to play adversarial politics? Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that is where it breeds. Do you see those three heads together over there? That is where it breeds. Right over there.

Mr. Speaker, I should go on to say further that she had a member of her office call and ask me whether it was included, and I said, "Go and get the Hansards. I told your minister that as far as I am concerned it is very plain, and that it does cover it."

Do you think this is about veterans? No, Mr. Speaker, this is not about the veterans—this is about getting back at us! That is what this is all about. And we should not be hypocrites and say otherwise. This is about getting back at us.

I have no problem whatsoever . . . although they had nearly eight months to do what she just did—which they had agreed from the very beginning. I have no problem with it. We on this side have no problem with it. What I am most disturbed about is the last resolution. Although she got up there and piously called for non-adversarial politics this is a cold, calculated political move!

Mr. Speaker, did the government have to be so vindictive? Did it have to be so spiteful? Couldn't the government have found the $75,000 from somewhere else? If we peruse the estimates again, we can find several areas where it could have gotten that amount of money—the $75,000 and more. I found at least three areas for a total of $1,875,494 in entertainment. They put it there; they put it in the budget for entertainment, official travel, hospitality, and miscellaneous visits. They can get $75,000 from that if they wanted to. What are they going to do with all of that anyhow? I don't know.

There is also $670,000 in something called 2000 Project, and Miscellaneous (I don't know what that is), for a grand total of $2.5 million. They can get the $75,000 and they wouldn't miss it unless they don't know that it is there. But no, Mr. Speaker, they are not going to look anywhere else. What they planned was that they would take it from our offices.

This motion is intended to punish us for moving the motion rejecting salaries. That's what this motion is all about! We should not be hypocrites!

Mr. Roy Bodden: It's a punitive motion!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I don't know about punitive, but it is dirty!

Do you mean to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that they could find enough money to pay our increases in salary?

They didn't organise the increases to the elderly in time, but they now have to try to take the $75,000 which is to be shared up amongst us all to pay the whole year's expense for our offices—rent, office help, telephone, water, and electricity.

And you know something—and I trust that she is listening to this—what makes this such a hard pill to swallow is that last year our Finance Committee voted $20,000 for our offices and we didn't get it! Do you know why we didn't get it? Because that minister—the same minister asking us not to play politics—took it and used it for her office!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker?

Now she has the audacity to come and tell us not to take the $75,000, because we are going to use it for our offices. She used that money that was set aside for our offices, for her office last year!

And we got an undertaking from the Chief Secretary when he was called down here that he would bring it back this year—and we still can't find the $50,000 supplementary that we voted when they couldn't find what she did, because she didn't explain to us what she did with it. As minister, she did not explain to members of the Finance Committee what she did with it!

Now, to talk about being a Christian . . . Christian? Mr. Speaker, do you know something? I am trying very hard to live a better life. But it is very, very hard when we have those kinds of people out there to deal with. Do you hear what I tell you? It is very hard, very difficult.

Now, Mr. Speaker, she can go and get her office—which she didn't tell us she had used money—and we still haven't found the $50,000 that we voted beside that. We can't find that, and it hasn't been explained to us. Now they don't want us to function better. That is what it is all about. And they don't want us to serve our people better. How can they be so dirty?

Mr. Speaker, last Thursday we all attended the National Prayer Breakfast. And what a wonderful time it was. It was a time of remembering, it was a time of renewing. And she prayed for us to put our differences aside. It was a time to think about our souls and pray for the welfare of each other and the country. I recall that minister's prayer, and I thought to myself, 'Well this is a good beginning of the new session after that long meeting with two budgets.' And I had hope for something better this year. 'It's going to be a better year, it going to get better.' . . . going to get a lot of licks, that is what we are going to get! The same kind of attempts. You can't live better with bad people.

This is the same minister who got up at the National Prayer Breakfast and prayed for all of us. She prayed for peace, for sincerity, that we all live better, that we be Christians. How can she come here with such a dirty motion? One so spiteful, so vindictive, so petty. It certainly does not portray any Christian character.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, is not about veterans; it is about hurting people. That is what it is about. This is about hurting us, about keeping us ineffective. This is about getting back at us because we moved the motion to stop the fat pay increase for all of us, which the country couldn't afford—the $40,000 on her salary, and the rest of them!

Let me say to the five elected ministers, since they are putting their heads together, that they should put them together, for they don't solve the problems of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask them, Is this what you want? Do you want a situation so untenable that we don't talk to each other, where there is out and out disagreement or war all the time? And you should remember that this is not like picking me off and believing that I would be all alone. No! This affects all of us that are not in Executive Council who do not have an office already paid by Government like you do. They have offices!

Government spends more than $3 million a year on rent. This $75,000 that we were promised will not make a difference. And we are trying to be better able to serve our people. That's what we are trying to do.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, let us look at some of the reasons why MLAs who are not on Executive Council need proper running offices. We have an ageing population and all of the problems that brings. There is increase in domestic violence. There are more young people in trouble today than ever in our history. There are increases in drug usage. There is an increase in teenage pregnancy. There is an increase in teenage children getting pregnant in schools. There is violence amongst youth, too much of it, Mr. Speaker. There is general increase in crime in these islands. Too much!

Mr. Speaker, I could go on about why we need to have an office to be better able to serve the people that come looking for us. These are just some of the problems we face as representatives. We are all called upon to deal with all of this, and it's negative fallout, Mr. Speaker. Now, do you mean to tell me that as we are entering the new millennium . . . and I should say it should no longer be expected for us to deal with these kinds of problems from our front porches or our living rooms.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the point must be made that there are people who have regard for our private lives and refuse to come to our homes for their needs. And if they don't see us at a funeral or at a wedding or somewhere on the street, their needs are left unattended. It should be imperative to have an office with scheduled times, especially for members not living in their constituencies, to ensure that all people have access to members. That's the purpose of having an office. Some of us don't live in our constituencies but we have an office set up on a set scheduled time, and people know we are there.

From what I can see, Mr. Speaker, this is another instance where the government is playing dirty politics. After voting for the subsidy for our offices last month, after agreeing to the increase in June or July last year, now they see it as giving those in Executive Council an advantage the year before election. And how do they get an advantage? By making it more difficult for our people to reach their representatives who are not on Executive Council. That's how they have an advantage because they have their Glass House offices and they have their secretaries and other support staff. Dirty, dirty politics!

And she has the audacity to come here, the temerity to come here talking about adversarial politics when she went home and slept on it. And Mr. Truman Bodden gave her the idea, and the Minister of Tourism, of course, went along with it. They can say anything to me, they can throw me out this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I want the government to know (as it probably does already) this is to hurt. That is what this is all about. I entered a legal agreement for my office. I have contracted my office help who are already on the job, and I have my telephone in place. Now, what do they expect me to do? One of the reasons others and I gave in putting forward the motion to reject the pay increase was that government had already agreed to give the subsidy for our offices. With the problems facing the country, it would be unconscionable to expect more money. We knew it was going to be around $300,000 if all of us were to be treated fairly.

So, Mr. Speaker, there can be no justified reason for them to be trying to take away the subsidy. They can find it in other areas—except to be dirty.

Now, as I said in opening, I have no problem with the first resolve. That first resolve reads: “BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Veteran’s monthly grant be increased to Two Hundred and Fifty Cayman Islands Dollars in 1999 and to Four Hundred Dollars in the year 2000.” But there is an amendment being moved by the Third Elected Member for George Town, our colleague. I am seconding that amendment. I will not get into it because he can ably do so.

Mr. Speaker, there is no justified reason. I do believe that it was understood by one and all that the motion passed in June or July clearly included the veterans. And the minister was told so, when she asked about it. When I talk about the elderly, I make no effort to distinguish between getting for one and not getting for the other. No difference! That has always been my position, so how can they come now and try to say otherwise?

Mr. Speaker, as I said, we wish to give the minister the benefit of the doubt to some extent. Our veterans, as I have always said, deserve the increase; they need it in the high cost of living we are experiencing. We do recall that they were prepared to give up their lives in fighting the Axis Forces and the other forces in and around the world so that we all might be free and have a better life today. Now, we as a country can give them back but a small token of our appreciation.

Our motion will be moved shortly and while we will support that, we can’t support the second resolution.

I will speak directly now to the Honourable Three Official Members. I ask you to bear in mind that having got the go-ahead from government and Finance Committee, some of us have already entered into agreements which are legally binding concerning rent and staff. I ask you to see the last resolution in the motion for what it is—nothing but pure unadulterated, dirty politics. I would go further and ask you not to vote for it, but I don’t know what is done in Executive Council.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how this resolution could ever get through Executive Council. And I wonder if it did. I am still wondering whether they now have the Governor’s permission for this resolution. I don’t believe that they had it this morning when were held up here for so long.

That is what the House was being held up for. You might have been told otherwise, but let them prove otherwise. Let them prove me wrong. Let them show us where the Governor approved this before this morning or just now. And I certainly don’t know if all the members of Executive Council or all the Official Members in Executive Council knew what we had said in the debate on the motion.

Mr. Speaker, the minister said that she has to put the veterans on an equitable and fair footing. What nice words. I wonder where the equity and the fairness was from June to now! Where was the equity and fairness in January, when they were supposed to get the increase? When everybody was supposed to get the increase, I wonder where it was. They were too busy looking out for their own salaries! That is why, Mr. Speaker.

I can say no more. There are many capable members on this side. While I would support the first resolution and the amendment that is going to be put forward by the Third Elected Member from George Town and I (which is supported by other backbench members), I will not support the second resolution. And I ask you, sir, to put those two resolutions separately.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

AMENDMENT NO. 1 TO GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(1) and (2), I, the Third Elected Member for George Town, propose that Government Motion No. 1/99 be amended by deleting the first and second resolves and substituting therefore the following:

“BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the monthly grant to the Veterans, indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance be increased to three hundred Cayman Islands’ dollars in 1999 and, funds being available, to four hundred Cayman Islands’ dollars in the year 2000.

“AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the savings realised from the rejection of the increase in MLAs’ salaries estimated at three hundred and fifty thousand Cayman Islands’ dollars be utilised to fund the increase and, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 24(2), that these payments be apportioned over a period in 1999 commensurate with the available funds, and that the funds allocated under Head 10-07 109, being a grant for MLAs’ offices, be not used for this purposed and that the Standing Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount.”

The Speaker: Do we have a seconder?
The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to second the motion.

The Speaker: Thank you. Third Elected Member for George Town, do you wish to continue?

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman Boddin: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take a point of order on the form of this [amendment].

This [amendment], as it is set out, totally nullifies the motion that we have now put, and attempts to repeat in places what is already in the motion. As I understand the principle of this, sir, it would have been okay to put an amendment, which amended the $250, but that part relating the $400 is already in the substantive motion.

The second point I have, sir, is the second operative part of the government motion, which says that the MLA funds for their offices be rejected, is in effect being put in the negative in this. I submit sir, the proper thing to do would be that votes on that part would have to come first.

If you could just follow (and I will refer you to Erskine May, sir) . . . the second part of the minister's motion, which says that we reject a grant for MLA offices. . . if the answer to that is 'yes,' then that part of the second resolve section of the amendment falls away. Because what that is saying in effect is that the funds for the MLA offices will still be paid to MLAs, notwithstanding.

I submit that that section, sir, which begins "and that the funds [right at the bottom of the last resolve section] allocated under head 10-07 109 being a grant for MLA offices, be not used for this purpose..." the proper way of dealing with that is to take a vote on the second part of this motion that was originally put because a motion in itself cannot do what a vote in the House should do. And what a vote can do has to be done on the substantive motion.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the way this motion is amended it partially confirms the first resolve section and repeats the part relating to the year 2000.

I submit, really, that the first part of the amendment brought by the Third Elected Member for George Town should really have only read 'removal of the words two hundred and fifty, and replace it with three hundred,' because already in there is everything else with the exception of indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age, and that part could be put in with an amendment.

And the second point, sir, is that the last part of this amended motion in effect would be equal to a rejection of the second part of the government motion.

I would like to support this, sir, by referring you to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, the 22nd Edition. It is only a matter of voting on this, and this is what I want to come to. On page 343, under "Amendments" it says, "As indicated earlier (p 329), an amendment is a subsidiary motion moved in the course of debate upon another motion which interposes a new cycle of debate and decision between the proposal and decision of the main motion and question. In its turn the debate on an amendment may be similarly intercepted by the proposal of and decision upon a further subsidiary amendment (amendment to an amendment), or it may be superseded by a dilatory motion." And that's a bit earlier on.

"Amendments may be tabled as soon as the relevant motion has been tabled."

"OBJECT OF AN AMENDMENT AND SUBJECT ON DEBATE: The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question.

"Amendments superseding a question: The latter purpose may be effected by moving to omit all or most of the words of the question after the first word, 'That' and to substitute an alternative proposition which must, however, be relevant to the subject of the question. The debate that follows includes also the content of the motion, both matters being under the consideration of the House as alternative propositions.

"With amendments of this type, the proposal of the question 'That the amendment be made' effectively place before the House two alternative propositions, contained in the motion and in the amendment respectively, between which the House has to make a preliminary choice before deciding finally whether to agree to either of them."

This is the point I have come to, Mr. Speaker. "Consequently, if the question 'That the amendment be made' is agreed to, this vote does not by itself express a decision against the motion, but only a preference for taking a decision upon the alternative proposition contained in the amendment.

"Where it is sought to supersede a question, by leaving out the words after 'That' and adding other words, the proposed amendment should not be confined to a mere negation of the terms of the motion, as the proper method of expressing a contrary opinion is by voting against a motion without seeking to amend it."

My submission, Mr. Speaker, is that the second amending part of the amendment motion basically is seeking to get a decision that the MLAs keep in their pockets the money that is to be paid for the MLA offices and that, in effect, is the same as...

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. Truman Bodden: I am on a point of order. Are you rising on that too?

Mr. Roy Bodden: The Minister said the MLAs "keep in their pockets"?

Mr. Roy Bodden: Yes!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Well, I am on a point of order and I need to finish before you can rise on another point of order!

Mr. Speaker, in effect, the second part . . . and it is obvious that the First Elected Member for West Bay isn't listening to what I am saying—which was one of the allegations that he made against me—because he is over there talking the whole time.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, if he was talking sense I would listen, but he is not!

Hon. Truman Bodden: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that honourable member had 10% of my sense he would be a lot better off. Now, let me go on, please.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: If you were advising me?

The Speaker: Please, let me try to understand. It is very difficult for me to listen to four [people] at one time.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Yes, sir. What I am saying in effect, sir, is that where a vote on the last part of the original motion can be taken, another motion that merely negates that cannot be substituted for it.

Now, it has nothing to do with increasing to $300, there is no problem with putting that amendment, nor is there a problem with putting the amending part with indigents, handicapped and those over 60. But what I am saying, sir, is in the first part there is a repetition (which you may or may not wish to leave in), because the motion itself has in the increase to $400 in the year 2000. It does nothing to that part.

The amendment, as I see it, to the first part of the resolution is to the $250 and by extending it to indigents, handicapped. But the latter part of it, and to $400 in the year 2000 remains. So what I am saying, sir, I think the amendment there should have properly been to make those amendments rather than to totally delete everything.

And, definitely, once a vote is taken on the second part of the motion, if the MLAs feel that the money to be paid for MLA offices should not be used for veterans then, obviously, they will vote against this motion and then there is no need for the second amending resolution which deals with that.

In effect, sir, what has happened today is an attempt to totally replace the motion rather than to amend it. And I submit that as Erskine May's properly says, "The proper method of expressing a contrary opinion is by voting against a motion without seeking to amend it." And the strength of my argument lies in the last part of the amending motion.

I submit, sir, the proper way of taking that vote is on the original motion. In effect that says that we not use the money for MLA offices, but the MLAs keep that money and the veterans' funds be looked for from elsewhere. So, if this part of the motion succeeds the last part of the amendment falls away because it cannot be voted on in relation to that part.

Those are my submissions.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Let me deal with this first.

On the first resolve section I agree with what the minister is saying. Amendments could be made to that to achieve what you want. Do you not agree that by adding the indigents and the others and deleting the year 2000 makes that one palatable?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to confuse you, sir, but if I may just be allowed to say something because it has to do with what you are talking about.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I don't claim expertise here but, surely, on numerous occasions when the government itself has sought to amend private members' motions they have worded it with their choice of language and no one has questioned it. Now, the minister is telling us how we should word an amendment to a motion from the government. And what he is also doing, sir, is challenging the Chair's acceptance of the amendment.

Mr. Roy Bodden: And challenging the Chair!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: And what he is also doing is challenging the Chair's acceptance of the motion.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Exactly!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: And the point I wish to make, sir, regardless of his legal expertise, there cannot be anything in Erskine May or anywhere else which tells you specifically the language you have to use to achieve an amendment.

But, do you know something, Mr. Speaker? While you are looking, sir, there is something that needs to be said. And I am not going to cause any trouble here this afternoon. But the Minister for Education needs to understand one thing, and this is a promise: I don't know what he was trying to say, but if he ever even dreams of any accusation which even makes me slightly believe that he is trying to question my honesty . . . I am not threatening him, but I promise him that he is going to regret it.

He must not play with words like that. Don't do it! I mean it!

[Addressing the Honourable Minister for Education]
You might laugh and you might take it as a joke, but I am telling you—and I mean that from the bottom of my heart—do not do it!

The Speaker: I would like to call to the attention of this Honourable House that Standing Order 88(1) says, "In any matter not herein provided for, resort shall be had to the usage and practice of the Commons House of Parliament of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which shall be followed as far as the same may be applicable to this House, and not inconsistent with these Standing Orders nor with the practice of this House."

And Standing Order 88(2) says, "In cases of doubt the Standing Orders of this House shall be interpreted in the light of the relevant usage and practice of the House of Commons, but no restrictions which the House of Commons has introduced by Standing Order after the making of those Orders shall be deemed to extend to this House or its Members until the House has by Standing Order provided for such restriction."

And simply what I am trying to say is that the amendment to the first resolve section would not in fact alter what you are trying to accomplish. It is my understanding that the desire of the movers of this amendment is to include other people so that they would get from $250 to $300. And you are not achieving anything by saying that they get $400 in the year 2000 because the substantive motion says that. The substantive motion is very clear.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but the reason that was included, sir, is because we simply asked for the first resolve section to be replaced by this one which includes what they want to achieve also. Now, I mean this is playing with words, Mr. Speaker. If we all want to achieve the same thing, what is the fight about?

We are limiting it to the first resolve section, sir. All we are asking for is for an increase from $250 to $300, and to include the other categories that were not included in the original motion. And the reason why we added the $400 in the year 2000 is simply to ensure that our amendment achieved what we want it to achieve—which was partially what they wanted to achieve. We have just extended it further, sir. It can only be playing with words.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member from West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: From what I have read in our Standing Orders, and what I read in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, if we were trying to take away what they asked for in their resolution and replace it with something new, then the Minister for Education—who somehow claims that he has more sense than anybody else—would be right. But that is not the case. This is including what they are trying to do as well. So, we are not taking anything away from them.

I want you to remember, Mr. Speaker, what you did when I moved the Meritorious Award Motion, and what that minister and those same-to-do ministers moving this now—the Minister for Tourism and the Minister for Community Affairs—did. Is this any different, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: It is quite a bit different.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I figured you would say that!

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have been trying to follow the points raised by the Honourable Minister for Education in his objections to certain sections of this amendment. But I am unable to see where his objections are really making any sense. It seems more like it's confusion in the minds of the members of government.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment is asking to amend the first and second resolves of the substantive motion—not in part, but in whole. And in doing so, it was repeating what had already been put in the resolve section of the substantive motion. So it is not bringing up anything that is brand new, but really repeating it, so that they too can have their objectives fulfilled.

I think that the main part of this motion, which might appear to be somewhat offensive to the ministers, is that the purpose of rejecting the increase in MLA salaries was to use that for matters such as an increase to veterans, indigents, handicapped and people over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance. This is the main crux of the matter. And we were saying, Mr. Speaker, that rather than use the $75,000 provided in the estimates for MLA offices that these funds that were rejected for the MLA salaries should be used for that purpose.

And, Mr. Speaker, I intend in the presentation of my amendment to deal with these matters in more detail.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, if I may just address you very briefly.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Third Elected Member for George Town has hit on the exact point I am saying. This is not an amendment to the motion; it is a deletion and a substitution of another motion for it. That can't be done, in my submission.

If you look at the amendment it says very clearly, "In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(1) and (2), I, the Third Elected Member for George Town, propose that Government Motion No. 1/99 be amended by deleting the first and second resolves and substituting therefor..." There can be no doubt that—

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Since I was gracious enough to sit for the minister, perhaps he would do the same for me.

He referred to Erskine May. Mr. Speaker, we also know Erskine May. And I would like to refer to page 345. Where it says, "Rejection both of amendment and original question." That reads, Mr. Speaker: "The rejection of an amendment (even an amendment to substitute a complete alternative proposition) does not constitute a final decision upon the original motion . . ."

Mr. Speaker, I cannot really see the confusion in that honourable minister's mind. To me it is just to throw a red herring across this whole thing.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Some moments ago, I tried to rise on a point of order, sir. I want to say something here this afternoon that I want to make crystal clear.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister for Education, the Leader of Government Business, made a statement that MLAs were going to put this money "in their pockets." Mr.

Speaker, I want you to take note of this, and I want this in the record: That gentleman called me a Communist years ago and he got away with it. He will not get away with insinuating that I am a thief!

Now, Mr. Speaker, on my honour I will not allow him to get away with that. Not only is it my honour, but it is my father's honour, and my grandfather's honour. I want that minister to withdraw [that statement], and clear it up here and now. Or else, Mr. Speaker, he is going to have to deal with me!

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, I think those words were inappropriate. Would you withdraw those please?

Hon. Truman Bodden: Sure, Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to withdraw saying that it was going into the MLAs' pockets, and I apologise. But it is still going to MLAs!

Mr. Speaker, the point I was making, sir, and I don't want to draw this out much further . . . but what is happening with this motion is that instead of amending the motion it is substituting a totally new motion for the present motion. And I submit that as is clearly stated here, where the effect is to negate the present substantive motion, a vote must be taken on the substantive motion. In other words, you can't with an amendment take and totally wipe out a motion, which is what is being attempted here.

What needs to happen is that an amendment be put. And the difference is very clearly, sir, that this is not just a substitution of an alternative proposition, this is a total negation of the full motion and putting in only . . . I mean, it states specifically, sir, that it will be deleting and substituting the following. In other words, there is no amendment to the first motion. It is totally deleted.

I am submitting that as the member read, an amendment has to be relevant to the motion, taking out and adding in. But if the effect, especially in the second part, is to put a totally opposite proposition, which is that the MLAs Office Fund not be used, I submit that a vote should be taken on the original motion before this part is dealt with.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I have a lot of respect for the Honourable Minister of Education, but there are others of us over here that understand the Standing Orders and Erskine May and have a degree of sense. I hope, sir, you will take into account our interpretation also, because there is nothing in here that says only the interpretation of the Honourable Minister of Education is valid in this Honourable House.

We too have a position, and our position is that Erskine May applies to this matter as well for us as it does for him. We have shown on page 345 where it states specifically that the amendment we are bringing is in order. There is nothing wrong with that.

The Speaker: I shall suspend proceedings for ten minutes and I will be back with a ruling.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3:54 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4:22 PM

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

When we took the break, I said that I would make my ruling upon returning. Having researched to the best of my ability, looking at the situation . . . and I quote Erskine May, page 343, which reads, "Object of an amendment and effect on debate. The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question."

In view of this, I have decided to accept the amendment. If the amendment is accepted, the motion as amended will be the question. The question will then be put whichever way it goes.

Third Elected Member for George Town, are you continuing?

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you most kindly, Mr. Speaker.

I will just make a short presentation on introducing my amendment. I will avoid the temptation to comment on some of what went on before, as I really don't see that as being a productive way forward.

Mr. Speaker, in presenting this amendment I would like to make it quite clear that I agree with the preamble to the substantive motion before us. So that it can have the sort of smooth flow that I would wish to obtain, I will first read the preamble to the motion, the old resolve section, and how my amendment is proposing to make a few changes.

We totally agree with the preamble to the motion, which reads as follows: "WHEREAS civil servants, pensioners and persons receiving financial assistance have all been granted financial increases in 1999;

"AND WHEREAS veterans or their widows are only receiving a mere $200 Cayman Islands dollar per month;

"AND WHEREAS the veterans have placed their lives at risk by defending our freedom around the world;

"AND WHEREAS most of these veterans and their widows are now in their senior years with little or no fixed income or dependable means of livelihood;

"AND WHEREAS some of these ex-servicemen and their surviving spouses have expressed a desire for an increase consideration and further that the government is also desirous of granting an increase to veterans and their widows; . . ."

Mr. Speaker, our amendment proposes to amend the first resolve section as follows, the old motion states, “BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the veterans monthly grant be increased to $250 Cayman Islands dollars in 1999 and to $400 in the year 2000.”

Mr. Speaker, honourable members will recall that in the June sitting of this honourable House, in speaking on a motion before the House I suggested that the amount should be amended so that during 1999 an amount of $300 per month would be paid, with $400 in the year 2000. The amendment, in the first resolve section is consistent with that position, in that the new resolve section to replace the first resolve section of the substantive motion reads as follows: “BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the monthly grant to the Veterans [and in addition, Mr. Speaker to veterans we have included], indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance be increased to three hundred Cayman Islands’ dollars in 1999 [That is where the substantive motion said $250 per month. We are proposing $300 per month] and, funds being available, to four hundred Cayman Islands’ in the year 2000. . .” which is the same as that being recommended in Government Motion No. 1/99.

Mr. Speaker, the only difference here in this first resolve section is that rather than just confining the increase to the veterans we have included indigents, handicapped and those other individuals who are 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I need not suggest or even try to justify the wisdom in our move, because there are a number of individuals out there who are very badly in need of assistance. And in the same way we are now considering the veterans and their widows, we should also seriously consider assisting the indigent amongst us, the handicapped and those of the older people that are 60 years of age or more who qualify for financial assistance.

Also, Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that a lot of these people—especially these older and poorer individuals—have a greater strain on them now that the government has recently approved the tax package which they will also have to bear and suffer under. Mr. Speaker, even though we have a very affluent society there are many amongst us that are very poor and should be given every assistance and consideration possible.

Mr. Speaker, the second resolve section of the [amendment] is also proposing to make a slight change to the substantive motion. The substantive motion stated in the second resolve section, and I read: “BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Members of the Legislative Assembly do not accept at this time funds previously appropriated under Head 10-07-109 being a grant for MLAs office. And that this said sum of $75,000 be utilised in 1999 to partially fund the increase to veterans or their widows and that Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount.”

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to attribute any unworthy or ulterior motive to that second resolve. I have to question, though, why the government (through the Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture) chose to take away the funds from the members of the Legislative Assembly that were allocated for them to have an office for their constituent matters.

Mr. Speaker, in the same way that the honourable ministers of government require an office to do their work so that they can provide good representation to the people of these islands, they should show similar respect to the members on the opposite side and realise that we too need a place to meet with our constituents. Not only do we just meet and talk, but many times we are asked to write letters and do other things for our constituents that require an office and office facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I am very, very disappointed that the government is trying so hard to deprive us of this facility knowing full well that we need such a facility. And if it is not a vindictive act, then I would like them to fully justify why they did not attempt to find these funds elsewhere. In the same way that they could find almost $3 million to fund the salary increases, they could find sufficient funds to pay the increase to the indigents and other people.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Also, Mr. Speaker, they were very quick, and very happy to come to this honourable House to report that they had found that mysterious $7 million to add to the budget. Why couldn't some of the funds that they need to give to the veterans have been taken from that $7 million?

Because we decided not to take the increase in the MLAs' salaries, why, then, if it was not a vindictive act, did they not seek elsewhere to find this money?

Mr. Speaker, they can answer that. I am not here to lay any blame or to accuse them in any way, but I have to wonder.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: May I interrupt you just a minute? We have reached the hour of 4:30 p.m. Will you be finishing shortly, or will you be going on for some time?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, if I may, sir. Obviously, we come back on Wednesday, supposedly to begin debate on the Governor's Throne Speech. I would think it is quite in order this afternoon to get this out of the way so that we can start fresh on Wednesday morning. I think that is the position of the majority of the backbench.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I think on Wednesday it would be best to carry this on and then, if it was the will of the House, take the debate on the Throne Speech after. I don't see this finishing this afternoon. I can say that, sir, because members have a right to speak on the amendment as well as on the substantive motion. I would rather move the adjournment

The Speaker: It would be late.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that would be a problem then, providing that we don't break this now and come back to it a week or two weeks later.

The Speaker: Fine, we'll take it then on Wednesday morning. We will accept the motion for the adjournment.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Wednesday morning at 10:00 AM, sir.

The Speaker: The question is that this House will now adjourn until 10:00 AM on Wednesday. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourned until 10:00 AM Wednesday.

AT 4.35 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 24 FEBRUARY 1999.

AMENDMENT NO. 1

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town who is sick with the flu.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper is Government Business. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning will move a motion to suspend debate on the Throne Speech.

MOTION TO SUSPEND DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I move that the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor on Friday, 19th February, be deferred until the conclusion of Government Motion No. 1/99.

The Speaker: I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19th FEBRUARY, DEFERRED UNTIL THE CONCLUSION OF GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99.

The Speaker: Government Motion No. 1/99, Increase of Financial Grant to Volunteer Ex-servicemen and their Widows. The Third Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99

INCREASE OF FINANCIAL GRANT TO VOLUNTEER
EX-SERVICEMEN AND THEIR WIDOWS

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

On Monday I had commenced my introduction of the amendment I brought, seconded by the First Elected Member for West Bay, in respect of Government Motion No. 1/99, which is a motion to increase the financial grant to volunteer ex-servicemen and their widows. I had stated that while I am able to support part of the motion, I would find it difficult to support the substantive motion in its present form. Thus the reason for bringing the amendment.

I thought long and hard before bringing an amendment to a motion being brought by the government bench because I realise that the honourable minister bringing this motion would have had approval from the full Executive Council. At least that is how it was done when I was a minister (or a "member" as it was called in those days). Therefore, the content of Government Motion No. 1/99 must have received the approval of at least the majority of the members of Executive Council before that motion could come to this Honourable House.

The Speaker: May I just interrupt you one moment?

I would like to advise that before approving this I was assured that Executive Council had given its approval.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The honourable Third Elected Member for George Town has raised this point, and he is specifically referring to Standing Order 24(2) which says, "(2) Except on the recommendation of the Governor signified by a Member of Government, the House shall not proceed upon any motion the effect of which, in the opinion of the Presiding Officer, makes provision for imposing or increasing any charge on the revenues or other funds of the Islands, for altering any such charge otherwise than by reducing it or for compounding or remitting any debt due to the Islands."

That basically repeats the Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order, section 37(2)(b). But to understand (b), I just need to read (a): "Except on the recommendation of the Governor the Assembly shall not (a) proceed upon any Bill (including any amendment to a Bill) which in the opinion of the person presiding in the Assembly, makes provision for imposing or increasing any tax, or imposing or increasing any charge on the revenues or other funds of the Islands, or for altering any such charge otherwise than by reducing it or for compounding or remitting any debt due to the Islands; and (b) proceed upon any motion (including any amendment to a motion) the effect of which, in the opinion of the person presiding in the Assembly, is that a provision would be made for any of the purposes aforesaid."

Mr. Speaker, I can give the assurance as a member of the government, that the Governor has signified that the motion can go on. My question, if I may just—

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

My speech has nothing to do with questioning whether the Executive Council received His Excellency's approval on this motion. Stopping me on a fraudulent point of order—which I would say that is—is really incorrect. I was going to go on to state, had I been given the time, why I had mentioned this as a prelude to what I was going to say. So it has nothing to do with what the honourable minister is raising, and, with your permission Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify what I was really moving to before I was stopped by your good self.

The Speaker: Before going to that point, I interrupted you to inject that I had been assured—because it plainly says that it is the responsibility of the Presiding Officer—I had been assured before I accepted the motion that it had Executive Council's approval, and the honourable minister moved on it.

You may now explain what you were going to say.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, if I may, sir.

The Speaker: The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: The point just raised by the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning has been a concern of mine, sir. Standing Order 24(3) reads, "The signification of the recommendation of the Governor shall be recorded in the Minutes of the proceedings." And I humbly submit that the definition of Governor in these Standing Orders sir, is the definition given in the Interpretation Law of the Cayman Islands. It means the United Kingdom representative as the Cayman Islands Governor.

So, I would request that the signification of the Governor be read into the Hansard of the Legislative Assembly under Standing Order 24(2).

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you.

If members would cast their minds back to when I made my presentation on the substantive Government Motion (No. 1/99), I said very clearly and explicitly that we had gotten approval from Executive Council. Be that as it may Mr. Speaker, if members have now reached a stage in our parliamentary relationship whereby they need the explicit expressed writing of His Excellency . . . I took the time this morning—as I am very careful with procedural matters as well—to speak to His Excellency the Governor to confirm yet once again that we received approval last week before the motion was brought.

If members wish, we can take an adjournment and I can get his consent and show them, sir. Thank you kindly.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The Standing Orders seem clear to me, "signified by a member of the government." Now, a very simple point of order for the amendment to the motion to come—would the mover please produce the signification of the Governor in writing?

The Speaker: Let me address that point.

When the amendment was presented to me I looked at the amendment very carefully, fully cognisant of what Standing Order 24(2) and (3) said. I read the last part where it said, . . . let me read it in full. The last resolve section of the amendment said: "AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the savings realised from the rejection of the increase in MLAs salaries, estimated at three hundred and fifty thousand Cayman Islands' dollars, be utilised to fund the increase and, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 24(2), that these payments be apportioned over a period in 1999 commensurate with the available funds, and that the funds allocated under Head 10-07-109, being a grant for MLAs offices, be not used for this purpose and that the Standing Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount."

I submit that this amendment is asking that Finance Committee make the funds available. That was the reason that I accepted the amendment.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That's right.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue, with your permission.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town, please continue.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: In continuing I would like to remind any minister of the government bench (and I know that they know) or any others who would like to interrupt me, that the proper procedures are laid down under Standing Orders 34 and 35. And when they are going to interrupt me, I would like if they would state specifically why they are doing that rather than trying to break my train of thought.

When I was unnecessarily interrupted by the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, I was going to explain that the reason I mentioned the procedure which should exist in Executive Council prior to a government motion being brought here was really not to do with the question of Standing Order 24(3), which deals with signification of the recommendation of the Governor before the motion should be brought here. But really to point out that each honourable member of Executive Council should have been knowledgeable of the motion coming to the House because it would first have to receive His Excellency's approval. That is basically what I was saying. I was not questioning whether the procedure had been followed.

If that honourable minister had not been so quick to try to interrupt and make other people look bad, he would have heard exactly—

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: What is the point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Please, let me hear your point of order.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: On a point of order. I did not interrupt the member on that point. You did, sir. And I ask him to please withdraw it.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, after you stopped me that honourable minister also got up on a point of order . . . and you cannot deny it.

The Speaker: Let's set the record straight. I asked you to give way to me so that I could explain that I was satisfied by the honourable minister moving the motion that she had Executive Council's and the Governor's approval. I then recognised him. So the interruption was actually made by me, and I would ask that you withdraw that he interrupted because I did recognise him after you said that.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, for a quiet life I think the honourable House knows what happened. The listening public heard what happened. But if you wish for me to withdraw what I said, I will do so.

The Speaker: I thank you.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I always bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I thank you, and I take the responsibility for that interruption.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: But, Mr. Speaker, let me deal with that honourable minister. It would not have been necessary for me to bring an amendment to this honourable House on a motion like this had it not been quite obvious that this was a most vindictive act on the part of those bringing this motion, and I will deal with that.

I intended to present the balance of my amendment this morning, but I note that it might be necessary for me to take a slightly different slant and deal with some other issues.

On Monday, when I presented this amendment, it was obvious that an attempt was made to kill it. It's quite obvious from the content of this amendment that the government bench finds it very difficult to not support an increase to indigents, the handicapped, and those over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance.

I would like to see what they are going to do with that. They are quick to get up and say that out of the goodness of their hearts, out of their Christian virtues they decided that the veterans needed this assistance because they had done so much for the country. But why did they not also recognise that a similar assistance should have been given to indigents, the handicapped and persons over 60 years of age whom need this assistance?

Where is the Christian virtue? It's insular thinking!

And let's make it quite clear that the honourable members on this side of the House support the recitals to this government motion, and basically most of the first resolve section. Expect that we feel it should be expanded from veterans to cover other people in need and that it should not stop at $250 per month, but should be extended to $300 per month. This was on the basis that if honourable ministers could agree to accept an increase in salaries of almost $40,000 per year, why can the ministers not also accept that the indigent, the handicapped and people over 60 in need of financial help should be increased to $300 per month?

Even though the minister bringing this motion, the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, got up and stated that it was out of the goodness of the ministers' hearts that the motion was brought, she is fooling nobody except he who wants to be fooled. Everybody who has looked at this motion knows that it was brought through vindictiveness because they felt obliged to go along with the members on this side of the House who rejected the increase in MLA salaries. And they cannot deny that! That is why they felt that they would get even with us.

It's not out of the goodness of their hearts, or their Christian virtue. To say that is hypocrisy, and they know it! I don't know how they don't get choked.

That motion was brought to get even with those of us who supported . . . yet they had the numbers! They could have voted the rejection of the increase down. But because they felt that the public was supporting what the backbenchers did, they went along with it.

Now, tell me what the word "hypocrisy" means. I have heard it used in this House. If you do not believe that what you are doing is right, but you still do it for political reasons, then there is no more of an indication of hypocrisy than that.

I saw on the front page of the newspaper this morning that it was through dirty politics. I don't know, but it seems so to me. I am not going to impute improper motives to anybody. But this is not imputing improper motives this is as clear as day!

It is not fair. They might say, 'Well you know, you prevented me from getting my increase in salary.' But if they had the strength of character that I would expect them to have, they would have voted against it if they did not agree with it. But they went along with it for political reasons. That is what I am saying is wrong.

The members on this side of the House decided to deprive themselves of that increase. The ministers could have gone against it because they had the numbers to vote against it. They went along with us. We did not ask them to do something that we were not prepared to do ourselves!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: We set the example. But what they are doing now is not playing on an even playing field. They are still prepared to sit up in the Ivory Tower of the Glass House, in their beautiful offices with their secretarial help and support staff to help get their work done. Plus, they can bring their constituents into their offices and deal with their constituent matters. But they are depriving—and I want to underscore this point—they are depriving the members on this side of the House of the same privilege.

I just want to remind them, though, that some of us over here will pay for it if we have to because there is at least one member on this side of the House who has been paying for his since he was elected in 1996. So if others have to do so, we will do it. But I want to make this point: The ministers on Executive Council have, in addition to their offices, offices in their constituencies. We would expect that they would pay government for the use of those buildings.

If we have to go to the Governor about this, we will do it! If I have to go to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on this matter as a matter of principle, Mr. Speaker, I will do it. It is not fair for ministers of government to have their Executive Council offices plus other offices in their constituencies; yet, the backbenchers are deprived. This is wrong! It is shameful! There is no other way that Government Motion No. 1/99 can be described except as shameful! It is an abuse of power because they know that they have the numbers to pass this motion and it is totally, totally wrong.

I never dreamed that I would be in this House long enough to see this sort of thing happen. This is my third term in here and this is the first time that I have seen such abuse of power. It is a blatant abuse of power.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Sure it is!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: It is shameful that we should be wasting the time of the House dealing with issues like this.

We have heard in this House that the backbenchers have spoken "ad nauseum," which means to a ridiculous end. But, Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of ridiculous matter brought by the government which causes these debates to be protracted—just like we got the two budgets in November, causing us to spend almost three months in this honourable House!

I believe that when that honourable minister is using the phrase "ad nauseum" again he should look up the meaning and he will see that it applies to himself and some of his colleagues more so than to most of us over here.

We totally agree that indigents, the handicapped and those over 60 who qualify for financial assistance should be added to the first resolve section of the government motion, and that the amount should be increased from $250 to $300 per month. They deserve it and they should get it. In the same way that ministers and others expected to get a major increase, the poor people out there should also get their just due.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: The second resolve section of this motion is a downright disgrace. It should not have been brought to this House. How can the honourable minister bring a motion to reject an allowance for MLA offices when she knows that the allowance is to enable MLAs to meet with their constituents?

Some of us (including me) have had to use our offices at home to deal with constituency matters. I use my computers to do letters and other matters for my constituents. I don't have the same luxury the ministers have with their beautiful offices and staff at the Glass House. Why should they now deprive members of being able to get some secretarial help, or of getting an office?

The First Elected Member for George Town and I were able to get our own furnishings. Government didn't even have to pay for that. We have an office that we have contracted for. But now we are being told that we cannot go and use that because government is going to deprive us by cutting off our allowance. This is totally, totally wrong and I wish it were possible to now bring a motion of no confidence in a government that would agree to such a travesty of justice.

Mr. Speaker, this is wrong. I have never felt this way before toward people in authority who should be showing an example by the very way they live. They get up here and talk about being Christian? The Biblical injunction is to "do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Which one of them out there would appreciate it if we were the ministers of government tomorrow and we treated them that way? It's a downright disgrace and they should be ashamed of themselves!

I want to underscore that the minister . . . and I trust that when the honourable minister is speaking she will give the assurance that in the same way the backbenchers may have to pay for expenses such as telephone, water, electricity, office help, etc., that they will also be subjected to a similar cost for their use of civic centres, town halls, or any other government facility they are using, and that it be assessed. If we are going to have a level playing field, then that should be done. They should not feel that they have any special privilege.

They are privileged, yes; but privileged because we—the House—have put them in that exalted position. And they should not abuse that position. The same way that they were put there, I trust that if this type of situation continues it won't be too long before they are removed.

The total amount to be removed for use by MLAs for their offices is $75,000. Yet, I understand that the cost could run to several hundred thousand dollars to be able to provide financial assistance to veterans, indigents, the handicapped, etcetera.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that literally, it's rhetorical. I would like to know with all the savings that the National Team Government professes to have been able to accrue . . . I have heard the Minister of Education say they have millions of dollars saved—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Seventy-six million!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Seventy-six million dollars saved. They just found $7 million at the end of 1998, plus he has been telling people he has $60 million in recurrent "profit" from quite a ways back. Now, with all of that money, why is it that they need to be so vindictive as to take away the $75,000 that was allocated by the Finance Committee to provide offices for the MLAs?

I am not going to refer to payments that have been made for other offices, such as what I heard mentioned here on Monday. But when the minister was bringing this motion she should have thought of those things.

What goes around comes around. And I hope that they realise that the people out there are listening. They know the injustice being meted out. They realise that one of the reasons for this is so that the Opposition will not have adequate facilities to meet them and to deal with them.

A similar situation occurred in 1996 with one of my colleagues when his office was taken from him. But I will not go into that because most of us know we don't have to speak for that gentleman. He's quite capable of speaking for himself.

But this has to stop, and that is why I said that if this Government Motion No. 1/99 passes, it wouldn't stop at this level. The Governor will be asked to intervene in this matter. Failing that, it will go as far as the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. It is not a matter of the amount, but the blatant abuse of power and the whole principle involved in this.

Government Motion No. 1/99 has nothing to do with veterans because if they were so interested in the veterans they could have done it during Finance Committee when everybody could have voted on it. This is just a political act, Mr. Speaker. It is pure politics! To go on television and talk about the "goodness of their hearts," and the "interest in the ex-servicemen" is pure hypocrisy because it could have been done in Finance Committee!

Mr. W McKeever Bush: Your heart can't be good.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Just like Finance Committee provided $75,000 for MLAs.

Now, let me move to the other issue. We are saying in the amendment that rather than take the $75,000 that is put there so that MLAs can meet in a decent atmosphere with their constituents, why not use the savings from the rejection of the increase in MLA salaries—which amounts to something like $350,000. We are suggesting $350,000 as against the $75,000 that they want to take from us. If that is not sufficient, they could utilise some of the $7 million surplus they found at the end of 1998.

If their motive is pure—like I hope it is—then they will favourably look at the amendment. The amendment is quite straightforward. I want to make the point again that the first resolve includes in addition to veterans, our poor people, and those who cannot help themselves. They need protection. So, we are saying that they should be included, and that the amount for 1999 should be increased to $300 rather than $250. Then in the year 2000, funds being available, it should be increased to $400 per month. That is our recommendation on the first resolve section.

I have made it quite clear in the amendment (where we are talking about an increase) that we are talking about funds being available so that we comply with Standing Order 24(2). This is more particularly defined in the second resolve section to the amendment.

Just in case any of the bright sparks on the other side of the House decide to get up and speak on it, we have stated that our recommendations are in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 24(2). And for clarity and information, I would just like to read that. It says: "(2) Except on the recommendation of the Governor signified by a Member of Government, the House shall not proceed upon any motion the effect of which, in the opinion of the Presiding Officer [and this is the important line], makes provision for imposing or increasing any charge on the revenues or other funds of the Islands, for altering any such charge otherwise than by reducing it or for compounding or remitting any debt due to the Islands." It is quite clear that we are talking about funds being available, not imposing any charge on the revenue of the island.

In the second resolve, we are saying that we would wish for these funds to be apportioned over a period in 1999 commensurate with the available funds. If we are talking about $350,000 being available (just to explain to the Minister for Education) and it costs $600,000, then it's obvious if it's being apportioned you couldn't spend it from January 1 to December unless you paid lesser amounts. We are talking about the amount of $350,000 so that we are not accused of wanting to impose any additional costs on government. So it's quite clear that we are complying with Standing Order 24(2).

We are asking that some amount of fairness be reached with government so that we can have a semblance of a level playing field. They cannot say that depriving MLAs of the opportunity to meet with their constituents is a level playing field when in addition to having their ivory offices in the Glass House they also have offices within their constituencies using government property such as civic centres and town halls. When you equate that it is the same as members being given an allowance where they go out and rent appropriate properties. The only difference is that the ministers (including the minister bringing this motion) have their offices—as she does in Cayman Brac.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Yes!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: And she will have to pay an equivalent amount that will be taken from the members on this side of the House, just like any other minister that is using government property. That is only fair. That is what we are talking about when we say a level playing field. If they don't want to change this, and if they insist on taking away the $75,000 we cannot stop that because they have the numbers to do it.

I don't think the Official Members should be voting on this because this is a matter that should be dealt with in Finance Committee anyway. So I really don't think the Official Members should vote on this. But that's a matter for you, Mr. Speaker. I feel that if they could get out of it, they would.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: We can test them anyway! It's a finance matter.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I trust that the honourable ministers will re-think their position on this. It has to be abundantly clear that what they are doing is wrong. It is an abuse of power. They cannot get up and say 'But you took my increase away from me.' We recommended that the increase not be given to MLAs, and they went along with it. So it affected everybody.

We had a level playing field. But when they deprive only a number of people from getting their allowance, then that is not a level playing field—especially when they receive the allowance, and if they do not receive the allowance they utilise government facilities which would be equivalent to providing them with such facilities.

Are office facilities necessary for MLAs to properly represent their constituents? I would just like to point out that the answer to that is yes. The representation has to be at two levels. The only reason why ExCo members are paid more than members on this side is so that they can take on portfolio responsibilities. It does not mean that they provide any better representation to the people than the members on this side of the aisle. We provide a different type of representation.

I have been on both sides, and I can speak from experience. So they should not feel that they are superior to this side of the House that they should be given privileges that we are not given. Fairness is all that we are asking for.

Thank goodness, I have the privilege to wind up on this amendment. I will now wait to hear the response from my honourable colleagues across the floor, if they respond. I trust that they will let their conscience be their guide. It must be quite clear to them that they have gone wrong on Government Motion No. 1/99.

But if it happens that this amendment fails, then I want to make the point that some indication should be given that we can restore some semblance of a level playing field by indicating whether or not this matter should go to Finance Committee. Or, if it is decided in this honourable House that ministers using government facilities will have to pay an equal amount to the allowance being taken away from the members of this side of the House. I shall await the comments of honourable members.

Thank you for allowing me to make the presentation on this amendment.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you.

I have never heard such a plea for politicians to get $24,000 each. When on the one hand—

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, that honourable minister is out of order.

On a point of order!

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: He is imputing that we are here pleading to get $24,000 a year for our personal use. That's the implication! And, Mr. Speaker, in the same way that government provides him with an office in the Glass House, I am saying that the members on this side of the House should be given that privilege. That honourable minister is completely out of order, and I would ask him to withdraw the statement.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I really don't think you phrased that correctly. Please withdraw it.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: If the honourable member had let me finish my statement, what I was saying (and then I got stopped) was that I had never heard such a plea for $24,000 to go to members to be used for offices in accordance with this motion. To take and imply something . . . and every time I refer to the $24,000 going to members, it is going to members in accordance with the resolution.

I don't understand why they are so upset if they are looking at this from the point of view of conscience and not the monetary part of it, as the last member said. I mean, I hadn't even started when I was stopped, not on a point of order, with all due respect.

If I may now go on, sir.

The Speaker: Please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you.

The amendment to the motion that has been brought is nothing less than pure politics. In effect, the amending motion is saying that the Opposition members do not want to give up the $24,000 a year—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: The minister either by mistake or deliberately is misleading the House. He needs to say who is getting $24,000 a year. Which member is getting $24,000 a year?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Let me read the paper because I don't understand what the member is talking about.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Let me clarify what I am talking about. The minister can only have in his possession the form that was sent out by the Chief Secretary's office through the Deputy Chief Secretary. That was an example, if you recall, Mr. Speaker, because I suspect that you would have gotten one of these as well, as a member of this House.

The Speaker: I did.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: It set out examples of what might obtain; examples of what you might be able to get. But it was only an example.

Now, some of us (and I am clarifying what I raised) have already claimed, but nobody has claimed $24,000 a year. Furthermore, we agreed on it in the budget debate and in Finance Committee. Two paydays have gone for the year and we haven't received one red cent—although the Finance Committee approved it.

All I am saying is that unless he can come up with an application—because applications have been submitted, and applications we thought we'd be getting our funds from—unless he can show those applications and show that members have been approved for $24,000, he has to withdraw that we are getting $24,000.

I see what he has in his hand, and I have it here. It is just a letter dated from September of 1998 by Mr. Donovan Ebanks, Acting Chief Secretary, with the examples—"Draft Discussion Paper"—of what could obtain. But nothing says that we were going to get $24,000, $36,000 or even $1,000. It depended upon the area and the cost of a person's office.

I am going to sit down because I am only clarifying, but I wish that they would really stop playing dirty politics because it has gone too far.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: This House knows very clearly that the $2,000 per month suggested by Mr. Donovan Ebanks—which is $24,000 per year—was an amount for each of the 15 elected members who have—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: May I—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Standing Order—

The Speaker: I can only talk to one at a time.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: There is a Standing Order that talks about misleading the House. I suggest that that is what the minister is doing. I suggest that you stop this House right now, and get the forms that have been submitted, the applications. It is time for this to stop. It cannot be put that members are putting money in their pockets. That is calling members thieves! Now, I didn't interject yesterday—

The Speaker: Just please take it easy now.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: —and I don't want to get hot under the collar, but I am asking you to intervene this morning, please! Please, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. What—

The Speaker: Let me deal with one point of order.

I just heard the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning say that $2000 would be available to each elected member, of which there are 15 elected members of this House.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, please. Didn't that minister say which members would be getting? Didn't he say that?

The Speaker: He said fifteen.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: He said fifteen of us would be getting it. And that is not true.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, my point of order, sir, is that that is not true. That is not the case because I, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, made no such application. That minister must know that. And I know at least one other member who is in a similar position. Mr. Speaker, this is going to get out of hand. The minister is deliberately misleading the House.

The Speaker: I am not prepared to have any roll call here this morning as to who has, and who has not. It is my understanding that the Deputy Chief Secretary (who was then Acting Chief Secretary) submitted this letter. It was his suggestion that these funds would be available to each member.

Didn't members ask that the amount for rent and other funds be calculated? If we want that letter tabled we can do so. But if the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning has that letter, would he read it to clarify the matter?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I will.

The letter says, and I guess I had better read it all: It says:

“To Honourable Elected Ministers and Members of the Legislative Assembly.” To everybody in here, first point, with the exception of the Official Members.

“Office accommodation: Members of the Legislative Assembly.” Once again all 15 of us, that's the heading. “The Clerk of the Legislative Assembly has referred this matter to the Chief Secretary's office. Kindly provide a copy of the proceedings of Finance Committee on 22 April 1998 on the matter as discussed.

“It is my understanding that there are a number of venues currently being used for this purpose, some provided by the government others by the respective Members.

“It is also my understanding from the record of the discussion of 22 April 1998 that there was consensus that:

- “all Elected Members of the Assembly should be able to avail themselves of a venue in their constituency which is suitable for meeting with their constituents [all members] and
- “a policy decision should be arrived at in respect of the form and level of government supporting the provision of these facilities and thereafter form the basis of an appropriation decisions.

“As a prelude to presenting a proposal to Executive Council for its consideration I would welcome the views of all Elected Members. Additionally, as a basis for consideration, I have attached a draft paper with a number of issues and corresponding options. This is in no way intended to be exhaustive.

“As the Legislative Assembly has now reconvened, I will be attending as Temporary First Official Member and would kindly ask that we get together on Wednesday 23 September at the afternoon break and discuss the matter and hopefully reach a consensus.

“I look forward to having your input.

“Yours sincerely, Donovan Ebanks, Acting Chief Secretary.”

(Please see attached Appendix)

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Very simple, Mr. Speaker. This applies to all of us.

The Speaker: I hope that will put this item to rest. That states exactly what—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please, First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Thank you.

I am rising on May's Parliamentary Practice where it talks about misleading the House. Yesterday, that minister had to withdraw [his statement] about members putting money in their pockets. Now today he says that we got $2,000. I am saying to you, Mr. Speaker, nobody has applied for $2,000. He said we got $2,000. I am saying to you that that has to be withdrawn because that is not correct. That is misleading the House, and thus the public. It is plain in the Standing Orders about misleading.

The Speaker: I don't have the benefit of the Hansard but from where I sit I fully understood what was being said. Now, whether the man actually said “got,” I don't have it in front of me.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Yes!

The Speaker: [addressing the Honourable Minister for Education] But would you just rephrase that?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I am very happy to. What I am saying is that each member—as I just read, every elected member in this House, including the ministers—has a right and is entitled to apply for $24,000 per annum as set out in this memorandum to be used as is . . .

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: What do you mean, no? Everybody has a right to apply for up to $24,000 a year.

Do you understand this any different from that, Mr. Speaker? Maybe you should tell me what you understand, sir, because I am beginning to think I have been listening . . . anyhow, I better not say that.

The Speaker: I thought the letter was very clear.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, would you get the Hansard where the minister said we were getting $2,000? That's the part I am complaining about. Either he withdraws it, or you get the Hansard and make your ruling, sir. I think that's your job as Speaker.

The Speaker: I know my job. Let's understand that.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to split hairs. If I said what the member says I did, I withdraw it. Let's try to get on with this.

But what is hurting members here, Mr. Speaker, is—

The Speaker: Just one moment. Let me clear this point of order. The minister has now withdrawn that. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That we don't get the $2,000 a month?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Right.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Right? Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: But the letter said that the money is available to each and every one of us if we make the application. Is that clearly understood by all members?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, if I may, sir.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: While the letter says what it does, what the minister will not address . . . and he needs to understand that I know how he does what he does.

I will not get out of order, Mr. Speaker, but please allow me. What the minister is not saying . . . he keeps chiming on this $2,000 per month. The example that was put in Mr. Ebanks' letter clearly stated "based on square footage in George Town." He was simply saying that when each member had the exact cost he or she should make an application to defray those costs. There is a ceiling of $2,000 per month because it was assumed that the most expensive would be in George Town. No one has made a claim up to that level.

So the point I make to you, sir, which is what the minister will not address—and he knows what he's doing. He keeps implying about this $2,000, when all this exercise is about is that whatever one's actual expenses are for an office, up to $2,000 is what will be paid by the government including for the ministers, sir. But no one has made any application to the ceiling level because in actual fact none of us have incurred expenses up to that level when it comes to operating an office. That's where the matter needs to be cleared up. That's all it's about.

The Speaker: I fully understand that, but I am not going to bring this Chair into the inner workings of this department.

The responsibility to vote the money is in Finance Committee. I think that the ¹letter as read into the records of this House, and which will be tabled, is what is available to members. It's just like having a loan at the bank—you are entitled to draw so much—you don't have to draw that amount, you can draw what you need.

Let us put that to bed now, please, and let's get on with something else. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to please look carefully when members rise on points of order which are points of explanation to get in extra points during my time.

[Inaudible interjections and general uproar]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I now wish to lay on the Table of this Honourable House the memo that states very clearly that the 15 of us are entitled to up to $2,000 per month for rental and other matters set out in this. So this motion affects all 15.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, I had asked you to ask the minister to clarify that particular point. What I am asking him to clarify—

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Is this a point of order, or a point of—

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: It is a point of order. He is stating that all 15 members . . . the impression is that all 15 members are entitled to this. Where a minister, such as the minister moving this motion, the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, has an office in the Brac, will that be assessed? And if using a government building, will that be assessed? And if the motion is rejected for MLA allowances, will she, like others, have to pay the rental out of her pocket for the use of that building? He needs to clarify that point.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, with respect, that is not a point of order. That's what I asked you earlier to be careful with, sir.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: It is clarifying a matter . . . and he's giving the wrong impression, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: You cannot clarify a matter unless I chose to sit.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: He is misleading the House.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the misleading of the House is when a member stands up on a point of order to get in his point as elucidation. If I do not give way when I am speaking the member doesn't have a right to get up and speak. If it is a point of order . . . and I would like you to rule. Is that a point of order, sir?

The Speaker: I think everything has been very ably clarified by the tabling of this document. That document laid the policy that has been set down by the honourable Chief Secretary. I want to put that issue to bed.

Please continue, Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I will give way to the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, to clarify a point that was wrongly raised.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

The aspect of the Brac MLA office—which seems to be a very emotive catalyst for discussion this morning—might I inform this honourable House this morning that that office is not completed and that it has never been used. If it means my making a sacrifice in respect of the well-deserving and courageous veterans, I can do what I have continued to do—see people out of my apartment, which I have paid for. I have no problem continuing to pay for my own bills.

[Some Members: Ohhhh!]

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That is speaking from the heart with conscience; not from the monetary point of view. And the public is smart enough to know where the genuine people in this House are and who (and I am going to deal with this in depth) the hypocrites are. You see the difference there, and the public will see the difference between the genuine people speaking with conscience and those who are only speaking from the point of view of the money allowance.

The impression has been attempted to be given is that the loss of this allowance was a loss of an entitlement only for some members. That's why laying the memo from the Acting Chief Secretary on the Table of this House makes it very clear that this is a sacrifice that is being made by all members of the House. It is no different from one's salary. One need not draw one's salary if one doesn't want it.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I really wish they would leave me alone. I have come here in a very nice, calm mood—

[Some Members: Ohhhh!]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: —and I have listened to so many interruptions from the first word I said. All I can say is that nothing hurts like the truth. Nothing! When the truth is said, then you find those who are not subscribing to it squirming and trying to find ways of getting out of it. That's the general way of life.

So let's not get this wrong: The $24,000 per year entitlement—the $360,000—is an entitlement of all elected members of this House. We have every right to have an office, Mr. Speaker, as does the Opposition. It's not a world where only the Opposition or the backbenchers should have an office. But very little of what was said (and this is the point I am coming to) by the Opposition relates to the poor veterans and ex-servicemen and these people. The whole push, the larger part of what has been said, has come around the money. I submit that is really what the big objection to this motion is. Instead of dealing with one's conscience and one's sympathy towards these people what is being dealt with, really, is the loss of the entitlement to $24,000.

The public is smart enough to see where people are heading. And I heard anger, which should not be coming into this House. And I have been subjected constantly—and the public has heard it—to anger in this House. That isn't coming through conscience to do something for the ex-servicemen. I submit that it is coming when we begin to touch on the money entitlement that all of the members of this House are entitled to. All of the members here are entitled to it; it is not as if there are one or two victims out there among the Opposition who would be entitled to this. All members of this honourable House have the same entitlement.

I congratulate the minister who has brought this noble motion . . . and I am speaking here on the amendment, I would like to make that clear.

The amendment itself is really seeking to do two main things. One is to preserve the $24,000 per year that seems to be what is getting some members of the backbench so upset. So it's all about money. That's what this is all about.

I am amazed. Just a few weeks back, we heard the noble statements about doing for your country rather than self. The $24,000 is for self! And the ex-servicemen are the ones who defended this country. They are the people who preserved freedom. That is country! Where is all the support for these ex-servicemen's position? Self, Mr. Speaker. It is the $24,000.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Every time I get on this $24,000, I seem to get people very itchy to interrupt.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: No!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: This is a sacrifice that all members of this House should be prepared to make for the veterans of this country. I would say shame on those who are not prepared to make that sacrifice because many veterans gave the ultimate sacrifice for their country. They died, that is the ultimate sacrifice. And here we are looking at $24,000 per year times 15—which is $360,000 that will go towards paying for the veterans.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The minister is again misleading the House. No one has said that the amount is going to be $24,000 per year for each individual times 15 to come to $360,000. He just said that that is what is going to happen, and no one knows that that is what is going to happen.

In fact, it cannot happen because no one has claimed up to $2,000 per month. It is misleading the House! No one here has talked about depriving veterans either. That, too, is misleading! We have provided alternative means of funding for the veterans if our amendment is accepted.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, I really thought that we had put that to bed. Once again, would you just add "up to" $24,000?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I always mean up to $24,000.

[General uproar]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: And I talk about it then as an entitlement, and that gives you "up to" $24,000.

The Speaker: Not to exceed $24,000.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Yes, sir.

Now I don't mean to say anything other than that. Anything I say that may . . . you know, Mr. Speaker, if I could be just left alone to say what I have to say . . . when my train of thought is broken consistently, confusion at times creeps in. I don't understand why . . . I mean, what I have said, I think is very clear.

Just about one month ago we had a very similar type of motion put forward. And MLAs . . . in fact, if you really want to look at what was bad in some ways, that motion that dealt with not taking the salary increases . . . there were some members in this House who probably didn't even realise that was being done. All what was said about being for country instead of self, and what was being given up for the country. And now, when a sum that is about the same amount, I would think, is . . . the motion is similar except it is saying that this money should go towards paying the veterans of this country an extra amount. And suddenly we find that the attitude has totally changed.

Now, I am going to deal with hypocrisy a bit because the Third Elected Member for George Town and several other members spent time talking about this. Hypocrisy is when you get up on one motion and talk about country and self, and how good it is to be giving up your entitlement (which is was then an extra salary increase), and that this should go towards paying for the increase that has already gone in (which is the $50 that has already gone to people other than veterans). As we know that was in the estimates, and I will deal with that a bit later. Then a motion that is in my view the same thing . . . it is saying, 'Look, you're entitled up to $24,000, the same as you were entitled up to, say, $24,000, $25,000, $26,000 for your salary' and we don't take it.

There is no difference in giving up your entitlement to a salary increase and giving it up to an allowance. So if there is any hypocrisy, that is where it comes in because the country will now see—when the vote is driven by money—who votes for self, who votes for country, and who votes for money. Very simple! And that is really why I have been stopped so often is because of the inconsistency, saying on the one hand 'We are not going to take our salary increase'—which is about this amount—

Mr. Roy Bodden: What?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Well, Mr. Speaker, what would be happening at this stage is that those backbench members who were prepared to take this entitlement up to $24,000 would be drawing more salary and allowance (get more money so to speak) than is presently paid to ministers. To go out and justify to the public that you add $24,000 extra onto an MLA's salary as an allowance . . . you know, Mr. Speaker, money by any other name is still money.

The crux of this is not the veterans; it's not the poor persons. This is all about money and the entitlement to that $24,000 that some members of this House . . . because we are prepared to give up our right to it. We put this motion and there are some that are not prepared, obviously, to put self before country. Nearly everything that has been said has been about the money part of it. Very little was said about the poor veterans who died and gave their lives for this country.

When we look at what has happened in the past in the districts, the civic centres, the town halls, in George Town it has been government offices or town hall over the years, used by members and ministers throughout. What has really happened now, it seems to me, is that some people probably feel they are too good to go in the humble offices that are provided in town halls or civic centres—

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: On a point of order!

The honourable minister is misleading the House. He knows that in the case of George Town the town hall is used for court purposes and other purposes and not available to the honourable members of the backbench. He knows that. There are no other offices in government buildings in George Town available to MLAs. If one is available, I would like that honourable minister to say which one and I would be happy to go . . . we have been through it. There are none available. They told us none were available. But if he knows of one, I would like him to tell us now.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, as soon as you have answered this I take the point that he is making about the town hall. That is absolutely correct. It is being utilised almost on a continuous basis. But it's getting time for us to take the morning break, so make your reply brief please.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Perhaps we should take the break, sir. I see it is nearly 12.00.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.45 AMPROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.25 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on [the amendment to] Government Motion No. 1/99.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Mr. Speaker, this amending motion has, in my view, tried to cloud the issue because the issue here is not so much what the veterans, indigents, are going to get but the part of it that relates to the allowance of up to $24,000 for each member.

It is very important to note that from what I have been led to understand the salary increase that was given up by those MLAs opposing the original motion was considerably less than this $24,000 allowance potential. So we were looking at considerably less. I believe it would have worked out somewhere a bit over the half mark of the $24,000 allowance entitlement. We can well see where this aspect of it has come in.

Now I have not seen the Third Elected Member for George Town so heated in a long time. He is very calm now, but he went on to talk about abuse of power. The best example of abuse of power was back in 1990 when the members of the elected government removed the Financial Secretary from the chair of Finance Committee, added on the three Official Members, put the Governor in charge of Finance Committee, and ran the government for two years. Constitutionally it was something that had never been done. That is abuse of power!

Thousands hit the streets petitioning because of [Government] Motion 3/90. All I am doing is giving a clear warning to the Third Elected Member for George Town that when he delves into this that he cast his memory back to Motion 3/90 and the way that nearly wrecked this country at that time.

We are giving up our entitlement the same as everyone else. There is no abuse of power involved. What is involved here is the hard choice between country and self.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Mr. Speaker, one other thing (and I won't call the honourable member's name), when we were in the informal stage looking at the salary increases there were one or two members who wanted to go up to $91,000 from the $84,000. Even at that, what was in there was four extra increments: instead of $81,000 for MLAs, they would be getting four increments to get $84,000 (and I am talking in round figures here); whereas (at least with the Executive Council Members) we remained pegged where we were pegged all along. There was no attempt to increase it.

But when that motion came—and this is where the hypocrisy comes in—that member was one of the first to get up and say how wrong it was to take the increase to $84,000—when what had been talked about was $91,000! But when you add this altogether, and you look at the constituent's allowance of $24,000, really, a member who draws that as a MLA would be drawing about $92,500 a year. So we are not talking about small money here.

I would like to just look at a few other areas. A lot was also said about things like dirty politics and that sort of thing. I can just point out that when everyone is in the same boat—we all have this entitlement and some of us are prepared to look at country and give it up as did all the members of this House with their salary increase. There is nothing dirty about that, Mr. Speaker. It's good and clean to give up your entitlement and leave it with your country.

A lot was said about what is done for the country and the fact that reference . . . and, by the way, this $24,000 entitlement will be paid by the poor taxpayer the same as any other amount. Do members really want the entitlement? The salary of $92,000 a year is a very substantial amount.

The other point I would like to mention Mr. Speaker, up until now, members always were able to somehow sort out where they would have their MLA offices. In fact, many of those members also have their private offices. So it's not as if there is not somewhere available, as I said. And with the exception of the Town Hall, I think the Third Elected Member [for George Town] is quite right. It's very hard to get the George Town Town Hall. But there should be other areas.

I believe that members dealt with their constituents very ably in the past. It is not as if all of a sudden elected members have to have nice private offices and they are not taking up (at least in the districts) the town halls and civic centres. That's what they are there for, and the offices are quite nice in some of them. It is not good enough to plead that you can't serve your constituents unless you have a private office because all along members have been serving their constituents from the offices available.

To be frank, when you stay in the legislature for three months there is very little use in having an office up in the Glass House because we don't get there. Look at it from the practical point of view: We stay in this House day, after day, after day, after day. Unless something is finally done the business of government will also suffer—not because of an office or otherwise, but because we stay in this House these extremely long times.

I know the members who are shouting across would like me to sit down, but I am not quite ready for that yet. When I tell the truth, I get a lot of little insinuations from across the floor of the House. But I don't get upset, because I know tomorrow is another day and life goes on—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Oh, you know that?

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I know that if I let the backbenchers get me upset I may say things that with careful thinking could have been put in different words.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That's not true.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: What is true, since one member said it isn't true, . . . and let's look at this. I hope the public realises this: If this amending motion succeeds, MLAs, together with the cost of living increase of 2.7% in 1998, and the 3.3%, together with the allowance of up to $24,000, will be drawing about $92,500. That's a lot of money. We were talking about giving up the salary increase when it was only $84,000 at the time. That was a bold move to give up the $13,000, $14,000 or $15,000, whatever it was—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's repetition—tedious repetition.

You know when the minister speaks he is tedious, but this is tedious repetition because he has made that point about five times. I have marked it down. Sir, I would ask you to watch him carefully. He can do that because he's a lawyer.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you, sir.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it's real interesting. The government ministers sit here for three months at a time and say so little. The vast majority of what is said is by the backbench. And I hear that repetition over, and over, and over, as does the public, to where they are no longer listening to a lot of what goes on, which is unfortunate.

The second part of the amending motion admits, and I would like to read it: "that savings realised for the rejection of the increase in MLA salaries estimated at three hundred and fifty Cayman Islands Dollars be utilised to fund the increase." I may be wrong, but I remember it being stated that it could be used, or would be available for use for quite a number of different things. We can't have a situation where the same amount of $350,000 is recycled over and over.

But, in any event, $350,000 is not going to cover the increase in this amending motion. And this is very important. Money has to be raised from elsewhere, by whatever means, because the sum that will be needed . . . and I would just like to get this clear. First of all, already provided under the Minister of Social Services is the increase of $50 for the indigents and persons receiving financial assistance. I understood that was in the area of $390,000, that's for $50.

Is that not now in the budget?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of clarification, if the minister would.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I am not giving up on clarifications.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, then, Mr. Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: The minister again is misleading the House, whether it's memory or what. If that money was in the budget for $50, why then was it not paid in January?

The Speaker: I don't really think that's a point of order. We are not dealing with the budget here this morning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the reason why it was not paid in January is because the backbench was in here asking questions on the budget. The budget didn't go through in January, with all due respect. So how could we pay the money? We were all inside here. I don't want to get into this, but that's the reason it wasn't paid.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: No, the reason why is because you brought two budgets!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, this thing about two budgets, . . . both were brought at one time. Within a matter of a few days everybody had it. And—

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, every year the public knows that the long delays in this House . . . they hear who is asking the questions, and who is causing the delays. That's why the poor indigents and persons who are entitled to financial assistance were not paid—because this House was sitting in Finance Committee and had not approved it.

What should have been done, as happened in years gone by, is that it should have been approved in November. There is no reason why it shouldn't have been dealt with earlier. In any event, it will be retroactive and will go back to the first of January, despite the delay that was caused—which was not our fault. We put the budget forward in November.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: These people weren't paid.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, sir.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Just a few minutes ago the minister said that "money will have to be raised from elsewhere to fund this increase that is being proposed with the amendment.” Obviously, the minister has not read the amendment properly. And let me make the point, sir. The amendment reads: “BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the savings realised from the rejection of the increase in MLA salaries, estimated at three hundred and fifty Cayman Islands Dollars be utilised to fund the increase; and in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 24(2) that these payments be apportioned over a period in 1999 commensurate with the available funds.”

That simply means that whatever those savings were, the payments be given out in proportion to what is available. The amendment clearly states that there is no request for additional funds over and above the savings to be realised by the rejection of the MLA salaries. So, the minister cannot say that we are trying to commit the country to other funds. For the minister to say what he just said is definitely misleading the House, and he should correct the statement.

The Speaker: I am afraid you completely lost me on that one.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr too. But if the honourable member is—

The Speaker: Would you please repeat it?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I will repeat it sir.

The minister said just a few minutes ago that other funds would have to be sought to be able to pay this extra money being sought in the amendment, the impression being that we are asking the country to commit more funds.

The amendment clearly states that all we are asking for is whatever savings are realised from the rejection of the MLA salary increase, that it be paid out in proportion. In other words, if the amount of $350,000 is being saved on MLA salaries, that is the total amount to be paid out during 1999 to these people. If they have to wait until March to get the extra money, then so be it. That is what this is saying. We are not asking for any increase in funds.

The minister clearly stated a while ago that “extra funds would have to be sought.” That is what he said! I am saying that if you read the motion it says the exact opposite of that. So he is misleading the House.

The Speaker: I would like to inject this part: The final sentence in the amending motion says “and that the Standing Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount.” That is where I am not on all fours with what you are saying.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, that final statement refers to whatever that full amount of savings realised is. That is what the point is. So, at no time is this amendment seeking to ask for extra funds to be found from elsewhere.

The Speaker: I thank you for that explanation.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: This is a revelation to me because what the member is saying is that the resolution will only be distributing the equivalent of $350,000 and no further funds will be raised. That is what he is saying. I did not understand it that way, sir.

The Speaker: Me neither.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: And as you are shaking your hear, sir, you didn't either.

I read it that if the members are saying that they are increasing veterans, indigents, handicapped and those over 60 who qualify for assistance to $300 in 1999, and to $400 in the year 2000—and both the motion and this are the same there—then to do that, sir, requires a lot more than $350,000. I apologise for not understanding it, but I believe the way in which it is worded, and where it says “approve the full amount” if that is the case, then what we have at this stage is a motion that the first part of the resolve—and I can say what that cost will be—cannot then be put into effect. So someone has not gotten their figures together and counted the cost of the—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, again sir.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: That minister is a lawyer, and he supposedly understands the Queen's English. I heard what he just said. I am going to read this again.

“BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED that the monthly grant to the veterans, indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance be increased to three hundred Cayman Islands Dollars in 1999;” That is exactly what is being asked for—that it be increased in 1999. It doesn't say January 1st 1999. It says in 1999. So what he is saying again is a double misinterpretation of the proposed amendment.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I would really appreciate it if the honourable member can really explain to me what this motion means. When in 1999 are you going to pay the $300? The $350,000 can't cover all of this money to be paid to veterans, indigents and everybody else.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, that minister always talks about how people talk, talk, talk and don't listen. If he had taken the time out to understand the full intent of the amendment, he wouldn't be killing himself giggling now, trying to make it sound like he understands the amendment and we don't understand the amendment that has been proposed.

The minister said a few minutes ago that the additional $50 to the category of indigents and such was already in the budget for 1999. That amount we know has been approved. We know that we cannot (by way of seeking an amendment) ask for additional funds or to commit the country to additional funds or additional cost from the revenue it has. This amendment is simply saying that with what is available to the indigents and the other categories in the budget, along with whatever savings will be realised—which was a commitment given, that the savings would be realised during the year—be used to pay out (when you add all of that up to come to $300 a month) whenever it can during 1999. That is what the amendment is saying.

You may look and frown, but we knew what we were saying when we said it.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That's right!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: You may do what you wish, and you may say that we didn't understand. But I want you to understand that we understand the Queen's English too, so you can debate it however you wish. I have now told you the intent of the amendment.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Now that I understand the intent of the amendment, because on the reading of it I had read it like you, sir, that the motion was to really pay the sum of $300 in 1999—and when we say that, I assume the whole of 1999. Obviously I was wrong.

Let me just now show you what this will cost per annum. The cost of paying $100 per month to veterans, indigent, handicapped and those over 60 who qualify for financial assistance is $780,000. I am sorry, that's without veterans. That's indigents and handicapped and those over 60 for financial assistance. In other words, what the Minister for Social Services would pay under that motion would be $780,000. What it will cost to increase to $100 per month per annum for veterans is $712,000. That totals $1,492,000. What is in the budget is $390,000 and $75,000 which is a part appropriation for the MLA offices allowance, which makes $465,000. Take it away, it leaves $1,027,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no way that a savings of $350,000 for the MLA salaries can fund $1,027,000. So the money has to be vired from somewhere, or raised from somewhere if the full amount is to be paid. If the motion says what the First Elected Member for George Town said . . . and in fairness I didn't understand it that way that there will only be the amount paid out that the $350,000 can pay—then I would say take that $350,000, which doesn't quite cover $50 to veterans, because the budget now provides for $250 per month to go to the indigents and those qualifying for financial assistance.

The people who are not getting the money are the veterans. They are only getting $200 a month. We say increase that, make it equal, to $250 per month. So the money that is there is very simple. It cannot pay what is in the first part of this motion to increase everybody up to $300 per month. Either my bookkeeping is not right, or somebody else's bookkeeping is not right—

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order again.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The minister is again trying to say that we have said the money must be paid immediately. He thinks that we are falling into a trap, but I am sorry for him. He can argue that until next week because we know why we worded the amendment the way we did. We are not saying that, and we are not suggesting that any additional funds have to be sought from anywhere else.

The amendment clearly states what we sought. When all the funds that are available from the budget and these savings and however they were apportioned out, then let it be done. That is all we are saying. We were simply setting the stage for the veterans and the other categories mentioned in the amendment to be able to rise to $300 per month sometime during the course of 1999. That is the purpose!

If he is coming back about his accounting or somebody else's accounting, because he's adding all of it up with all of the categories from January 1st . . . that is not what we said. We know what we can ask for and what we can't ask for, and we couldn't ask for it the way he's suggesting because he would have been the first one to say that the proposed amendment to the motion was ultra vires everything, and all his fancy language.

The Speaker: That's an explanation. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: What this boils down to is that the motion put by government is seeking to equalise the veterans with the indigents and other people getting financial assistance. We need to understand that there are two different ministers, two different headings involved here. To do that is going to cost $356,000.

What will therefore have to happen is somebody, during a substantial part of the year, will have to get either considerably less than $250 (and a few may be for a very short period at the end of the year) . . . and I would have hoped that the backbench would have had this all worked out and could have said for two months of the year or one month or three or four months they could have gotten this.

But if no more money is being raised and the purport of this amendment is just that, what it really boils down to is the only thing that we are talking about is the section that talks about the $24,000 allowance, up to that, that can go to MLAs. Because this is not enough money to do any more than fund the veterans their extra $50.

Are we going to deprive the veterans of their extra $50? They are getting $200. The indigents and those over 60 have been increased up to $250 and we have $356,000 sitting there, plus $75,000 that has been appropriated. There is no way that anything else can be dealt with.

As I see it, this cannot be achieved under this motion. If the honourable member is correct, that the intent is not to raise any money, then really this amending motion does nothing more than the motion does because there is $350,000 or $360,000 (whatever the go around), it will cost that much to give the veterans what they are entitled to—which is the $50 per month increase from 1st January.

There is $75,000 left. And when you are dealing with $1.4 million a year, $75,000 can probably pay each one an extra $50 for a few weeks from what I can see, unless there is something else hidden in this that I cannot see to understand. But then I submit that what we are really down to is what do we do with the $350,000? We said give $50 to the veterans, if we are all that charitable, and equal them all up with $250 for the next whatever it is, eleven months or so.

What I don't understand either (and the First Elected Member for West Bay is waving his hands at me) . . . that motion that was put through on the salary increase didn't appear to me to be a very final resolution. And I am coming to that point. It said, "BE IT RESOLVED that the proposed increase to all elected members of the Legislative Assembly be not accepted at this time." So at which time is it going to remain open until? Maybe in the course . . . since we don't understand what motions are, maybe somebody will explain that one because that too, I don't follow.

As I understand it (let me say what I understand), what the members were doing, the Opposition rather—because this was brought by the First Elected Member for West Bay and seconded by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town—was an attempt to get the political glory putting it in at this time and leaving it open so that at some time in the future it would possibly come back. "At this time" means at this time, and at sometime in the future maybe take the extra amount. But that wasn't necessary because a much larger amount, up to $24,000, was sitting there—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Could we put the hair in place?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: It did not strike me at the time when—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Truman sit down, that won't work. You supported it.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That, I understood, was one of the backbencher's—

The Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the luncheon suspension?

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I think it would be, sir, thank you.

The Speaker: We shall suspend until 2.30

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1.04 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.41 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Administration of Oaths or Affirmations. The Oath of Allegiance to be taken by Mr. Arthur Joel Walton to be the Acting Temporary Third Official Member.

Mr. Walton, will you come forward to the Clerk's table? Will all Members please stand?

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr. Arthur Joel Walton

Hon. Joel Walton: I, Arthur Joel Walton, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law, so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Walton, on behalf of all honourable members of this House I welcome you here for the time of your service. Please take your seat as the Acting Temporary Third Official Member.

Please be seated.

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the honourable Third Official Member who has been taken ill with the flu and is incapacitated. I have also received apologies from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is also ill.

Continuation of Government Business, Motions, [Amendment to] Government Motion No. 1/99. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you.

The amendment to the motion that has been put forward, I submit, appears to be an effort to get some momentum from the motion moved by the minister responsible for veterans. As I now understand this amendment, the first operative resolve, "that the monthly grant to the Veterans, indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance be increased to three hundred Cayman Islands' dollars in 1999 . . ." I understand that means in a part of 1999 which I would assume would be calculated that it is a month, two months, or whatever, “and, funds being available, to four hundred Cayman Islands’ dollars in the year 2000;” Well, that latter part repeats what was already done by a motion that was put forward on 17th July 1998.

Private Member’s Motion No. 8/98 said, “BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Government consider putting in place the necessary funds so that at the year 2000 the financial assistance would be at a figure of $400 per month, per person.” So that is a repetition of an earlier motion that was passed. That, in any event, doesn’t arise until next year.

Now, to give $50 a month extra to veterans, the cost is going to be $356,000. The funds that are referred to in the amending motion can cover the veterans and no one else, unless the view is that the veterans should continue at $200. The indigents, handicapped and persons over 60 who qualify for financial assistance would then continue at $250 a month. Then, somewhere further down the line the $350,000 would be split up so that in the last one or two months at the most, they would be increasing to $300 each.

As I see it, the first part of this amendment does not, despite the flowery wording of it, do anything other than say that there should be an increase of $350,000 per annum utilised for all of this.

But it is well known—and this is what really brought out the intent on this motion—that $350,000 can’t pay an extra amount to all of these persons except for a very short period of time. Between the motion and the amending motion the only substantial difference is that the motion brought by the Minister for Community Affairs states that the veterans should get the extra $50 (go from $200 to $250) from 1st January for the whole year.

And, Mr. Speaker, by the way, that motion uses the exact same words, “$250 in 1999.” But what is meant there (and is, I submit, what would be accepted as the meaning) is for the full 1999. And I make that clear: The difference between this motion that says “in 1999” . . . the amendment is for a part of 1999. But what the government is putting forward is to pay the extra $50 a month to veterans for the whole of 1999. So the only difference is that the Government is saying take the extra $75,000, which is a part of the entitlement up to $24,000 by all 15 members of the Legislative Assembly, and use that to pay the veterans.

There is just not sufficient money to try to get $100 per month extra for veterans, indigent, handicapped, and persons over 60 years of age. So the bottom line, as I see it, is that the legislature has to decide where the $350,000 goes. But, if we are looking at the $350,000 that is coming from MLA salaries (I think that was where I had reached), when one looks at this motion brought to reject the increase in salaries, can one really say that this motion left money that can be used in the future? Because the motion that rejected the salary increase for MLAs is very clear. It says, “BE IT RESOLVED that the proposed increase to all elected members of the legislature be not accepted at this time.” I don’t think that money is freed up—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Repetition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know that is in our Standing Orders, and you know that it is in Erskine May, and you have been listening as long as I have been listening to that minister, and he has been on to this several times. That must be tedious repetition. If he had said it once or twice, . . . but this is at least five times I have counted now.

Well, Mr. Speaker, please, please. He is a minister talking about how much business they have up there on their desks. If they have so much business, . . . well, he has said what he had to say.

The Speaker: Please sum it up now.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I believe that if you apply that rule, and I hope you will, against all members we wouldn’t be in here, with all due respect, for three months solid.

The Speaker: I am not limiting your time, I would just like you not to dwell on the particular subject for too much longer. Please continue with your debate.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: This area was a new area that I was touching on when I was stopped, as you appreciate, when we both fully understood what the motion was.

The Speaker: You can continue, the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: What I wanted to just go on to, because I think the dilemma that the Opposition is in is that if, . . . and I have heard rumblings about what the intent of this motion is. I would like to refer you to a submission that was made by the Third Elected Member for George Town in his debate on this amendment.

It related to Standing Order 24(2) and section 37(2)(b) of the Constitution. As I understand both the motion and the amending motion specifically say “subject to Finance Committee approval.” In fact, they both say that.

If we look at those sections and we look at the similar section in the United Kingdom we will find an explanation which . . . and, Mr. Speaker, let me just state very clearly that I always abide by your ruling, and I accept it. That’s the one thing I am always careful on. But, I would like to draw your attention, sir, to page 764 of the 22nd Edition of Erskine May. It deals with the money resolutions of the Parliament in the UK. The principle on which what I am reading here has arisen is that you look at the substance of a motion and not the form. It says this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: What the minister is now dealing with is a ruling that you made on Monday, and it is provided for in our Standing Orders. The minister knows that he cannot delve into that ruling unless he brings a substantive motion. That's what the Standing Orders say. Because at that time he made his explanation, we on this side made one, he made another one and you took a break and you ruled. The minister cannot now come back and expect to debate that.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with my motion on Monday. That member is so hyper over there. It has nothing to do with it. What I am replying to, and if necessary we can get the transcript—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Let's get it!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The Third Elected Member for George Town spoke about these Standing Orders when he was speaking on the amending motion, and I am replying to it. I have a right to reply to it. What went on on Monday was a different aspect—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Oh no!

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me deal with one point of order at a time.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Okay, Standing Order 88.

The Speaker: I am familiar with 88, but I cannot rule that the Honourable Minister of Education is out of order if I don't understand what he is talking about. I think it is only just if we let him explain his position before I can make a ruling. You are jumping to conclusions . . . Just wait a minute.

Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, please continue and then I will make my ruling.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Thank you, sir. I am not asking—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker on a point of order, sir.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: How can there be a point of order? I haven't said anything. Mr. Speaker, with due respect.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, with due respect, the minister has pointed out where he is going and why he is going there in relation to the last resolve—the matter that you have already ruled on. You don't need to hear that point over again.

Now, you might say that I can't tell you what to do. But it's obvious, at least to me, that is what he was doing because that is what he said he was doing.

The Speaker: I have ruled from the Chair, and I asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning to continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking you for any ruling. What I am doing is replying—I made this clear, I have said this before—I am replying to what the Third Elected Member for George Town said. I would like to ensure that when other members speak on this that there is no doubt that the motion cannot be put in there with the intent of going back to Finance Committee for further funds.

That member dealt with it, sir. All I would like to do is just read this part. I am not asking you for any ruling. What it says—

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: My point of order is that Standing Order 88(1) is quite specific on the position the honourable minister can take on this matter. It states: "88 (1) In any matter not herein provided for [meaning in the Legislative Assembly Standing Orders], resort shall be had to the usage and practice of the Commons House of Parliament of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which shall be followed as far as the same may be applicable to this House, and not inconsistent with these Standing Orders nor with the practice of this House."

My point of order is that the only way that this honourable minister can now resort to Erskine May is if the answer is not in the Standing Orders. The answer is quite specific under Standing Order 24(2) and there is no need to resort to Erskine May.

The Speaker: Would you further elaborate exactly how it is covered under Standing Order 24(2)?

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Under Standing Order 24(2) it is quite clear that "Except on the recommendation of the Governor signified by a Member of Government, the House shall not proceed upon any motion the effect of which, in the opinion of the Presiding Offi- cer [in the opinion of the Presiding Officer, I repeat], makes provision for imposing or increasing any charge on the revenues or other funds of the Islands, for altering any such charge otherwise than by reducing it or for compounding or remitting any debt due to the Islands."

If reference is had to my amendment, in the second resolve section reference was indeed made to Standing Order 24(2) and that is the order we are dealing with. I know that the identical provision is made in the Constitution. I think it is in section 37. No reference was made to that, but reference was indeed made to Standing Order 24(2), so there is no need to make reference to Erskine May.

The Speaker: I fully understand what you have just submitted. When the motion was placed, when I made my observation to accept the motion, and also when I made my ruling yesterday, I was very cognisant of what Standing Order 24(2) and (3) said. I called attention to the fact that I accepted on the powers of the last part where it says, "and that Standing Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount" where request for the funds was going to be dealt with by the Finance Committee. Other presentations have been made here today contrary to what I was made to understand on the initial presentation.

Where we are talking now about "commensurate with the available funds," . . . and if you notice in (2) it says "Except on the recommendation of the Governor signified by a Member of Government, the House shall not proceed upon any motion the effect of which, in the opinion of the Presiding Officer . . ."

The Speaker: Well, if we are now saying that we are not referring it to the Finance Committee, you have got me completely. That was what was said on debate here earlier before we took the adjournment.

Can you clarify that?

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, I really don't want to prolong this situation, but we are quite cognisant of our position as backbenchers "Except on the recommendation of the Governor signified by a Member of Government, . . ." we cannot impose or increase any charge on the revenue. But this also says "the House shall not proceed upon any motion the effect of which, in the opinion of the Presiding Officer [your opinion] makes provision for imposing or increasing any charge on the revenues or other funds of the Islands, . . ."

Mr. Speaker, it seems that you are saying that you did not understand the amendment the way the debate has carried it out, and I can understand if that has occurred. But the fact is that the amendment is quite specific. There is no ambiguity about it and it is exactly the way it is written here. I am sure there could be several interpretations to this, but I don't think the member who spoke said categorically that the matter would not go to Finance Committee.

The Speaker: I don't want to get involved in a debate, but the concern that I have from where I sit is the fact that the funds for the increase in salary for MLAs and Ministers was rejected. Therefore, it went back to the Treasury. Where we have any say in what's done with that now puzzles me. That has gone back to the Treasury. In order to get the funds we have to go to Finance Committee. That was my understanding.

I was not present at the time the motion was voted on, but it did not say that the funds would then be used for veterans. It just said it would not be accepted. Therefore, that has returned to the general revenue.

The Speaker: That's not for me to say. But that's where it should be. We are getting more complicated all the time.

Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Mr. Speaker, what I find very interesting about this is that there has been debate for twenty minutes on what I am expected to say, and I never even got an opportunity to say it. If I may now just reply to what . . . I am not asking you for a ruling, Mr. Speaker, but if I could at least just make the point I am trying to make. Everyone stopped me long before I reached the point.

It is in the light of this new interpretation, I just want to read from page 764 of the 22nd Edition of May's. It says, under "Money to be provided by Parliament", the middle of that paragraph that begins "Although the initial money resolution is intended only to authorise the eventual presentation of an estimate, it is nonetheless regarded as a motion for a charge upon the public revenue in the terms of Standing Order 48 and therefore could not be brought before the House of Commons without the recommendation of the Crown." That's the only point I wanted to make in light of the interpretation that was given.

From what I can see, Mr. Speaker (and I am not asking for any ruling on this at all), with the new interpretation of what "in 1999" means, and in view of the fact that the motion that rejected (and I am reading from the amendment to the motion "Rejection of the increase of MLA salaries"), this is not money that is available in the budget at this time.

For the life of me, I don't understand with this motion where the money would be coming from. It seems to me that it is either in anticipation of (as May's said) an estimate being brought in Finance Committee, which means you will have to go back and get it; or it is saying that funds are readily available for $350,000 that can be used to go ahead and pay these people a few months at $100 per month.

Perhaps members will in their rightful manner explain really what this motion is all about. All I really see in this is that what the minister is saying in the motion, that we have the Governor's approval and we are looking at about $356,000 which will give an extra $50 to each veteran or their widow for the whole year in 1999. That is obviously subject to Finance Committee's approval of the full amount. And we do say the full amount. We mean there the full amount of the $356,000.

Now, that same money can't, as I see it, just be used and instead of paying, say, veterans (because it hasn't been appropriated yet), be used to increase $100 for a month or two, or three, or whatever time it is, veterans and indigents and persons over 60 years. This is the point I was making. And I think there is confusion in this area because I know other people interpreted this amending motion differently from what has been put forward by the backbench—by the Opposition rather—who brought it.

I am going to sum up as I see things at this stage. There is a motion that the amendment purports to amend and that motion says 'here is a fund of $356,000 that is needed for paying veterans and their widows $50 a month extra for the whole of 1999.' I have to use the whole of 1999 because the other one only deals with a little part of 1999. And the Government is saying take this by not accepting the allowance that would have come to all 15 MLAs, up to $24,000 per annum. That seems to be equalising the veterans at $250 per month with what has already been approved for the indigents, handicapped persons over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance who will now be getting $250 retrospective to the 1st January 1999.

So the veterans and everyone else receiving assistance in that category are equal. And that makes sense.

Now, the Opposition is saying 'Don't take the $75,000 that's in the budget for the allowance of up to $24,000 per annum for MLAs, and don't touch the right of MLAs to draw another $24,000 a year for their offices, but take $350,000 from the rejection of salaries by MLAs', which was only rejected, . . . rather, the resolution says " BE IT RESOLVED that the proposed increase to all elected members of the Legislative Assembly be not accepted at this time." And we are still waiting to understand what that is because my understanding is that there could be acceptance—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: This is the seventh time that minister has talked about that. At least what I counted. Seven times, Mr. Speaker!

He has been told. When that motion was being moved (and I moved the motion, and it was seconded and supported by members on this side) we told them "at this time" means now. We were rejecting it. That's what it means. He can twist the English language—he's a lawyer! That's what he's paid sometimes to do; and that's what he's doing right now. You're not paid in here to twist the English language.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, when that question was asked by the Minister for Community Affairs, the First Elected Member for West Bay replied, "You're a lawyer, you should know," or words to that effect. I am now giving the lawyer's interpretation—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: The minister has quoted something that he says I said. Maybe that's what I said, but I know that I also said that we were rejecting it. What does "reject" mean?

The Speaker: Please, let us get on with the debate.

Please continue, honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I have surely every right. I am now being stopped when I put an interpretation on what it appears to me to be. I surely have a right to do that. Everyone in here has been interpreting as they wish. I am saying that what the motion said is "that it be not accepted at this time." I understand that to be what it says—that the salary is not accepted at this time . . . but at a later time, it might be accepted. That's my interpretation.

Now, whether that is the interpretation of the First Elected Member for West Bay or not, my question is, Why are the words "at this time" in this if they have no meaning?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I hope it's a point of order this time.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Yes.

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order First Elected Member for West Bay.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: This is going to be the last time that I interrupt because it is obvious that that minister has nothing more to say and every time we interrupt he brings in some other aspect. That's exactly what he's doing. We told him we were rejecting it. Isn't that plain enough?

That's why they are hot—because that $40,000 is not there for them now.

The Speaker: What he's talking about is what is in the motion, and I think that's what is being debated.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, anybody can take the language and twist it around. We rejected it. We all voted against it. What more can I say, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Please continue Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

[Some Members: Ohhhh!]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I am going to spend another two minutes on this and I am going to get off.

[Members' laughter]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Anyone looking at this with a common sense approach would read it to say, if it is that the salaries are rejected forever and ever, what the motion would have said would be 'increase to all elected members of the Legislative Assembly be not accepted, full stop! Now, we don't have to be a lawyer to know that when something is added after, it has a meaning.

[Some Members: Ohhhh!]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I am just saying—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Do you know what he said to me Monday evening? If I had 10% of his sense . . . that I didn't have enough sense to take off those two words.

The Speaker: That's not a point of order. Please continue.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: What I said then was in reply to a remark from across the floor.

Nothing hurts like the truth. This is what is happening now, because I can't finish even a few sentences before I have people on their feet.

Now, I can't even remember where I was! And this is probably the object of these interjections. What I am saying in relation to the motion is that it seems to me that the money from the MLA salaries—which has been rejected—and as you rightly said a bit earlier, Mr. Speaker, obviously must have gone back into the general fund at this stage. How in the world that is now going to be resurrected to support the amendment to the motion I don't understand.

It seems to me that the amendment boils down to the fact that there is $350,000 needed to pay veterans $50 more per month. And the $350,000 for the MLA salaries has gone somewhere else in the general fund . . . but in any event it would have been necessary to go back to Finance Committee to get that money. And this motion, I am told, does not anticipate estimates.

I submit that the amending motion is down to a stage where the only thing I see as an issue has to do with the members of this honourable House giving up an allowance of up to $24,000 per annum that could be used for funding offices for the MLAs. And, in summary, I also mentioned that for many years the town halls, civic centres, and other public buildings had been used for members to see their constituents. So it seems to me that it is spending a lot of the public's money unnecessarily—in this case up to $360,000 per annum—and it would be pushing MLA salaries up into $90,000, together with the allowance. And, really, it's a matter of putting country before self. That's what it boils down to.

I really wonder where all of the courageous words when the MLAs gave up their salary increases earlier on have all disappeared to. We really find that the heat over this motion doesn't come from what the veterans are going to get, but from whether Members of the Legislative Assembly are going to draw their fat salaries as well as the increase of the allowance of $24,000.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, one member is asking me if I am not ashamed of myself. If I were voting to keep the $24,000 a year allowance, then I would be. But I am not.

I can say to my people and my country that I rejected the increase in salaries. And I am rejecting $24,000 which could cost the public of this country up to another $360,000 a year which has to come from the people—including the poor people out there—not just from a specific area.

That is really the thrust of this. It really does not come down to veterans, widows, or indigents, but to that dollar—the money, the allowance that is being given up at this time. It is very simple, Mr. Speaker. It's a choice between country and self. Conscious-wise, does one take this heavy amount when one can go into the civic centres and town halls, or does one reject it and save one's dignity that the Legislative Assembly got from rejecting the salary increase?

Is the government of this country looking after the country? We rejected the up to $24,000 per annum allowance that. . . .

[Inaudible interjections]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I can't even concentrate on what I am saying any more. There are so many rumblings. And you know all of this stuff that was said about letting your conscience be your guide and all these things—

[General uproar]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: With conscience one doesn't take from the poor people who are paying these different duties in to pay for this allowance.

The last thing I would like to stress . . . well, if you would just leave me alone, I could try to finish, but all in all I believe that more time has been wasted on interruptions than my speaking. I am certain of that.

I missed what I was even going to say there—

[Some Members: Ohhhh!]

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I will have to look at my papers to get my train of thought back. Just leave me five minutes, sir, and I can finish. If I can just get five straight minutes without too much rumbling.

I know I must be hitting tender spots when there is that much rumbling on the other side.

[General uproar]

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: So, it's not a question of any allegations that were made. The vote here is a very simple one: Are members of this House prepared to give back to the public up to $24,000 per annum, a total of $360,000 per annum, or are they prepared to let the public pay that which, with the increase in salary, will move up to $92,000 per annum for MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Would members like to take the afternoon break? We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.30 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.06 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues on the amendment to Government Motion No. 1/99. Does any other member wish to speak?

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I had made a decision within myself to try to stay out of this particular debate, the reason being that I had the feeling that there were obvious examples that we were not doing what was in the best interests of our country in terms of the way in which the motion was presented in its original form. Also, I had some reservations in regard to the amendment.

Money is not always the issue. Money is but energy. When we get into the dollar and cents argument so that people will make decisions based upon the amount of money which is being paid as a way of deciding upon the sincerity of individuals, I think we begin to cause the people the opportunity to grasp the whole essence of the reason we are here.

We are here in this Legislative Assembly to do as best we can do to improve the conditions within our country. We do not always improve the conditions within our country by denying ourselves the very tools we need to work to improve the conditions within our country. The issue in regard to the salaries of MLAs is the apparent selfishness, or lack of selfishness on the part of members. I am not going to get up and call anyone selfish. I am not going to tell anybody that they should take money, or that they shouldn't take money in cases where they believe it would assist them in doing their jobs. Although I might want to keep $10 in my pocket, if I find a need to spend the $10, that's what the $10 is there for. So in not spending the $10 when the need is there, I am an idiot because I missed the real essence of why the money is there.

When our activities, like the activities of civil servants, cause a charge to the Treasury of the Cayman Islands, it is not negative by virtue of the fact that it is a charge on the Treasury of the Cayman Islands. It is only negative when the performance, the result, does not enhance the general good. For a long time I have advocated the whole aspect of Members of the Legislative Assembly being employed with that particular profession on a full time basis. Obviously, if I am advocating that particular concept, I would also have to be in support of Members of the Legislative Assembly having an office in order to practice that profession, in order to carry out those duties to their constituents.

I have had two year's experience in doing just that. And in those two years I believe that my constituency is better off. I believe that I am better off. I believe that I have been empowered as a result of this relationship to carry out my function. So, when I am paid the people get more results from my deliberations and my actions. This is possible as a result of the interaction between my constituents and me, which is made possible by my maintaining an MLA office which is specifically dedicated to the purpose of serving my constituents.

Of course, I need to apologise to my constituents for the fact that I am never there anymore, because I am always here in the Legislative Assembly discussing such issues. But, on the whole, I find it a little bit strange that we have to deal with this particular motion and the amendment to the motion. And I am speaking to the amendment, since the amendment is the only way the MLAs will be able to apply for subsidy for their offices I have to speak to the merits of the amendment. It is in the amendment that the request to continue the subsidy, or to carry out this particular promise made in Finance Committee, is composed.

I am saying that we have to look at the whole concept of MLAs being encouraged to look at their jobs and their responsibilities as full time responsibilities that should be separated from their other business and professional interests. We see from the Register of Interests where we as a group of people over a period have gone about trying to separate our private business professional interests from our interests and responsibilities as Members of the Legislative Assembly. I believe that now encompasses us having a fixed place away from our business or our professions where we can attend to the constituent's business.

The amendment tries to maintain this amount of money for MLA offices because the motion was brought basically by the government ministers that do have access to government premises on a full time basis. Being in the Glass House, the Treasury, the country is spending money on them as well. They are enjoying the air-conditioning that the country pays for; they are enjoying the computers, they are enjoying the telephones; they are enjoying all of these things, and the country pays for it. They do not pay for it by way of their private pockets. So, they have all this, including staff that works there to assist them in serving the public and becoming more professional.

It would be unfair to compare a minister's productivity with the productivity of a member of the backbench simply because the tools that are available to a government minister are so much more superior than the tools that are available to a back-bench MLA. Yet, the public has great expectation by way of what they believe we should do for them and what they believe we should be capable of doing for them on a day to day basis.

In order to fulfill this public expectation, in order to enhance the quality of debate and deliberations, in order to give government the possibility to have a much more informed basis for policy, it is for the government's good and the good of the country that the government understands that the functioning of individual MLAs in their constituency will enhance the functioning of government overall.

To put any kind of handicap might be okay politically, but in the long run, we will be jeopardising the country's health. If we don't take the right medicine, if we don't eat the right food we may be saving money, but we are jeopardising the body. It's just like if we don't do what's right politically to enhance the way in which our democratic process functions in, we are defeating the very purpose, and we are destroying the body politic.

It is to enhance the body politic that I set up my individual office because there were no offices available for the four elected representatives of the district of George Town in 1996. There was none in 1997, and in 1998 I understand that two other members on the backbench from George Town were able to get some office accommodation going. But the concern is something we should share because if we don't have that common denominator, if we decrease that, how we function will begin to deteriorate. We have to maintain standards by paying a particular cost like any organisation has to maintain standards by incurring a certain cost. We are not being unreasonable.

In regard to the arguments made by certain members of government as to how much it would cost the country, the $350,000, that is what it could potentially cost the country, but that is not actual, Mr. Speaker. No Member of the Executive Council, the five members, would actually be putting in those claims because they are occupied as full time members of the government and they are provided with offices already that are paid for by the people. So it seems to me that here would be a contradiction. Their offices are already paid for by the people so to say that 15 people would be applying for the subsidy is an unreasonable argument because they already have offices. We are talking about people who don't have any type of office accommodation separate from their individual employment or business.

I think that we need to come to some conclusion regarding this situation that will help to resolve this particular conflict without our accusing one another and seeing the benefits of MLAs being encouraged to have their own offices; and see the disadvantage if this were not supported and encouraged at a time that government itself brags of a surplus.

As I said, it has not been easy for me to take up a position because I certainly do not want to deprive the Opposition of the possibility to be six members. I don't want to deprive the Government of the possibility to have their situation. But as somebody who is looking at this situation from an in between point of view, as somebody who is trying to look at it from a more neutral point of view, I believe that the subsidy to the MLAs who need subsidy should be allowed.

I believe that there should be an increase to the veterans and the disabled and indigent persons, and the handicapped persons, and I think that enough people have spoken about the fact that this should happen because everybody understands that politically it sounds good. And if you are on the side of the underdog in situations like this it will be a good vote attraction.

I am a little bit concerned about the amendment in the sense that the amendment jumps from the $50 to $100 in that I am not sure to what extent this might be an attempt by the backbench, or the Opposition, to out-stage the Government in regard to their proposal in terms of what the increase should be.

That being what it is, let me say that if they are going to reach the amount of $400 by the year 2000, it might be a rational consideration to think that if it went up $100 now and $100 next year it would be better than if it went up $50 now and then have to go up $150 next year. Maybe it's best that we begin to bite the bullet at this particular time. The intention of raising this amount of money to $400 was something that was already in a substantive motion brought by the First Elected Member for West Bay and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

I remember specifically that we all debated that particular motion with enthusiasm because everybody was joyful that we were at one accord in regard to our social responsibilities to persons who were handicapped and indigent, and elderly, who had paid their dues to our society. Let us say that we have some kind of agreement in regard to the fact that all of us are responsible, socially, to these particular groups of people, that nobody wants to short-change them—not the Government, not the members of the Opposition, not me. We would like to see them get whatever it is that the Government can afford to give them. But I would not like to see Members of the Legislative Assembly who have commitments to their constituents be deprived of the opportunity of helping to finance their offices by way of applying for this subsidy.

There is just one point that I would like to mention before I conclude. The decision was made in Finance Committee to pay up to $75,000. And there was an agreement that if additional money was needed that the Chief Secretary would come back here with a supplementary request and he nodded his head and agreed that this could happen. So what we had was $75,000, the kick-off amount, to get this thing rolling, and it was supposed to start being paid to MLAs as soon as Finance Committee had concluded. So we were to have been paid already. And we have not been paid the subsidy. At some particular point, I would like to know where the authority came from for somebody not to do what was in Finance Committee's records that should be done. Whether or not the Government was bringing a motion that would possibly negate this, there was no guarantee that the Government's motion would succeed.

The Government also has in its numbers members of the backbench who are using MLA facilities. For instance, the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town is using the civic centre there. And again we get to the discrepancy why should certain district representatives have access to the civic centres rent free when we have to go in George Town in a high rent district and pay.

Would it be fair for another backbencher, who is using a civic centre for instance, to vote along with the Government to deprive me of something that she has? I would assume that it wouldn't be logical. Therefore, I would believe that that honourable member would vote along with me, and that the Government Motion would become weaker and weaker, and would not succeed. When one gets away from the politics and one looks at the rationale behind this, if one looks at the fact that the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town is using a civic centre that is Government's, and it is happening in West Bay, North Side, and in Cayman Brac. The only place where it's not happening is the district of George Town.

We have no civic centre in George Town. We have a town hall that's used as a courthouse. And when it's not used as a courthouse, it's used as a church hall and all other things. But the need of a community where you have over 16,000 people living is great. So, why would the Government bring a motion that would tie these two things together—if I take the subsidy I am denying an older person? If I take the subsidy I am denying a veteran?

My father was a veteran, and my mother therefore receives money as a widow of a veteran. But, at the same time my office is located in her building. If I don't pay her rent then she is being deprived too. So somebody is being deprived. It is not that I am saying that we should not increase the veterans, I am saying we should. But we should also realise that at this particular time we have enough funds available to us to be able to assist those individual MLAs who need the assistance with their offices. And that number is not 15. It is not $350,000. If anything, since we have only approved $75,000 it goes to show that we were thinking below the $100,000, or at least the $100,000 or $150,000; but nowhere in the vicinity of what was being suggested by the Minister for Education.

We need for the people to know that what is being asked for here is just the tools to do the job. That is not unfair and that is not unreasonable. Nobody should politically try to make it seem as if persons who would like to be assisted in serving their constituents are trying to be unreasonable.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to support this amendment because of the fact that the amendment attempts to retain that status quo which was decided upon in Finance Committee. I would like to say that it's an awkward position in regard to this particular amendment because we have three Official Members who sit in offices at the Glass House financed by the people. I am quite sure that if they are allowed to put on their political caps that they would think it was not a good thing at this particular point to eliminate that particular subsidy that was made in a political forum by politicians, by the only people with the power and authority to raise revenue and to allocate money for them to be able to come to another forum where a different interest group is and simply negate what we feel is necessary for the enhancement of our role.

I believe that at this particular point if we find that the denial of this fund will encroach on our ability to do our jobs as representatives of the people and we are the ones the, 15 of us, with the power to raise revenue and allocate money, we might find that this might be an odd Constitutional predicament. Although they are by collective responsibility at liberty to vote along with the Executive Council, whatever decision is made in Executive Council is made under the chairmanship of His Excellency the Governor. And we need to check again.

The Government needs to adopt a slightly different position because this particular motion seems too political because it is cutting off one arm of Government. It is cutting off the backbench arm.

What I am saying is that we don't need to find ourselves in a position where we do not have the ability to function as a collective group. Thank you.

GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99

INCREASE OF FINANCIAL GRANT TO VOLUNTEER
EX-SERVICEMEN AND THEIR WIDOWS

AMENDMENT NO. 1

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: I rise in support of the amendment. This amendment seeks to put all of the financial assistance to the elderly, the indigent, other persons in need, handicapped persons, veterans, under what we had agreed in July of last year. While seconding this amendment, it covers what the motion we passed in July last year covered. I said that while debating the substantive motion.

While I could not be here yesterday afternoon, at least one other member, the Fourth Elected Member for George Town, understood the same thing, and he mentioned it in his debate. If the government was genuine it would have taken the steps necessary from last year and put it in its first budget in November. And, if government were as genuine and concerned as the Minister for Education and the mover of the motion said about caring for these kinds of people and caring for the veterans, recognising what the veterans did, then they would have done that.

I point out again that government was not concerned, for whatever reason. Whether it was a mistake or organised deliberately that way, government did not put in place those funds—funds they all agreed to on a very high note, I should say, in July.

What amazed me most was when I rose on a point of order during the minister's [of Education] debate on the amendment yesterday to point out that they had not put the funds in place. He angrily retorted that they couldn't put them in place because we hadn't voted the budget. Mind you, they had a chance at it twice—two budgets!

I knew that he was confused in his debate. Whether that was also by design I don't know, but he was confused because practically all of the Executive Council rose to their feet to say, 'You guys on the backbench stopped us from getting it done,' that is, putting the old people's benefit in place for January. And they said that we had asked so many questions on the budget. Therefore, it came over to this side.

But, oh what tangled webs they weave when they first practice to deceive, because the fact is that the recurrent expenditure for this country was passed in November. Can they deny that? Can the Minister for Education deny it?

Yesterday he denied it. And I would like him to apologise to the House for so angrily saying that I was telling the House a lie when I said that they had the funds. He should apologise to this House, to us his colleagues, and he should apologise to the county.

You can fool some of the people some of the time, you can even fool some of the people all of the time; but you can't fool all of the people all of the time. The point is that if they were as genuine, and if they were not playing dirty politics, if they were caring about these people they would have put it in place. They said it was there. I don't know because there are so many funds. But I do take the word of the Minister of Health who said (when I questioned him during the raise) that they would do the increase in February. I do take his word. So, it has happened.

But for them to say that it couldn't be done because we didn't vote the funds is deliberately misleading the House, and in turn the country.

They voted for the Social Services budget on 22 December—check the Hansards—when most of the recurrent expenditure was voted on. The only two that were not voted on were the Ministry of Community Affairs and the Ministry of Agriculture as both ministers were not here for whatever reasons. Those were the only two that were not voted on. The rest of them were [voted on] in December. I hope that clears that point up.

While no one is quarrelling with the increase, I hope that they are not quarrelling with our suggestion because our suggestion makes the situation better for the persons whom they say they want to give it to. I would hope that they are not quarrelling about that. The issue at hand can only be one thing, Mr. Speaker, and that is the subsidy and Government's attempt to move us to a position where we cannot be as effective as they are.

Most of the time we can't be because we don't have the kind of support staff they have by the very nature of their being in Executive Council. That would go for any person. But the issue can only be the amount that was proposed to be given to us, which we had voted on in December last year for our offices.

Now, the Minister of Education said that they are giving up their share of the subsidy for the sake of the country. Mr. Speaker, I really have to laugh. I can hear when the Minister of Education is serious and when he is not and just playing politics. That is exactly what he was doing yesterday. He himself was not even convinced by what he was saying. They can afford to give it up because they already have offices—we don't!

At this point in our development when there are so many problems in our country we need to have the wherewithal, as the Fourth Elected Member for George Town said, the basic tools to do the job. As I pointed out, there are numerous problems facing the country. And you yourself Mr. Speaker, as an elected representative, face them in your constituency.

I suspect that while your constituency is in Cayman Brac when you are here in Cayman you are approached by people of this island with their problems. So, the Speaker is quite aware of what I am talking about.

We need to have a place where we can meet. And it's not a matter of plush offices, as the Minister for Education tried to impute yesterday.

As I said, I have a place already rented (and I will deal with that some other time). It is no plush office. I went out and bought the furniture so that I could operate. I bought used furniture. But with all the problems we are facing entering the year 2000, the so-called new millennium, we can no longer be expected to deal with these problems on our front porches or in our living rooms.

The point must be made in connection with that that there are people who have regard for our private lives who refuse to come to our homes for their needs. And if they don't see us at a funeral, a wedding, or somewhere on the street by the post office, they are left unattended because they refuse to come to our homes.

It is imperative also because some members do not live in their constituencies, and having an office with a set schedule would assure that all the people have access to all members. So, it is imperative that we get offices. They do not need to be plush offices. Certainly not! Just a decent place where our constituents can come and talk to us in private without the whole world knowing their business, without children running up and down, or at our homes with people calling on the telephone and we can't concentrate on what we are dealing with. That is why we need it.

Now, the Minister of Education got on to this thing about the salary as against the subsidy. That was the tenor of his whole debate, trying to justify why one was needed as against the other, and trying to show them as the same sometimes. He said that there is no difference between getting for our offices and the pay increase. Mr. Speaker, it is a bunch of nonsense. There is a difference.

What we would be getting for our offices is less than what our salary would have been if we had gotten the raise. Under the plan for the pay increase members not in Executive Council would have been paid $84,000, plus the subsidy, which would have put us over $98,000 per year, or around there.

When I debated the motion to reject the pay increase I said that one of the reasons why we couldn't accept the increase was because we had all agreed on the subsidy already, and that the country could not take any more expense. If we had to tax people, or borrow money to build the roads and schools and everything else that everybody wants, I said we couldn't expect the two because we had already agreed first on the subsidy.

Nobody—not even those on Executive Council—fought against the subsidy at the time. But it seems to me that the government would have been prepared to go with both the subsidy and the pay increase which, if they had taken the pay increase, would have brought their salaries up to $120,000 per year—plus the subsidy, which he says is up to $24,000. That would have given them over $144,000 per year!

So, he doesn't have to come here and blow hot and cold saying we were not looking out for the country. I contend that we were looking out for the country when we said "no" to one, and had agreed a long time before that on the subsidy for our offices. Nobody is going to put it in his or her pocket. If they believe that, then all they have to do is see that the cost to do things . . . and that part of his debate was the other thing. I trust that he will not get into these accusations of people putting any kind of subsidy or anything else in his or her pocket again because then things will get really rough.

What a roundabout debate this has been. I have to say that there wouldn't be so much to clear up if the Minister of Education hadn't tried to impute so many things. He said that we are making an objection because of the office subsidy. That is true, because we said from June last year that we supported all the people in need—the veterans, the elderly, and the handicapped—everybody in need. We have shown also where the government can get the funds—and more—to fund the financial assistance to the veterans, the elderly and the handicapped. And just let me point out where I think they could find it: For official travel (I guess that's called head 02-018) there is $1,585,511! That's a lot of money for official travel. A lot! I don't know where they are going to be going or what they are going to be doing, or who they are bringing here or who they are sending somewhere else, but that is a lot of dinero!

Under head 07-019—hospitality, there is $171,503. That's a lot of money for hospitality. Under head 07-045, miscellaneous visits, and entertainment there is a sum of $118,480. I know that we are having several conferences, and I don't know if that is where the money is, but still you could easily get $75,000.

Now, they have this thing called Year 2000 Project (whatever that is), head 07-106, $595,170. Then they have something here under head 07-899 for $74,500, miscellaneous it is called.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: If the honourable member is saying that his motion is one in which it will have to go back, and these funds are expected to fund it, I think he gets caught under the sections of the Constitution and the Standing Orders, the one referred to yesterday, because as I understood it they had put up a specific source of funding.

The Speaker: I listened to what he has said, but I think he is only making suggestions. I don't think he is actually pointing out that this is where it should come from.

Am I not correct, First Elected Member for West Bay? You are making suggestions?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: I am saying that if government was as caring and as genuine as they say they are, then they could find it in one of those heads because there is a lot of money in those heads.

The Speaker: They are only suggestions, you are not saying that is where it should come from?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: No, because they are the government. They can find it. They have the right to put it there.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, please continue.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

If we go through this budget and the other budget—the two budgets!—we will find a tremendous amount of money. If they were as caring and as genuine—those are the two words they used "caring" and "genuine"—as they said about the poor veterans and the poor everybody else, then they could have found it from July last year. Why wait until now?

In my opinion, there was no intention to give it or it would have been done in January.

The reason why they have come back is to say 'We're gonna fix you!' That is their attitude, 'We're gonna fix you! You didn't vote for our salary, now you can't have an office. We're gonna fix you! We're going to get you out because we are going to make you ineffective.' That's what they are saying.

As I said, funds are all over the place there. And if the government would only prioritise, they would have funds. If this were a priority then they would have the funds; and if they loved the veterans and others as much as they are saying then the money would have gone into the budget.

The other thing they are doing is trying to grab credit after realising how much they have failed. They are trying to grab the credit because we forced them into keeping a campaign promise. I am satisfied that the people of this country—whom I credit as having a lot of common sense—and members of this House are aware at all times of who is genuine and who is not. They know the battle I went through to get benefits for the elderly and the veterans and others.

One person made reference to the motion brought by the late Mr. Haig Bodden. But the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town seconded it. You see, Mr. Speaker, we must always be gracious enough to say when somebody has done something good. No motion, except one brought by government, can come here without a seconder. The late Mr. Haig Bodden brought the motion. But the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town seconded it.

And, Mr. Speaker, being the minister at the time what did I do? I didn't just look at the people who went to Trinidad; I looked at those who served in Bermuda, in the battlefield in Europe and those who served elsewhere around here in the Homeguard. All of those people were included.

I will say no more than to say that I think I did the right thing. I had other people to support me, of course, but it wasn't easy. And if I weren't the type of person who was strong enough to stand up, a lot of it wouldn't have gone through. But that is for the history books. Perhaps one of these days we will write our autobiographies and it will be for history.

I believe that this amendment is in order. It is seeking to do what we agreed in the National Team campaign in 1996. It reinforces what we did in July with that motion which covered it. And it's in the Hansards where I talked about it. That's the last point I will make.

If somehow they say it was not explicitly written down in the motion in July of 1998, then it was included specifically by debating it. And, Mr. Speaker, the first thing a government does is check the debate to see the intention of members. Members intended for veterans to be included.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I rise to offer my support to the amendment to Government Motion No. 1/99, to Increase the monthly grant to the veterans, indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age who qualify for financial assistance to three hundred Cayman Islands' dollars in 1999 and, funds being available, to four hundred Cayman Islands' dollars in the year 2000.

Before I get into my very short contribution, I personally stand as a Member of this Parliament to request, that the signification of the Governor under Standing Order 24(2) and (3) be read into the Hansards of the Legislative Assembly minutes.

The more I listened to my very good friend yesterday, the Minister of Education—with whom I worked very closely for six years . . . he was totally confused on the amendment. Therefore, I believe that the motion (No. 1) was also a surprise to him. This is my reason for requesting that the Governor's signification be placed into the Hansards of Parliament. We do not need to suspend Parliament for such a thing to take place; it can be done prior to the winding up.

I would like to deal with the honourable minister's [of Education] $24,000 additional pay to members of the Legislative Assembly. I was totally surprised that he would take the attitude that each of us would be receiving $24,000 additional, when Mr. Donovan Ebanks, the Deputy Chief Secretary, barely prepared an estimate—which the minister read and laid on the Table of this House.

Mr. Ebanks' estimate was based on rent for 400 square feet in George Town. I will deal with the district of North Side. Certainly, as Mr. Ebanks recommended, members using government facilities would work some sort of a deal with government so that government would become the landlord of those members.

I am certain it would not cost $850 in the district of North Side. The North Side MLA office is already furnished so we can deduct the $150. In my discussions with Mr. Ebanks, I made it clear that North Side would not need secretarial service, as I am quite capable of typing a letter for my constituents. I do so now. We would delete the $700 for the MLA office in the district of North Side. Saying that each MLA would be receiving $2,000 is misleading Parliament and the country.

I was totally shocked that government was not prepared to accept the amendment to leave the $75,000 to assist four members of the Legislative Assembly. There are only four members who do not have a facility where they can meet their constituents. And on Executive Council sit three ministers with such facilities in their districts who are prepared to take away the offices from the three representatives in George Town and the one in West Bay.

I, for one, do not believe that Government Motion No. 1/99 was brought out of concern for veterans. It was deliberately brought out of spite because the MLA salary was voted down. The Minister for Education—

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I am going to take a point of order on this, sir.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: The member is misleading the House. She is saying that this motion was brought out of spite. That's incorrect. And I am asking that either she withdraw it or carry on in another area.

The Speaker: Honourable member, how did you state that? Did you say it was your opinion? Or did you state it as fact?

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, it is my belief, as a member of this Parliament that Government Motion No. 1/99 was not brought out of concern for veterans. It was brought out of spite because a motion was brought by the backbench to vote down MLA salary increases.

The Speaker: It's her opinion. That's not a point of order.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: She didn't say in her opinion, she said her "belief", sir, and that has to be supported by something. With respect, I would ask that either she moves on or takes it back.

[Some Members: "No!"]

The Speaker: Please continue, Member for North Side.

[Some Members: "Good!"]

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Much was said yesterday by that honourable minister concerning the second resolve of the amendment about the savings of CI$350,000 on the increase to MLAs. If I remember correctly, he stated that those funds would now have gone back to the Treasury. That totally baffles me because those funds were supposed to have been realised by savings in telephones, telexes, and other services in government.

Either telephones and telexes were inflated in the 1999 budget to cover the increases, or they should still be in the budget. So, those funds should still be savings, as this amendment refers to the $350,000, to assist with the increases.

The Speaker: May I interrupt you for just one minute?

Are you referring to what I said, or to what another member said?

Mrs. Edna Moyle: No, Mr. Speaker, to the honourable Minister of Education.

The Speaker: Okay, please continue, because what I said was that the funds were allocated here for the salary. The savings made would then in turn go back to general revenue to be spent for other purposes.

I realise you are saying that the savings were to be realised, but the allocation for the expenditure of those funds was going in a different direction, not for the purpose . . . That is the way I explained myself, and I want to make that very clear to the listening public and to honourable members here.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, if I may say, I concurred and moved on with your position.

The Speaker: Please continue.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, do you know what really makes me smile in this Parliament? The Honourable Minister of Education gets up to make such remarks when I am speaking, then he looks across and winks his eye at me.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: That honourable minister also mentioned that famous [Government] Motion 3/90. But if we are going to ask the honourable official members of this Parliament to vote on Government Motion No. 1/99 to delete funds approved by the Finance Committee we are no different than Government Motion 3/90!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Edna Moyle: And the Governor must be asked to relieve these three gentlemen from voting on that particular resolution in Government Motion No. 1/99.

There are so many places in the budget, as the First Elected Member for West Bay said earlier, where funds could be found for the veterans' increase, for the increase to the indigents and persons over 60 in need of financial assistance, that it is not funny. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I am going to follow the line of the First Elected Member for West Bay with similar suggestions.

When we look through the 1999 budget on official travel, we have five ministries that have a total of $306,312 for official travel alone. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning has $94,730 alone. Let it be country before self!

The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Environment, Communications, and Natural Resources has $52,270. The lowest of these is the Minister for Health, with $49,000.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, has $53,597. The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport, and Works has $56,000.

Is this motion really out of concern for the veterans? It will have to be proven to me that it is out of concern because the veterans have called and asked me if government would be in a position to give them an increase. My answer has always been—and it hasn't been since the 1999 budget, it was before—"I am certain that when the government is in a financial position to afford it, it will." Now they are calling and saying that they appreciate the government wanting to increase the amount that has been given to them, but they feel it is now being used as a political football to remove the $75,000 from members—particularly the four members who do not have a facility.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Exactly!

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I think that this country has moved beyond playing politics with the future of our people.

When I look at the newspaper and see the number of crimes being committed in these islands, we would be better off in this Parliament today discussing solutions to those crimes, rather than sitting here dealing with a motion which, in my opinion, is political.

This country is no longer the Cayman Islands that we once knew, and if we are not prepared as Members of Parliament to deal with the country rather than dealing with particular issues that affect our re-election, doom will be preached in these islands.

If I recall [Private Member's] Motion No. 8/98 read "Increase of Financial Assistance to the Elderly, Handicapped and Other Persons in Need." Certainly, if we have a motion telling us that veterans are in need because they are in their senior years, to which I agree, and they have little else to live off, which I agree, that motion certainly should have covered them.

The First Elected Member for West Bay covered the veterans in his debate, and had the government really had concern for veterans it would have used Standing Order 67(1) which reads: "If a Member of the government presents a paper setting out the financial requirements of any proposals—(a) for expenditure incurred or likely to be incurred in the course of the current financial year either in respect of a service or of several services for which no provision has been made in the estimates for that year or in respect of further financial provision beyond the total sum already sanctioned for a particular head or sub-head, . . . that paper shall stand referred to the Finance Committee.” There would have been no need to come here and take a measly sum from four members of this Legislative Assembly—the First, Third and Fourth Elected Members for George Town, and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Therefore, I commend the amendment for $75,000 to assist Members of Parliament with an office where they can meet their constituents and to increase the financial assistance to veterans, indigents, handicapped and those over 60 years of age when funds are available. I am almost certain that this amendment will fail, so in my debate on the substantive motion I will add a few more things.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you.

I rise to offer my contribution to the amendment on Government Motion No. 1/99, calling for increase in financial assistance to our volunteer ex-servicemen and their widows.

Let me start by saying that I have never seen a more ill prepared presentation, as far as government is concerned, in my life. If the Minister of Community Development does not understand how these things are done, maybe she should ask somebody. When you are coming to Parliament to ask for the funding of any particular service or facility, it is very important for you to know where the funds are going to come from.

Based on what she identified (and according to the Minister of Education it costs some $700,000 to do so) she found $75,000, which was put in there for our MLA offices in the districts. In my opinion this motion was nothing more than a spiteful act by government to try to get back at the backbench for the motion calling for MLAs not to accept their salary increases at this time.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the elected ministers on Executive Council cannot appreciate the value of a district office. They don't! Let me ask how many of them recently made themselves available on a personal basis at the district level at a MLA office? When was the last time? Mr. Speaker, some of them have never been to a MLA office in the district.

What is sad is that they sit in their ivory palaces at the Glass House where people don't have access to them. People are intimidated by the thought of going to the Glass House to talk with anyone. And the comments that I get are that the ministers will tell them to show up at such and such a time and three hours later they are still sitting there because the minister is dodging, or has gone out on some other issue or mission.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: I don't know which of us ministers he is referring to, but everyone knows that my door is open unless I am busy. Anyone can come in there.

The Speaker: [Addressing the Third Elected Member for West Bay] I think you should withdraw “dodging.” That's really not appropriate.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I said that I was aware that some do it.

The Speaker: I don't think that's really an appropriate word. Just say that they have other commitments.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I guess before I'm finished there will be a lot more jumping up.

I had very few comments to make, but if that is the attitude they are going to take, I am going to just take my time and say what I have to say. But I bow to your ruling.

The Speaker: Just say it as “previous commitments.”

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: In my opinion, Mr. Speaker. But not only in my opinion, it is a fact!

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. He already made an affirmative statement, which was not qualified by conditions subsequent that it was his opinion. I humbly submit that he must withdraw or apologise for the first section and then move on to his opinion. Certainly, this minister does not dodge any responsibility.

The Speaker: [addressing the Third Elected Member for West Bay] I have asked you just to withdraw “dodging.” That's the word I do not feel is appropriate.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker—

The Speaker: Kindly withdraw that and continue.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I thank you, sir.

[Addressing the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture] I really didn't understand half of what you said. I guess that's a lawyer's training—

The Speaker: I am talking to you, not the . . . Please.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: But, Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make—

The Speaker: I am not asking you what point you are trying to make. I asked you to withdraw the word “dodging.”

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word “dodging” if that makes them comfortable.

The Speaker: I thank you. Please continue.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: But the point that I am trying to make is that this motion is not against MLAs; it is against the district constituents having access to their elected representatives. That’s what it is all about!

It doesn’t matter to me whether or not they take the $75,000 and spend it on ex-servicemen because I have a genuine interest in the welfare of my people. At my own expense, or through grants and favours from constituents, I was able, or we were able to furnish our office in West Bay. And since 1992, I have been paying, like the other members, out of my own pocket to make sure that it was staffed. So, it’s not going to affect me in any way.

But, like I said, in my opinion this motion was nothing more than a spiteful act of retaliation.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: If there was such a genuine concern about our veterans why is it that the increase was not in the two budgets that were presented since November 1998?

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Why not?

This is nothing more than an afterthought. That’s all it is. And do you know why? I don’t know whom they got, but they had someone do a poll recently. And the poll is showing that they need something to boost their popularity!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Oh-oh.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Okay? They got the $26 million in borrowing; they have something like $35 million in capital works; $43 million in capital works, . . . now, if they can get a little bit of credit for this motion calling for a $50 increase to ex-servicemen, maybe it will bring them back. It’s going to take more than this gesture to save that Executive Council!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Oh-oh.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: I had a look at Standing Order 41, and I tell you what, after listening to the Minister of Education yesterday, if that wasn’t cited I don’t think any one of us has any concern about it being used on us because that gentleman took two and one half hours and all he did was repeat himself over, and over, and over again. And the message that he tried to get across to the listening public was that we, the elected representatives in this House, are a bunch of thieves.

Like I said, it really doesn’t matter to me if government decides to make a subsidy or allowance available. If it wants to have those cheques made payable directly to the landlord, or payable directly to the office personnel or whatever, I don’t have a problem with that. I really don’t. But this whole issue is nothing more than a spiteful act as far as government is concerned.

I believe that the amendment to the motion is very reasonable. It makes sense. It allows the government to achieve what it says it is so genuinely interested in achieving—that is, providing a little increase to the veterans. But I cannot support the idea of the removal of the office allowance for the MLAs at the district level. I cannot support that in all good conscience. What government needs to be very careful about is coming across as being unfair.

Like I said, they sit in their ivory palaces surrounded by staff. They are surrounded with the most modern facilities and equipment. All they have to do is say it and it’s done. And here we are, MLAs in the districts where the people come to have their grievances addressed, and we don’t have anything. Then we have to dip into our own pockets to make sure that somebody is there to staff the office so that when people arrive they have somebody to talk to. It’s not right at all. It’s spiteful; it’s very, very spiteful.

In my opinion, this motion was totally unnecessary. I think the Member for North Side mentioned [Private Member’s] Motion No. 8/98 (moved by the First Elected Member for West Bay and seconded by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town), entitled “Increase of financial assistance to the elderly, handicapped and other persons in need.” The first “Whereas” in that motion says, “WHEREAS the government promised in the 1996 Election Campaign to increase the financial assistance to the elderly, the handicapped and others in need;” who are the “others?” It has to include veterans.

And even in his contribution to the motion the First Elected Member for West Bay mentioned those who had given their time and service in protecting this country, and that they must be included in the proposed increase.

When you don’t have any needs, it is very difficult to appreciate when someone does. Let me tell you that that little $250 or $300 per month means a great deal to our elderly, our handicapped, and our veterans. What are we saying? Move it from $250 per month to $300, which is fair. Here we were talking about some 38% or 39% increase on some salaries, and here you find it difficult to give someone a $100 increase on a monthly basis? Especially people who made a contribution.

What I don’t understand is (and I am hoping that it is not by her own doing) that I think in 1997 there was a provision in the budget for renovation of MLA offices. I think it was $20,000. We said, ‘Well, not only Cayman Brac needs it, the other districts need it as well,’ and I think we voted another $50,000. It is my information—and the minister can correct me if it’s not correct—that the money has been spent on her office in Cayman Brac.

I understand it's a multipurpose office where it's going to be used by the Labour Office, a number of different people.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Labour and Sports.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Labour and Sports.

Is she that selfish that she says 'I got mine, now I am going to deprive you of getting yours'?

The Speaker: Will you give way to the honourable minister?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth, and Culture.

POINT OF CLARIFICATION

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and thanks to the honourable member for giving way.

I sort of figured that I would have to clear up this matter because it was imputed on Monday, and I let it fly; then it was reported in the newspapers. I intended to answer it in my response to the substantive motion, but perhaps this is the best time to interject.

If one takes the time to refer to the capital development, one would see that under head 09-202 there was a specific amount for refurbishing and refitting the MLA office at the Creek, Cayman Brac. During the course of discussion, as recorded in the Cayman Islands Standing Finance Committee records, one will see that the discussion ensued about my colleagues in George Town not having an office. A motion was put for the sum to be increased by another $50,000.

Making a long story short, the First Elected Member for West Bay and other members confirmed that the $20,000 was for Cayman Brac. At no time did I take it. I checked this morning, and on 5th May 1998 warrant 3298 for the sum of $50,000 was approved under public works for the MLA offices in Grand Cayman. I did not use any of this money, nor did I request any warrants be done because I, like other members in the districts of Grand Cayman who have offices, fully concurred that the four elected members from George Town should also have their offices.

So, please do not mislead the House. I never have taken anything in my life, and at this stage I am not prepared to take anything sir.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say thanks to the minister for trying to clear up that situation. But I didn't say that she took the $50,000. I didn't say that. I don't know how she could come to that conclusion. I didn't say that.

What is strange is that we voted the extra $50,000 to help our colleagues in George Town and up until now, according to my information, it can't be found. Where did it go? And we have asked, and asked what happened to the money.

Mr. Speaker, that minister has got to stop letting herself be used.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, as hard as one tries to make peace, this minister (sic) has to stop imputing wrong motives.

I have never allowed myself to be used. He cannot speculate. And unless he can put on the Table of this House supplementary and supporting documentation, then I ask him to withdraw it sir.

The Speaker: That's an explanation.

Third Elected Member for West Bay, can you comment on that?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Yes.

Mr. Speaker, she's so confused she called me a minister! Thank you, very much!

Like I said, I feel very strongly about this issue. I really do. I recognise the value of my office in West Bay to my constituents. I am there every Tuesday and Wednesday from 4:00 to 8:00.

The Speaker: Can I just interrupt you for just one moment? What I am really questioning, . . . she said that you made the statement that she was allowing herself to be used. That is what she is asking an explanation of.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I didn't address that.

What I said, and I prefaced my comments when I first stood on my feet by saying that I was hoping that she could not be accused on a personal basis for moving these kinds of motions on her own, but that she was influenced by somebody else. Now, if she is saying that she is not being used by somebody else, then I am sorry she has the kind of attitude to take this kind of action in this House which is so spiteful all by herself.

The Speaker: Honourable member, will you then withdraw that she is being used?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to do that, now that she has clarified that it is her personal action.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please continue Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: The other recommendation, and the amendment to the motion said, "AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the savings realised from the rejection of the increase in MLAs salaries, estimated at three hundred and fifty thousand Cayman Islands' dollars, be utilised to fund the increase and, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 24(2), that these payments be apportioned over a period in 1999 commensurate with the available funds, and that the funds allocated under Head

10-07-109, being a grant for MLAs offices, be not used for this purpose and that the Standing Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount."

The Minister of Education tried to make a big deal out of this. How many times have we seen $100, $1,000 or even $100,000 in the budget for a project that would cost $4 million or $5 million? How many times?

The whole idea behind it, according to the information that I have, is that we have 594 veterans and their spouses who receive this allowance on a monthly basis. Let me tell you how ridiculous the recommendation put forward by government—or on behalf of government by the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth, and Culture—is.

I did some calculations. If you use the $75,000 to help fund this, it means that each one of the veterans and their spouse would receive $126 per year. Per year Mr. Speaker! An increase of $10.50 per month. Do you see how insignificant the MLA office allowance is in regard to funding this very important request?

As I said, all government had to do in accepting this amendment was to say 'At least we have $350,000, let's see where else we can find the balance.' It wouldn't be very difficult to find another $350,000 in a budget of close to $300 million, and they have the power to do it. They can find the money. I am talking about advance accounts. They do it all the time! If they really wanted to do so, they could do it.

Like I said, they really don't have a genuine interest in the ordinary people of this country. They really don't. And I asked for a copy of the Hansard where the minister moved the motion so that I could really see what she had to say. But, like I said, I have never seen such a move on behalf of government in an attempt to confuse people in regard to the correct intention.

Let me close by saying that I am not convinced that government has brought this motion out of a genuine interest in our ex-servicemen. As I said before, they had two attempts in order to include it in the 1999 budget. But, no, after they didn't get their salary increase they said, 'We're going to fix you guys. We are going to spite you by taking away your little MLA office allowance.' But that's not spiting us, that's depriving the constituents of a very comfortable and private access to their elected representatives.

It's very difficult when people have to come to your home to discuss personal issues. A lot of times you are sitting there with your family having a meal and you have to be interrupted. People don't like that. But if people are aware that you have an office in the district, . . . and it should be in the districts. Why should people from West Bay, North Side, or Bodden Town have to come to George Town to see an elected representative? They shouldn't have to. It shows a lack of a genuine concern for the welfare of the people in this country, and nothing short of that.

Rather than depriving the elected representatives of a place where they can meet with their constituents, I challenge the ministers to start getting out in the district MLA offices themselves and make themselves available. I keep hearing the excuse 'Oh, my portfolio (or ministry) is so large.' Mr. Speaker, they don't do any more than we do. They don't! Do you know why? Because they have people around them who support them, making sure that what has to be done is done. If my constituent comes to me and needs a cover letter, I can't run to a secretary and say type this for me. No, I do it myself!

The problem with ExCo is that they are so caught up in their own greatness that they have totally lost touch with what is going on in this country. That's what is wrong with them. That's exactly what the problem is, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that the amendments recommended are sensible and should be accepted. I also believe (and I am going to repeat what a number of members have mentioned) that the official members should have nothing at all to do with this issue. The Minister of Education had an opportunity to remind people of the (should I say?) evilness [Government] Motion 3/90. But what's the difference?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That's right.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: The only way they can push this through is with the support of the three official members. But you know, they all dodge behind this excuse of collective responsibility. It's just an excuse to do what they feel like doing—their dirty work a lot of times, Mr. Speaker.

I am asking you to consider, and if necessary to get permission from His Excellency the Governor that you do it. I think this issue is important enough that this should only be voted upon and decided upon by the elected representatives of this House. The reason why I am saying that is because this issue was addressed in Finance Committee where the official members don't even have a right to be present unless they are called as a witness.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Not even the new Attorney General!

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: And now to bring it back to the House where they can take advantage of the three gentlemen sitting there in order to push through their spiteful acts . . . Mr. Speaker, that's totally unacceptable in my opinion.

I will have more to say on the substantive motion. As I said, I believe that the amendments to the motion are reasonable. I support them and I would urge government to reconsider its position.

Mr. Speaker, you have been here longer than I have, but I saw a previous government take the same kind of attitude. Do you know where they are today? Out in the pasture. They are out in retirement.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Except those that repented!

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Mr. Speaker, there's one whose still here, and he says he's repented. That's why he's still here!

It's not a laughing matter. It's a serious concern because we are talking about the interests of our people being at stake. Access to their elected representatives is a priority. There is no greater priority. There is no greater calling than for an elected representative to be available to his or her constituents.

How can you . . . $75,000?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister for Community Development should be ashamed of herself. Thank you.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.45 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12:15 PM

The Chairman: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) The floor is open to debate, does any other honourable member wish to speak to the amendment.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a short contribution in support of the amendment.

I have to begin with expressing regret that what should be a simple solution has taken off with so much acrimony and adversarial politics because of the seeming intransigence on the part of the government. I am not going to be accusatory, Mr. Speaker, but I want to express my dismay at the lack of maturity among honourable members in this Chamber.

I am not excluding myself in these matters when it comes to important issues. I don't believe that we are doing ourselves a service as a fraternity when we cannot adopt a better approach to settle our differences. And I say this especially to the government whose responsibility I consider it to have handled the situation in a more appropriate and mature manner.

I am not convinced that the motives behind the government motion are pure. If one would take time to read between the lines and listen to the contributions of those members of government who spoke, I believe it is retaliatory to the extent that mention was made of the position taken by the Opposition backbench concerning the withdrawal of the salaries as a result of the evaluation exercise recently undertaken by the civil service.

Now, there is an old adage that says alcohol reveals what sobriety conceals. Certainly, it is not the case of being revealed by any consumption of alcohol in this case. But I would change the adage then to be more appropriate to this forum by saying that frustration reveals what normalcy would conceal.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments, as I see them, are well meaning and deserving of support. I believe that the government has a responsibility to view the amendments with sincerity and seriousness. It is incumbent upon the government to accept the amendments because denying members of the backbench an opportunity to have established offices is also, Mr. Speaker, depriving the government of an avenue in which they would have open to address the concerns of the country and constituents.

The government, by its constitutional and legitimate functions, operates out of the Glass House, as we call it, on Mondays to Fridays between the hours of 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. It is impossible for the government, that being the case, to climb down from those towers and be in touch with the majority of the constituents who have daily needs and concerns and who make representation through the members of the Legislative Assembly, the MLAs, the backbenchers we call them.

Although, when I talk of the backbench I many times use it to mean only those supporters of the government, this time I am broadening the definition to mean all of us who do not sit as members of the Executive Council.

So, for the government to deny the backbench members of the Legislative Assembly this avenue of meeting their constituents means that the government is short-sighted. By such a denial the government is also cutting themselves off from what is going on in the highways and the byways of the country, which, under their employment terms, they would not normally be able to know because they are stationary from Monday to Friday in the Glass House from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

And while it is true that they have weekends, unless they are different human beings from the rest of us and they don't tire, then they cannot adequately address the needs and concerns. Certainly, they cannot let me believe that the government is only limited to the policies that they craft at the Glass House, for I believe those very policies emanate from the needs, wishes, and aspirations of the constituents and the wider community to which they do not normally have access.

Mr. Speaker, the whole business of whether the veterans and indigent persons should get a raise is also addressed in these amendments. I think that it is reasonable, and is appropriately dealt with so the government need not have any concern that we are outmanoeuvring them. I think the credit is enough to be shared equally among all parties.

I find it regrettable to have to make the observation that the honourable minister moving the motion was a little misguided in taking the approach. I have to express dismay also with the position taken by the Leader of Government Business, the Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning. Mr. Speaker, that minister made so many slips, and yet we on this side are always so willing to forgive him. He made so many slips.

You know, I sometimes have to wonder . . . Somebody, Mr. Speaker (and it wasn't any of my constituents) . . . one of his constituents called me on Tuesday and said, "Do you know how we see the Minister's [of Education] position? He has the whole country around a table. And instead of him leading them and showing them the rest of the House, he is taking them around the table, and around table, and around table until he confuses them. Then he lets them sit down and he leaves them there, and he has the whole House to himself."

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: While they suffer from dizziness!

Mr. Roy Bodden: While they suffer from dizziness!

So, Mr. Speaker, I know what the government is concerned about. The government is concerned that next year is an election year. And if they allow these amendments to go through, the backbenchers will be able to claim the credit for advocating and recommending this raise and they, the government, will be left out.

I know that they are depending on the little mileage they get out of this, but I am telling them that there is enough mileage to be shared by everybody—all fifteen of us elected members can come out with some semblance of a victory, and can come out smiling. But the nature of Westminster politics being what it is, the government expects to totally one-up the backbench—particularly the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side would be ill advised to let that happen. That is why we are prepared to share the credit and that is why we believe these amendments are the best solutions to the problem that confronts us. If the government insists on exercising its power and its authority, I will remind government that its position, while allowing it to be arrogant in this case, does not offer it ultimate safety.

When members of the backbench, members of the Legislative Assembly, cannot properly service their constituents and make necessary and relevant contact with their constituents, when the government is confronted with provoking this denial and with removing this ability, I wonder what the government's excuse is going to be.

Mr. Speaker, it is shortsighted on the part of the government to bring that motion and to stand by it rigidly and inflexibly. The government would be well advised to forget about its motion. Forget about one-upmanship and support the amendments so that all of us can come out of this with a sense of maturity, of achievement, and a sense of well-meaning, and can bask in the fact that the most well-meaning decision has been taken in the interest of all concerned. To do otherwise, Mr. Speaker, will be an injustice on the part of the government, and they will be courting ultimate disaster. If government wants to let us know that they are on a Kamikaze mission, then they can stick by their motion.

Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude with a quotation from that famous Irishman, Edmund Burke, writing in 1770 on a speech entitled "Thoughts on the Present Discontent." Mr. Speaker, Edmond Burke said, "When bad men combine, the good must associate else they will fall one by one by one an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle."

Mr. Speaker, I am making a final appeal for the government to abandon its selfish motives with its motion and support the amendments supported by all of us on this side. It is the best solution to this seemingly untenable situation.

At the end of the day (I keep coming back to this), we who are in the vocation of politics, who are what I call the "fraternity," have an over-riding ambition to leave the impression that we are worthy of occupying the seats in this hallowed Chamber. That we are worthy of the awesome responsibility placed upon us. And the tenor of the debate, which I lay squarely at the feet of the government, has not always left us in a flattering position, and has not always left us in a position where we can say the examples that we are setting are worthy to be examined.

We have to remember, Mr. Speaker, when all is said and done, that we are ambassadors. There comes a time when all of us (except the official members) are going to be judged by our constituents. Let us not through selfishness be found wanting. I hope the government can heed that little altar call and shed their hard-heartedness.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the amendment?

The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Perhaps what has transpired in this House for the last couple of days is, as the lawyers would say, hard evidence that we find ourselves in a position where we all work hard at what we are doing, but in the final analysis, when truth sets in, we achieve nothing. If that analogy is correct, Mr. Speaker, then certainly we need to be examining ourselves because it must mean that while we are working very hard we must be working at the wrong thing.

With that in mind, let me say what I have to say regarding the amendments that are proposed. Mr. Speaker, before I come to any conclusion I think it is only fair that we get a proper perspective of exactly what we are dealing with. The way I would like to do that is to go into some actual situations so that we understand. I think when it's all over, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that it is possible for us to look at each other and be able to come to a decision regarding this whole situation that we all can live with.

Mr. Speaker, let me first of all proceed to where the contention is. I am going to take a minute (it might be a couple of minutes), but I have to refer back to the debate yesterday which came from the Leader of Government Business. I have to let you know, Mr. Speaker, that for the last two days the Leader of Government Business was very successful in getting me to the point where I know you don't like me to be. And I think it was very wise of me not to speak during that time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: But God is a good God, and after tempers flare, thank God the majority of us are usually able to sit down and let logic prevail and move on. I think that perhaps it is time for us to make that attempt.

With the first resolve section of the original motion—not the amendment, the motion—had there only been the one resolve section where it would have read, "BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the veterans monthly grant be increased to Two Hundred and Fifty Cayman Islands dollars in 1999 and to Four Hundred Dollars in the year 2000. . . ." Mr. Speaker, perhaps because we know the government has authority in that respect with incurring increased expenditure for the country we would simply have accepted the motion.

Where it came to the second resolve section where it said, “AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Members of the Legislative Assembly do not accept, at this time, funds previously appropriated under Head 10-07 109 being a grant for MLA Offices and that this said sum of seventy-five Thousand Dollars be utilised in 1999, to partially fund the increase to Veterans or their Widows and that Finance Committee be requested to approve the full amount.” That is where the problem arose.

I am going to say it as truthfully . . . and I am tempted to make some snide remarks, especially to the Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning. Because I too can imitate his style, but I am going to fool him completely today and not follow him up.

Mr. Speaker, I truthfully believe at this point in time that it could not have been the intention of the entire government to bring that second resolve section into the motion simply to spite individuals. I am going to say that is entirely possible. But just so it can be understood, and explained without acrimony, if we just take two minutes and look at where some of the individuals on the backbench find themselves when it comes to giving proper representation to their constituents—and it is only some of the backbench—it is almost impossible to think that the members it directly affects would not come to the conclusion that that second resolve section was pointed at them. That is only reasonable.

Now, it is not so important at this point in time whether it was meant that way or not. The fact is that it is reasonable to understand that is how they would take it. Okay?

So, we are working on the assumption now that the entire government may not have meant it in that fashion but that is how it came across to some of us.

Let us go on a little bit further, Mr. Speaker, so that we can really understand. Let us take the 15 elected members of this Legislative Assembly. Let us look at the facilities available to each of them. Let us take the district of East End: The Minister for Agriculture is the one representative for the district of East End. And my understanding is that there is an office in the East End Civic Centre which he can attend whenever he so desires or whenever he finds it necessary to take care of his constituency matters. So, he has a location that he can use at will.

Let us go to the district of North Side. If my understanding is correct, I believe there is an office in the North Side Post Office that the Member for North Side can use to meet her constituents.

Not the Post Office? In the Civic Centre rather, I am sorry. In the North Side Civic Centre. Okay?

Let us come down to the district of Bodden Town. Now, so far we are all into government owned properties. In Bodden Town, at the Bodden Town Civic Centre, there is also an office. Now, we have a peculiar situation in the district of Bodden Town, because there are three representatives there. There is multiple representation. You find that when it comes to what I will loosely term “the factions,” you have two representatives for the district who man the MLA office there. But, because the third representative finds himself on the opposite side of the fence politically, he doesn't deem it as very conducive to utilise the one office. That is not unreasonable.

We have another government property being accessed by two members for the district of Bodden Town and one makes his own arrangements.

Thus far, Mr. Speaker, that member has made no claim because he finds himself at this point in time being able to utilise other space that is available to him. And at this point in time, he is satisfied. Now, it may well work out in the future that he may deem it necessary, or his constituents may make representation to him, that he needs to have an actual office in the district and that will have to be dealt with whenever that occurs.

Let us now go to the Brac. I am not quite 100 per cent sure of the situation on the Brac, and if I need to be corrected, I can be. But I will give it my best understanding at present.

You, sir, are the Speaker of the House. You are also one of the representatives. You are in Grand Cayman on most occasions. But you are back in the Brac as often as you possibly can make it, and I believe you utilise your own offices whenever you are there to deal with your constituents because you have that available to you.

Because there was a problem with space, the Minister for Community Development, who is the First Elected Representative for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, . . . and there was a building that government had purchased. What has happened is that there has been a space identified in that building, I think it is in the Creek near the primary school, and there are other offices which are utilised by other government agencies in that building. My understanding is that that office space is not completed yet. Funds are required to complete the partitions and the renovations within that office to allow her to have a specific office whenever she is in the Brac to be able to serve her constituents. That is my understanding at present. Is that correct?

I believe there are funds available to complete that at present, because it is not just her office that will be completed, but the other renovations in that building will also be completed. But at the end of the day once that is finished, she too will have an office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as we keep going down the line let us bear in mind, sir, as we have continued with government properties, that these MLA offices are not owned by the individuals. I am not saying anyone is saying that. I am saying it is the space available and whoever is a representative has access to use it. Okay?

We come down to the district of George Town, Mr. Speaker. We have four representatives in the district of George Town. The Leader of Government Business (the Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning) is one of the representatives. He has his office in the Government Administration Building. He has his other private office, he also has access to this building when he is here, . . . and I have seen him operate like that. He seems to be content to serve his constituents outside of his other responsibilities via those three avenues. He seems to be satisfied with that because he has not said that he needs a specific office to serve his constituents as a representative.

Then you have three other representatives. The Third Elected Member for George Town and I have an office that we furnished on our own. But at present, what has transpired with it via the due consideration of the Member for North Side when we were trying to get that office in 1997, we got some funds and the government pays the rent on that space.

Now, the other representative for George Town, Dr. McField, has from the time he was elected made access to his constituents by way of his own office which he has occupied and thus far funded all of the cost himself. Okay?

We go down to West Bay. We have four representatives for the district of West Bay. My understanding is that in the town hall there is an MLA Office. Again, Mr. Speaker, while there is access to that office by all four, it is not a conducive situation for all four to use the said office. The fact is that if all four were using the office it might well be a cramped situation. It probably couldn't physically work. But in any case, the Minister for Tourism at some points in time uses that specific space to meet his constituents outside of the space that he occupies in the Administration Building.

We have the Third Elected Member for West Bay who uses that space quite often on a regular basis. So, that again is the government's space.

But we have one of the representatives for West Bay who understood the need for space to properly serve the constituents of his district. Mr. Speaker, he decided to find his own little space knowing full well that everybody knew about it. This was nothing that was hidden. Everybody knew the whole situation, so he contracted someone to work in the office, and he has his own rent and his utilities and other costs to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I have just gone down that entire list to show that of the fifteen members who have been elected there are literally at present only four members who for all justifiable reasons have had to get space for their offices to serve the constituents in their district outside of government owned buildings.

Mr. Speaker, the $75,000 in the budget that was approved for MLAs Offices for the entire 15 elected members . . . whatever might have been said prior to this, I can (and will if necessary) prove that that $75,000 given the circumstances that prevail today is quite sufficient to pay for the needs of the members on an annual basis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this might be just a tad tedious, but we need to get a clear understanding. Yesterday the Minister for Education said—and it was said that he said it 11 times, but it must have been what I call forty-eleventeen times that he said it—talking about this $24,000 a year, that members had as an allowance. He used another word, but, anyway, let's call it the allowance.

[Inaudible Interjection]

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: "Entitlement" was the word he used. That's right!

But I will tell you what he said. During the break I said to him, "How far are you going to go on with this thing?" He said, "No, Kurt, I am on to a good thing here and I am going to beat it and flog it as best I can." That's fine. But, Mr. Speaker, while he used his own methods to justify his arguments I am now in the process of using my truth to nullify his arguments.

He kept chiming about this $2,000 a month, and he even tried to add $2,000 times 12 which is $24,000 on to MLAs' salaries to say that the way this thing was done ordinary members who are not elected Executive Council members would be earning more than Executive Council members. And that is not so, Mr. Speaker!

The way the situation has been created for allowances for MLA offices is simply this: If you need it, you use it. And I have gone through the explanation that there are only four members, and two of the four members occupy the same office so that rent is one rent not two different rents. So, it is nothing the way that he has presented it that every month each individual gets this $2,000 entitlement. Nothing like that!

And he tried to say that the playing field was level because the entitlement was to all 15 members so that meant that if all 15 members gave up the entitlement that would be a level playing field. But he knows full well that it is only four of those members who actually incur expenses that have to be paid. That is why the playing field is not level, Mr. Speaker.

So any argument he used to try to convince the public that this grant was just to increase our salaries was facetious. Okay? I am not going any further with it but it was facetious, and I think I just proved that it was facetious.

Having established that that is the true situation, Mr. Speaker, it might seem to be a political ploy aimed only at the people who have these expenses actually, and that is why it came across in that fashion. After all the arguments, I am not going to spend 15 minutes to prove that that was so. We need to get beyond that now, Mr. Speaker. And we don't need to keep it up about who is going to get the last lick. I like to use that because it really boils down to that sometimes, and I know that, but I hope we can avoid that. We are just trying to clear the situation up so that we understand exactly what is happening.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just to finish off this $2,000 a month business. The minister tabled a document that was proposed by the then Acting Chief Secretary regarding these MLA allowances. And he went through and he read a pile of stuff on it. I am not going to go through that painful exercise again, but I just want to quickly refer to it.

The Deputy Chief Secretary (who was then acting as the Chief Secretary) simply created a hypothetical situation so that members could understand exactly what was going on. He had itemised the rent, the water, the telephone, electricity, furniture and equipment and support staff cost. He had a formula using what he obviously had checked into the cost of a 400 square foot space in the district of George Town, $850, plus the other cost, and he came up to a figure of $2,000, which could be a monthly cost to a representative. That is how this $24,000—which stuck in the claw of the Minister of Education all day yesterday—has come about.

But, Mr. Speaker, . . . I don't contend, I don't submit, I know that what was on this paper was not saying—and was not meant to say—that each member must get $2,000 a month as an allowance for a MLA office. That was not the exercise.

When we spoke about it amongst ourselves, it was not the exercise. When the Acting Chief Secretary prepared this paper, it was not the exercise. The only time it became the exercise was when the Minister of Education picked it up and tried to tell the public that was what it was. And that is not what it was, and that is not what it is, Mr. Speaker! Okay?

Now, all this is saying is that as a basic formula each member utilising an office could itemise the various amounts. But, Mr. Speaker, what the minister didn't say either—which I know I can safely say—is that the representatives who incur costs that are outside of government owned properties are quite willing to be held accountable because they are only going to claim what the costs are.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: And without going into the details (because I don't have them available to me) I would be willing to make a bet that if you added up the claims that would be made by the four representatives for each month it would not be four times $2,000 a month. It would be noticeably less!

So, you see, Mr. Speaker, the minister was trying to say that the arguments that have spewed from the motion are twisted, perverted, self-before-country rather than country-before-self because the representatives wanted access to this $2,000 a month. Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth.

I am promising you again, sir, that I am not going to get excited. But I have to clear it up because if it is left alone and the public does not know different, the public might actually believe him. His style of presentation is convincing. That he is. I know.

But I believe that when they listen to the other arguments that have been put forward, and to what I am saying today they will understand the truth.

Mr. Speaker, we can take a break now, sir. I think that is what you are leading up to.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until 2:30 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12:59 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2:38 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on Government Motion No. 1/99, on an amendment thereto.

The First Elected Member for George Town continuing.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you kindly, Mr. Speaker.

When we broke for lunch, I was dealing with the $24,000 issue. I think by now the whole purpose of the exercise is clear, and I believe that it is also crystal clear exactly how this allowance was intended to work.

Mr. Speaker, just to sum up and clarify the issue of this allowance for the MLA district offices, when the Acting Chief Secretary brought the proposal about this entitlement, the hypothetical situation was that each member utilising a premises for their MLA office, whether it be privately owned or government owned, would ask for an assessment for the cost of the use of the premises. For instance, the office that has been created in the Civic Centre for use by the MLAs in Bodden Town, would have to have an assessment done as to what a reasonable cost of rental for that premises would have been, albeit it is government owned. And if that premises were valued at $1,000 a month then the members who utilised that (if it is two members which is the case now) would each have to claim $500 for their allowance for the rent.

But it would actually be a situation where it's out of the left pocket into the right pocket because it would be government giving the allowance, but they would be paying the rent back to government.

Now, as far as the discussions went on, Mr. Speaker, and I stand to be corrected, we didn't think it made sense to go that far with the situation. So it only boils down to those members who had to pay rent for premises not owned by the government. This is why when you talk about the entitlement ceiling of $2,000 a month times 15 people being $360,000 for the year, in truth and in fact, sir, that amount goes straight through the window. The vast majority of representatives have access to government owned properties, so the majority of their expenses will not be paid, but will be offset because the property is owned by government.

So we are down to four people, and I am sure that was the reasoning behind the fact that there was only $75,000 put into the budget.

Now, the Chief Secretary gave the undertaking, should more be needed, that supplementary requests would be sought in Finance Committee. But as it stands now, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the costs that will be incurred will not exceed the $75,000.

I say that to make this point: When the original motion was brought, the mover (the Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture) alluded to the possibility of this $360,000 for the entire year being allotted. Therefore, in actual fact, while the motion only referred to the $75,000 that during the course of the year should the motion be accepted as it was, then $360,000 could be put towards the payment to the veterans. That was my understanding, as it was put.

But you see, Mr. Speaker, going along the hypothetical argument of $360,000 . . . you can say that, but in actual fact (now that we have established that it will not exceed the $75,000) you are not going to be able to use $360,000 towards these payments. That is how it will work out in reality.

I am going to balance this equation, Mr. Speaker, so that everyone will understand where we are trying to get. When we moved the amendment (and we referred to the motion unanimously passed where the amount in the budget for MLAs salaries was to be used), since [the salaries] had been refused, we would have access to that amount to be used towards our amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to get to the point now, and I trust that I will be able to create the logic and people will be able to accept the logic so that we will understand what's actually going to happen. And I am prepared because I am going to tell the truth!

If we look at both of these motions, the truth is that neither the substantive motion nor the amended version we have put forward will have either the $360,000 (which was supposedly the MLAs entitlement for the year) or the $350,000 (which all MLAs refused to take as increases in salary). And I am going to explain why.

When the figure of the entire increase which included the civil service increase and the increase to MLAs (that is, sir, the ministers, yourself, the Deputy Speaker and the ordinary MLAs), that amount was included into one lump sum. But it was included on the premise that there would be savings realised to that amount in the budget. That means that there was not an actual increase in the amount of the budget to supplement this increase in salaries.

The fact that the private member's motion was unanimously accepted—and there is an approximate difference of $350,000, because that amount will not needed to pay the MLAs in the year 1999 . . . the position that has been taken is that the savings needed to be found is the amount that was put into the budget for that, minus the $350,000. So the truth is we don't have that $350,000.

Now, that, I just discovered sir. But we may as well be open and honest and speak as it is. That is what prevails right now.

In actual fact, neither do we have access to the $350,000, which was the approximate amount which was rejected as MLA increases in salaries, nor will we have access to the proposed $360,000 (which would have been the entitlement of $2,000 a month as a ceiling for 15 MLAs for 12 months which comes up to $360,000). So, the truth of the matter is that we don't have access to either one of these.

As the original motion said, we have access to $75,000. No one can deny that. That was approved. But, sir, without acrimony, without any twisting of versions of interpretations or anything like that, I submit . . . I am sorry the Minister of Education is not here because I am really trying his style this afternoon! I submit, sir, that no one, but no one in this Honourable Legislative Assembly, wishes at any point in time to deny any representative proper access to be able to do his or her job for his or her constituents in the right manner. I for one will speak it loud and clear.

Because of the arguments that have ensued, basically what the Minister for Community Development has said is that if that's the way everybody feels about it she will leave her office unfinished. She doesn't want anybody to think that she wants something for herself that the rest do not get. Of course that is her reaction, because others have said to her, 'Why are you picking on us?' Okay? That is what has gone on.

Mr. Speaker, let's stop this for a minute. Let's just stop and think. That's the word I was using. Okay?

If we look at the situation that exists now, we have two common denominators. I just named the first one: Members must be able to give proper representation to their constituents. That's the first one. I don't think anyone wishes to deny anybody of that.

The second one is that the arguments that have been laid down about the increase for the elderly, indigents and handicapped, and the veterans, are arguments that everybody here is on all fours with.

Let me just interject a short statement. And this is not something that I know to be a fact, sir. In trying to think about it as objectively as one can, I think it is possible that when the increase was put into the budget for the indigents and the elderly, somehow or the other (or the Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning would say, "inadvertently"), because the veterans are in a different category, and because the ministries are spilt up, we found that one set of individuals had been dealt with and the veterans were left out.

Now, I don't know this. But in looking at it, it's possible that this is what happened. So let's work along those lines and try to pan this thing out. If that happened, then quite rightly so the government picked up on it and said, 'Oh-oh, we can't let this look like we purposely left these people out. We have to find a way to cover them,' hence the motion.

But it is also possible, sir, that having gone through a long exhausting Finance Committee, having been cross-questioned about how you tie your shoe laces in Finance Committee—and that is our job, sir. Believe me, the Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning can say what he wants to say, but if they don't come crystal clear to us, we are going to clear the waters from the mud. That is supposed to be our job.

But having gone through all of that, again it is possible that they may have said 'if we bring the motion which means an additional cost we might have some more fire again. So let's see where we can start to show some savings.' I don't where the idea came up about the $75,000. I don't want to get into that because conjecture could go on forever and ever. But, Mr. Speaker, I am asking at this point in time for us to not worry about that any more. Okay?

Everybody said how they felt. We all understand why some people felt how they felt. We all understand why people reacted the way they reacted because in their minds that is not the case. 'This one fired so I am going to fire back.' You know, the real cowboy movie type of thing.

Let us just stop for a second. The Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning was chiming yesterday on this point about country before self. Okay! If we do not wish to deny members to be able to properly represent their constituents, number one; and if we all have the same goal in mind about including everybody in the increase perhaps it is time for us to all get together to find out where this money is. Let us all agree on a certain position and then we can move on with the business of the country.

I want to give a few more explanations so that it can be clear in our minds exactly where we are. Government took a position and brought a motion. The backbench, looked at it and certain members felt like it was pointed to them. They naturally sat down and tried to come up with a counter that they felt was more palatable. But there is another thought that came through everybody's mind, and I wish to talk about it just for a minute so that we can get that one out in the open too. We are going to talk about it and get it all out in the open, let's get it all crystal clear and let's see if we can't move forward with it.

When the proposed amendment was moved from $250 to $300, there was a thought behind that. Mr. Speaker, it was not just arbitrarily done. Here is the logic behind it: If we are going to be moving from $250 to $400 we are going to have to find that much more in the year 2000 to bring it up to the $400. When we included the indigents, the elderly, and the handicapped (who are in a certain category), along with the veterans and moved it up to the $300, the thought was simply this, sir . . . and I am going to tell you about the politics of it too.

Someone said, 'Give them $50 this year, because everything is stretched, so to speak, and maybe we kind of slipped up and forgot the veterans. But if we bring all of them up to line with the $50, since we have the money in the budget to increase all the rest by $50 to $250, then let's leave it at that. Then next year—being the year 2000 which is an election year— $150 is going to come like a big increase. That's big kudos!' Alright? That is what somebody will think.

I am not saying that's the case, but on the backbench are politically minded individuals amongst us who will say to themselves, 'Perhaps that's what the government thought.' I am not saying the government thought that, but I am saying the government must understand that some of us are thinking like that.

If the government were on the backbench and we were there . . . it doesn't matter who it is. But I think the point is made clear.

In our minds, the amounts do not differ at the end of the day if you wish to arrive at the $400 per month for all the categories. We are saying, why not do $300 this year for everyone. Your move is $100 this year and next year your move is the same. Okay?

And there is another salient point to that which I really sincerely believe: From 1995 this amount has been in place. This is now 1999, and at this point in time this is not being political, but there have been increases which have been brought about by the government because costings have gone up and recurrent revenue is not able to match recurrent expenditure. So, there have been revenue [enhancement] measures brought which naturally increase the price of the goods that these people have to buy. Basically, the cost of living has increased.

There have been at least two cost of living increases, which have been given to the civil service and which includes pensioners, but you see those amounts are not addressed in these areas. These areas remain fixed; they don't naturally spill over into these areas so you don't get a natural increase coming along with this.

So, for all intent and purposes, if we are going to take a bite at it (which is what it is going to boil down to, sir), let's do $300 in 1999, and let's go up to the $400. We will be much better prepared in the year 2000 for the $400 because we will know that's the plan. From the very beginning when they start to make their move with the budget, the two ministries will know that X amount has to be factored in, regardless of what else they want to cut and shave because this is where they are going. That is something that will easily be done.

So that the government understands clearly our motion, I have brought out where I think the deficiencies are in both amounts that were being talked about. I think we can argue against it, but I think it boils down to the way I have said it.

When the Third Elected Member for George Town and the First Elected Member from West Bay brought the amendments, they were working on the premise that the substantive motion brought with it the authority (by way of it coming from the government) to go to Finance Committee to find whatever needed to be found to be able to get the money. So, when we brought an amendment it was not a new motion but it was based on the premise that the original motion already had the authority going with it, so that authority would continue on if these amendments were accepted. It is still the same substantive motion just with amendments.

Our thoughts are that the authority through Finance Committee will hold up for both versions whichever way they end up.

So, Mr. Speaker, to sum up that aspect of it, we are basically saying let's not fight over it. Knowing that we all agree that this amount needs to be increased for all the categories that have been talked about, let us move to $300 in 1999, and to $400 in the year 2000. Rather than have pistols drawn and guns smoking let us sit down and sensibly come to an arrangement as to where we are going to find the money that is actually needed. That is, what I think we need to come to.

I am sure the members of the backbench will agree with this procedure if it is allowed sir. But all has happened to this point is that everyone has spoken in a reactionary fashion. I sincerely hope that we are able to find it within ourselves to say, 'Okay, let us not compare who got in the last word throughout the whole thing. Let us be able to come together since we all want to achieve the same thing and find the method by which we can achieve it.'

Mr. Speaker, the $75,000 is $75,000. I do not believe that it is going to be a plus to force the issue that that $75,000 is not accessible for members to be able to utilise a proper constituency office. I do not believe that. I do not believe that the advantages will outweigh the disadvantages.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we have a way among us of developing bad blood, and it is staying with us too long. And, like the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, I am not excluding myself, sir, I know where I fail. But perhaps this is one time where all of us can rise above that and move forward with this. We have much to do, Mr. Speaker. We have a lot of motions to deal with, a lot of government bills, a lot of private members' motions. We have also the Throne Speech where members need to throw out their ideas with regard to the state of affairs of the country and the direction that we should be taking.

Mr. Speaker, there are other things that I could say but some of it may seem counterproductive and I am prepared to bypass those things. There are some things that have been said thus far that, as I stand here this evening I sincerely believe need to be cleared up. But I want to be seen to be fair.

I could stand for at least another hour and a half, Mr. Speaker—at least!—to disengage the points that have been made from the government bench when it comes to certain things. But as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and I think the other members on this side of the floor will agree with me, it is not going to get us anywhere fast. I hope it is possible that we can do what is right about the motion and get it put to bed the best way possible.

As far as I can understand now we have 594 individuals in the category of the veterans, and of the indigents and elderly, there are 690 recipients. When we work it out based on what is included in the budget at present, and if we really wish to go to $300 a month this year, I think we are going to be looking to find something like $1.1 million. That's about what we are looking to find.

Mr. Speaker, we have stood and argued with the budget, with our thoughts, with the principles that we have applied, and we will continue to do so to keep the government on its toes. And we will continue to shoot our policies out in the hope that they will pick up some of our ideas that it might benefit the country. But this one, Mr. Speaker, while we are not suggesting for a second that we want to create a welfare state, we accept that there are individuals in this country who for more reasons than one cannot fend for themselves.

There is a proper means test which calls for certain due diligence and due process to take place for people to be able to receive these amounts of money. If these people are qualified and eligible for these amounts of money I believe we should look to take care of that and then deal with the country's business as we move on. I think it is our inherent responsibility.

I don't think any one of us wishes to waiver from that chain of thought. I don't think any one of us wishes to renege on that responsibility.

I am not quite finished yet. I will crave your indulgence, sir (and it is entirely up to the members here) that if you are prepared to do so . . . and I am not talking about any broiler room talks for us to have any arguments over, . . . but if you and the members are willing, perhaps we can get together to arrive at a way for the entire 15 members of this assembly, along with the official members, to come to an agreement as to how we move forward with this. We can get it put to bed and we can move on with the important matters of the country.

All I am saying, sir, is that I am prepared to pause at this point in time and if there is an indication that they wish to do that, then perhaps you would be willing to take a suspension so that this can be done. If the government is not prepared to deal with it in this fashion, sir, then I will simply continue.

The Speaker: I am completely in the hands of this Honourable House and maybe the appropriate thing to do is to put a question. If it is the wish of this Honourable House that we suspend for a period of time....

The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I was basically going to ask for us to take the afternoon break and let us have a little time to talk among ourselves. The government, I think, would love a little time to talk.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: At this particular time, we shall then say for thirty minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3:08 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3:50 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on Government Motion No. 1/99, the amendment to it.

I recognise the Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As a result of the government having discussions just a short while ago, we are proposing the following three things: First, that we have identified offices in a government owned building for the MLAs who do not now have access to government owned offices.

Second, we are in support of the increase of $50 as set out in the original motion for veterans in order to equalise their financial grant with the elderly, handicapped and other persons in need.

And, third, that in return we hope that the back-bench will withdraw their amendments to Motion No. 1/99.

The Speaker: I will now recognise the First Elected Member for George Town to continue his debate.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I trust that what I am about to say now is not considered a continuation of my debate on the amendments. I am simply responding to the Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture. Is that reasonable?

The Speaker: You can, but I have reserved your right because we suspended in the middle of your presentation.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

If I understand what the minister has said in the very first issue that she addressed, she is saying that premises will be identified for those members who do not now have MLA offices that are in government premises? Is that what is being said?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Is that what is being said? (pause) I just need a nod of the head or something.

I will continue while they are conferring, Mr. Speaker. The reason why I am saying what I am saying, Mr. Speaker is that, first of all....

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Do I need to give way?

What I am asking through you, Mr. Speaker, is if I am understanding what the Minister for Community Affairs has said in addressing the first issue is that premises have been identified in government premises for the members who now utilise MLA offices that are not in government premises. Is that what being said?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me just reread it again and perhaps I can go a bit slower.

The discussion that the government just had, the first proposal is as follows, and I will read it so I don't improvise my own thoughts. "That we have identified offices in a government owned building for the MLAs who do not now have access to a government owned office."

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you will allow it to continue in this vein, sir, perhaps the minister could state where these premises are. The reason why I am asking is because I know for a fact that the Third Elected Member for George Town and I went through the motion with the minister responsible for government buildings. Prior to this, and after an extended period of time—several months—the minister told us that there were no government premises in the district of George Town that we could occupy.

In the case of the Fourth Elected Member of George Town, he is utilising a certain premises that is different, and there is also the First Elected Member for West Bay, and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

So, before we get into the other matters, perhaps we could hear the locations that are being proposed for us.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, the government has identified the recently acquired building next to the Government Administration Building, being the Racket Club in central George Town.

[General uproar, Inaudible interjections, and members' laughter]

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, if we are in session, sir.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, let me hear your point of order.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, are they saying that we can use the Racket Club? As I understood it, they were purchasing that to knock it down to clear the way for other construction. That was the purpose.

Now they can't change that—and I hear them grumbling, sir, but that is what they said.

The Speaker: I think that's an explanation but could the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Woks comment?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I thank you. I realise that the building itself and the reputation of the building of the past is something that none of us really want to be associated with.

The government owns this property, it owns this building, it is something that government has in its plans somewhere down the road to add a government office building to provide more office facilities for civil servants as well as ministers, or statutory authorities, or whoever. But until that day, we feel that the building can be refurbished in order to provide the facilities that would be suitable for MLAs to use.

Whatever refurbishing needs to be done to it, the government is prepared to do it.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, we hear what they are saying for the members for George Town. And I am assuming they are saying that all three members can occupy that building. I have no idea what that cost is going to be, I suspect that renovation costs for that purpose will exceed the rental cost for quite some period of time, but that is another point to deal with.

What about the other two representatives? There are two other representatives: one for Bodden Town and one for West Bay. We need to know where they are talking about for that so that we can understand their answer fully.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what I am doing in this, but let me just say that my understanding about the Bodden Town area in particular is that there is a civic centre with an MLA office. It is only used Thursday and Tuesday, so Monday and Wednesday is open. That's my understanding.

Well, I know that a majority of people don't want to go to deal with a MLA on a Friday. Nobody wants to do it on a Friday.

The West Bay Town Hall has an MLA office. John Jefferson, Jr uses it on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. I have asked him to allow me to use that on Mondays when I go to the district—and I have not been there in several weeks, but Thursdays are open.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, since this is time for explanations . . .

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: You can tell the world this: If I had any intention of sharing an office with one of them I would have done it from the time they kicked me out of the Executive Council. But I ain't going in any office because I have been set up too many times in my political life and I ain't going to take that chance again! Now, they can put that in their pipe and smoke it! And they can tell it to the world.

If they don't want to fund it, I pray to God that I will get some assistance somewhere. They are not going to stop me from serving the people that I was elected to serve. But I am not going to share no office with the Minister of Tourism! None!

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town is next.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where we are at right now. It seems that the format has changed slightly. But I really, really was hoping that somehow my debate yesterday was indicating that we should relate a little different to this particular problem and not politicise it to this extent. And I was hoping that the government—that I supported with regard to getting its budget through and its borrowing through—would have had at least enough sensitivity to my position here to not have placed me in such a predicament at this particular time. I wonder if they seriously realise what they have now done again.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the question as to how I will be able to use the MLA office in the Bodden Town Civic Centre when, Mr. Speaker, the Hansards of this House will show that it was through my agitation and work that the now Third Elected Member for George Town (when he was the Member responsible for Works under whose development this office fell at that time) started the office there and when the National Team came to power, Mr. Speaker, I had a key to that office until they decided that it was time to exclude me, at which time they had not even the courtesy, Mr. Speaker, to let me know what was going on.

I was assured by my colleague, the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town, that the office was being refurbished. And that when it was refurbished, I would have gotten a key. And she was willing to discuss with me a schedule of use. It was refurbished and I didn't know until one day when I turned up at the civic centre and proceeded to take out my key to enter the main door when the caretaker said in just in these words, "Old boy where are you going? They changed the lock on that the other day."

No one, Mr. Speaker, gave me a key to the front door, let alone the MLA office!

I raised a stink about it subsequently in this very hallowed Chamber. Then, sheepishly and embarrassingly, the Public Works Department chased me down here making all kinds of apologies telling me that it wasn't their fault that the locks were changed and I was excluded from getting a key. When they brought the key at that point I wouldn't take it. Being the conscientious representative I am, I had made alternative arrangements.

Up until that time, Team Cayman still had an office in what we call the Business Park that I utilised. Well, since that we have given up the office and, fortunately for me, I am able to utilise the office space in which I work.

So, Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that Jews have no dealing with the Samaritans. If they wanted me to share that office I would have gotten a key from the time it was refurbished and the locks were changed.

Now, like I said I am a Jew. I am not dealing with the Samaritans because I don't want to be an afterthought. Absolutely no way! I shall continue to serve my constituents from the office I work from and from my home, as is my custom.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It is obvious that what has been proposed regarding the MLA offices is unsatisfactory. It is obvious that in the short time the government conferred, and in their scramble to try and put forward a counter, a very poor excuse for compromise has been placed in our laps.

I am going to go a little bit further, Mr. Speaker. I am going to make a last ditch effort here. Mr. Speaker, when we suggested if the government were prepared to sit and talk, we were not making any attempt to use any political stance to try and take command of the government's motion. We were quite prepared, if the government was willing to sit and talk with us, to try to come to an agreement. And the government could then, if necessary, reword any motion to suit all of us. They could bring the motion and we would simply vote on the motion and move on with the country's business.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to lose it again and talk about slaps in the face and all of that. I am not going to do that this afternoon. I am going to say one last time that the government understands where we are. We all wish to achieve the same thing. Can we forget who gets to say the last word and who has to stick with what they want to stick with? Get things done right!

Everyone shook their heads and said that they did not want any member to be deprived of being able to utilise a proper office to serve his or her constituents.

The government has to realise that it cannot pluck some structure that is dilapidated and totally unsuitable out of a hat.

Mr. Roy Boddén: That was used as a house of ill repute!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am certain they have no idea of the cost to renovate that building to be suitably used. They have no idea!

I know what the place looks like inside. I know how it is divided up. I know what can and cannot be done with that place. Mr. Speaker, it is not an easy situation to be dealt with. I am not going to chime on that to make it sound like that's the end of the world.

Mr. Speaker, surely the government within themselves must have a better way to deal with this situation. If they are forced in their minds to retain the $250 instead of the $300 that we have suggested, that is something that we can debate and simply vote on and whoever the majority is will win that part of the vote. To me, that doesn't change the wish. We want to see these people get better.

How it is divided up and when it is apportioned out to them is what we were suggesting to sit and talk about. If they can't find it within them to sit and talk with us about that and come to an agreement, then it will have to be simply on the vote of the majority of the elected members.

When it comes to the MLAs offices, every one of them knows that what they just came to us with, Mr. Speaker, is something like what those old people use to talk about. But do you know how that comes across to us? Like they took slop pail and threw it in our faces. That's how it appears, whether it was intended to be like that or not.

Mr. Speaker, our plea was totally genuine. It had nothing to do with who ends up looking like what. I will say it one more time: It matters not to us if there is any possible way to put what we want and what government wants together and then bring it back, it doesn't matter to us, Mr. Speaker. But, as I said, I am giving it one last chance because I am a man that doesn't give up easily.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say that it is obvious that they have come back with something that they knew we were not going to accept. But if they have no recourse and are not willing to sit down and try to come to a reasonable understanding, I will have to come to that conclusion, Mr. Speaker.

And I just want to make it clear, sir, not being funny but just a general reminder: What I just said has nothing to do with my continuation of the motion. That is in response to the cross talk that has been going on, sir.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is that time in the afternoon when we really should in good conscience just sit down and talk to each other rather than getting up in the House and making all sorts of accusations or innuendoes. Perhaps, now is as good a time as any. And the First Elected Member for George Town did make that suggestion earlier.

I think what we are asking for is a suspension to talk.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we on this side of the House would agree because that is what the First Elected Member from George Town has put forward. We would certainly like to agree with the Minister of Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

And I would further like to say, Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me (because I did rise earlier on a point of order), I said I wasn't going to share any offices. The Minister of Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works said there were four days, he did admit that Fridays were out and he said there were four days. He didn't include the Fourth Member from West Bay, nor have they taken into consideration that we are saying that we need to have the office all the time not just one day or two days. It is completely different in that district and he knows that it is difficult.

We don't have the space. And separate and apart from the reason I stated earlier concerning my use of it that place not being conducive sometimes because of the town hall being used at times.

The Speaker: What I would like to suggest is that we have approximately seventeen minutes before the hour of 4:30 p.m. I would suggest that we move the motion for the adjournment of this House and then we can meet informally after we have adjourned and then come back tomorrow morning at 10:00 a.m.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: If that's the wish of the House, Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10:00 am tomorrow morning.

The Speaker: The question is that this House do now adjourn until 10:00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

Those in favour....

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, sir, I had to be out of the Chamber. If I may, sir, before you take the vote. . .

The Speaker: Certainly, Go ahead.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I hold the view, sir, that if we are serious about this thing, I don't mind suspending to talk about it, but I don't like the thought of closing off this afternoon until tomorrow morning. I would rather us suspend proceedings and meet and come back in here if its even to close off for the day, sir.

The Speaker: That is fine with me. I was just thinking about the Press and anyone else. Well, can anybody give me an idea then as to how long the suspension will be?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Until we are finished!

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: It should take ten minutes, sir. If the government is sincere, it will take ten minutes.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until things are finished.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 4:15 PM
PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4:57 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. I would ask that the Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning if he would suspend Standing Order 10(2) that we can proceed beyond the hour of 4:30 p.m.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, what we would like to do is to adjourn until tomorrow morning.

The Speaker: And I still have to suspend because it is almost 5:00 p.m.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 10(2)

Hon. Truman Bodden: Oh, I see. I move the suspension of Standing Order 10(2).

The Speaker: I put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 10(2) SUSPENDED.

The Speaker: I will now entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker before you do that, sir, can we have a division?

The Speaker: What are you calling a division on? The suspension? I have not put the question on the adjournment yet.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was one step ahead of you.

The Speaker: I thought so.

Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10:00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House will now adjourn until 10:00 a.m. tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES and NOES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourned until 10:00 a.m. tomorrow.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, can we now have that division?

The Speaker: Certainly. Madam Clerk would you call a division, please?

[Prayers read by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay, who is ill.

I apologise for the late start. We had procedural matters that needed to be taken care of.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, Motions. Government Motion No. 1/99, Increase of Financial Grant to Volunteer Ex-servicemen and their Widows. Continuation of debate thereon.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you. The First Elected Member for George Town has kindly given way so that I could make a few brief remarks on behalf of government.

I am happy to report that after negotiations in a mutual and amicable meeting this morning, the House has reached a favourable agreement which will be put forward formally, subsequent to the amendment on the floor being withdrawn, to amend the last resolve, in a manner suitable to all members present.

The Speaker: Continuation of debate on the amendment to Government Motion No. 1/99. The First Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

MOTIONS

GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99

INCREASE OF FINANCIAL GRANT TO VOLUNTEER
EX-SERVICEMEN AND THEIR WIDOWS

AMENDMENT NO. 1
(Withdrawn)

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

In light of what the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs has just said, and also in view of the fact that a further amendment being made by the government has just been circulated, I think it would only be fair for me not to continue my debate. I think the reason why I do not have to pursue my comments on the amendments brought by the backbench will come to light.

The Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the amendment? If not, I call upon the mover to exercise his right of reply. The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

This is a happy day for me, and I believe that I speak for other members of this honourable House, in particular my honourable colleagues. We realise that much was said in the Assembly that, on reflection, we wish had not been said. I personally wish to apologise to anyone whom I may have offended in any manner. As honourable Members know, I try to avoid that adversarial side of politics.

I must congratulate all that were instrumental in bringing us to this point. I think it shows that when we meet behind closed doors, much can be accomplished.

Amendment No. 2 to Government Motion No. 1/99 reads as follows, and I would just like to read this for the record. It states: "In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(4), I, the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, on behalf of the Government of the Cayman Islands, propose that Government Motion No. 1/99 be amended by deleting the last resolve clause and replacing it as follows:

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT this Honourable House supports proposals to Finance Committee to approve the full amount of $356,600 to fund the said increase of $50 per month to veterans and their widows and, subject to funds being available, by the summer Government will consider increasing the financial assistance up to $300 for the veterans and their widows, elderly, handicapped and other persons in need."

This covers very well the concerns that were expressed in our amendment to the substantive motion. There were quite a number of things that I noted to comment on in my winding up, but this position we have reached makes this totally unnecessary. I am pleased to say that my colleagues and I are able to support Amendment No. 2 to Government Motion No. 1/99, and I accordingly withdraw my amendment, which had been put forward and seconded by the First Elected Member for West Bay.

The Speaker: Is there a seconder?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: I would like to concur with what the Third Elected Member for George Town has said, and I gladly second the motion.

The Speaker: I shall put the question that Amendment No. 1 to Government Motion No. 1/99 be withdrawn. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: AMENDMENT NO. 1 TO GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99 WITHDRAWN.

The Speaker: Government Motion No. 1/99 is open for debate. Does any other member wish to speak? The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports Women, Youth, and Culture.

AMENDMENT NO. 2

TO GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99

INCREASE OF FINANCIAL GRANT TO VOLUNTEER EX-SERVICEMEN AND THEIR WIDOWS

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, by virtue of the authorisation by the presiding officer, and in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 25(4), I, the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, on behalf of the Government of the Cayman Islands, propose that Government Motion No. 1/99 be amended by deleting the last resolve clause and replacing it as follows:

“AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT this Honourable House supports proposals to Finance Committee to approve the full amount of $356,600 to fund the said increase of $50 per month to veterans and their widows and, subject to funds being available, by the summer Government will consider increasing the financial assistance up to $300 for the veterans and their widows, elderly, handicapped and other persons in need.”

The Speaker: The amendment (No. 2) to Government Motion No. 1/99 has been duly moved. Do you wish to speak to it? The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Out of an abundance of caution, it should be $356,600. I would move that the scrivener's error be corrected for the record.

This morning I take great pleasure, with much humility, in thanking all honourable members for their commitment to come to an amicable conclusion in the interest of this country, which I believe is the main motive of each honourable member sitting here in this Parliament this morning. I believe that the [amendment] which has been presented this morning by way of mutual agreement, will seek to increase the amount to veterans by $50, and, as the motion clearly says, funds being available we will increase it an additional $50 for all of the categories, being veterans and their widows, the elderly, handicapped and other persons in need.

If I can just take a moment to take us back to [Private Member's] Motion No. 8/98, government fully concurs that the intention was there. But, again out of an abundance of caution, we saw it necessary to clean up by bringing an amendment for the veterans. We would also like to thank the First Elected Member for West Bay for his foresight in this regard.

Without going into a long winding up (because I believe much has been said), and, as the Third Elected Member for George Town, I made several notes to clear up items and various accusations. But in the interest of compromise and for the expeditious running of this House I have no problem in asking members to concur with this amendment and ask that we move on and continue to deal with the issues facing this country.

The Speaker: The amendment (No. 2) is open for debate. Does any other member wish to speak? If not, does the mover wish to wind up?

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: They say that a picture is worth more than a thousand words, and the amicable and tranquil ambience which permeates this House this morning says it all. I thank you.

The Speaker: I shall put the question that the amendment do stand part of the motion. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: AMENDMENT NO. 2. TO GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99 PASSED.

The Speaker: The question is that Government Motion No. 1/99 as amended do pass. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 1/99 AS AMENDED PASSED.

The Speaker: Moving on to the commencement of debate on the Throne Speech, delivered by His Excellency Mr. John Owen, CMG, OBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on 19th February, 1999.

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

COMMENCEMENT OF DEBATE
ON THE THRONE SPEECH
DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR
MR. JOHN OWEN, CMG, OBE
ON FRIDAY, 19 FEBRUARY, 1999

Dr. Frank McField: I am indeed pleased to be making my contribution to the Throne Speech, 1999, delivered by His Excellency the Governor, Mr. John Owen. I understand that this was the last Throne Speech to be delivered by His Excellency. Sadly, he will be leaving the Cayman Islands with his wife Carol very shortly.

I would like to extend my congratulations to him on his term here in the Cayman Islands, which was well spent I believe. In retrospect, we will see that many of the reforms that His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, brought to the forefront for the civil service and political debates are indeed badly needed.

When we really understand the flaws in our entire governmental structure, we understand that parts of the conflicts we are experiencing today in the Legislative Assembly and in society as a whole are a result of the fact that our concept and understanding of the purpose of the state is almost medieval. We therefore need to have a more reformed approach to matters of government. We need to be led into this new light of reasoning. We need to be encouraged to develop a more mature state, a more mature political machinery that will truly represent the needs and wishes of the people.

This causes me to want to look briefly at the Constitution of the Cayman Islands as it now is. The Cayman Islands (Constitution) Order 1972 gives the Governor very extreme powers. Under the definition it says, “1. (1) There shall be a Governor of the Cayman Islands who shall be appointed by Her Majesty by Commission under Her Sign Manual and Signet and shall hold office during Her Majesty’s pleasure.

“(2) The Governor shall, for the purpose of administering the government of the islands, have such powers and duties as are conferred or imposed on him by this Constitution or any other law and such other powers as Her Majesty may from time to time be pleased to assign to him, and, subject to the provisions of this Constitution and of any other law by which any such powers or duties are conferred or imposed, shall do and execute all things that belong to his office according to such Instructions, if any, as Her Majesty may from time to time see fit to give him; but no court shall enquire whether or not he has complied with any such Instructions.”

In other words, the Constitution says that the Governor’s powers are outside the jurisdiction of the courts. We also know that the Governor appoints members to the judiciary, and it is under his umbrella that they seek refuge and are seen to have the independence that we believe is necessary in our society.

So part of what our Constitution does, is establish the office of Governor. It then establishes the Executive Council. It says, “5. There shall be an Executive Council in and for the Islands which, subject to section 10 of the Constitution shall consist of— (a) three Official Members, who shall be appointed by the Governor, . . .”

Again, it is important that we understand the dynamics of our political machinery within the context of talking about reform on the level of the reinvention of government, which the Governor spoke of in his Throne Speech, and as regards public sector reforms and other initiatives like the strategic initiatives or the Vision 2008 exercise.

We see that there is an office of the Governor that appoints three members to Executive Council. The Constitution also says that there shall be “five elected members, who shall be elected by the elected members of the Assembly from among the elected members of the Assembly, . . .” The Constitution does not give the people of the Cayman Islands the right to elect those persons who are responsible for policy issues. Our Constitution quite clearly separates the people from the issue of policy. In terms of whether or not people are satisfied with the way in which their government is performing, or satisfied with the situation here in the Legislative Assembly, people need to become a little more acquainted with their Constitution and what their Constitution will afford them by way of the democratic system of representation.

Elected Members of Executive Council are not elected by the people, but by Members of the Legislative Assembly. And in most cases, people don’t know who their ExCo Members will be. In other words, that is held from the people. They don’t know who votes for the Executive Council. That is done by secret ballot. In fact, when people are talking about the failures of government—the inability, the weakness of their government, the fact that their government is not really representing their needs—we need to understand the peculiar type of Colonial governmental structure we have here which His Excellency the Governor, I believe, speaks to.

When His Excellency the Governor talks about Vision 2008, the Reinvention of Government, Fiscal Reform, Public Sector Management Reform, and Freedom of Information Initiatives giving us the opportunity to break out of the straightjacket of a Colonial style bureaucracy which seeks to control from the centre, he has brought some light to the situation. He gives some of us the courage to question our system in such a way that we will be able to help with the reform process.

The most serious problems we have had in this country over the years have been caused by persons in the society with a certain degree of intelligence and authority, causing the Caymanian people to believe that if they look at their Constitution and if they feel the need to mould their Constitution in such a way to cause it to best reflect their present state of existence, that that would mean they are heretics; that it would be going against something holy and sacred, and that it would be high crime and misdemeanour to question and examine.

We have no political instructions for our young people in the schools so they can understand and digest, and become more enabled and empowered to be a part of a democratic system that needs people to reason and participate based upon their understanding. We have developed a political vacuum in this country, simply because the country is changing in such a way that if the political machinery does not keep up with the changes it itself will be responsible for creating anarchy. Those of us who had this vision twenty years ago were thrown to the lions as the Christians were in Rome.

It is now the 20th anniversary of Time Longer Dan Rope, the play I completed 20 years ago. Since this form of debate allows me to wonder, at 50 years of age I want to make my involvement with this country's public life sum up something. I feel that this moment can be a summary of those fifty years that I have spent in this world.

In Time Longer Dan Rope, the Caymanian woman "Ella" who is struggling with her children while her husband "Beatman" is at sea is working with "Mr. Wyler" who is supposed to be the first developer, comes home from work tired and says, "Mr. Wyler, them had a cocktail party for some Caymanians. Boy, were those people ordering drinks. I mixed drinks till I drunk from the smell. Lord knows why rich people drink so much. The way they behave not much better than old Johnny Brandon. But they can talk business though.

"Mr. Wyler, he smart. He talking about real estate, tourists coming, tax heaven, or something like that. But Miss Catherine different. She nice. She talk to me like a sister. She saying they want to change the place too fast and Caymanians won't keep up, and she don't want to see us end up like Indians, all drunks and broken up families."

That was twenty years ago. This was a concern of a Caymanian woman dramatised to be remembered at this specific time.

The old drunk, "Bam-bam," . . . and these characters are all fictional because I should hope not to be sued by anybody. I chose names because those of us who are familiar with the pleasant parts of our history know that we had characters that dramatised our way of life. We didn't have to go to the theatre to see theatre, because we had people who were so colourful they were able to entertain and to teach.

And Bam-bam says, "Yeah, I crazy. That what you tink cause as soon as a man say something with sense then he crazy. But let me tell you one ting: I almost live my life out. I soon dead. But I been a lot of places in this world, I even see King George, one of the greatest men who ever lived."

And the people in the bar said something to him, but he says, "So I know my life." Then he tells them he's a philosopher and they go, "Philosopher? What's that?"

He says, "A philosopher is a thinker. He knows in every man there is the ability to know right from wrong, good from evil, weak from strong and so forth and so on. So I know my life because I tink about it. There is nothing you can say, or anyone else can tell me about myself I don't already know.

"I might be afraid to admit what you might say is correct, but that does not mean that I don't know it's true. There is some truth to everything, but some things are less true than others. That you all call me crazy has some truth, but it is not all the truth. Y'all mek me crazy 'cause y'all afraid if ya didn't call me crazy you'd have to call me intelligent, and that you wouldn't do."

Believe it or not, that was written 20 years ago. That was my attempt to somehow say that the country was developing too fast, that we would have social problems. Time Longer Dan Rope dramatises the conflict between the man and the woman as a result of the man going away to sea and the woman having to work at home, gaining her economic independence by working for the foreign developer. As a result of the fact that she has economic independence and the man believing that he's the boss in the house, we have the classic conflict that we have discussed in regard to the Caymanian family. They talk about it now, but this was written.

Fortunately, we had foresight back then. We had the opportunity to have brought reforms to our country that would at this particular point be useful, but because we were Caymanians we were not accepted. So, when the Governor, Mr. Owen, comes with a reform outlook and talks about the straightjacket of a Colonial style bureaucracy, I know what he means. And I believe that at the end of the day I am as qualified to interpret his meaning as anyone else is. A colonial style bureaucracy.

He is the Governor. He is coming, according to our Constitutional choices, with total power. Yet, rather than using those powers negatively, he comes to encourage us to develop a system that is responsive to the needs of the people and not managed from the centre. We have to become more involved in the whole idea of value for money.

He said, "The future is in your hands." That's very encouraging from someone who 20 years ago would have been looked at as being mad. He would have been called crazy, would have been an outsider.

It is hard for us to accept that among our own people are intelligent persons. This is reflected in our debates and in our fights, and in the way we interact politically with one another. I say that we have to locate the sociological basis for the fact that we do not, as Caymanians, come together and work together, that we have allowed other persons to come in and become more empowered in our society than we ourselves are.

I would like to see government reform in such a way where government does not forget the fact that it is the only institution in this country where Caymanians really have absolute control—if we do. Okay? We understand that we are sharing power to a certain extent with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and with the appointed Governor. Be that as it is, if the person in that position is benevolent we will be in a position to determine our own future. He says that the future is in our hands.

When I visited the Foreign and Commonwealth Office I didn't get a different impression from them than what I got from him in regard to the future being in our own hands and the fact that we are in the position to make decisions in that regard. I know that many people may not consider what I am talking about to be politics because they believe that politics is bickering, that politics is talking about specific policy not developing an overview.

That is part of our problem: the inability of many members to think the overview thought. We wouldn't have to pull back if we saw the end before we start moving forward, if we would follow the carpenter's rule of measuring twice before we cut. Part of the problem with the political machinery of government is that it reacts and does not act. And it does not act because it does not analyse. And it does not analyse because it thinks it is crazy and absurd—that it is philosophy.

If we would develop political machinery in this country that would strive to eliminate the basic weakness we have discovered in our society today—which is the inability of Caymanians to cooperate on any level, including the level of government . . . and I am guilty too, because I am a Caymanian. But I want to reform. I want to be reborn. I want to change. I want to see the difference. It's time that we see the difference, not just at the bottom but at the top.

We preach about the reinvention of government, yet the Constitution says that we have no control over the civil service. In other words, the people of the Cayman Islands have no direct control over what the people in the civil service are paid, or who works in the civil service, or who gets trained or how they get disciplined. So there is impotence on the part of the people by way of the Constitution. We must tell them that!

I am not going to tell them to change their Constitution. If they want it to be this way, then let it be that way. I have lived with it, I can continue to live with it. But if we analyse the situation, and if we are truthful about why political government is weak in this country we will see that it has to do with the Constitution. And we will see that the type of Constitution we have is beneficial to a particular class of people who do not want the Caymanian people to be empowered by controlling politics in this country. Because to control politics, to control the State, would be to control the resources of the country.

The Speaker: Could I interrupt you just one moment? Is it the wish of honourable members to suspend now for the morning break? Or should we continue for another hour until lunch?

The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: As you wish, sir. We are flexible. I think whatever. I know that's the question you asked me, sir, but . . .

The Speaker: I am comfortable if everyone wants to continue.

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: Well, that would be good with us, sir. But if you wish to break at any stage, please—

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town, please continue.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, I just don't want people to believe that I am a Spanish machete, that I am a person who is inconsistent and doesn't know what side to take.

I am a bit dissatisfied overall with the lack of organisation within our political culture. And this lack of structure also causes us to have choices as individuals which are sometimes positive, but on another level it can cause chaos. It could cause the business of the House to go far beyond the time in which it should simply because everybody wants to be able to express his or her opinion in order to impress the voters, because we cannot do that in an organised fashion.

All of those people who say that they don't want political parties are partly responsible for the chaos that is now developing. I am sorry. I have been here now two years and I can see that on one hand we have all the disadvantages of the party system, but none of the advantages. If we are going to have reforms in the civil service, . . . the civil service can reform itself by way of His Excellency the Governor who will call the politicians in the political system to reform the political system because some of us are so bent on keeping this country in the dark ages politically, that we can't get any reform. Every time the people try to do something they go out and say 'He's a bad guy. He's a bad guy. He's a bad guy. He's a bad guy.'

Let me say that we all have one thing in common as politicians whether or not we are successful. We all genuinely believe that we are good! We all genuinely believe that we are for the benefit of our country and our society. We all genuinely believe that. Even if I criticise somebody and what they are here for, I am playing politics. I admit that. It's the easiest way to show the person up and to show the constituents that the person is not perhaps doing what is right.

But we shouldn't judge the motives of the person, and I believe that is why we are not supposed to impute improper motives on the part of members.

It is accepted in the fraternity that we are all honourable gentlemen. Why is it coming to this? Why is the Legislative Assembly coming to this particular state of disarray? It is coming to this particular state of disarray in proportion to the way in which the country as a whole is coming to disarray. We are only a reflection of what is happening outside. Believe it or not, we are a reflection of the way in which people are dealing with competition; we are a reflection of the way in which people cannot see how to cooperate any more within this competition.

We reflect the fact that relationships are now individualistic and impersonal, competitive and calculating, and contractual rather than being spontaneous and affectionate the way it used to be. We are reflecting this change in our society.

It is important that we show people that it is not the end. It doesn't mean doom. It's a crisis we are going through, and we reflect that in here. Most of us are out of touch. Even when we have regular meetings with members of our constituencies, we are still out of touch. We have lost the ability to communicate with people on an honest level. We communicate as politicians. And the longer you communicate with politicians, the more you lose touch.

How do you communicate as a politician? 'Yeah, well, I believe that too. Yeah, that's true too. Yeah, yeah, you see that too.' And you agree with everything the person says. Then, you turn your back, go, and do what you have to do. That becomes a part of the political culture. So you don't really know what people are going to chastise you for at the polls. You don't really know what is politically correct any more. If we did, we wouldn't be so fearful. And if we weren't so fearful, we wouldn't be fighting all the time.

It's fear that is causing us to fight, fight, and fight. Fear! Fear is the biggest enemy of man. People with confidence in what they are doing, and the fact that they will be returned, don't have to fight that way. But if we go outside, people are fighting out there the same way. We have to deal with the fact that if this country is to survive . . . I was watching Issues 27 last night, and somebody was talking about 75 years from now. There was one member on the programme who gave me the impression that somehow it's not necessary to plan for 75 years from now, that it's done by God or whatever. But God gave us intelligence; therefore, we have reason to plan, to have vision.

Now, it says in the Bible that the people without vision shall perish or falter. So when someone asks what about 75 years from now, you have to be able to say, 'Well, 75 years from now this, this, and this will be happening.' I am 50 years old, all I need is another 25 and I will be 75. So 75 years, as far as I am concerned is a very short time. Well, we have some members here who are older than that, so we know that 75 years is not a long time. A century is no time. We say time passes slowly until it has passed, and then it seems as if it never existed at all. That's the trick. So be careful with time.

I am saying that we have to know where we are going 100 years from now. The British Foreign and Commonwealth Office is encouraging us, thank God, to know and develop this. Otherwise, they would not have given full support to His Excellency the Governor, Mr. Owen, in introducing Vision 2008.

Part of the good governance is that the Foreign Office is saying, "The Foreign Offices' objective set in 1993 to introduce jointly agreed country policy plans in all five Caribbean Territories to enable development priorities to be established has not yet been fully achieved. Three plans have been negotiated, the British Virgin Islands have not disagreed in principle, but have not set a date for negotiation, while the Cayman Islands are developing a strategic plan based on the Bermuda model."

This document is from 1997 so we know that the whole strategic exercise referred to here in the Throne Speech is something that we have a lot of support for.

What I am saying is that we, as politicians (at least those of us on the backbench), can't have very much to do with what happens in the Glass House, what happens with the civil service, because the Constitution (as is often said) prevents us from getting directly involved with these particular issues.

But we need to prepare our fraternity because you cannot have a State in a democratic society without the two arms. You have to have the elected arm as well as the other nominated, appointed arm of the State. For us to be looking towards Vision 2008 we have to also understand the difficulties in implementing an exercise like Vision 2008 in a society where you do not have the kind of organisational basis for it.

Part of the reason why I never participated in the Vision 2008 exercise is because I felt that in the final analysis the plan would suffer as a result of the people who created the plan not understanding the anti-organisational tendencies which exist in our society. If they had approached our society from a more sociological point of view, . . . because it is not just important that people can formulate ideologies, or opinions, or principles, because we can all get together and do that. The difficulty really is implementation of those principles. This is where I believe that we get into the catch.

It is important that the political machinery be encouraged to take responsibility and ownership of these plans in such a way so as to be able to convince our constituents that these plans are good for all of us.

This is not going to happen by us printing pages out of the Vision 2008 exercise in our manifestos, or thinking that this is a good marker to know what to sell to the people. We could go and say that we are going to cut down fewer mangroves because we hear that they want to cut fewer mangroves, or we will do this and that in regard to immigration. But if we do that, we will create even more instability at the end of the day.

Instability comes when government cannot deliver to the people what the people feel government has promised to deliver. Every time a government promises and does not deliver, the dissatisfaction with government and with politicians becomes greater. Without trust you cannot get the kind of changes or agreement in regard to policy that is necessary.

I used to be the kind of person who lived my life according to the next election. So from 1980 until 1996 I lived my life according to the next election. It's a really difficult thing when you think that change can only come every four years. So for the people who are expecting change to come every four years, that disappointment increases and intensifies. Nobody can ever say that over the last 20 years or so they have gotten the feeling that the ability of government has improved that the integrity of government has improved. No, rather it has decreased according to the feeling of most people.

That's a real problem that we, as politicians, need to get out there and fix. If we don't get out there as politicians and fix this credibility gap we have the people who are in the bureaucracy—the permanent secretaries and directors of this, that, and the other, and the good Chief Secretary and his people—are not going to be able to perform, because without us they really have no way of delivering these services to the people. Without us they have no way of collecting the revenue necessary to provide people with these services. Without us they have no way of discriminating in who gets and who does not get these services. We are a necessary part of the democratic process. And if our growth is retarded because of fear and prejudice then whatever is reinvented in the civil service will not help us.

The people come to us to be consoled. The people come to us to make their complaints. The people come to us to pass their judgments. We are a fraternity that needs to mature and go forward. When I see people understanding their political dynamics, that their actions have to be looked at with these particular motives and situations, . . . because if you judge the actions by themselves without analysing the actions within the context in which they have taken place we lose the real substance of our situation.

Our situation is grave at this time. I said 20 years ago that stability is not going to be the result of fear. Stability must be the result of intelligence, of the feeling of security and trust. That is what a State must provide for its citizens, security and trust. Like the family provides the individual member, the State is just an extension, the parent of all the families. We see from the very genesis of democracy that close connection of religion and politics for the same reason—that people must feel that security, that trust in terms of their being a part of a community, a communion being possible between them. They grow together as a result of regular contact. They acquire some feelings that they constitute through uniting together.

We have to become more mature with this particular element. We can do the job playing politics, calling this one names, saying that one is no good. But the country stagnates politically. At the end of the day we have not even been able to deal with the immigration issue.

Now, if we had a political organisation in this country that would complement the civil service bureaucracy we would not put all the stress on the Immigration Department and the Chief Immigration Officer in dealing with this Caymanian dilemma. We inherited the Caymanian dilemma in the creation of what we consider to be Caymanian today.

That dilemma springs from our desire to use labour without giving those persons who labour social and political rights. That was so for the Africans who were brought to these shores in yesteryear, just as it is so today for many of the expats being brought to our shores today. We expect that we can exploit labour without developing a human relationship with those persons who are providing us with these services.

A mature political machinery would grapple with these problems, would analyse these problems and have an overview and a solution at hand and not feel that everything is okay because we are talking about dollars and cents. We were in here for two months arguing about pennies when we have not been able to tell the people how we are going to solve the real big issues in this country—the real big issues that will bankrupt us.

If we do not understand the role of interrelationships, if we do not understand the dynamics of economics and forging social relationships and preserving stability, certainly we will become bankrupt anyway. A country that is socially and politically bankrupt will certainly be economically bankrupt.

I think we have enough examples of that all around us. It is not the pennies you save that will save your country, but the jobs you go out and do well. It's the courage you give your people; it's the confidence you give them, the feeling of security and belonging to the unit that will cause them not to want to destroy it at the end of the day. We have to reach out to our people. We have to find the political mechanism to allow us not to mislead, but to lead.

There is a difference between misleading and leading. First of all, you mislead people when you make them believe that a piece of paper with words on it is more important than the persons who put the words on the paper. When you tell them that a piece of paper, a Constitution, is more important than the concept of good governance then you are not leading, but misleading.

The concern must be for good governance, and good governance can only come when people feel satisfied that they are represented in a way that they can err and have justice; that they can have truth and freedom and stability. The State has the obligation to give the people meaning, or part meaning anyway, to their day to day pursuits. But how did Ella feel when she came back from working in somebody's house serving them drinks, hearing them talk about how they are going to develop this "tax heaven or something like that"?

And she's fearful for her children, and she knows that her children will not be a part of this new "tax heaven" unless her children have an education. There is no other way. So she comes back to tell them that they must go to school, they must learn because that will be the only way that Cayman will belong to them. Cayman will belong to those who have the ability to read and write and to develop those skills.

Therefore, we have an increased obligation to see that education in this country becomes a radical approach. I know a lot of people don't like that word "radical." A radical approach to education would mean that there is education for life, that there is education all over, that everything is seen as learning, which it should be. Every experience is a learning experience. It should be cherished.

You don't go to school and say you will get out when you are 15, 16 or 18 and everything is finished. We have to encourage our children that that is not enough. You can never get enough education. You can get enough of money, but certainly not enough learning. This must be the approach. Our ministers can assist us in the churches that are so well organised and so well placed in the society.

We see when we want to teach kids to say no to drugs what teaching is all about, getting people together so that we can learn to resist those things that would be damaging to our social and political order—drugs! We can organise and we can understand the principle of organising to resist those evils. Then we must know that we can organise to resist other things.

I am so happy that during his time as minister the First Elected Member for West Bay came with the pre-school programme concept. Anybody who hears me praising him might think that I have changed my mind about him again. But, Mr. Speaker, you know I whip and I praise. It's part of my function here. But that pre-school programme, after school programme . . . I was fired from government for writing a letter about pre-school education. Just like I wrote Time Longer Dan Rope, I got that letter too. I got the answers on those particular letters.

But what I want to say here is that if parents don't have the resources to empower their children to be a part of the new Cayman, as Ella in Time Longer Dan Rope obviously did not have, . . . she sent them to school and entrusted the school to make her children educated—“to learn them things so that when they learn dem tings dey could be like Mr. Wyler and Miss Catherine and dem.”

She didn't have the tools, she just heard the conversation. She knew things were going to happen, she had the sensitivity of a mother. She rejected the way of the father. She rejected the barroom stuff and the spending of the money. She rejected that and fought him so that she could concentrate on giving those children an education. She knew that without that education those children couldn't go too far.

Even some parents . . . and it is unfortunate, but this is how it is . . . If the parents are not educated the children most likely won't be educated. Even with a good school system. We have to grasp that. I knew that 20 years ago. So you have to intervene and the earlier the intervention the better off your society will be. The more possibility you have of saving people.

You don't wait until they get to Northward to intervene; you intervene as early as possible and as often as possible. So when they come from school they go to the afternoon centres until 5:00 or 6:00 when the parents pick them up. We need more after school centres. We need after school centres all over George Town, Bodden Town, East End, West Bay, Cayman Brac, all over we need these after school centres. Do you know why? Because when the children are there they achieve a lot.

By being in school already, they have come to a point of concentration that is easier. Even with exercise the brain works the same way: it takes you a while before you get to that point where you settle down and start learning. Even if we start reading. It's hard to get into it, but once you get into it, you get into it.

Children are like that. We need to see all of those things. We need to have this particular awareness and consciousness expressed in our educational policies in this country. We need some young Caymanian education officer. We need someone with enthusiasm, somebody like Marie Martin from George Town Primary who works, works, works, with those kids, and who brings everybody she comes in contact with under discipline and control. She reminds me how Teacher McField and them used to be in the old days. That's what we need.

I mean, imported philosophies? Imported ideologies? Imported concepts? What are we going to do with them? The people who are imported with them often don't know how to transfer them to us. So we have the philosophy, like they say “they have the talk, but they don't have the walk.” And we need to get the walk.

I see an area that could be improved especially in education. The government says they are spending money and building schools, they are doing this and that, but there is still an element of social interaction that if it were improved could cause the whole learning process to change. People could become more and more receptive. I am saying that if we come into neighbourhoods where we know we have parents who are defective in their ability to read and write and do math, and the children are to be trained by them . . . because we have to understand that a lot of learning still has to be done outside the school.

Although the school is a great socialising agency, the family is very important in the socialisation of the learning process. And I don't necessarily want to go into all of that.

We need to explore this particular aspect. Our society, because we have such a catching up to do, needs to revolutionise its approach to learning. We have to have a learning consciousness. Like they had a Cultural Revolution in China, we need to have an educational revolution in Cayman. In other words, everyone thinks education and learning. Everybody is given access to these things. The country cannot spend too much at that particular point because do you know what the country will do? The country will save itself by creating intelligent people who can make intelligent decisions political and otherwise. The country will not remain stable by continuing to perpetuate fear, and by misleading people rather than leading people.

The country needs to awaken to the 21st Century. The country needs to heed the words of His Excellency the Governor, Mr. Owen. The country needs to understand the benevolence of that good gentleman, the strength of that good man in bringing this before us.

I believe that for government to truly be reinvented the political machinery also has to be reinvented. I believe that the first step in reinventing the political machinery is to get rid of some of the superstition and fear that comes when we look at the Constitution and when we talk about the Constitution. Believe it or not, not just lawyers know how to read Constitutions.

Constitutions weren't basically written as legal documents. They were the documents of men. They were about how men felt. They were about covenants. They were about responsibilities and an obligation to one's self, and one's land, and one's people. They expressed hopes and dreams, and they were not to do with the crossing of T's and the dotting of i's. The Constitution is the body of the politics. We need to get into ours. We need to stop being alienated from ours.

We need to stop being pushed away by someone saying, “You can't touch that Constitution because if you touch that Constitution you know what will happen.' No, sir. It will last as all human documents last, because of the integrity of the persons dealing with them, and not because they are a piece of paper. So, I am asking that we begin to look at where the country is going to be a year from today; where the country is going to be in the year 2000.

I believe also that we are beginning to feel the fever and the spirit of the next election. I believe that somehow people are beginning to mobilise themselves as individuals and in small packs, or groups or bands. People are beginning to band together for this. But what about the people? Who is mobilising the people? Who is talking to the people? Who is asking the people? Who is being suggested by the people? Are the people necessary as a part of the political process? Are they necessary only during elections? Can it really work this way?

Maybe it could work that way when we just had chickens to count as resources and a few cows, and a few little roads. Back in the days when we really didn't have very much to make decisions about. But when you are making decisions about $300 million, when you are making decisions about the fact that your assets have multiplied over the years; when you are making decisions about assets and aeroplanes; when you are making decisions about nationalities being included or excluded; when you are making decisions about who will be able to own businesses you need to encourage an informed public.

You need to get an informed public involved continuously in the decision-making process in feeding you the opinions on a day-to-day basis almost. That is one reason why the MLA office is so important. It allows that to happen, if you so desire it to happen. It is not the formal political party office, but the MLA has his office there and he can develop tremendous rapport with his constituents that he can bring back and express by way of his contributions in the Legislative Assembly making the government the executive therefore wiser.

But I think it's another important thing when we look at the Constitution. When we look at the fact that Executive Council is elected here by the backbenchers, the Executive Council owes the backbench an obligation that in the final analysis it follows the direction of the backbench. I have already said that in here. In the reform of the political system, the backbench should be leading in the Legislative Assembly.

It is unfair when we come into a situation where three members are normally in place here, and they go along with five members so that the five that we put up can now go against us and ignore our wishes and ignore what we are saying the people want. That's a very dangerous position. Government must always be very calculated in disobeying the backbench, even if they feel that they don't need them to vote along with them because they have three extra votes that they pick up for free, that they didn't have to campaign to get, that the people never gave them in the first place.

The people gave them us, and they should never cut themselves away from us in order to rely on those three. They should never put those three in that kind of political predicament.

When it really comes to difficult issues and talking about reforms, and talking about the Constitution we see that if the people are supposed to be represented genuinely and if the people believe that when they express their will at periodic elections, and they choose 15 people to represent them, and then we come here and have no power because somebody else is put here to help whichever government it is (be it the government of [Government] Motion 3/90 or whatever) . . . you can't have democracy that way. I'm sorry.

We need to start sharpening our sensitivity in regard to these things and we need to be doing some revising within our political fraternity just like they are doing in the others.

Mr. Speaker, are you ready for the break?

The Speaker: Ten minutes more.

Dr. Frank McField: Ten minutes?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that a state of anarchy is personally harmful to the individual. No individual really wants to have anarchy. I am not preaching anarchy. Okay? Anarchy means the state of lawlessness, a state where everybody is doing his or her own thing. That kind of state I do not support.

I believe that the order of the state is to create the environment for the moral life to be conducted in that the moral life has to do with our ideas, our feelings, and our interests. That body politic. The control over that should never be taken away from the people. People should always have the right to make those decisions in regard to the collective way of life and the collective consciousness.

Now, we need to get a little bit more in tune with the belief and sentiments of the people in regard to the real issue we have on our hands at the moment. That issue is immigration. Whether or not I do myself disfavoured, I am going to say some real strange things about immigration.

I happen to sincerely believe that I am a part of a civilisation and a history that is more glorious, more extensive than the limited experience I have made in 50 years. I believe that I am a part of a civilisation and a history that is more glorious than the last 250 years of our beloved Cayman Islands. As persons we therefore have the possibility to fall back for ideas and values (as we do with our Constitution and our political process) on Europe and Great Britain, and we find that the beginning of our consciousness did not begin with anything that was indigenous to the Cayman Islands.

What was indigenous, in fact, was the land. If we had anything that began to make us different, it was the fact that we ended up here some 350 years ago and that we began to work the soil here. We began to have our lifestyles and our feelings and ideas influenced by these particular endeavours and that made us slightly different from our forefathers in Europe and Africa.

In this sense it does not mean because we had this experience that we are not a part of the greater civilisation, the greater collective consciousness, the greater feelings and ideas that exist. We should claim this just like we claim our Parliamentary Westminster tradition. And this claiming of a relationship that is beyond being Caymanian gives us the potential to accept persons who are not Caymanian in marriage, in friendship, as superiors in the courts, in government, in the churches, spiritual leaders, and other very important areas.

That is an aspect of our lives that makes us almost unique. There are not many geographical places that have been separated enough to be considered a separate identity or separate country with that kind of flexibility in its relationship with outsiders, where outsiders can actually have positions of authority in so many different ways, positions which demand respect, trust and love. That is unique to us. But that happened up until now. What the future holds doesn't look the same.

That happened because we didn't have the kind of competition for resources that we had in other places. As a result, we could get carried away by our so-defined friendliness, and our so-defined stability, and our so-defined religious heritage. We could get carried away to the extent that we do not understand the sociological dynamics that made these things possible and if we don't understand that, we will not be able to evolve the new conditions in order to maintain that as a principle. What we are conscious of now is that these are our standards and we have to maintain these standards. But in order to maintain these as standards we will have to evolve in the future to consciously go out to maintain them and preserve them. So we have that to look at.

I have also spoken about the inability of Caymanians to get together and work together. Some persons have said that this is also a result of the fact that we seem to like foreigners better than we like ourselves. I would like to deal with this at some particular point because the question of immigration, as I am developing this thesis, is that we are a people that started with few numbers.

Our condition was not because of choice. We did not say we establish this democracy, it was very ad hoc. We are at a point today where we can begin to talk about establishing this or that particular State in the sense that we had numbers here that were insufficient from the very beginning for the kind of economic activity we needed to have, so that everybody could have a particular standard of living. We had to do without a lot from the beginning of our settlement. We were very poor and very powerless because we did not have the numbers on our side. So let's remember that.

We came here to this particular landmass with numbers that were insufficient. In addition, we brought Africans here to increase the numbers and the possibility for economic exploitation but that was still not enough because after emancipation in 1834 a lot of them moved to the Bay Islands and our numbers decreased. So, by 1905 we only had 5,000 people or so coming into this century that we will soon be going out of.

How many will we have in the year 2005? The difference is that we didn't have the economic pull factors to pull people here, whereas today we have the pull factors, and we have push factors in other countries which means poverty and whatever. So we have the pull factors and the push factors at hand. Obviously, we will attract emigrants, just like America attracted emigrants, because of the pull factor as well as the push factor.

So, we are an ideal destination for emigrants when we were not before. As a result, the whole settlement concept, the will to settle this territory and make it a developed society, had to be put on hold for all of these years and now we have the logistics and the situation to make that happen.

The serious question will be, Will we allow it to happen? Or will we digress and go backwards? We feel less powerful if that will happen, that we will have less. This is important if a government is to evolve an immigration policy that is humanistic. If somebody came before and . . . all I am saying is that we need to be more conscious of history. We need to be more conscious of the future.

We can't say that we don't know what will be 75 years from now because I told you in Time Longer Dan Rope in 1979 that I knew what today would be. We cannot be caught in that position. We need to know what is going to happen 75 years from today. And the only way we can know that is to know our past.

If we know our past, we have the possibility to predict our future. And if the future we are predicting is not as nice as we think it should be, then we have the possibility today to do things to cause it to be nicer than it would be. We are human beings, we have choices, and therefore we know what we have to do.

If you want to take the break now, I am quite happy to do so.

The Speaker: We will suspend proceedings until 2.15 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.50 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.35 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Dr. Frank McField: When we adjourned for lunch I was dealing with the question of identity, nationality and immigration. I would just like to re-state the position of His Excellency the Governor because my debate is trying to enhance the political side of his presentation. He said, "Vision 2008, reinvention of government, fiscal reform, public sector management reform and freedom of information initiatives have given the Cayman Islands the opportunity to break out of the strait jacket of a colonial style system of bureaucracy which seeks to control from the centre. The challenge to Cayman is to embrace the reforms which will provide for a better more responsive style of government which focuses responsibility and decision making where it can be the most effective to meet the objective of giving value for money for every dollar voted by this Legislative Assembly. The future is in your hands."

If we have no political maturity, if we have no notion of what the specific political reforms will be, it is difficult to imagine what the reforms within the colonial bureaucracy will entail and how this will impact our ability as legislators to better represent the people.

As I am talking about political maturity, I want to talk about the need for a political mechanism that would be able to not only influence a consensus but would be able to take that consensus into account regarding the formulation of policies that would begin to structure our relationships in this society.

I began to talk about the process of the actual development of the Cayman Islands because I felt that in looking at our history we would be more able to decide what social relationships were by way of choice, and what social relationships were by way of accident. It is the social relationships that are by way of choice that we need to preserve not those relationships and conditions that were by way of accident. Therefore, I tried to show how the very settlement of the Cayman Islands in the original period was the result of something that was more of an accident than a planned, human experiment. If it were planned there were flaws to the plans. And what resulted was a society that did not have the capacity to do more than be a subsistent farming society which used a cutlass and hoe to provide food provision for its members, and who later on developed the trade of boat building and fishing.

After the population decline in the 1840s, it was increased to 220.

The general effects of the emigration of British subjects to this particular territory resulted in isolation and poverty. And that that isolation and poverty did not create the pull factors to entice more emigrants to come, but created the very opposite push factors which caused people to emigrate to the Bay Islands in the late 1830s and part of the 1840s. As a result, in 1902 our population was a mere 5,000.

There could be no sophisticated economic development without additional migrants coming to the Cayman Islands to participate in the exchange of goods and services between individuals. In other words, we needed to find an economic pursuit that made it possible to attract more members in order to form the society. So we are different from the other societies in the sense that we have consciousness of how it began here and the numbers that started the colony and where they came from and what types of relationships they had with one another.

Part of the change that we need to be looking at is people that had some particular type of attachment to the Cayman Islands migrated elsewhere as did people who fished, for instance, which is part of the nature of the human being. We follow the success, the food, and the watering hole. So emigration was a very real part of our history so that the numbers who remained and who could even be considered to be faithful to the soil here were very few indeed.

If we were to start to build a society based on those numbers, if we were to begin to define who belonged by way of those numbers, we would have to take the question of choice and accident into consideration, if we were being sensible and conscious. Men will always chose to be where there is food and shelter. Therefore, those persons who left the Cayman Islands left because that gave them the opportunity to have improved access to food and shelter. They went to the Bay Islands because land was available there, and they had been led to believe that the British government would protect the Bay Islands as a protectorate of England, and that it would not be an area of Honduras. So, the people left by choice.

People stayed here. But those who stayed within the Cayman Islands at that particular period (1840s onward), might later be considered to be Caymanians. But one thing they shared with those persons who went to the Bay Islands was that they were all British subjects. What they shared on a local domestic level was that they had a common experience in trying to build a new life for themselves in this particular area of the world with all of the swamps and mosquitoes and poverty and hardship.

They had a shared experience in an almost spontaneous resistance to organised and civil government. Part of the experiences they had at that time began to shape what we consider to be the character of this new individual—the Caymanian. The Caymanian is, by way of this isolation, by way of this poverty, by way of this limited number, a unique phenomenon of this particular Colonial effort by British subjects at that particular time.

This is important because if we are going to talk about immigration and integration we have to be able to talk about what it is about our national personality and character that is by way of accident and what is by way of choice. What makes us different from other people? What makes it impossible for us to integrate? What is it about our shared beliefs, values, and norms that prohibit this type of integration? What is it? Is there anything that will prevent it?

I was saying that we were in a unique position simply because of the lack of institutionalisation of ideas and values in the society; the lack of civil government, the lack of an institutional church, the lack of an institutional school system, the lack of formation of a stable, rigid upper class within this community. Because the society was and remained a transit society for so long, there were no values institutionalised to the extent that would make it impossible for others to come in and join us as equals. As a result, since the 1840s (with the coming of the missionaries) we have been able to integrate other persons within our society that was not rigidly structured or institutionalised.

We were able to integrate the missionaries who played a very important role in assisting in the creation of social stratification within our particular society. We begin to see that even the churches became more of an important institution in forming our concept of class and values and beliefs than even the sphere of the private sector economic order. Our entrepreneur spirit is almost put to sleep in that it cannot be as competitive with merchants and other persons in other parts of the Caribbean.

At the end we note that there was an incomplete process that was made dormant by the lack of economic activities in the society that led to specialisation and differentiation with individual persons. This is part of our history that I believe we need to be conscious of if we are to make history consciously, and not take them for granted as if Caymanians are this or that, or if there is no reason why we are that way as if we are naturally inbred with these genes and attitudes. We are what we are as a result of our socialisation, our social and political history, our economic history.

We are now at the crossroads. We need to become more intent upon being the directors of our destiny. We are now more at the position where we cannot say we don't know what's going to happen in 75 years, where we must say we know what's going to happen in 75 years, why we must make a decision today to effect what will happen in 75 years.

I believe that what I am saying is that Cayman is a mixed community, a community where no group came after 1834 to establish its predominance; where no government actually came to establish any kind of political ideologies; where in 1840 Caymanians were not able to raise more than one-eighth of the cost of missionary activity and government revenue was almost non-existent. Therefore we could not have the beginning of a political process. The political process, like the economic process, like the school process and all those institutions, remained dormant for a very long time.

When we came to 1972 when the island started to emerge, where the island that time forgot came to be recognised by the outside world and the outside forces as a place to invest money, and by that investment we began to attract other persons, it was then that we had our first Constitution Order that was made to suit a country like I have described to suite the personalities and characteristics that were not used to institutionalised behaviour. Since 1972 we have become more and more regimented and more and more accustomed to relationships that are impersonal, contractual, that have to do with efficiency and rationality. We are organised by way of our jobs, in particular. People are organised in schools and so forth and so on. We do have that institutionalisation of the Caymanian personality and Caymanian behaviour to a large extent that is different from the pre-1972 situation.

One of the things that happened in the 1972 Constitution which is important for the concept of nationality and identity and for all of these particular questions, is that the assumption is that this is a British Territory. That the culture the habits and the language of the people is predominately British, and that this Constitution is to allow for the better governance of these persons who have the connection with Britain. Part of our legacy and our heritage is British, and we extend this and begin to develop this by way of the Constitution taking on a political order that assumes and accepts our identity and our nationality as being British.

This does not necessarily mean that we have not developed characteristics and values and other habits that are not uniquely of this particular Caymanian experience. But on the larger level we have an identity and a personality that is British, potentially even more British by way of laws and politics in particular. We have the Westminster system here, Mr. Speaker. When we come to the question of persons being allowed to settle here, to vote here, they were allowed to do this because we continued to accept our being a part of the British Empire.

So persons coming from Canada back in 1977, 1982, 1984, were allowed to come here and settle. People coming from Jamaica were allowed to come here and take up activities as productive human beings based upon the rights and privileges afforded to them as a result of the convention of being members of the British Commonwealth. Those who were coming from Jamaica which was no longer a British Colony continued to enjoy similar rights and privileges because of the extension of the Commonwealth, the concept of belonging.

Although locally we could consider ourselves belonging to Cayman, internationally we belonged to a political and military concept that was far greater than this territory.

As I said, that meant that other persons came in here and there were no institutional blocks to their taking up certain types of positions. Caymanians, because of the way they were, because of the fact that institutions developed so late and there was no particular group who achieved dominance, and because of the lack of our experience with aggressive competition, were able to absorb the first wave of emigrants in the 1970s and 1980s. Those people were able to integrate themselves to become heads of our newspapers, to become heads of our court system, our churches, and our schools. In all aspects of life, we were able to integrate the other people because the other people were not so significantly different from us that this integration seemed unnatural.

We were going along continuing the experiment that took place in the 17th Century of trying to form a society. A society is more than a few people getting together. And the more we need, the more we want. The more sophisticated we become, the more society must grow in order to provide us with those desires and needs. It was a process of trying to find a better life. It was a process of trying to improve our access to shelter and food that drove us in the beginning and that continue to drive us. Those Caymanians who decided to come back home became almost like returning emigrants because they were coming here to find exactly what drives people.

One philosopher said that a man's nationality is his pocketbook. That is not so far-fetched from the essence. If there is no food in a country, you are going to leave and go to a country where there is food. So, Caymanians who went away started to come back. Those Caymanians who were here, who didn't go away, started to say, 'They went away. They are not as 'Caymanian' as we are.' From that particular point we find that there are differences even in how individual Caymanians define themselves, or whether or not we accept that somebody is entitled to call himself Caymanian. Even when we come to the whole concept of status, whether or not a person can call himself a Caymanian is not a new situation.

I went away for 11 years or so. When I first came back in 1977, people looked at me with scepticism because I had broken away from my peers for a period. It took quite a while to come back. If there were a question of devotion to the group, I would probably be considered less devoted than the person who never moved. The assumption was that the new emigrant had less loyalty than the one who had been here for a long period of time, because we were all emigrants in the beginning. We all went through the transformation of becoming Caymanian. It took time, but we all became people who called ourselves Caymanian and we began to act like what we believed Caymanians acted like.

In defining the Caymanian, we are at a point where we are Caymanians, but at the same time, we are British. So even those of us born and brought up here still have a duality about us that we need to figure out.

As we attempt to deal with the White Paper and Britain offering us on an individual basis perhaps full British citizenship, we will see that because of our nationality and the way in which we are governed and organised politically and economically, that we are part of a bigger entity that that which we call the Cayman Islands. The identity crisis, which has become more of an issue in our society, is not surprising. It is not surprising when we look at the choices that were available to persons.

For instance, those people who left and went to the Bay Islands in the 1840s who had children and grandchildren who might come to Cayman, look like us and might even behave very similar to us, . . . to say to them that they are not Caymanian presents us with a moral dilemma. Some people had to make the choice way back in 1840 to reverse the immigration process and go to the Bay Islands, Honduras and other places like that. People who lost their British citizenship as the result of being in those places over a period of time are not being allowed to reintegrate themselves to this Caymanian community although genetically we could see their features and would find that a lot of them look like us.

We not only have that problem, but we have the problem in terms of the dualities. We have the problem when we looked at those persons who went to Cuba back in the 1930s and 1950s. My mother was born and raised in Cuba. And, on my father's side, I have many, many relatives in Cuba. When I look at them I can see the similarities in the genes. The problem in trying to decide who belongs is a very, very complicated issue and government must help the normal citizen with this process.

If we do not become involved in the dynamics of breaking this whole system down and looking at it from this particular perspective, what will happen is that society will become bankrupt because of its inability to deal with social relationships that have developed as a result of economic predicaments. We must make sure that we begin to show our people how to integrate these relationships into their consciousness, their beliefs and values. That has to come from the government. It won't just come from itself.

But a political system that accepts itself as being a second class, colonial, system does not get motivated in empowering its people to make the changes necessary for society to be better off. It thinks that those changes should come from elsewhere, like everything else. This is one of the great difficulties that we have. So the Governor is making statements that are very positive to the government bureaucracy, but we are not making statements as to how we are going to reform the political process in such a way to do all that is necessary for us to do in dealing with the identity crisis and the nationality crisis.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That is true!

Mr. Roy Bodden: Talk about the death of colonialism too.

Dr. Frank McField: Now we have to look at what it is when people come and say to you, 'Oh, you're my family. I'm from Cuba (or Honduras, or Banaca, or here or there) and you're my family.' And you've never met these people before. We realise that we are getting other people whom not from a genetic point of view claim to be related to us, but who were related to us by the mere fact of being Commonwealth citizens. By that fact they had a relationship with us. By the mere fact that they were Christians they had a relationship with us. By the mere fact that they spoke the same language they had a relationship with us.

Now what is it that causes men to conceive of nationality? What is it that causes us to think that he is one of us? What is it that has propelled us to come up with this thing of he belongs but she doesn't belong? And if we go back into the Bible, we see clear examples of how this works out.

We go back to Noah and Moses, and God's promises and how they began to see themselves and set themselves aside as a special, chosen group. We begin to see how the nation is tied to the church, to God, and how the oneness in God makes the possibility for there to be a oneness in the nation.

We begin to understand that although blood is important, the covenant blood is more important. The social bonds and religious bonds are more important. We used to talk about religious bonds. Today we talk about social and political bonds. So, by entering into a Constitution, a covenant, we become more importantly brothers. This is the reason why we can talk about the evolution of a Caymanian identity and we can see that it is possible. We can see that we can benefit at the end of the day from development and we don't have to throw ourselves backwards and say, 'He not Caymanian, and he not Caymanian, and he not Caymanian.' Then at the end of the day the only ones who can say they are Caymanian number five, six, seven or eight. After we get them, then we say, 'Well, he was away too long. He can't be Caymanian.'

We don't want to digress to the point where we take away the power. We want to progress to the extent where we empower society to go about its business, to go about caring for its economic relationships in such a way that the moral order can be improved. We have to understand that no political system existed without a philosophical system. No political system can ever exist without ideals and values and beliefs. And we see that very clearly when Moses set up the Ten Commandments. We see it!

We see how in order for a group to work together there is a necessity for the institutionalisation of the values and norms of the society. It is "he who keeps my covenant that I protect." It is he who belongs by way of the covenant partnership. So those of us who are Christian, those of us who understand the Bible can understand how a nation is created and how a nation can grow.

All I am saying is that we have to give the dualities legitimacy. We have to accept the fact that somebody can come from Cuba, who had a grandmother who was Caymanian, and be a Caymanian. Why? Because it is conceivable that this might be the desire of a number of people. And the economic condition does not prevent that from happening. As a matter of fact, it encourages it.

Therefore, there is no reason why the resolve should not be to deal with this problem in this way. There is no reason why somebody who came from Jamaica back in the 1970s who has been here for a whole 30 years, or 15 years, who was born here 20 years ago, should not be encouraged where this duality is put to rest and that person is accepted as a covenant partner in that sense. We can see that not doing that would create a moral dilemma for us. We can see that there are no economic motives to prevent that from happening.

We are not saying that there will be no competition between people because we understand that we have developed a society that is more competitive than it ever was. Because there is more competition, there is more fear. And because there is more fear, there is more hatred. What we need to do as a government is to send out signals to the people that we understand the dilemma, that we understand the situation and that we will empower ourselves politically to be able to manage these things in a way that will be of no detriment to those persons with indigenous connections.

People want to know that at the end of the day they have a place to live that they have food to eat that they have education for their children, that they have all these things. The only fear they have of the foreigner is that these things will be taken away from them. If we as a State can assure them that this will not happen, then they will not have a problem with the integration desirable at this particular time in order to preserve this level of economic activity. This level of economic activity would be impossible with less numbers.

We need to go to the highways and the byways of this island to teach people about how we have become an institutionalised society where contractual relationships and relationships of efficiency and rationality are now more important than spontaneous affectionate relationships. That is what has happened. Although the spontaneous relationships have gone the State has come in to a very large extent and taken over trying to fulfill this role where the social web has broken down.

I explained that in regard to the pre-school programmes, the after school programmes, the support of the veterans, the elderly, the handicapped, the State is now being empowered by a new source of revenue and resources to come in and do what was done in that society that was at a different stage of development. Although institutionalisation has occurred and things have become less personal, the State (the government) is trying to make the burden of this development as light as possible on the Caymanian people.

All governments of the Cayman Islands have done their job. I am not saying it was a perfect job, but I recognise all those persons who have participated in the development of the Cayman Islands because all that has been collected has gone back to the people. They have not taken it for embassies or armies or all these things. They have spent it on the people. So we still have a good system. It does not have major corruption. But we need to deal with the dangers.

The danger is that if we do not, as a political fraternity, get together and deal with the issues that are pressing to destroy us, then we would have let our country down. We have to talk to the people about the facts. The fact is that tomorrow your son and my son will not look at where they came from. They will not be looking at where the person came from. That is only what we will see. We will remember. But then one day we will cease to exist and they will have to go on and live their lives. We should know what is going to happen 75 years from today.

I tell you that 75 years from today the Cayman Islands will not only be the pearl of the Caribbean, but it will be the pearl of the world!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

Dr. Frank McField: The Cayman Islands will be the New Jerusalem. This is what will happen 75 years from today. The Cayman Islands as they were "founded upon the sea" will be the New Jerusalem, and we can only be that when we understand the whole concept of covenants and partnerships and trust and love and security.

Mr. Roy Boddan: Preach, brother, preach!

Dr. Frank McField: The State is empowered by God to play this role here on earth. So we cannot begin to act like a bunch of feeble, disorganised individuals, blaming everything . . . 'Well, we can't do nothin' about this, that and the other thing.'

With vision—Vision 2008—we can do much. But we are not going to do much if I feel, 'Boy, if I tell them that I believe that them people should get a little rights in this country, that he not voting for me. You know, I want that seat real bad.' Well, at the end of the day I might have my seat, but I am going to have a lot of problems and it will be a disservice to my country. I think the country demands that we be honest, especially with the issue of immigration.

The country demands that the reforms begin to happen. The country demands that we explain a little bit more about how economics is organised. I said that fear causes us not to want the integration. We feel that if we integrate we would have less than we have now. The interesting thing about it is when people walk down the street . . . to walk the street you must walk in an orderly fashion. You can't just do whatever you want. If you say that you own something, that Cayman belongs to you, . . . if Cayman belongs to you, what belongs to me?

If I go in the Speaker's house, the Speaker will say, 'Sorry, sir, this is my house.' So that doesn't belong to me. If I go to the home of the Minister of Tourism he would say, 'This doesn't belong to you.' I am beginning to feel that if Cayman belongs to me, it's not the whole of the Cayman Islands. Right?

We need to make people understand that what belongs to you, really, is the right to be a part of the group. That's what belongs to you. That is what the State gives and entitles you to—to belong. It doesn't give you anything else. Whatever belongs to you, you must get through your activities as a private individual. And that is very important to teach to people. In order to amass wealth, power, prestige and privilege, you have to work even harder because the state of society is best protected when everybody is working at his or her best. And we are only working at our best when we are competing. As soon as I understand that I don't have to compete against you, that's the day I stop being better.

If the desired state is improvement, the mechanism for that is competition. Now, competition doesn't mean destroying. Competition is ultimately cooperation. Or, cooperation is competition. It's the same with America that believes so much in the individual but also in the collective, because one could not exist without the other. They are interdependent.

The reason why education is so important is that education becomes the only channel by which we can redistribute wealth. We distribute it according to their abilities. We cannot find another way to distribute wealth because if we did we would be very subjective. We would say, 'I think he should have that,' and that wouldn't be right. That would begin to destroy our society.

Our economic system is a capitalist system. And in a capitalist system you have to own what you own by way of your own efforts. You cannot own it because your country has it. You can't own it because the state owns it. You can't be entitled to anything but by your own actions. The State can become involved, and this is one reason why the reforms the Governor mentioned are good. It will free the government bureaucracy to pay more attention to value for money. "Every dollar voted by the Legislative Assembly will now be able to get more value for money." So we are talking about reforms that need political explanations.

The Governor came here and explained certain things to us. But the Governor comes to the Legislative Assembly once a year to deliver the Throne Speech. We, as politicians, now have to sell the programme. We have to sell the programme of government reforms and we have to show the people how those government reforms are related to broader political reforms.

Mr. Roy Bodden: You're talking sense!

Dr. Frank McField: Those people who are not going to show how these programmes are related to broader political reforms are going to be cheating the people again, are going to be using fear to cause people to protect the status quo. At the end of the day who will the status quo protect?

There are persons in the country who believe that politicians should not feel that they are special, should not feel that they have power. But that is why we were elected. We are the collective power of the people. Government is the collective power of the people, and if we represent the people collectively we are powerful. We are ultimately the power. So we cannot have it both ways. We cannot vote for people and say we are going to put them in office and then say they shouldn't have power. Once we put them in office, they have to have power.

But some people feel that those of us who get the mandate from the people will abuse our power. I believe that that is one reason why people talk about a Bill of Rights and certain things. They believe that somehow the individual also needs to be protected from the State.

Believe it or not, no matter how benevolent the State is, the State might still get in a situation where it begins to abuse the people's rights 70 years from now as persons were asking last night on the television. Or even 20 years from now the way things change so fast. It might come to a point that this will happen. We don't know. We have the protection of Britain at this particular time, but we never know what might happen. I am saying that we need to have a different development in politics. We need to be honest about that.

Regarding this whole concept of British nationality, I believe that if we are offered British nationality that we have to see this within the wider context. We have to see the pros and cons of this. We have to see this within some of the preaching that I have been talking about, the dualities and how we can come to live with these dualities because that is the way the world is. As Caymanians we are not going to have anything more by virtue of being Caymanians. I think I have demonstrated that by saying that in a capitalist society what you have is what you have to work for. The fact that we might want to become more insular rather than going outwards is not going to help individual Caymanians, especially not the individual poorer Caymanians.

I took great time to look at nationalism in developing countries. I have always seen that nationalism is something that cheats the poorer class of people. When ownership is taken over by the State, when nationalisation does occur, it is not the poorer people who benefit. The rich classes of professionals who are well situated and jealous of their colonial masters are waiting to assume their positions and carry out the same kind of negative social relations.

I am not a nationalist because I believe it is an outdated philosophy of trying to arrive at a good moral state. I believe that what is more positive is if we look according to people's contributions. And that we begin to pay serious attention to them because of that.

If people were assuming that the more we become full British citizens would be the more that we lose, then I am saying that that is incorrect. We are not going to get anything more as individuals than we have unless we work for it. Nothing more will come to us simply because Cayman has it. Wealth is a funny thing; it has a lot to do with activities. And if those activities are destroyed or hampered in any way, that wealth will be destroyed. That is true. I have seen it. It is the truth.

Nobody is preaching servitude. Nobody is preaching inferiority. I am talking about the fact that at this particular time in the Colonial drama that began some 200 or 300 years ago with the offshoot of the settlement in Jamaica, that we have persevered with the British Empire, that we have persevered over those times when they brought in the Nationality Act to deny people in the Colonies full citizenship. . . we persevered and we did not go alone. Today when things are getting better on an international level, where it is hard even for the most super powers to abuse other people, we are talking about it might not be a good thing because we might be losing.

We persevered. We should always have been entitled to full British citizenship. It was only racial politics in Britain that caused this not to be so in the first place and we must tell our people that. We must tell our people that we are going to be offered an entitlement that should have never been a question.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Although I don't want it.

Dr. Frank McField: It should have never been a question.

We have to look at expanding our horizons. We have to look at improving our choices. And that's what I am talking about, improving our choices. We do not have to be reciprocal in terms of those particular relationships, there is no reciprocity. As far as I am concerned, reciprocity would make it ludicrous.

I can see why we should not short-change ourselves to destroy that duality. We must know what happens tomorrow, what happens in 75 years. A place like this is very small. A place like the Caribbean is very troubled. There is a lot of turmoil in places like Central and South America. We don't know what competition will entail from the point of view of types of preparations we have to make.

I say to those persons who think about independence that I am talking about deficiencies in the Constitution that I see could be corrected. But I am not talking about independence. One can hear, by the way I talk about certain things, that I am not talking about independence. So nobody needs to go and say, 'Well, he's talking about independence.'

If we had to be independent tomorrow and set up embassies, armies, and this and that, we would have to tax the people to the max. I hear everybody grumbling when one little revenue measure goes in. What do you think would happen if those people had taken this to the conclusion of independence? If everybody is upset about a little tobacco tax, and a little alcohol tax, what do you think would happen if you had to maintain missions in all of these countries, and provide for your own defence and internal security? I mean, come on. Let's be practical.

Let us not encourage our people to think that everything is possible. Let us encourage our people to make the best choices given the situation.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.32 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.10 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Dr. Frank McField: Before I continue, I would like to apologise to certain members for the length of my deliberation, but I felt moved to approach this opportunity in this way. It's not often that we have this kind of scope in our deliberations.

When we took the break, I was talking about the cost that might occur if we gave consideration to independence. I said quite clearly that I was not for independence, but that I was for taking a fresh look at the Constitution and at the entire political process. I feel that without political reforms as well as reform on the administrative level that the entire exercise will go aground.

I also spoke in regard to the concept of British nationality, the whole idea that we are British now and it appears as if we might be given the opportunity to have full British citizenship. Some persons seem to be concerned. And the Governor mentioned the challenges that we must deal with.

One of those challenges is the OECD initiative on so-called tax havens. He writes, "The Cayman Islands government and all the Members of this House are united on the need for Cayman to engage in dialogue with the OECD. But in doing so we need not be defensive." I would just like to bring this OECD question in with the question of nationality and the question of immigration.

At this particular time it appears that certain persons believe that the motive behind the British government offering full citizenship to the Cayman Islands would mean that it would be seeking to have greater control over our financial industry, and that would result in them levying taxes on us. I am not of that opinion. I can see other reasons why at this particular time their clarifying that issue in regard to other European partners would be of paramount importance.

You cannot have half-citizens. A country cannot have two classes of citizens. There cannot be two British nationalities; there can only be one on an international level. In my travels in Europe between 1970 and 1977, I experienced how people reacted when they were confronted with the idea that I had a British passport, yet I was subject to passport controls within the United Kingdom. Most Europeans do not have that type of experience with this type of duality. So I am saying that I don't believe that the situation to clarify this political contradiction is just one that has to do with us. I believe it has to do with internal politics in Britain and with Britain's potential relationship with its European partners.

Even if we were to assume that taxation would be a result of it, we would also have to look at the possibility if we said we were not going to accept that we were going to go independent, then we would have to look at what it would cost us to go independent by way of taxation anyway. If our entire financial structure were based upon the absence of these particular kinds of taxation, then independence would inhibit our economic well being. I prefer to take the chance with the British government at this particular time. If there were a choice, I would go with the more established situation because at the end of the day we know that a bigger country would be in a much better situation to fend for its members internationally over the next 70 or so years.

It is necessary to think about what kind of developments we are going to have in the world, especially with terrorism and the spite of the Arab countries for Christians and our belief system. We have to look at these very realistically, and those of us who are conscious of not only our history, but that of other countries, know that we must think forward. If our ancestors can be criticised for anything, it is because they were not a historically conscious group of people. They basically kept no records.

We have to begin to see ourselves as permanent. We have to not just see ourselves as functioning for today, but we must think in terms of legacies so that every generation that comes does not have to go through the same kind of struggles and tribulations that we have. We must institutionalise our beliefs and our values to reflect our interests. I think that will be done by our looking at the offer of full British citizenship in an objective rather than an emotive manner; in a manner other than a petty nationalistic manner saying that somebody is offering us something at this particular time because they want to take away what we have.

We must remember that what we have is a result of the process of the migration of persons here in order to work and develop capital that was brought from the outside to the Cayman Islands. We did not have the economic dynamics to develop domestically internally. It was only therefore a result of this fusion between external and internal factors. So we, more than any other Caribbean country, have that kind of duality in terms of our economic being and interests. We have that international interest. We have to be protected on an international level. We have to be able to negotiate as equal partners with Germany, with France, and with Switzerland and the United States. And we cannot do that from our position, therefore we need the United Kingdom in order to accomplish that. We must tell our people that.

We must not let prejudice and bad experiences make the choices for us. We must remember that at one particular time we had very few choices, and now that we have the opportunity to make choices because of the wealth that is being accumulated in the country, we should make choices that will enhance our moral situation. In other words, enhance our standard of living. That it is not just a material state of being but also a moral state of being.

The fact that we will continue to be British citizens, in my assumption we will maintain that international stature. As Caymanians we don't have the might to get out there and enforce our sovereignty. So the question of power, the question of nationality, the question of belonging continues to remain an issue that is not just something decided domestically. It is not something that can just be decided as a result of naivety and jealousy. It has to be something that is decided upon by the full scope of our predicament. And it must take into account our new-found wealth and the social relationships that have resulted as a result of that new found wealth.

We find within our society today persons who were born here and who went to school here, who have to come to the sad realisation that they are not Caymanian. It reminds me of the problems with race relations in America where little Negro kids played with White kids until one day somebody called them "Niger" and they went home and discovered that somehow they were different. Kids find that very difficult to deal with. Adults can deal with these problems, but kids find it very difficult to deal with.

So we must have in our hearts an idea of that experience when we are dealing with immigrant kids in the Cayman Islands who were born here, went to school with their peers, feel that they are Caymanian, and then when they go to get a job find that they need a work permit and they can't get jobs. This is not a situation that is as a result of economics, Mr. Speaker. This is as a result of our inability to understand and to accept that our country has changed and that our nationality has evolved. The characteristics of our people have evolved. We are in a new error and we must institutionalise and protect the changes so that they will not be eroded and go by the wayside like soil that is not held down by the roots of the trees.

I am saying that we can look at the problem if we have an overview and are committed to preserving the progress. We can convince people that the social relationships that have resulted from economic progress are not detrimental to the well being of the people. We can convince the Caymanian people that the government's access to resources by way of fees and taxes (as a result of foreign corporations being located on our shores, as a result of work permit fees and foreign people carrying out economic activities on our shores), if used constructively for the education and betterment of our children, will add at the end of the day to progress.

But there is no human relationship that does not have to do with exchange. You cannot have your cake and eat it too. You cannot have your progress and not give away something in order to get back something. That is what the dynamics of human relationship is really based upon—the idea of change.

I believe that a strong government is necessary in this country, unlike other countries where people are already talking about governments and core functions, and that government should not have a strong position. We have to go through an experience of a strong political government. If we do not do that we will not be able to manage and direct the kind of strategic developments that have to take place in this country. How are we going to implement a strategic plan, a Vision 2008, without a strong government?

It is easy to conceive of any plan, but to implement that plan, to get people to accept that plan, and to make that kind of social transition we are going to need a strong political government which does not infringe upon the rights of the individual, does not handicap the entrepreneurial spirit of the Cayman Islands and those persons who have come here to work is also necessary. We need to free the boards of the political responsibilities of being answerable to politicians and make them more answerable because of rationality and the concept of what is efficient and good for the country as a whole.

We need a political institution that will not destroy the progress, meaning that I am not going to play out my individualism against yours. I am going to subordinate my individual political interests to the general political interests of the country. You cannot achieve that without political discipline and organisation. So the whole concept that we have had in this country for a very long time about the lack of a need for any kind of political party system, or the development of that machinery, I believe that we have come to a point where we have to become organised politically if we are going to achieve what we need to achieve.

We cannot do it as Frank McField and Roy Bodden and Linford Pierson. We cannot do it as individuals any more because there is nothing preventing me, if I feel my interests are being infringed upon, from switching my position. The playing field is never level. So we need a discipline.

We know that, historically, if we fall back on our British tradition that not even Britain has been able to go through it's difficult social and political changes successfully without people becoming more disciplined politically where they can act collectively more politically. One of the reasons why debates in the Legislative Assembly take so long is because we all have to discuss from our own perspective. We have not sat down, as happens in a lot of countries, and developed a common perspective regarding many things, for instance the question of the role of the State in regard to the concept of laissez-faire entrepreneurship. If the state represents the broad masses of the Caymanian people, and if at this particular time the wealth is not in the hands of the Caymanian people but in the hands of foreign corporations working here what will the role of the State be? What will the influence be on politics? Will influence be more important in determining political policies and strategies than will the vote?

So the fact that a person is here for 15 years and will take residency, but not Caymanian status because they don't need the right to vote, it might be simpler because they will have the influence without the right to vote. At the end of the day what is important to people is resources and that usually spells money. We need to be asking how we are going to encourage Caymanian people to accept the development to this particular point and to convince them that they still have strategic political power.

So when they come to us and say, 'Hey man, we think that you all should do this, or that,' and then we say we are powerless because we can't do it and don't even explain that the reason we can't do it is because we have a Constitution that prevents us from doing these things, . . . not saying that we cannot change that Constitution, but as long as we accept that Constitution the way it is we have to accept a particular way of doing things.

I referred to the fact that we have three official members sitting in the Legislative Assembly voting along with the government that has been appointed by all of us, thereby giving that government the majority of votes in the Legislative Assembly. So they can cut and divest themselves of the responsibility they have to us collectively. By way of political experiences we know that can become a problem. If we are going to implement policies like Vision 2008 and if we are going to talk about political will, that will only exist if political discipline exists.

And political discipline will not exist if every time the five people elected to Executive Council go against the manifesto they put together and are doing things the way they want, and are becoming very individualistic about the way in which they govern the country, and they trade off in terms of personal interests and this, that and the other.

People will perceive the weakness in the system as the weakness in the individuals and not the roles in which the individuals are being forced to play in a particular way. And that's unfair to us. That is not right. And it is not fair to the people because the people begin to lose trust in their elected representatives. So, as the Governor has preached and encouraged a maturity in the civil service, we must preach and encourage a maturity in the political system.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Dr. Frank McField: Only then can we guarantee also that the dollars that we vote to government will have the return which we desire to have.

Mr. Speaker, I think you were saying it is 4.30?

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4.30. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Monday at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Monday, 1st March 1999. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.32 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 1 MARCH 1999.

MONDAY
10:19 AM

[Prayers read by the First Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: We have apologies from the First Elected Member for West Bay who had a death in his family. We have apologies also from the Third Elected Member for George Town who is in United Kingdom on a parliamentary seminar.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members and Ministers. Question 1 is standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 1

No. 1: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister with responsibility for Education, Aviation and Planning what is being done to procuring adequate facilities for the Sunrise Centre?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: The Sunrise Working Party, an initiative of the Ministry of Education, Aviation and Planning, was formed in March 1998 to address issues and concerns of the Sunrise Adult Training Centre. The main objective was to assess the needs of the staff and trainees of the Centre and make recommendations to the Ministry on how to improve the effectiveness of the Sunrise Programme.

An examination of recommendations revealed that the most cost-effective measure to implement many of the recommendations would be the provision of an improved or purpose-built facility. To this end, the Ministry is exploring the option of providing such a purpose-built sheltered workshop facility in West Bay with the assistance of the International Labour Organisation. This facility will provide an industrial type of employment and on-the-job training, and will house the pre-vocational and life-skill training programme.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Supplementaries. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister tell the House whether the involvement of the International Labour Office is limited to consulting, or may we expect the International Labour Office also to contribute towards the financial cost of construction, staffing and equipping the facility?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the International Labour Office (ILO) will be dealing as a consultant only.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister give the House any information regarding the cost and when this project may come on line? Also can the Minister tell the House whether the ILO was approached for assistance other than the consultancy?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I understand that back about ten to 13 years ago, the ILO advised . . . and at that time the first phase, which was the Sunrise Centre, was set up. They recommended a second phase and that is the stage we are moving into now which is a sheltered workshop.

They are not contributing any money. And from what I understand we will not be getting any money from them, but they will continue to assist with advice.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. Can the Minister state when this recommendation was made regarding the second phase?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, it was made in 1986 and the assumption then was that it would come in about ten years down depending on the circumstances.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. Can the Minister state if what is being pursued is on the premise of that recommendation made in 1986? Or is there on-going consultation at present with regard to the possibility of upgrading that recommendation to suit current times?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, we have asked the International Labour Office to come back and up-date that before we actually move fully into the second phase.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. In trying to explain the facility the answer says: “This facility will provide an industrial type of employment and on-the-job training and will house the pre-vocational and life-skill training programme.” Where it says, “an industrial type of employment...” could the Minister expand on that?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this will be skills, such as addressing envelopes or some type of woodwork, or maybe preparation at some of the hotels, for example, assisting in the kitchen area.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question was not very clear. What the Minister just answered me was regarding where some of these participants may be employed and the skills that they need to learn. Maybe I am misunderstanding the answer but where it says, “an industrial type of employment...” is it that where the facility is that actual work will be done for other places? This is what I am trying to get to understand.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: That is correct, sir. It will be a sheltered workshop. Nearly everything would be done within there but there will be those who can go outside.

The basic skills have to be taught to them first—how to cook and how they can care for themselves, that sort of thing. They are now into a stage where the sheltered workshop will come and they will do as much as possible within that sheltered workshop.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to belabour the point but I just wish to get it clear. The sentence reads, “This facility will provide an industrial type of employment...” Thus far, the Minister is talking about some of them doing actual work in the facility and then some of them being able to go out into the work force to enter into productivity. But what I am trying to determine is if the actual work that will be done at the facility will be work that the facility takes on for private enterprise or for other government agencies.

I am trying to understand exactly how it will work because I am seeing a connection here between various government agencies and maybe the private sector. So I was trying to determine if the facility itself will be taking on certain task and then training these people to do those tasks?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker that is correct. For example, they would be putting things in envelopes for, say, the government or for my law firm. Yes, a law firm or something in a sheltered area so that there is a supervisor there. And then they will be paid for that.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, we will move on to question number 2 standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 2

No. 2: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning when is the work on the new Lighthouse School scheduled to commence?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: The work on the new Lighthouse School started in October of 1998 when we engaged a consulting architect to assist the Public Works Department with the design of the school. The preliminary drawings have now been done and shared with the Ministry, the Department of Education, and the Lighthouse School staff, PTA and site-based planning team.

The preliminary drawings of the project will be completed and submitted to the Planning Department in February of 1999. Final working drawings should be completed during the months of January – May 1999; the contract will be put to tender by the Central Tenders Committee between May and July; and it is estimated that construction will start on 1 September 1999. It is anticipated that the new school will be ready for occupancy in time for the 2000-2001 academic year.

We hope that the renovation of the Cayman Foods building to provide two multi-purpose halls and canteen as well as music rooms for both schools. This will be dealt with as a separate contract and, if so, we expect that the hall will be in use by March 2000. The second phase, the clinics and therapy rooms are expected to be completed in 2001.

The Speaker: Supplementaries? The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister tell the House what complement of students the new facility will afford?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, one Hundred and fifty.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The Minister just said that the facility will be built to accommodate 150 students. I cannot remember right now the name of the programme but there is a programme where some of the staff go out—is it the Early Intervention Programme?

[Inaudible Interjection]

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes. But I think it is the Early Intervention Programme.

Hon. Truman Bodden: It's a home-based Early Intervention Programme.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. My understanding is that at present staff are pressed to be able to deal with the numbers of requests that are there. Now, it is also my understanding that by 1999 the number of children in this programme could exceed 100. It could well be close to 150.

When the facility is completed, will anything be taken into consideration to be able to enhance that programme? Because at present I know that they are in dire straits to be able to do what they know they need to do and it is a bit frustrating for the staff. I know that.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Member is correct. They are pressed, but in the new facility will be the home-based Early Intervention Programme.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister tell the House what arrangements will be made for those students who need therapy, who will have to undergo individual clinics when they are moved into the new facility up until the time that the second phase is being completed? Are arrangements being made for them to remain on the compound or on campus or will they have to be transported elsewhere for these clinics and the therapy?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, there will be sufficient rooms there for 150. At present, we have 69 at the Lighthouse School. That will increase but not to the extent of the full 150. The extra rooms will be used for therapy rooms while we are waiting on that extra phase to be done.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this question is not strictly related but the Minister may choose to answer it anyway.

Will the current mode of transportation being used to transport some of the more serious of these cases be sufficient when the new facilities come on line with the anticipated expansion and enrolment? Or will it be necessary for us to have to consider upgrading the transport to something which has a higher complement?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I will go back to the principal and find out whether it is necessary to have a further bus or a larger bus, and we will address that because with the increase in students, will be an increase for facilities such as transport.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The very last part of the substantive answer says, "The second phase, the clinics and therapy rooms are expected to be completed in 2001." Just for clarity, can the Minister state if the clinics and therapy rooms will be part of the Cayman Foods Building or is this another structure?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, it will be a new building over on the north side of the building.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So when the facility is completed, you will have a main building, which is the school, and you will have a part.... The Minister wants to explain? Okay, I will give way.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, what I will do is get a copy of the draft plan. I apologise for not showing it to members earlier. It is basically the same as that very early sketch. There will be three pods. Now the draft plan has not come to me as yet. But we should have it shortly.

As I understand it there will be three pods, there will be a little courtyard within the classroom area, and it will be one of those pods that would have the balance of the facilities. It's hard I guess to visualise it because it is not like a regular school. But I will get the draft.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And just to let the Minister know, we will wait until we see that to go into detail.

Now, the Minister has said that they can expect the hall will be in use by March 2000. If we are talking about the Cayman Foods Building, in the answer it refers to multi-purpose halls and canteen. Can the Minister explain exactly what will be the use of the Cayman Foods Building when the renovations are completed?

We understand it is going to serve two facilities but can the Minister explain exactly what purpose it will serve for one and what purpose it will serve to the other? One of the things that I want him to bear in mind when he is giving this answer is that it says "multi-purpose halls," but it only says canteen. Now, I don't know whether both facilities need a canteen or whether it will be one canteen for both. I don't know if he could explain that.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the kitchen area of the canteen will be for the use of both the Lighthouse School and Red Bay Primary. There will be a large hall, then a smaller hall for the Lighthouse and there will be rooms off it. The music rooms can both be used. So there will be two areas, two halls within it so to speak.

[Inaudible comment]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Yes, but it is designed so it can serve both sides, you see. And my Permanent Secretary was mentioning if it is needed as one big area, it can serve as one big area. It is quite a sizeable area.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Is consideration being given to having a total separation of the use of the facilities or is there a plan for some type of integration if possible at some points in time? I am just asking, I don't know.

Hon. Truman Bodden: There will be a moveable partition. Perhaps I should also try to get the sketch on this and show members. There will be a moveable partition that could be folded back if there is a very large function to go in there.

[Inaudible comment]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Well, that is why the Lighthouse School was put by the Red Bay. Yes, there will be integration. I would assume the majority of that would be within classes. You know, a child may be able to go back for one hour a day or couple hours a day, but they would then be able to go back across to the Lighthouse School to get the extra therapy or the specialist training they need. To the extent that there would be integration within the eating areas, I am really not certain. But I could ask about that.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I want to request of the Minister an undertaking that while the plans may yet be advanced that he ensures that the draftsmen have adequate facilities such as ramps in place so that students can have easy access when integration time comes. And that the integration and the movement can be done with a minimum of inconvenience or discomfort to the students from the Lighthouse School, and at the same time a minimum of disruption to the class at the Red Bay School that have to share this integration.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, it is always good when I hear great opposition minds thinking alike and I get one supplementary instead of two.

But the Honourable Member is quite right on this (going to his specific question) in that we have a specialist architect with the main idea that we will get a very good purpose built properly ramped, properly laid-out facility. It has taken a bit of time, sir, but the architect is a specialist. He has done quite a few of these in the past and, you know, so far everyone has been happy with what he has done. It's going to be costly but, you know, I think that those children are entitled to it and it will make quite a difference in their lives. I mean, the present Lighthouse School has . . . but I mean the new one will be state of the art.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, we will move on to question number 3 standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 3

No. 3: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation, and Planning what plans have been implemented in relation to career training since the Ministry of Education assumed responsibility for this area?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: The Ministry has been re-examining the concept of career training since it assumed that responsibility in late 1997. Assisting the Ministry in developing an effective career and vocational programme, a consultant funded by the Commonwealth Secretariat has been collecting data as per the Secretariat's brief on a range of pertinent topics. Discussions have been held with principals and senior teachers from private and public secondary schools on Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac, as well as with the principal and president of the two tertiary institutions, a careers advisor, human resource managers, personnel officers and a selection of managers from private sector businesses.

These discussions served vital functions of updating the data gathered for the 1996 Manpower Development Advisory Committee Report and developing a consensus on a number of vital issues and perceptions related to the development of the National Training Initiative, for example, the following six factors:

1. The most able students (the top 15%) are quite well catered to in career advice and scholarships and it is the remaining 85% to whom major attention must be given.
2. Vocational courses proposed by the Community College of the Cayman Islands, the International College of the Cayman Islands and other providers are often greeted enthusiastically by parents and potential applicants. Curricula are developed, equipment purchased and instructors hired. Subsequent poor enrolments and retention rates have left providers quite tentative when considering vocational courses. An encouraging sign is that recent enrolment figures have shown resurgence. Retention rates will be monitored carefully and it is recommended that students dropping out should be surveyed to document reasons for leaving.
3. Because Cayman has experienced high employment rates for some years now, there is quite a prevalent attitude among job seekers/school leavers to be less concerned about job stability and tenure.
4. White-collar jobs, e.g. bank tellers, clerks, are seen as more socially desirable by parents and peers than blue-collar outdoor or hospitality jobs.
5. Some employers are anxious to fill vacancies, less demanding about experience and qualifications and offer what are to young people attractive starting rates.

6. Other employers have encouraged employees to give up courses early, believing them well enough prepared to cope with on-site demands and offering fuller pay for full-time work.

The six factors listed above tend to militate against applicants to apply for positions that offer lower pay, e.g. apprenticeships, or require part-time study.

Ongoing discussions are being held to establish how prevalent such conditions are and to develop consensus on possible remedies to them. Some measures discussed include:

1. Consideration of more and improved Careers Advisory services and early inclusion in curricula of
2. Understanding of the "world of work";
3. Closer and more frequent liaison between educators and industry and commerce;
4. Inviting role-model guest speakers to school, especially younger successful Caymanians in promoting occupations in trades, hospitality and other service industries.

Regarding the matter of scholarships and student loans, these two separate areas are being examined for possible consolidation into one section as a reinvention initiative in order to provide comprehensive support and encouragement to students.

The Ministry is continuing in its efforts to gather information, analyse data, recommend and work towards implementation of an effective vocational programme for Caymanians.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding point number 2, can the Minister tell the House if some of the facilities that offer employment on a more technical or vocation scale have been approached as to whether they would be interested or prepared in entering into some kind of partnership with the Government training programme? For example, during the training these students or enrolees would do classroom work for the first part of the day and then on-the-job training or apprenticeship for the second part of the day for a significant period of the training programme.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I know that at the Community College, the work experience is one day a week. But I know both colleges also offer part-time courses so that people can work in the day and go to school in the evenings.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the Government seems to have delved into this matter with great effort and I recognise that this is not necessarily a fault of the Ministry of the Government so much as it is a failing of our society. Has any kind of educational or awareness programme been promoted on a large scale so as to promote an understanding of the importance between the necessity to have technically and vocationally qualified persons within the society as much as we have white-collar people?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the point raised by the Honourable Member is a very good one. At present, we are endeavouring to get the project itself together and once that is well developed an intensive promotional programme will be undertaken. Because the project has to be sold to—and accepted by the public if we can expect this to succeed . . . and it is not an easy programme, Mr. Speaker, because I am afraid that Caymanians can move up the ladder without having to get qualifications they would maybe have to get in other countries. But the promotion side is very important and it will be taken care of in due course.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Moving on item number 4 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by his Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on Friday, 19 February 1999. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town, continuing—

Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning?

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I know I had spoken to you, sir, in relation to 11:30 a.m. But today members felt that it would be better if we could adjourn at 11:00 a.m. It may well be that if the member agrees on this, he would agree to begin on Wednesday and we could adjourn now.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I wouldn't mind if I could at least speak for fifteen minutes because I would not like to deny the possibility to get the front paper tomorrow as well.

[Members' laughter]

Hon. Truman Bodden: I understand the Honourable Member's reasoning, sir. That's good, but I am sure I cannot speak for everybody.

The Speaker: Are we now then going to agree that we will adjourn in fifteen minutes?

Hon. Truman Bodden: Yes sir.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I am suffering at this particular time from the flu, so my voice might not be as clear as usual.

I would like to begin by saying that I have but a small amount of time remaining. Some may be pleased that this is so. Some may in fact wish I did have more than four hours. My intention was to make this debate as long as possible because I need to demonstrate what Albert Einstein observed. And that is that the significant problems we face cannot be solved at the level of thinking we were at when we created them.

This country has been fairly well managed over the last twenty years but efficient management without effective leadership is, as one individual phrased it, like straightening deck chairs on the Titanic! No management success can compensate for failure in leadership, therefore, this is the third Throne Speech I have debated in order to assist our country in wrestling with direction issues, culture building issues, to deep analysis of problems, to seizing of new opportunities. These are the issues that challenge leadership, and that our leadership must wrestle with.

Again, let me separate the two concepts by saying that management is doing things right while leadership is doing the right things. Leadership is the first creation; management is the second. Leadership helps us begin with the end in mind knowing that we must clearly define what we wish to accomplish, and that we need to clarify our values before we set new goals. In other words, we must begin to follow the carpenter's rule, which is measure twice, cut once. We have to make sure that the blue print, the first creation is really what we want, that we have thought everything through. Then we put in the bricks and mortar.

Each day we must go to the construction shed and pull out the blue print to get marching orders for the day. Leaders begin with the end in mind.

In my opinion, I have already demonstrated the grave lack of deep-rooted thinking and how our leaders are concerned with efficiency, rules, and control rather than with direction, purpose, and national meaning. We must now begin to use our religious heritage to assist with the creation of an enduring social philosophy and ethical system that is self-evident and can easily be validated by any individual.

The conflicts and contradictions which have resulted from our British colonial tradition of exploiting non-belongers without having in mind the social and ethical consequences, the moral and social result of this type of societal planning, has created what I have termed the Caymanian dilemma which must be faced by the present and future generation. This does not mean our society cannot overcome these contradictions, but to do so we must move towards survival and stability rather than disintegration and destruction.

Disintegration and destruction will not happen if we create the conditions where we can live out our imagination instead of our memories—if we elect leaders that will tie us to our limitless potential instead of our limited past. We must now become more our own first creators. We must begin with those values firmly in our minds to create a new island state. Only then will we be able to face the challenges of the present with integrity. Only then will we become more active rather than re-active to our present circumstances.

Will we be able to fight the present sense of meaningless or emptiness which now prevails in our society?

Throne Speech 1999 may well be remembered, at least by me, as the most serious signal from the mother country that it too recognises that life is by nature highly inter-dependent and that for us or even them to try to achieve maximum effectiveness through independence is like trying to play tennis with a golf club—the tool is not suited to the reality. Inter-dependence is a far more mature, more advanced state. Emphasis on independence in the past has been a reaction to the dependence of having others control, define, and manipulate.

I very much welcome this call for us to no longer ignore the highly inter-dependent reality of our situation. I also acknowledge that our new island state must accept its responsibilities to the international community of which it is well integrated and an inter-dependent part.

Political awareness must now be developed as to enable us to stand apart and examine the values enshrined in our Constitution. We need a Bill of Rights as a part of our Constitution to show each individual our collective objective values with regard to rights and entitlements of the individual. To allow fear to prevent us from creating this map which even the new state must follow will be a great error.

We the leaders of this island state must begin to provide the people with a political culture that is value-driven because our values are clear. I hope it is clear that I welcome constructive, well thought out reform in both the colonial style system of bureaucracy, which seeks to control from the centre and....

The Speaker: Could I just interrupt the Honourable Member for one moment, please.

In accordance with Standing Order 32(4), you are not allowed to read your speech. I have been watching you very carefully, so if you could inject some additional words besides what you have written, please.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to get into an argument with you about whether or not I am reading my speech. But I understand that also by reading the Standing Orders and reading what that interpretation means if you ask if I am reading my speech and I say, no, then I am allowed to go on. I said I am not reading my speech.

The Speaker: Well, I have listened very carefully so I am asking you to inject some additional wording in what you have on the paper.

Please continue.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, I have been injecting other words but....

The Speaker: For the benefit of the listening public and honourable members that Standing Order 32(4) reads, "A Member shall not read his speech but may refresh his memory by reference to notes and may read extracts of reasonable length from books or papers in support of his argument."

The Fourth Elected Member for George Town, you may continue.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, I am saying that we need to develop a political awareness that makes people conscious of their rights as individuals as well as their obligations. I believe, as I have said before, that anarchy is personally harmful to the individual as well as the state. Therefore, the state should make clear not just what the rights, the obligations of an individual are, but also what the rights are as well.

I believe that what we need now to concentrate on is the development of a political culture which will evolve a political philosophy, a social ethical philosophy that will give people a framework by which they can then make decisions. I have emphasised that the old political standard and the old political culture—where we are talking about dimes and pennies, when we are not talking about values, when we are not talking about principles, when we are not talking about setting goals—is obsolete, it is archaic.

I believe the Governor expressed that in his Throne Speech, and that I am correct in signalling that same death of the political culture in this country that has been led not by what is rational and what is reasonable but what is personal to one's particular interests. And I have been saying that we must come to a political culture whereby individuals can understand and accept that they must subordinate their personal individual interest to the interest of the group because only then can their personal individual interest be protected and become fruitful and multiply.

I have tried to say that the evolution of the Caymanian society, in fact, and the evolution of the Caymanian political system has brought us to this particular point today where we see that there is a lot of disagreement and there seems to be disarray in the Legislative Assembly. And I believe that this is a reflection of the disarray, disorganisation, and inability to compromise and to accept that the subjection or the subordination of the personal is necessary if we are going to develop a national concept.

I believe that we reflect this. I believe that we should stop and analyse this and begin to change this particular way of doing politics and way of doing things just like the government bureaucracy. It will change things by way of the re-invention of government and fiscal reforms. They will be changing the way they do things. Why is it that we are not beginning to talk about the fact that we need now to change the way that we do things in the political culture? People need to be led by ideas rather than personalities. People need to criticise the ideas for being incomplete or ineffective and not the individuals. We must put the values and the ideas forward. We must have the end in mind; we must use the carpenter's rule of measuring twice.

Before I finish, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have a plan that maybe the library should be in the Courthouse and then the Courthouse should go to Frank Sound. And we should develop roads in Frank Sound and Government should invest in creating a new little city there so that we begin to decentralise. Government has the resources to do these things but they do not have the end in mind. They don't have the plan, they do not have the map, they do not have the blue print. And the blue print has to first of all be produced by way of ideas.

There is no reason why George Town cannot become a duty free port that would rival any in the Caribbean or in the world. But we are not going to have that as long as we have one merchant class controlling it and refusing other people to come in and participate in it. We are not going to have that if our whole concept of ownership and nationality doesn't begin to evolve and change.

We have to understand that in any business, we have the employer, we have the employees, and we have the customer. And the way the employer treats the employee is the way that that employee will treat the customer. But business should be ruled by the customer and not necessarily by the employee or the employer. That brings us to a more eclectic concept of business whereas we saw business as something that is oppressed and controlled, we see now business as something that allows us to be able to realise a better, more improved standard of living where goods and services are improved.

If this is going to be the concept that the Government bureaucracy is going to follow, according to the Government, why should this not be the concept that business in the society follow as well? And what kind of evolution will we have to have in terms of the way in which we think and understand and accept things? The kind of partnership that we have talked about before in regard to foreign capital, foreign expertise and local Caymanian entrepreneurship and so forth. We must begin now to truly integrate this in a kind of social, political philosophy that expresses the usefulness of interdependencies.

There is nothing that I read, Mr. Speaker, that I don't know. I might sit down sometimes and actually feel that because of the flu and everything I would like to make things as short as possible and get to the point, but I have a PhD. And those people who don't believe that I have a PhD know that nobody else has been evolving these ideas on this particular level. A lot of people might say it is not politics. But, like I said, you need the map, the ideals, the values, the political ideas and the political values will be the map for us to follow. We need deep-rooted thinkers, we need people who analyse the situation and not just react to it but become pro-active in terms of setting the direction in which we are going to in this country.

Now, obviously the fifteen minutes is up and I thank you for your indulgence.

The Speaker: I will now entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse, Prevention and Rehabilitation.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10:00 a.m. on Wednesday.

The Speaker: The question is that this House do now adjourn until 10:00 a.m. Wednesday. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House stands adjourned until 10:00 am on Wednesday.

AT 11:15 AM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10:00 AM WEDNESDAY, 3 MARCH 1999.

Minister for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture. And the Third Elected Member for George Town is off the island attending a seminar.

Item number 4 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members and Ministers. Question number 4 is standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE

QUESTION 4

No. 4: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce and Transport to state when the Tourism Development Plan commissioned by the Ministry will be tabled.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, the Tourism Development Plan was laid on the Table of the Legislative Assembly on 17 September 1992, and the Tourism Management Policy was laid on 5 December 1994.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Supplementaries.

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister tell the House what progress has been made thus far in implementing the recommendations of the two documents in question?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I can think of a number of items within the Tourism Management Policy as well as the Tourism Development Plan that have been accomplished.

I do not have an exhaustive list this morning, Mr. Speaker, but just to give the House some indication, both policies or plans speak to giving priority to Pedro St. James as a project, and I think all members are aware that this has been completed. It also speaks to the Botanic Park, which will continue to develop as we move on. But I think I would say that 80% - 85% of it is completed. It will be done in phases as was initiated in the early days of 1995 or 1994.

A number of other areas would be the marketing recommendations in both policies as well as the area of research. All of that is in progress, because I do not believe that marketing is an area that you can finish. You have to stay in step with the trend, needs, and aspirations of the visitor to ensure that in marketing your facility they travel to the Cayman Islands.

Other areas would be in the training. We have begun a process, firstly, of dealing with customer relations training. We have carried out a series of training events, functions, short courses, where we have brought in members of the police, members of customs, members of immigration, members from the duty free stores, members from the hotels, members from other areas of government as well. So, those are some of the items that come to mind very quickly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the minister say what the disposition of his ministry is in seeking an optimum number of tourists per year and trying to maintain that number, as per the documents tabled? I am trying to reach some sense of what we would call sustainable tourism numbers rather than flooding the market to the point where our environment is tasked with permanent population of the country.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I think we should divide this visitor population into two groups. One would be the stay-over passenger who arrives by air and the other would be the passenger who arrives in the morning on a cruise ship. Six years ago we set down the policy of dealing with the cruise ship visitor and initially set a maximum per day of 5,500. After reconsideration, we moved it to 6,000. That policy has been in place ever since that day in 1993.

We monitor it by approving cruise ship calls. We are obviously dealing with a maximum capacity of ships as regards the passengers so we are guided by that number. And in order to monitor the approvals that were done for example in 1998, we would run the actual figures computerised in the Port Authority system to just evaluate and review the approvals so that they stay within the policy.

I think generally, Mr. Speaker, there may be a half dozen events where we go a little bit above the 6,000 or it may be a day that we go maybe a dozen more than the 6,000. But some of that is based on the fact that this is not a perfect world and neither is the weather always perfect. Sometimes there is bad weather in the eastern Caribbean and the ships ask to call here rather than going to some other destination.

And operating in this area, we are business minded so we are flexible. In some cases we do go over the 6,000 but then again, when we track it, it may be a half dozen times in 365 days that we go over.

On the stay-over visitor, I believe we have a system that is two points, Mr. Speaker. One is that the limitation of the number of visitors is cut up by the availability of accommodation during their period of stay. They are also caught up by the number of seats available as a lift out of the United States or out of Jamaica, or the United Kingdom. And on the other hand, we have to be mindful that if we continue to say that the maximum would be 450,000 or 500,000, when we look at that realistically, Bermuda has over 400,000 stay-over visitors and they are probably one-third our size.

Additionally, if we were to say 450,000 or 500,000, we have to be mindful that the visitors who are coming to our shores and the amount of money they are spending each year moves on the value of that dollar becoming a little bit less in terms of what it can purchase. Therefore, there is a need to stick to our marketing policy which tries to attract households earning $75,000 or more, and we are at that number because we realise that the income in the northern portion of the United States is generally higher than the southern portion. And it doesn't matter that the person in the south cannot afford it because he is earning $75,000.

The only other item to add is, given the fact that inflation erodes the value of the dollar being spent, there is a need to have an increased yield as we go along year by year and that's what we are trying to focus on. So, the reason for creating additional attractions on the island is to cause the visitor to spend more money on the island, and simultaneously to receive a much more educational and rewarding experience during his or her holiday period.

I think that is about as far as I will go for now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, we will move on to question number 5 standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 5

No. 5: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works if there were any discussions between the Ritz Carlton head office and representatives of the Cayman Islands' government held recently and, if so, what were the nature of these discussions.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, there have been no discussions between Ritz Carlton's head office and the Cayman Islands' government.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For purposes of clarity, would the Minister then state if there have been any discussions in recent times with any recognised representatives of the Ritz Carlton group?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I would answer that by saying that they do have a local person on site, I think where the old Holiday Inn Hotel was standing, and we do talk to her from time to time. But apart from that, I don't think there was any other discussion that I am aware of.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state if at this point in time the proposed development, which at the end of the day will house Ritz Carlton Hotel, is on target and moving along as per plan?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't undertake to say it's on target as planned. I really couldn't say that to members because I am not in the business of trying to mislead people.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the attempt was not to ask the Minister to mislead anyone, but perhaps playing it safe sometimes is the best way and I appreciate that. Does it appear to the Government that the impetus is still there? Or does it seem like there may be snags giving rise to concern?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I think it is necessary for me to clarify the point that the lady who is working for the Ritz Carlton and the developer is, shall I say, not in a position to hold discussions with us. We basically talk to her from time to time and she is trying to make some arrangements here and there with people coming on the island that she wants us to be aware of. That's about all there is, Mr. Speaker.

I do see a piece of heavy equipment on the beach, and on the swamp side. They have built what I call a dike road leading into it. There are two different dike roads, so some activity is going on.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps, then, so that the Minister will understand the line of questioning, can the Minister simply give an undertaking then, bearing in mind the volatility of the situation in the past, to get an update as to where the project is now (having gone through the hurdles that existed)? Bear in mind perception becomes reality. Perhaps with knowledge, it would be much easier to deal with.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to pass that information to members of the Legislative Assembly as well as perhaps issue some sort of a Press Release so that the public is aware of where the development is, where it is heading, and what can they expect about it in the near future. I am happy to undertake to do that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries? If not, moving on to question number 6 standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 6

No. 6: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister with responsibility for Agriculture, Communication, Environment and Natural Resources what are Government's plans regarding the development of an alternative landfill site for Grand Cayman.

Hon. John B. McLean: The Department of Environmental Health is researching available technologies to present to the Honourable Minister for consideration as viable options to manage waste in the Cayman Islands in the future.

The need for development and siting of a landfill must be considered in context of a general integrated waste management system that addresses all of the waste stream components. It is the intent of the Department of Environment to provide the Government with information for making sound policy decisions in the selection of appropriate disposal methods.

The Speaker: Supplementaries. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House whether this research of available technologies will include the feasibility of some form of incinerator, as well as other such technology that may be applicable in our case?

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that all aspects of what would be best for the Cayman Islands will be looked at, and I think I am correct in saying that definitely it will include what the member just asked.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a final supplementary. Is the minister in a position to say when this information may be available? And can he tell the House which body will have the final decision in choosing the avenue to be entered into?

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that I will be able to report to the House shortly with regard to what we come up with, and naturally the body that will have to decide on it will be the Finance Committee when we bring the figures of what it will cost us to do whatever we need to do. So I would like to have the opportunity to report back to the House and then at a later stage once we have all of the figures in place no doubt we will come back to Finance Committee for funding.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the answer, it states that, "The need for development and siting of a landfill must be considered in the context of a general integrated waste management system that addresses all of the waste stream components." Can the minister state if within the past three or four years, his ministry has received any type of report or study along these lines from outside sources with any specific recommendations?

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago we had a similar discussion here. I don't remember if it was Question Time or in Finance Committee. It was definitely told that we had about two people who actually came forward and made proposals to us.

However, one of those, as I understand it, was not really a company that we could depend upon because he was involved in some problems in the United States. The other company has actually had many hours of talks with the department and this continues to be debated because we are trying to look for what is best for our waste system here in the Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the minister state if such studies or proposals are available to members of the Legislative Assembly to peruse?

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I don't have a problem with members of the Legislative Assembly looking at whatever has been submitted there.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Perhaps, then my final supplementary will be—and I am asking this personally—will the minister give me a commitment to provide me with copies of whatever those documents are at his earliest possible convenience?

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I would endeavour to get whatever the member would like to see and, of course, he and I can sit and go through it. I don't have a problem with that.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the substantive answer, the minister says, "The need for development and siting of a landfill must be considered in the context of general integrated waste management system." Is he saying that they still have in mind to develop property for a dump, a landfill for a better word?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communication, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I think that there is no other way but to try to develop another landfill for the future. And definitely it will have to be looked at, and looked at seriously. I think it was during Finance Committee that it was actually debated here a long time by the members along with the department head. There is a shortage of space, so, definitely, we have to look after the future and look into a new landfill.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems by the minister's answer that the government will consider development of more land, but I am wondering with the increased amount of refuse, whether the minister or the department will not consider other means. I note, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has said a "landfill." I am wondering what area will take another landfill, and whether we have the kind of acreage in the country to do so?

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, the first part of the answer pointed out that we will be researching all available technologies and this is from the department to the minister and then back here for the final. It would be impossible for me to say that it would not be recommended that we look at another such site as we have.

But the fact remains that nobody wants a garbage dump in his backyard. And the other technologies that are available I think the research will show, and we will have to come back to the Legislative Assembly and have them presented to the members and we will then have to take a decision from there.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Moving on to item number 5 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, the continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 19 February 1999.

Debate continues with the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19 FEBRUARY 1999

Dr. Frank McField: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have tried in my debate to give the public and the Legislative Assembly an overview which I believe would make it easier for us to develop certain strategies which would prevent the future development from contradictions that will cause malfunctions in individuals and in the society as a whole.

I started to say also that it is good to have an overview in that one has a picture of the present, the past, and the future. One has a plan. One has a map in mind.

The question of the way in which we are organised politically, the way in which our Constitution functions, is that the public does not have any real control over persons elected to make policy decisions in this country. They only have an opportunity to elect members to the Legislative Assembly.

I believe that there is a democratic deficit in our Constitution, in our political culture, in that the people themselves cannot determine those individuals that will be responsible for policy decisions over a period of four years.

I believe also that adding to this the fact that we have three nominated members that can vote along with the five elected members of Executive Council creates even more of a deficit in our democratic system. And I believe it is time that we begin to examine this in order to eliminate what I believe is now more or less appearing to be a malfunction in our situation.

I have concerns about the use of foreign labour, foreign expertise, foreign capital, and the fact that certain persons in planning for the country have not taken into account the unique type of social relationships which result from this inter-dependency. I believe we need to examine these unique situations and some of the unique contradictions that come about. But I also continue to stress that inter-dependency is a much more mature state of being than independence.

However, if we look at not who owns wealth or not who owns what produces wealth but the social, the political, economic conditions that wealth creates, we are better off. My concern, therefore, is not so much who owns, but who benefits.

Now, a real-life situation of this is the fact that we need to make our immigration laws evolve—or to make the evolution of an emerging island state possible. But in liberalising our immigration policies we must begin to pay more strict attention to what is going on in the work place with regard to Caymanian employees and foreign employees as well.

I believe that the whole concept of the protection of Caymanians by using immigration as a way of controlling labour is outmoded to a very large extent. And the Caymanian person that sells his skills or his labour must now come to realise that a person who is forced to remain in a particular employment (by way of a work permit) for a period of twenty or thirty years without having the flexibility to negotiate for better working conditions will not benefit the Caymanian working person, but will hamper the social progress of the Caymanian working person.

I believe that better working conditions are needed in this country today. A case in point is the hotels. I had people coming to me complaining like usual about the problems of gratuity. The Labour Law does not really allow the government to examine the relevant documents that would make it possible for the government to bring a case against these hotels for withholding or distributing gratuities in a way that is in contradiction to the law.

We see that we have very little control over the day-to-day operations in the working environment, and we need to understand that it is that which begins to trigger many of the problems that we have in the country today. Women in particular, who are very much employed in the hotel industry and the banking industry, are not regarded as mothers and are not regarded so much as sisters and aunts.

They are not regarded as citizens of the country, and that their behaviour in these particular capacities is very important for the maintenance of order and stability.

If women are being exploited in the work place in such a way as to aggravate their possibilities to be mothers, then we are going to have social problems with their children. We need to pay particular attention to the way in which our people are carrying out their functions as workers within the workplace, especially workplaces that are part of multinational concerns where profit is the most important motive.

Whether or not it be the Hyatt, or the Westin, or the Marriott, international chains, we have to understand that this very rational, very efficient concept of running a business organisation will impact strongly and sometimes very negatively upon our social fabric. At the moment, we need to have a much more proactive approach to the social conditions that these institutions create in our midst.

Now, a situation that is happening also in town is that the town is becoming more and more congested because of traffic. Yet, business people—the private sector—continue to build in this area with almost with no concern about the traffic problems and the congestion. Government is spending more money to try to open this bottleneck situation up.

And the private sector is putting up more three and five storey buildings to house many different companies that at the same time must provide parking facilities not only for their customers but also for all of the clients of these buildings.

As a result, what we have happening now is that the private sector—which is very critical of government in certain ways—is really not acting responsibly in a lot of ways. And this is a case in point of their lack of responsibility and lack of understanding of the need to maintain a stable social fabric in the society in order that wealth will continue to be productive and to be protected.

We had a situation during Christmas where a cousin of mine was suspended from work for two weeks because she refused to not park someplace else and she had gotten orders from management that she could no longer park in the parking lot.

Yesterday someone came to my office to complain about a situation at Barclays Bank. I was shown a letter with a threat against an employee that the bank will [discipline] him for misconduct if he parks today in the Barclays Bank parking lot.

I heard about a similar situation about CIBC Bank. Now we understand, of course, that they do have a problem in regard to parking. But when they were building these establishments . . . some of them not only have their banks operating in these buildings, they are also renting to other firms that need parking spaces. So the competition for parking spaces within George Town has resulted in the suffering of the lower grade employee who is being denied certain rights and privileges that he has come to expect and has had over a long period of time.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when we suggest that government gets involved in trying to develop a planned city out in the Frank Sound area, and that private companies be encouraged to build in these areas, it makes sense. We are not going to be able to house everybody in this little small pocket of George Town. I am saying that it is time that we considered how to really develop central George Town into a beautiful duty free area where we have a little park, little benches, and toilet facilities for people; where people feel comfortable walking around the town sightseeing and shopping and so forth and so on.

I am talking about moving the Courthouse to Frank Sound as one thing that could be done, and having the library opened there.

We bought the Racket Club property and we want to put a building there. Somebody is putting a building now on hospital road. Have you any idea what kind of traffic congestion that is going to cause? This is the result of no foresight, no map, no vision, no end in mind. This, therefore, leads to confusion and contradiction. Knowing that we are going to grow rather than to go backward, that we are going to continue to construct (because we are on that particular road at the moment and this is what will happen until we can get things under control) we have to plan for more cars. We have to plan for more people.

Those people know it is going to happen anyway because nobody really wants to get in there and be selective about what kind of development we have. Until we have that, we are going to have more of this.

Now, specifically with the case of Caymanian women, mothers who have greater responsibilities in this society than in many societies because they cannot depend very much upon the Maintenance Law to help support their children because the payments are very irregular.

In a lot of cases mothers have come to me, the same mothers who are working in these banks and are being to a very large extent underpaid. Nothing is done to encourage people to become more collective in their approach to solving their problems, to become more conscious of the fact that when you work for one of the banks and a problem exists that it is not a problem of one individual but it is something that applies to a very large number.

We are talking about the need to improve the working conditions for the working Caymanian people, for the working women in the Cayman Islands in particular. We need to see and we need to understand the role that women play in creating a stable society, being the nucleus, the centre, the core of the family unit which we all brag about, that society could not exist without.

I go back again to Time Longer Dan Rope, and my portrayal of Ella, that strong materialistic Caymanian woman fending for her family, defending her family, and wishing her kids a good education. How are they going to prepare their children for tomorrow with the wages they are being paid today? Without Government's subsidy for education, without Government's subsidy for pre-school, without Government's subsidy for after-school, the country would really be in a terrible problem.

The private sector must take up more responsibility in this country and stop having this transient type of attitude like they are going to be here today and gone tomorrow. We understand that the future is limitless, but for it to be so we all have to accept this whole concept of inter-dependency as being a more mature form of existence. Thereby, if we are inter-dependent, if we as the local indigenous early settlers accepted that, then the new arrivals must come to accept this as well.

The banks must continue to play a more positive role in the society, getting involved and trying to solve the real social contradictions which might be more of a threat to our stability than anything else. When the teacher's training begins here on the island I want to see that we begin to recruit some of these women from some of these banks that have spent years there knowing that they are not going anywhere; where their lives begin to feel empty and meaningless.

We want to recruit them and if possible pay them what they are being paid in the bank while they go back to train as teachers so that we can have the teachers to train.

That was the concept I had when I was elected in 1996. And I am glad to hear that we are going towards creating on our shores and within our territory an education training centre. Because if we do that we can pull people who already have family commitments and pay them while they go back to school. Do we realise what kind of impact that would have in re-establishing real values and re-establishing discipline, and authority in our society?

The day when we can get teachers that are truly of the soil—Caymanian teachers, that truly understand the emotions and sentiments of our children . . . Do we realise what kind of day that will be when that happens? And it can happen if government accepts its responsibility, if government understands that it has been empowered by the people to act for the people.

If we begin to make it known to the employers here that they are quite welcome to come here and bring their capital and to make profits with their capital, but not to the extent where it creates malfunctions in individuals and in society to the extent that we must be there to clean up the mess . . . Perhaps one day they will get so tired of the mess that they leave and go someplace else, and leave it for us to clean up. I believe that with vision one can prevent a lot of the pitfalls that have happened in other countries.

We must prevent the pitfall of petty nationalism. But, at the same time we must come to speak for those of our people who have not had the experience in collective actions and collective behaviour.

The Cayman Islands more than any Caribbean island lacks the ability for its people to get together and function as unit for a common cause. We understand that this not only happens in government but it is also phenomenon in the workplace. It takes away the power from the working Caymanian person. They need, Mr. Speaker, to understand that Caymanian people find it difficult to get together, but there are sociological and historical reasons why this is so. Once we understand that we know how to get together, we starting talking about the problems that we have in common.

The women and men at Barclays Bank and the men at CIBC Bank need to start talking about their specific problems and grievances. We as politicians have no business to go there and interfere. But we can advise them as to how problems of this nature are solved. Problems of this nature are not solved by government. They are solved by the people that are affected by these problems. They must begin therefore to look at the solutions together.

They must say 'traditionally we have been able to park there.' It has been accepted by the Planning Board and by custom in this country that employers provide parking facilities for their employees. It has happened all the time. If the banks want to change it at this particular time, they should only change it if the working people in those banks are in agreement with the change. Or they should give them some kind of compensation for the change.

Why don't the banks get together, the Banking Association, and pay for a piece of land outside George Town or a few pieces of land outside George Town? Let people drive and park their cars and operate a shuttle system. This would help government develop the whole concept of getting rid of all these cars in George Town.

Why can't the private sector also become more involved and more dynamic in solving some of the contradictions in our society? Why is it that they just sit there and when it comes to revenue measures always find criticism of government? But how will government operate without collecting some of the resources, the profits that these people have made to re-distribute among the people?

Our real problem in this country is that we are too nice. But that has also been our asset and we do not want to destroy that. What we want now to understand is that the people can become empowered by a feeling of being more together. And being together doesn't mean excluding other people, as I believe this is the basis to include others.

I believe that the stronger the earlier settlers who came here felt, that the stronger the so-called indigenous Caymanian feels, the less threatened he will feel by the person who came from Jamaica thirty or fifteen years ago, or the person who came from England twenty or fifteen years ago and how he benefits. And how he benefits depends very much upon the conditions in which he works.

Sometimes when people say they are dissatisfied with pay, the money doesn't go very far. But we are suppose to collect revenue here from these same people by way of indirect taxation in order to provide pre-schools and after-school programmes for their children. And which bank, which trust company, which institution on this island has provided a pre-school for the children or cared for all these women that have three to five kids? What is the private sector doing in this country to improve the living conditions of the Caymanian people? Why are they continuing to say because they came here they bettered our lives?

It is like saying that Columbus discovered us and so as a result, everybody's life was improved. That is nonsense! The fact that Columbus discovered the New World did not improve the life of the native Caribbean Arawak and Carib. As a matter of fact, they all became extinct as a result.

The fact that people come here in order to do business does not necessarily mean that our society will be automatically enriched. Wealth has to do with the moral character of a country, not just with the physical conditions that exist. And if the particular type of economic relationships that are taking place between foreign capital and local labour and expertise actually impoverishes morally the local situation, at the end of the day we are not being helped because we have to pay too much. We have to pay too much to repair the roads, we have to pay too much for the prison, we have to pay too much for the juridical system that is increasing because people are getting in more and more trouble. Everything is broken down.

I said twenty years ago in Time Longer Dan Rope that this would happen. And I am saying now that unless we come to grips with the reality, unless we come to the fact that things can be studied, that things can be analysed and things can be changed, the problems will even get worse.

The fact that people felt that it was necessary to silence me for years and years so that my cries about what was happening in this country could not be heard by the foreign investors they thought would run away as a result of seeing my ugly face and hearing my horrible voice has not prevented the problems from developing. It has not prevented the fact that we need to vote more money for Northward Prison, it has not stopped any of these things from developing. I might not have been able to stop these things from developing either. But I think there comes a time when we realise that reason can do much to prevent chaos and anarchy. And if we use our reason and we intervene, if we try to improve before there is a crisis, before there is a problem, will we be better off.

I believe there comes a time when we just can't have business organised and labour not organised. I believe if business insists upon being organised and if business insists at times on being a threat against government when it seeks to raise revenue in order to redistribute it and balance the situation in order to maintain social order, then I believe it is necessary to organise labour. The time has come in this country for working people to become organised. And it is not a crime because sometime organisation is really better than the damage that is being done to individual persons in the workplace.

People who feel that they are not being trained when government is saying that we should train and use the Protection Board to do what individual working people on their jobs should be encouraged to do. The Protection Board has no concerns, no rights in that type of situation. They don't help—they hinder. The fact that on a work permit an employer has to declare how many people he has that are Caymanians, how many people he has who are foreigners . . . Government that controls from the centre in this straightjacket colonial style, as the Governor has said, that is all a symptom of this whole out-dated mechanism.

Government feels if it doesn't control, nobody else should control. So if government's Immigration Board can't control, nobody else should control. If government's Labour Board can't control, nobody else should control. If government's tribunals can't control, nobody else should control. In other words, the power should never be with the people; the power should always be with this bureaucracy that attempts to control from the centre.

Why not encourage all of the thousands of Caymanian women and men working in the banks and the hotels to organise themselves? Why not? Because of fear? Fear of what? Fear that things will get worse? Well, for a lot of people out there things are not necessarily so good. It is not so good when people think about the prices they have to pay, the fact that they have no rights when they rent an apartment.

People called me up until yesterday to say the landlord had kicked them out. They have children. They have no place to go. We have no power to do anything about these things. There should be some consideration for the kind of social disruption that such untoward things can do and the kind of social disruption.

What kind of effect does it have on a family when they are just kicked out? They have been paying their rent, but because they are complaining about having the roof fixed or having the water done right, the landlord says, 'Hey, look. Supply and demand. If you don't like it, go. You don't want to go? I will let you go. You think you are bad? Don't talk to me.' We need to understand that these things are having dramatic effects upon the social relationships between individuals and between groups in our society.

We have to accept that hate and jealousy which will result from people feeling they are unable to accomplish in what they set out to do, and then other individuals have been able to come into the country and do, will create more chaos than what Frank McField is preaching. I am saying encourage people to talk for themselves, to agitate for themselves, to become empowered for themselves, to accomplish for themselves. And government should get out of it and stay out of it. Government should stay out of the labour relations in that sense. Government shouldn't use the Immigration Board to always come down on companies and talk about training.

There should be Caymanians already encouraged to organise these situations and to discuss with management and to make sure that management is doing what they on the job believe that management should be doing, accepting it when it is fair and rejecting it when it is unfair. And government should stay out of it. If it does anything, it should encourage them.

I believe that the whole evolution with people being trusted enough to express their interest has to take place. I believe we have to stop fearing that if people are educated that they are going to destroy their situation for themselves. And this has been a prevalent concept in this country for so long. 'Give them an education and they are going to mash up the place,' I said this in Time Longer Dan Rope, that particular kind of fear—if you teach them about politics, about the constitution, they are going to mash up the constitution, they are going to mash up the country. Teach about their rights as working people and how they contribute and they are going to mash up the country because they did it in other countries. Come on!

Once they become educated, they understand the concept of inter-dependency. They understand that there is inter-dependency or an inter-dependent relationship between the employer and the employee, between the customer. They understand when they are selling the goods or when they are providing the services that they represent management, and that management is only as good as those persons who represent it. And the customers will only buy what is good because in a free market economy they have choices.

So, we cannot treat working people the way we use to treat working people, as if they were a curse to a society. Working people are a very important part of what complements a fuller society. And the more we develop, the more we will have this differentiation between what he does, what I do, and what the other does. And the more people we will need, the more differences we will have in pay scale and prestige, and in rewards. And we have to come to accept this because we know that there is mobility that is possible.

Although I might not be able to use an opportunity now, as long as the opportunity exists I might be able to use it tomorrow. So, we do not try to destroy the opportunities in the country because as long as the opportunity is there, Mr. Speaker, Caymanians will have the possibility to take advantage of those opportunities.

In other words, if we can come back to a situation of encouraging our people to discuss their problems, to discuss like how we are even doing with the youth at the moment having youth forums . . . You have a problem with drugs, but you are having problems in the work place, nobody is sitting down and discussing with them. They are so frustrated that they go home and take it out on their children by talking negative things in front of their children about one day this is going to happen and the next day this is going to happen, and you wait until this happens. . . Everybody is just bringing doom and meditating doom rather than meditating optimism.

They see no light at the end of the tunnel. They see no solution. They seem to think that they have no leadership. They have nobody that is working with them for them, nobody that cares. When you think about what is happening in the hotels today . . . and those of us who went to the Prayer Breakfast saw not one single Caymanian serve us.

I wonder if anybody ever thought about that. If we go to the Hyatt we will have a similar experience. Nobody is going there. Why? Because we are not in there encouraging them to see that that is not servitude, but that is exchange. They are exchanging their services for money that will allow them to exchange for other people's services. Everybody in this world is involved in this. We are no freer than others in that sense from the obligation to behave in an inter-dependent manner.

That is the human condition that I am talking about. And that is good. I believe God intended it that way because nobody could go off really and boast about being a master. Nobody could boast about being a master because we are all in this together. And even those persons that make a lot of money, at the end of the day they can only consume so much. So they have to use the rest of it for social improvements. They create jobs and they create other things as a result of it.

I don't get into this argument with people about who is the boss and where the boss comes from. Whether or not the boss is Caymanian, English, American, or whatever, I think it is important for us especially poorer people to understand it is the relationships that are important, not who owns. Because what he owns he can't consume himself, you don't own something and take it away. You own it. You have to put in play, it has to be part of the game; you can't pull it away. In that sense, every person rich or poor is disciplined by nature to carry out his activities in a social manner and if we, therefore, look at it that way we find that we don't have to go around being jealous of people. We can say we are all workers in this world. We all work and even people who have a lot of money would go to waste if they sat around and didn't do anything.

There is a concern in the society that those of us who think don't do anything. That is the reason why a lot of people have accused me of having had a wasted life. But what I am saying does not really seem to be the result of somebody having wasted his life. It seems that I have been doing quite a lot of work. I have been thinking because it wouldn't flow the way it flows if I wasn't mature. My thoughts would not flow the way they flow if those thoughts were not mature. If those thoughts had not been encouraged to grow just like seeds they wouldn't flow.

But we have to begin to stop looking down on intellectual activities and intellectual endeavours and at the same time be caught in the hypocritical contradiction where we are talking about holding up our culture—bringing the national gallery into the picture, paintings, and this and that. And yet the little things that we have here still we look down upon. Time Longer Dan Rope will be re-staged this year in July. And I hope to have it coincide with the Regional Parliamentary Conference that we are having here so that we can have an activity for the persons that come here to be involved with because theatre is a part of what people expect.

It's the 20th Anniversary of Time Longer Dan Rope Mr. Speaker. I am saying if we are going to go to the point of encouraging people to spend millions of dollars to build an art gallery where paintings from France or England or any of those places might come, we have to deal with the real reality that we will have a terrible deficit and a terribly one-sided situation. We will probably develop more of an inferiority complex now because we don't have anything to balance it out with. You don't go and bring people's things to put in your house unless you have something yourself. After a while you are going to want those people's things and you are not going to want anything that is in your house. I mean, we find it with our foods. We don't want to plant anymore in our backyards. We talk about how high the prices are at Foster's, but who is growing tomatoes like how my daddy used to do and my grandfather used to do in their backyards? Who is using the chicken coop to fertilise those tomatoes? Who is growing the cabbage that we used to grow in our backyards? Who is growing the cucumbers and the other vegetables that we were growing? Who has the goats?

Where is the 4-H Club that encourages people to do a little farming?

We have this desire to turn our backs on our Caribbean past. And it has been so great, that the first chance we get, we disassociate ourselves entirely with the soil to the extent that we don't see land anymore as being meaningless. The only thing a land is worth is if you can get a few dollars for it so we sell our land. Then our land is sold and we turn around and we say we must build on our land so that in departing we shall leave behind soil that has not washed away. When our sons assume the mortgage on this land that we toiled over, they should not have to ask where is the soil. Don't give away the most important part of our legacy—the land.

We have to understand that at this particular time we should not shoot people down. We should not bring them down for questioning, examining, and critiquing. The Third Elected Member from Bodden Town has been known to have ideas about the importance of land and the need for people to understand the economics of land and the management of land. If we don't teach the people those things, we are going to be in a lot of situations.

I hear people say that they would like to have Caymanian status be only for indigenous Caymanians, people with at least one Caymanian parent. But how many people get a title to a piece of land because they have a parent that was Caymanian? I haven't gotten mine as yet. I had to go out and buy my piece of land, and I am still not going to pay for that until the next twenty years if I manage to get it done with all the interest the bank charges me. One wonders with all the interest they make why they can't re-invest a little bit more in this society. I think they are arrogant.

So we don't get land for hereditary reasons. So, what do we inherit? You take your land and you sell it off so that your children can't get a piece of land, and then you turn around and tell the government it should not give status to anybody. Now, which has the most power? The status? Or the land. I say the land has more power and I have said that in here before. What we should be guarding we haven't been guarding because nobody has been teaching us how important land is. We have no land politics in this country. We have no land management concept. When people go to the bank and talk about value, the first thing they ask you is: Where is your piece? How much value does your land have?

The Speaker: This will be a convenient time to take the morning break. We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11:36 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12:09 AM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed debate continues. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the question of Caymanian status and the importance in the fact that getting rid of your land is to divest yourself of any kind of real economic value and power, too much emphasis is put on what the political machinery can achieve for the general population. In a lot of countries this has been very negative because we expect that once the people capture the political machinery that they will then use it to interfere with the economic activities that are going on.

I believe that a government must continue to monitor the social relationships, but it must be very careful not to get directly involved. We must begin to decentralise that power or that concern which the government has. Move it away from the Immigration Board and vest it with the very people that are in the workplace that are exchanging their labour for goods. The government does not have to be paternalistic in that old plantation sense, getting involved in everything and controlling from the centre.

We have to show people that whatever power and influence you have, has to be power and influence as a result of economics. You cannot waste your land, throw it away. You cannot waste your wages, your salary, throw it away and expect at the end of the day that you are going to have things in your society that are worthwhile from an economic point of view. We need to encourage people, therefore, to not just complain about prices but also begin to do things to subsidise their existence like planting in their gardens and growing different things in a very tropical island like this that has very good weather all year around.

This total dependence that we have led our people to accept has in a way crippled their initiative and their creativity. And to a certain extent has caused them to be weakened as a collective community, that particular kind of collectivism which we had before, that sharing, caring sense of the family system and the importance of the family for self-prestige and self-esteem and pride and everything. We didn't have the emergence of civil government so nationality, which has to do with civil government. It was not considered to be important. What was important was what my last name was, who my family was and so forth and so on.

I am saying that we need to show people what the real values are, that they should participate in those instances. While we are bickering about who gets permanent residency, the government is saying that in order to get permanent residency (and a lot of these cases get status), you have to have land. You have to have an economic worth. So we can see how even the new arrivals are encouraged to exercise the discipline that our own native indigenous Caymanians have not been encouraged to do, which is to achieve or maintain property.

Those people who are given permanent residency have houses and land, and the actual native Caymanians of a particular class do not have these things simply because the government encourages this on one part and discourages it on another part by bragging about how much revenue they collect with regard to stamp duties on land. So the government's revenue process also helps to cause Caymanians to eventually be alienated from their land. Because without people selling land the government would be short in revenue. We have to look at these contradictions by looking at the system overall.

Now, I have tried to talk about the need to improve working conditions, and I have tried to talk about the need for government to begin to encourage a decentralised approach to labour or resource management in the private sector. I believe that people should be encouraged on their individual jobs to organise themselves in such a way as to be able to negotiate with management with regard to better working conditions.

I have also accepted that there are social blocks in this, and that Caymanians have come to believe that Caymanians can't get together and that Caymanians can't really have this type of behaviour in the workplace. There are no reasons at the present time preventing us from doing that because similar experiences in the workplace where some people have worked together for fifteen years in the same bank, they have worked in the same hotel, that particular common ground, that particular common denominator should act as a very important factor in causing them to be able to get together periodically to discuss their problems and their grievances, and to solve them rather than to going home as individuals and having that kind of frustration heaped upon their children.

The whole idea that we in Cayman as politicians should not be concerned with labour, that we should be more responsive to the employer, to the so-called private sector, is something that comes from our pre-occupation when civil government started with the whole idea of the merchant elite in this country. I am certain not a representative of that particular class of people, although I believe that if I am to serve well I have to be objective and I have to understand the role in which they play in the establishment of business or economic activity in the society.

But I am saying at the same time that we cannot just see it from their perspective. We have to see it from the perspective of the working person also. The perspective of the working person today in Cayman . . . and many of us are working people although we might tend to employ people ourselves but basically we could not exist without working. That is where I make the distinction between the working person and the employer. Because a lot of us think because we hire a domestic or we have a little construction company or something, that somehow puts us in the category of having the same interest as the bigger and larger corporations like the banks and the big hotels. There is a difference and I think that we have to approach this situation differently.

What can be done with regard to improving working conditions at the Hyatt or the Westin has to be done in an organised fashion. There must be an intention to improve the wages of the people there. The gratuity system as it is working is not helping unless we amend the Labour Law in such a way as to have periodical examination of their books. I am not an advocate of minimum wage. I am not saying that I can't be changed and persuaded, but I have found no rational reason to believe that by government intervening and legislating a minimum wage that it would actually prevent the problem. If there are people who are set on abusing the system, regardless of what system that you create it is very difficult to get your desired result. And the desired results are not just the results of law, it has to be also the result of the supervision of the law. We have to have people who become more involved in what is happening in the hotels in particular, on a day-to-day or a week-to-week basis in terms of the general interactions between Caymanians there and the foreign people that are acting as the responsible persons for these particular corporations.

Now, I understand that when a corporation says it is going to invest in a Westin, or a Hyatt, or a Marriott in the Cayman Islands, it has invested a few million dollars, and it expects a certain rate of return. They are going to try to pinch pennies, but when being a Caymanian mother conflicts with being a worker—yet it is necessary for the woman to work in order for the child to have some kind of maintenance or otherwise it will become a warden of the State—then the State has a direct interest in that labour relationship, I believe. The State has to intervene in such a way or show its intention to intervene in such a way as to cause these individuals to improve.

I have had so many women come to me complaining about the situation in the hotels, in particular the Westin hotel. I know, Mr. Speaker, that there is nobody to talk to. They go to the Labour Board and then they say, 'We are not going back to the Labour Board because we didn't get any results with them.' They do not understand that the people at the Labour Department or the Human Resource Department can only what the law says. And, of course, the way in which the law was framed, it limits the interest of the government in the labour situation. It was interested in mechanical things, not in the day-to-day on-going relationship between the employer and the employees. This is very important, these on-going relationships, if you are going to have a healthy environment that is productive.

So the lack of productivity that the employer complains about sometimes with regard to Caymanians is a result of the Caymanians being frustrated by the working conditions, by the wages, by the way in which they are treated by people that they don't believe should have the authority over them because they are Caymanians when these people are foreigners. We need to understand the sociology of labour in the Cayman Islands today. The kind of conflicts and contradictions it is producing, the kind of effects it is having upon our children and the criminal behaviour which resulting from it which is causing a contradiction and a predicament for the state in particular.

We find that we have to incarcerate people at a very high cost, and at the end of day, we are building an army that might perhaps attack us if we don't find ways to integrate them and stop their numbers from increasing at the same time. Stop their numbers from increasing by having more counselling in the workplace. Understanding that we cannot stand back and not have people that working people in the hotels and other places can go to for advice, care and comfort, who can give them suggestions as to how to deal with the work situation. That is their life. They perceive their entire reality through this. We have to understand also how important this is.

Now, I have called people at the hotels to intervene on behalf of Caymanian working people and I have been treated like a dog, just like they are treated. So I just imagine how they must be treated if people in these positions in these hotels take such a dim view of my asking questions. When I said, I am representative of these people . . . 'Well, what gives you the right? Blah, blah, blah.' If they are treating me this way how are they treating the Caymanian person who cannot sometimes articulate the problem, and who as a result gets frustrated and walks off the job? That is exactly what is wanted.

Government has to ask more than how many Caymanians a particular organisation employs. They need to get involved reports as to what the working relationships are. They have to have a bureau to sit down and evaluate these reports from both management and the workers and decide what they believe the objective realities are.

Mr. Speaker, I have now come to the end of my debate on Throne Speech 1999. Again, I would like to thank His Excellency the Governor, Mr. John Owen, for the courage he has had in showing us how we need the reforms within the Civil Service. I have taken it that if we need the reforms of the Civil Service it would also mean that we need reforms in the political machinery. And when these reforms come we would want to have a political government also that is not jealous of people being empowered, that encourages people to become empowered rather than feeling paternalistic and having to control all of these things.

I would like to thank you Mr. Speaker for your patience and your indulgence in listening to this very long rambling debate. And I also would like to thank you for calling to my attention the other day that I was reading and that helped me really to get away from that kind of paper and to stick to my particular style, which is to talk without those type of substitutes. My wife hates when I talk with paper, but it was just because I spent so much time trying to develop what I considered at that particular point some very interesting phraseology. I wanted to be able to get that across.

I would like to thank members also for their patience in listening. I hope that I have created a framework by which others might be able to develop as we go along because we need as a collective body to have a collective approach to solving problems in the Cayman Islands. Thank you.

The Speaker: The floor is opened to debate. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to get up and speak after the Fourth Elected Member for George Town because in many respects some of the things which I will be saying complement ideas mooted by that honourable member. Indeed, as I listened to him, I had to remark to myself of the similarity in approach. I was reminded of the old adage, great minds think alike. The second part of that adage does not apply to persons like he and I.

Mr. Speaker, once again we have come to that time when we discuss what I would like to call the state of the nation. As usual, I shall be critical. But I always endeavour to be fair. I don't consider it my responsibility to praise the government as much as I don't consider it my responsibility to lambaste. And as I rise this time I have to admit that I am in somewhat of a dilemma because I am in the process of a decision of exigency regarding my future.

I am praying about it because I have reached the point where a certain cynicism has set in with regard to politics. And I have to say that I came here with a lot of open-mindedness and some naivety. But I find the longer I stay, and the older I get, the more cynical I become. And I am wondering if it is not time for me to think about the future and my position. It may be a good time to entertain thoughts of departing.

Mr. Speaker, I have not come to any conclusion but it is a matter that I am giving much thought and much prayer to because I have always been a realist, and one of the things that turn me off is people who gets up here and they say, 'speak from the heart' and they give out ideas. And year after year, people poke fun. People don't even listen. People don't even read over these speeches. Believe you me, I have been here long enough. I consider that I am not the biggest of fools and I read these things and I listen to all the people. No thought is taken to any ideas that are given. I was remarking to myself as I listened to my colleagues speak, 'What a waste.'

Mr. Speaker, I can do other things. As much as I love representing my people and doing their work and heaven knows I wouldn't change it. I have been honoured and flattered but, Mr. Speaker, there comes a point where someone of my intellectual level has to begin to wonder. I am tired of being shelved, of being called defunct, of being reminded that I am not a millionaire. And ideas that I give out, Mr. Speaker, people poke fun at them and say I left the classroom so many years ago I couldn't possibly be speaking any sense.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what I would like to do? I would like to challenge my intellect by serving my people in another capacity. And I am not making any pronouncements as to my leaving politics yet. I will have an opportunity to do that and if that time comes, believe you me, out of courtesy and respect I will tell my constituents before anyone else. But I am saying that I have a decision of exigency to make. It has crossed my mind, believe you me. I leave politics to the politicians. I am not a politician and I make no pretension of ever being one.

As we face the new millennium, the Cayman Islands certainly has a handful of challenges. I believe that if we are to arrive at a constructive position, we in this House have to arrive at some position where we can set the tone for the development of the Cayman Islands for the legacy that we leave for the Cayman Islands. I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the quotation by Alan Kay, that the only way to predict the future is to invent it. That is one of the interpretations I got from what the Fourth Elected Member from George Town was saying and has said on so many occasions.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have a problem because some of us are scared to invent. Some of us are scared of the fact that ideas and intellect are property just like automobiles, just like land, just like condominiums, just like fancy houses and just like fortune. Some of us have not come to that realisation yet. So, we in the Cayman Islands are faced with a myriad of what I call intractable problems as we launch.

We have this whole business of immigration, and what are we going to do? Are we going to be selfish and insular? Are we going to recognise the efforts of those who have been labouring here for so many years as law abiding, making their contributions through taxes and otherwise, and who are now, some of them, third generation here? Are we going to recognise them? Or can we sensibly do that without laying at risk the responsibilities we have to establish persons like myself and the other members who sit inside here?

How far are we going to go with this whole concept of freedom of information and freedom of speech and a civil society? And, Mr. Speaker, this is a good point on which to start out because I am bothered by some things I hear

The call-in show today talked about the idea that has been mooted that the format be changed from what it is now. A person calling in will have to first call and give their identity and telephone number before they can make their contribution, and then someone from the radio station or the programme will call them back.

Mr. Speaker, let me say, sir, that if civil society reaches such a point where we cannot trust people to express themselves and to be so responsible as to express themselves in a way which is not libellous, defamatory or insulting but insightful, if we want a kind of big brother society then we have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that is a two-headed sword and we are going to have to go around listening in and snooping at every house, every mind, every bedroom.

Mr. Speaker, I am chagrined. I am appalled by the very idea that someone would suggest that. Believe you me, I am far too responsible to be coming here talking about conjecture, and this idea has been mooted. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that the powers that be whoever they are may have more sense than to tamper with the elements of freedom and democracy in such a way as to curtail and remove from people what in other countries is a fundamental and democratic right. This leads me very conveniently into this whole notion of the absence of any Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot go into the 21st Century without a document peculiar to the Cayman Islands saying, 'Bill of Rights of the Cayman Islands.' It would be the most serious travesty that was ever visited upon this country.

I don't want people telling me we are covered by the European Convention and by the British Bill of Rights. With all due respect, it has no written constitution and therefore it does not need any written Bill of Rights. They have by tradition, precedent and practise established conventions long before the existence, long before perhaps even the discovery of Cayman Islands by Christopher Columbus. So, we cannot depend on them.

I asked a simple question (being a practical-minded country dude), when someone kicks down my door in the middle of the night, and removes me from my property, what number in England am I to call? What is the name of the gentleman or lady I should call saying that my civil rights have been breached? Who? And then, who is going to allow me to make such a call?

Mr. Speaker, I hope the ridiculousness of the situation can be addressed sooner rather than later.

Mr. Speaker, democracy dictates that we have complete and unequivocal freedom of information and freedom of speech. I hope that we can arrive at that point. I know what the usual objections and the usual excuses have been. I want to say too that I am happy to have been associated with the reforms that His Excellency the Governor talked about in his Throne Speech.

He talked about freedom of information initiatives, the fiscal reform, the public sector management, and the opportunity to break out of the straightjacket of a colonial style system of democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have been the pilot, one of the foremost. At that time, there were three persons bold enough to come forward and say that we should have fiscal reform in our system. The former Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac (whom I see in the gallery today), the current First Elected Member for George Town and I—and the Hansards of the House will show it—were ridiculed. I don't know how we were not flogged.

I suppose the reason why we were not flogged is that they must have decided that they couldn't take that chance with the First Elected Member for George Town being the size that he is.

I am happy to see that we have arrived at that point now where His Excellency said this show must go on.

It is time to break out of the colonial style of democracy. As one who has been castigated since 1978 for daring to write refreshing new ideas about the way I see this country should be going . . . I believe that colonialism had its merits, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I said that it had served the Cayman Islands well. And one of these days I hope to be able to take that up in an academic forum and develop it and promote it. But now, Mr. Speaker, it is time for us to break out of our shell because it is an antiquated system.

I am not advocating that we get rid of it or that we change our constitutional status. It is like a suit, Mr. Speaker. Style dictates that the lapels are too narrow now. We need to widen the lapels. The suit is too tight around the chest anyway so we need to do some alterations, and these can be accommodated without any major shift in our status.

I believe that the Caymanian people have made wise decisions. We made a wise decision when we wouldn't go into independence after the Federation broke up in 1959. And we have many other decisions, but I don't believe like some people I hear shouting that there is a boogiemer every time we talk about reviewing certain instruments.

Mr. Speaker, those people are going to be like the dinosaurs—they are going to become extinct if they don't realise that this is the 21st Century and that we have to be pragmatic and practical. And that these documents and these instruments have been recognised by the United Kingdom, whose instrument our constitution is. If you check it out, Mr. Speaker, technically and legally it does not belong to the Cayman Islands.

And if you engage the people from the FCO in any extended conversation they will be quick to remind you of that, as they reminded my colleague, the former Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac, on the two occasions that we had discussions with them. That is their constitution. That is their instrument.

The Honourable Robin Cook talks about a new relationship with the dependent territories. That is where all these things are leading, Mr. Speaker. So we will be ill-advised if we try to retain the straightjacket and don't buy a suit with a little more stylish lapel and that gives us a little bit more (how do they say it in the fashion world?) breathing room and little more manoeuvrability.

So that is why I am not taken in by those people who believe that once you put it there you cannot touch it. The bureaucracy was never intended to function like that.

Mr. Speaker, we in this country have to arrive at a position where we have to be able to understand what kind of country we want to build. That is why, Mr. Speaker, years ago I said that the Cayman Islands could have been the Singapore of the West. We should have taken off on the model that Lee Kuan Yew laid out in Singapore. We had all of the prerequisites: A small society with a fairly well established economic system; a pool of people who were experienced even if the formal education was at that time not too developed.

We had a small population, a very small landmass, and yet we had a very good standard of living and a good economic system.

But we wasted the opportunity. As a result we find ourselves (putting it mildly) in a challenging position. Why? Because the primary resource we had—the land—is gone from the people who once owned the land. And if we are not careful, Mr. Speaker, this is going to be problematic. And I said that way back in 1978. That is why some of the people in here—who are Ministers now—labelled me and gave me such a warm time. But, Mr. Speaker, the chickens are coming home to roost!

We see it every day, in the arguments over rights to the beach, and it is still not settled. Somebody called me up the other day and asked when this is going to finally be settled? When is a decision going to be made as to our access to the beach and who has access?

So, Mr. Speaker, we have wasted many good opportunities and many good years. And on the threshold of the 21st Century we have no idea of the kind of economic and social situation we are facing because there is no scientific poverty in the indices, no accurate indices of poverty.

We don't know, Mr. Speaker, what the Social Service is doing, who it is catering to because we don't have a measure like they have in the United States which says if you make less than this amount we have to consider you are living below the poverty line. So these are things I have been saying. Check the Hansards.

That is why I am saying I am becoming cynical, because these are things that I have been saying from the time I came here but nobody is listening, nobody is reading and they think, 'Oh this guy from Guard House Hill, that little black boy, he is a fool. Nobody is listening to him, he is an educated idiot, he is a radical.' Years ago they said I was 'pink,' a leftist.

I don't know what is going to take. I don't know what happens to people when they become government ministers and believe they have all the answers and they take on god-like qualities. Mr. Speaker, we need to have an index of poverty.

I see that we are taking a census later this year. It would be a good time to include some questions that will give us an idea of how well our society is doing, or is not doing, by letting us know how many people are living on the edge or below the poverty line. Then we can better spend the resources that we have available to help those who are in need.

I heard the Fourth Elected Member for George Town talk about that it is high time we arrived at a position in this country where the multi-national corporations developed a sense of corporate responsibility beside what they have been doing. You know, they come here, they have a good social climate, they have an ideal economic climate, and yet they are reluctant, Mr. Speaker, to be good corporate citizens.

All these buildings are built up with no nursery facilities for the young Caymanian mothers who work in them. And people got to take their lunch hour if they need to take a sick infant to the hospital or to the clinic, they have to sacrifice their lunch hour.

There are no babysitting facilities, Mr. Speaker. And they can't understand that if you have all these facilities right on the spot they are going to get more and better performance because the young mother who has her child downstairs in the nursery is not going to be breaking her neck to leave at 5:00 p.m. to beat the traffic or to beat some deadline. Her child is in the nursery taken care of by a trained child care worker, so she is going to say, 'My boss asked me to complete this report. I haven't completed the report but my child is safe and secure, I will call my husband to let him know I will be late for dinner and I am going to spend an extra half an hour or so doing this report so that I can give it to my boss so he will have it first thing in the morning.'

But, Mr. Speaker, under the situation now, do you know what the young mother says? 'Boy, it is 5:00 p.m. my legal time is finished. I am going and I will get the report tomorrow.' So, Mr. Speaker, we have to develop some sense of corporate responsibility and provide for our workers because it is through this that we are going to get the best production without any coercion. It is going to come naturally and the government itself can learn a lesson from these kinds of things.

I hope the next Government Administration Building has a decent cafeteria, with nursery facilities and exercise rooms, Mr. Speaker. Because the men will come to work early too, do an half a hour in the gym, take a shower and by 7:30 am they will be in their offices performing. And then they will stay at work until 6:00 p.m., go to the gym, work out for half an hour, take a shower and they may even go back to work. So we have to begin to exercise intellectual flexibility and foresight.

But these things are not new. Nor are these ideas peculiar to me. Other people have been saying them and I have been saying them for years. I come back to what makes me believe that as a representative I have been a failure, I have been impotent because I have been saying these kinds of things and people have been laughing.

Mr. Speaker, the media bears some culpability too, because they don't latch on to these kinds of things and promote them. But if you say some nonsense, they are quick to snicker and put it in the headlines to make you look bad.

I like it when I am in this kind of mood. It reminds me of my Dad when he was at his best. Things need to be said. I don't really care because I remain to be convinced that I have any audience at all, let alone anyone who is looking and listening and saying, 'we should do these things because it is not too late.'

Mr. Speaker, taking about corporate responsibility, we have situations in this country where an employee at one of the hotels requested a raise and her immediate boss lifted his foot and told her that the only raise she was going to get was the raise he was going to give her with his foot. Mr. Speaker, these people ought to thank God because Cayman is the only country in the Caribbean where they could get away with that. I mean my constituent told me that the story is true. This is not an apocryphal story, this is true.

I called the Labour Department. I called the establishment and I said, "You know what? If this gentleman is here by the weekend, believe you me, I am going to make this a national issue."

You have some institutions now, banks telling their employees, 'find somewhere else to park because we need the parking space for these other people who are more important than you are.' And these people are not even Caymanians! They are not for the customers, you know, Mr. Speaker, because if they were for the customers I could understand. But running them out of space that they have been using some of them for months and years for persons who are not even Caymanians. And then the person giving them this directorate is not himself a Caymanian.

We have it all wrong, Mr. Speaker. These people need to wake up and smell the roses. There should be some corporate responsibility. That is why I like progressive countries like New Zealand. What is being promoted is a sense of corporate responsibility. These multinational corporations must do something for the people.

They talk about better performance. That, Mr. Speaker, would stem the tide of the rapid roll-over in staff, it would give them better production, they would have better long term workers. You look at the institutions, look at those entities which have good relations and good rapport and some sense of corporate responsibility among their employees.

There is little to any turnover, little-to-no rollover. I don't want to pre-empt the motion, however, I don't want this opportunity to pass. I was reading in the papers the other day, it is unfair, it is dishonest, it is not in the best interest of the young Caymanian especially for entities to encourage them to come to work not properly trained. And we need someone to tell Caymanians that when they do that they are putting themselves at a great disadvantage because they are eliminating all possibility of promotion or as we say in sociology "upward mobility."

Don't let them entice people by telling them, 'well, you can come, we can take you, you have entry level qualifications and no opportunities for future training and upward mobility.' And when I read that I was really astounded, I was saying only in the Cayman Islands would entities be allowed to get away like this.

Mr. Speaker, I do not advocate that the government dips into everything. As a matter of fact, I would describe myself as a civil libertarian. But in some instances, the government has to put its foot down. But you know, in all instances the Government can't put its foot down because it's like the anecdote that I am going to relate that happened in my college.

At the Mico Teachers' College, Mr. Speaker, they didn't like beards. The principal didn't like his students walking around with beards so one day two of my friends decided that they were going to grow a beard.

And Mr. Owen called one of them and he said, "Mr. Reece, I want you to take a message to Mr. Suckoo."

So my friend, Carl Reece said, "Yes, Mr. Owen, and what is the message?"

Mr. Owen said, "I want you to tell him that he should shave his beard."

So Mr. Reece said, "Yes, Mr. Owen, I certainly will deliver the message."

But the principal who was very sharp-witted said, "But, Mr. Reece, before you take that message you have to do something yourself. You have to shave."

Before the government can set certain demands, it has to ensure that it is doing things and complying. Then it can demand and recommend that entities in the private sector so do. So it is a challenge, and we are not going to make it. The system is going to break down, the wheel is going to break down if we do not do that. Labour is problematic and I don't know what the entities are waiting for until they address some of these intractable problems that are crying out for solutions.

Mr. Speaker, the Finance Committee of a year ago heard the problems here. There are numerous problems still waiting to be solved that the Labour Board has a backlog of them. The Leader of Government Business, the Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning, gave an undertaking that they would be solved, that he would ensure . . . Mr. Speaker, nothing has been done.

I made enquiries recently. If anything, the backlog has grown. What are we waiting for? You know, some of these problems have been in litigation for years; people are waiting on settlements. Money is involved. Someone needs to assume responsibility.

So I am saying that it is no use, it is an empty boast for us to talk about how we are progressive, how we are doing well, we are the fifth largest international financial centre, if we have these kinds of intractable problems and we are not discussing them.

Do you know where the Government has a problem too? In one of its statutory boards, I know now that there were three young Caymanian engineers trained and qualified. What happened? They got frustrated and left. The third young man told me he has just taken up a job with another statutory authority as an engineer. Why? Because someone has failed to put in the right succession plan.

They lack the will to put in the right succession plan and then we are encouraging people to go away and get trained. These are youngsters who are in their twenties, and I mean it is a source of frustration and it is unfair to tell them to go to university, study hard to get engineering degrees. We have no succession plan.

How can one person to whom the country has no obligation be in the way frustrating a whole slew of young Caymanians? Mr. Speaker, I mean I could recite a litany of these kind of experiences that would make even an experienced master mariner like you shed tears, sir. The Government can't do anything to the private sector until they do what Mr. Owen told Karl Reece he had to do. The Government needs to first shave their own beards before they can tell the private sector to shave its beard.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can get through the matter of the OECD and the European Union and the G-7 or G-8 and all these countries with regard to the demands that they are making upon us. I think we made a fundamental mistake years ago.

We should have been promoting the fact that we were compliant with the international expectations and international laws rather than that we were growing so fast, so soon. Now, we have changed our emphasis and our focus and I am happy for that. But we have some uphill climbing to do and I have every confidence that we are going to do that.

I just want to say in this regard that it may be timely also to keep an eye on what is happening with the European Union and the development of the Euro. There are those financial pundits and economists who say that the Euro will one day supersede the United States dollar as the currency of international trade and international markets. That may not come about tomorrow, but it is worthwhile keeping an eye on it.

As matter of fact, we may even need to develop some kind of unit to strategically set out the course of action that we should pursue.

I believe that such a move would be compatible with our continuing development as a reputable international financial centre. It certainly wouldn't hurt our flexibility and our ability to adapt if we had such a position well articulated and well set out that in case of the eventuality we would not be caught unaware.

Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to remain the champion that the Cayman Islands has been. Any true champion will not concede the championship lightly. And in order to maintain the championship, the champion has to spend countless hours training in the gym working out. That is what we have to do.

I prefer to term it after Michael Porter, the Harvard Professor. Our competitive strategy must be perfectly honed, we have to take cognisance that our competition is not only regional but it is international. And it is to this regard that the government has an advantage in that members on both sides of the House have decided that where our economic prosperity and our ability to continue to do well economically is concerned there is no division.

We are together hand-in-hand when it comes to maintaining our image and the integrity of the Cayman Islands.

The government must seek to take greater advantage of this by including members from this side of the House more often when they go to international forums. If only, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that the law of averages says that the government is going to change one of these days.

It would be advantageous for persons who might not be in the government now (but who may be members on this side) to have some idea as to what is going on. And since, Mr. Speaker, we are all of the same opinion when it comes to Cayman Islands position, there is nothing to fear by including members from this side when going to these international forums and meetings.

Mr. Speaker, if there is an indication that this is the lunch hour, I would welcome a break, sir. When I get like this my throat dries out rather quickly.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until 2:30 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1:02 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2:50 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town continuing.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I really regret that I have to be so abbreviated. But I have to be attending the funeral of one of my grand-aunts. So I have to make the best of the opportunity that I have until 3:30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker, I want to spend most of the time I have left talking about education and training and its relation to preparing the Cayman Islands for the 21st Century. But before I get on to that I want to tidy up a couple of loose ends that I had mentioned before.

The Select Committee on Immigration has a glorious opportunity to once and for all craft for this country a sensible immigration law, and rid us of some of the prejudices that we may be harbouring. I only hope that we grasp these opportunities to the fullest extent and prepare ourselves to really take advantage of the greatest the society can achieve through an amalgamation of persons who have been here, who have laboured and contributed working in tandem with established Caymanians.

I want to underscore that many years ago I came here echoing Marshall McLuhan, saying that the world was becoming a global village. The statement was laughed at then. But, Mr. Speaker, all of us who have perception can see that. And we don't necessarily have to have the kind of prejudice that I read about in a book by the Frenchman, Jean Raspail, when he talked about The Camp of the Saints.

We also have to be aware that this business of people smuggling is a growing phenomenon, which concerns the United Nations and the international authorities. But by the same token we have an overriding responsibility and an obligation to develop the Cayman Islands using the broadest concepts, availing ourselves of as wide a spectrum of human resources as we possibly can.

No country is an island unto itself, and I am reminded every day that the great United States, perhaps all of us who share certain prejudices should go and visit the Statue of Liberty and read the inscription on that statue. We will understand how great countries come about.

I hope that we can shed certain prejudices. But at the same time remain pragmatic and true to ourselves and realise that while we cannot take in everyone who knocks at our door, we have a moral obligation to absorb those who have been long suffering and long serving. And, Mr. Speaker, that is the position I have always espoused. I recognise that there are persons here not with family connections, by blood or even marriage, but who are honest, hard-working, and long suffering and we need to be fair and honest with them.

Mr. Speaker, from the point of view that I labour from, all of us (including me, and I traced my ancestry in these islands down to the 18th Century) are expatriates. As I understand it, the original inhabitants of this country when they permanently settled in the first place were Amerindians—people with different physical features that we have, different life-styles. So, while I would not sell my constituents and countrymen out, I cannot lead them into insularity and prejudice on the eve of the 21st Century. I have always stood for fairness.

So we have a challenge and I hope that we can arrive at crafting a policy that is fair and reasonable. We have a moral obligation and especially those of us who say that we come from a Christian heritage and that we are Christians. We have a moral obligation to live and uphold that code, Mr. Speaker.

I want to mention one other thing that falls under the rubric of corporate responsibility. Mr. Speaker, I lament what the oil companies are doing in this country. Not only are they in the business of storing and distributing bulk petroleum products, but they are also in the business of becoming merchants. I found out that their licence really does not allow them to do that. And I am throwing the challenge out, because I want to encourage the government to get on their case.

I have received too many complaints about entrepreneurial Caymanian people who are getting squeezed because the oil companies are using their monopoly in storing and distributing the products, and extending it now to owning the stations and getting people to be landlords. And getting persons who should have been allowed to develop and hone their entrepreneurial skills, making them become mere tenants with no possibility of broadening their investments, and their interest and expanding their entrepreneurial skills.

Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do (being the world traveller that you are), that the capitalist system breaks down when such a pernicious system is allowed to happen. I have every hope and every encouragement that the government is going to take this matter in hand because it affects our people and they are being squeezed.

Mr. Speaker, I want now to move my favourite subjects, education and training. And it is perhaps at this point that I need to preface my comments by saying that I am going to be critical but I am going to be fair.

I have never, ever in my years here seen it as my responsibility to praise the government without providing the balance of saying where I see the shortfalls in the system. I have said from day one that the weakness in our education system is that we have failed to adequately promote technical and vocational education. Too many of our young people labour under the delusion that they are only important if they succeed in the world of white-collar employment. Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth.

I am reminded of the old adage that I learned many years ago from Mr. G. H. Owen, who was then the principal of the Mico Teachers' College. There is dignity in labour. As long as that labour is honest labour there is no differentiation between the dollar earned by a man who works with his hands, namely a mechanic, or a mason, or an electrician, and the dollar of the man who works with his brains. If there is, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know.

When you go to the bank on Friday afternoon to make your deposit, there is no difference in your dollar. Except, of course, one is a US and one is a Cayman Islands, or whatever. But if we are working for the same currency there is no differentiation and no distinction.

When I was in the school system, I saw it as a weakness. I still see it as a weakness, and we need to give more than lip service. Mr. Speaker, there is a motion having to do with training, and I don't want to pre-empt that motion. But I want to say that many years ago in at least three debates I gave some examples. And, I have to say again these are the reasons why I have become cynical about this whole business of debate and of political dialogue. For too many years I have been poked fun at, laughed at, made fun of, and reminded, Mr. Speaker, that I am defunct.

I have to say why I am cynical. I am standing up here debating and when I look over there, there is nothing but emptiness. The government thinks my contribution is so worthless that none of the elected members are there.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to God that we had television covering this Parliament so that the people who elected them could see what happens in this Chamber. I hate to have to draw that to your attention, but I cannot let these things go unsaid any longer.

Like Ella Wheeler Wilcox said, "To sin by silence when we should protest make cowards out of men." They think that what we have to say is so worthless or so contemptuous that they are not even here. Anyway, it doesn't really matter because you know under the Westminster system I am addressing the Chair anyway. I am speaking to the Speaker anyway. So whether they are here or not, you know, the show will go on as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Speaker, let me get back to the point that I was developing, we have a basic flaw in our system, in that we have not given enough effort to developing a technical and vocational education initiative in this country. It must begin from the primary school. We must let our students know that there is dignity in labour.

I have to say this again because that is where I got my background, that is where I was at a very formative stage. That is one of the things I liked about the society in Jamaica, they promoted the trades, and they promoted these skills. Even today, they have a plethora of trade training centres, vocational skill centres, and all that. And that is one of things that I liked about that. If we would check our workforce, many of the people who do skilled and semi-skilled labour still bear that nationality.

Mr. Speaker, I remain to be convinced that anything other than lip service has been given to this development. We don't have an institution that we could quite literally categorise as offering technical and vocational skills and education. There are numerous models, Mr. Speaker, that we could have adopted. I talked about the SKF Ball Bearing Factory in Sweden. I talked about what they do in Germany with BMW and Mercedes Benz, the kind of programmes they have whereby trainees spend half of the day in a classroom learning the academic subjects and the other half on the shop floor.

Mr. Speaker, I went to Japan on a technical scholarship offered in conjunction with the Ministry of International Trade and Industry and the Nissan Motor Corporation. When I mentioned these things to the Minister of Education, he poked fun at me and said if I wanted to utilise them and get access to them, I must make the effort. Mr. Speaker, I am not a government minister! I am not a member of the government. I can't write to these people. I am an alumni, but it would be more beneficial coming from him if he made the approach.

Mr. Speaker, I stayed with 1,600 persons like myself from all over the world including countries that we would call developed—Mexico, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Italy, India. All of these people were in Japan on various forms of training. It is available, Mr. Speaker, all I had to pay was my airfare to and from for six weeks.

But you see it is no wonder we are no better off because the people who should be listening are not here. Yet they are going to come when its their time and say all that they have done and all that they have been doing. Mr. Speaker, as much as is being done—and I am not saying that nothing is not being done. More could be done. Much more could be done.

It is unfortunate and regrettable that employers would encourage Caymanians to come into their corporations or their business half-trained, or untrained. I find that deeply regrettable on two counts: on the first count some Caymanian is being robbed of the opportunity to rise to his fullest potential; and on the second count, the employer is shorting himself of the opportunity to eventually have in his employ a well-trained and well-developed person.

Caymanians must realise that if they let the opportunities lull them into that sense of false prosperity, they are doing themselves a great disfavoured. At the end of the day, they are going to be displaced by someone who is properly trained, equipped, and educated. And more often than not, according to stories I am hearing, those persons are not Caymanians.

So, it is for the Caymanian employee or prospect to realise that in all cases it doesn't make sense to go for the glory of the moment. It is not always a 100-metre dash, sometimes it is a marathon. It is better to make the sacrifice and be better prepared and better equipped for the long haul. That, Mr. Speaker, is a position that could be well articulated and promoted by the government by ensuring that there is some manpower needs assessment survey so that they can operate scientifically from a position of knowledge.

To the best of my knowledge, there has never been any scientifically conducted manpower needs assessment survey. And we don't have to spend a whole lot of money doing this. There are agencies of the United Nations that will do this. There are agencies in the International Labour Organisation that will give technical and consultative help with these things. This is the kind of foundation we should base any sensible training programme on so that we can make projections. We can know exactly from year to year what we will be doing.

I hear people in the construction business complaining that they are even passing over the traditional people so much so that no longer are the Jamaicans the primary source. But people are coming in from elsewhere particularly Canada. Everything is based on the small wages that people want to pay.

In a manner of speaking, it is a false sense of reality that we are cultivating. People are only trying to be self-ish by promoting their own causes rather than looking at the broader picture and saying, 'You know what? If we make these things available not only are we going to be better off now but we are going to be better off ten years from now, fifty years from now.'

Someone has to hold the Caymanian by the hand and let him understand that he should go where the opportunities afford him to get training, get education, get discipline to make the sacrifices which will benefit him in the long run.

Mr. Speaker, I was really fortune. You know, I have to say that this has always been my example and I promote it wherever I can. I had a Grandfather who like many Caymanians emigrated. He went to the United States and became a naturalised American citizen. He returned to this country in 1959 after working for twenty-five years with one of the major oil companies.

And I remember as a youngster of eight or nine, he was a kind of phenomenon because this black man standing 6 feet 5 inches spoke in the flowing accent of his adopted southern civility.

He left New York and went down south to Texas. It took me years to understand and realise the contradictions. This black man speaking like what we call a southern cracker . . . I couldn't really rationalise that until many years later. I can still hear his voice echoing in my ears now when he used to tell me in the afternoons when we met on the veranda, "Son, if you want to do something for yourself get an education."

And he went on to tell me that it is not like money that you put in the bank today and draw it out tomorrow. It is not like a suit of clothes that you will outgrow. It is not even like a house that you may lose through a hurricane. Mr. Speaker, I really am happy that I had such a grandfather. And today, if you were to ask me what advice I would you give a young Caymanian, that is exactly the same advice I would give them.

Mr. Speaker, my grandfather left me with that legacy and told me, "There is nothing, son, that you cannot achieve if you put your mind to it." And that is what I say to my young Caymanian men and women—get that education.

I heard the Fourth Elected Member for George Town mention problems in the bank because some of them are being passed over, pushed out because they came in with entry level qualifications. And, of course, the institution through short-sightedness, or worse, didn't encourage them to improve their qualifications and standing.

So what happens now? Younger, more educated people are coming in sometimes at lower salaries. So, you have a displacement, natural and otherwise.

One of the things we need to promote more fully is that our people take greater advantage of the educational and training opportunities available to them. And, Mr. Speaker, it goes as much for the government, for the public sector, as it does for people in the private sector. Let us not be lulled by the culture of materialism and say, 'I can't bother to go away to university or technical school. I can't take this course because I will be studying for six months. If I say here I will be making $3,000 a month.'

We need to prepare ourselves for the 21st Century. And the education ministry and all the other related ministries have to craft a strategy and design their public relations and their information skills that this is the kind of message that they promote. It is not good enough to say we offer the courses at the Community College.

They are going un-taken because the students are not interested, or they are dropping out. Let us find out why they are dropping out. Sometimes we have to lead the horse to the water and help him drink.

We need educational revolution, Mr. Speaker. That's what we need. We don't need the minister in here telling people that they are defunct and that they are unimportant and that they have been out of their profession for twenty-five years. And, Mr. Speaker, I have something to say about that.

You know, at the beginning of April the First Elected Member for George Town and I will be going on a global conference learning for the 21st Century. It is being put on by Arthur Andersen in Illinois. Mr. Speaker, we are going to be in seminars with some of the most formative thinkers in the world of business, in the world of finance, in the world of education; people of the likes of Peter Drucker and Jane Goodall.

Responsibility and well-meaning doesn't begin and end with some fortuitous combination of circumstances that they were minister for so many years and they think that gives them a licence to remind other people that they are failures or that they are defunct.

And I harp back on it: These are the reasons why I am cynical and I am as contemptuous of them as they are of me. I believe that whatever happens it is my responsibility to ensure that my colleagues avail themselves of the opportunity to gain as much knowledge to develop and hone their leadership skills so that whatever eventualities occur the Caymanian Islands can be better because there are people prepared.

I don't say that Roy Bodden is the only person available to do this. I want to share it and spread it among all of my colleagues. I never had such a selfish bent. I was the eldest of five, so I couldn't be selfish. But we need to have an educational revolution in this country, such that it covers all spectrums of the learning cycle from the most academic down to the most technical. We need to find out why vocational and technical training has failed.

We need to nip it in the bud. We need to promote that and we need to find a way because it is only by so doing that the Cayman Islands is going to go into the 21st century equipped as the country should be equipped.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to lament the fact that the International College of the Cayman Islands is not given the relevant support by government. And why do we have the Community College and the International College—two institutions? While they should be complementary they seem to be competitive. It pains by heart. It is such a waste of human resources, of physical facilities, of student exchanges, a waste of everything. And I question again why we cannot find a way to narrow the distance, to make these institutions mutually beneficial and complementary.

I have raised the question before and it seems that no one has taken it seriously. I believe that, that is the route we should take. I was hoping, with the mention of the development of a teacher training institution . . . because I know Dr. Bernard Fleury [?], the very imminent and distinguished educator, may now be permanently on the staff of the International College.

I hope that the government if it goes through with the mooted idea to develop a teacher's college can utilise the services of this very distinguished and imminent professor of education.

I have always wondered why we should re-invent the wheel when the wheel has already been re-invented.

We should reserve and conserve our efforts on refining the wheel.

There is no reason why we should not be offering complementary assistance, complementary courses, sharing faculty, sharing other resources, Mr. Speaker. And I want to say that I don't think that education can be developed in this country to the extent that it should be developed when we don't yet have a decent national library.

These things go hand in hand. And while I admit that we have made much ground and we have some good achievements in the academic areas we need to concentrate more on technical and vocational skills. There is no reason, Mr. Speaker, why we should not be soon arriving at the point where in our primary schools almost every student leaves computer literate. I said years ago that we could have been the model. We could have been the Singapore in this regard.

And I want to say something else that I said I wasn't going to say, but I have reached the point where I don't have to be selfish with my ideas.

I think it is time that modern teaching methods dictate that the best and most proficient second language skills are had through the development of a language laboratory. We have a community college, we have two high schools, but we have no language laboratory. How can you teach an accent without having someone exposed to a tape recorder where they can hear themselves and play it back until they develop the proper accent?

We also need to complement our educational facilities with the development of a language laboratory and these kinds of ideas.

I can assure the minister that does not come from defunct people but rather comes from people who are experienced and knowledgeable about the cutting edge of education and educational developments.

So while I am quick to give credit, I also have to speak of the shortcomings and of improvements which could be made. And I say that there is no reason why training, technical and vocational education, could not do better.

I was unhappy about the break because the First Elected Member from West Bay had a good programme. I listened intently to his presentation when he talked about the Cayman Islands training initiative and we let it lapse, and we let it atrophy a little bit. It's an idea whose time has come and we should find a way to get that back on line. I know, Mr. Speaker, there are people who are willing and ready to take advantage of such a programme.

I didn't believe from day one that we should have put it at the Community College. And here is the reason: The Community College is doing well but we have to remember that some of the people going to that programme are not necessarily community college material. The whole atmosphere might intimidate some of them.

I am not saying they can't take advantage of community college courses, but I am saying that before they go to the Community College their skills should be refreshed and re-honed. Some of them are young mothers, some of them have been out of school for several years.

And I am not in any way putting them down. I am just being practical. I am saying we should have some kind of orientation period just like when one goes on a scholarship offered by the Association of Technical Scholarships in Japan.

There was an orientation period of sometimes three months depending on the area in which you go. When you are plucked into the classroom where you have to learn the technical skills, they know that you are equipped.

They call it screening. They eliminate failure and dropout because this is an investment in resources—much like people put their money in the bank and expect interest on return. It doesn't look good when you take in 50 and 45 dropout. We have to screen the people and we say, 'Alright, we are going to take you at this level for six weeks before we put you to the level for educational and vocational training.'

And all the time that is going on, Mr. Speaker, they are offered an incentive, a stipend so that they won't have to worry about where they are going to get formula or pampers for the baby. They are content and they can give all their attention to learning and to the classroom. These are things that the minister and the related ministries need to work on and there is no shortage, Mr. Speaker, of persons on this side to do that.

Mr. Speaker, if you read the result of the survey that was done, we have a problem with drugs: 45.7% tried ganja. I heard my colleague, the First Elected Member for West Bay, say when a certain situation flared up that a task force should have been formed. I don't know where it fell. It must be on stones. Or it got choked somehow or maybe it drowned. Nothing has been done. No move has been made to take him up on that.

These are national problems and they need a national approach. There are people on this side—sociologists, educators, experienced people—who would be willing to work anytime with the government on matters that concern the future development of the country and its youth.

The government should avail itself of the offers and get away from this business of putting down and getting personal and only being interested when it thinks it can one-up somebody.

Mr. Speaker, at the threshold of the 21st Century, we have to display greater political maturity than that. This country is greater than any of us individually and just as great as all of us collectively. This is a partnership. This is an exercise in co-operation.

And the law of averages being what it is, Mr. Speaker, one of these days the wheels are going to turn and the persons that are on this side now are going to be the government. And the persons that are on that side, some of them . . . if they don't become like the dinosaurs, they are going to be over here. It does not have to be a Sisyphean exercise where every year we repeat the same thing over, and over, and every year the same people that we are speaking to don't listen.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach the 21st Century we have all these challenges and more. But the Cayman Islands won't continue on its present level of prosperity and social harmony and economic goodwill if the people who make policy are not listening. Not only have we got to deal with this, we have to deal with crime in cyberspace. We have to prepare ourselves for the Y2K problem. There is no shortage, Mr. Speaker. But, if we break down in one area, we are going to break down in all the other areas.

I want to end my contribution by saying that the reason the Caymanian people elected 15 people was (in addition to the Constitution saying that there should be 15 elected members) that it takes 15 elected members in collectively to develop the country. It takes many more, but for purposes of the Parliament, it takes 15.

This, Mr. Speaker, should not be a forum of "us" versus "them." It should be a forum for the betterment of the country. It shouldn't be a forum where I look across and say, 'you are defunct, you are not successful, you are not a millionaire like me.' It should be a forum where if you have a good idea sir, let's hear it—let us talk about it, let us flesh it out. We are all here under the same hospices, same objective for the betterment of constituency and country.

We can make this a good place if we are serious. But it will never become anything other than a mediocrity if what is given with good intent and sincerity is flouted and not even listened to, and people exercise contempt by not even thinking enough of other members' contributions to give them an ear. Mr. Speaker, I hope that my remarks fall on fertile ground.

I rest my case and hope for the best for my country and its people. I hope that when the government gets up—particularly, I want to challenge the Minister of Education—that the debate will be within the parameters of policies and what they plan to do and how we are going to meet some of the challenges that I have spoken about. I hope they are confined to that, Mr. Speaker, because I am tired of hearing about my pedigree.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of what some people may believe, I am not necessarily singing a swan song. But, trust me, I can do other things besides stand up here and speak to a sometimes empty Chamber.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The floor is opened to debate. Does any other member wish to speak?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest the break, sir?

The Speaker: Provided someone will speak when we come back. We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3:30 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4:06 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. Does any other honourable member wish to speak?

The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an old Latin saying which goes like this, "Lupus pilum mutat, non mentem." What that means, Mr. Speaker, is the wolf changes his coat but not his disposition.

I would have preferred to have heard some of the government's case in putting forward its policies before any more of us from the backbench had spoken. But I gather that the logic put forward by the government is that it has the inherent right to sit and listen to all that is said by the backbench, and then it can reply to everything that is said.

If one remains insular in thought that could seem to have a certain amount of logic to it. But one of the things that the government seems not to be aware of, or pay any attention to, is the fact that when His Excellency delivers a Throne Speech, which encompasses all of the ministries and portfolios and their supposed policies and direction for the ensuing year, he certainly, sir, is not expected to flesh out these policies and directions.

Basically, all that he is able to do is to give a synopsis. Therefore, it becomes incumbent on the government and those individuals responsible for each of the ministries to be able to expound on these policies and to let us and the people of the country know the direction in which the government is heading.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am going to choose this late time in the afternoon to try to explain to the government why it should employ a different tactic if it wants this Parliament to work properly.

If the love of what you do exceeds the labour of doing it, success is inevitable. I wish that the games would stop. We have talked about it before and I am going to say clearly here this afternoon, that I am not going to allow myself to fall in line with that (for want of a better word) perverted way of thinking. We have a responsibility to the people of this country.

Government continues to complain that we criticise and we fantasise and we do all kinds of things but we never offer any alternatives or any solutions. What the government needs to understand is that while we are thinking persons, on many occasions if the government is not prepared to equip us with information. We certainly are not in a position to be able to offer these alternatives or solutions to some of the country's problems.

But you see, Mr. Speaker, some of those who have been here a mighty long time are set in their ways. That is why I gave that little Latin phrase because the wolf does change its coat but not its disposition. I can only hope that by some act of God—because it doesn't seem like any act of man will do it—that others around the wolf will find their own way rather than following suit with the fixation that exists in that area.

This Throne Speech which (the final one given by this Governor) touched on several areas which are very, very important to all of us. I think to follow up what the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town said in his contribution, we need to really perform our duties with a new way of thinking—"we," meaning the representatives of the people of this country.

I have, on occasion with a bit of disgust, spoken about how we do what we do and that many of our efforts are actually wasted because of the one-upmanship that exists between us. And I will admit that on occasion I have allowed myself to fall into the trap—because that is what it is, a trap. Whether it is purposely set or not, it is a trap. I would like to believe that we can begin to look at the whole situation in a different light and, perhaps, we would be able to be more productive in the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is late in the afternoon so I don't intend to go into any detail of any specific topic. But let me say this: God willing, when I continue tomorrow, sir, there are several specific areas that I will be addressing.

To prove what I am talking about, I noticed, Mr. Speaker, in the Governor's Throne Speech under Aviation, Cayman Airways, which to me is a subject that is very, very important to all of us given the circumstances which surround the airline. In that speech, there is one line about Cayman Airways—one single line! "Cayman Airways is considering purchasing a third jet to increase capacity." Boom! Finished! No more!

Now, it seems to me government was prepared to just leave it like that. But, perhaps, that is one of the topics which the government—namely, the minister—doesn't wish to talk about. For the punishment he has put me through in the past, I can play a little bit of tit for tat. I don't want him to sleep well tonight. I need him to make sure that he does his homework to have every bit of information on hand because tomorrow he is going to be tested.

He is not going to be tested with acrimony and bitterness or anything like that. I would like to believe that we can get beyond that. I know I can, but there are many issues which need to be addressed. And I just happened to use that one. I could have used any other topic, but it comes down to the way that we do the business of the country.

Mr. Speaker, we have to be able to speak freely about these matters. We have to be willing to listen to the criticism. And, hopefully, it is constructive. Sometimes criticism is levelled in areas where at the end of the day it may not be deserved.

But you see, if the information is not forthcoming so that we have the facts available to us, then naturally we are going to form opinions based on the limited knowledge that we have on the subject.

So when I let the minister know that he must do his homework, while it may be taken slightly in jest and/or perhaps it is possibly also taken as a threat, it is neither of the two.

Mr. Speaker, this time around we expect the government to be willing to take the time out to be prepared, and to expound on their policies, at least to the point where we have a fairly clear indication as to the direction we are heading.

I believe that it is not an unfair comment to say that to this point we have seen no clear, cohesive effort to show a sense of direction by the government. At best, we see individuals speaking about individual situations. Prior to this, I referred to an octopus without a brain. And that is not meant to criticise anybody and to suggest that the members of the government are not intelligent people. But if an octopus has eight tentacles and doesn't have a brain, I want somebody to tell me which direction it is going to head in?

So, Mr. Speaker, let us see if finally the octopus can acquire a brain. And we are going to see if the government is prepared to come forward and let us know about the direction in which it is heading.

It is not good enough to hear the Minister of Health tell us about the new hospital. Or the Minister for Community Development tell us about a new initiative about youth, or the Minister for Tourism who has taken on Public Works to tell us about road works. Or the Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning to tell us about an update on the curriculum that is being developed in the strategic education exercise that is going on. Or for the Minister of Agriculture to tell us about the Mealy Bug disease and what's being done.

After all of that is finished, Mr. Speaker, the country must have a direction. And if the government fails either to believe or understand, or want to take on the task of putting the country in a direction then, Mr. Speaker, we may as well be government-less.

Because unlike what individuals may believe, in the same way it suits them to tout collective responsibility so too in the same way is it incumbent on them to understand that their role as the executive elected branch of government is to lead the country in a set direction.

When the Fourth Elected Member for George Town spoke about a myriad of issues, which dealt with people, which dealt with problems that exist with people in the country, Mr. Speaker, it was obvious from his tone that frustration has transcended from the people to him. I know how that feeling is. I have lived it—and I am still living it. Mr. Speaker, the reason for all of that is because we have no direction. That is where the problem lies.

So when government makes decisions based on political fall-out that gives a clear indication that we have no direction. . . because if the government were prepared to set a course, then the decisions would not be based on political fall-out but on the course that they have set. I don't know if that is making sense to some people. Let me explain that to the best of my ability.

Everyday we find another problem that has developed. If all we do is spend our life reacting to problems that arise, Mr. Speaker, it is almost a safe bet to say that we will spend our life hearing those problems and never be able to do anything about it because we have no direction. Perhaps, someone should get up and question my tedious repetition of the word, 'direction.'

That little word is going to either make or break this country. There are too many things happening too fast and there are too many things that are happening that no one has the ability to do anything about because—one more time—there is no direction!

Let me use an example: If there was clear direction in the country then we would have a strict and workable policy based on all information available to us to deal with development. All of us, including me, can get up here and talk about sustainable development, we can talk about a development plan, we can talk about how this is the first government that did the review of the development plan and all of that. But in the final analysis it means nothing.

You have this plan, you have a central planning authority, you amend your regulations, you do this and that to your law . . . but, if you check what is happening with development, nothing has changed. Nothing! It is just getting more and more cumbersome to deal with.

You have developers on the one hand complaining about how the bureaucracy is too over-bearing and they are not of a mind to develop anymore. You have the conservationist on the other hand who says the land is being raped and there is total disregard for ecosystems and the environment and its health. All we are dealing with is who can make the most money.

Mr. Speaker, whichever side of the fence we take no one is satisfied. There is no formula where you are testing the integrity of anything that is being done, and equating it to what will my country be like ten years from now, or even five years from now. So, while not professing that all of this is an exercise in total futility, the truth of the matter is that at best we are skirting the periphery. We are not dealing with what we have to deal with.

All of this talk may seem to be abstract and generic but, Mr. Speaker, let me put it bluntly this afternoon before you close, sir. This country cannot continue to survive and move into the 21st Century with any government operating in the fashion that this government operates today. It cannot! The statement is not made for the individuals who make up the government to take umbrage. If they wish to do so that's up to them. I am just explaining that is not the point.

The point is simply this: If we do not understand and accept that we have to set a direction, we have to set a course, we have to set global aims and objectives to reach for . . . we are lost. Totally lost! We may as well all go home, or go fishing.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Someone just mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that's true. Perhaps that is not a good suggestion because some of us might go fishing and all we will do is drift and we still won't have any direction.

So maybe tomorrow when we come back we will get into the meat of things and go into some of the specific areas, sir. I do trust that the government will be prepared to deal with some of the issues at hand and be willing to get up and speak about them.

Mr. Speaker, before we close off this evening, sir, I wish to seriously challenge the government because they have not exhibited one inch of thought about a general direction in which the country is heading. Government—this one, the next one, the other one—must understand that a big part of the responsibility is putting the country in a direction. Perhaps, some of them will find some words to deal with that when they get up.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are looking at your watch, and I would be quite happy to stop until tomorrow.

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4:30 p.m. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10:00 am tomorrow morning.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10:00 a.m. tomorrow.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourn until 10:00 am tomorrow.

AT 4:33 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10:00 AM, THURSDAY, 4 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
THURSDAY
4 MARCH 1999
10.34 AM

[Prayers read by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question 7 is standing in the name of the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 7

No. 7: Dr. Frank McField asked the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources if the debris from the Holiday Inn site was dumped at the public land fill site, and to state what amount of debris was dumped.

Hon. John B. McLean: Based upon information provided by the project developer, an estimated 2,000 to 4,000 cubic yards of material was disposed at the landfill from the Holiday Inn demolition. Unfortunately, an accurate weight was not recorded because the weigh scales were out of commission due to a lightning strike in August.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Can the honourable minister tell the House if such debris is usually deposited at the landfill site? If not, can the minister tell the House why a departure from practice was made?

Hon. John B. McLean: The most I can say is that it is my understanding that sometimes persons who actually demolish places will deposit it at the landfill. Other times it could be that the contractors would actually take the debris and use it elsewhere. But it is my understanding that the amount in this instance is what I have told the House.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Can the honourable minister tell the House whether any special permission had to be issued from the department which administers the landfill site for this material to be deposited? If so, upon whose authority was the arrangement made?

Hon. John B. McLean: I presume that some sort of okay would have been given by the department in order for it to be dumped there. But as the member knows we have caretakers at the landfill site and stuff is deposited there on a daily basis.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Is the minister saying that he is not aware of exactly upon whose authority the decision was taken? Is there any written directive or letter of permission to his knowledge? If he doesn't have it in his possession would he give an undertaking that he could get it so that it could be laid on the Table of the honourable House?

Hon. John B. McLean: I will not in any way try to withhold any information. If the member is aware of something I will investigate it. I have no problem in laying it on the Table of this honourable House.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Can the honourable minister say whether this practice of allowing material from construction sites is going to become a common practice? And if not, how is it going to be explained to other persons clearing sites that they will not be allowed this opportunity?

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that when stuff from construction sites is not taken to other areas it has always been accepted at the dump.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can the honourable minister say what led to the discontinuation of the debris being dumped at the landfill site?

Hon. John B. McLean: If I am understanding the member correctly, he is asking me what caused the discontinuation of it. To the best of my knowledge if somebody clears an area the debris is taken there, if it is not utilised elsewhere. If somebody has other information that I can check on, I would be glad to do that too.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: What I am basically trying to find out is if it is customary to dump debris from construction sites at the landfill. If so, why did they not dump all the debris from the Holiday Inn at the landfill site? Why did they stop at some particular time? Did it have something to do with the persons in charge of administration at the landfill saying that it was too much and they could not absorb that quantity? Was there any kind of policy decision from that department which effected the stopping of the debris there?

Hon. John B. McLean: Not to my knowledge. I am not aware of anybody saying that they could not dump the material there. Further, it was my understanding that some of the material was going to be utilised for the remainder of the project, and that's as much as I can say at this time on it.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: It would interest me to find out whether or not the people who were responsible for the dumping of the debris wanted to dump the whole amount, and if so would there have been any regulations to prevent them from dumping all of the debris of the Holiday Inn at the landfill site?

Hon. John B. McLean: I would think that whatever is to be dumped at the landfill site, if those in charge on a day to day basis saw fit, they would definitely do so. But the kind of material we are talking about there, I don't know if there was an arrangement with somebody else to utilise it for fill in other areas. I cannot comment any further on it, I really don't know.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: The questions I am asking are not specifically having to do with this particular situation. I am trying to understand the minister's policy is in regard to construction companies being able to dump the debris at the landfill. Obviously, with all of the construction we have in the islands, if everybody is allowed to dump there the landfill will be filled up even faster than we thought.

Are people allowed to dump whatever quantity of debris they have on the landfill without any restrictions, without any cost, or without any approval from persons at the head of this department—not the people there watching the trucks come in, but the people at the top?

Hon. John B. McLean: Approval, yes. I don't think there is anything that would say materials such as we are talking about should be rejected. However, I think this is the first time that we have had such a large amount because this is probably the largest building that was ever demolished and the debris has been sitting on the site.

To the best of my knowledge, I believe that those at the top would definitely look after the matter considering that we have a small area that we can actually add some stuff like this. But as far as I know this is probably the first time we have had so much debris and most times those who demolish the buildings will actually take it and fill land elsewhere. I will give an undertaking to speak to the lady in charge and whatever information I get, I will be happy to pass that on to the House.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Boddan Town.

Mr. Roy Boddan: Given that we are aware that the landfill site is almost up to its capacity—indeed some authorities suggest five year maximum—what is the policy and disposition of the minister and his government regarding this practice? The minister by his own admission has said this is the first time such a large amount of this type of material has been deposited there. Is the minister in a position to tell the House the government's disposition, and that of his ministry, regarding such large-scale deposits in the future? Bearing in mind the suggested life span of five years of the present landfill site.

Hon. John B. McLean: As I pointed out before, we have persons who will be and who are looking throughout to find out where we can get adequate space for such a thing as a garbage dump. However, I am sure that all members will agree with me that nobody wants a garbage dump in their backyard. I am not referring to their backyards totally. I am referring to their districts. We are definitely looking at the long-term solution. But at this time I don't know what else we can do if the person who demolished the building was not someone who actually wanted to purchase the material and put it somewhere else to fill. I think it is an obligation that government will have to take once we have agreed to construct another hotel there. I guess we have to actually provide the area where we can put it.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries the next question is number 8, standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 8

No. 8: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources what is being done to provide alternative sites to the present cemeteries in Bodden Town and Spotts.

Hon. John B. McLean: In preparing its cemetery report to the Ministry, the Department of Environmental Health has researched projection data and the status of existing cemeteries on the three Islands. The Department of Environment Health worked on a committee with the Public Works Department to maximise any remaining capacity, including the Bodden Town cemetery.

Pending a formal land survey of the cemeteries to be performed by the Lands & Survey Department, representatives from the Public Works Department and the Department of Environmental Health will meet with a representative from the Planning Department to make final recommendations on future cemetery capacity for the Cayman Islands. The final report will address the issues of location, ownership and size of future cemeteries.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister say when the House may expect such a report?

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that we should have a report for the next sitting of the House.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I noticed in the answer that the minister said "the Public Works Department to maximise any remaining capacity, including the Bodden Town cemetery." I would hope by inference that that also takes into consideration the cemetery at Spotts, and I would like the minister to confirm as much.

Hon. John B. McLean: The district is Bodden Town and it would entail all cemeteries in that district.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Can the honourable minister say whether or not there have been any orders from the ministry to stop anyone from building vaults in the cemeteries recently?

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that especially in the West Bay cemetery a lot of plots have been purchased over the years, and they are actually owned by individuals for their families. I don't think that anybody has actually said that nothing could be done, but we continue to enforce the areas owned by government.

I would be most grateful, if the member speaking knows something, if he would pass it on to me and I will make sure it is taken care of.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: So, if I am understanding the minister correctly, he is saying that in regard to public space no one can build, and that's the way it should have been. But in regard to private space, anyone owning private space can continue building if need be.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that they can continue because they actually purchased the plots.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state if in this report being prepared there is a projection in regard to the intended time span based on historical data that government is trying to prepare adequate space for?

Hon. John B. McLean: I am sure that the report will give the full extent of what the projections will be for the future, so I would have to say that I am hoping that is what the report will actually say.

I would also like to amend something that I said earlier. I think I referred to the next sitting, I think I should have said next meeting.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Based on what the minister just said, can he inform us as to what term of reference this report is being prepared under and from where did these terms of reference originate?

Hon. John B. McLean: The actual committee met with me and other members of the ministry, and personnel from the department concerned. After several meetings it was decided that we would have a report sent to us after investigation in the different areas to see exactly what was necessary for the future. This is exactly why I can speak to the different districts and what necessary things will be needed for the future. I think we should not just concentrate on the land space but the different methods also have to be in the report.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Just one final supplementary. Can the honourable minister say if anything is being borne in mind regarding present and future development of cemeteries by private enterprise when it comes to the report? It is my understanding that there may be individuals who are presently in the process of doing such a thing. I just want to make sure that in the study being done that it is borne in mind that this is happening.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that all of this will be taken into consideration.

The Speaker: Second Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Miss Heather Bodden: In regard to what the honourable minister said about getting the information for the next meeting, I would ask him to please make sure that that information is available because I am sure that each of us in this honourable House knows that every weekend almost there is a funeral in Bodden Town—

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: All over.

Miss Heather Bodden: The First Elected Member for George Town said "all over," and that's so true. But yesterday evening I was heading to Bodden Town and I noticed that there was a very small gathering and the people were actually placing their loved one in a vault that was almost right next to the road. I guess everyone can see from that that the space is getting very scarce. So I would ask him to please do that undertaking for us.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries that concludes Question Time for this morning.

As today is Thursday, I would ask the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning to move the suspension of Standing Order 14(3) in order for Government Business to take precedence over Private Members' Motions.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(3)

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I move the suspension of Standing Order 14(3) in order for Government Business to take precedence over Private Members' Motions.

The Speaker: I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14(4) SUSPENDED TO ALLOW GOVERNMENT BUSINESS TO TAKE PRECEDENCE OVER OTHER BUSINESS.

The Speaker: Item 4 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, continuation of debate on the Throne Speech. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19 FEBRUARY, 1999

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Before I continue my actual contribution to the debate on the Throne Speech, let me take a few minutes to try to clear the air about a little issue that has developed. It is in regard to what is on the front page of the newspaper this morning where it says "MLA Tired of Being Shelved." The reason I am doing this is because the member in question, the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, has had his say on the matter and perhaps he will not have the opportunity to clear the air on it, so I should do so. And I will!

I understand the role of the newspaper and I am not going to get into any confrontation with the newspaper about the headlines or its contents, but I think this needs to be cleared up. First of all, while the member in question might have vented certain frustrations given the experiences he has had while being a representative of his people, I don't think that when he referred to people poking fun of him he was making any inference to the public. When he spoke about people not listening to or reading his speeches it was very clear to me (and I was here listening yesterday) that he was referring to some members of this Legislative Assembly.

So, I want to make it absolutely clear that no reference was being made to the public in regard to his frustrations.

Secondly, I believe I can say with some authority that I know that member very well. And while he and others might feel and sometimes voice those frustrations I am totally confident that he has no intention at this point in time of not serving the people of his constituency and this country. I believe that anyone who interprets what he said yesterday as the end of his political career would be grossly mistaken.

As the newspaper said, “When the MLA turned to the Throne Speech, however, there was still plenty of political fire there.” I can assure his constituents and the people of this country that there is still a lot of fire there, and I am certain that the care that member has for this country will not allow him to give up the ghost so easily. Besides that, I am also very sure that that member realises there is a role for him to play in this arena in the future. And I am certain that there are expectations by the people of this country for him to do just that, and I have every confidence that he will.

Mr. Speaker, when I closed yesterday afternoon I was giving a general overview the way I perceive that government should be exercising its leadership role when it comes to directing this country. And before I get into any specifics I think it is worth saying at this point in time that when I talk about the direction the country should be heading, that I talk about leadership.

Leadership comes in many forms and in many places. One thing is necessary. When we look at the membership of this Legislative Assembly, lest people misunderstand our role, I think we need to identify the fact that the leadership required of us does not necessarily mean that one must be the smartest kid on the block. It doesn't necessarily mean that one must be the most educated person. It doesn't necessarily mean that it is the one who talks the most. But it requires vision. It requires a bit of courage and, I daresay, it also requires a bit of fear sometimes.

While some people in this world would like others to believe that they don't know what fear is, I subscribe that once a person recognises that fear is part of the makeup that God put into us, then it is for us to recognise that fear and use it in the right fashion. Lots of times, if you do what is right with fear, you make better decisions. So a little bit of that has to go into it too.

To me, leadership is like travelling the world: No one ever really lives long enough to see all of it. But if leadership is to be handled properly then what is important is that you make sure you see enough of what you are privileged to see, and you don't jump from place to place. I am going to get into certain specifics that I wish to discuss in my debate and let me say that I have taken a different course this time.

Usually I try to touch as many areas as possible, but having been here the length of time I have been, perhaps I can be more effective if I take some areas and delve into them a bit deeper rather than utilising my time to try to cover the whole ambit.

As I said yesterday afternoon, the first topic I am going to be discussing is the topic of Cayman Airways. So that it can also be made very clear, Cayman Airways has been touted as a political football. And it is also known to have been on many occasions a sore topic where people take sides and use Cayman Airways to show up a government or vice versa.

In recent times the minister has said that he is not about to make Cayman Airways a political football, and I hear what he is saying. But I want him to know that my discussing Cayman Airways is not with any intent to make it a political football either. I want to make it very clear that the reason I will be discussing Cayman Airways is because it is apparent to me that the people directly involved are afraid to deal with it publicly. So, with very limited knowledge—and I accept that it is limited—I have decided after much discussion with my colleagues on the backbench, that I am going to try to say enough about Cayman Airways to make sure that certain aspects of the running of the company are dealt with openly.

I believe, as do my colleagues, that there is a fear about dealing with Cayman Airways publicly because it has been this huge political football. We believe that it cannot remain as it is, it cannot continue to be run as it is, and we have some serious decisions to make about the airline. I don't think that having great fears about discussing it will get these decisions made one way or the other.

I am going to delve into it and deal with the facts as I understand them. If we look at the financial position of the airline, . . . let me quickly refer to a statement made in the Legislative Assembly on 11 June 1997 by the Minister of Education, Aviation and Planning. I am not going to read the statement, but I am going to use some extracts from it. The Minister said, “During the period. . .” Let me stop here, Mr. Speaker, so that I can try to make this absolutely clear.

Mr. Speaker, on my word of honour, what I am going to do about Cayman Airways is with the purest of intention. So I don't want the minister to believe that this is a one-off thing with he and I. And I would like him to listen to what I am saying. I am not suggesting he is not listening this time. I just would like him to listen to what I am saying and understand that we wish to do something sensible. We do not have the authority. On more than one occasion we have talked about the subject with the hope that we could get something going because it is going to take decisions at his level to deal with what has to be dealt with. But so far we have heard nothing, thus the reason we are dealing with it in this fashion.

Perhaps when I am through the minister can fill whatever gaps there are, or perhaps he might feel a sense of relief and find himself in a position where he can talk about it. We will see what happens.

Getting back to the statement. The minister said, “During the period of 1983 to the end of December 1992 the Airline had total accumulated losses of US$36.9, . . .” He went on to say, “It is very important to remind Members that this Government did not simply hand the US$20 million over to Cayman Airways' previous management for them to further squander, as was done with the previous US$12.5 million profit from the . . .” That part is not important. He went on after talking about the $20 million loan that was taken out in 1993 and he said, “And that was still not the end of it. After all I have just described [talking about how in 1992 there was $36.9 million accumulated loss and in 1993 there was a US$20 million loan taken out by government] there was still US$19[.3 million] of liabilities remaining." Now, I don't want to bore people with a lot of figures, but some of this is important if we are going to get the full picture.

This statement was made in 1997 on Wednesday, 11 June. The minister went on to say, "Since the end of 1992, we have been able to reduce the liabilities from US$19, to US$15 [I am rounding these figures off] in 1995, for an overall reduction of $4. For the first time in five years Cayman Airways reported a small profit of US$1 in 1994. In 1995 the Airline reported a loss of US$1, and in 1996 an unaudited report puts the loss at approximately $1.6 million."

In the next paragraph the minister says, "During this time Cayman Airways has worked diligently at improving its overall performance. It has systematically worked at reducing its debt; . . ."

He then asked the question, Where are we now in 1997? And he went on to say, "However, by the end of 1996 it was evident the Airline was headed for its second year of consecutive losses [This was after reporting a small profit in 1994. It lost about $1.6 in 1995 and there was another loss in 1996 of approximately $1.6 million] and the preliminary Budget Estimates for 1997 had forecast a loss of US$2.6 million."

So the minister said, "I decided to take the situation in hand at once. Unlike the previous Government, I refused to let the problems escalate to the point where the Airline was once again losing as much as $14 million a year."

"In February 1997, the Board took the decision to ask the former Managing Director, Mr. Ray Wilson, to return to Cayman Airways Ltd. to lead a quick turnaround exercise. Since his arrival, Mr. Wilson, working closely with the General Manager, Mr. Mike Adam, has been able to reduce costs by $2.6 million, and the budget now forecasts a small profit at the end of 1997."

"However, what has become clear to the Managing Director, the General Manager, the Board of Directors and the Ministry, is that the financial problems faced by Cayman Airways in 1997 are not of a nature that we can downsize our way out of; . . ."

This is what is important, Mr. Speaker. In his statement of 11 June 1997, the minister accepts that it is very clear that the problems facing Cayman Airways are not problems which can be solved by downsizing—which was what was done when he took over at the end of 1992.

He also said, ". . . neither can we significantly reduce costs any further. The Airline's survival is now critically dependent on its ability to generate revenues."

Let us now move into the airline's position. When he made that statement in 1997 he said that there was a projected profit for 1997 after this quick turn around exercise was supposed to have been done. So, we heard the statement and we sat and we waited.

Now we have available to us the financial statements of 31 December 1997. When we look at the net loss for the year (and this is after subsidy), we see that in 1996 it was approximately $1.63 million. And even with the efforts that were made in 1997 what we see resulting at the end of the year, instead of the small profit which was projected, there was a loss of $2.15 million.

These are the facts as presented to us. So what has happened is that after an operational profit in 1994 we had successive losses in the airline. In 1995 there was a $1.6 million loss, in 1996 approximately the same thing, and in 1997 there was a $2.15 million loss. In 1998 the figures as I remember them showed a loss also. A loss that was less than that of 1997, but it was still a loss.

What the airline is facing as it stands right now is that no matter what they do, no matter how tightly the ship is run, given the circumstances that prevail around the airline I contend that after subsidy the airline cannot make an operational profit. I think that what I have just proven historically substantiates that statement.

Having said that, every now and then I will interject (so that everyone will understand) that I am not here trying to paint a picture of gloom and doom for Cayman Airways. I just want to present the facts so that we can sit down and make some serious decisions as to what we have to do because we have to do something. Let us go on further as to where we are.

At the end of 1998, the current liabilities of Cayman Airways were $22.5 million. The accumulated deficit was just over $45 million, and we are talking United States Dollars here. The current liabilities (current liabilities, my understanding being what Cayman Airways would need to take care of all of its debts now) is $22.5 million. And over the years, the accumulated deficit was in excess of US$45 million.

When the new government took over at the end of 1992 and the Minister for Education. . . well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is best to go by the manifesto of 1996. On page 6 of the manifesto there is a picture of one of the aeroplanes of Cayman Airways and it says, "The National Team Government saved Cayman Airways, our national airline." So in 1993 the National Team saved Cayman Airways. No argument. They came and they saved the airline and all of the contingent liabilities were taken care of. No argument there.

But what I believe we must accept at this point in time is that if we look at the figures today, if we look at the net end results as of today, the airline itself is truly no better off than when these contingent liabilities were taken care of. The $20 million was borrowed and it started to move on. In fact, when it comes to its debt, Mr. Speaker, it is right back where it was.

My saying that is not to prove who did what wrong. The minister knows that I don't like to waste my time talking about that. That is something he in his political posturing has found to be a successful trait, but that's not for me. I don't have a past that long. I am not worried about who did what wrong and all of that because at the end of the day you can blame from before Willie Jerusha was around for Cayman Airways. But right now, whether it is the National Team Government, or whatever, government has the responsibility. It's simple. So I don't want to hear who did what wrong yesterday, all I want us to do is to learn from whatever went wrong that at least if more mistakes are made it won't be the same mistakes. But we have to do something about Cayman Airways.

Let me go on to paint the picture. Remember, the minister said in 1997 “that the financial problems faced by Cayman Airways in 1997 are not of a nature that we can downsize . . . ; neither can we significantly reduce costs any further.” So as the airline exists the options for its survival is not any of the obvious options, but it finds it is in the same shoes. And that is what I consider to be fact.

Let us understand a few more things about the airline. It is said that the government subsidy is CI$4 million annually (and in the past couple of years there has been another $600,000 for advertising in the budget). But if the truth is known, the true subsidy whether in direct cash payments out to Cayman Airways or by services rendered or whatever means through government, the true subsidy is more like $7 million per year. There is no denying that—and the minister knows I can verify it. That is just so that we can establish a true picture.

So as it stands right now, we have an airline that after subsidy of $7 million in value (even if it's not cash given annually there's a value of $7 million because if services are rendered but not charged for if they got it elsewhere it would still be $7 million) and still, after you add that value into its, shall I say operational revenue, it's still experiencing an operational loss. We come to the point, as the minister said in his statement in 1997, where the only answer is for the airline to generate more revenue. And I concur with his statement.

Thus far we have gotten to where we know exactly what the picture is in general terms, and we understand that if the airline is to move forward with any more positive results it has to generate more revenue.

Mr. Speaker, you will remember, sir, that in the recent past members of the backbench mentioned Cayman Airways. And when we talked about it to the minister our sole intention was to give the minister a plain signal that we were willing to sit down and talk about this to see what we can and should do about it, and we are still willing.

Now, let us come up to very recent happenings, having established the position of the airline as we see it from the facts we gathered. If we accept that the only way to get positive dollar results from the airline is to generate more revenue, then we have to look at how we are going to generate that revenue. You can't be simply saying you are going to invest more money to advertise the airline. Even I know better than that. It can't work like that. So let us look at what management has been looking at recently.

If memory serves me right, at a recent informal meeting (and without quoting verbatim), my understanding is that the new managing director clearly stated that with the way the airline is now, to generate more revenue it was accepted across the board that they needed a third aircraft. Hence, the reason behind the request for the guarantee for a third aircraft, which was given by Finance Committee.

We are at this juncture with Finance Committee agreeing on a government guarantee for a leasing company to purchase a third aircraft with the same reasons for purchasing the other two (which I will talk about). But after we okayed this guarantee they went to do what they had to do to acquire this third aircraft.

The minister is going to be shocked, but I am going to be as fair as possible. Let us look at the situation that has obtained in the past few years when it comes to the aircraft. Within the last five years, Finance Committee has approved guarantees for the purchase of three aircraft. The reason behind it (and I accepted it because I said “Aye” when you asked the question, sir) is that if Cayman Airways is simply leasing an aircraft it means the same thing as you and I renting a house. While we have the use of the house, the owner of the house is earning the money. At the end of the day all we can say is that we stayed in that house for X amount of time, but we can't carry anything from the house with us. That's just explaining it in layman's terms.

The government thought that if planes were purchased the government could charge a lease payment to Cayman Airways through the leasing companies, and in the meantime Cayman Airways could pay off the loans for the planes and eventually the leasing company which is owned by government would own the plane. So the leasing company would own the plane and government owns the leasing company, but the government owns Cayman Airways too.

There are two separate entities. The one common factor is that they are both owned by government. So this is what has been going on with the two aircraft and I am sure it was the intention with the third aircraft. At the end of the day, with all of the C-checks and D-checks and hush-kitting and those costly exercises (which are not things that you do as you please) all of that type of investment continues to go into the planes while they are being used by Cayman Airways. But in the meantime, I accept that government is actually building up equity in the ownership of these aircraft. Even if you don't get full value for the planes if you wish to dispose of them, once you own them you are still several times better off than if you lease the planes. So that makes all the sense in the world.

What I cannot subscribe to at this point in time is to say that that equity that is being built up by government in the planes leased by Cayman Airways is equity of Cayman Airways. It is not! As I used the example of renting the house before, you and I can be good buddies, sir, and you can rent the house from me and you pay me the rent. But when you leave the house, it is mine. You can't tell me it's yours. You could be my brother, but you can't tell me the house is yours. It doesn't work that way. To try to paint the picture in that fashion is to try to put the airline in a position it truly is not in. All that is going to do is make it look good for a little while and at the end of the day it will be back in the same trouble.

Let us look to bring about viable solutions that are long lasting. That is not one of them. Let us understand that for what that really is. It is a sensible good business decision, but it ends there. Okay? That's my view.

After the managing director said that they needed a third aircraft . . . and there are several reasons for that.

With two aircraft and the usual situations that occur with the airline, there is a lot of downtime between those two aircraft during the course of a year. That downtime is caused by natural circumstances, a bird can get up in an engine, or you have to take one of the aircraft out for service or for a C-check or some other type of check. Whatever the reason, with just two aircraft running the schedule that Cayman Airways runs, it is a fact that the average cost (on top of all of that) to lease other aircraft while one or both of these aircraft is down is approximately $1.5 million per year. That is my understanding.

Because of all of the circumstances surrounding, and to keep the schedule, you have to incur an additional $1.5 million per year. That is part of the reason for a third aircraft. When we were told about this third aircraft two other factors came into it, which I consider to be very important. And there may be other factors that I don't know about but I am going to say what I know.

The Speaker: May I interrupt you for just one moment?

Is it the wish of honourable members to continue until 12.45 and then take the luncheon break? Or do you need to take a break at this time?

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, we can take a very short break if you wish, but if you don't mind I would like to finish this point, sir.

The Speaker: Well, if you and the Clerk agree, we can continue.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I don't have a problem, sir. Madam Clerk, I would just like to finish my point. It's all right with her.

The Speaker: I am in the hands of members. We can continue until 12.45 and that would save time.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, my throat is getting a little bit dry, but I would just like to finish my point.

The Speaker: When you have reached the point, tell me. Please continue.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

As I was saying, I was trying to give a few reasons to justify the need for this third aircraft. With a third one on line that could be used whenever the other two are down, we could be saving $1.5 million a year.

The other two factors that came into play were freight and charters. And as I said, there may be other points which could give rise to the argument why we need a third aircraft, but I am just going to talk about those three. And let me just state a few more facts here, Mr. Speaker.

Perhaps we best break now because when I go into these other things it will be a while. So if we can take a short break, I wouldn't mind.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes. But I ask members to please reconvene in 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.48 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.20 PM

The Speaker: Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

When we took the short break I was in the middle of dealing with the three factors which, to me, justify the need for a third aircraft for Cayman Airways. As I said before, I certainly don't profess to know all the facts, but I am dealing with the facts as I know them.

I have already dealt with the first factor, which is the downtime of the other two aircraft and the chartering or leasing of aircraft to keep up the schedule. I was getting into the freight factor.

The way this country runs, while there is regular ocean transport of freight, there is a tremendous market for air freight into the Cayman Islands. In fact, all of the airlines that ply between the locations where the majority of people import goods from operate freight. Cayman Airways is by no means the exception.

While Cayman Airways only operates one freight flight per week, sometimes two, I also believe that it is fair comment to say that if Cayman Airways were in a position it could operate at least four freight flights per week out of Miami. At least four. But let us look at the way Cayman Airways has to operate a freight flight now.

Cayman Airways has to charter a freighter and the majority of times Cayman Airways can only get a 727-100 aircraft. Without going into all the details, when we look at that type of aircraft being used for freight, the average load when you compare volume with weight (because sometimes you have big packages that don't weigh much, but still take up space), the average load is about 28,000 pounds. When you average out the cost per pound, it's about forty cents. You have different levels of costing, but the average is about forty cents. That can tell you what you gross from a freight flight, just over $11,000.

The lease on the aircraft alone can cost up to US$10,000 depending upon the demand and supply factor. On top of that you also have to pay fuel, landing fees, etc. Plus you have the staff permanently employed at Cayman Airways in the cargo office. When Cayman Airways does a freighter into Cayman out of Miami, for instance, the truth of the matter as it now is, if it makes any money it is a paltry sum. It is just a couple of hundred dollars if you take out all of the cost. So to run a freight flight as it is, Cayman Airways is no further ahead.

The whole idea behind looking for a third aircraft was to get an aircraft that is what they call a "quick-change" aircraft which could be used as a freighter also, which means that you could strip it down for a freight flight outside of any schedule it may be operating. And I have to immediately say that this is where we talk about charters. It is my understanding that on a very regular basis Cayman Airways has to refuse charters because it only has two aircraft and does not have the ability to take either one out of the schedule to operate a charter. Not on any regular basis anyway.

The charter business is a lucrative business. It also must be a plus for the tourism industry. Cayman Airways is listed with AIOTA [?], a myriad of the foreign ad agencies as an airline that can offer aircraft for charter. You also have local travel agencies and persons who operate seasonal charters who I am confident would be quite willing to use Cayman Airways if Cayman Airways had the ability to deal with these charters. So when we talk about a quick-change aircraft we are talking about an aircraft that can be used to operate freight flights and also be used for charter flights, and also be in service to fill any gaps in downtime with the other aircraft. That is the summary of those three reasoning.

If Cayman Airways had a plane to operate an efficient, well-run air freight service the analogy is this: If they could do four flights per week and fill their freight flight (now they have to pay US$10,000 to charter one) and they operated four flights per week, they could $40,000 per week, $160,000 per month, and $1.9 million per year which they could be paying towards a plane. Not counting the charters, looking at an efficient freight service and looking at having an aircraft that could stem the cost of hiring other aircraft to fill the schedules when either of the other two is down, we are now looking at nearly $3.5 million right there if the charter business is lucrative.

I have not been able to get a figure of what a charter would make, so I don't want to venture a guess. But if you had that plane and you ran one charter a week, which is 50 for the year, you must be making money. I don't want to try to paint the picture out of proportion, but it is not impossible to assume that you could take that plane and your increased revenue for the year, that is your gross revenue, not necessarily your net, but your gross revenue could exceed $5 million. And that is rounded figures without all of the details, and I am sure that's a conservative figure.

Now, someone might say, 'But you haven't taken the cost into consideration.' Well, let me explain that. Cayman Airways, as I understand it, will have in a very short time from now enough pilots so that with this third aircraft they could still operate without adding any pilots. They might have to add some flight attendants, depending upon how lucrative the charter business is. But all of the other recurrent costs to run the airline are fixed—whether you have two aircraft or three. So you are not increasing your costs to run the airline by any huge amount. In fact, your proportions in cost will lessen if in the majority of areas you are paying out the same money but instead of using just two planes you are using three and generating more cash flow.

So it does spell good sense. And I am not inventing it, that is what management has said and what the minister has said.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I hope he's listening.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: We have established the need and we have also said , based on what they have told us, that the quick-change aircraft is the best bet to be efficient, effective and lucrative.

Now, here is what recently transpired. We were talked to about some options for this third aircraft and there was a 1974 and a 1984 model which were being looked at. There was a difference in cost between the two aircraft. Regardless of what is said, I am going to contend that the 1984 was the best one to get. This is based on the technical knowledge of both aircraft. That was the best one to get.

The guarantee that was given by Finance Committee was CI$8.5 million. When all the factors were considered, it is my understanding that to get that aircraft Cayman Airways was going to be about $4 million short. Here is what has transpired since then. Cayman Airways has advised the people who were selling the aircraft that they could no longer pursue the purchase because the government has decided that it is not prepared to provide the company with the necessary guarantee to cover the required $14 million financing for the Inter-air fully funded reserves. That is the terminology.

What that means is that the government would have to come back to get the guarantee extended but it is not prepared to do that. Instead, they are now looking to lease another aircraft. And let me tell you that over the past months Cayman Airways has inspected 37 aircraft. This is how hard they have been looking to find the right aircraft.

When Cayman Airways sends out its technical team . . . this can be in Russia, the places are far away. I will bet you that all in all, whether they use their own staff to inspect these aircraft or if they hired people from abroad to do so, I will bet you that they have spent $.5 million trying to find a plane.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Alice in Wonderland management.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: They found one that would suit. But here we are with a $4 million question sign, and the government caves in. I will tell you why I believe the government caved in. I firmly believe that government did not want to come to Finance Committee to extend the guarantee because it figured that the backbench would have a field day because we had made much ado about the country's finances.

But if I am correct in my assumption, because it is an assumption (but I can see no other logic to it) we cannot deal with it like that. Government has to be prepared to make decisions. While it takes the entire Finance Committee to make a decision of that nature, government has to have the courage to bring it and be able to justify that they wish to support it. If we don't know anything about it, and this whole thing transpires and everything goes and nothing is done, where are we going?

I have just taken time out here . . . and I know there are other issues, but this is real. The arguments being thrown at the whole situation is that Cayman Airways cannot afford this thing. Which, if you want to just leave it at that because the airline is not making money, fine. We have to decide whether we are going to have an airline or not have one. If we have suffered with it this long, and if it is taking $7 million out of the Treasury every year and it is still losing money, if this is an opportunity to generate a positive cash flow, what is the great fear about talking it over? I am not trying to make light of $4 million, but if your option, simply because you are afraid to deal with it, is to lease an aircraft, that cannot make sense.

On top of that, the aircraft they are going to get now can forget about the freight. If they looked at 37 planes before they could find the right one, chances are they will look at another 37 before they find another one that can do both, even if they can get it leased. Obviously, if they want to get one pretty fast, they are going to take a chance on one that cannot deal with freight. While this business of freight is not as glorified compared to a charter, let me tell you that properly run airfreight into the Cayman Islands is lucrative. And the other airlines that do it is just what the Jamaican man calls a "broughter."

The market is there. Cayman Airways just has to do it properly and offer an efficient service that is well run and dependable. That is what it needs.

Mr. Speaker, when we speak the truth as we know it about the airline—and about the $22.5 million current liability, the $45 million accumulated deficit and the $7 million that government has to pump in directly or indirectly every year—we are not saying all of that because we want something bad to happen. We are saying that we understand where it is. But now there's a chance to move it forward. To me it boils down to a lack of courage to deal with it and to come forward.

Let's get it crystal clear. If I have to pray from now until the Minister for Education speaks, I am going to beg him to please not come back with old bent out arguments because that is not the exercise today. We are saying that if there is any merit to the arguments put forward let us sit down and talk about it and find out how we can arrive at a sensible solution rather than not hearing anything about it, where nothing gets done, and next year we will talk about the same thing. That's what we are saying.

The other members of the backbench and I have talked about this. While they might think what they do about us, this is one time that not one of us said 'How can we make somebody look bad?' I am telling you. It's simply because everybody cares about the airline. We know what the airline can cost the country. We recognise what it has cost the country. We also recognise the number of Caymanian staff there. But we cannot continue saying, yes, yes, yes to everything if in our minds certain decisions that need to be made are not being made.

While what has just been said is certainly not the entire picture of the airline, to me the future of the airline is going to depend upon that decision. People in the know in the airline business say that we need to change our equipment. Of course we'd like to change our equipment. I understand that. But you cannot even begin to think about changing the equipment unless you can get the airline into a position where, even with the subsidy, it is turning a profit. This is an opportunity, I contend, to turn that operational profit.

There is no risk in this because if you are going to get a third plane, and you are simply paying a lease on it, and you go the other route and pay into ownership, at the end of the day you have built up equity. Even if it is not the perfect situation you thought it was, the risk is not high.

There is another little issue, Mr. Speaker. This said plane, the 1984 that they have suddenly decided not to get because of the $4 million, has what you call a 17-A engine which is what the people in the know in the technical field of the airline want to see us with. We have one plane with a 15-A engine and one with a 17-A which has to do with how much it can take off with, etc. If it is going to Houston it has less limitations on baggage and fuel and those calculations. So everything is positive about that aircraft. The reason I keep saying "that aircraft" is because obviously one like it is not around as you please because they looked at 37 before they found this one.

When we talk about changing equipment I am not sure that I am versed in the correct terminology, but I believe that when I am through it will be understood. The people who make these planes, for instance Boeing, . . . from time to time we may hear on the news that American Airlines is going to take delivery of ten of these certain types of aircraft in the year 2003 from Boeing. Obviously they have made arrangements with them and because these things don't take a day to build you book your plane and they will tell you when they can deliver.

The way that works is that the people who make these planes have slots. So if you, sir, wanted to buy an aircraft you would call Boeing and say that you want to get a plane and you want to take delivery of that plane in the year 2002. They would give you a slot. You pay them $100,000 down on the plane and they will give you your delivery slot for October 2002. Then I call them because I want a similar plane, but I want mine in October 2004. I go through the same procedure. Bearing in mind that countries all over the world make these arrangements because there are not that many companies building these aircraft.

What might well happen to you is that by the year 2002 you are not quite ready for your plane. So you call them up and say you are not quite sure you can handle delivery right now. They are not going to tell you that your money is dead. They will look at the slots they have because perhaps I who had indicated that I could take delivery earlier if it were available would want your slot and then trade my slot for yours, and yours for mine. That gives you until 2004 and you still have your slot, and I will get my plane earlier. That's how it works.

And it's not a fortune, Mr. Speaker. We spent $5 million trying to find a plane. We should be trying to get the airline into a position and then, if it's 2006 or 2008, aim towards something, look toward getting a change in aircraft. I am giving hypothetical figures because I don't know that much about it. I am not professing a vast knowledge of it. But it certainly makes sense to book slots if you want to try to get one aircraft or two. If you can only manage one at a time, that's fine. Space them out. At least you will have a goal.

And during the interim you can try your very best, without just talking and throwing your hands up in the air, but looking at it sensibly and letting everybody be aware of what is happening and saying to your country and the people who make the decisions, 'Listen, let us get this thing moving forward, and here are some opportunities that we now have.'

All has not been wasted on the airline. I am not trying to say that. But while they continue to incur losses, the losses are what we know about. And what I just talked about gives us a chance to turn that into some operational profit. I don't mean the airline actually makes money, but for years we have continued to give the subsidy. So it's kind of a given now. But if we can give the subsidy and actually turn an operational profit, then it makes sense. And by that time, while it's not a pile of money we're talking about, if this thing is working sensibly and we put our heads to the grindstone and work it out right, by then we will have equity in three aircraft that the country will own.

I don't know exactly what the re-sale value will be on these things. I know it doesn't work like a car. I know the different things you do to it causes it to bring more money. The picture here is that we have an opportunity, in our view, . . . and if there are things that we don't know about it that negates our position, we can accept that. But we don't know. What we are putting forward here is the way we know it, the way we understand it the way the facts have been told to us.

If it is because of fear of political fallout we have just disbanded that thought. We are saying that if what we are saying has any merit to it, let us find a way to deal with the airline properly to get it on a half-decent footing. With its current liabilities of $22.5 million, if we closed the airline tomorrow and looked at what we owe for the planes, the government will still have to find the money. Let us not kid ourselves.

We cannot look at the argument from the point of view of, 'If in two or three years from now it goes up to $30 million it's no big thing because I won't be handling it.' It's still the country! Every Jack-man and his brother are going to be responsible for it in one way or another. So we cannot look at it like that.

Now, if we give that extra effort and we find that there are factors involved that just don't make any sense at all, that's a whole different matter. What we are faced with now is the considered view of the people who are supposed to know the business—that this can turn the airline around. It is up to government to either disprove that view or have the courage to deal with it. That's where we are.

And far be it from me to try to stand up here today and say that I know all the ins and outs of the airline. I don't. But we on the backbench are conscientious. We are not going around in a covert fashion trying to get information to show anybody up. No! We are much more responsible than that. That is why we are taking the position we are taking now. Let me say that what happens from here on in doesn't depend upon us, sir. From where we sit this is all we can do. We are not the decision-makers or the movers to get the decision made. I should qualify that. We are part of the decision-making process when it comes to the money. But we are reasonable and understanding.

I will tell you something else about it: When we were arguing about the second budget and the capital works and we spoke about Cayman Airways while we didn't go into this detail, this is what we were talking about. And everybody was saying we were arguing for the sake of argument. But we knew what was going down like they had to know it. We got it second hand, so they must have known it. That was a big part of our argument and we spoke to them about Cayman Airways because we knew what was happening. We did that. And we are doing it once more.

Mr. Roy Bodden: And they better not dodge it this time.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: But we are not doing it to look for an argument; we are trying to find a solution.

Mr. Speaker, surely, if there is any merit to the line of argument that we have put together and presented, somebody will find it in them to do something. As I said, we are not professing to have all of the facts in front of us. But with what we have, this is the position we have come up with and it makes all the sense in the world to us unless somebody can provide us with sensible and salient points to counter it.

I believe that management takes the same position. I also believe that the minister could find himself taking the same position. I spoke about direction yesterday afternoon. I spoke about leadership this morning. Let us see what direction we will head in with Cayman Airways. Let us see if leadership can make decisions.

The Speaker: It is my understanding that it is the wish of this honourable House that we adjourn at 3.00 PM. I ask Members to take the luncheon break and be back here at 2.15 PM. We will adjourn for the funeral at 3.00 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1.00 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.20 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

When we took the break I had just about completed my contribution regarding Cayman Airways and perhaps it would be appropriate to gloss over the arguments by way of a summary.

Simply put, we know that since 1994 Cayman Airways has continued to incur operational losses. We also know that at present it is fair to say that either directly or indirectly government subsidy to Cayman Airways on an annual basis is approaching $7 million. We accept that equity is being built up in ownership of the equipment, that is, the aircraft. And we also accept the minister's position that the problems Cayman Airways faces today cannot be solved by any further downsizing. In fact, what Cayman Airways needs to do is find the means by which it can generate more revenue with additional costs being as minimal as possible.

Having established that, it is our position that the aircraft that was discussed with us—the 1984 aircraft out of Malaysia—should be seriously considered by the airline and by government who will have to make a variation to the guarantee which has already been given. We trust that this situation will not be left alone, and if the position we have taken lacks facts we expect to be given those facts and we expect to be told what direction the appropriate people involved will be taking the airline.

We contend that to simply lease a third aircraft, and that being not the most suitable aircraft to carry freight in a dependable, efficient and profitable way, and also to be able to cover the downtime on the other two aircraft plus engaging in charters, which is another lucrative market, is not the way to go.

Before I move on let me say that we on the back-bench have thought about this and the position is based on the facts that we have in front of us. Let me make something else clear. If I seem to have more facts than I should have, let me make it clear that there is no need for anyone to try to find out where I get my information from because any attempt at that will prove to me that the individuals who hold responsibility for the airline are not really concerned about the airline, but at pointing blame at people. It doesn't matter where the information came from, the whole purpose is to let us talk and arrive at a solution. As it is now, it seems that no one is prepared to go the extra mile to try to come up with a solution.

We talk about making it a political football. If the decision-makers are afraid to make the right decisions because of politics then they are the ones who make it a political football, sir. To close off the discussion about Cayman Airways, we are quite prepared to sit down once the facts are laid before us and wherever we can play a sensible role in the decision making process, we are quite happy to do so. We have put this position forward because we are very concerned about the state of the airline and about the future of its very existence.

Let me move on. I wish to talk a little bit about the state of the economy. In the Throne Speech the Governor gave the position of things that were going to be done this year through the various ministries and portfolios. Although I spoke about lack of direction yesterday afternoon, even if we are not satisfied with the way things are being done we still have to examine what is being done, and how it is being done. In looking at the economy we have recently seen that budgets on an annual basis have been increasing by fairly large percentages.

While I don't have the actual figures in front of me, let me say that one of the things we have a concern about at this point in time is where we see from 1996 to 1997 (and these are my rounded off calculations) the increase in the budget was about 18%. From 1997 to 1998 the actual expenditure was only about a 6% increase, but there is a reason for that. It is because the budget was not forthcoming until March. And also from 1997 to 1998 (because of the way our debates developed with the budget) we found where capital expenditure did not begin to take place until probably the second quarter of the year. The reason for that 6% was because the money did not have time to be spent. But what was approved and what was actually appropriated by supplementary funding would have given it a similar increase to what it actually was at the end of the year. The time just didn't allow for it to be spent. Then again, from 1998 actual expenditure to what is projected for 1999 there is a 27% increase according to my calculations.

While this may not be exact, my concern is that I don't believe for one second that we will find ourselves in a position to sustain this rate of growth.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: We can blindfold ourselves and say, 'Look how good things are. Look at how many things we are providing for the country. Look at how much money we have to spend.' But let us stop and make proper assessments.

We find that we have not planned, and all of a sudden we are trying to play catch-up. People may say there is no merit to the thought of elections coming up, but I am not even going to address it from that point of view. The reasons do not change the facts. I am just going to say what is, not why.

When we look at it and we see the rate at which we are trying to do what we want to do, we find that government is literally paving the way for an economy that is going to overheat. It will happen if we continue. And that trickles down into the private sector. The more you see things like that happening on the government side everybody speeds up the same way. And when you marry the two that is exactly what happens. But it doesn't end there, and this is the point I wish to address on the rate of growth on the budgets of the past few years.

Within two years we have had to bring to this honourable House the revenue measures that are required to fill the gap between the sudden increase in recurrent expenditure for the country and the recurrent revenue which is not increasing proportionately. So when government finds itself in a position with services that it wants to provide for the people it then suddenly realises within a few days that no matter how much it shaves it can't balance the budget, it has to employ revenue measures. Of course government will counter that by saying that the people are not paying what they should be paying for the services anyhow. I know that. I am not arguing that.

But what government must not employ as a principle—which I contend is what it is doing—is after-the-fact thought-out revenue measures.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Ad hococracy!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: If I have $100 to spare every month of my life, I plan around the fact that my "disposable income" is $100. If you don't tell me that I have to pay anything out of that $100 for four or five years and I keep doing what I am doing with that $100 it means that my lifestyle has developed around the fact that that is my disposable income.

When you suddenly come to me and say that you need $90 out of that to pay for something, I am in a mess because I have continually made my life in such a way that that $100 of disposable income is taking care of a specific cost. This is where the revenue enhancement measures—the tax measures—cause a problem for the people in the country.

The question is not whether they should be paying or not, it is how you let them pay. It should be done on a timely basis where people can prepare their lives and know in advance exactly what their fixed expenses are going to be. I have contended that for a while. So I am not going to accept this argument that they are not paying for the services that are provided. I understand that they are not. The fact of the matter is, government doesn't have the correct cost in many instances. I understand that government is in the process of attempting to do that in various areas.

Because of the way in which we deploy these revenue measures everyone who has the ability to do so is going to pass these costs on to someone else. And this goes on, and on, and on, and on until it reaches the last line of defence—which is the ordinary, poor consumer whose disposable income is the least of all. And that is where the buck stops, and that is who gets into problems.

It is not intentional, and I don't contend that it's intentional, but I believe that what I just said is the case. And I believe that government should recognise by now that that is the case and be willing to do it differently.

We have said for several years now that our revenue base is very narrow. That means that the areas from which government gets revenue are almost fixed. So whenever government wants more revenue it has to go to the same areas and increase the percentage charged in those areas. There is no denying the fact that that is what has been done. Who likes it or does not like it matters not to me. That is the truth.

And do you know what else? It shows a lack of direction; it shows a lack of leadership. That is not the way to run a country!

Mr. Roy Bodden: It is defunct. That's what it is—defunct!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I contend that what we should be doing—because government always accuses us of quarrelling about the problems that exist but providing no alternate solutions . . . let me tell you what government has not done. I have taken the time out to go into the private sector to seek suggestions, as have a few others.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Don't give them too many ideas now. Don't do that!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: In the private sector of this country is a large number of corporations and individuals who wish to continue to do business in this country because the atmosphere that we have been privileged to create in this country is conducive for them to do business. So it is not like they are seeking to move somewhere else. Nothing like that!

So when people from the government bench get up and accuse us of preaching gloom and doom and doing the country harm, they are full of "IT!" That is only a cover up for their lack of dealing with the problem in the right fashion. That's what it is. I contend that.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Hear, hear!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: The first thing these people in the private sector need to understand is that we all have a responsibility to maintain and retain the social harmony that we have in the country—the ambience, the correct atmosphere conducive for them to do business. While they seek to continue to operate very profitable businesses they are not averse to playing their part once approached in the right way. And there are many, many avenues this country can widen its revenue base in without continuing to affect the lower level of this society. For the love of me I cannot understand why they cannot grip this. Because if they understand it, they do nothing about it!

We keep talking about the huge disparity of the wealth distribution in this country. Mr. Speaker, let me say something bluntly here: If 10% of our population makes 90% of the money, and the other 90% only make 10% of the money, we must have trouble in the country soon!

[Applause by a member]

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: They can say it as fancy as they wish. And I am not professing that we are at that stage today, but I am here to say that if we continue the way we are, that is what is going to happen.

Mr. Roy Bodden: That's the way some people want it!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: That is when you will have the flight of capital, Mr. Speaker.

I am saying that a huge part of the reshaping of our thinking needs to be where we broaden the revenue base where individuals at the lower end of the society—which is the majority of the society, . . .and I don't care who says different, I know it! We cannot continue to offload the debt on them, and that's what we are doing—knowingly or not—that is the end result.

I am not accountant, and far be it that I even think I am very smart, but I can understand that as crystal clear as I can see you, sir. And we wonder why we hear certain things happening in the country, certain rumblings.

The required revenue for this country has to be looked at and derived from a wider perspective, a whole different thought process. It doesn't mean that it is going to adversely affect any one person. I want the government to know that just by sheer legwork we know of many areas.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Tell them!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: And it is nothing we can do that they can't do. But there is this fear, 'These are the big boys. Perhaps if we try to say anything to them about trying to get more money it's going to run them.' Baloney! The big boys like it here too! They are quite prepared, once you deal with them sensibly, to offer suggestions as to how we can raise money on an annual basis. And there are ways and means, Mr. Speaker. I know that now, and I have barely scratched the surface.

It doesn't end there because we should be proactive in the ways in which we earn revenue. But the other thing too is that we should never fool ourselves into believing that whatever we project we will earn is what we must spend. It seems to be politically expedient to find the ways and means that you think you are making the public glorify in your stewardship. But let me say that the responsibility we have not only as representatives of the people of this country but as we are looked upon to lead this country in a certain direction goes beyond political expedience.

You keep hearing us say there is no forward planning. I grant you, sir, that in recent times I have seen a glimmer of light at the end of the tunnel, but it comes and goes. I'm still not satisfied. I have to see the light shine brighter. So I'm going to preach until I see that, at least.

When we look at how we do what we do with national issues, . . . later on I am going to get into some specific details of this to show the direction that we on the backbench believe we should be going; to show the things that we should be doing to reshape not only the way we do things but the way in which we think about doing things. But I am not going to do that right now because I think we are pretty close to where we are going to be closing off. And I would prefer to have a fresh start with that part of it, sir.

However, there are a couple of other things that I can address. It is not that I am completely finished speaking about the economy, but I just looked at that area to show that because we have been doing things in a certain way for so long doesn't mean that we have to continue, especially when we know better or are shown better by others. And whose mouth it comes out of should not mean you won't look to see if what the person is saying makes any sense. That's what the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town was talking about yesterday when he was venting some of his frustrations. It wasn't about the people outside.

I haven't been here as long as he has, and I just used the little word that flicks everyone's switch—Medium Term Financial Strategy and the Public Sector Investment Programme. For close to six years, little old me (who don't know nothin' about nothin') got to understand that and tried to tell the government that it should be using that exercise to create the discipline needed for forward planning for this country. To this day we haven't seen the first one laid on the Table yet!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: But, as I said, I see a little light at the end of the tunnel. It flickers up every now and then. So perhaps all is not lost.

Let me make it very clear that it is not the civil service arm of government I am talking about, it is the elected arm of government. And I am going to tell you why in my opinion they didn't do it. Make them answer me and tell me I am wrong, Mr. Speaker. If that's what it takes to draw them out to say something sensible, then we'll do it.

For instance, I believe the reason it has not been done is that government could not for one minute foresee instilling that discipline in themselves. They couldn't wake up every morning and do what they feel like doing when it comes to the services and the capital works this country needs. Once you have prioritised listings you have that discipline where you can't change things mid-stream as you may like, because you are looking at the big picture. There is where the purchased loyalty comes from, Mr. Speaker, the parochial politics that goes to the extent where you have all kinds of structures in your country to satisfy individual circumstances and you are still fighting the most needed situations that would benefit the entire population. Yes. That is where it comes from.

That is why we have to look at $50 million of capital expenditure for education alone, because from 1993 until now, 6% . . . No, not even that. Only 4% of what has been spent on capital projects in this country has gone to education! Four percent, one twenty-fifth in other words!

Mr. Roy Bodden: Preach. Tell it like it is!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: But education is so important. They have all the statistics, Mr. Speaker. That is no excuse! They have all the projections. That is no excuse! They know the population trends. They know how many children to expect every year.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Purchased loyalty prevents them from doing things.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: What is going to happen to us now? We are going to get boxed in and because we know that we have to deal with educational facilities, we are going to have to be building them all at one time within two or three years and a lot of other things are going to suffer because there were no priorities and no Medium Term Financial Strategy or Public Sector Investment Programme which would have identified the priorities and caused sensible capital development in our country in order of priority so that the most important things could have been done first.

But, Mr. Speaker, who am I to continue to preach for so many things? I will tell you who I am, and I will tell you something else: I am not giving up! Oh no! And if I have to come back next year, God willing, and do the same thing, I will do it! Something is going to give some time, one way or the other. Government is either going to take it on its own to begin to do what is right when it comes to their stewardship or someone else will have to do it.

Mr. Speaker, if you don't mind, sir, I would be going on to another topic now and given the time it is, perhaps if you don't mind, I can start fresh in the morning.

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until tomorrow at 10.00 AM.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

By Mr. Kearney Gomez, MBE

Hon. Kearney Gomez: I, Kearney Gomez, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law, so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Gomez, on behalf of all honourable members, I welcome you to this House. Please take your seat.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture, who is in Cayman Brac on official business. The Third Elected Member for George Town is in the United Kingdom on a Parliamentary seminar. And the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works is also off the island.

Item 4 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question number 9 is standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 9

No. 9: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources what are Government's plans regarding the provision of low income housing in the Cayman Islands.

Hon. John B. McLean: The Ministry requested funds in the 1999 Budget to facilitate a study on affordable housing in the Cayman Islands. It is the intention of the ministry to use the study to document factual information on the existing conditions and barriers that persons in the low-income bracket face in their search of affordable housing.

The study would be overseen by a committee made up of public and private sector members. But, in addition to overseeing the study, the committee would also be responsible for producing a report on affordable housing for low-income persons, and recommending options for addressing the situation. This report would then be forwarded to Executive Council for a more conclusive decision on what action government may want to take.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeever Bush: I have a motion to deal with it and I suspect that what I am hearing in this question is what I will hear in the answer to the motion. Can the honourable minister say what happened to the study that was done by Planning some time ago?

Hon. John B. McLean: I wonder if the member could elaborate a little bit more on that for me. Was it something that was done by Planning?

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeever Bush: Some time ago while the present permanent secretary in the Ministry of Community Affairs was director of Planning a study was carried out to ascertain just what the situation was in regard to low-income housing and other matters. And I suspect that all ministries had a copy of that. In fact, when I was the minister responsible for housing I took my cue from that, meaning that I knew of the situation but I found out the dire need through that study. I am not going to poke any fun at a committee, but I do believe that what we need is not a committee but concrete action by government.

Hon. John B. McLean: As far as I am concerned, I will give any commitment to try to help persons in need of homes. I think for a long time in these islands we never really attempted to help what we called low-income housing, we have always been dealing with affordable housing which are for persons who can actually afford. But we are talking about those who actually need assistance with homes, persons who are not in higher salary brackets.

I will give the commitment that I will investigate what the member just said and I will find out exactly what he is talking about in regard to this report. We will definitely do what we can through my ministry to try to make this a reality.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Can the honourable minister say when this committee will be appointed? As I said, I am not going to poke any fun at it, but it is well over 16 months since I left the ministry and this matter is dragging behind.

Hon. John B. McLean: We are hoping that we will have something going within a month. I would also like to say to the backbench that we are hoping to have one or two members from the backbench to assist us in this because it is a serious matter and we need to address it once and for all. The country has progressed in other areas but this is an area we have never really addressed properly.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Can the honourable minister say whether he had any information in regard to the matter when he received the files from the Ministry of Community Development at the time?

Hon. John B. McLean: We did receive some information but if the member is speaking about the project we were talking about a while ago I don't recall seeing anything on that. That's why I am giving the undertaking. We did see some information but not exactly what we were just discussing.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: One of the problems we have is something I mentioned in my contribution to the debate on the Throne Speech. We have no scientifically based indices of poverty therefore we cannot speak accurately about low-income housing.

Can the honourable minister tell the House the terms of reference the committee will have? And how are we going to scientifically define what low-income housing is so that we can determine what kind of need and what demands exist?

Hon. John B. McLean: The terms of reference will be to investigate the type of individuals who are in dire need of housing within the Cayman Islands. As I pointed out earlier, we have been assisting individuals with affordable homes, but we are looking at those in dire need and they are definitely the ones in the lower salary bracket who cannot go to a commercial bank and be assisted.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: May I request an undertaking from the minister that this committee be required to make use of the family study as a resource document? And also, perhaps deal with some people who are in the contracting business, particularly persons like Mr. David Arch who I know constructs houses for individuals so that they may be able to get an idea of the various income brackets.

I am requesting that the minister give the House that undertaking because in the absence of any scientifically based income studies this will be the most accurate method we have of really arriving at the various income categories so that we can have some workable idea of what we are talking about when we say low income.

I appreciate what the minister has said, and I have given a commitment that this is an issue of national importance so I am not trying to play politics with it.

Hon. John B. McLean: I give that commitment. I will endeavor to do exactly what The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town has said. At this time I would also like to say that we must all say thanks to the First Elected Member for West Bay who has put a lot of time into this. He has done a lot of research into it and through my ministry I will endeavor to make sure that we continue from there trying to help.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Since we know the need exists we could become a little more scientific in regard to the exact need and we could also define that need, but what seems to be the obstacle or barrier to government's doing something is money. Would this study entail attempts to research how government might be able to locate a lending institution that would provide us with money at a much more favourable and affordable interest rate since that seems to be the key to the solution to the problem?

Hon. John B. McLean: I think the member has actually hit it on the head. I think this is indeed the key. Government has to make sure it has the funds in place. It either has to find a lending institution, or it has to bite the bullet and actually appropriate the funds for us to get this project off the ground the way it should be so that we can actually facilitate those in our community who are in dire need.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Let me preface my question with a comment. I think we have the impression in this country that unless you can find a two or three bedroom home built out of concrete it's not housing. Can the honourable minister say whether or not any consideration would be given to allowing prefab type buildings and mobile homes? In the United States, for example, you can get a beautiful two or three bedroom mobile home for $12,000 $13,000 or $15,000. And here we are talking of an average house in this country costing $125,000. We need to look at other practical alternatives to housing.

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, to comment on what the last speaker said, as far as I can recall prefab homes have been on our books for quite some time as not being allowed. Also the trailer homes are only allowed for storage. However, I think the committee will need to look at all aspects to bring down the costs and assist our people. So I will not pre-empt what they say because I am hoping that the report we get from them would entail all aspects of us trying to make it more accommodating to those in need.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: The very first sentence in the answer says, "The Ministry requested funds in the 1999 Budget to facilitate a study on affordable housing in the Cayman Islands." Can the honourable minister state if these funds were approved?

Hon. John B. McLean: I can see from the smile on the member's face that he knows exactly what I am going to say. The figure we requested was not approved. At least not in total like we asked for.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state what was asked for and what was approved?

Hon. John B. McLean: I do not have those figures, but I would undertake to get them for the member.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: The minister knows that I would never attempt to be rude to him, but certainly he has available to him his permanent secretary and one of his senior assistant secretaries and I do believe that they would have some idea. I don't need an exact figure. I need a ballpark figure.

Hon. John B. McLean: I don't have a PS with me, I do have an assistant. I think the figure that was requested was in the region of $50,000 so that we could get a start.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: The reason why I asked the question is because this situation proves to prevail throughout the system. We get an answer which gives us all of the wonderful plans, but when we ask a question later on down the line and we find out that the study is not completed, the simple answer to that question is that funds did not become available. Certainly, sir, this cannot work.

I would like to ask the minister how the ministry can expect to achieve the answer that is given to us if the funds are not available?

Hon. John B. McLean: As I pointed out in the last paragraph, the report would then be forwarded to Executive Council for more conclusive decision. I trust that if it is a favourable report—which I am hoping it will be—that government will take the action for us to get the necessary funds.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Again, with the greatest of respect to the minister, I don't think the minister is lining the ducks up properly. The way the answer is presented the study is what requires the funds and it is when the study is completed that it is passed on to Council. So the only time Council will have anything to do with it is when the study is completed. If there's no money to do the study, the Council won't have anything to do with it.

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the study, the ministry would be taking care of the study under professional fees. I thought we were talking about the actual housing development. Maybe I misunderstood what the member was asking.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, if the minister will recall I spoke about the first sentence in the answer where it says, the ministry requested funds in the 1999 Budget to facilitate a study. Let me rephrase the question. Does the ministry have the funds available to facilitate the study?

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Professional fees is what we are hoping to use.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: When the answer was given it said that there was a specific request for these funds. Was this request under professional fees or was this a specific request which stood on its own?

Hon. John B. McLean: Under professional fees.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister categorically state that under professional fees, with funds that were approved for that ministry, there are funds that will allow for this study to be completed in a timely fashion?

Hon. John B. McLean: That is my understanding that definitely we will.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Can the honourable minister say how much funds he has, and how long does he expect this study to take before it is completed?

Hon. John B. McLean: I did say that it would take us a month, and I would make a report back here. I do not have the figures here that the member is asking, but I will supply them through you.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: By its very nature the vote for professional fees connotes that it is dealing with somebody hired to do a particular job. Is this the case with this matter or will these fees he is talking about incorporate the work of the committee? Which one?

Hon. John B. McLean: I am hoping that the funds we have there will definitely do the complete study so that I can make a report back to the House.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: The answer says, "The study would be overseen by a committee." I think what The First Elected Member for West Bay was asking (and what I was going to ask in a supplementary question) is, Is the committee going to conduct the study or is the committee simply going to oversee a professional unit or body which will conduct the study? I think that is what we are trying to find out.

Hon. John B. McLean: I would say that the committee would work in conjunction. But we will definitely have to get some other input.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state what type of group of professionals will be used to have the study conducted?

Hon. John B. McLean: The committee will be made of a cross-section of individuals involved in construction, for example. I am sure we will have to get someone from the financial area and persons who would be directly involved to assist us in the best way possible to be able to give the best to the people.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Le me try to make myself clear. Can the honourable minister state who is going to conduct the study?

Hon. John B. McLean: I would not be able to say at this time.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House what entity would be responsible for drawing up the terms of reference under which the study will be undertaken?

Hon. John B. McLean: It would have to be the ministry along with the person in charge of the Housing Development Co-op.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries that ends Question Time for this morning.

Item 5 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19 FEBRUARY, 1999

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

When we closed off yesterday I was trying to deal a little bit with the state of the economy. Besides all that I spoke about before, I just wish to take a couple of minutes to deal with the reserves of the country. The purpose is to try to do the best I can to let the public fully understand exactly where we are with the reserves.

In previous debates the government has put forward the position that there was $76 million in reserves. When it was pointed out that the additional funds which were to be put into the public service pension fund in 1999 but hadn't actually been added into that, the position changed to some $66 million. Of course $50 million of that is exactly what is now in the public service pension fund.

The government's position has been that had they done what previous government's had done (which was have little or no regard for that fund), they could have left the contingent liability to continue to increase, and they could have had much more money in general reserves. Just to make the situation very clear, while this government has acted sensibly and prudent in putting money every year as best able into this fund, let it be made very clear that it is something that had to be done.

Also, let us not cloud the situation, and let it be very clear to the public that the money in this fund is not money that any government can touch. By law, sir, pension benefits cannot be paid out of this fund until an outside actuarial assessment certifies that the fund is self-sustaining. What that means (and I am using approximate figures) is that the fund is probably approximately one-third of the level it should be. So it is not an exercise that will reach its conclusion in the very near future. It will take several more years of doing the same thing we are doing now to get the fund self-sustaining whereby the money that is paid out to pensioners can come out of that fund rather than coming out of general revenue as it is now. So that is not money that we can consider to be in reserve that we have access to as we please.

In truth and in fact (and I have to give the government a little bit of credit—not much, just a little) government seems to be making some attempt to boost the general reserves. That something many of us have complained about for a long time. I see where $3 million should be going into general reserves this year. I do not believe this is sufficient on an annual basis, but nevertheless, given the circumstances and the fact that they are doing a little bit better I won't complain too much because they might go back to what they used to do. So I better be happy for what is happening now.

Many people don't pay much credence to this Public Service Pension Fund. It is very important that we continue to do what we are doing with this fund otherwise we could be in real trouble down the line. I wish to remind government that as of 1st January 1999 a current actuarial assessment was due so that government's current liability in this area could be established. I trust this has not been forgotten, and I hope that government will be prepared to inform us in short order as to exactly what the liability is. We have to keep abreast of this on a continual basis so that we know where we are and do what we can to ensure that the underfunding can be brought up to where it should be as quickly as possible.

My time is getting short, and before I move off of the finances I want to speak a little bit about the statutory authorities. I know that my position is not going to be one government will agree with, but I want to justify why I am stating my position. I hope that it will mean something in regard to the way these authorities are dealt with when it comes to financial matters in the future.

First of all let me use the Annual Report of the Water Authority of the Cayman Islands 1997 to make one of my points. On page 6 of this report, under the subheading of "Government Dividend," it reads, "The authority voluntarily paid a dividend of $250,000 to the Cayman Islands Government in July of 1997. In late December 1997 the Government ordered the Water Authority to pay an additional $1.25 million from its cash reserves into the Treasury. This action is al- lowed under section [so and so] of the Water Authority Law . . . the payment was made under protest of the Water Authority management. This action caused the Authority to go into overdraft on 31st December 1997. This overdraft was cancelled when a cash certificate of deposit matured in early January 1998."

"Loans: The Authority did not draw down any loan funds during 1997, however an overdraft amount of $774,568 was carried forward into 1998 as disclosed in the above section. Repayment of long-term debt in 1997 amounted to approximately $1.47 million. It is expected that the Authority will require a capital loan of approximately $1.6 million in 1998 in order to make up the shortfall in cash reserves resulting from government's action in December 1997."

What this means, Mr. Speaker, is that for the Authority to continue its projects planned for 1998 it had to engage in borrowing of $1.6 million—because government took the money from the Authority in December 1997. I understand that in December 1997 money was taken from all three of the Authorities. It is clear to me that government took money from these authorities in December of 1997 under protest—as it did from the Water Authority—to ensure that there was no deficit at the end of the year. It had to be that; there is no other reason.

Government took money from these authorities to make sure there was no deficit, but at the same time, it caused these authorities to have to borrow money. What that means to me is that government is taking money out of one pocket and putting it into the other causing someone else to borrow. The only difference is that the money is not being borrowed in the name of the government. What that really means is that there is an obvious attempt to ensure that the direct public debt of the country does not rise any higher so there will be no more argument about it.

They can address this issue if the thought is any different. What I have just mentioned are the facts that occurred at that time. I don't know what has changed since then. But that cannot be the correct way. I know that government vests property into the Port Authority. I know that government guarantees loans for these authorities. I know that government borrowed money for them to get going and all of that. I understand all of that. I know that government has vested the property, the airport and everything into the Civil Aviation Authority. And I know that if the government is the investor it must get back some money for its investment. Nobody is questioning that.

But they haven't sat down and worked out a formula that allows these authorities to function properly. It is almost like government is saying 'Because we live day-to-day and we don't plan our future, we don't want you to plan yours either.'

And by the way, Mr. Speaker, I remember very clearly when the same argument came up the Minister of Tourism gave an undertaking that he would address the matter at Council level and come up with some formula. I do not believe that has occurred yet. If they are in the process of doing it, then God bless us all. But I am going to continue to talk about these things, as I said before, until I see direct results. It has to be wrong for government to be doing this business.

In the Throne Speech the Governor mentioned that these authorities will be engaging in millions of dollars worth of capital works in 1999, including the Port Authority, and the Water Authority, and the Civil Aviation Authority. If they cannot put money aside for their capital projects, and the vast majority will have to be borrowed, all that means is that while these are called "self-financing loans" and are not part of the direct public debt, government is still responsible for it. It cannot be right to deal with it in that fashion.

They must develop some type of formula for the authorities to function properly and be responsible for their performance to government. Then whatever is received over and above what is expected, government can receive that. But government should expect no more than that.

On top of that, the Civil Aviation Authority, for instance, while government has vested the land, it is actually a sale to itself because the Civil Aviation Authority is paying a long-term loan back to government for this land. I mean, it's confusing at best!

It's no wonder these authorities are frustrated because they cannot function properly. They are expected to perform to a certain level but at the same point in time they are getting spanked on the behind morning, noon and night, with government saying 'Gimme this, gimme this, gimme this.' It cannot work like that.

Do you know the real big joke, Mr. Speaker? We talked about seeing something positive done with Cayman Airways. I am sure the minister will reply to the situation about Cayman Airways, and he will probably bring in some facts that we didn't know, but at least we will get the situation moving to where something sensible will happen. The question has come up in this House (and I am sure you will remember it, sir) about landing fees being owed by Cayman Airways to the Civil Aviation Authority. Let me tell you what nearly happened this time around.

The plan was that the $3 million Cayman Airways owed the Civil Aviation was going to be put into the budget to be given to the Civil Aviation Authority. But the deal was that the Civil Aviation Authority was going to have to give a commitment to give that back to government. But it would have wiped the slate clean for Cayman Airways. We can't operate our country like that. That was simply so that we would hear no more about these landing fees. But it doesn't show the true picture.

I really don't wish to laugh as serious as it is, but it is really a joke! Now I really don't know why it didn't happen and perhaps (giving the benefit of the doubt) after they thought about it they said, 'Well, this probably is not the best thing to do.' I could venture other opinions on it at this point in time, but I won't. But the fact is that this is what almost happened. We have to move forward and deal with the country's finances so that our left-hand costs are justified by our right-hand results. That's the best way I can put it right now so that we can understand.

I trust that they will sit down and take a reasonable look to devise a sensible plan so that these authorities can function and be money-makers for the government. But they need to be allowed to operate in such a fashion that as the demands come upon them they are able to grow with those demands in a prudent fashion. Then when you look at their balance sheet it will look sensible. The government should never depend upon these authorities to balance its budget. In the back of their minds they know it is there and they say, 'All rights, if we get into a little bit of trouble at the end of the day we know what to fall back on.' That should not be the thought.

It should be clear-cut and agreed upon. And I do not believe that they can agree on a dollar value that the contribution should be every year from these authorities to government. It has to be based on a percentage. While projections can be made, no one really knows at the beginning of the year what their end of year results will be. Hopefully we won't have to talk about that again for another year.

Strangely enough for me, I would like to talk about the environment. From time to time we have had various discussions and arguments to and fro about what should and should not be done. In recent times we have had lots of questions back and forth regarding the landfill site and what is going to be done and all of this. Some of our major environmental concerns include our particular vulnerability to the degradation of coastal habitats, marine pollution, and over exploitation of these marine resources. We have problems with the quality and availability of our freshwater resources and one of the major ones is the management and disposal of waste.

Let me just point out a few of the things that are obvious to me. I have argued it at different levels before. We do not have at this point in time adequate port reception facilities to deal with waste from vessels, that is, sewage, effluent, garbage, and that type of thing. I have mentioned before about the amount of boat traffic in the North Sound—not just the people like me who go on a little fishing trip in the Sound, I am talking about the commercial ventures plying the North Sound over and over.

There is no adequate space for them to offload their effluent and sewage. And they are dumping it into the North Sound because they have nowhere else to dump it. Certainly, as that continues to happen, it must have a negative effect on the quality of the water in the North Sound which has, as we all know without my going into a lot of detail, all the other negative effects on the marine life and everything else. It has to.

What amazes me is that year after year we talk about these things. Year after year! We made a suggestion a while back about the property that government owns at the SafeHaven site which is being used by some of these commercial people because they don't have anywhere else to dock. The Port Authority had plans for having an offloading station there for sewage and effluent. I saw them!

I know that there may have been some problems with the owners of SafeHaven because I also talked to them. But it was nothing that could not be worked out. But the moment there's a problem or an obstacle they forget about it and nothing is done. You have individual enterprises that wanted at one point (and I don't know what has happened since then) to put a marina type base station that could accommodate these vessels and have that same type of facility. It took nearly a year to get the approval just for one seawall.

Mr. Speaker, do I stop now and sit down and say, "Well, let's forget the whole deal?" No! I can't do that. But when are we going to learn to sit down and try to do things properly and not . . . I mean, can we sometimes forget about who it is involved in these things? It's no wonder the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town gets cynical sometimes. Anyway, we plod along, sir.

I know it's very difficult to tackle the proper disposing of garbage and sewage. I only mention this about the North Sound in the hopes that someone in the right place with the authority will do something about that. But when we go on land we have the same problem. We have the population increasing. We have a lot of subdivisions being built. We have a lot of homes being built, we have increasing numbers of families, which automatically means increasing amounts of waste and garbage and sewage. We also need to recognise that in the long term what is said to be an option to continually increase the size of the landfill site or look for a second site is not really an option.

Within the past week I heard the minister responsible talk about people not wanting garbage dumps in their backyards. I must have heard him say that six or eight times. We understand that. We know that's a problem. But if we are going to look for solutions, we have to look for long-term solutions. I don't stand here to suggest to you that I have the solution in my coat pocket, but that is where we have to head. All we continue to do year in, year out, day in and day out is try to get through today. Sometimes when people are sick and tired and stressed out you hear them say, 'Lord, if I can only get through today.' That seems to be the way the country is being run. We have to get out of that way of thinking. If we live like that we will be saying 'Let's try to get through today' every day! What kind of life is that?

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to read a few excerpts which tie in with tourism and relate to all of this, from the 40th Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference in Canada, 1994. This is the data papers. On page 46, under the subheading of Tourism, it reads: "The problem: Tourism is a main source of revenue for many small islands; one of the few development options they have. But its impact on island environments and indigenous cultures threatens to ruin the very beauty and diversity that draws tourists. As an industry, tourism is both resource intensive, that is, high consumption of water, land and capital, and waste intensive affecting coastal ecosystems." People complain about this all the time, sir.

That was in 1994 and there were some action proposals. "It is imperative that small islands carefully plan tourism development. This should include balancing development with other needs for land and coastal resources requiring environmental impact assessments for all projects developing guidelines for design and construction of tourism facilities to minimise environmental impact and adopting measures to protect the cultural integrity of island peoples."

I am not saying that we have no regard for this, Mr. Speaker. I served some time on the Central Planning Authority, as you did, sir. We were there together. I know a little bit about what happens. But I do not believe that we are paying anywhere near enough attention to the problems looming right ahead of us because of this. Just one more quote from this book on page 49, under "Role of Parliamentarians in Contributing to the Understanding of Environmental Problems." Mr. Speaker, this simply reads, "While there is a wide variety of national circumstances there is growing recognition worldwide that successful policies to conserve the environment, alleviate poverty, and improve human welfare in an equitable manner will require strong institutions and open participatory systems of government."

Open participatory systems of government. Someone might ask what the relation is to what I said about the environment. I am going to say that it is self-explanatory—because it is. I am not going to take the time out to dig and stab. . . and they know I can. I will make the statement again: It is self-explanatory.

One thing I can't let pass. It has to do with the environment, with concerns about landfill and where we go in the future, the direction we head to solve that problem. Mention has been made that the lifespan of the present landfill site is expected to expire in five years. In truth and in fact it is four years. Since that statement was made a year ago, in truth and in fact it is three years now. Let me tell you that I hear a lot of people saying a lot of things, and I know that it is only fair when certain things are in motion that you give people time to get results. But I have been hearing for a long time that things are in the works and I haven't seen the results yet.

I issue this warning today: If we sit flat on our you-know-what and wait this thing out because it is difficult to tackle, we are never, ever going to be able to get out of it with a satisfactory answer because it involves sewage also.

Going back to what I was saying about the authorities, I also know that the Water Authority is doing its best when it comes to making plans to deal with sewage in certain areas. But they can't operate the way they wish to because of the way they have to function. Getting back to this thing . . . I can't resist. I want to prove a point today to see if we might somehow start to reshape the way we do things.

On January 14 of this year, a gentleman contacted a place called Recycled Refuse International Limited. He contacted one of the principals of this company who had visited the island before. I won't call names, but when he contacted the person by way of a fax he simply said, "Dear Sir: I am aware that you have visited our islands within the past two years for the purpose of discussion with our government on the disposal of garbage by the incineration method. I am interested in what type of response you received from our government representatives and most of all whether your firm's interest in our island is still on their agenda. I would also like to know your availability for further discussions on this subject if the opportunity presents itself. I am simply a concerned citizen. Yours truly [so and so]."

On the 18th of January the gentleman received a reply. Now this is going to take a few minutes, but I crave your indulgence.

The reply reads: "Dear Mr. [so and so]: RE: Cayman Islands Waste Disposal." Mr. Speaker, if necessary, I don't have a problem tabling this because there is nothing to hide. I am just letting you know. And any one who wishes a copy, I am happy to let them have a copy of it.

"Dear Sir: Thank you very much for your letter of 14 January 1998 which has been drawn to my attention upon my return to office. You are correct insofar that we first visited Grand Cayman in December of 1997 during which time we discussed at some length with various concerned local citizens the then current situation with regard to the above matter and generally the deteriorating condition of the environment."

"At entirely our own cost and initiative we put together a detailed report in some depth covering every aspect of the islands waste management practices and how best to address the actual issues to bring about a composite waste management solution which would be viable and effective. This report was produced in two volumes, the first being the full report and the second a digest, and through the good offices of Mr. Michael Godfrey of Arch and Godfrey and Mr. Heber Arch's partner, this report was circulated to Mr. McLean, the Minister of Environment, and his permanent secretary and other potentially concerned ministers."

"As a consequence we returned to the island in the middle of March 1998 at which time meetings had been arranged for us to open dialogue with the minister, Mr. McLean, his permanent secretary, Mr. Gomez, and we were fortunate enough to meet Mrs. Kuczysnski, the head of the department of environmental health. We also had meetings with Mr. Bruce Drake of CUC, who was most helpful, and Mr. Rick McTaggart of the Water Authority along with his colleague Tom Van Zanten."

"During these meetings and under the direction of Mr. McLean we were given access to a substantial amount of information which would assist us in preparing and fine tuning our report in order that we could put the financial cost with a solution. At the same time, and with consent, we took samples from the various dykes and canals that bordered on all sides of the existing municipal landfill. At the same time according to subsequent press comment the minister of environment also took samples and had them analysed.

"Principally, Mrs. Kuczynski had asserted that no problems existed with regard to leachate [whatever that is] from the landfill which seemed rather incredible as she was most positive despite our worldwide experience which would indicate that leachate is a problem. Cayman Water informed us that due to fracturing of certain clay-foul sewers that they were experiencing a higher than average ingress of salt water into the sewage system and levels had increased to the previously historic highs of the early 1980s.

"Salinity was such a problem that they were obliged to use expensive electrically powered aerator pumps and if quantities were too great then these were diverted directly into the dykes without treatment. Certainly, the water samples we took have been analysed independently and indicate that leachate is a problem and that sewage is evident in some of the samples. Our sample analysis were probably substantially influenced by the limestone which is prevalent in the immediate environs of the landfill as this has a naturally neutralising effect on certain acids."

So, despite their findings what they are saying is that the findings should have actually been worse, but for the nature of the soil surrounding the landfill that has a neutralising effect.

"Due to the cutting of the dykes to enable tidal flushing extensively to eliminate build-up of mosquito infestations the leachate originating from the landfill is flowing into these dykes and canals and in simple terms dilution becomes the problem."

Where do these dykes go to, Mr. Speaker? They go into the North Sound. That's where they go. They are not landlocked. They start at one end and go out to the North Sound. This is where it gets kind of tight to just sit and look at this and do nothing.

"Mrs. Kuczynski promised in March to forward to us a report prepared by American consultants called Post, Buckley, Schu and Jernigan of Winter Park, Florida. This report was a detailed environmental assessment prepared in January of 1992 which would contain analysis taken at that time from bore holes which were strategically drilled on the perimeter of the landfill site.

"Sadly, notwithstanding the fact that the Ministry of the Environment instructed department heads to provide us with the information, the American report referred to had not been cleared through Executive Council or the Legislative Assembly, and, as such, was still a classified document. And so, sadly, we have not received any information notwithstanding frequent reminders to various members of government and their departments."

Mr. Speaker, what that means is that these documents were received and put down and that was the end of it. That's what it means to me. If it wasn't cleared with Executive Council and if we members didn't have access to it, what else could it mean?

"So frustrated were we with the lack of assistance that we tracked down the American consultants in Florida and asked them if they could provide us only with a site plan and the analysis. Whilst they were very happy to do so, they must have checked either with Mrs. Kuczynski or [her assistant] and no information was forthcoming."

Are you hearing me, sir?

"They did say, however, that they thought dilution was the solution as the situation was critical in 1992 and needed substantial works to be carried out if the matter was to be contained."

So, Mr. Speaker, since 1992—that's almost seven years ago—the situation was critical!

"Whilst talking to her assistant he suggested that either a small landfill at Rum Point or on the East End of the island on a redundant limestone quarry would be the quick fix solution. From our view, this would be an environmental disaster as some of the best quality groundwater exists to the east of the island. And the limestone abstraction licence specifically dictates that rock can only be removed to a certain depth in order to preserve the quality of the groundwater."

It took me a while to understand what that was talking about, but it's talking about the quarry. The same one they said they are having problems with now because they have gone down too deep.

"Even with the use of an impermeable membrane as a liner, this would not be adequate as glass and other sharp items inevitably puncture, and leachate from within the landfill would freely permeate into the quality groundwater aquifers."

We can easily understand that. Whatever you try to contain it with, if it gets punctured it just goes out and contaminates the water. And we know it has been proven that the largest water lens is up on that side of the island.

"Amusingly, in August of 1998 an article appeared in your local newspaper reporting a statement by Mr. McLean on 15th July that government was not controlling seepage of pollutants from the George Town Landfill and that wastes of all types including liquid hazardous waste had been discharged into this landfill." I remember that!

"It was resolved that some of the challenges of the government were to facilitate the establishment of an environmentally sound waste management facility in the future. The article referred to the ground and water surface samples having been taken in 1991, 1996, 1997 and the spring of 1998. None of these analysis which presumably would be regarded as public information has been released." Not one has been released!

"In light of this reluctance to release otherwise regarded public information we wrote to various of the ministers, who were Mr. Truman Bodden, Mr. Anthony Eden, Mrs. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly, Mr. John McLean, and Mr. Thomas Jefferson. These letters were delivered by hand. Notwithstanding that, we have received no reply.

"We are aware that the Water Authority is anxious to devise a solution for the sewage sludge accumulation which will start running at about 50 tonnes per day, and this has to be disposed of if the matter is to be contained. Various technologies are being examined which would deal with the high level of salinity that exists. Needless to say, there is some difficulty in being able to locally fund any expansion due to the fact that the Authority is required to borrow locally on the market and compete for such capital at commercial rates at a maximum term of ten years."

He didn't even know what we were just talking about. But do you see the problems the Authority has? And then the government wants to take away what little money it has!

"Any municipal capital expenditure has to be looked upon with amortisation over 30 years rather than ten years. But such capital is not available locally and is placing budgetary constraints upon the Water Authority. Our composite environmental solution [I am nearly finished, sir, but I know you are interested] provided for the sorting and recovery of viable materials from the existing landfill which would lead to its reduction in size and height. Given its age certain earth-like material could be recovered and enriched with some sewage sludge to provide landscaping material particularly given the current ban on the importation of soil to limit a possible disease."

"I am happy to return to the island to hold meaningful discussions with decision-makers and have indicated to Mr. Godfrey (with whom you are free to speak) that during February or March I would be happy to return to talk through such a programme. That position remains the same. I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience . . ."

Let me make it very clear that I don't know these people. I have never met this man and I am not suggesting that what is in this letter is the answer or that government should just grab them up and say do what you want to do. But I am showing that this has transpired. I don't want to sound like I am trying to point fingers at anybody, but why is it that this information was received and no one is even prepared to allow anyone else to have a look at it?

It must say something that they don't want anyone else to hear. Isn't that a fair assumption? It has to be!

But here is the beauty to prove that I must think the way I am thinking: On the same day, 18th January, a reply was sent back from the Caymanian gentleman who sent the fax on 14th January. He got this letter that I just read. A little while later he got another letter through the fax machine. It says, "Dear Sir: We have as a courtesy replied to your letter. Prior to doing so we sought the approval of the content of our response of others in the Cayman Islands. Prior to receiving comment on its content the letter was released to you."

What he is saying is that the gentleman sent the letter on the 14th. When he got back in the office he saw the letter, he responded to the letter. He also asked for other opinions from people he had been in contact with in the Cayman Islands about his response to the letter. But before those people responded to him he sent the letter back out to the man. So that's how the man got the letter.

But, here's what he says now: "Prior to receiving comment on its content the letter was released to you, and I am now advised that there was a risk and its content could in some way be made public . . ." Which I just did, thank God for Jesus. ". . . or used with a political bias that may not necessarily assist in providing a proper government backed solution and resolution to the mounting environmental concerns."

So I have a political bias, Mr. Speaker. Okay? But from 1992 until 1999 this has been going on. And I must not read this out? Change my name and make me look different—can't happen! I am going on, sir.

"We must expressly request that the information provided to you was in the strictest confidence and private and confidential." They never said anything like that in the letter, you know. It was after they talked to somebody and said, 'Oh-oh, we made a boo-boo.' That's what happened.

"The law of copyright applies . . . [The press will know all about copyright. He faxed the man a reply and now he's talking about copyrights.] . . .and we would respectfully request that you should understand that this is strictly confidential and intended solely for yourself personally. You are requested not to copy, distribute or in any way take action in respect of its content without our prior written consent."

"We are advised that any unauthorised distribution of this document would prove to be counterproductive and would alienate political support [Hear me now—alienate political support!] and set back any prospect of crystallising a meaningful environmental solution by some huge amount. It is therefore much appreciated if you would read and then destroy this document forthwith."

"I have to extend my apologies for this change of heart, but apparently various elements outside and within the Cayman Islands have already been mischievous and have created a number of upsets which have not assisted in progressing the matter for the common good."

I don't know which various elements he is talking about, because if nobody knew anything about it I don't know what anybody could say.

Let me really try to be as fair as I possibly can. We on the backbench have sat and talked about this kind of stuff. We know that what is facing us is difficult. We also know that it could possibly be a very expensive situation. I didn't read this to say that we should be doing business with this person, or to say that we shouldn't be doing business with this person. The point in all of this is that we have to take action. Every single thing that we do, we do it when our back is up against the wall and there is nothing else we can do but act. It has to cost us more when we do it like that. When are we going to learn? This whole thing has been going on since 1992.

Let me just paint another picture. Let me show you why I totally subscribe that government should just stop what its doing, get down on its knees and beg for mercy, and start all over again. If we are on the backbench here and there is a problem like this that has been pointed out by some people, and government brings it, tables it and says, 'Gentlemen, we have a problem' and we understood the depth of the problem, do you think we are going to sit down and scheme and try to find out how we can blame them for it? No! If they come to us open, transparent, then we will naturally feel the responsibility to assist.

Mr. Roy Bodden: True!

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: But when we have to hear of these types of situations in this fashion how can we feel good about it?

At the end of the day it is we who will face the heaviest decision—all of us put together. However the money has to come to do it, we are going to have to approve it and from whence it cometh.

Listen, Mr. Speaker, I don't want to be one of them. That doesn't matter to me! But where is the regard for the country and for the people? How can we sit and make decisions like this—or not make decisions like this?

Mr. Speaker, my throat is dry, sir, if you don't mind.

The Speaker: Proceedings are suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.52 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.22 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech. The First Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

When we took the short break I had just completed reading a bit of correspondence regarding the management of solid waste in the country. I am going to move on now. But let me just make it very clear that our intention from where we sit is to get the best results. And I would expect that government would find it incumbent upon itself to be willing to reply to these issues that have been raised. They have not been brought out for any other purpose than to express our concern. I do believe that the government has a responsibility to deal with these matters. It is possible that it has more information than what we have.

We have to move forward to find solutions. I trust that government is prepared to deal with it in that fashion and the various ministers who are responsible for the issues raised by other members and me will be quite willing to deal with them. That is solely the purpose of why we are airing our views.

With the short remaining time I have left, I would like to speak on the reforms in the public service, specifically the financial management reforms, the public sector reforms and I do intend to mention the Vision 2008 exercise.

Let me state very clearly that I (and the majority of the backbench) am totally committed to these reforms because I believe that for the country to move forward and for us to be able to leave a legacy for future generations this is the route we must take. I think it is totally obvious to one and all that the way the entire country is run at present does not suffice the demand being made. Clearly, that is the case. And the public sector and financial management reforms, while each in its own right has its own various entities to deal with, it is important that we understand that the goal being sought is the same. It's just that you have to do different things in the different areas specific to the nature of that circumstance in order to achieve the goal.

In the financial management reform the underlying philosophy is to make the civil service more result oriented by distinguishing the roles and responsibilities of the executive, which is setting up output based performance expectations, from those of the administration which is the delivery of the performance expectations. That is not a completely different line from the way it works now, it's just that I believe we are now poised to fine tune these situations to get better results.

It has been accepted by those who have direct dealings with this that we have to adopt output based budgeting rather than the way we are going now, which is input based. And we have to go to the accrual accounting system rather than the cash accounting system that we have now. We also understand clearly that we have to establish processes for effective accountability. And we have to do this by requiring performance expectations to be clearly stated. We also have to be able to delegate the managerial powers necessary to achieve the required performance. We also have to have effective incentives and sanctions to encourage the achievement of the performance required. One also very important aspect that has to be achieved is the reporting of information whether or not the required performance was actually achieved.

Let me say here and now that the civil service is going to be the vehicle to put the way government runs on sound footing. The political arm of government will have its role to play. But I don't want to concentrate on that too much right now because while at the end of the day a lot of everything is going to hinge on the political will, the truth of the matter is that the vehicle and the machinery, which is the service, is what is going to make it happen, or not happen.

I know that there have been some recent workshops, and I believe they have been going well. I want to say that the way the whole situation is envisaged it is important that the civil service understands that this is something that it need not have any fear of whatsoever. I know that individuals are averse to change especially if the change is something completely different from what they are used to. But I hope that the message gets across properly to the people in the service that this is a golden opportunity to mould the future of this country and to pass on a great legacy to future generations.

If we don't take the time out to set it right, obviously we will be doing a lot of what has been done in the past, which is leave it alone, it's someone else's problem, let them have the worry. And the longer we wait, the more difficult it is going to be to effect these changes.

What it is going to take out of the civil service is a whole reshaping of thinking, not only systems, but reshaping of thinking. Where some of them might have great fear about not being able to fit in and not being able to perform the duties required because of the changes being effected, I want to say clearly that one of the biggest reasons that I give my full commitment and support to these reforms is the fact that we are doing it before we have to be insensitive about it.

I remember when the Financial Secretary and I were in New Zealand attending a seminar, just over a year ago. One of the things we saw when looking into other systems and reforms taking place in other countries was that, very glaring, a lot of countries had waited until they were in major problems. And in order to turn things around they had to be totally insensitive to people and in many occasions jobs were lost and all of that.

But what I want to make very clear is that one of the very positive reasons for dealing with it at this point in time is because we now have the latitude to look at role clarity in job descriptions so that people know exactly what they are responsible for and we will also have the opportunity, when persons identified to perform these tasks are not equipped to perform the tasks, before there are any arguments whatsoever, they will have the opportunity to be trained and given the tools to perform the task.

As we stand right now I am sure that there are people in the service who are not content with the jobs, not sure of themselves, of what they have to do or how to do it. This is a golden opportunity to fix all of that. So, I look forward to the service claiming rightful ownership of this exercise. I look forward to them being able to mould themselves to achieve the goals being set. And certainly it is obvious that the authorities have the will to make sure that each and every person who is part and parcel of this exercise within the service is able to be equipped.

This certainly must enhance their ability to perform, and it is going to go further than that. You will be able to look at role clarity, but you will also be looking at someone being paid for the value of the task that they do. So job performance is going to be very important.

I also believe that there are many civil servants that believe that they are not being paid commensurate to what they are doing. This will strike all of these balances properly. It won't be achieved overnight. But certainly it is the best opportunity this country has ever had to move forward and get its systems right; to get the people who work the systems equipped to do the things the right way, and to feel like they should feel—like a proud productive part of a positive movement which is taking the country forward providing what we should be for future generations.

We have to be looking at what our resources will be down the line. We have to put systems in place that will manage those resources properly and get the best value for money that will get us the best results possible. While that may not have been the order of the day, I believe that the country will be better off. The people will be better off and all of the civil servants will be better off once we are able to move into this system and as we move along get into our new way of thinking and doing things, and we will achieve much more.

I have a little synopsis. When we look at these reforms, which include the financial management reforms, the public sector reforms and the Vision 2008 exercise which all go hand-in hand, I think it is fair comment to say that we have to make sure that we know before we move forward in full swing exactly how we are going to integrate all of these to make sure they work parallel to each other and that one does not outpace the other, and that the efforts are synchronised. It is going to be a continuous exercise because we will never have it perfect. But we have to set certain parameters and we have to achieve certain goals before our systems will be in full swing. I appreciate that it might well take, if we get everyone on board claiming ownership and wanting to see it work, less than three years.

A lot of people with the conviction that this is the right way to go have put a lot of hard work into this. And these convictions are not based on because it looks good, but on experiences and knowledge which have shown that what is being done now and the way it is being done can be vastly improved upon. That is the whole purpose of the exercise.

When we look at effective government management, as I mentioned earlier we have to have role clarity. That means we have to define the roles properly. And we also have to define performance clearly. We have to establish who is responsible for what because if you notice even when we have Question Time down here, or debates, there is always a problem. We are not quite sure who is responsible for what. This will take care of all of that.

So we won't have to wonder who has to do what or who doesn't have to do it, and something doesn't get done. Also, heads of departments, "managers" as we would call them, lots of times are not sure where authority lies. Lots of times there are questions. And when we look at the entire chain of command, from the bottom up or from the top down, either way we always have problems with where the buck stops. This will deal with all of that so that everyone knows for sure what his or her responsibility is and what is expected of him or her. I think that is very important.

We on the backbench have been touting accountability and transparency for quite some time now. If we get all of these systems in place . . . I shouldn't say "if" because I no longer think "if." I am going to say "when." I have no doubts any more because I believe that even the non-believers will come on board quite quickly when they see the light. In fact, I think I see it on a daily basis now.

When we get all these things in place we will find where we legislators are asking tons and tons of questions and things are being left unanswered and we wonder how this was spent, how that was done . . . transparency will be automatic because the system will be such that when you have financial reporting it will be crystal clear exactly what happened. That is how it must be.

The role of the backbench is to keep government on its toes, so to speak. The elected government sets the policy. That is what our time should be spent on. Policy is what we should be dealing with. Now we get into a lot of stuff that is basically administrative because the system is muddled. But when we have all of our changes in place everything will be clear. And lots of things go along with that.

We talk about transparency, which I think will become obvious, and all of those doubts and fears and question marks will fall away once we achieve transparency. We won't be wondering which government minister made a decision because it was in favour of his friend and that kind of thing. All of that will fall away. Whoever is on the government side of the bench won't have to worry about what other people think. And those who think of it won't have to worry that they have to think it. All of that is what we need not waste our time in here thinking about.

A private member's motion was passed in here not so long ago about freedom of information. That is an integral part of this whole reform. Every person in the country must feel that they have a right to know the country's business. With few exceptions the country's business is the people's business and the people have a right to know. As it stands now there are a lot of questions in that area. And under the system we have grown into it becomes natural on many occasions for people to believe that they not only have the right to withhold information, but that it is what they should be doing. All of these things will fall away.

We talk about freedom of information. There was also a private member's motion brought about an ombudsman. That motion wasn't passed, but that too will be proven to be a necessary and integral part of these reforms. But that can come. Rather than get into big fights we will move forward. We are going to play our role to make sure that we do what we have to do with it to the best of our ability and those things will fall in line.

We talk about the Medium Term Financial Strategy and the Public Sector Investment Programme and wonder how the entire reforms will be integrated so that we can see the end results. I would just like to quote (and this is the last one) from a paper prepared by the permanent secretary in the Ministry of Education (and I have been granted permission) who is very involved with the Vision 2008 exercise.

I remember having questions because that exercise was under the Minister of Education. We have known from time to time that when he is ready to put his foot down and put a stop to something he's good at that. We have seen him in action with that when he believes that is what he should do. But this is one time that I have to admit that I have seen no trace of that thus far. And it is not even grudgingly that I have to congratulate him for the exercise, because while not being directly involved at any great length with the exercise itself, I have been involved with the integration with the other areas of reform and how we are trying to make it work. So far, I have to admit that I haven't seen any trace (and I know the traces) of the impediment I know could exist.

As I was saying, I just want to quickly quote regarding the Public Sector Investment Programme and the Medium Term Financial Strategy. This is under the sub-heading "Relationship between Vision 2008 and Government's Financial Policy and its Reforms."

"The Public Sector Investment Programme is essentially a three year projection of government's capital projects. [That is the way it is now, but that can be subject to change depending on what we find that might be more suitable.] Projects are submitted from departments in a prioritised list complete with capital costs on an annual basis as well as recurrent expenditure that will result. This list of projects is compiled into a sectoral breakdown which is further prioritised by ExCo."

So when you hear a sectoral breakdown you are talking about plans from the various sectors. And what I am getting to here is what we have been preaching all along and this is why I am not so unhappy today because I see some hope. We have been preaching all along about forward planning, about prioritisation and we have met upon many stumbling blocks. I am not going to get personal with it any more. We want to look forward to the future, really.

I say that with all sincerity because I get tired of saying the same thing over and over, hoping that I will see things work one day. And I am not saying that because I believe everything I say is right. But I do know that in this instance with the preaching about the Public Sector Investment Programme and Medium Term Financial Strategy we were right and we will be proven right.

"The compilation of prioritised government projects shows the financial objectives that government has to meet in terms of the levels of expenditure needed to fulfill its sectoral objectives. At present, government's sectoral objectives are only partially identifiable in the D-Plans and the very few strategic plans that exist. True sectoral objectives state not only the long-term goals but the justification of these goals and the steps needed to ensure their success. Vision 2008 provides partial sectoral objectives through its statements on specific objectives although they are incomplete as they do not take into account the present objectives government is pursuing they can be combined with these objectives as stated in departments' D-Plans."

That is where we need to be talking about the integration. We have this document that will be given as a completed document for the exercise that has been completed with Vision 2008 which many, many people have participated in. It really is a document that says what the people of this country want the country to be like in the foreseeable future. I think it deals with ten years. What has to happen is that the sectoral plans that government has when government is looking at its priorities and what it has to do for the country, you have the opportunity to hear what the people want for the country and you combine them. So when you have your plans then you deal with the Public Sector Investment Programme and the Medium Term Financial Strategy.

“The Medium Term Financial Strategy in its present form encompasses both the sectoral plans of government and the PSIP as well as the financial strategy necessary for government to achieve its stated objectives. It is concerned not only with the trends that are likely to occur in the economy but the financial policies that government should adopt to make efficient use of its resources.” That’s what the reforms are all about, Mr. Speaker.

The Medium Term Financial Strategy cannot be created without a Public Sector Investment Programme, that is to show what is being financed and the sectoral plans as to why it is being financed. Sometimes I am not able to say everything that is easily understood, but I am a bit excited about this because this has been a long time coming.

I have to say before I close that I have the greatest of appreciation for the Financial Secretary and his team who have been dealing with this, moulding this situation, who have spent endless hours. They are the experts. I am not. They have spent hours and hours on putting this thing together based on their experiences in the civil service and based on the vision they have for this country.

I do believe that we have the golden opportunity to make this thing work. I will come down here any morning or afternoon or night if necessary to get into a good scrap with the minister for education if I think it necessary. But, this much I promise when it comes to these reforms and doing what we have to do to make it work. They won’t have any arguments from me. In fact, if they even give me a baton to run the field with, as big as I am and slow as I am, I will get to the end. That’s a promise! That’s the type of commitment I have. I don’t speak only for myself, sir. I think it is safe comment to say that I speak for the vast majority of the backbench, if not all. It is something very needed in this country.

In summary, I have spoken for just about the time allotted me. I have raised some heated issues. I have talked about some positive things. I just wish to say to one and all that my intentions are pure. Even if how I say what I say goes against the grain of some individuals, it is meant to bring about results. That is my job in this honourable Legislative Assembly. Regardless of our political differences, I believe there are some things we all need to be on all fours about, and I think I can give the commitment from the backbench that we are prepared to deal with what is right in the best way that we can.

We are prepared to move forward for the country and that is not only for the sake of the country, but that includes for our sake as well, and for the sake of our children. I think that in times to come we might begin to deal with the important issues of the country in a little bit different fashion. Perhaps this has been one of the times that will set the pace.

But what I do expect is for government to respond to some of these issues raised. They don’t have to agree with everything I said, perhaps they will bring up things we didn’t know about, but we want them out in the open so that we can get clear cut decisions and move forward to bring about some good results.

I trust that you, sir, have not had to bear too much pain in listening, and I think it is time someone else had an opportunity.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 1.00 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.58 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech. Does any other member wish to speak? The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Thank you.

I would like to congratulate His Excellency on a very important Throne Speech, and to thank him for his governance and guidance over the past three and one half years. Those three and one half years have seen the Cayman Islands move forward in very important areas. The progress has been steady and I believe that a large amount has to be credited to His Excellency who, with not only his background in the diplomatic core but also his experience in private sector business, has brought good and new approaches to very difficult problems.

This has been a very positive approach for the Cayman Islands and we are all much better off as a result of his wisdom, guidance, and governance over the past three years.

I would like to turn to education and deal with some areas of it. An important part of education development has been the implementation of the strategic plan that was approved by this honourable House in 1995. That plan is one which is comprehensive, one that has been put together by persons both in the teaching profession, the education system, and parents and students of the Cayman Islands. It is one that has stood the test of time.

The third annual update will take place in April of this year and as usual, modifications will be made to the plan to ensure that it meets the educational needs and challenges of the Cayman Islands into the new millennium.

The plan is one that is comprehensive and sound, and most important, it has the ownership and support of the teachers of the staff within the education system and also of parents and students. Probably for the first time we had very young teenagers who participated in that plan.

The national curriculum which came from this plan continues to be developed through the leadership of staff in the Education Department’s curriculum division, the input received from teachers and staff. Work is being done in language arts, mathematics, science and social studies, and these are well advanced. In addition to that, the curriculum teams are proceeding with the design of a national curriculum in art, music and physical education.

Along with this work is continuing in developing the assessment tools that will measure students' success in mastering the required learning outcomes. This is very important so that the advancement of each student can be looked at in depth. At the secondary stage work is commencing on the curriculum revision to strengthen vocational opportunities for students as well as beginning an examination of graduation requirements. This will also be looked at by the Education Council.

We will also have three Caymanian teachers beginning study leave this September in advanced studies in the field of teaching. Returning from a year of overseas study will be three teachers who will be coming into the classrooms in September this year. The Education Department will be providing assistance to those schools who have recently undergone the school's inspection programme. That assistance will take the form of training increased materials, and monitoring of the actions in those schools through the action plans they have developed. It is important to remember that there was a self-assessment prior to the inspection of each of the schools.

The enrolment in private and government schools has put strains on the schools system and several new areas of increased school facilities are being looked at. In the five primary schools in Grand Cayman we have now completed the air-conditioning, and the remaining two as well as the Brac primary schools will be completed in the near future which means that all of the primary schools will be air-conditioned.

The high schools are partly air-conditioned and work will begin to complete the air-conditioning of those two or three schools. At the Red Bay Primary, the playfield has been completed and the administration building is well underway and should be completed within the next two months. We are also hoping that work will commence shortly on the multipurpose hall for Red Bay as well as the hall at the John A. Cumber Primary. Both are badly needed and will benefit those schools. A new primary school to the extent of about ten rooms will be started in the Prospect/Spotts area and this will ease the overcrowding that now exists in the primary schools from George Town to Bodden Town.

The funds for the Lighthouse School were approved a few weeks ago when the budget was approved and, thank God, that project will begin later on this year. I set out the time limit in a question earlier, and I don't plan to go into it again in depth, only to say as I said then that the two pods that will be completed will be sufficient to carry on together with the parts that will be in the main building and at the end the remaining pod will have the balance of the specialised equipment and teaching. The occupation date is set for September of the year 2000 with the year 2001 for the completion. In that will also be the home-based programme which caters to about 80 or 90 children at present. In fact, some of those will be coming into the mainstream of the Lighthouse School. I would just like to mention the reason for placing this by the Red Bay School is to ensure that the children can be integrated and can go into the general streams, even if for short periods, at the Red Bay School.

Work is scheduled to begin on the kitchen facility at the George Hicks High School and we hope to begin the design of the new library at that school.

Communication is critical to life generally, but it is critical and important to teachers and parents and I am happy to say that the Education Department has assisted in the creation of the National Parent Teacher Home School Association. This has improved communication between parents, schools, the Education Department and the Ministry. And it is very important that parents attend their school PTAs or Home School Associations as well as the national association, and that they turn out for reporting sessions. That communication between parent and teacher in relation to the student is critical to ensuring that the student reached his/her fullest potential.

We have recently seen the Internet brought into nearly all of the government schools. We thank Cable & Wireless and the computer companies who participated in this. It is carefully controlled, but it provides a very good additional resource for educational research as well.

The thrust of the department and the ministry will be to ensure that the increasing numbers of children coming into the schools will be properly and fully catered for. It is a fact that the government schools continue to provide first class facilities for education, both in staff and equipment. We understand there is not only the need for an educated population, but as the world gets smaller in terms of communication there is a need for the youth of today to fit into the overall global marketplace that basically engulfs the world as well as small islands like ours. The aim has to be to develop students' skills and abilities to the highest potential to ensure their proper placement in the workforce and their potential to the maximum within our society.

The schools' inspectorate is beginning its third year of operation and it will continue its inspection of private and government schools ensuring that the findings are available to parents. This year the John Gray High School, the St. Ignatius High School and Triple C will be inspected. In addition to those, five schools have already been inspected and will be revisited to assess and report on the progress made.

The training of seven occasional inspectors will be completed this year and this will increase the level of trained people within the islands to do these inspections and reduce the need to bring in inspectors from abroad. There was worry when the inspectorate was set up that its role would be more akin to a criticism of the system and no constructive solutions or assistance. The inspectorate headed by our very competent senior inspector, Mr. Greene, along with his staff, has been able to dispel those fears. In fact, schools are now accepting the inspectors quite freely.

The Handbook of School Inspection will be revised and reissued to schools and the findings from school inspections will be shared with senior staff at senior management conferences. The inspectorate will continue to give top priority to ensure that its work continues to contribute towards improved educational standards. There is where it differs from what is known as an inspection in the commercial field where (at least those of us who have worked in banks) for example we feared having inspectors come in in the old days knowing that their role was a critical role and other areas of the institution were left to deal with solutions to the problems found. But here the inspectorate is constructive. It will criticise, but it will provide the solution, or assist with finding the solution to the problems the school has. In fact, the self-assessment for the inspectorate by the schools provides the necessary solution to the problems.

This year we hope to amalgamate the scholarship office and the guaranteed student loan scheme office to improve the service to both programmes and to provide and strengthen the careers advisory service. A lot of groundwork has been done on the national training initiative. And this has been done in collaboration with the department of labour utilising the services of a consultant that has been funded by the Commonwealth Secretariat. This drive to strengthen both the vocational education and training will continue this year. It is very important that when this initiative is fully adopted that it has the ownership of the persons who will be using and taking advantage of these services.

The Community College continues to progress. We have seen the continuation of their goal to become a comprehensive teaching institution with equal emphasis on technical, vocational and professional academic and continuing education to the people of these islands. The Associate Degree programme of the Community College has received international recognition and the first group of graduates has gained acceptance to more than 30 colleges and universities throughout the United States and the United Kingdom. In fact, many of these colleges and universities in the US are in the competitive, some highly competitive, rating of that system.

This year the registration at the college was greater than in past years. This is a very good sign. The certificate programme at the Community College has almost doubled. The Associate Degree registration has increased by 40% and the registration in the professional and continuing education programmes and courses has increased. As a result of these developments, the College expects that the graduates in 1999 will be considerable more than in previous years.

This year we are hoping that the third phase of construction at the College will begin and this will include the addition on the campus of a multipurpose hall as well as the Cayman Islands Law School, which is totally separate. It will be started on the campus but will remain under the honourable Attorney General and will remain separate from the college, as it now is.

The Community College intends to introduce a teacher education programme in September of this year. This was called for by members of this House and an area that government must, quite rightly, give priority to. I gave that undertaking during the budget or in a question to give priority to this area. If we can qualify our own teachers locally then I believe we will see many more teachers, as we have seen the increase of local lawyers through the Law School. I would like to dispel one worry that did arise. What was said in the Throne Speech in relation to a four year degree programme in business and accounting and put it in a time frame of possibly four to five years that this is being looked at. I would like to clearly state that the Ministry of Education supports the International College of the Cayman Islands (ICCI), we encourage ICCI to continue to achieve the great heights it has over the years. It is a very important part of the educational institutional development of the Cayman Islands and we will continue to support it not only with grants and other assistance but will also ensure that local scholarships we are now gearing up for will be equally applied to ICCI, the Law School and the Community College.

The Education Council continues to meet regularly. One of its main functions is to deal with scholarships and look at the progress of students on scholarships. The awards have now been extended not only to recognised institutions abroad but also to the three local institutions, ICCI, Community College and will be extended to the Law School, because it's in the early stages.

The Agricultural and Development Board will continue to act as the administering agent for the student loans under the guaranteed student loan scheme. This is very important because jointly between the scholarship and the loan scheme we cater to the local students who will be furthering their education and taking their place in society as time goes on. We have increased the counselling facilities for students and this arrangement which now combines the council with the scholarships and the loan scheme will continue to be developed and a series of seminars for prospective students going abroad and in the colleges and school here will be arranged.

The education system and the ministry and I think the people of these islands owe a big thanks to the many people who have assisted with the development of education over the years. Despite criticism that has been levelled at us at the school system from time to time, we have seen the results of the high schools continue to top the Caribbean in the Caribbean Council's exams. I will not go into a lot of detail on this because I answered this in depth in a question before, but for several successive years the high school in Cayman Brac and the high school in Grand Cayman have topped the Caribbean in the CXE. This is not only in academic subjects, but also in vocational and technical subjects.

The variety of subjects offered at the college is extensive. We have also seen students placed at the top in the Commonwealth Essay, something that is a first for the Cayman Islands and was joined along with Bermuda in the Caribbean. We have seen many of our students come back from abroad and take their rightful place in society as good contributing citizens. The only thing that I would ask members of this honourable House, especially the opposition, to think about, . . . many times the press will highlight one or two students who may have a problem and that is sometimes taken to reflect what all students are and to sometimes smear the vast majority of good students. In schools where you have over 800 students, some will have problems. But we should not let those few who have those problems detract from the many good students that are there.

One of the things I have tried time and again is to get the press to come to a march pass of our schools when they are having their sports. I even say to the television, if you take and put 300, 400 children on the screen, look at the amount of local viewers it will increase because parents will want to see their children. Even that economic inducement hasn't been sufficient. So I call upon the press to try to give good coverage of our students; say some of the good things. I know the press makes its money on news, and sometimes good news (as the saying goes) is no news, but I am really asking for the fair share for future generations of this country to ensure that the 99.9% good that we do get from our young people is reported on by the Caymanian Compass, the television and radio. And also that members here would bear in mind that for every one child who has a problem there is probably 100 who are good children who never get the benefit of good publicity needed.

Lastly on education, I would like to thank the members of the Education Council, the members of the Cayman Brac Council and the chairmen for the dedicated work that they put in and their contribution to education in these islands. I would also like to thank our chief education officer and his staff at the department, and especially the principals, teachers and support staff in our schools who really are the people up front who are in daily contact with the children and their parents and who make a contribution that many times, like the good work of the students, goes unheralded. However, I know that their reward is in seeing students who ultimately take their rightful place in society and contribute to the country.

I would like to turn to the Planning—

The Speaker: Since you are going on to another subject, we will suspend for the afternoon break. Proceedings are suspended for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.43 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.10 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, continuing.

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: Thank you.

Turning to statutory authorities, a statutory authority such as the Water Authority, the Port Authority and the Civil Aviation Authority are statutory corporations owned by the government of the Cayman Islands. Initially what government did was to transfer government assets to them, many times in the form of property. But it also transferred the right to collect revenue that otherwise would come to the government of the Cayman Islands. So, in effect, what government did with the statutory authorities was to set up a different legal entity and gave them the operation of a specific part of government, which prior to that would have been a department. So these authorities are not private corporations. They are government-owned corporations that are collecting revenue from the different heads and are at the end of the day subject to the different laws that created them.

Occasionally the confusion comes in that a statutory authority, while a separate legal entity from government is really now owned by government either. The law that sets up the corporation has specific sections in it. For example, in the Port Authority, if we look at section 4 which creates the Port Authority, it sets out what the Authority should do with its money and then in section 4(8) there is this clause: "Any balance of account in favour of the Authority up to the amount of $100,000 may be carried forward to the account of the following year and any balance in excess of that sum shall be paid into the general revenue of the Cayman Islands." So there's a statutory duty, not a question of whether or not the authority wishes to pay, there is a duty by law that the authority should pay all revenue that it has beyond $100,000 (as in the case of the Port Authority) to the Cayman Islands Government.

The Civil Aviation Authority, which is also a statutory corporation, at section 7 sets out in fairly similar form what needs to be paid, operations, repayment of loans, that sort of thing, and in 7(4) it states, "Any balance of account in favour of the Authority up to the amount of $100,000 may be carried forward to the account of the following year and any balance in excess of that sum shall be paid into the general revenue of the Cayman Islands." So that is very clear.

It is the same with the Water Authority. In section 11(3) it says, "Any balance of account in favour of the Authority after provision all expenditure provided by subsection (2) up to the an annual amount to be prescribed in regulations may be transferred forward general reserve fund. Any balance in excess of that sum shall be paid into the general revenue of the Cayman Islands." So as corporations owned by government, they should be paying all money into the general revenue beyond what they are entitled to spend.

What was read on the Water Authority, paragraph 5 page 33, which said, "The Government of the Cayman Islands ordered the Authority to pay to the government a contribution of $1.25 million. At that time the Authority did not have sufficient funds in its current account to cover this payment." That is true. They didn't have it in their current account. But unfortunately, and what I guess the auditor failed to pick up, is that statement should have been elaborated upon because it had at that time on fixed deposit $2,811,109 and cash at the bank (in current account or savings) another $380,000, making a total of $3.193 million. So in reality I guess there was sufficient cash in the accounts to pay it.

In all fairness the statement made the First Elected Member for George Town, . . . on reading this statement it gave the impression that he mentioned. I am also reminded that the balance of cash left, the $3.193 million was after paying the $1.25 million to government. So the impression given by reading this was that there was no further cash. But it is carefully couched. It is said in its "current accounts." Obviously, you don't keep cash in your current account because you don't get interest on your current account normally. There was obviously a lot of cash there. But, like every company, it is important that the statutory authorities abide by the law and that they understand that they have been created by the government; the government has given them the assets and the ability to earn money. At the end of the day, as the law very clearly sets out, they must account to government for it. I believe that other members, if they go into this, will perhaps look at that and see where the statement made in the accounts is really not totally correct.

From there I would just like to touch on another head which was mentioned, the environment. A lot was said in relation to the problem of having the solid waste, the dump area, in George Town. I know that solutions to that are not simple. But I think the time has come when we should look at improving the recycling and the processing of the solid waste in George Town. Perhaps we could have another area in some of the eastern districts where waste from that area could go.

In Finance Committee it was said that that may not be very economical, but it would seem to me, looking at it as a layman, that it would do two things. It would cut down the wear and tear of the heavy equipment on the roads, and it would also be a lot more convenient and a lot more trips could be made in the districts, better service could be given. But I do agree that it is becoming a problem in George Town and we have to find some solution to dealing with it there.

The environment generally has been talked about and in the upcoming draft development amendments to the plan that will be going out sometime within the next month or so, we will see further proposed (and I use the word proposed) areas which will assist with preserving the environment. We all have to do everything we can to preserve it for the future of our children. I hope that we will also see the introduction of the zoning for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, and that will go through the process that is required by law.

Turning now to the Planning Department: In 1998 over 1200 applications were processed. There was also a considerable increase in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, but especially Cayman Brac. I believe that one of the great successes in the Planning Department under the auspices of His Excellency the Governor's reinvention initiative was the substantial reduction in time for houses and certificates of occupancy to be issued. We saw where this went from over 90 days to about 40 days, of which 30 were involved in the process of notifying owners and waiting out the three-week period. But we saw one of the first very extensive delegations of authority from the Central Planning Authority to the Director of Planning, and in some instances the Director of Planning and the Chairman of the Central Planning Authority, on matters that were controversial or that were complex. So we saw a turn around from the 40-day period in many instances, once the notices of objection had been given, to a few days. I must say that I have had very good feedback on this.

They continue under the Governor's reinvention initiative in several other areas to move on. I guess one of the things we have tried to get the department to appreciate is what in the private sector is called the reward in customer satisfaction because many times government departments are really monopolies in that it is the only place one can get, say, a plan passed. Sometimes that competitive edge does allow the reduction in the service. The reinvention exercise is being used to examine other ways of improving not only the processing of applications but also in areas where we can provide greater customer service to the public.

The department is in the stage of drafting three development plans, the amendment to Grand Cayman and those zoning ones for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Very shortly I hope to be able to appoint the development plan tribunals which I hope, if she agrees, will be headed by a prominent local attorney and a panel that will hear and make decisions on the representations and objections that will be made to these plans over the two month period required by law.

The development plan process for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will give residents the opportunity to help shape the future of their islands and will also provide an overall framework for development in those two islands. I know that the department is very excited at bringing these plans forward because as you know it had been 20 years before that no plan had been amended or introduced. But we expect that it is not an easy task.

The Planning Department is going to continue its apprenticeship programme, which was introduced last year and offers a young Caymanian the opportunity to come to the department and receive very valuable work experience in this area. It is the goal of the department and especially the director and his staff to continue to provide the public with fast, efficient, courteous service throughout 1999. And in the early days complaints actually came directly to the ministry and these were monitored closely. We found areas with a lot of problems. Thank God we have reached the stage where systems are in place that are showing these problems at an early stage. Lastly on this, I get normally on a monthly basis a breakdown showing the time an application has been in. It goes through a series of columns (about 12 to 15 columns) showing every aspect of an application until it is completely processed and the fees are paid. This has been one of the best instruments for monitoring and ensuring that that department remains efficient because the department knows that at any one time the director of planning or the chairman or the central planning authority or the ministry can pick up that return and see when an application was made and follow its history all the way through the different departments and stages until it is finalised.

In ending my contribution in this area I would like to thank the chairman and members of the Central Planning Authority and the chairman and members of the Development Control Board for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Also the chairman, and especially the past chairman of the Appeals Tribunal, Mr. W. S. Walker, who has retired, not resigned, and gone on to greater things. He chairs the OECD initiative for the government and the honourable Financial Secretary.

I would also like to thank the director of planning and his staff, and to also say that I will be revitalising the building code committee because the code itself was something that for about 12 or 15 years nobody managed to get in. This committee, which is a large but very efficient committee because the input is so wide and diverse, will be re-appointed and it will begin to look at the workings of the code in relation to the Development Plan, the Law and the Regulations.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4.30. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Monday at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Monday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.34 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 8 MARCH 1999.

MONDAY
8 MARCH 1999
10.17 AM

[Prayers read by the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Administration of Oath of Allegiance to Mr. A Joel Walton, JP, to be temporarily the Acting Third Official Member.

Mr. Walton, please come forward to the Clerk's table. Will all honourable members please stand?

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS
OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

By Mr. A Joel Walton, JP

Hon. Joel Walton: I, A. Joel Walton, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law, so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Walton, we welcome you to the House during your term of service. Please take your seat as temporary Acting Third Official Member.

Please be seated. Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements. First I will read a message from Her Majesty the Queen on Commonwealth Day.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

A MESSAGE FOR COMMONWEALTH DAY 1999

The Speaker: A Message for Commonwealth Day 1999, Head of the Commonwealth.

"Music is the theme for the Commonwealth Day this year. Throughout our fifty-four countries people will be celebrating and making music in as many ways as that, or more. Of course, people of different generations and cultures tap their feet to quite different beats. But for all of us young and old music is an essential part of our life for parties and entertainment, for ceremonies and celebrations for music knows no difference of language, no national boundaries and because it has become such an important part of our cultural lives it is a universal means of communicating with each other. A variety of music illustrates our diversity, its common tunes and harmonies bring us together just like the Commonwealth.

"In 1999 we celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the modern Commonwealth. Fifty years ago in 1949

India became the first republic with its own head of state to be a member of the Commonwealth. That paved the way for members from many other countries, especially from Asia and Africa all sharing links of history, a belief in democracy and a will to work together. Today the Commonwealth includes over a quarter of the world's population spanning differences in race, creed and language, but sharing the same aspirations towards a better future.

"This November, the leaders of the Commonwealth states will gather in South Africa for the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. I look forward to joining them there as they discuss the challenges of the new millennium as well as celebrating the Commonwealth achievements in its life so far.

"Let us, then, in this anniversary year look both backwards as well as forward as we mark Commonwealth day. While we continue to enjoy our favourite music, either by making it or listening to it, let us also celebrate the vigour and creativity that the next generation will bring to their music-making. That is just one of the bonds that all of the young people of the Commonwealth will share together on this special day. [signed] Elizabeth R II, 8 March, 1999"

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies for absence from the Third Official Member who is overseas on official business, and the Third Elected Member for George Town who is overseas on a parliamentary seminar.

Item 4 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR
ON FRIDAY, 19 FEBRUARY, 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Truman M. Boddien: Thank you.

The Aviation part of my ministry has been active. The Civil Aviation Authority saw a 1.4% increase in revenue for 1998, as compared to 1997; and an 8.2% increase in expenses before contributing $1.5 million to government which resulted in a net income of $2,327,000. The total passenger movement increased by 3.1% to 976,000, while the total aircraft movement increased by 5.2% to 21,900 as compared to 1997.

The Civil Aviation Authority is pleased with the significant achievements accomplished in 1998 which included the addition of turning areas to the runway at the Owen Roberts International Airport, the installation of omni directional approach lighting at the Owen Roberts Airport, and the west end of the runway was also an important addition. There were refresher training courses for all traffic control officers overseas at the Technology Advanced Pan Am Flight Academy in Miami, Florida. This training is important to ensure that the traffic control officers are up to date on all new technology.

The Civil Aviation's primary focus for this year will be to continue working on and to complete projects initiated in 1998 including the development of the Airport Master Plan for the Owen Roberts Airport and the Gerrard Smith Airport. In addition, the Civil Aviation Authority is continuing its work on navigational aids and other relevant airport equipment in order to be compliant with the year 2000.

Other projects earmarked for this year include conducting the necessary works to resurface and rehabilitate the Gerrard Smith International Airport at Cayman Brac and to proceed with the development of the airport in Little Cayman. These two projects are important. The resurfacing of the Brac airport was done nearly 15 years ago with a life expectancy of five to seven years. It is now well overdue.

I am happy to say that the research has been done. The core borings have been carried out and the technical work as far as research has been completed and they are now in the design stage where there would be a move forward to resurface the Brac and the new Little Cayman Airport. I will be coming to this honourable House in Finance Committee for guarantees to the Civil Aviation Authority for them.

Safety is the most important thing. It is uppermost in the mind of the Civil Aviation Authority. Top priority is always given, with cost always secondary. That also is the position with Cayman Airways. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Civil Aviation Authority and the Air Traffic Licensing Authority for all of their hard and dedicated work. While these authorities do not meet that often, the work is extremely important and sometimes fairly intense.

I would also like to thank the director of the Civil Aviation Authority and his staff for the hard work and a job well done. The Aviation aspect of my ministry is one that works very smoothly and while it is highly technical has been substantially trouble free throughout the time.

Mr. Speaker, it was very heartening yesterday to have seen the students from several schools, both government and private, who participated in the Commonwealth Day Service at the Anglican Church, and also to have heard the message that you read today and to have listened to a sermon by Rev. Bailie. This reminds us that we are just a small part of a very large world and a very large Commonwealth of Nations with over 52 countries and a quarter of the world's population. I would like to thank the children, with their musical instruments and their other items . . . I guess the only sad part, because we stand in here and spend a lot of time, was that very few took the time out to go to that service.

It was really worth it, Mr. Speaker. We saw the youth of this country. And we saw the Commonwealth through their eyes. I think the theme of music, which Her Majesty chose, was very appropriate. And there were a lot of musical items, both vocal and instrumental.

The position with the Civil Aviation Authority, and I mentioned the contribution of the $1.5 million, is one which is the same as it is with the Water Authority and the Port Authority. They are statutory corporations owned by government. They have been given specific areas of revenue that government would normally have coming to it, and the law on the Civil Aviation Authority is very clear in that they have a duty to pay all funds beyond what is set out in the law to the general revenue. While I have chaired this, I have tried to get through to members of the Authority that we are not a private enterprise, as such, and that the law very clearly (as I read the different sections of it on Friday) requires the payment of the balance of revenues, in some instance beyond $100,000, be paid to the general revenue of the government of the Cayman Islands, and this is a duty under the law. The same as it is of a company to pay dividends to its shareholders.

While the statutory corporation is a separate legal entity, as is a company, there is that duty to pay its surplus into government. Indeed, the Civil Aviation Authority did make a payment of $1.5 million to the government.

I will now deal with the position with Cayman Airways in some detail. The position is and continues to be stable. That is what has been predominant at least in the last four years of Cayman Airways' history. I am not going to spend much time on the past. It was referred to (mainly by the First Elected Member for George Town), so I will touch on that briefly. I think Cayman Airways has to look to the future.

There is an accepted fact that back in 1992 (when Cayman Airways was handed over to this government) it was experiencing extremely serious losses. The 12 months to 30th June 1991 saw losses of $15,560,000. That was basically the highest in Cayman Airways' history. Those losses have consistently moved down with a slight upswing in 1997 and 1996. But the overall position has remained stable.

The reference to the accumulated deficit that Cayman Airways had on 30th June 1990 was only $13,520,000. It rose to $40,951,000 by December 1993 during the year that the injection of $20 million went in. At that stage the net shareholder deficiency—and this is what is important because the accumulated deficit from that must be subtracted—the bottom line is a net shareholder deficiency. That moved from $18.9 million net shareholder deficiency in 1992 after the injection of the $16 million, it has moved down to where at present the end of 1997, the difference between the accumulated deficit and the share capital and obviously the assets, is $5,968,000. So the difference between what Cayman Airways' accumulated surplus is and its share capital after taking in the assets and the liabilities is $5,968,000. It's a net deficit of $5,968,000.

So the position has improved considerably. At the time, back in 1992, the contingent liability was estimated at $105 million. That is by any means a very horrendous amount. Within the next two years we were able to reduce that. They took back the 737-400s. The 737-300 went. And that deficit was because Cayman Airways took decisions to lease jets it couldn't afford and perhaps that has been Cayman Airways' problem throughout. Obviously new jets are good, but when you are trying to lease a jet at $3.7 million per year that is worth thirty-odd million dollars, the figures just don't add up.

In estimating, the lease payments back in 1992 would have been over $12 million a year compared to just a bit over $3 million at present. In fact, the two present aircraft are leased for the same amount as one 737-400 would cost. We are buying these two planes so the cost is considerably higher, whereas in those days the leases were pure leases.

I would like to thank the backbench opposition for their words of support for Cayman Airways. I believe that that support is genuine and I believe that it is quite important to Cayman Airways to have that continue. To that effect, I have tried from time to time . . . and we must accept that we have been in this House now continuously for nearly four months. But I have tried to keep all members up to date in many areas. I had meetings with all members of the legislature when we were looking at both the 1974 and the 1984 aircraft which, by the way, I would think is still on the market.

I also discussed the question of the type of aircraft, whether it be a combination of freight and passenger, and I got their feedback and followed along the lines of what that feedback was. I did not, however, discuss when the decision was taken not to pursue the Malaysian aircraft, which was a recent decision of Cayman Airways' Board. At present we are purchasing two aircraft and I believe that the purchase of aircraft rather than pure leasing is the way that we should go. That is something that has been put forward by opposition, by backbench, in fact all members of this House. It has to make sense.

At present we are in a stage where we have a 1979 aircraft that has fairly low cycles (landings, that is), and fairly low flying hours for its age. That was purchased for a bit over $5.2 million. We didn't take reserves of another $1.3 [million] which would have been about $6.5 million for that aircraft. The upgrading of the engines was $1.3 million, to hush-kit them for noise, which is the same cost on the other one that is being purchased which is a 1984.

The 1984 aircraft was purchased for about $6.7 million. It was less the reserves which was a bit over $1 million so it cost under $8 million without the hush-kit and a bit over $9 million when it is hush-kitted. It gives you some idea of the range of prices of those aircraft. As we know, we are well on the way to having purchased the first one.

The other one is well down. Obviously, we have only had the second one for about a year. But there is a difference in paying about $2.5 million to the bank for a loan to purchase than perhaps paying about $2 million for pure rent which would go into the pockets of the companies who own them. So I think those decisions were good.

The Board took a decision to purchase a third aircraft, and members of this House agreed to either a quick-change or a combination of passenger and freight. And that is basically the same plane except that there has to be certification where you combine passengers and freight. Several planes were being looked at. There was a feeling that one of them, a 1974, was too old and we should look at the 1984 aircraft, which is what the First Elected Member for George Town referred to. And we did pursue that.

That aircraft is Malaysian owned, out of the Far East. And throughout the periods of negotiation the asking price of $9 million, normally what happens . . . and I should say that the value of a combination or quick-change is probably $1 million or $1.5 million at the most, maybe $2 million over what a normal 737 of that age would bring.

When an aircraft comes on the market it is a very specialist area. Important aspects of purchasing an aircraft are how it fits into the fleet, the number of cycles (landings) the number of hours, position where the different checks are and especially where the D-Checks are (which are the serious airframe checks), the hours on the engines, the auxiliary power unit. Also, one has to look at the cockpit and what kind of avionics are in there and whether or not they comply with the Civil Aviation Authority and the American FAA standards.

The aircraft that was being sought, and which I would think is still on the market, was a 1984 aircraft and the asking price was $9 million. Normally one begins to negotiate somewhere in the $6 plus million and there is normally a meeting somewhere under that amount.

That $9 million was with the engines without hush-kits. There were extra costs in relation to the galley, overhead bins—and we are not looking at small amounts here. That alone was $.5 million—and different components, lavatories and matters such as that. The engines had a lot of time on them and bringing the engines back to (not the hush-kitting) zero hours the cycles, would have added another $1.3 million to the price tag.

And the airframe, the C & D-Checks would have been another $1,088,000. So at the end of the day, unless the base price on that aircraft could have been moved from the $9 million, we were looking at an aircraft that to put in the air with what we knew would have been about $14,795,000.

Now, what also has to be considered is the cost of servicing the debt of purchasing an aircraft, and are we paying too much? To finance that aircraft over ten years at the present interest rates, we must bear in mind that interest rates are now low and from a banking point of view, one has to assume that within that ten year cycle the rates could have gone up considerably. It would have been in the area of $2.4 million to $2.6 million per annum for principal and interest, which at the end of the day would have put the price of the aircraft in the area at the end of ten years of $24 million.

On each aircraft as we pay down, the price I quoted earlier increases when you pay the principal and the interest. There were a lot of facts involved, it's not a matter of just having one fact. I will summarise those facts: First, there was the cost. The Board felt that this aircraft is $2 million or $3 million overpriced. The second point is that if we are going to go for this amount, quite rightly as pointed out by the First Elected Member for George Town, one of the consequences was a further $4 million, maybe $5 million that we would have had to go with a guarantee. That was the second factor.

The third factor (and it may seem minor, but it was one that weighed very heavily with the Board) is the fact that Trans-mile refused to negotiate. They said the aircraft is there, we could have it as is. For several months they refused to let us bore scope the engines. And this is absolutely critical that Cayman Airways be given the right to properly check the engines and the aircraft. The bore scope is run of the mill, at least under English and United States Law. In other words, they open the engines, they go in with a bore scope, which allows them to see into the engines and they can tell the position with the hot core and whether there are problems in the engine.

The third aspect that was worrying was the contract was "as is." Normally, if we are purchasing in an English, American, or Canadian jurisdiction the right to do extensive checks is allowed. You are allowed to freely go in. When it came to trying to look at the offer which would have been in the form of a letter and then on to a contract, they wanted an agreement under Malaysian law. Normally contracts of this nature done internationally are done under US or English Law or maybe Canadian Law, but mainly US and English, and made subject to the International Arbitration Clauses that operate in the city of London or the city of New York.

When the debt aspect was looked at and discussions were had with the bankers on this as the fourth aspect, there was uneasiness in that area as well. Now, other factors had to be considered. There is a crunch coming on where aircraft that are not hush-kitted will be phased out at the end of this year. So a lot of aircraft will be coming on the market from jurisdictions such as the Far East that allow the operation of these aircraft, but cannot fly within the United States or Europe.

A second aspect is that the European Council made a recent unilateral decision which restricts stage 2 aircraft from flying in there unless the aircraft are on the European Community register of one of the EEC countries. As I understand it, that restriction states that if the stage 3 upgrade is one that has been manufactured they will look at accepting it, but not if it is hush-kitted by the many firms such as we would now be doing. That is highly controversial, and is being fought by the United States and by the airlines worldwide.

And there is a chance that, similar with the United States, it may either be watered down or a no-go at this stage. But, the important thing is that it has put persons who own the noisy aircraft (such as what have been flying) will be putting them on the market. So there is a feeling that the prices of 737-200s will reduce in the future.

Having said that, that aircraft is probably still there because it hasn't been possible to negotiate. Perhaps that is the way people in the Far East do business. But when you add these six things together, I believe that the decision taken by the Board to not pursue this specific aircraft at present was a good one. I wanted to just take the time to do is to show the many elements involved in a transaction this complex and with this amount of money.

It was good to hear that there would be support for a loan of $14 million. But that is a very large sum of money and if we are going to pay that amount out, we must get value for money. I know there was concern by the backbench opposition over the extra million [dollars] borrowed for the budget locally. And I must say, as the First Elected Member for George Town said earlier, there would have been concern on my part to ask for any substantial increase in loans considering we were fighting over one million dollars over the budget, to just come back and throw another $4 million or $5 million onto the Legislative Assembly.

At present there are two other aircraft being looked at. One is a 1979 quick-change aircraft that matches fairly well with our own 1979 aircraft. There is also another 1983 aircraft that matches closely with our 1984 aircraft. Those two are being looked at for purchase. However, the Board's second decision . . . by the way, back in 1991 or 1992 something like this would never be discussed on the floor of the House so I think any allegations of no openness or transparency has gone.

I have statements made very clearly where questions were asked by me about Cayman Airways back in 1991 and we were told it was a private company and they would not answer. It does obviously give our competition a lead when information of this sort has to go out. But the Board's decision was first, to purchase. And that still remains. The second next best position will be a lease purchase.

The lease purchase has one significant advantage over a purchase, and one significant disadvantage over a purchase. If we are able to lease purchase an aircraft with a substantial amount of lease payments being ploughed into equity after flying the aircraft for six months or a year we can then exercise the option to purchase. The advantage that gives is that you are able to find out where upgrades may have to be done. I have always found (and I am very conservative) that one has to add $1 million to $2 million when purchasing an aircraft for what one doesn't see.

It's like going into . . . in fact this Far East transaction was like going into a shop to buy shoes and the owner of the shop says, 'There's the shoes. They're nice. I own them. If you want to buy them, buy them, but you can't try them on.' The reluctance to allow the in-depth inspection of that aircraft caused me (and I am sure caused the Board) a lot of worry.

If you can lease for a year and then purchase you get the opportunity to fly it for a year to see if it does make sense to exercise the option. Obviously the worse position is to lease the aircraft (which is what we inherited many years ago, but were able to convert into a purchase). . . Obviously the person who leases the aircraft is in the best position to purchase it. And we saw that with the two we had. They were originally leased, and then purchased.

I hope that this clears the air in this respect in that the Board is very serious about this, but they also worry about the amount of debt. And when you add a whopping $25 million on to the debt of Cayman Airways it gets to be worrying. If that aircraft were a much later aircraft where we were getting value for money, then I would not have hesitated to come to this House and set out the facts.

The airline remains committed to purchasing the third aircraft, and that it should get one that can combine freight and passengers. So the long-term strategy remains. We have to be careful that we do not do what was done in the past with Cayman Airways: Something is there, it looks good, and perhaps before the many different aspects are properly weighed we rush in and buy something and suddenly find that it was a bad buy, or in many instances a bad leasing as in the past. We will end up as they did in 1991 with $105 million of contingent liability.

That is perhaps the difference between my mentality as a banker and a lawyer—I am extremely conservative, Cayman Airways is stabilised. I do not run risks with my own money and I am sure not going to run risks with the public's money. When we move on a transaction of this size we have to be satisfied that it is a proper one and that it is value for money. In this case I am satisfied, as was the Board, and I believe that the opposition, now that they have heard the six bases upon which the decision was made, will also be satisfied.

Cayman Airways is responsible. Its Board is responsible. And to keep the stability, . . . you see, we don't owe a large amount of money now, sir. We are not making a lot of money, but things have improved over 1997, thank God. And we have a good staff. And there are long-term policies in place and sometimes the short-term policies are just not the best way to go. But the long-term policy has to be our ultimate goal.

I would just like to say that the Caymanian Compass called for an explanation of that. I hope that they will find, as members of this House, that I have been as detailed and as open as I can be on this and that we know where we are going in Cayman Airways. We never lose sight of that. But I am not going to get into, with God's help, the problems of the past because I must tell you that when I went in to see Governor Gore (at that time) and he said that no one else wants Cayman Airways and someone has to do it, I was given the file and three or four days to give him an alternative. I had to say to him, "Sir, you cannot, even if you wish to, close down Cayman Airways (which was one of the alternatives at that time). This country cannot afford to close it . . ." because of the massive liability that sat there. We must remember it was nearly $40 million of liability most of which had been accumulated in a very short period.

I said to him "Your alternatives are not there. The country cannot afford to do anything other than try and pull it out and to negotiate it out of debt." Which was some $105 million at the time.

But the airline business is not easy. And in my life the toughest job I have ever had, and I have been involved with multinational companies . . . I think I understand big business. But the airline business is one of the hardest I have ever seen. It is most predatory and highly competitive. But Cayman Airways is critical to the Cayman Islands and I think we all agree on that.

I would like to once again thank the members of this House for their support. And I can assure them that, God willing, we will get the third aircraft and the decision will be one that I believe they will be happy with. In the long term, the third aircraft is critical to Cayman Airways' reducing the present loss and the subsidy that is paid.

Before I move into another area, I would like to especially thank the Chairman of Cayman Airways, Mr. Leonard Ebanks, who has given us over ten years of dedicated service. He's seen the hard times and he's seen the better times these days. And also the majority of the Board has been with Cayman Airways for eight to ten years. I would also like to thank the new members of the Board, the First Elected Member for West Bay, the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture for their support. They know the amount of time spent on these decisions. I would also like to thank our new managing director and our general director, Mr. Mike Adam and Miss Pilar Bush and all the staff at Cayman Airways.

We have good staff, and I believe that as we pull together as a team Cayman Airways does have a future. We are working towards that. I must say that while everything else has gone up, at least the subsidy of Cayman Airways has remained at $4 million. The First Elected Member for George Town mentioned that we get $700,000 extra subsidy for the advertising and also Cayman Airways has not paid the Civil Aviation Authority for the past few years. That's nothing new. But I would like to point out that that's not a subsidy. That has come out of Cayman Airways' profit and loss account. I think he quoted maybe $2 million, but when that is put in as a subsidy the airlines . . . well, that couldn't be put in as a subsidy, let me say that. It would have to be put in as capital and government pays the Civil Aviation Authority.

But when that goes in and this House has actually agreed to this, for example in the years that we had . . . and maybe I should just mention the loss in 1993 was reduced to $3.98 million. And in 1994 we made a profit, after subsidy, of $1,568,000. In 1995 there was a further loss of $1.1 million. In 1996 $1.6 million loss, and in 1997 $2.1 million and this has reduced this coming year to where it will be in the areas of a $1 million loss.

However, if you put the Civil Aviation Authority in as capital then you will find that that $2 million will offset this loss and in several years Cayman Airways would have shown a profit after subsidy when the Civil Aviation Authority amount is taken out. I just want to point out that it is in here so when we say there's a loss of $1.1 million it is after taking account of the $2.5 million for the Civil Aviation Authority.

For whatever reason we had the raising of Cayman Airways' financial condition, and I would like to deal with that briefly. Firstly, we have seen the reserves of the country increase considerably. A decision was taken to begin funding the pension reserves. I think it will take over ten years to bring that up to the full amount. When this government took over the public service pension reserve in 1992 was $6.2 million and at the end of this year it will be $50 million with about $9.7 million going in this year alone. That has to be left to pay for public pensions. For the next eight or nine years government should do what this government took the initiative and lead in doing and that is to build up that reserve.

The general reserve which when we took over (after taking out the loss) was $3.5 million. I am reading from the government's audited figures, the financial summary. By the end of this year that will be close to $14 million. As you know, sir, last year we had a surplus, or profit, of $7.2 million at the end of the year. When that is added together with the different funds such as the capital development fund and the environmental fund we find that the total up to the end of last year would have been in the area of about $66 million. And at the end of this year an amount of about $76 million.

These are very large reserves and this government has not followed governments of the past that did not build up the pension fund. The money put there could have been easily put elsewhere into a general reserve, or we could have reduced the debts of the country. So there have been increases of about $10 million at the end of 1992 up to the $76 million where it now stands.

A lot was also said about borrowing. I would like to refer to the public debt and loans summary that was given by the Financial Secretary and the Accountant General. As at the end of December 1993 when the borrowings for Cayman Airways of $16.6 million went in, and by the way, in 1992-1993, to put it beyond a doubt, all that government drew down was the sum of $825,000 on ongoing loans, and $46,000. So it was about $860 million only that went on to the public debt in 1993. And against that, $4,032,000 was paid.

But at the end of 1993 the Cayman Airways loan had moved the total debt to $54,126,799. At the end of December 1998 the public debt stood at $93,556,448, or an increase of $40 million. During that time a substantial amount was repaid on principal on previous loans. When you look at the increase of $40 million in debt, and you look at the increase of about $60 million as at the end of this year that we have put in reserves, it is very obvious that we could have taken $40 million out of what was put into the pension fund and borrowed nothing during this period and still had $20 million to put into the pension fund.

So, we have been prudent. These are facts. You may smile, but I am reading from the Auditor's report, the summary that has been given to me. It is a fact that the borrowings this government inherited were $54,126,799. I laid that in this House and I hope everyone got it, as well as the press. At the end of December 1998 the total borrowings were $93,556,000. I also laid the summary that shows that as at the end of 1998 between the public service pension fund and the general reserves surplus we had a total of $67.4 million in the reserves.

I know some have said that a lot of this has been put in the pension fund, but that pension fund has to be funded because this government owes it. On long-term planning it is the way to go and I hope that future governments continue to pay this amount. It is a heavy amount, $10 million a year, and pensions are then paid separately, I would like to point out, from that. But it seems to me that it would have been short-sighted for this government, and irresponsible, to instead of putting the $60 million into reserves to have paid off the $40 million and have come back to this House and said, 'Look, in five years we haven't borrowed anything.' We could have done that. That would have been the political way to go, but it would not have been responsible and I am glad that the opposition agreed with us that the responsible way to go is to fund the pension fund.

The country is in very good shape. There can be no doubt that when you look at the finances of this country we have a surplus.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Let me just say what the surplus has been. Okay? I don't want to go back in history here.

Mr. Speaker, the recurrent revenue and the recurrent spending, this is where you have to look for surplus. The day this country reaches a stage where it has to borrow money to pay civil service salaries, let's put it bluntly, the country is in trouble. But, thank God, other than the years 1990 and 1992 when they did have to borrow to pay for civil service salaries, this country has never—never before that—. . . and I give credit to the other governments, Sir Vassel, Capt. Charles, that left some $28 million when you added the surplus and the reserves together.

Let me just state what the surplus was. It was a deficit in 1992 of $3.6 million. In 1993 we moved it to a surplus of $11.2 million. And these are audited figures. I have laid them on the Table here. Nobody can deny this. In 1994 the surplus was $13.9 million. In 1995 the surplus was $16.3 million. In 1996 it was $23.7 million. In 1997 it was $18.8 million. And in 1998 it is $17.9 million. And there will be a surplus this year.

That money has been used to do several things. It has been used to put the $60 million in the reserves. That had to come from surplus. It has also been used to fund capital expenditure and out of the well over $100 million of capital expenditure, the total borrowing was $40 million. What I am saying is that even if you take the recurrent and the capital together, there has been sufficient surplus to pay for any increase in debt. That is like a person taking the money out of his or her pocket and buying their house or their car, all of their capital works, their boat and whatever else they have.

I want to emphasise this again, and I laid this on the Table of this House, there has been a recurrent surplus in every year that this government has been in. We have put $60 million into reserves and the borrowings have increased only by $40 million and part of that, in any event, we repaid on loans that were there prior to our coming in because we inherited $50,126,799 of debt. And if there is any doubt, I will lay these papers on the Table again. But there can be no doubt.

[Addressing a member across the floor] No, you don't want them on because you know they are true.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there is a saying that the truth may not be believed, the truth may not be accepted, but at the end of the day the truth is the truth. And these are audited figures I am quoting from.

There can be no doubt that this country is in an economic boom. The Editorial in the Caymanian Compass of 3 March begins by saying, "The current boom in the construction industry has been going on for so long that it would be easy to think it will continue forever." We are in a boom, Mr. Speaker. Look around and we can see it. The economy is in a good state. Now, we can't be complacent. We have to be ever vigilant. At some stage there will be a downturn. We can't always keep moving up from an economic point of view. But, thank God, for the last four or five years the economy has been good and the government has saved. We saved that $60 million that I referred to in the reserves.

I look forward to the introduction of the new system on the budget for the finances of the country. I believe it will be a tremendous improvement. It will be much clearer under that system as to what is a surplus and what is not because under the cash system sometimes figures are looked at purely as capital and recurrent rather than the isolation of the recurrent from the capital which gives the true surplus. And also the accrual system, my friend the Minister for Tourism has mentioned, will show the value of government. It will show government's assets and liabilities. Under the present cash system, it basically is like if I wanted to build a house this year and it cost $100,000, that would show $100,000 going out in this year, rather than spread out over the next 15 or 20 years that the loan would be for. And then it doesn't show the asset. It doesn't show that you own a house worth $100,000.

This too will assist Cayman Airways in showing clearer, . . . in fact, the balance sheet that will come out this year for Cayman Airways will show much clearer what the value is, and what it is not.

I look forward to the accrual system. We have been in here for four months continuously. And, to be honest, if I said I wasn't tired I would be lying. I am really tired of having to be in this House. While we are here, government's work at the Glass House is not being done. I do as much work, . . . I work while I am in here. I don't mind admitting that. It's the only way I can get through my ministry's work. I do it in such a way that I don't infringe the Standing Orders of this House. But if this system can free us up so that we can get back in our ministries then government will be able to perform a lot better.

In fact, in many areas with all ministers and all official members sitting here, and I am sure the backbench must find the same thing, it's nearly impossible to plan.

One can't plan vacations because we are just here day after day. There has to be a solution to this. And it is for this reason why I will probably only be utilising maybe a quarter of the four hours that have been given to me because there is a way of us talking less and achieving the same thing. I believe that members must sit down and find a way of getting out of the legislature and into our ministries and try to get on with government.

For example, a member asked me when I was going to visit the primary school again. I said I didn't know. I honestly don't know. I can't plan visits to schools because I am here all the time. I do my work; I work nights I work weekends. But the country is now beginning to suffer as a result of the long time in here. I think with your help, sir, together with the help of all members' we will find a way to reduce the time to what is normal and sensible. This four months has just been too long, and we are still here with the work from November—literally all of it still sitting there—68 questions, 12 private members' motions, several government motions, eight or ten laws from last time. I don't know when we will really ever get out of here.

I look forward to the Freedom of Information [Law], if anything can be done to reduce the amount of questions in this House I am all for it. Quite frankly, I have nothing to hide. I want to make that clear. I heard the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town chuckling across the House. I would just like to remind that honourable member of this, and I am reading from the Caymanian Compass and it's an Editorial. It says, "Last month with very little fanfare reports on three local schools assembled by the schools' inspectorate were released to the public. The inspectorate, a wholly independent branch of the Ministry of Education came into operation in 1997, its job to monitor and report on educational standards in Cayman. The publication of the inspectorate's first three reports for distribution to the schools and parents is a highly significant moment in the history of education in the islands."

I hope the honourable member listens closely to what I am now going to read. "The ministry had a choice whether to publish or not, and to its great credit it chose to do so. Going public with the strengths and weaknesses of local schools is an admirable, positive step towards transparency and accountability within the education system. It meant for the first time ever, objective and independent assessments of standards at local schools are available to parents. Publication of the report establishes the honesty of the Minister for Education. It gives much credibility to its stated aim of raising educational standards and encourages trust between the Minister and parents."

The public knows. In fact, the public has reached the stage where it is just about turned off to the eternity of rhetoric that goes on. But this is an objective view given by the newspaper that could probably have sold more papers by being critical and going into those reports to say look at the problems. But I have gone to the public. I have said, 'Here are the problems. Here are the good things, here are the bad.' And my duty is to help the government schools as well as the private schools to fix the problems they have. But it's all out there. It's as transparent as it can be.

So the public should never believe that the last three months of questioning has been through a lack of transparency. It has been pure, unadulterated politics!

I have nothing to hide. The one thing the public of this country knows me for is my honesty and my stability. I move on doing my best for education and my other ministries. But this, Mr. Speaker, attests for itself. So I look forward to the Freedom of Information Law, when it comes in.

The youth of this country deserve to have credit given when credit is due. Look at the many good children we have in the schools, for example over 800 in our high schools. We have two, six or eight who fall by the wayside. Our duty is to do as much as we can to help them, but we must give recognition to our young people out there who are good. And too many times members of this House and the press (and when I say the press, I include the television) are over anxious to criticise the few children who fall by the wayside and they never give credit to the children who are outstanding examples of what the youth of this country should be.

It was good seeing the large variety of students at the Commonwealth Day Sunday service at the Anglican Church. I would ask members of this House to take a positive attitude. Sometimes ask a positive question: How many good children do we have? Rather than how many bad. They need the support of this country and also the behaviour in this House is something important that the standards be kept high because those children do listen and they may well say to themselves, is the behaviour . . . and I know you do your best, sir, to preserve good behaviour within this House. But is that type of behaviour the way a responsible grownup should act? So it is incumbent upon all of us to set the example.

There is a saying that my father taught me. He said, "I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day. I'd rather one would walk with me than merely show the way." It's easy to stand in here and talk; it's another thing to get out there and give support. At that Sunday church service several of them came to me and said, "Mr. Truman, it's good to see you here." I went over and spoke to the band when it was playing and they said, "You have actually been standing here for ten or fifteen minutes listening to the steel band." And they appreciate it.

My plea is, if we are going to get them to grow up into good citizens of this country, that we begin setting the example—talk and act right, say thank you, and it is good to see you doing good when they do good, not just the negative things. That saying of what is done rather than what is said is very clear in what this government has done. We are a government of doers, and that includes the First Elected Member for West Bay when he was with us, which was most of the time with this government. I give credit to all members. We have really tried to do as much as we can and God willing we will continue to do that, and with God's help we will continue from strength to strength, strengthening the social side, the religious side, the economic side and the behaviour side of this country.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.52 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.26 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. Does any other member wish to speak? The Second Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Miss Heather Bodden: Thank you.

I rise to offer my contribution on the 1999 Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, at the state opening of the Legislative Assembly on Friday 19th February, 1999.

It is amazing how time flies. It seems like only yesterday His Excellency and Mrs. Owen were in my district to greet, meet and get acquainted with the people of Bodden Town, having just arrived to take up his duties as our new Governor. Now, Governor Owen delivered his final Throne Speech having completed a little over three years.

Today I would like to wish Governor Owen and Mrs. Owen all the best in their new endeavours. I know it is with sad hearts that they will soon say good-bye, but we all know the warmth and friendliness they received from the people of the Cayman Islands will remain forever in their hearts. We wish them God's speed and trust they will find time to return someday for a visit.

The speech given by His Excellency outlines the projects that will shape not just our economy, but the lives in our communities. I would like to say that it was very reassuring to see so much progress being made on so many fronts and to see concrete plans outlined on so many issues. These plans certainly indicate that much action is in the works, starting with the Royal Cayman Islands Police (RCIP).

More than ever I am reassured by their presence in our community. Commissioner Gray can be credited with the idea of bringing the community and the people together for regular meetings. I am pleased to see that these meetings are continuing under the guidance of our new Commissioner, Mr. Thursfield. These meetings have created better communication between the police and the people resulting in their acquiring more information leading to more arrests. This is particularly sensitive to me at this time with the recent wave of petty crimes we are experiencing in my area.

I would like to take this opportunity to say to residents and homeowners in the Savannah/Newlands area who have recently been burglarised, I sympathise with each of you, and I know that the police are doing all they can to catch these culprits. Further, to this end I offer my thanks and appreciation to the Commissioner for the 24-hour police service that has been provided at the Bodden Town Police Station. With the rate at which my district is growing, it is very imperative that we take every precautionary measure available to us before this problem gets any worse.

I also applaud the Royal Cayman Islands Police Service for the number of speeding tickets issued to speeders. Everyone knows this has been an issue of contention and a concern of mine for a very long time. I am most concerned with the dangers it presents to families with small children living near the roads. I am concerned with the dangers it presents with heavy trucks speeding through communities that have narrow streets. I am concerned with the danger it presents while children are walking to and from school. I am concerned with the danger it presents if an elderly person is trying to walk across the street. I am concerned with the danger it presents to cyclists.

I cringe every time I see an overloaded truck hauling material. They speed as if they are hauling cotton balls! I say to those speed demons, Please consider the consequences should you maim someone or, for that matter, take a life. The stretch between Bodden Town and George Town has long been known as a speedway. And I encourage the police in their attitude, which is zero tolerance for speeders.

I am also asking police to continue in their fight against people driving whilst intoxicated. For the life of me I cannot understand what these people are thinking. Getting behind a wheel while intoxicated is suicide. I also encourage other drivers to make it their business to call the hotline should they encounter drunk or reckless drivers on our roads. Just think of the trauma that one could prevent a family from having to go through if these menaces are removed from our streets.

At this time I wish to offer my heartfelt thanks to Bodden Town's two community relations officers. They have certainly gone above and beyond their call of duty. It provides tremendous support to me assisting in all aspects of community related activities. This includes assisting with the elderly, developing friendly relationships with our school children, organising Christmas parties, and their continued day to day involvement with the needs of our people. Their commitment to the community promotes harmony and the overall wellbeing of our district.

Moving on to the Tourism front, I applaud the minister for the decision taken to open a heritage attraction in the district of Bodden Town. Pedro St. James is a first class product and provides alternatives other than water sports for family outings. This is vital to the continued growth of tourism, especially since many of our visitors are repeat customers who enjoy experiencing new and different forms of entertainment. Further, the great lawn at Pedro St. James Castle provides another much needed venue for local gatherings, such as weddings, parties and anniversary celebrations. This attraction is known as the birthplace of democracy and also serves as an educational tool for all of our schools.

Since having this new attraction in the district of Bodden Town I am pleased to report that several Caymanians have now found employment at Pedro St. James and are there now earning an honest living.

Vehicle and driving licence unit: As part of the decentralisation services a location in the Bodden Town district will soon be identified for a vehicle and driving licence unit. This will certainly be another great convenience, which will serve as a hub for my constituents, as well as the people who live in the North Side and East End area. This will certainly go a long way to alleviate some of the traffic congestion at the Central Police Station.

Roads: Road works are continuing, and quite a bit of progress has been made. Last week the Smith Road/Bobby Thompson junction was finally completed and the traffic lights should be installed by this Friday. This will no doubt provide significant improvements in the traffic flow between the eastern districts and George Town. It is also designed for a continuation link into the Crewe Road Bypass, with construction beginning later on this year.

In the district of Bodden Town there are many roads in sub-divisions that need urgent attention. I am appealing to the Minister of Works to please make this one of his priorities as some of these roads are in deplorable condition. Also, our main roads in the Bodden Town district will be properly resurfaced this year, and a third lane will be put in place, which will run from Spotts to South Sound. Having this third lane will go a long way in alleviating daily traffic backup.

We have received requests for crosswalks in front of the Breakers and the Presbyterian Church in Bodden Town. I am happy to say that the honourable Minister of Works met with the honourable Minister of Health and the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town and me last week. I thank him for taking the time out with his staff, as well as the staff from Public Works in order to meet in the district of Bodden Town so that we could identify where these crosswalks are to be installed.

The street-lighting programme is also progressing very well. Making our streets more accessible and safer at night has always been one of my key priorities. To those constituents who have not yet received a streetlight I would like to reassure them that they will get their streetlight.

Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation: After many, many months of setbacks, delays, debates and opposition, the Breakers Rehab Centre will soon be a reality. The facility will be renovated and opened as a residential drug rehabilitation centre. The Minister of Health and Drug Abuse Prevention has seen many, many rocky roads in his effort to get this centre up and running. Thank God this is all behind him now. And this just goes to prove that if God is for us, who can be against us.

The Minister of Health has been eating, sleeping and dreaming this facility for several years now. Today so many of our youth are caught up in drugs and crying out for help. What better facility to provide for them than in a centre right here in our very own Cayman Islands? If they are sent abroad there is the possibility that their families won't be able to visit them. I am made to understand that it has been proven historically that when people with this disease are treated in their own communities, the success rate is much better. I give kudos to the minister for this stand.

If there is one ray of hope to save those youth hooked on drugs, you can bet the Minister of Drug Abuse Prevention will certainly go the extra mile. He is one minister who will certainly not write off our youth.

The National Drug Council under the leadership of Mrs. Tessa Bodden continues to do an excellent job in the implementation of the Cayman Islands National Strategic Plan for Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. I applaud the efforts of Mrs. Bodden and her dedicated staff, and wish them all the best as they continue in the fight against drugs in these islands.

Health Services: The new Cayman Islands Health Services Complex will be officially opened this month. Mr. Speaker, you and I and everyone in this honourable House knows this is a facility and a hospital that the people of these islands have been waiting a long time for. It is a first class facility, and one of the best in the Caribbean. It is fully equipped with state-of-the art equipment and the community will certainly receive and enhanced level of health care because of the improved facilities and equipment.

The district of Bodden Town's health clinic continues to be a Godsend. Every day more and more people take advantage of this facility. On more than one occasion I have had parents say to me how convenient it is especially after arriving home and finding a child ill. What a relief to have this facility right in their own area. They don't have to drive all the way back into George Town.

Education: This continues to be a high priority and another evidence of government's commitment to improving the wellbeing of students. New construction of a primary school in prospect this year will eliminate the overcrowding that has been occurring in our schools over the past few years.

I am also grateful to the Minister of Education and the Public Works staff for working so hard to complete the air-conditioning at the Bodden Town and Savannah Primary Schools. Today the students and teachers are able to work in a much better and more pleasant atmosphere. I do look forward to the completion with all schools being air-conditioned in the very near future.

Vision 2008: On the long-term front so many people have been actively involved in the Vision 2008 exercise. I am eternally grateful to these people and ask each and every one who is involved in this very important initiative to please continue to stay involved and make his voice heard.

I must also thank Governor Owen for his foresight in bringing this initiative forward because without a vision and a blueprint for our future all of our actions will be meaningless. Mr. Speaker, thanks and appreciation must also go to the Permanent Secretary of Education and her dedicated staff who have spent many, many long hours in putting Vision 2008 where it is today.

Vision 2008 is how we will build a plan that includes the needs and desires of all of our citizens. It's about the quality of life and creating a Cayman Islands that our children, and our children's children will be happy and proud to live in.

One of the things I took specific note of in the Vision 2008 list is that the people of these Cayman Islands would like to see the Cayman Islands remain a God-fearing place. This was at the top of the list. I wholeheartedly agree as this is indeed the cornerstone of my own philosophy. Over the past several months we here in the Cayman Islands have been so blessed while elsewhere we have seen the ravages of hurricanes, earthquakes, tornadoes, disease, violence in the schools, bombs, starvation, and the list goes on. We here in these little islands have been spared from it all. Only God knows why we have been spared, but we always need to give thanks and continue to remain a God-fearing people.

Agriculture: This year's Agriculture Show held at the Lower Valley Pavilion was indeed the best ever. Everyone involved should be proud of its success. I know it has not been an easy job, but with hard work and dedication produce and cattle of the highest quality can be produced right here in these Cayman Islands. Completing the new road that was used as an exit also proved to be a blessing.

The Department of Environmental Health: Having a few new vehicles for the collection of garbage has certainly improved, as we know that these vehicles were desperately needed. I must take this opportunity to commend the efforts being put forth by the ministry and the department. They are certainly doing a tremendous job in the fight for zero litter. One will see litter being collected on a daily basis now from the roadside. I say to those litterbugs, Think first before you throw your litter out of the window.

I would like to encourage the department to continue with its litter campaign. Let's not stop until we have a litter free Cayman Islands. In order to further augment this, perhaps the department of environment could establish community based task forces to further assure that the goal of zero litter is achieved. I would like to let the department know that it can be assured that it will have my continued support when it comes to maintaining a clean and beautiful environment.

Community Affairs: Bodden Town's community development officer is busy with a number of excellent programmes already in place, and is continuing with new programmes since being assigned to the Bodden Town district one year ago. Such programmes include the Bodden Town District Youth Band, which I am sure everyone has heard play (and the more they play, the better they sound), the Annual Senior Citizens Easter Celebration (which is going to be held on the 28th of this month), the Celebration in honour of Older Persons' Day (held in October), and the Senior Citizens Christmas Party (held in December, which I know everyone enjoys), the Young at Heart Programme for senior citizens under the leadership of Nurse Josie Solomon and Rev. Menko.

This group meets every fourth Monday of the month at the Webster Church Hall in Bodden Town. These senior citizens are having the time of their lives as Nurse Josie brings in various speakers, takes them on visits to the Botanic Park in North Side and a trip is planned for a trip to Pedro St. James Castle this month. They are indeed having the time of their lives attending events in their honour bonding a needed fellowship.

May is the celebration for Child Month. Just this past Saturday Mr. Scott and I met at the Bodden Town Civic Centre with a small group of teenagers who are interested in starting a youth programme for ages 12 to 17. This past summer the Community Development Unit and Social Services arranged the first ever summer programme of its kind in Bodden Town. This was indeed a very successful initiative with more than 90 children attending. For two weeks the Civic Centre in Bodden Town was transformed into a huge classroom where children, teachers and volunteers had the time of their life. For two weeks parents didn't have to worry about the safety or whereabouts of their children. And I am happy to say that we have been given the undertaking that this programme will indeed be held again this summer.

Public Library: In the Throne Speech, the Governor said, "Work will continue on the conversion of the Bodden Town town hall to a district library this year." Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to lay on the Table of this honourable House a few letters that I received from the Bodden Town Primary School students last year asking for a district library. These students are anxiously awaiting this library so that they can enhance their reading and learning abilities. I think these students will be pleased to know that they are being heard.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Miss Heather Bodden: Mr. Speaker, please allow me to read a few of these letters.

"From the Bodden Town Primary School, to Miss Heather Bodden, MLA.

"Dear Madam: It is unfair that East End, North Side and George Town have libraries and Bodden Town does not have one. When the children have to study or do research they have to go to George Town, East End or North Side. So please, Miss Heather, we need a library in our district. Bodden Town School also needs a library. Sincerely, Amanda Berry."

Another one from the Bodden Town Primary School to Miss Heather Bodden, MLA, "Dear Madam: Over the years different districts have had libraries built for them. Can I tell you something? For years Bodden Towners have asked for a library. Many children from Bodden Town do not have the opportunity to visit a library. For many children a library in Bodden Town would be a study area instead of going to George Town just to look at one book I personally know that a library would be just what the doctor ordered. So would you please help us get a library in Bodden Town? It would be fantastic.

"Yours sincerely, Kimberly Watson. P.S. I would also like to see a library in our school."

Another one from the Bodden Town Primary School to Miss Heather Bodden, MLA "Dear Madam: It is high time Bodden Town gets a school and district library. All the other schools and districts have a library.

Many afternoons children take the public bus to town to get to a library, plus it would be comfortable for us to work in a cool and quiet atmosphere. We are begging and pleading for a library. Please help us. Sincerely yours, Carissa McLaughlin."

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for that, and I would also like to let the children know that this Parliament is interested in our youth.

Moving on to Youth: Attending the National Youth Policy two-day conference in January at the pavilion was indeed a rewarding experience. To witness the large turnout was truly remarkable. This youth policy will address the needs of our young people and will recognise their value to our country's development. Attending both days of this programme I was overwhelmed by the interest shown by so many of our youth. I watched intently how involved and enthusiastic they were. It was evident that the older generation was listening to our youth.

Miss Ramona Ritch, of the Cayman Islands Marine Institute, is to be congratulated on the success of this programme. And I would like to say to her, don't stop there, but continue in what you are doing because it is so obvious where her heart is. Dr. Ivan Henry has been retained as technical advisor to the National Youth Policy Task Force. He reassured those attending the conference that the final document would be forwarded to the Ministry of Youth by year-end.

I trust that those who are listening will clearly see what has already been achieved in our great district. Bodden Town is no longer in the dark. It has been revived, and there's more to come. But this could not happen on its own. It has happened because representatives are working for the good of the people. It happened because they are representatives who care. It happened because representatives told the people it could be done if people worked together. Mr. Speaker, I call that teamwork. Now everybody wants to move to Bodden Town!

One only has to drive out to where I live. From the time you come upon the Spotts/Newlands Road and travel through Savannah and on into Lower Valley, on into central Bodden Town and into Breakers you will see land being cleared, homes being built, subdivisions being developed. One must come to the conclusion that the district of Bodden Town is attracting new residents all the time.

Three years ago when I took on the task of being a representative little did I think there would be so much progress in such a short time. It has certainly not been an easy three years, but I feel so encouraged by what has been taking place. There are days when doors swing wide open. There are days when I have to force them, and there are days when God walks me through them.

Today I am no longer the new kid on the block; I know the needs of my people and I am here today to tell my people that they have always mattered to me. I am here because I now know this is my place. I am here because I want unity and harmony and what is best for my constituents. But most of all I am here because I dearly love my people and my country.

In closing, I am reminded of an inspirational message by Emily Matthews called "Life's Pathway." And it reads,

*At times life's pathway seems filled with things that make the going rough,
And we wish there were a smoother road for we feel we've had enough.
But if we pause a moment and remember who's in charge,
The hills that loom ahead of us no longer seem so large.
And every rock before us, when we know we're not alone,
Becomes not just a stumbling block but one more stepping stone.
So as you face this journey in the moment you begin,
Know that God will guide you and you will have the courage to win.*

Yes, Mr. Speaker, every day for me is a challenge. But I thank God for allowing me the opportunity to serve my people. I look forward to continuing this mission as long as I can.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you and may God continue to bless these Cayman Islands. Thank you.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings until 2.30 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.59 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.47 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. Does any other member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Thank you.

I rise to offer my contribution on the 1999 Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor, on Friday 19th February 1999.

Let me say to His Excellency the Governor that I have appreciated his leadership over the past three and one half years. I personally feel that he has brought a great deal of professionalism and efficiency to the government service. I also want to congratulate him on his Vision 2008 because we need a sense of direction. I believe that at the end of the day what is important in regard to Vision 2008 is that the people of this country, that is our born Caymanians, feel that their interests were well considered, represented and protected in regard to any plan we have in these islands.

The other objective of the Throne Speech is to outline government's plans and policies for the year 1999. There are many challenges that we face in this country. I believe that it is important for those concerns or issues to be voiced, discussed, and hopefully addressed in a very positive and meaningful way.

I am going to talk a bit this afternoon about fact and fantasy. If you were to listen to Executive Council you would hear the fantasy that the economy is booming and all is well, people are happy making money and fully employed; that there are no major issues or concerns shared by our people and it appears that tourism continues to chug along at a rapid pace even though it may be on automatic pilot, and that the Cayman Islands continue to enjoy the reputation of a preferred destination.

The other fantasy is that we are not catering to everyone, we are only looking for those visitors with a combined income in excess of $100,000. Those are some of the fantasies we hear echoed by Executive Council.

What are the facts? It is a fact that the economy is strong, but all is not well. The fact is that a very select few are doing very well while the majority of our people are experiencing some difficulties, be it with employment, financial problems, be it with finding it very difficult to cope because of the pressures and stress that we experience in this country. And on an almost daily basis I hear concern expressed about overpopulation.

In 1992 when we were elected the country was in a recession. People were unemployed and the majority of major contractors were sitting on their hands with nothing to do. Over the past five years we have enjoyed a considerable amount of economic activity. There are many things going on. But we have to stop and see who is controlling that activity.

One of the issues that concerns me and many others . . . and it would be interesting to know the real statistics at the present time in regard to unemployment. But we do have people who are finding it difficult to find employment. One reason for that is the fact that very few employers who operate in this country have a genuine interest in regard to employing Caymanians. And today they don't have to because it is so easy to get the work permit.

Our people are also concerned about the level of criminal activity in our society. I share that concern. I am greatly concerned about the level of drug trafficking and illegal drug abuse and all of the related criminal activities that go with that particular illegal activity in my district. I regard the issue of crime as one of the greatest threats to our society. One of the advantages we have always enjoyed in this country is the fact that we have been known as a safe destination. We have been known as very friendly and cordial people. Because of the illegal drug abuse and activity we have to address the issue of crime before it gets out of hand.

I am aware that there is a very strange philosophy concerning illegal drug abusers in that it is said that unless they want help it really doesn't make any sense to attempt to help them. I personally do not share that philosophy. I would daresay that 90% or 95% of the burglaries we have experienced recently in this country have been committed by drug abusers supporting their habits. What is discouraging is that I can drive through my district, and any district in this country, and I can spot a drug abuser a mile away. It appears that the police have a very difficult time identifying these persons and dealing with them.

My attitude is that if these people need help, and they don't want it on a voluntary basis, then we need to confront them with the option of either going for help or we will deal with them and take them off the streets.

I get people coming into my office on a weekly basis saying, "John, we have to do something about this area of our community because day and night there is illegal drug activity going on. I can't keep anything at home. I can't keep anything around the yard because people come in." In a lot of cases people tell me that their own children come in and steal what they have and pawn it for $25 in order to support their particular habit.

I was very pleased to hear that the health services are beginning to offer drug counselling at the district level. I believe that we have to be very aggressive in this area. We cannot sit back and let this issue go unchecked because criminal activity is becoming a problem in this country.

I believe that in regard to crime, it appears that the most common crime today is burglary. I understand that one can get up to life for burglary, but there are no minimum terms. In other words, it's not five year's minimum or ten years. I believe that that is the direction we need to head in addressing crime. I believe that those persons who engage in that type of illegal activity need to understand that we are serious about addressing crime in this country.

I have visited other countries where it appears that evil and illicit activities totally permeate the society. And those are not good societies to live in. I visited a particular European country sometime ago and because of the atmosphere there, if I never see that place again it will be soon enough. So I believe that we do need to recognise that we have a problem in regard to crime in this country, and we need to address it.

I had a gentleman come to my office last week (Tuesday or Wednesday) and he talked to me for an hour and one half. His concern was the overpopulation, the ratio of Caymanian to non-Caymanian, the majority of whom are here on work permits. It is a fact that there are certain positions in the country that we can't find Caymanians to fill. That is a fact. I have no problem in addressing those positions by bringing someone in on a work permit.

I brought a motion some four or five years ago asking government to consider restricting certain businesses to Caymanians only, even considering placing a moratorium on the number of businesses in any one particular industry. The problem we have in this country at the present time is that we have too many people doing the same thing. Unfortunately, those of our Caymanians who are in business are the ones who are being squeezed because we have very large outfits coming in competing in these particular industries and they have the resources to survive long enough until they eliminate all of the competition from the local Caymanians.

This is very prevalent in such areas as restaurants, watersports, real estate, and a number of other businesses in this country where an overabundance of people are engaged. But government seems to be scared of its own shadow in this country in regard to doing what it knows is right and necessary to the survival of our own local Caymanians. I believe in the Bahamas there are only a very few real estate licences and Bahamians hold them all. There is nothing wrong with us looking out for our own.

Take the area of watersports. There are probably two or three large entities that control that entire industry, especially since the demise of the old Holiday Inn and places like the Grand Pavilion where we had our average visitor coming to stay and wanting to take advantage of what is offered locally in the way of watersports. They would ask around and many times a well-known local would be recommended. That is how those particular Caymanians survived. But that is becoming extremely difficult.

First of all, I remember that we put some policy in place some time ago in regard to local entities being able to advertise and put their brochures on the racks at hotels. All that happens is that the larger entities with a franchise at that hotel go in and check the racks to see whose brochures are being displayed. They take them out and throw them in the garbage. That's not right.

The way we operate in this country is that we are not going to do anything about addressing these concerns until the day one of those local watersports operators who has to sit at Morgan's Harbour or at the Port Authority dock and see hundreds of people being transported out and they can't get one or two people addresses that issue personally by committing a crime. I am one who believes that if we can prevent something before it happens we should do it. But it appears that that's what it takes to get any government reaction. Something happens, and then government tries to deal with the issue.

A very good example is the recent proposed amendment to the Liquor Licensing Law in regard to establishments and minors. What they came up with was totally impractical, unrealistic, and would put a lot of small restaurant operators out of business. Why? Because there was an overreaction to the crime committed at the Lions Centre where a young person was killed.

I have always contended that the secret to the success in this country is the fact that Caymanians have always been able to make a living. And they have been able to get the very best of what is available by way of housing and transportation, and jobs. But that particular way of life is being seriously challenged at the present time. Our people are fed up. They don't have many people whom they can turn to. They have the impression that no one is looking out for them. And, as I said, they are becoming very frustrated.

Over development? I am aware that the last government (that is the 1988 to 1992 government) had put in place a moratorium on hotels along Seven Mile Beach. That moratorium was lifted by the present Minister of Tourism. I must say that it wasn't necessary to have another major hotel along Seven Mile Beach. What we have done in the process is create a concrete jungle along Seven Mile Beach. I have been informed by people in the industry that visitors who have been coming here for 25 or 30 years because they enjoyed the Cayman Islands—the quaintness of the place, the tropical Caribbean atmosphere—are now saying that it no longer appeals to them. All they see around them is concrete. Traffic has become a problem and they don't need the hassle. Many of them are selling their investments and moving to other less developed destinations where there is some degree of tranquillity and peace.

We have to be very careful. We have to balance between prosperity and development while at the same time maintaining those characteristics that made us very special over the years to not only visitors but to our own people as well.

Recently a group of the backbench members were invited by a group of local members of the restaurant association to sit down and be briefed as to what is going on in business activity in that area. I remember in my contribution on some motion or some issue that I mentioned according to my information tourism was down. I was scoffed at. I was jeered and basically told that I didn't know what I was talking about. But facts are facts. According to those businesses, some were experiencing a fall of as high as 50% compared to 1998. That is significant.

According to them, there are reasons for this fall off in business. They believe that the Cayman Islands are basically pricing themselves out of the market. They were telling us that with the recent revenue measures which increased duties on spirits and wines it is very common to have to pay as much as $10 for a drink at some of the major hotels. There is an argument that says if they want it they will buy it anyway. But despite what we are being told, the majority of our visitors are average, common people like you and me. They work all year to be able to come here to spend one week to ten days on vacation.

The other thing that is happening because of the high cost and the absence of average priced hotels, people who are coming here for a visit are coming for shorter periods of time. Apparently a lot of our visitor activity today is being generated through incentive groups. What they have is a package. Large companies, like Ford Motor Company and General Motors, and many other large corporations reward their outstanding performers with trips abroad. And the Cayman Islands have become a very popular destination for that type of activity. But the problem that causes is that it is a package, and a lot of the activities and services do not extend beyond the grounds of the hotel where they are staying.

For example, if they go to the Hyatt, they eat at the Hyatt, they play golf at the Hyatt, and any other activity they want can be booked right straight through the Hyatt. So your local entities see very little of that type of visitor.

According to them, long time and frequent visitors have mentioned that they are also concerned about the increase in criminal activity especially in the area of burglaries. They are also concerned about the traffic situation. I am going to address the traffic issue later on, but let me just say this: The Crewe Road Bypass and the Harquail Bypass extension will only bring temporary relief to the issue of traffic.

Those operators were saying that government should consider placing a moratorium on new applications for restaurants in this country because we have too many that are basically offering the same services. We have a good variety. We have good operators. And I believe that in order to ensure that our locally owned operators survive, government has to consider doing something in this particular area.

With the demise of the old Holiday Inn, the cost of local accommodation has risen tremendously. I was told that in the Hyatt's new development on the beach you can pay as much as $1,500 per night. That's a lot of money for a room! And that eliminates a lot of our visitor base. I recall back in January (and this is unheard of) where the staff of major hotels were getting two and three days because the visitor numbers were not there to support any great level of business activity. That caused a great deal of concern among our local Caymanians who are employed at these hotels.

For six months out of the year, December through June, activity is very good. They do very well by way of wages and gratuities. And then for the next six months they live off of what they made for the first six months during the high season. If they don't have a high season this year, then our people are in for a very long year and a very difficult time. It appears that there is very little concern in this regard. Those with responsibility and authority seem to not want to recognise that we do have a problem that needs to be addressed and they are hoping it will go away.

The Department and Ministry of Tourism have boasted over the last four or five years of annual increases in visitor arrivals. And they took credit for that activity. Now that we do appear to have a problem, they must be responsible enough to call a meeting with the persons involved in the industry, hear their concerns and attempt to address those concerns.

I believe that we have enough activity in this country at the present time to keep our people fully employed if nothing else happens for another 15 or 20 years. What we have to recognise is that when there is a slowdown in a particular area there is normally an opportunity in another area for employment. For example, if there is a slowdown in the construction industry it is very easy for those people to get jobs in construction related activities like maintenance, repairs and that type of thing. We cannot continue to build at such a rapid pace.

At the present time there is an excess demand for accommodation. That seems to be where most of the construction activity is. But we are going to arrive at a point where that activity or demand is met. And if there is ever a little slowdown, we will have people who have gone to the bank for financing sitting on their hands with unoccupied premises that they can't pay for because their tenants have moved on.

I recall that some time ago I brought a motion calling for marine surveillance and patrol. I am aware that the British government did give us a little vessel. I have never seen it, but I understand it is pretty well equipped. It is a fact that drug trafficking and the illegal importation of drugs continues to be a problem in this country. If you are patrolling what goes on through the airport, then the only other area it can come through is by way of illegal canoes that come in from Jamaica and other destinations. There is no shortage of illegal drugs in this country.

According to my information, cocaine is as common as anything is on the streets. You can probably get a hit now for a little as $2.50. So that tells us that there is an over supply of illegal drugs in this country. If government was really concerned and interested in really addressing this issue, if they approached the US, because I understand they have a pretty good relation with the drug enforcement agencies over there, they have all kinds of PT boats and other boats that they could probably give us that is fully equipped where we could be in a position to do a good job patrolling and interdicting those persons who chose to bring in drugs through the sea. We are catching some, but too many are slipping through unnoticed and uncaught.

Another area of great concern to Caymanians is the area of immigration. I hear a common comment that there are too many foreign persons working here; too many visitors who come here job hunting. It is too easy to get a work permit and there are too many people here from a particular destination. These are all concerns that I share as well. And one of the things that I am very disappointed with the National Team about is that in 1992 (and I don't have a copy of our 1992 manifesto) I recall that the issue of training was an issue that was discussed and mentioned on just about every one of our platforms, at just about every one of our district meetings. And the message was getting out there that we have to do something about training Caymanians.

I recall that just after the election just about everywhere we went people were saying that they were taking steps to put in place training programmes to train Caymanians, be it watersports or whatever. I was very encouraged by that kind of change in attitude. I recall that even the Minister of Tourism was working with the hotels and the hotels were prepared to work with him in regard to making their facilities available for training.

I recall that it wasn't long after we took office that there was a little complaint from the Chamber of Commerce that we were being too restrictive in regard to work permits and businesses were suffering, and the whole bit. And we opened up the floodgates in regard to work permits and up until now we haven't been able to close it.

Training? That's a bygone word, Mr. Speaker. I don't hear anybody talking about training any more—not even government—to the extent we should. It makes me feel good when I see young Caymanians taking their rightful position in our society. I recall just recently that we had a few young Caymanians from the Ministry of Development who came and appeared before us in regard to the youth and women's issues. I was very impressed with their professionalism. I was very impressed with their competence and their keen sense of interest. We need to do more to ensure that we have a greater number of this type of young Caymanian available in this country who can take a responsible position once they get the qualification and training they need.

We are making training available through scholarships. But the one thing we have to ensure is that when our young people go and spend four or five years abroad in order to get a qualification and a good education that when they return to this country there are opportunities available to them to reward them for their efforts and their sacrifices for those four or five years. It is becoming much more difficult for our young people returning from university to find suitable employment.

I had experience around New Year's eve. My wife and I were invited to a party and when I walked into that gathering, she and I had to remark that there were probably two or three people whom we recognised. If you don't think we have people in this country you are making a mistake. And I am not talking riffraff; I am talking about professional people. But many of those jobs that they are brought in to hold, if we had a proper training programme in place that is tied to a work permit over time some of our people will be able to take some of those very lucrative and well paying jobs. And that should be the objective and goal of any government in regard to its people.

What I am concerned about is the tendency in this country that as long as I am getting, me and mine are doing well, we couldn't care less about the rest. In this country we must continue to look out for the welfare of Caymanians at every level of society. Do you know what I have discovered? Once people know what the rules are, the chances are that they will comply. If you look at it strictly in terms of dollars and cents, it makes more sense for an entity doing business here to have a local person employed as opposed to someone being brought in from outside. Why? In most cases the local person is responsible for his own accommodation, you don't have to worry about airfares for him, there is no rental allowance, and all of the other perks that go along with these jobs.

If those entities can get someone on a work permit they will not take the time to invest four or five years in a local person to train them to take that position. They will never do it.

I was talking to a friend of mine the other day. He said, "John, let's be realistic. I hear you talking about training. But let's look at this thing realistically. For us to believe that somebody here on a work permit has a genuine interest in training a local Caymanian to take his job, you have to be crazy. It will never happen." His attitude was that we should get enough from those doing business here to be in a position to afford to train our own people. I am beginning to believe that is the direction that we must go.

The Speaker: Maybe this would be a convenient time to take the afternoon break?

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Yes sir.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.46 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.19 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The Third Elected Member for West Bay, continuing.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: The next area I would like to comment on is the area of potential difficulties in dealing with the OECD. The Cayman Islands have worked very hard to establish the reputable financial center that we have in this country. We have introduced relevant legislation to deal with illegal or criminal activity in respect of cooperation with other destinations in regard to certain types of illegal activities.

The first piece of legislation that comes to mind is the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty. I recall that was introduced back in the 1980s. Since that we have had legislation regarding money laundering. The commercial banks have tightened up their policy in regard to large cash deposits in order to attempt to discourage illegal activities that generate a lot of cash.

I recall in the early days that it was very common for members of staff of some banks to sit there all day and count cash brought in for deposit. Now, banks are required to report cash deposits in excess of $10,000. Unless the banks know you, most banks will not accept large cash deposits other than deposits generated through local businesses, like the supermarkets, restaurants, and that type of thing.

All of the major international banks have a presence here in the Cayman Islands. If the reputation here were not good that wouldn't happen. Those entities only associate themselves with first class financial centers. The other thing that has taken place is that through Executive Council and the office of the inspector of banks, now handled through the Monetary Authority, we have restricted the number of licenses that have been issued to private banks, that is banks owned by private individuals. We have spent (and continue to spend) lots of money on an annual basis promoting the Cayman Islands as a reputable financial centre. I think that at the present time we can boast of being the fifth largest financial centre in the world. That speaks well for this country because the financial community along with tourism is one of the two pillars upon which the business activities of this country are centered.

We are not interested in the business of hiding money here. I am quite sure that we still have individuals who come here to do business and they have a little money locally that is not declared. But that is not the majority of the activity that we have here in the Cayman Islands. I recall back in the early 1970s when I was in the office of the inspector of banks the number of offshore financial centres were many indeed. They were getting into the business of licensing banks strictly for the purpose of revenue. They had not regard to any supervision, no monitoring and as a result many of these destinations earned quite a reputation for illegal activity. Unfortunately, because we are a part of the Caribbean and because other destinations have that kind of reputation we kind of got thrown in the same pot with everybody else, despite efforts made on an individual basis in the Cayman Islands to promote and safeguard the reputation we have as an outstanding and reputable financial centre.

There's a lot of jealousy around. And rightly so because for a little country like the Cayman Islands, boasting of a population of 30,000 people to enjoy the type of reputation we do on the international scene is quite an accomplishment. Here in the Cayman Islands we boast of a very high standard of living and lots of services. If you can't find it in the Cayman Islands, chances are it doesn't exist. I was very comforted because I share a great concern in regard to the survival of our islands financially. I was very encouraged during the recent visit by Baroness Simmons who assured us that the Cayman Islands as far as the UK is concerned has a good reputation and should stand out legislation-wise and otherwise as an example for the rest of the other financial centres in this region. And because we fell directly under her responsibility she would do everything within her power and she also ensured us that the United Kingdom would fight to protect our interests in these islands.

I believe that it is the best interest of the United Kingdom to do that because even though we are a dependency of the United Kingdom, we haven't cost the United Kingdom anything since the early 1970s. We were disqualified in regard to interest free loans and that type of thing because of the financial activity and success we have enjoyed in this country. They can't say the same about some of their other dependent territories where they have to dig deep into their coffers to fund this and fund that. That has not been the case in regard to the Cayman Islands.

I am hoping, and I am also confident because of my faith in Almighty God that He will protect the welfare of these islands.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: May I interrupt you for a moment? I don't imagine you will be finishing any time soon.

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: No sir.

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4.30 PM, but before asking for the motion for the adjournment, I have received a written request from the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee that the committee be allowed to meet on Tuesdays while the Legislative Assembly is in session. According to Standing Order 72(8), I seek the leave of the House. So I will put the question that the Public Accounts Committee be allowed to meet on Tuesdays. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: THE STANDING PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE TO MEET ON TUESDAYS WHILE THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY IS IN SESSION.

The Speaker: I will now entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Wednesday at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Wednesday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.32 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM WEDNESDAY, 10 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
WEDNESDAY
10 MARCH 1999
10:15 AM

[Prayers read by the Honourable First Official Member]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Third Official Member who is overseas on official business, and the Third Elected Member for George Town who is overseas on a Parliamentary Seminar, and from the Fourth Elected Member from West Bay who is not well.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper...

POINT OF PROCEDURE

Mr. Roy Boddén: Mr. Speaker, on a point of procedure, sir. I wonder if you are in a position to advise the House as to the situation regarding questions. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there were sixty-odd questions outstanding. I noticed again this morning that there are no questions on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The only answer I can give is that apparently that was what was set down by the Business Committee as the idea is to try to finish the debate on the Throne Speech as early as possible and then get on to the normal business.

The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not just to find fault with the way things are being run but at all times when the House is in session there have always been question carrying over into the next sitting because time does not allow for the questions to be answered. And, sir, all is going to happen this time again is that they are going to mount up. Perhaps, sir, the Chairman of the Business Committee could explain what is happening as of now and maybe we could get an undertaking . . . because, certainly, if it continues the way it is now we are going to be completing this Sitting and a lot of questions will be left unanswered.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth month that we have been in this Honourable House. A very large amount of business has been brought over from November and as I get them, sir, the Business Committee puts them on.

However, let me say this, while we sit in this legislature it is very difficult for the ministries to operate because we are not in the ministry five days out of the week. So there has been a slowing down on what can be done in the ministries. It isn't too bad if you are even out the ministries or out of your work for a month—but this is the fourth month, sir. And the strain is coming on in all areas not just in this area.

Sometimes it takes a lot of time to get the answers to the questions. I mean the members are right, there are 68 questions that have come over from last time. Some have been answered. I answered some I think. The other members did. Two ministers really have none left. I put on several, sir, and the Third Elected Member for George Town was away. There are about six or eight that are ready for him. We had to actually take them off.

The only thing I can undertake to do, . . . mainly three of us have some left. And there are some official members who have some. I know they have told me that some official members would be ready for Friday, sir. I will do my best. That is all I can do.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that what is being said is taken in the right vein, sir. The point that is being made is that if 68 questions were carried over from the last sitting . . . and as far as I understand it, sir, it is not the ministers themselves who prepare the actual answers, the legwork is done by the people in the ministries. The ministers may add their final touches to it. Certainly, if these questions had been asked from several months before, there is no reason why the work to prepare the answers for those questions should not have been done by now. That is really what we are trying to say.

And, granted, we have been in here for the time that we have, but certainly if efforts were put forward while some ministers don't appreciate the questions from where we sit, sir, we find them to be a necessity with regards for us getting information. And certainly, the ministers and the government . . . and I hear the commitment but certainly they can do better than having days and days go by without questions being put on the Order Paper.

The fact that a member is away, sir, they know that the member is away so the efforts to get those answers should be made towards those members who are here if they have that latitude.

The Speaker: Item number 3 on today's Order Paper. Government Business. Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency, Mr. John Owens, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 19th February 1999.

Debate continuing, the Third Elected Member for West Bay.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. John Jefferson, Jr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In my opening remarks on Monday, I tried to make it clear that all is not well in the country—despite the claims of the elected representatives on Executive Council.

I mentioned my concerns and those shared by my people and residents alike concerning the issue of crime in this country and the threat it poses to our way of life and our continued prosperity. Mr. Speaker, concerning crime, I was sitting in my office again yesterday in West Bay and I had one of my constituents come by. That was one of the concerns that he expressed to me.

And I want to say thanks to the churches and other non-profit organisations that are doing their best to do whatever is necessary offer our young people an alternative with regard to activities that are wholesome, honest and that lend themselves to allowing them to grow up to be wholesome and reasonable citizens. I believe that this issue has become so serious in this country that it warrants our once again recommending minimum mandatory sentences for certain crimes.

I believe that with the crime of burglary, if someone knew if they were caught breaking into someone's premises that they were going to get a minimum of five to ten years, it would probably cause that person to think twice about carrying out that crime. It must be an awful experience, and most of these burglaries take place at night when you are probably at home sleeping, to be awakened by some noise and you are made aware that there is someone in your home. An awful experience, Mr. Speaker.

And you have got to keep in mind that anyone who takes the risk of coming into one's home is probably prepared to commit the crime of murder because they don't want to be caught. This also poses a serious threat to our people.

So I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to introduce some mandatory minimum sentence for the crime of burglary, and I would recommend maybe five years (it is happening too often) that we would in some way may be discouraging that type of criminal activity in this country. Now, I am aware that for the crime of burglary you can get up to life, but in most instances I have not seen those kinds of sentences passed down by the magistrates. It is normally three weeks to six months. So it appears we are not treating the crime as seriously as we should.

As much as has been done concerning the tightening of our legislation to discourage the criminal activity of illegal drug trafficking, under our laws the assets of someone who is convicted of such activity can be confiscated by the Courts and, that is, a home, land, cash, whatever. But if I am not mistaken there are no minimum sentences in place also for the crime of drug trafficking. I know there used to be. I believe that we need to start moving back in that direction concerning this type of criminal activity.

I believe we have to send the message that we are serious about addressing the issue of crime in this country. I am greatly concerned, Mr. Speaker, with what I see happening with criminal activity. Especially in my own community in West Bay, it appears that the entire community has been permeated by the scourge of drug trafficking and drug abuse. And I would urge the Police Commissioner and the Drug Squad to really place a new emphasis with regard to addressing this particular issue.

I personally believe that if we were really serious about addressing this issue that it would amaze us what could be accomplished. But it needs the co-operation of the Legislative Assembly, it needs the co-operation of the Police, it needs the co-operation of the Courts and it also needs the co-operation of the community in order to ensure that this thing works. I am aware that majority of the crimes in the area of burglary and theft are carried out by persons who are drug abusers, illegal drug abusers in order to support their habit.

My philosophy is that you either admit that you need help, and take advantage of the help that is available in order for you to kick your habit, or we are going to come down on you very, very seriously and you may be required to spend some time at Northward Prison. I believe that we need to do that in order to arrest this situation at the present time.

I remember when we took over in 1992 there was also concern with regard to criminal activity and the Legislative Assembly assisted by authorising additional personnel to be brought in by the Police. We put in place the task force to clean up some of the after hours activities. I think they called them "sessions" where a lot of illegal activities took place, that is, drug abuse, prostitution and other related criminal activities. And they really did a good job but it appears that we are slipping or we are losing focus on the issue of crime.

This is something that requires constant surveillance. It is like the mosquitoes, you know. We established a Mosquito Research Control Unit (MRCU) back in the 1960s and it is an on-going thing, it is an on-going investment. Every year we vote millions of dollars for the MRCU in order to control mosquitoes. We need to continue to recognise that crime requires an on-going battle, an on-going effort.

It doesn't take a whole lot of incidents involving maybe a visitor or two to smear our reputation with regard to a safe tourist destination. And that is what I am concerned about: That our people here continue to live in a crime free environment and our visitors are welcome to continue to be welcomed to come here to also enjoy our hospitality in a very safe environment.

I also touched on the issue of our concerns with regard to the OECD. At the end of the day I am confident that the Cayman Islands will fare very well in this exercise. I think once those parties who are bent on maybe attempting to destroy our reputation and our financial industry understand the level to which we have gone in order to ensure that we have a reputable and clean financial community, they will (unless they are hell bent on just destroying us) have to admit that we are doing what we have to do in order to fight illegal activity here. That is, Mr. Speaker, with regard to hiding the illegal proceeds of drug trafficking or laundering or what ever else. And I think we have done a good job in that area so at the end of the day I think we will fare fairly well with regard to this whole exercise.

Mr. Speaker, I did mention that according to my information, tourism is down. I took time out to touch base with some of the operators of tourist properties. And one operator told me, "John, business this year is basically flat with what we had last year but we are not making any money. In order words, we are not doing a whole lot of extra business. We have had to wheel and deal with regard to our rates just in order to encourage people to come."

The one complaint I hear over and over again (and he mentioned it again this morning when I spoke to him) is that the Cayman Islands are basically pricing themselves out of the tourist market. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the philosophy of the Department of Tourism and maybe even the ministry is that we are not catering to everyone here by way of tourism. But, Mr. Speaker, the majority of the visitors that I see are not wealthy individuals. These are people who are middle class who come here for a little holiday and probably work all year in order to be able to enjoy a week to ten days here in the Cayman Islands. The cost of accommodation has become ridiculous.

I was talking to another employee at one of the resorts and for an ordinary two-bedroom condo, and I am not talking anything fancy just your basics, in December, those rooms were renting for $650 a night. Now the average room rate is like $420 or $450 a night. And the experience at this particular resort was that for two weeks in January or February there was nobody because people just refused to pay those rates.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Hyatt has just spent a great deal of money putting up their new facilities on the beach. According to what I am told, they really did a good job. They have suites renting for $550, maybe $600 a night. I understand that they have one special suite that rents for $1,500 a night. Now, Mr. Speaker, how many average visitors can afford to stay in that kind of facility? And with the recent increase in revenue measures, that affected alcoholic beverages and that type of thing, and also food . . . food here is extremely expensive.

I know even on a personal basis I try to treat my wife maybe once a month to a little outing, and Mr. Speaker, I have to budget at least $100 for two persons for one night, that's once a month. Can you image being in a position where you are here for a week to ten days and every evening—and most times it is a family—looking at $150 - $200 a night just for food and beverages. It would not be too bad if the Cayman Islands was the only tourist destination, but every day there is a new location popping up on the scene to compete with the Cayman Islands including the United States.

Many Americans have the choice of staying right at home where they have very scenic views and a variety of activities—and for much less money. So a lot of people are opting to stay at home rather than to come to the Cayman Islands.

Like I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, just the other day we were invited to meet with a group of local business people who expressed their concerns with regard to business being down. Now, a lot of those businesses depend on visitors, and according to some of them, business was down as much as 50 percent compared to last year. Now, when you get that kind of fall-off in business, you do one or two things: either you go out of business or you cut back on your expenses, and the first place people start cutting is jobs.

The Director of Tourism and the Minister of Tourism are very eager when things are going good with regard to tourism to take the credit for it. Now, they must be responsible enough to take time out to address the issue of the down turn in tourism and the fall off in business that we are experiencing in this country.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I brought a motion some time ago and it was unanimously agreed upon. I was told that in order to implement it we were going to have to put in place the Trade and Business Licensing Board so we could better monitor it and that type of thing. But I called for specific moratoriums in certain areas. I also called for certain businesses to be reserved for, or restricted to, Caymanians only. Mr. Speaker, nothing has been done in this area. And I think the Minister of Tourism is also the Minister of Commerce so he must take the responsibility to see to it that some actions are taken in order to control the number of licensed businesses in any particular area.

With a population of about 30,000 residents you cannot support a very large business base. There is only so much to go around and we must do whatever we need to do in order to see to it that people who are involved in businesses in this country have a chance of surviving financially.

I don't know what the difficulty is in trying to protect the interest of our own people. I honestly don't understand that. The only place that it appears that that is not promoted is here in the Cayman Islands. If you go to Bermuda, they have certain businesses that are restricted specifically to Bermudans. If you go to United States, it is the same thing. There are certain things that you can't get into as a foreigner. Why shouldn't we take the same philosophy and attitude with regard to our own people?

Mr. Speaker, you know what concerns me? I have been preaching this for a very long time now. What concerns me is that if we don't address these issues at the present time when there is still an opportunity to do so, we are going to lose it all. People are frustrated, people are concerned with regard to what is going on in this country and they don't see any sign of leadership. There is no sense of direction given by the elected Government. So people are frustrated.

One person told me the other day, he said, "John, you know if Government doesn't start addressing the issue of the over supply of work permits and that type of thing that makes it so difficult for some Caymanians to get a job, . . . I hear the rumblings out there and the rumblings aren't good." We have a tendency in this country to not do anything until something serious happens, then we over-react rather than dealing with it in an objective manner. We over-react and do things that we shouldn't do just in order to try to correct the situation at the time.

This year's budget, Mr. Speaker, I think is something like $1.2M for official travel. This is one of the problems that we have. The Minister of Tourism and the Director of Tourism they spend too much time in the air rather than on the ground where they can address some of these issues. Mr. Speaker, let's see how capable they are now of addressing a situation that appears to have gone wrong with regard to tourism. They take credit when things are good, let them address the issue now.

Let them make the difficult decisions that have to be made in order to ensure that we continue to get our fair share of the tourism market in this country. Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of tourism with regard to employment of our people it has to be addressed. These concerns have to be addressed.

Back in January, I understand they almost had a riot at the Westin Hotel—the employees were very upset. Why? Because in the height of the tourist season, hours were being cut, people were getting two to three days off. Why? Because the business base was not there to support that level of employment. Now, if you get that type of action being taken in the height of the tourism season you can image what it is going to be like in the off season.

Those responsible for tourism have to spend more time addressing these issues. I know training does not particularly fall under the Ministry of Tourism but with regard to the tourism industry, he has a direct responsibility and the Director of Tourism shares that responsibility. They must ensure that they use their influence to see to it that the hotels have proper training programmes in place to train Caymanians to move up the ladder in the tourism industry.

We heard a lot of talk about it in 1992. Seven years later we still don't have a programme in place. Do you know what happens now, Mr. Speaker? The hotel operators are so comfortable with the Director of Tourism and the Minister of Tourism that they don't care any more. They continue to do what they feel like doing. They couldn't care less about giving a Caymanian an opportunity. And who does anything about it? Nobody does.

I was told this week or last week that one of my former colleagues, Mr. Gilbert McLean, who was employed by the Hotel and Condo Association, was recently fired. Why? Because one of the members—who is not a Cay-manian—just felt that they really didn't need him. They need an Englishman or an American in his position. 'We don't need him. We are not satisfied with your level of performance so we give immediate notice, you are fired. You can run to Labour Board, you can go to the Minister of Labour, you can go to the Minister of Tourism nothing is going to be done about it.'

Mr. Speaker, when that type of attitude prevails in our country that spells trouble. When you take that kind of attitude with a former member of the Legislative Assembly, you can image the chances the average person has—very little. Nothing has been done in the area of training. Nothing at all, Mr. Speaker!

Now, I see in the Throne Speech that there is a new training initiative being introduced. How many times are we going to introduce it? Let's stop talking about it! Let's get on with putting a proper programme in place. Every year I attend the graduation of the Cayman Islands High School where 200 to 300 students come out. Twenty percent probably go on to higher education. What happens to the rest? We are not taking our responsibility serious with regard to providing for these young people. We aren't! They disappear in the community and we hope they never surface because we have no genuine interest in their welfare.

We should have our own hotel training programme. The Government should have had a hotel of its own to use as a training base for our Caymanians. Bermuda has done it and it has worked very, very well. But, Mr. Speaker, those responsible are more interest in attending cocktail parties and functions offered by those in authority. That's what we are concerned about.

Mr. Speaker, the number of jobs that I have had to find on a personal basis for my people . . . that should not have to happen, Mr. Speaker. A job is advertised, the ad is normally tailor-made for a specific individual who is a non-Caymanian. But if they hear there is a MLA behind it, the chances are they will say, 'Okay, maybe we should provide a little opportunity here so we can get him off our back.'

Mr. Speaker, that should never be the position. The position that we enjoy in this country should be, our people come first and if there is anything else available then you bring in those people you need in order to fill those slots. That is not the case! Government regards work permits as a source of revenue. They are more concerned about the $350 that they get for a domestic work permit or a cashier or whatever more than they are concerned about the possibility that, that work permit holder may be replacing—or preventing—a young, qualified Caymanian. I am tired of it. And so are many, many Caymanians.

What has the Director of Tourism and the Minister of Tourism done concerning the issue of two or three large watersports operators controlling the watersports business? What have they done?

I remember one of my former constituents who was having a very difficult time. He went out and borrowed money to invest in a little boat in order to support himself and his family financially; spent money getting brochures printed up to promote his business; walked into the hotel lobbies in this country, and being a Caymanian... Mr. Speaker, those operators tell me that they cannot put their brochures on the racks. If they do they are told, 'I am going to take them and throw them in the garbage.' What has been done?

The Minister of Tourism got them to put a little rack in the hotels, and what happened? It still hasn't helped a whole lot. All that has happened is that those large operators with the concessions go in and take the brochures off the racks and throw them in the garbage. The Minister of Tourism has done nothing in order to address this issue.

This should be a priority as far as he is concerned because many of the watersports operators are Caymanians and they are from the district of West Bay! Nothing has been done! And with the demise of the old Holiday Inn where they use to pick up a couple of strays who wanted to go to North Sound to visit Stingray City or someplace else, even that little business is gone. It is not fair and I say shame on the Minister of Tourism and the elected representatives in government for not seeing to it that the interest of our people—that is our Caymanians—is protected.

Most of those hotels have a concession or franchise in place and the franchise is one of the big operators. Red Sails has most of the hotels tied up. Bob Soto's, Bayside Watersports, Mr. Speaker, that's it. And our people who have been employed in this area for 34 years go round like little beggars trying to get a little handout in their own country. It is a shame!

If I were the Minister of Tourism one of the first things I would have done when I took office is sit down with them and say, 'Well, okay, let me see the terms of your franchise agreement with these operators. When does it expire? Okay, a year, good! After a year I want you not to renew it because it has to be a free for all in the industry.' Mr. Speaker, we don't have anybody in Executive Council with that kind of courage. We don't! They are so concerned about pleasing every body . . .

It reminds me of that little story I mention often about the little boy, his father, and the donkey. They all tried to please one another and everybody else and they eventually all fell in the river. We don't have any leadership. We don't have anybody with that kind of courage in Executive Council. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am hoping in the year 2000 that our people will make the right decision to elect and re-elect the people who have their interest at heart.

A lot of time is spent travelling, enjoying the perks of the job rather than staying at home and addressing these issues that our people are faced with and experience on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, I have not been to Pedro Castle since it has been opened. But, from the information I got, it appears that it is a financial nightmare. There are no proper financial records; no proper documentation for work that was done. I understand that what happens is that government advanced the funds, I don't know [if it is by way of] local loans or general revenue for the construction of the place. The Caribbean Development Bank (CDB) then reimburses government for expenses that were incurred.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is my information that the Caribbean Development Bank has refused to reimburse government for certain expenses incurred for that project. Why? Because the documentation is very shoddy—or non-existent—and they can't give proper accounting for where the money has been spent and on what.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they did a good job on the project. I haven't been there since it has been opened but I understand that they even created rain, thunder, and lightning. But, Mr. Speaker, it is going to take more than that. It is my opinion that tourism is on automatic pilot. You know, you set your automatic pilot on the ship or an aircraft, make it kind of slide by itself—that is how we are operating right now. Those in authority have more important things to be engaged in.

Mr. Speaker, they are having a very difficult time determining what the assets are for that place because of the shoddy documentation. Shame, Mr. Speaker! A project that cost in the region of about $9M or $10M. Shame!

You know, Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to say, 'I made a mistake.' Government must be man enough if it makes a mistake to say, 'We made a mistake. We need to do something about it.'

If government does not take steps to reverse the recent decisions in regard to revenue increases or duties on those products that tourism depends on, it is going to kill tourism in this country. It is going to kill tourism! But I guess they are not going to be around after the year 2000 anyway. So what? Make somebody else pick up the pieces. Make someone else be responsible for finding the solutions. They had their headache, let someone else worry about it. It is not a very good attitude, not the right philosophy if you are responsible.

Mr. Speaker, we are fast losing our appeal as a premier tourist destination. When I go to Miami, I don't go to Miami Beach. You know why? Even though that is where the beach is, it is a concrete jungle. That is all the Cayman Islands have become. Now, it is going to move off Seven Mile Beach because there is not very much left there and it is going to move to the other districts. So you are not going to only have it on Seven Mile Beach but you are going to have it all over the island. Why?

You mean we don't have a plan? We don't have a vision as to what we want in our country or for our country? Mr. Speaker, not only visitors are talking, our people are concerned with regard to what they see going on. Destruction of the natural habitation, vegetation; the mangroves and all the other things. They are concerned about over-populating the place. Every place you look, there is a foreign face either visiting or working here. They are concerned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Cayman Islands have always had a reputation for welcoming people. We will continue to do that. But we must be sensitive that we have to have a good balance. We have to maintain a good balance, our people have to feel comfortable, our people have to feel confident about continuing to be a part of what is going on because the day that our people say, we have had enough, you and I and everyone else are going to have to find something else to do.

You can't even run back to Nicaragua any more because the Minister for Agriculture—my good friend there from East End—would not even give us a little permit, a little licence so that we can go down and get a couple of green turtles to support ourselves...

[The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources rose]

The Speaker: [Addressing the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town] Would the honourable member give way?

Hon. John B. McLean: I need to answer the member on this one because it is really not for the minister to do this. I would say that I like turtle meat as much as anybody else. Whilst being responsible for the Turtle Farm, the trade in green turtles has been banned under the Convention of CITES. The member knows, because we have discussed it many times. I cannot authorise anything, neither can my ministry nor can the government as long as we are party to CITES. And we will be a part of CITES until the UK says we cannot because we fall under the same umbrella of the United Kingdom Government.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John Jefferson, Jr: Mr. Speaker, the point I wanted to make was that we don't have very many options of going back to the way of life that we enjoyed many, many years ago. We cannot go back there. Those options are no longer available to us.

I am aware that there are some countries who are a part of CITES where concessions have been made to allow them to continue to trade in areas that they have known and done for many, many years. But we won't go down that road this morning, Mr. Speaker. When there is new leadership in Executive Council, we will pursue those possibilities.

[Inaudible interruption]

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: Exactly!

The next area I would like to move to is the area of roads. We, as the backbench, have supported certain improvements to our road system. As far as I am concerned, these are temporary measures. We have agreed to fund the Smith Road, or was it the Crewe Road Bypass, some $5M - $6M, in order to at least relieve some congestion in traffic coming out of the East. And we agreed to extending the Harquail Bypass beyond the Galleria Plaza in order to avoid traffic coming out of Galleria and West Shore and Wendy's and the other establishments along Seven Mile Beach. These are temporary measures.

I would daresay that we have 20,000 vehicles in this country. I am told that there is an average of 250 or 450 (I can't remember the exact figure I heard) vehicles coming into this country every week. Our young people want to finish school and find themselves a job. One of the first things they want to purchase is a vehicle. I would daresay any elected representative in this country who has the guts to bring a motion calling for a moratorium on importation of cars or vehicles would lose his seat tomorrow. Would lose his or her seat tomorrow! So, Mr. Speaker, what is the solution? Let us be honest. What options do we have available?

If you are not going to stop the importation of cars and you have limited resources, you can't build $100M highways. And even if you do that, that is a temporary measure. Our people have to recognise that if they are going to enjoy the benefits of owning a vehicle they are going to have to suffer a little traffic congestion. One just goes with the other. It is a fact of life.

I believe that government can help, not by building more roads but by introducing new initiatives—flexi-hours. Why is it that a bank has to open at 9:00 a.m. and close at 5 p.m.? Or Government opens at 8:30 a.m. and closes at 4:30 p.m.? Why is it that we have to go to school from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.? No reason, Mr. Speaker.

My wife went to school in New York. And in New York has a lot of people, many students. It's the same thing: budget restraints. What they do in their school system? They stagger the hours. She started at 7:00 a.m. She got off at 2:00 to 3:00 in the afternoon. There is another tier that comes in maybe at 10:00 a.m. or 11:00 a.m. using the same classroom facilities and they go until 4:00 p.m. – 5:00 p.m. We can do the same thing here, Mr. Speaker.

Why do we have to talk about spending? I will look up my statistics, but it is in the region this year and next year of some $16M . . . well, more than that on new schools. No reason at all, Mr. Speaker, after 3:00 p.m. in the afternoon those places are closed. Why is it that we don't try to take creative actions in order to first of all fully utilise our facilities and at the same time assist with traffic congestion?

It is amazing, once our public and our private schools are out on holiday, we immediately see a change in traffic congestion. Immediately!

One of the things that government could do is introduce a policy for bussing from the districts. Require any student who is going to the Middle School or the High School or Triple C to ride a bus. What happens, you have so many parents and half of them only have one person in the car plus a child who jumps in a car every morning to go to school. That means that fewer vehicles will be on the road.

The other thing we can do, Mr. Speaker, is start building some of these high schools in the districts. Now, when the decision was made to centralised education sometime ago, I think it was a very positive one. One of the problems that we had was segregation. One district against the next. Why? Because you didn't mix and mingle as a people. That is not the case today. Our people are too mobile for that to happen. But if, for example, we had a middle and high school somewhere along the Seven Mile Beach/ West Bay Corridor that could house our own students in our district it would help.

If we had a school (and it doesn't have to be a very big school) to house our students coming out of Bodden Town, North Side, East End, somewhere in that area, it would help. We have to be creative. We need to take new initiatives in order to continue to make this country attractive to visitors and residents alike. We have been talking about this for a long time but nobody seems to listen to what has to be done—especially the government.

Health Services is the next area that I would like to move to. I still regard the present minister as someone who has done a good job in carrying out his responsibilities. As a result of his programmes, we now have in every district proper district health clinics that are properly staffed. They provide a very convenient, professional service to our people.

I know in West Bay the residents are tickled pink because they can come home at 7:00 in the evening, and can go down to the clinic and there is a doctor. And they can sit rather than having to fight the traffic coming into town to the old clinic up here, the old George Town Hospital. It is not necessary anymore, Mr. Speaker. A lot of these ailments or concerns can be dealt with at the district level. That is very good, Mr. Speaker. It speaks well for the minister and his staff.

The minister reminded me that this initiative in health was started by my colleague from West Bay when he was Minister of Health, and that he must be given credit as well. I am not one of those individuals who has a problem giving people credit for what they do. I don't have a problem with that. I don't have an ego. That's not my concern. My concern is as long as the facilities and the services that my people need are provided, I couldn't care less who gets credit for it. I am prepared to give credit where credit is due.

I understand this month we will officially open the new health facility in George Town. I have only heard positive comments with regard to that facility. I think one reason for that is because of the present minister's approach to that project. The staff was involved, their input was considered so they felt that they have been a part of the whole project. And they are beaming. I mean, you talk to any member of staff at George Town Hospital now, and they are beaming. Why? Because somebody listened to what they had to say and as a result they can see these things being accomplished. The hospital will be opened sometime this month. Like I said that speaks well for the minister.

There are other areas that he is responsible for that have to be addressed. I am aware that he is working on those as well. We need, for example, a residential facility for our mental health patients. We have many of them. It is amazing how many we have. They need some place where we can house them so that they can get their proper medication and care and the whole bit. We need a residential mental health facility.

I am glad to see that it finally appears that we are going to have our own residential Drug Rehab Centre. We needed that a long, long, time and it appears that it is becoming a reality. I think in this year's budget, the minister has been given extra money to ensure that that programme can be accelerated.

I know a number of young people whose parents call me and say, 'Mr. Jefferson, my son has a problem. My daughter has a problem. What facilities, what services are available?' I normally just refer them to Cayman Drug Counselling Centre, and say, 'Start there. There is still a programme in place that if you need the residential services then they will send you somewhere else in order to make sure that you get the treatment you need.' But, Mr. Speaker, that is a very expensive alternative. If we have our own facility locally then we can do much more for many more of our people.

There is no use in attempting to hide the fact that we have a serious problem here with drug abuse. A young man came to see me the other day and he said, "Mr. Jefferson, I have gone through the entire gambit. I want to get my act together. I recognise that I need help and I want you to help me get my feet back on the ground." Our people need help in this area.

Then the courts will have an alternative to Northward Prison in regard to sentencing these people. Why? Because most of the people who are drug abusers, do not have any control over their actions. Not that they are not responsible for their actions, but they have no control over their actions. It is a very, very difficult condition. I have not experienced it personally, but members of my own family have had a problem in that area. They would steal, they would sell their mother or their father, and it does not matter. That is how desperate those persons are. So I am glad to see that soon we will realise a proper residential facility.

I am also pleased that the minister and his staff took note of de-centralising the drug counselling services. In other words, at your district health centre you can attend sessions that will assist you with drug abuse and alcohol abuse and all of that. That's very, very positive and I commend the minister and his staff for those initiatives.

I was pleasantly surprised the other day. When I was at my office at the West Bay Town Hall, a member of staff came over from the district health clinic. He said, "I am one of the ambulance drivers (or attendants) over there."

I said, "Do you mean we have our own district ambulance?" I didn't know it, Mr. Speaker. I knew we had ordered it but I was not aware that the service was in place. Very positive, Mr. Speaker, these are things that the First Elected Member from West Bay and I had fought for since we were elected. It took a long time in coming but finally we are getting some of these things for our people at the district level.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned crime. I believe that our drug counselling services are going to have to work very closely with the police to address this issue of drug abuse because one must help the other.

Despite the criticism and forecasts of doom by certain members of society who said we couldn't build a hospital on the present site, the challenge that lies ahead is that once that facility is opened, it carries itself financially. Our people have to recognise that there is no free lunch. If we need a service that is offered we must be prepared to pay for it. Now, that doesn't mean that those who cannot afford to pay for the service will be deprived of medical attention. There is still a provision to take care of that, Mr. Speaker. But those persons who can pay must pay.

I am of the opinion that the hospital should be in a position where it can probably curb its own operational expenses to a large extent. One of the good moves that was made recently was the introduction of a National Health Insurance Programme where everybody is obliged to have insurance coverage. This will make it much more convenient for people to pay for those services. When you go to the hospital you present your card, they bill the insurance company, and the hospital gets paid.

I was talking to one of my constituents who had been to Baptist Hospital, and to some of the other facilities that Government has an arrangement with. He said, "Mr. Jefferson, let me tell you, Baptist Hospital doesn't have any better facilities than we have right here in the Cayman Islands." As a matter of fact, one of the doctors up there said, "Why is it you are coming here when you have a facility back home which is much better than ours and you can get basically the same service there?"

That is the goal that we should work towards, Mr. Speaker. We cannot provide all services but we must be in a position where most of the health needs in this country can be taken care of locally.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I was amazed when I read in the Auditor General's report (and that is still confidential, we have not dealt with it) that outstanding medical bills (and this was the 1997 accounts we are talking about) are in the region of $32 million. If we had those funds collected today, we would not have to borrow any money. Why? Because we didn't have the facilities and equipment necessary to address many of these trauma situations and we were forced to refer to Baptist Hospital in Miami. So I am pleased with what I see going on in the area of health and, like I said, now it remains to be seen whether or not the new facility can pay for itself.

I am also pleased that this year we have budgeted for a proper remand centre for our young people. Mr. Speaker, at the present time our youngsters are held in custody at the old West Bay Police Station. If we don't want to introduce a youth to crime, then why are we forced to house our juveniles at a Police Station?

First of all, the police don't want them there. Why? Because it disrupts their whole operation. I was called there one evening by one of the police officers in charge. He said, "Mr. Jefferson, I just want you to come and see what we are experiencing here." They apparently had a couple of these rowdy juveniles in custody. They threw water at the police, and whatever else they could find. They are juveniles so they are not allowed to go in there and put those young people in place, discipline-wise. They can't. I am very pleased to see that our plans are progressing with a proper remand centre for our troubled juveniles.

The Speaker: When you reach a point where it will be convenient to break, we will take the morning break.

Mr. John Jefferson, Jr: Yes, right now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.24 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John Jefferson, Jr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I go on to the next area of my contribution, allow me to go back and mention something that I failed to address when I was talking about tourism regarding the present situation of beach access along the Seven Mile Beach. It is my information that some past government brought an amendment to the relevant law to change the definition of the high water mark.

It is my information that prior to the amendment to the law the high water mark was defined as where the beach meets the vegetation. Along Seven Mile Beach and other beaches that was sometimes 30 feet to 40 feet from the water, which literally meant that no property owner along Seven Mile Beach had the legal right to refuse anyone from walking the beach. The amendment that was brought, as I understand it, basically changed that definition to where high tide now extends along Seven Mile Beach.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here in the Cayman Islands we don't have very huge tide swings. In order words, when high tide occurs, it might change one or two feet and in high tide the water probably comes up three to four feet. Now, Mr. Speaker, that has caused a real problem in this country. What is happening along Seven Mile Beach at the present time is that the property owners are starting to cordon off their property. Legally speaking they could run a fence probably two feet or three feet from the water edge and be legal about the whole situation.

Now, for the people who have enjoyed unbridled, unrestricted access to our beaches to be faced with the present situation is totally unacceptable. But what do we do at the present time? If we go back now and change the definition to where it was, foreign investors along Seven Mile Beach are going to accuse us of stealing their property.

I honestly believe, even though the Minister of Tourism or any other responsible minister (maybe for lands) doesn't have any legal footing to stand on, they should at least attempt to establish some type of forum where the property owners along Seven Mile Beach can come to some kind of concession where it is recognised that they own the property. But we are not happy with their cordoning off their property with rope or fence or anything else. It just looks bad. So I trust that whatever can be done to address that situation will be done.

I am also aware that there has been much dialogue and discussion on the mid-day radio programme concerning this issue and I have even seen a few articles in the press by local Caymanians who are concerned with this situation. But it is amazing what has been done in this country because of greed for money.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to go on and make a few comments with regard to the Ex-Prisoner Assistance

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.13 AM

Programme. I am pleased to see this. As a matter of fact, I think it in was my first term between 1988 – 1992 that I brought a motion basically asking government to consider establishing such a programme. Unfortunately, many of our young people find themselves involved in criminal activity. They go to Northward Prison, and despite their good intentions and their genuine interest in getting back into society, many of them have had very, very unfavourable experiences.

They can't find a job because any place that they go the employer requires a police record. When they produce a police record, Mr. Speaker, and there is a conviction for drug abuse or burglary or whatever, in most cases they are not given an opportunity for employment. I have not seen the programme in action as yet, but I trust that the minister responsible . . . and hopefully it has a proper co-ordinator or director.

It has to be a very aggressive programme and by that I mean whoever is responsible has to sit down with the employers in this country and say, 'Some of our young people have had a problem. They made mistakes. But as a community we must do whatever is necessary to try to give them a second chance.'

I am aware that the Department of Environment has employed lots of these ex-prisoners and they are doing a good job. And it gives those persons a new opportunity, a second chance to do what is right. It allows them to have some degree of dignity, self-worth, and respect.

I honestly believe that in addition to being employed by other private employers, many of these prisoners could be also employed in other areas of government. For example, on an annual basis we have a huge maintenance programme by way of the schools, other public buildings, the beaches or road corridors and that type of thing. There is no reason why even before they are brought back into society—even while serving at Northward Prison—that we could not utilise more of the skills and talents that we have housed at Northward Prison to address many of the needs that government spends hundred of thousands of dollars, maybe millions of dollars a year, in order to provide as far as a service is concerned.

We have a lot of talented people—a lot of talented Caymanians—sitting in Northward Prison. I want to applaud whoever is responsible for initiating this programme and seeing to it that it is put in place. I trust that government will get the type of co-operation necessary from the private sector in assisting ex-prisoners with regard to employment.

Mr. Speaker, the other area that I want to move to now is education. Let me start by offering a little story with regard to education. It goes something like this: There was a little shepherd. He was bored, and he decided that he was going to create some excitement. One afternoon while he was sitting out there on the hill watching his sheep, he cried, "Wolf! Wolf!" Automatically the residents in the community ran out with their shotguns or whatever else they had to help him deal with the issue of the wolf.

When they got there, he said, "Well, he just ran back in the bush." The next day he decided to do the same thing. The residents again ran out to deal with the wolf, there was no wolf.

But do you know what happened one day? While he was sitting there minding his own business, a real wolf came out of the woods and killed a few of his sheep. He was terrified. He shouted at the top of his voice but nobody listened to him.

The moral of that story is this: If you promise hollow promises long enough, pretty soon people will get to the stage where they don't believe what you are saying. From talking to the persons involved in the area of special education, that is the attitude prevalent at the present time among members of staff who are responsible for providing those services.

I am particularly going to address the needs of the Lighthouse School, the Sunrise Centre and the Early Intervention Programme. I would like to start with the Sunrise Centre, which is located in my district of West Bay, and basically give us some current statistics with regard to that programme.

It is an adult training programme for our people who have special needs. By that, I mean those who are physically and/or mentally handicapped, and those who have other special needs. The Sunrise Centre is an old renovated teacher's cottage in West Bay. We now have 23 adults in that programme that is still housed in that little facility. I have visited that facility on a number of occasions and I hear the same complaints over and over again. This goes back to 1988—this is now 1999.

Mr. Speaker, you have very devoted members of staff at that facility the majority of which are Caymanian. You have one young lady who has been there for 20 years. She was one of the founding staff members in that programme. You have another West Bay resident, a Caymanian, who has been there for 13 years. You have another young West Bayer who has been there for three years, plus you have the Director. These people toil under very severe circumstances.

They don't have the facilities available to provide the kind of service that these persons need. One of the programmes that they would like to offer there is a little programme where the residents in that facility are taught living skills. By that I mean, having a little kitchen area where they teach the residents how to fix their own breakfast, being able to maybe fry a little egg, fry a piece of chicken or whatever. That is not possible in the present facility. They just don't have the space.

It is a very congested area that does not allow that type of activity to take place. The facility itself needs repair and renovating. It is leaking. At least, until we can find an alternative facility, take care of the one we have, make it as comfortable as possible. It is a fire hazard, Mr. Speaker, it has been basically condemned by the Fire Department. Some piece of equipment has been stored near the exit. It is a fire hazard!

If you ever have a little accident in the kitchen there and you have 23 residents all trying to get out at the same time we are going to have a problem. Many of these students are crippled. And part of their programme is physiotherapy. They need proper exercise. I understand at the present time they have one staff member from the West Bay Primary School who volunteers a half hour a week to make sure that the students can go on the field and maybe walk around and, you know, just exercise and that type of thing. A half-hour a week!

At the present time, many of the residents there have a problem with speech. You can hardly understand what they are saying. But if they had a speech therapist available to them on a daily basis that could work with them, it would improve their communication skills. There is no such specialist available to those students. They need a full-time speech therapist as a part of that programme.

The other problem that they have is that the bus they use to transport the students back and forth . . . I think they go into the district and actually pick them up from their homes and bring them into the centre and do whatever they have to do there and then take them back home. The bus that they have available to those students doesn't even have a special lift that goes along with providing a transportation service to that type of individual.

One student is severally physically handicapped. What happens? They have to take him out of his wheelchair. They have to physically pick him up, put him in the bus and bring his wheelchair afterwards. Mr. Speaker, how much would it cost to have that bus equipped with a lift where the student is rolled onto the lift, the lift is raised and he goes straight in the bus?

The issue that I would like to close with, Mr. Speaker (like I mentioned, I have a 12:45 commitment) is that I am aware that the First Elected Member from West Bay has . . . I have been since 1988, I don't know when he started trying to get an adjustment in the salary of those long-term members of staff there who have not had an increase in their salaries since they have been there. Probably, Mr. Speaker, because they are not qualified teachers so they don't fit into any specific professional salary scale. They are just paid an allowance and that is it.

The Speaker: At this time we shall suspend until 2:15 p.m. for lunch.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12:24 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2:50 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John Jefferson, Jr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we took the lunch break, I was dealing with some of the needs of the Sunrise Adult Education Programme. I mentioned that there is a need for a full-time speech therapist. There is also a need for a full-time physiotherapist and some of the necessary basic equipment for the proper exercise for these special students.

I also mentioned that since I was elected in 1988 . . . and I am aware that the First Member from West Bay who was elected in 1984 also has been trying without any great deal of success to get government to look at making some adjustment in the salary of the Caymanians who have dedicated so many years of their lives to that programme. Believe you me, it takes a real special person to even want to work in that type of programme. And to have to work in that type of programme at the salaries that they are being offered is totally unacceptable.

I brought it to the attention of the minister on a number of occasions. I think it was shortly after the 1996 elections (or after the 1992, I can't recall), I was encouraged that there was going to be some resolution to this problem. We were told that the Sunrise Centre as far as the salaries are concerned would be placed under the Social Services Department and that they could recognise some adjustment in salaries because they were moving them from the Education Ministry where they don't qualify as qualified teachers.

Under the Social Services Department such adjustments in salaries could be recognised and awarded. Mr. Speaker, it was in 1996. That was three years ago. If it had been 1992 that would have been seven years ago—and still nothing has been done. Nothing!

I remember when my wife and I were starting our family. One of the concerns that we shared was that we have healthy children. And I thank God that I do have healthy children. But it appears that in order to get any assistance in certain areas somebody has to be personally affected in order to see the need for the service. By that, I mean if I was the Minister of Education or the Minister of Health or Social Services and I had a son or daughter who required these services, I would have more of an incentive to see to it that such facilities were made available. But that should not be the criteria on which decisions are made to provide assistance in this very special area.

I thank those parents who are involved in that programme for their support and for the hours of commitment and sacrifice that they give on a personal basis to ensure that the programme runs as well as it does under such server circumstances. It really has disappointed me that we don't have anyone with the genuine interest in seeing to it that the necessary facilities and the salary adjustments are taken care of. It appears that no one really cares about this programme, that is, those with the responsibility.

We still don't have any idea when a new facility for the Sunrise Centre will be built or located. I guess they will have to continue to do as well as they can under the very harsh circumstances and working conditions that they presently experience in that programme.

Mr. Speaker, the Lighthouse School is another facility that we have talked about for many, many years. From the time I came into this House it was mooted as one of the needs in this country because we do have a lot of special needs students in our society. I don't see that amount decreasing anytime in the future. With the advent of drug abuse and the other abuses that we have in this society, we are going to have more of our kids born with special needs.

It was brought to my attention this morning that the staff at the Lighthouse School are very discouraged because there has been a cut in their basic budget. They operate on a shoestring budget. There are certain pieces of equipment and certain facilities that they can't even make available that are so essential for these special needs students because there is no money allocated for those pieces of equipment and services.

In this year's budget there is something in the region of about $3M budgeted for a new Lighthouse School. And that is encouraging because on a number of occasions I have visited that facility. I am always amazed at what they have been able to accomplish under such cramped conditions. But this is another area of special need that I believe should have been dealt with in a much more expeditious manner than it has been.

The other area about special needs as far as education is concerned is the Early Intervention Programme. I must applaud those persons who are involved in this programme for their level of commitment, dedication, and sacrifice. They operate and function under very, very severe conditions indeed. In giving an idea of what we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, I am told that there are three members of staff and some 90 children involved in the programme.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are told in the conventional classroom that maybe 18 or 20 students to one teacher is a good ratio. How in the world . . . what kind of ratio do you have with three members of staff being responsible for some 90 kids with special needs? What makes it more difficult to deal with is that in my own district, that is, the district of West Bay, we have 15 students that have been identified as special needs students. And in West Bay, we don't even have a little central facility where the people who are involved in this programme will say, 'Okay, if you have a special needs child that is part of the programme bring him to the old clinic in West Bay. That is going to be our central location and we will administer our programme from there.'

No, Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is only one centre available for this programme and that is in George Town. So if you have a need in West Bay for a child to be a part of that programme, they have to be picked up in West Bay brought to town in order to take advantage of the service. In this day and age that is totally unacceptable. We need a residential facility in West Bay. There is also a need for a residential facility for just basic care for some of these students. What they have recognised with these students is that some mornings when they go to pick the student up some of them have not been properly bathed, and their clothes haven't been changed. Just basic care has not been available to them.

I am thinking in terms of the facility that government has for its juveniles and those kids who need residential home care. A similar facility could be made available for these special needs kids, especially those who need that type of care. Now many of these special students live at home and have parents who care for them very, very well. And it eventually works very well, in that the specialist can go into the home or into the centre and deal with that particular child and at the end of the day the child goes back into his own home. But there are certain students who require more than that level of care.

The other problem that has been identified with respect to this programme is that they need their own speech therapist or at least the services of a speech therapist with their speech and communication skills. There is no such specialist available according to my information.

There is also a need for a co-ordinator for the programme. By that, I mean someone who is responsible for organising the programme between the different districts and ensuring that the staff complement and responsibilities are carried out in an efficient manner. No such person is associated with this programme.

There is a need for a physiotherapist for this programme. Many of these kids have physical problems with walking and they need specialist services available to them. In this country where we boast of so much wealth and such a high standard of living, we have to ensure that basic care is made available to all members of our society especially those members of our society who have special needs.

The other area of special needs is the unit for the hearing impaired. I understand that there are approximately ten students involved in this programme located at the George Town Primary School. They had a teacher employed specifically with the skill to deal with the hearing impaired. Do you know what happened recently, Mr. Speaker? That teacher has been taken out of the unit for the hearing-impaired and put in a conventional classroom.

That programme for the hearing impaired at the present time is not in a position to function properly. There is nobody with the skills necessary to ensure that these students who are involved in the programme get the basic training that they need in order to be able to function as responsible citizens in our society. That does not speak well for a government that on an annual basis boasts of revenue in excess of $300M.

Do you mean that we don't have the interest and the care to see to it that these special programmes have the resources, the facilities, the equipment necessary in order to function properly? It does not speak well for us, Mr. Speaker. And it does not reflect well on those in authority responsible for education.

I understand one of the difficulties that has been identified is the recruitment process here in the Cayman Islands—which is ridiculous. It can take six to nine months to fill a position by the time you go through all the red tape and that type of thing. If you happen to lose a teacher during the year, it probably takes about six months to fill that position.

One of the difficulties that these programmes are experiencing is that in the summertime, I think in July and August, these specialists are not paid for their services. In July and August they go out and find employment elsewhere to continue to support themselves. It also means that if such a person were available here in the island and the services were needed, you wait to bring them on in September or October or whenever the financial year starts because that is when they are being paid, rather than being in a position where you can take advantage of them whenever they are available including July and August.

Are these needs not being met because of the lack of financial resources? Or is it because of the lack of interest by those who are responsible for seeing to it that the proper budgetary request are approved and these programmes are properly funded?

I just want to encourage all those staff members who are involved in these special programmes to continue to do the best that they can under the very severe and sometimes harsh working conditions because our special needs students need their attention. The message that I want to get across is that the educational needs of all must be met in this country—not just those students involved in mainstream education.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to turn to education in general. I would like to preface my comments by saying that in this country we have been very blessed and fortunate to have the very capable and committed teachers that we do in the classrooms. At the end of the day, regardless of amount of money we spend in this particular area, the teacher remains the most important component in the education process. I have been very disappointed with the lack of leadership and support from the ministerial level and from the level of the Educational Department.

Mr. Speaker, I heard that one of the worse decisions made in this country over the past three years has been the appointment of a non-Caymanian Chief Education Officer. I think it was during my debate on the budget address that I touched on this issue. I didn't go into great detail because at the time I really didn't have all my facts together and I didn't want to say anything that was not correct.

But what is sad is that our present Chief Education Officer—who I understand was recruited to fill a position on the basis that he had all this experience in strategic planning that he would prove to be an asset to the programme. I think the position that he had applied for was termed a MMP. I don't know what it stands for, but it is a senior position in the Education Department. And I understand that there were six other Caymanians who were all officers I think in the Education Department or involved in classrooms in public schools who applied for the position. But he got the position because he had this experience in strategic planning.

It is sad to say but it appears that this Officer has a problem with regard to delegation. I met with the education officers the other day. We have probably ten or 11 of them there, all at the Education Centre. There is no delegation. I mean if this gentleman needs to run an errand, rather than say, 'John, I want you to run this errand for me,' he does it himself.

I am told that since January, Mr. Speaker, and this is only March, he has already attended four educational conferences. The sad thing about it is that these educational conferences are dealing with strategic planning and that type of thing and you have members of staff who are employed in this area and it could have been a tremendous benefit for them to have attended these seminars and get the input and the views of other people involved in this area. No! He goes himself.

If the other members or officers in the Education Department were not responsible enough to say, 'Let's make sure that education continues to progress in this country,' as far as he is concerned, education is on automatic pilot—it waits until he gets back.

It appears like he never gets anything done. As far as I am concerned that is not good enough for us in this country. When you take into consideration the investment that we have made, and continue to make in education, we should demand the very best expertise. There is a saying in the Bible that a prophet is not really appreciated in his own country. And that is true even here. The position he was brought in to fill . . . one of the officers who applied for the position—but did not get it—is now called upon to fill that position and is doing a very good job in that area.

Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged that steps are being taken to appoint a young Caymanian who I have a great deal of respect for as the Chief Education Officer designate. I understand that she will be joining the department (hopefully in the summer) to work along with this gentleman for a year. I don't know what she will learn from him. I can't see her learning a whole lot. But because of her interest in education and in our youth, we will have somebody there who at least cares.

Mr. Speaker, the area of strategic planning was a big thing. I remember the fanfare that was involved in the launching of this educational strategic planning initiative. And we had a lot of good people involved in that process. I think they volunteered and they worked very hard in order to produce a document they felt was necessary to improve our educational programme and our product here in the Cayman Islands. When it comes to the implementation stage of the programme, there are certain things that were promised.

One of the things promised was supply teachers who were inherently involved in the programme to work along with the strategic planning team. What is important, what is essential is that we have as many qualified Caymanian teachers as possible involved in this process because of the cultural influence necessary to that particular programme.

What has happened [is that] no supply teachers have been provided. In order for the programme to go forward they basically have to work at it after hours. In other words, after they spend all day in a classroom then they are required to make themselves available after hours to assist with the strategic planning programme. It has slowed down the programme, Mr. Speaker. It has added to the cost of the programme, because on weekends and after hours we have to pay people overtime for their services.

I wait to see what happens in this area, but those persons who are involved in the strategic planning process at the present time are very frustrated indeed. They are not getting the level of support that they need. They are not getting the assistance that they were promised and, Mr. Speaker, if it wasn't that they were very, very devoted and committed individuals, chances are they would move somewhere else for employment.

I think one problem that has been caused in education is the launching of the Vision 2000 campaign. The Permanent Secretary of Education has been designated as the person responsible for seeing to it that the Vision 2008 Programme is a success. I must say she is doing a tremendous job in this area. But what should have happened, Mr. Speaker, if we were going to take away that type of individual from education, somebody else then should have been designated as acting Permanent Secretary for Education to ensure that the programme in education continues.

It is very difficult for that individual to be responsible for the Vision 2008 initiative and to carry out her responsibilities as Permanent Secretary for Education, seeing to it that the strategic plan that has been launched for education is also kept on track. I wait to see what is done in order to address these needs. But, like I said in my opening remarks, thank God we have good teachers in the classrooms that are able to keep the educational programme on track, at least on that level.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Community College has been established for some nine or ten years now. I am a little disappointed that with the desperate need for a proper teachers' training programme to train Caymanians interested in getting into teaching that it has not yet been established at that college. That should have been a priority. I would daresay, especially at the secondary level, that 70% of the staff is non-Caymanian. Despite all of the efforts and the genuine interest, no one cares for our children like our own people. No one!

I would have thought that that would have been a priority programme at the Community College. There is a lot of activity there, but I still am not fully convinced that we are providing for the needs that we have in this country.

The other area where the college has been having difficulty in attracting sufficient numbers of students is in the area of the technical or vocational training, where our young people are trained as carpenters, masons and electricians. Mr. Speaker, you and I had an opportunity to tour the facilities there. The equipment is there, but we have a problem attracting sufficient numbers of our young people into that programme.

I might be wrong, but I believe one of the difficulties is the fact that these vocational courses are shared by students who are pursuing the academic side of education, degree programmes and that type of thing. Our people are very proud people, and some of them have not yet recognised that it is just as important to say that one is a qualified carpenter or mason as it would be if one was pursuing a degree in Business Administration or any other academic subject. Those professions, that is, vocational professions and technical skills, pay very well indeed.

I believe there is a degree of reluctance on the part of students who would want to take advantage of those services because they share the campus with other students who are pursuing the white-collar professions. I believe that if we were serious about training in this area, it would have been a good investment to have such a facility on its own isolated premise with all equipment and facilities that are presently made available at the Community College.

I have heard recently, Mr. Speaker, and I don't know if that was as a result of me questioning, but there has been an improvement in enrolment in this area. I have not been there. I haven't seen any statistics. But I trust that is a fact. I hope, if that is a fact, that trend continues because a large percentage of persons on work permits are people providing services associated with construction in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am going on to a new subject. If you want to take the afternoon break at the present time, I would appreciate it.

The Speaker: We will suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3:32 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4:08 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed.

APOLOGY

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable First Official Member who is performing other official duties and the Third Official Member who is ill.

Debate continues on the Throne Speech, the Third Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. John Jefferson, Jr: Mr. Speaker, I have just been advised that I have about twenty minutes left so that will carry me until 4:30 p.m., which means I will have to cut short some of the areas that I intended to comment on.

[Inaudible comments]

Mr. John D. Jefferson, Jr.: In June last year, the First Elected Member for West Bay and I brought a motion dealing with the issue of gratuities. What was recommended in that motion was that gratuities would be paid twice a month on payday. I am very pleased to have been told that most of the establishments have already gone ahead and implemented this new policy. The people are very pleased indeed. They can see where their money goes much further because they get it one time or twice a month rather than having to wait sometimes as much as three weeks after the end of the month before they get their cheque for gratuities.

I want to say thanks to the Minister for Community Development for bringing the amendment to the Labour Law in order to make this legal. There are a few establishments still refusing to do it until it becomes law, so I want to say thanks to the Minister for Community Development and Labour for her prompt attention in dealing with this very, very important matter.

Mr. Speaker, the last area that I would like to offer a few comments on is the area of Cayman Airways. I personally am very pleased that the financial position of the airline has been stabilised. I remember at one stage we were all seriously and deeply concerned with the survival of that airline because of the tremendous losses that were being incurred on a monthly basis. At the present time, we are still losing money, but at least it is quantifiable. We know how to deal with it. We know what we have to deal with as far as the amount is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the time has come where we need to make a decision in regard to Cayman Airways. I think the question that has to be addressed first of all is whether or not we are going to keep the airline as a national airline. I think that is the first decision that has to be made. I believe if you did a survey among our people, the majority of our people would say, 'Yes, we want Cayman Airways to continue.' If that is the decision arrived at, then I believe it is only fair to give it the proper equipment in order to compete and provide the services that our people are used to and expect from their national airline.

The 737-200s have worked, but they are not suitable because that aircraft has very little cargo space. As a matter of fact, if that aircraft is filled and there is excess luggage, a lot of times you have to leave your luggage in Miami because the aircraft just cannot carry that extra load. I recall with the 727s, they had a passenger load capacity plus the cargo capacity. That put the airline in a position where it also earned a decent income from the cargo service. That is not possible with the aircraft that we have and what Cayman Airways has attempted to do is to lease cargo aircraft for the purpose of supplementing that particular service but it has not worked very well.

We need to really look objectively at Cayman Airways in a very long-term manner. By that, I mean if we can have the airline, we need to make sure that it is properly funded. It must be possible for us to go out and get 20 – 30 years financing for the airline to put it in a position where it can buy the equipment it needs and is able at the same time on a monthly basis to meet those financial obligations associated with the financing of the operation. Our people are very patriotic. If they are going to fly to a destination that is serviced by Cayman Airways, the chances are they will fly the airline rather than going on American [Airlines] or one of the other US airlines.

I believe that we need to look at this operation in a very objective manner. I am aware that the present Managing Director has many good ideas in this area. I believe that we have to be in a position where we [can] at least sit down and look at all of the options that are available to us and then make a decision that we feel is in the best interest of the airline.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that Cayman Airways is also obligated for political reasons and otherwise to service some destinations that may not be financially viable, like Cayman Brac. But it all goes in as part of the promotion of the three islands. I would not recommend that we suspend that particular service, but I think we need to be in a position where we take all of this into consideration in arriving at what is best for the airline. We have come a long way, Mr. Speaker, as far as the airline business is concerned. I believe that the people would appreciate, and I am quite sure the pilots and the flight crew would also appreciate such considerations.

A lot of our travellers, our business people are used to comfort. In other words, if I am going up to Orlando or Houston, I would love to fly first class. Why not? But with the present equipment we have that is not possible. I understand there are plans to maybe upgrade a portion of the aircraft to make that available. But those types of services are what the flying public demand.

I am very comfortable flying Cayman Airways. I have long said that Cayman Airways has some of the finest most qualified and capable members of staff of any airline that I have flown. Those pilots are very well trained and very skilled. It is a pleasure when they go in especially for the landing, and they take pride in it where they make sure it's as smooth as possible. I have flown other airlines and that has not been the experience, they just seem to be interested in getting it down and sometimes that experience is pretty rough indeed.

I believe the present minister along with the board is doing a good job in this area. But I think these are some of the challenges that the board will have to address with regard to the airline.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me just say thanks to you, sir, for your patience in listening to what I had to say with so very few interruptions. I had one little interruption this morning but I didn't mind that, that was from the Minister for Agriculture, Environment and Communications. I am very pleased with the courtesy that has been extended to me over the past two days.

In closing, I want to wish His Excellency the Governor, Mr. John Owen, God's speed, and every success in his future endeavours. I was kidding him the other day. I saw him at a function and I said, "What are your future plans?" And I said, "I trust that you will be considering coming back to the Cayman Islands."

He laughed. I think, Mr. Speaker, we will see him back in some other capacity. I for one don't mind having good people around. I really don't. I think he has been a good Governor, he has been a very capable administrator, and he has in my opinion carried out his responsibilities in a very professional manner.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: According to my watch we have nine minutes.

I would entertain a motion for the adjournment if that's the will of the House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do adjourn until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

AT 4.22 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 11 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
THURSDAY

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member from Bodden Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Honourable Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable Second Official Member who will be arriving later this morning. The Honourable Third Official Member is overseas on official business. The Honourable Acting Third Official Member is sick. The Third Elected Member for George Town is overseas on a Parliamentary Seminar. The Fourth Elected Member for George Town (sic) is also sick.

Item number 3 on today's Order Paper. Questions to Honourable Members and Ministers. Question number 10 standing in the name....

[Inaudible interjection]

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, it is the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay not George Town.

The Speaker: What did I say?

Mrs. Edna Moyle: George Town.

The Speaker: I beg you pardon. The Fourth Elected Member for West Bay is absent and sick, not the Fourth Elected for George Town. I apologise.

The mover of this question is not present so we will have to move on. Is the First Elected Member for George Town in the building?

The Clerk: He is coming, sir.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, if I may, sir. He is in the Common Room but I think we were told yesterday that there would not be any questions on the Order Paper until tomorrow, Friday.

The Speaker: In the absence of the First Elected Member for George Town. I call for Question Time . . . First Elected Member for George Town, question number 10 is standing in your name.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 10

No. 10: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs if he would give an update on the on-going reviews of the Personnel Department and the Public Service Commission.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The consultant's report on the General Orders and the Public Service Commission Regulations (normally referred to as the Bradley Report) was completed in August 1998. The Governor subsequently referred the report to the Public Sector Management and Administration Committee comprised of top senior managers and representatives of the Staff Association. The Committee is making good progress in its review of the report and it will submit its recommendations on it in the near future.

The Permanent Secretary of Personnel has begun preliminary work on restructuring the Personnel Department but this will not be finalised until the completion of the review of the consultant's report.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Supplementaries. The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you. Could the Honourable Member say if it is separate or does it go along with the actual physical operation of the Personnel Department when this study is completed?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report makes recommendations which will bring about physical changes in the Personnel Department—if those recommendations are accepted. And that is why the review of the report has to be completed and the report accepted before the actual physical work can be completed. But we have begun preliminary work on the presumption that most of those recommendations will be accepted.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: This supplementary may seem a bit funny but this is only for purposes of clarity. Can the Honourable First Official Member say exactly what is the procedure that brings about the acceptance of these recommendations?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The Public Service Commission Regulations. The first stage was to have a consultant do a report on making recommendations. That report was presented to the Governor and he referred to the committee that I mentioned in my substantive answer. That committee will go through . . . the Governor has invited comments from that committee. Once those comments are made and the work on it is near completion, these comments will be referred back to His Excellency and the amendments will then be made to the regulations and the regulations would go to Executive Council, and that would finalise it. That sounds like a rather long drawn-out process but, in fact, once the review is completed I don't think it will take very long for the amendments to be carried out to the regulations and then the Executive Council's final approval.

On the General Orders, the comments from the committee will also go back to His Excellency and the General Orders, once the views and recommendations of the committee are accepted by His Excellency, they will then be printed because those are dealt with by His Excellency the Governor acting in his sole discretion. So again, not a long process once the review is completed and submitted to His Excellency.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Honourable Member say if when the committee was put together there were terms of reference drawn up as guidelines for their perusal? Or is just drawing on their knowledge, experience and expertise in the various areas what brings about the recommendations from that committee?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Public Sector Management and Administration Committee is chaired by myself and it includes the other official members, it includes the Deputy Chief Secretary and the Deputy Financial Secretary and all the Permanent Secretaries. It also includes the Director of the Budget and Management Unit and representatives of the two staff associations. That is really for the purpose of the General Orders, particularly. That really covers the whole spectrum, and I suppose I can say it's similar for the Public Service Commission Regulations.

To answer the question more specifically, there was no set terms of reference prepared for that committee particularly because the committee will be doing considerable more work; this is just one of the many duties of the committee.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am sure the Member grows a bit weary but just one or two more if you don't mind, sir. Can the Honourable First Official Member say in line with this committee looking at this report if it is being taken into consideration that there are looming reforms in other areas and this is being done in a manner which will allow for the integration of these reforms plus the actual workings of the Public Service Commission and other departments in the future?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that is why the committee has hastened slowly on the matter to make sure that the other reforms and the ramifications of those reforms could be dovetailed into the Public Service Commission regulations and the General Orders so that we are all hopefully singing from the same hymn sheet at the end of the day.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: One final supplementary. Can the Honourable First Official Member say, based on the knowledge that the committee now has, if training is going to be a very, very integral part of the operations when the restructuring of the department is completed?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Training will be an integral part of the reforms and will have to be an integral part of what the General Orders and the Public Service Commission Regulations in their revised form reflect.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Item number 4, Government Business. I would ask the Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning if he would move the Suspension of Standing Order 14(3).

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(3)

Hon. Truman Boddan: Mr. Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order of 14(3) so that the continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech can be taken over Private Members' Business.

The Speaker: I shall put the question: Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14(3) SUSPENDED SO THAT THE CONTINUATION OF THE DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH CAN BE TAKEN OVER PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS.

The Speaker: Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 19th February 1999. The floor is opened to debate. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY
HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR
ON FRIDAY 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to offer my contribution to the Throne Speech delivered earlier on by His Excellency, the Governor.

This was his final Throne Speech and I think it is no more than fair that I, like all other members, give credit to the leadership that Mr. Owen provided to these islands since coming here and literally fitting in like one of us Caymanians.

Mr. Speaker, the type of leadership he provided is most unusual in a civil service bureaucracy where so many things can get killed in committees and so on and so forth. He has given us a vision of a way to go forward and to get rid of some of these shackles that we have been fastened with over the past history of these islands. His putting forward of Vision 2008 (which seems to have quite good support across the entire cross section of these islands) I feel will bode well for these islands in the development as we go forward.

The proposed changes that we will bring forward later on this year are specifically in regard to the way we go about the finances of this country, and adopting some of the ideas from the New Zealand process. As I said two years ago, it is a real irony that we are now getting at the stage where a few years back my two good friends (the Third Elected Member from Bodden Town and at that time the Second Elected Member from Cayman Brac) put forward some of these ideas. At that time it was evident that the time was not right. But, for whatever reason, it now seems to be the time. We cannot continue business as usual. Many other ministers and members of Executive Council toiled in regard to the preparation of the Budget which at times seemed overwhelming. I look forward to the changes that will be implemented. It can mean nothing but improvement for this country.

Mr. Speaker, I must take this opportunity to say that many of these ideas also came from the backbench and the support that is coming throughout this entire Legislative Assembly toward the changes means that it is bipartisan and will, I feel, be quite successful.

The other area that His Excellency was emphatic on was the OECD and the European Union. I know that this is now being addressed by all of us as parliamentarians for the good of these islands. I look forward to a happy resolution of this situation, and I know that if we work together this can and will be done. It is wonderful to be living in one of the greatest little places on earth. We can continue to guarantee that this takes place with the partnership that I have seen in this house and also with the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, before going into the different sections and departments that fall under my ministry, I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank those who recommended me to Her Majesty, the Queen earlier this year on the occasion when I was awarded the OBE. Mr. Speaker, as I have said to my staff in the ministry, I call this a team award. I was only as good as the people that were around me, and I could not do it without the support of the backbench and the entire Legislative Assembly with the programmes that were put forward. The support was overwhelming and to me it was very, very uplifting and the trust that has been placed in me and in the ministry was a very enjoyable time. And I hope with the help of God that I can continue on this route and the support will be there for whatever we do. It just takes one more part of the puzzle to make sure that these islands continue to be the finest place on earth.

There is a little quote that I would like to share in regard to that. It says, "Leadership is the ability to put the right people in the right jobs and then sit on the sidelines and be a rousing good cheer leader."

Mr. Speaker, the first area within my ministerial responsibility I would like to deal with is the area which also came out in the Vision 2008 Round Tables and it was the problem of drug abuse. As was indicated earlier, we are now in a position to go forward with the Breakers Rehab. I know this is now welcomed by all. It will give the Courts (once everything is in place) alternative sentencing procedures. In continuing in that area, my ministry will establish a department of Substance Abuse Services and this will upgrade the provision of substance abuse treatment and rehabilitation in the three islands.

An inter-agency team building process will be completed on the roles, responsibilities and accountabilities of all entities concerned with treatment, and rehabilitation in the Cayman Islands will clearly be defined. Included in this process will be the Cayman Counselling Centre, the National Drug Council, and Canaan Land Home. The Canaan Land Home situation is one that many members have talked about and it is good now to have them in the partnership as we go forward in trying to resolve the difficulties that our young people experience. And we will be giving them a grant this year.

Also, involved in this team building process will be the Health Services, Social Services and Her Majesty's Prison at Northward. We do have counsel available at the prison and we look forward to continuing this and the other programmes that will emanate from there. We look forward where once some of these inmates come out that they can be directed in the right path and kept away from the peer pressure and the surroundings from which they came.

Mr. Speaker, counselling services in the schools and at other locations will be increased for the adolescent substance abuse problem and those in the population that has that difficulty.

We all know that the National Drug Council is now officially the co-ordinating factor behind the implementation of the Cayman Islands National Strategic Plan for drug abuse prevention and rehabilitation. Some of its goals this year will be to continue to focus on drug abuse prevention with emphasis on the education of young people. I have always advocated that this is and should be a focus in addressing the drug problems. We have to get to these children at an earlier age. And I do know that with the support of the police and different counselling we can also provide the services in a discreet way within the primary schools and also at the middle schools and the high schools.

Mr. Speaker, the primary function this year of the National Drug Council is to establish district councils in each district. This will be done in order to increase the awareness and participation of the public in planned activities. The first one of these has now been established in Cayman Brac very recently. As a matter of fact, I think most members of the Legislative Assembly may have gotten a letter this morning from the Chairman of the National Drug Council indicating that it has been set up and it is the pilot district for the other five districts. We look forward to involving the young people, to providing alternative sources of entertainment and to assist them in this difficult time of their maturity.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue to focus on drug abuse prevention with emphasis on the education of young people. This was made quite evident in recent seminars sponsored by the National Drug Council and also one where all members of the Legislative Assembly spent time at the Clarion in a seminar sponsored by CIMI. It made me feel good, Mr. Speaker, to see the turnout of a couple hundred people there—teachers, ministers and above all the youth themselves, wanting to get involved, to come to a resolution of this difficult problem that this country is now experiencing. Not only here in Cayman, Mr. Speaker, this is through out the world.

Mr. Speaker, we will further strengthen the Quest Drug Education Programme in schools by co-ordinating the necessary training programmes and providing periodic drug awareness campaigns for students in co-operation with other local agencies. I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the ministry and the National Drug Council to thank the Lions Club for the great support and the investment of funds and personnel in assisting the education and the National Drug Council in putting forward this programme in schools. We will continue to co-ordinate a comprehensive media campaign to further educate the general public on the dangers and ill effects of substance abuse.

As we said earlier, we will ensure that programmes and initiatives are extended to the sister islands. We will continue to monitor the nature and existing extent of the drug abuse situation in the Cayman Islands by initiating and publishing studies and reports on the substance abuse situation.

Mr. Speaker, the first leg of this was started last year when we went into the schools. That study now gives us a baseline so that as we go forward we can compare and look back to see if the programmes being put forward are working. If there is a reduction, if there is an escalation in certain areas, certain age groups, once the information is revealed we can pinpoint where we have to make a concerted effort.

Mr. Speaker, just yesterday evening I got a copy of a newsletter from the National Institute on Drug Abuse. I would like to read some of the excerpts that appeared in an article in that magazine. It deals with how a child's drug use can go way beyond recreational. I crave your indulgence because of the seriousness of the drug problem and as I have said education and awareness of young parents to what to look for if something should start to be different from the normal way that their child reacts and response.

I quote, "Now that children are returning to school, right at the top of virtually every parent's concern is the fear that their children might become involved with drugs. And they are right to be concerned. Whether in wealthy or poor neighbourhoods, drugs are now readily available to all young people. Even the seemingly nerdiest kids can speak with apparent fluency and familiarity about marijuana, cocaine, heroine and such strange-sounding things as blunts, ecstasy, ruffies, special k and crystal myth.

"Drugs are an equal opportunity destroyer. It has been revealed that 50% of young people have used an illegal drug by the time they leave high school. What's a parent to do? How can you predict if your children are going to use drugs? What can you do to prevent it? How can you help them once they have started using?

"The first step is to understand why Sally or Johnny might be using drugs. Researchers have identified more than fifty factors that might put someone at risk for drug use. These risk factors can be found at the individual, the family, the peer group and boarder community levels. They include things like having too much free time, weak family structures, peer groups social pressures, and the glorification of drug use by some in the popular media.

"But those risk factors really only talk about overall probabilities of whether young people with certain characteristics might be more or less prone to using drugs. Knowing about these risk factors can help keep a parent alert, but no set of risk factors determine that a particular child will use drugs. And many kids who have many of those risk factors do not even try drugs. So, parents really have to deal with the individual child situation and state of mind.

"Research in the pathway to drug use and addiction suggest the immediate decision to use drugs is driven basically by one or two types of reasons: One group of young people seem to use drugs simply to feel good. They are seeking novelty or excitement, to have a good time. Included in this group are those who say they use drugs just because all their friends are doing it. They want to join in common fun or to be cool.

"These kids are the ones most likely to be responsive to prevention programmes, to educate about the harmful effects of drugs on their bodies. They are also the ones more likely to be influenced by the powerful protective factor of having strong and loving parents interested and involved in all aspects of their lives. These kids also seem to have the best chance of being successfully taught to seek alternative ways of having fun and to resist the temptation to seek novelty in drugs and other harmful ways.

"But a second, very different group of young people use drugs for quite different and more intractable reasons. These kids are usually suffering in some way and use drugs to make themselves feel better, or even normal. This group often includes people stuck in very difficult life situations—poverty or abusive families, for example. It also includes kids suffering from a variety of untreated mental disorders like clinical depression, manic depressive illness, panic disorder or schizophrenia.

"It is estimated that as many as ten million children and adolescents may suffer from emotional and psychiatric problems of such magnitude that their ability to function is compromised and the majority of those kids are at extremely high risks of becoming addicted to drugs. These young people are not using drugs just to feel good. These children are actually trying to medicate themselves with drugs.

"They use drugs because they think it will make them feel better or normal in the same way that other people might be given anti-depressants or anti-anxiety medications. The problem, of course, is that using illicit drugs is not an effective treatment. In addition, to other perhaps more obvious problems like that they interfere with normal functioning. These drugs will ultimately make them feel worse not better.

"Medical research has shown clearly that this kind of drug use only exacerbates underlying physiological problems. Prevention and treatment for these self-medicating young people needs to be quite different from the approach used for novelty seekers or social users.

"If someone feels terrible today, it might not be effective to warn them that using drugs might alter their brain a month from now. Their problem is getting through today. Encouraging them to seek alternative sources of fun or nicer friends probably won't work either. Even the otherwise powerful protective factor of loving supportive family involvement in the life of the child is not very effective in these cases.

"Those young people who are trying to self medicate must have help with their underlying problems." And this, Mr. Speaker, is the emphasis in this article, they need professional treatment.

"Whatever the reason, how do you know if your children are using drugs and what do you do if they are? Telltale signs include recent mood and energy level changes, changes in eating habits, specific signs like redness around the eyes and changes in social and educational performance. Listen carefully to what your children are telling you about their lives and how they feel. And watch how they behave.

"It may seem natural for an adolescent to be a bit surly, but most adolescents are not actually solemn, withdrawn, or pathetic and lethargic. You should talk to your child about any of these symptoms, you do need to know."

The last paragraph, Mr. Speaker, is: "What if your child is using drugs? In a small percentage of cases parents can work with their children to get them to stop using drugs. This might be easiest when the young person is just using drugs occasionally to have a good time and, of course, the earlier you start talking to your children about drugs, the better the chances are they won't become involved with them."

This is a significant idea that they have identified here, it says, "If a child reaches the age of 20 without using alcohol, tobacco or marijuana, the probability is almost zero that he or she will ever develop a serious drug problem.

"If you suspect your child is trying to self-medicate or if you suspect your child is using regularly or is addicted, get professional help immediately. These are not problems the typical parent can handle alone, and help is available. There are many professional social workers, nurses, drug counselors, physiologists, psychiatrists trained to deal with both mental disorders and drug use problems.

"Your child's school, your family doctor or community health centre can help you get a referral. Do not assume that your child's drug use is just a passing phase or something every kid must go through. It isn't. It may well be the beginning of a lifetime of problems that could be prevented with early intervention."

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your indulgence in allowing me to read that article as many of our young parents today are going through this difficulty. Being able to identify the problem and then deciding what to do about it goes to show that if we can provide assistance to these parents and young people, there is hope at the end of the line. And I would encourage us all as representatives of the people to continue to work within our communities, within our districts to identify problems within the family set up and provide assistance and give the information to these families as to how they can be helped. If we can save one of these individuals and do the interception at an early age it can save many heartaches, many difficult experiences for families, not to mention the monetary worth of losing a young person.

Mr. Speaker, I will now move on to Health Services. I am pleased to say that on the 27th of this month at 3:00 p.m., his departure His Excellency will do the official opening of the new Cayman Islands Health Services Complex. I have asked that invitations be sent to all members of this Honourable House, and there is an open invitation to the public. I have asked His Excellency to do the official opening, as he has been very supportive of this project.

Mr. Speaker, as was noted in the paper yesterday, the accident and emergency unit will be physically separated from the outpatient service. The department will be able to provide general practice service with additional "by appointment" doctors and clinics. I crave the indulgence of the public as they get used to the two different sections. Once everybody understands the separation of the two units, I feel that the provision of prompt health care can be greatly enhanced.

Mr. Speaker, approved in the budget this year was an additional ophthalmologist who will be working at the Lions Eye Clinic along with the Dr. Foley, who has done a magnificent job in the area of eye care in these islands. It is to the stage, Mr. Speaker, where we rarely ever have to refer anyone overseas for treatment of the eyes. And I can venture to say that the equipment that this House has provided me at the Eye Centre, at the Clinic, is probably second only to what can be found at Baskin Palmer.

It is very uplifting when many of our older people call me and say that for the first time in decades they have the opportunity to see almost the light of day. Dr. Foley has done a superb job and I am very appreciative of the support that is given to him by other eye care providers in these islands. There is an excellent partnership and understanding in that area of the health services.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue to have health care surveys of prevalent diseases and these will be conducted in order to assist the department to further improve the level of patient care and type of treatment provided. We look forward this year to the revenue generated by the department increasing significantly, partly brought about by health insurance and improved collection of fees. Also as we know in the budget this year for the first time is funding for the introduction of insurance for civil servants and their dependants. This is a big step forward, Mr. Speaker.

I know that within the halls of this hallowed Chamber there has been concern that some of the parliamentarians, the elected members, have not been covered. I am hoping that when this is looked at, this will be addressed.

I was pleased this morning when I spoke to Mr. Christopher Collins (who is the supervisor of Health Insurance at the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority), and he has brought to my attention that the fund, which has been created over there to deal with the indigents, had at the end of February a balance of $613,000. As we all know there is a motion coming later on this fund, which for whatever reason when the regulations were drawn up, provision was not made for the Director of Health Services or the CMO to have access to these funds. That motion will be dealt with later on in this House which will give us access to funds there to go towards helping the indigents.

It was also very uplifting, Mr. Speaker, when he told me that the insurance companies report now some 26,000 people in the islands covered by private health insurance. This is beyond my wildest imagination and dreams when we started this a couple of years ago. He also pointed out that the majority of these have coverage in excess of that which is required by the standard health insurance contract. This goes to show the maturity of our Caymanians.

When this was first introduced years ago, the idea of it, there were a lot of comments and concerns. Mr. Speaker, I have always advocated that along with the Pension Fund I see the provision of health insurance coverage for our people as an investment because not one of us in these islands or literally anywhere that God forbid went through a traumatic accident and had to be air lifted to a critical care unit in the United States can deal with the aftermath of the money that will have to be paid out if we don't have some coverage. So I welcome this, I welcome the support that this House has given.

There are still areas that we need to address, and as I mentioned this indicates good long-term planning. We must deal with the problem of some of the older people, those that have health insurance coverage that for whatever reason has been cancelled when people most need it. This must stop, Mr. Speaker. There are many families that have suffered because of this. But, thank God, in the new legislation this will not be allowed to happen.

There will be a few amendments as we go forward, but as I said it was not written in stone. We have now introduced the idea to these islands, and people are comfortable with it, people understand the benefits of having health insurance and I would wish that these islands would continue to experience good health so that we never have to deal with this. It will be just something there that if in the event something happens we know it can be dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, in the new facilities, additional diagnostic services and increased specialist visits will be provided to the health services and to the sister islands. One of the things when I came into the ministry that I always dreamed about was the establishment of a Health Services Foundation. The legislation is now drafted for that. As we all know there are many members in the private sector who will give to a specific cause as long as they know that that money is not going into general revenue. I am very pleased to say that it is now in the final stages, as a matter of fact, with the kind assistance of my colleague, the Minister of Tourism, we have been able to get a commitment from certain companies to put funds into this foundation to be used for the betterment of health care in these islands.

Mr. Speaker, the department will implement recommendations arising from the report of a consultancy carried out last year by the UK Form District Audit. This has pointed us in a good direction, it has identified areas where savings can be made and we look forward to the implementation of these later on.

Emphasis on the Caymanianisation of the Health Services Department will continue through succession planning and an effective local training programme. We are asking the Community College and other people involved with training to provide assistance for those youths coming out of the schools that may be inclined to enter the medical profession and we welcome them.

Mr. Speaker, you know it is literally impossible to get into an American Medical Programme if you are not a United States Citizen. But I am proud to say that one of our doctors who is now training at the University of Miami, is very determined. She had to do a lot of work but when I spoke with her a few weeks ago, she told me that out of a placement of 800 students she was within the top five, and that she had been accepted to continue her training at the University of Miami.

This is a great accomplishment for a fine young Caymanian doctor who in three or four years will be coming back here as a specialist. It is encouraging to see this and I invite any Caymanian that is interested to talk to us about it so that with the facility we now have in place we can have our Caymanian doctors and nurses running this.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I welcome the coming on-line of Dr. Tomlinson's new health centre. I feel that by the end of the year, the provision of health care in these islands will be one of the highest standards in the world for a population of 35,000 people.

Mr. Speaker, one of the areas touched on yesterday by the Third Elected Member from West Bay was the provision of improved services for mental health. I agree with him one thousand percent. We must now address this problem. Starting this year in the district of West Bay we are going to provide in the old clinic, a day care service for some of the people there.

The stigmatism that goes with mental health . . . it should not be looked at as something derogatory. Mental health is one of the most common problems probably throughout the world today. There are different stages, there are different advancements and it is not at all times necessary for people to have to be put into an institution. Sometimes just the use of mild medication can alleviate a problem. But we have now come to the decision that whatever needs to be done in that area, to take care of our Caymanians.... I know in the private sector there is talk of also establishing a house where those that need intensive care, these clients can be housed. I know that we will give the support wherever necessary.

We have areas of excellence in our health services. It is always rewarding to receive generous comments about the services provided, and recently we have received many, not only locally but internationally. An example was about a week ago, shared with me by His Excellency the Governor. There was a professor from a university in Philadelphia here on vacation. His son got in an accident and had to receive treatment at the hospital. That gentleman said that the service that was provided there was as good as anywhere in the world. And he said he was qualified to make a comment like that.

We have also had comments from other teaching universities, where some of the nurses came here for training from the Mayo Clinic and the University of Minnesota. They tell us that the equipment and stuff that we have in the hospital is as good or better than what they have at their facilities back in the [United] States. This makes me feel good Mr. Speaker. But, once again, I cannot take the credit for this alone. It was the foresight of the legislators in this House who saw the need to make a quantum leap in the improvement of medical services in these islands. We have lagged behind for thirty years and God forbid for political reasons—which is absolutely ridiculous—we have never got to the pinnacle. But as I have always said, the Lord works in mysterious ways and with the support of this House I have been able to stay within the ministry and with the support.... The initial introduction by the First Elected Member from West Bay of some of these ideas put forward, we are now on the threshold of opening one of the finest health centres in the Caribbean. And we look forward to continuing in that vein to make it an outstanding facility for all our people.

Baroness Simons in her recent visit was very impressed when she toured the new facility. Outstanding areas of achievements have been the Paediatric Ward, Maternity Ward, the ICU and Physiotherapy.

In recent times and with the wonderful support of this Legislative Assembly and Finance Committee, the opportunity presented where we were able to complete our forensic lab. This facility brings Cayman to the forefront in the Caribbean and has eliminated long delays in the justice system. I know my very good friend who sits today as the Acting Attorney General (his primary post is Solicitor General) has welcomed the prompt service it now provides. It speeds up and expedites justice in these islands. We no longer have to have people on remand for weeks and months. In touring there with him a month or so ago, we were all impressed with what can now be done in these islands.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that it takes every single Member of health care organisation carrying out their duties professionally, courteously and with a steady focus on the needs of the patients and their family. Sadly this does not always happen. I shall be saying more about this in another arena but for now let me say that I am happy that the strategic planning team in their annual update last year made the delivery of patient services, a priority. And I pledge that we will continue to make improvements in this area.

We cannot and will not have a $30M building with 37^c attitudes, and when this is brought to my attention, that people don't get with the programme and be more concerned with patient care, through my permanent secretary and personnel department I will see that changes are made. This is one of the few areas that I have had difficulty with, and we will address it. I know that the dedicated staff, the overwhelming number of people there do give excellent service. I have always advocated that the greatest contribution to a person's getting better is a good rapport with the doctor and this can also mean with the nurses.

I am very pleased to say that we are implementing our strategic plan and will continue to do so. A considerable part of the plan has already been implemented but some still needs to be done. Mr. Speaker, since it is a rolling five year plan, we are able to make adjustments every year at the annual update to take into account the changes that can happen so rapidly in today's world.

My Ministry and the Health Services Department are fully aware of the programmes that need to be introduced or expanded. It has been said that no one wants to hear any more about the completion of the hospital and I am happy to oblige in that respect. But I must say (to close off this chapter of my ministerial responsibility) that we have done what the people of this country mandated us to do—construct a first class new hospital, which will serve us for some time into the future.

Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge this was the largest capital project ever undertaken by these islands. I am proud to say this time it was done without political meddling. This was designed by the health care providers, the medical technicians that knew what should go where, and not some National Team or other person that wanted to build a monument to their time in office.

Mr. Speaker, constructing a new hospital and new health centres in each district has been a formidable challenge, but now that that is behind us we will now be turning our energies to the equally important task of providing access to consistent high quality health care in a patient focused cost effective manner. As I said earlier, it is not buildings and equipment that constitute excellent health care, they are only necessary components. Even more important is the quality of service provided by the staff of the Health Services Department and the patient focus, the compassionate manner in which that quality service is provided.

The mission statement of the Health Services Department says it all. I would like to quote the mission of the Cayman Islands Health Services, the exemplary provider of comprehensive health care to this economic jewel in the Caribbean: “To ensure the wellness of our people through a dynamic community based health system characterised by visionary leadership, compassionate professionals, technological advance, central support and collaboration with local and overseas providers.”

Last week was five years since I took over this ministry and we have literally been working flat out ever since. It has been a most gratifying experience to work with my dedicated staff, and with the support of this Legislative Assembly. I will say thanks to the First Elected Member from George Town who when on occasion he spotted things that may have gotten by my eye came to me in his diplomatic manner and said, ‘Tony, this needs to be done’. I thank him and all the Backbenchers for the tremendous support....

[Laughter]

Hon. Anthony Eden: I will also give credit at this time to my colleague from North Side. And I can remember when we were in the old paediatric section, she would always come to the ministry and say, ‘This needs to be done. Some paint here would do wonders,’ and this is what it is all about in politics. This is the pinnacle when Backbenchers and Government members can see things and sit together and make changes and all comes out of it is making this a better place for us all as Caymanians especially when it comes to our young people.

As I said earlier, it was lots of fun despite some challenges, as we all worked towards one common goal making these islands the best place where anyone could live. We know there is still much to be done. I know that the dedication is still there to complete the full assignment.

My staff and the management of the Health Services Department have a clear vision of where they are going. It is a vision enshrined in the health strategic plan. As I have said so many times, we truly (and I am saying this on behalf of my staff) appreciate the support of both sides of this House. I can assure you that we will not let up in our efforts to live up to the faith you have placed in us, to what is right for health care provision in these islands.

In a massive amount of construction and capital development that my ministry has undertaken over the last four years, I am reminded of a quote by James L. Hayes. “An effective organisation has a purpose that is shared by all its members and to which they will willingly commit their efforts. People working together can do almost anything.” Mr. Speaker, that is so true as we now have evidence of that in the new facility.

One of the areas that we will address is training within the health services. There is a connection that we have with our tertiary care provider, the Baptist Hospital in Miami, where our doctors and nurses and other people on staff (not necessarily medical but others) can go up there over a period of time and experience what is being done at that level—which is one of the highest if not the highest rated hospital in the South Florida area. As a matter of fact, the entire Southeast, it has won many awards.

And only by this continued training and to the best of my knowledge continued medical education is now a required for our personnel. And we look forward to whatever needs to be put in place in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I am now going to talk some on the latest addition to my ministry, the Department of Social Services....

The Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the break? We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11:38 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12:20 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continued. The Honourable Minister for Health.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we took the break I was preparing to go to Social Services which I assumed in recent times. Before going into that I would just like to emphasise the importance of the two strategic plans that my ministry undertook four years ago, the Health Services and Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. Many of the things put forward in there have been implemented. As I said also the National Drug Council assumed responsibility for the continued implementation. There is still a lot more work to do.

Mr. Speaker, it is pleasing to know that what we have been able to accomplish in the area of drug abuse prevention and rehabilitation has been internationally recognised. And when we send representatives to the different forums, the Cayman Islands are looked up to

It was certainly a honour and a privilege to have with us at one I attended a few years ago our present Chief Justice, Mr. Anthony Smellie, also Mr. Derrick Haines from the Drug Squad. And when I saw the respect that our Cayman representatives gained by their involvement.... Just last year we were also invited to address the seminar in Miami, Florida and we were well received.

Mr. Speaker, there is a long way to go. But with the continued co-operation of all members here and the high awareness in the community, and the more that we can involve the communities in this approach, I think the more the greater the degree of success will be there.

This year will be a very busy for our Social Services. As we all know that a substantial amount of money (I think it was $900,000) was put in the budget to deal with the secure remand. Work on that will commence almost immediately. As a matter of fact, just recently the project officer, Mr. Dudley Roach.... Once again, I have to give credit to my good friend, the elected Member from West Bay because when he was the Minister he was instrumental in bringing Mr. Roach here. Mr. Roach has the expertise in dealing with these facilities from the United Kingdom's perspective and point of view.

He and an architect from the Public Works Department visited a similar facility in Canada in order to obtain information on the availability of the special materials needed to construct the facility. Canada was selected rather than the U.S.A since the Canadian laws pertaining to care and protection of children closely resemble our 1995 Children Law, and therefore by extension demand similar physical facilities and resources and programmes.

Major work will take place on the design of the building and construction could commence the latest by September of this year.

In the construction of the Health Services facilities we found out that by establishing a steering committee the project was much more manageable. This coming year I will be making recommendations to Executive Council to create a steering facility for this most important project in which all of the players will have input at an early stage not after the fact.

Also in the budget this year is approximately $100,000 to look at a home for the boys. As we all know after CIMI took over the existing facility in West Bay, the boys have been housed at the children's facility at Lower Valley, the Frances Boddin Home. We are looking forward to providing a facility for them and once again with the support of this House we will be going forward.

Probation and after care is an integral part of the criminal justice system. The probation after care service has a key role as the government agency most concerned with rehabilitation and re-integration, supervision and monitoring of people convicted of crimes in this jurisdiction and more importantly those people who are at risk of further offending.

During 1999, the unit will set out to assist in meeting the needs and aspirations of the country in terms of reducing crimes and the impact of crime insofar as it equates with professional social work principles. And to be more specific, the probation after care unit will provide a court duty officer as needed to respond to referrals from the courts. Mr. Speaker, the Unit will continue to advocate for a rehabilitative, re-integration approach to reducing the incidence and seriousness of crime. In order to accomplish this, staff will encourage the courts to increase the use of pre-sentence reports and community based disposals.

The Unit is of the view that the development of community based sense and options can only take place if better use is made of the Probation Aftercare Unit. The staff at the Unit will continue the programme at Northward Prison aimed at confronting offenders with their faulty and offensive thinking values and behaviour. I think my good friend in the Ministry of Community Development also has a portion of this and the co-ordination there with the private sector is another avenue of significantly improving the chances of these inmates once they come out.

Community service by offenders, Mr. Speaker, is a much under used option. With the establishment of a new community service co-ordinator this situation will change. It is hoped that this appointment would have the effect of increasing the court's confidence in community service as a sentencing option. One of the benefits to the offender of community service is the self-respect and credit they obtain for themselves through helping others and by completing a worthwhile task. Focus on group work programmes will continue at Northward Prison with several groups on a weekly basis. The demand continues to be high and it is intended to respond to this demand by continuing to develop the programme as participants become more familiar with this model of working.

Probation officers will also continue their individual offence specific programme in the areas of drugs, domestic violence, violence and anger management and sex offences. A sex offender programme has been submitted to the appropriate key individuals and we await comment and approval.

During 1999, the Probation Aftercare Unit will also focus on early assessment of prisoners in order to identify any welfare or social needs involving the prisoner and his family, and to assess his or her criminal generic needs. This latter is necessary in determining the level and type of programme for the rehabilitation and re-integration of the prisoner.

Case Work Services: The department will continue to use the team approach in casework delivery. The teams will include an intake team and three long-term teams. This approach instituted during last year has proved to be more useful in thoroughly assessing all requests received by the department for assistance. The intake team will complete all initial assessments and carry out a thorough background check to verify the nature of the request and its surrounding circumstances including child protection investigation and juvenile probation reports for unassigned cases.

Mr. Speaker, the long-term teams will provide social work intervention to individuals and families, also mediation and conflict resolution services. All the other usual casework services will be executed efficiently.

This year I am pleased to say that one Caymanian social worker will join the staff upon completion of her Master's Degree in Social Work in the middle of the year.

Additionally, one Caymanian social worker will commence studies at the Master's Level in the area of mediation. It is hope that work relating to the drafting of guidance and regulations for the Children Law will be concluded this year so that its implementation can take place. Once again, very recently Executive Council approved a committee for the implementation of this very important piece of legislation and we have some very high powered people on that including the Honourable Chief Justice.

Several social workers are involved in this process of the Children Law and with implementation of this law, the responsibilities of social workers will increase significantly. As set out in Schedule 2 of the Law it will be mandatory for social workers to be readily accessible to the Court, befriend and work even more closely than they currently do with children and families while the child is in residential care; be readily available to participate in children abuse prevention programmes and investigations; provide services to disabled children; participate in crime prevention programmes for juveniles; provide occupational, social, cultural and recreational programmes for children; and assist in the maintenance of children in the family home.

Case workers will continue providing home reports for foster care services, adoption and custody reports, residential placements for children and services to disabled adults and the elderly in conjunction with the adult special needs programme.

Young Parents Programme: This programme has so far benefited 79 young mothers, many of whom have either returned to school or have been appropriately placed in the work force.

Mr. Speaker, once again this was one of the brain children of the First Elected Member for West Bay when he was there. And the investment in this I don't think we could ever measure in dollars and cents. The stigma that was attached to these young ladies and how we have now given them literally a new lease on life . . . a few of them may re-offend but the majority of them have turned themselves around and are now a credit to the community. The programme is now under the supervision of the Community Development Co-ordinator who in conjunction with its Programme Co-ordinator will review the programme with a view to diversifying it. All the services currently offered to the young mothers will continue.

Residential Care: Under the residential care programme all policies and procedures currently in place will be reviewed in accordance with the Children Law 1995. A database will be created for our special needs children as required by the law. Programmes will be developed to prepare residents for leaving care.

Foster Care: The foster care programme will strive to provide community placement with substitute families for children who can no longer be looked after within their own families whether for long or short periods.

I will pause at this instance. I am very pleased to know that the Third Elected from West Bay has been working very closely and is one of these foster parents. I know this is very much appreciated by the department.

Another recruitment drive will be undertaken shortly to recruit at least ten new foster parents by the end of the year. An effort will also be made to train all new foster parents joining the programme. It is expected that at least fifteen children will be placed with foster families.

After care services for children who have been in the department's care, whether in residential care or foster care, will be managed by the Foster Care Unit.

Adult Special Needs: During this year, the department's Adult Special Needs Programme will establish a day care programme for seniors at the Kirkconnell Community Care Centre in Cayman Brac. Additionally, it is hoped to localise the resident care supervisor position for the home. I know this will be a welcomed move for the people of Cayman Brac where one of their own people will be there. We all know that people providing this service are all dedicated, but there is a feeling attached that when one is a member of that community they always tend to be extra special in providing care.

Funds have been approved in this year's budget for the acquisition of an adapted vehicle to provide transportation for the elderly and disabled clients in Grand Cayman.

The Adult Needs Unit in conjunction with the Community Development Programme will continue to spear head activities geared towards elderly persons in the community during this year which has been designated International Year of the Elderly. An effort will be made to continue to educate the general public on the invaluable contribution elderly persons have made and continue to make to the society and the importance of maintaining them within their own families, being cared for by them.

Mr. Speaker, before leaving the adult special needs, I would like to say a big thanks to both you and the Honourable Minister for Community Development for the involvement in the aftercare programme and adult care centre in Cayman Brac. And we look forward to working with you and your committees in continuing to improve and to utilise to the fullest the services over there and at the appropriate time when it is necessary for extension. And also I know the consideration for air conditioning some of the areas, I hope that this can be provided for in due course.

Community Development: Starting this year, the Community Development Co-ordinator will act as co-ordinator for the Joint Caribbean Youth Programme and the University of the West Indies diploma in Youth Development Studies. This is quite a credit for these islands. This programme is being sponsored by the Ministry of Community Development via distance education and will be delivered at the Community College. Three community development officers will pursue the course this year.

Income generation efforts in the United Kingdom over many years has revealed the need to recognise the complete nature of the process of income generation and to seek to ensure that the collective efforts of all agencies are catering to all aspects of this process. To this end, the Community Development Unit will seek to offer services which are complementary to those already existing so as to provide a comprehensive package to promote self employment, small business and entrepreneurship.

The unit's effort will be targeted at unemployed persons and will focus on: assisting and identifying opportunities; motivating persons to pursue self-employment; and identifying skill classes in areas with opportunities where suitable training exist. The opportunity identification segment will depend heavily on the skill classes and motivation will draw more heavily on the Community College resources.

The unit will continue its close association with several governmental, non-governmental and private sector organisations. In some cases, joint programmes will be implemented. In others we will assist with community mobilisation and advise on community intervention strategies.

The programme will seek to provide an alternative for better utilisation of leisure time involving members of groups of teenagers in a range of activities geared towards self-development and improvement.

This year, community development officers will be appointed for the Sister Islands and the district of North Side. As a matter of fact, I think the one for Cayman Brac has already been selected and she is a very, very dedicated young lady. I met her and I am very impressed with her outlook on life and the way that she goes about getting things done. I know Social Services welcome her.

Both communities have indicated their need for an officer to facilitate activities to meet their own individual needs. It is hoped that the summer programme which has proven to be a much needed and available service will take place in all districts this year.

Mr. Speaker, I just recently requested that MPSIC approval be now sought for the construction of a home for the elderly in North Side. There are some funds in there for architectural renderings but I would hope that if the opportunity presents and there is some extra that by the end of the year, God willing we may be able to start construction.

This brings me to the end of areas within my ministry and in closing I would like to say that I offer my support to the ideas put forward by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town in regard to decentralising government services in George Town. I would note that the Honourable Minister for Tourism has initiated that action by shifting Vehicle Inspection and Licensing to some of the other districts. As has been drawn to my attention by the First Elected Member for West Bay, a motion was brought and passed, and I will give credit there.

Mr. Speaker, honestly I am hoping that whoever takes over the next government will be bold enough to make the decision of building the next Government Administration Building outside of George Town. I hope I am not slapped down for this, but it is just how I feel. This will be the only way to make a significant dent in the traffic problem we are now experiencing. Also, innovative ideas like changing the school hours and flexi-time for some business as was put forward by the Third Elected Member from West Bay.... And I know if we put our heads together there are many ways that we could improve that is happening in Cayman, this terrible traffic problem that is very difficult to deal with. It can only be done by us working together. We must also bring on board the private sector. It is time that they gave assistance in these areas and became part of this partnership relieving some of the difficulties that we experience.

I look forward over the next two years as I work along with my two colleagues, the Second and Third Elected members for Bodden to make things even better for our constituents and our district.

There still remains a significant amount of roadwork to be done, but I feel this House will support us on that as we all know Bodden Town is the fastest growing of the districts. In the past it has always lagged behind and was neglected in roadwork. It is still trying to catch up to many of the districts that already have an excellent road infrastructure. Bodden Town for whatever reason.... Once again the ugly eye of politics comes up because it was said at one time by one Member of Executive Council that as long as another Member from Bodden Town was there, not even one pothole would be fixed in Bodden Town. And, Mr. Speaker, that was adhered to.

Hon. Anthony Eden: It was in the 1988 – 1992 regime.

Mr. Speaker, the representatives of Bodden Town look forward to our new playfield that is so badly needed in Bodden Town. In recent time, our footballers have really started to shine in their games and have achieved quite a degree of success. Working along with my colleague, the Minister for Community Development, I know that field will be opened later on this year.

Also, our new Post Office . . . and it was gratifying earlier on in the break that we met with representatives from the ministries involved and we were able to come to a decision on the way forward. It was pleasing to know that it will go out to tender on Monday and once again it was evident that the three representatives from Bodden Town when it comes to matters affecting our district and our constituents there is no partisanship. At all times our constituents come first.

It has been enjoyable working with them and I look forward to continuing to work.

In our district of Bodden Town, there have been additional classrooms at the Savannah Primary School, which is one of the fastest growing in the island. It is good to know that there are now plans where another primary school will be built, which will be shared by the western end of the Bodden Town district and the eastern section of the George Town district. This will go a long way to relieve the over crowding.

The past minister of the Water Authority (now the First Elected Member for West Bay) was instrumental in getting piped water into Breakers which has been able to produce a significant amount of development in that area now so that people don't have to build cisterns.

The Bodden Town Primary School Playfield; recently the bus shelter at the Bodden Town Primary School—new buses at both of the primary schools. Significant amounts of road have been chipped and sprayed.

We look forward this year, on some of the main roads going through Bodden Town that we will get an overlay. As everybody that lives on the eastern part of the island knows, from Pease Bay up, the roads are starting to go into a bad state of disrepair. So I think the timing on that is very important so that it does not become extremely expensive without having to rehabilitate the entire section of the road.

Use of the Civic Centre has been significantly increased since we have had it air conditioned. Since we as a government took over in 1992, and prior to that, it was literally closed up all the time. As a matter of fact, I think the Glamorous Granny Pageant was held there last year and they want to make that the home of it. I know the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town has an office in there, which she worked very diligently to get sorted out. It is now being utilised significantly not only for functions for the elderly people but also for the youth band which is an outstanding group of young people in our district of Bodden Town under the able guidance and leadership of Miss Penny Phillips and Mr. Tony Scott, our excellent Community Development Officer.

I have been made to understand that he is already planning a programme for the elderly this Easter and we look forward the three representatives of Bodden Town once again being able to share in that and assist where ever we can.

I have been made to understand that bids for the renovation of the district library in Bodden Town have gone out. The Breakers Playing Field is now finished. The Breakers Community Civic Centre will be air-conditioned this year. And in discussion with the Minister responsible for Agriculture, we are made to understand that throughout the districts post office drops and kiosks will be placed, which will be an excellent idea in decentralising some of the parking problems with going to the Post Office in the other districts.

Mr. Speaker, the Savannah–Newlands Playfield, to the best of my knowledge, was and still is the only area designated during Pirates Week as alcohol free. And it is a wonderful feeling to see the many parents and their children. I know that under the management of the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town she has been able to strengthen the assistance to make significant improvements there.

The park at Northward, Mr. Speaker, is once again a very worthwhile cause within the district and bringing the community together working on this. There are attempts and I know through the National Drug Council and the Bodden Town CODAC the one in Savannah–Newlands is being revived.

Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago, the three representatives for Bodden Town visited the district looking at where we could place the Vehicle Inspection and Licensing Facility. We looked at the old district health centre and we can envisage at some stage where the three MLAs could have an office there, as well as the Community Development Officer. It in central Bodden Town and I look forward with the assistance of Public Works to having that sorted out.

Finally, since becoming minister and on the Executive Council, we have come a long way since 1992. As part of this government (not originally from 1992 as I was only elected in 1994 to this position) we have had our ups and downs. We may not have always made the right decisions in some areas, but on the whole I think we have acquitted ourselves quite well.

The capital expenditure spent in that period was probably over $250M. The country can see where these funds went and I am prepared to say that not only the government but the entire Legislative Assembly has the best interest of this country at heart. As is natural there are different opinions on the way forward, but it would be a funny world if we all agreed on the same approach.

I feel good about the future of these islands, the team work and at all times making these islands to be the best place will always be what is foremost in our minds. As I said, maybe the approach is a different one and the angle is different, but deep down I think all the representatives here mean well for these islands. I look forward to the next two years with God's help that we will continue in that vein and will never forget that it must be country first.

I will not close without my main theme within my ministry and that's once again the involvement of parents with their children. We can provide all of the after care services, all the police, all the prisons and intervention procedures that may be necessary, but once that child has gotten out of hand, it is after-the-fact and extremely difficult to rehabilitate that child. I know many of our young parents are having to hold down more than one job but it is our God-given responsibility to know where those children are and who they are with. I beseech those that are listening and those that are out there to spend that valuable time with them. It is the greatest investment we as parents can make, the time that we spend with the children.

Just yesterday evening when I was dropping my son off at the Junior Achievement, coming out from the high school was a group of young kids playing football and they yelled me down and said, "Mr. Eden, give me a drop into town."

I said, "Jump on." It was uplifting to see those young kids—the future of this island, Mr. Speaker.

We can go a long way to help them by lending a listening ear and continuing to provide the infrastructure for them to develop. As the First Elected Member for West Bay said on more than one occasion, we must now at this stage in our development . . . and I know my colleague on Executive Council, The Community Development Minister, is providing infrastructure for this to take place. The time has come for us to take a stand for our youth and whatever we need to do in the Courts or whatever it be when it comes to the drug dealers, we must show no compassion. Whatever the Courts need to do to send that signal to the dealers, the importers, when they are literally daily sentencing our young people to death . . . we must urge them to do the right thing, send the right message. We will not tolerate drug abuse in these islands!

Thank you.

The Speaker: At this time, we will suspend proceedings until 2:15 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12:58 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2:45 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. Does any other Member wish to speak?

The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that we would have heard from more of government since there has been so many from our side who have talked about government's plans—or the scarcity of plans in the Throne Speech. You would have thought that they would have been ready to jump to their feet to explain this. Unfortunately, they don't seem to want to. But I can promise you that after I finish they will be on their feet!

Mr. Speaker, I can rise to congratulate His Excellency the Governor on his delivery of the Throne Speech. I certainly can congratulate the many fine speeches that were given since then. Certainly, we had no shortage of examination of the various problems existing in the country, and I would like from the outset to thank the Minister of Health for his usually kind remarks.

However, the speech from the Throne was very lean indeed—heading into the new millennium without any direction as to where the country is headed.

I must say that while I have some hope for the future, I am very much concerned about the future of national life. I am very much concerned for the state of natural life as it exists in these islands for very many different reasons, sir. There is much uneasiness, distrust and fear. The populace all too well understand the serious problems we face and are distrusting of national leadership asking, 'What does the future hold?'

Mr. Speaker, concerning our responsibility as political leaders looking at the decline in national life, the decline in respect for those in authority, and the distrust and fear that exists, responsible legislators we must examine the reasons. One of the reasons is the suspected abuse of power in these islands.

What causes the suspicion? A good example is one of the stories in the Caymanian Compass of Tuesday, 9th March 1999. Generally, in this country in the civil service when a civil servant gets into problems, he is suspended from his job on half pay. I think that is the rule. We see that all the time. There is nothing about him getting into trouble and going back to work. When he gets into trouble, he is called in and told, 'You have a problem and therefore you have to be suspended and suspended on half pay.'

I know of one civil servant who had eighteen years in the service and when he got into a problem he was suspended immediately—and nothing like going back to work. He eventually lost his job because he served a jail sentence. We don't throw away our people, Mr. Speaker, we do what we can to help them. But there are rules and regulations in the service, which everybody knows about before they join.

And in connection with that story and the seriousness of the crime, we understand that what happened was that the person went back to work and only sometime afterward when they heard that pressure was going to be put he was suspended. Those are the kinds of things that cause distrust in the country.

I wish also in connection with that matter to briefly remark on matters that affect our position as representatives and leaders. I find it ill advised and regrettable that Members of the Legislative Assembly involve themselves in providing references to persons appearing before the Courts on criminal charges. This matter is of such a serious nature that sometime ago a majority of the members of the Legislative Assembly held a meeting regarding providing references for persons appearing before the honourable Courts.

It was at that meeting that the decision was taken that MLAs should refrain from so doing in order not to appear to be undermining the authority of the Courts in any shape or form. And it is with some surprise then, Mr. Speaker, that I read recently where one Honourable Member provided a reference for someone facing serious criminal charges.

I well recall MLAs' conduct in such matters being raised at the first local seminar on Parliamentary Practice and Procedure held here in these Chambers April 23rd to the 25th 1990. And Mr. Speaker, I crave your indulgence to read from page 13 of the official report.

It was the Honourable Benson O. Ebanks (and I quote) who was referring to the Chairman of the Session at that time, the Honourable Wilfred St. Clair-Daniel, Speaker of St. Lucia, who was Chairing that session. The Honourable Benson O. Ebanks said: "Mr. Speaker, in small countries elected members of Parliament are often called on to give character references in respect to constituents who may be before the Court. I believe that this is handled in one of two ways. That is some Members refuse to do so. Others do so quite willingly both orally and in written form. I wonder if you would care to comment on that practice."

Honourable W. St. Clair-Daniel said: "Personally, I do not think that that is a practice that should be followed unless the person for whom one is giving the reference is well known or a person within the private employ of the individual. I think it is a dangerous practice. For myself, I would not give it at all. I think I might even extend it so far that I would not stand bail for anyone who is charged with something against the Crown if it is a criminal offence because I consider Parliament to be a part of the Crown in a small community.

“If the person can find no other person than his representative to say that he is good then something is wrong with that person. Surely there are Parsons, Preachers, or whoever heads a Church and other prominent citizens within the community who could be called upon. Therefore, I think that the Member is putting himself on a block to do it and should try and avoid having to do this. I think it can be embarrassing and should be avoided as much as possible.”

So, Mr. Speaker, for a long time that is the position that I have taken, and that is why I took the time to raise it with members. I think that it is not something that we ought to do. Let's say a person who is using drugs and we know that he is on drugs, and we can write a reference to the Courts and say, We think that person can be helped by some kind of community order or something. Or if a person lost his driving permit and we wanted to assist that person somehow or another. Those are different cases. But where there are criminal aspects, members of the House ought not to get involved in this sort of reference giving.

I know that other members are called upon to do the same thing. We are often called upon because we are representatives of the people and they feel, well, ‘He is my representative, he should be able to give me a reference. He knows who I am.’ But we have to stop and look on the other side of the situation.

I would hope that this practice would stop. It does not do us any good. We as national leaders have a tremendous responsibility to lead our people without selfish motives, without every effort and action taken being for self-aggrandisement or personal riches. There is so much spite and abuse of power and jealousy existing in the country at the top, the halls of power. We exhort our people and especially the young people to lead good, clean lives. What kind of example are we setting when such greed exists? And we see it! We are accused of being greedy by giving ourselves humongous pay increases without any effort to get pay increases for the people we serve—some without any pay increase for ten years. These are the kinds of actions that cause distrust.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned too by the actions that mislead the populace. We have a few radio stations, one television station, and only one newspaper. Mr. Speaker, I would rather see much more effort to educate and enlighten our people than coverage of stories that are not true or shows that are in bad taste and do nothing to build national life. I am very proud of our national (government station) radio station. And I am proud of the few Christian stations that we have. But there are those that need to straighten up their act.

While we in this House have a duty to lead, so do many other institutions and individuals. We all have a responsibility to build a national spirit of good will rather than one where people are thrown down. I am not begging for respect for political leaders or for myself. That is not what I am talking about because respect begets respect. As I said, we can be good role models and we should all strive to be positive ones. But a lot is lacking nationally and in our national leaders.

We do nothing for ourselves and we do nothing for national life when we tear down one another, when we set upon each other to the point where our families are hurt and suffer for it. Political one-upmanship is one thing. Criticising the policies of a past government or a present government is one thing. But efforts that malign a person's character, that cast doubt on a person's integrity where one is found guilty of things one knows nothing about without the benefit of a trial do nothing to build national goodwill—but everything to destroy it.

For what reasons Mr. Speaker? So that one can say, I am better than he or she is? So that one can have all the power to pull this string or get this done or that done for one's friend without opposition? If I was speaking of hypothetical situations it would not be bad, but the sad fact is, the stark truth is . . . and talking about our national life as it exists in this House and in many institutions in our country, if ever there was a time when we needed better attitudes at a national level, it is today!

Now is the time to be teaching our people, each and every man however, poor, however, uneducated; however, small and feeble that man is that each man, boy or girl has a job to do and it's on all of our shoulders the future rests—for good or ill.

Now, you may hear I am over reacting or you may hear several other excuses. Mr. Speaker, far be it from the truth. The social deficit is widening and part of the fall out is a damning rise in crime—street crime, crime in and among young people, crime in the home, domestic violence, crime at work. These are some of the problems we are facing.

Mr. Speaker, from my count I am short of a quorum.

The Speaker: Is the Serjeant-at-Arms in the building?

We do not have quorum. Summon some other members please.

(Pause)

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: It is all right, Mr. Speaker, I will continue.

The Speaker: If you can. I can wait ten minutes.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Okay.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, please continue.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, good management is often a scarce commodity. Without it, opportunities often become problems.

A country like ours often faces economic difficulties, which are largely beyond our control—such as the vagaries of the American economy. The American economy has been good and so ours boomed. What then is the cause of the serious situation in which we find ourselves? Where we taxed to where we borrow to do everything. Mr. Speaker, it has been caused by bad management decisions and a failure to be innovative. But also there has been a reluctance to change outdated systems and policies. While the whole world is changing, we continue in the old way.

Much is being talked about reform. And I am very glad that we have some people who are thinking about the future to the extent that they are attempting reform in the civil service. Let's say this will revamp the way we do business. But I believe reform as is being attempted by the civil service will be seriously hampered by political management. And how will that happen? I don't know how many people have given thought to this because there is much talk about the reform. But to do the necessary changes the reforms are trying to accomplish will take constitutional changes and advancement. Whether we like to say that or not, that is a fact and I recognise it even in a shallow way.

At the last conference that was held here, I asked those persons whether we can get these things done without changing the constitution. I think the answer given satisfies me and satisfied other persons there that what I am saying is correct. For the necessary changes the reforms are trying to accomplish, we will have to make constitutional changes and advancement. This is what the ruling elite fear most!

That is why the reforms are not going to get anywhere because the ruling elite—inside the House and some outside—is not going to do anything about changing the constitution or advancing it.

Some people think that we have been good up to now, so why change things. The simple answer is that the way the government as it is made up and the way it is managing is causing us to go downhill. And there is a tremendous waste. I recognised that while in Executive Council. I saw it. Having had that experience and having been in Executive Council and having had the opportunity to sit back, look, listen and even learn. I have to note that there is the course that the country is on didn't start today but it is there and it is going to go downhill so we need to change. We need to evolve an effective economic strategy where priorities are determined and achieved.

We need priorities, and we need to stick to them. A good example and one thing that comes to mind is the blatant neglect of the social development sector and the matters that I had to push to bring up to an appreciable level after 25 years of neglect. We had to take a quantum leap! And I got accused of spending too much money on sports or spending too much money on youth or spending too much money on the old people or trying to get things too fast. So, Mr. Speaker, this tells us that we cannot push things back. We need to lift our sights, we need to establish well thought out priorities, and we need to input a sense of urgency.

We need to put in place plans (that's what I am trying to say) so that we can make consistent incremental improvements in every sector in the county. We need to do this so that we will not need to borrow large sums of money because we have to put in place so many projects at one time, that's what I am saying.

This is causing economic havoc. It is not good enough to trot out a list of capital works and say, 'See, we are doing a good job. You didn't help us but we are doing a good job. And we are going to get all this for the public.' It is not good enough. And let's not get back to the old habit of putting the blame on somebody else. This country needs a fresh direction. However, the government seems bereft to get started; they do not even have a fresh idea as to what is needed. Instead, the policy that is driving them is borrow, tax, and spend. Tax, borrow, and spend. Spend, borrow, and tax. Anyway you mix it, it comes out the same way. It seems we no longer need to ask where is the money coming from, is more sensible to ask, where is the money going?

I have listened and I have learned some. They say our public debt is below the international standard, OECD, World Bank and [International] Monetary Fund. But it is still too high even though it is below the standards of the World Bank, OECD or the International Monetary Fund. The speed with which the Government is increasing the public debt as distinct from prioritising as far as I am concerned it is not prudent at all. It is bad government. Furthermore, it is a policy that will lead to internal damnation for this country because we cannot do all the wants or even address all the needs going in the direction which government is headed without massive borrowing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they might well say, 'Look at how we fixed the roads. That is going to be done.' What is missing because of their present policy is good sound workable long-term plans that address the social deficit that exists and is widening day by day, week by week, month by month, and year by year. I have had to listen to them say that they are following the plans that I left behind. And every now and again they give me a little credit. But the truth is that the issues the people talked about for years and the mandate that the government was given in 1992 and the work we started and we left, the human element, the people of this country are being driven into the ground. Government is unable to address the social and economic problems while we face a silent but angry populace.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have watched government play. They seem to think that they can carry on their business in this manner and that some of the opposition will not say anything because they opposed us in 1992. Government says to themselves, 'We don't need to do anything about it because McKeeva will stand alone. The newspaper is not going to give him too much coverage so he will not be effective and we can carry on doing what we want as long as we divide the opposition.'

And don't you think that they don't try to do that. They are good at it now, but what they did not recognise is that while we in the opposition were not all together in 1992 or 1996, there are many similarities. They campaigned on many of the things we campaigned on and they believed in a lot of the things that we were trying to accomplish. So, they will not succeed to that extent.

But in the meantime, because of their inaction the social deficit is widening; there are more broken families, more children loose on the streets, crime is the highest it has ever been and they say this is the best the country has ever been.

Now, let's get something straight, Mr. Speaker, and I said this several times this week. I am not saying that when I left Executive Council that everything was peachy. I am not saying that. By far it was not. But I had plans. I acted on the problems. And comparing the difference in teenage crime today, we were better off. Because of the absence of a feeling for the human element and what is now obvious is an attempt to save their hides at the polls the people suffer.

The simple truth is they have not been paying attention to what they need to do. What they are on now is all about re-election and it is obvious and evident by the vast sums of money borrowed—spearheaded by the Minister of Tourism who opposed the other minister's attempt to do the same thing years ago when things would have been cheaper.

Now, it is good for them, it's good for any government I guess. They feel good. When I say good, for any government to get through their policies or some of their programmes, some of their ideas, to get capital works or to get something started—I believe in that. But I also believe that we must prioritise because that is how we started out, that is what we told the people we would do—spend what we could afford. Now, they are acting as if this economic growth that they say this is going to help to create . . . this growth alone is sufficient to address all the problems in the country.

Build the roads, give us these little other things and that is going to help everything. Is it? They seem blind, deaf, and dumb to the fact as I have always said that high levels of economic growth which everybody wants brings social decay. There must be a long side of economic growth continued—bold, innovative action to address it. That's what I am saying! They have not been doing that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all of them, barring one, have given me credit for tackling the social problems. Yet, after moving me out of Executive Council they are not tackling these areas with the necessary innovation and purpose of conviction to help stop social decay in the country. That is the problem. There is no use giving me credit when they are allowing those things to roll down hill at a speed that we can't stop. And how did they start to accomplish this? They split the Ministry of Community Development.

Mr. Speaker, we don't have a quorum. Where are the ministers?

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, before you continue, I would like to say this: If we fall below the quorum again in five minutes, I shall adjourn this House.

Please continue.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, the Backbench is pretty well tight here it is the Government who is slim.

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, with respect, we have had most of the other members in here but recently they moved out. It has been slim on the Backbench during part of this time too, with respect, sir.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay, please continue.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, as much respect that he wants to give us, we are more on this side—

The Speaker: Well, let's not debate the issue. Please continue with your speech.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I will do that, but I must answer that interjection because we've got one out sick and one off the island and government only has three sitting there. They must come in and listen! They like to give their licks. They must come in and take them. That's their problem!

No we are not talking about the Chief Secretary, he is very studiously sitting there. I am going to ask him to take some notes and give to the government.

Mr. Speaker, they split the Ministry of Community Development to where it is all over the place, and by and large ineffective. A ministry that was laid down, campaigned on and they said that this is what the country needed to help take it forward. Take the social development forward.

Let's look how ineffective it is: Housing? Nothing happening except to follow through on one of the matters I left and they said that they are going to do some housing survey. I am not going to debate it because I don't believe that we should debate something when a motion is there to be debated. I don't think that we should go into it.

Social Services? The Minister (a nice person, a nice guy, very honourable man) is too busy with health and drug prevention and all its needs. When we put those matters together, when we put the Community Development Ministry together it was because we felt that education should be targeting education. We felt that health was a big enough subject to be dealt with and drug addiction and drug prevention and education was something that we needed to put all the effort on in the country, that's why they were given those special subjects. No problem with him. It's not his fault. He is just too busy with health and these other matters and all its needs.

Labour is in shambles. Sports? That's in shambles because the Minister (and I had to tell her this earlier today) is not a national minister—the Minister is a constituency minister. Good for her constituents! I hear she is doing all kind of things up there but is lacking in drive and purpose for the overall country.

Training was given to the Minister of Education who really doesn't support the necessary actions needed in these islands today least he loses what he feels his—

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I am objecting on a point of order.

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman Boddén: He is imputing improper motives to me and specifically saying that I do not intend to do the several he said there. That is untrue, it is a lie!

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, now I am going to rise on a point of order to that point of order.

The Speaker: Let me deal with the first one first.

You should not impute improper motives. If you assume that, that is your belief. But you should not be stating it as a fact. I ask that you withdraw it as a fact. If it is your belief or something else, it is different.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister will not take the necessary actions for the reason I said.

Now, I said that because he has had that ministry or that part of it for how long now and nothing has been done.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, I object to that as well on a point of order. The [member] is misleading the House. Training has only come solely to my ministry within the last two months. That honourable member had half of it or a part of it for four or five years. What has he done with it?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker!

The Speaker: I do not want a cross-debate. That is really not the purpose. We are debating the Throne Speech. Let us show respect to the Throne Speech.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech is given so that we can debate the affairs of this territory and that is what I am doing.

The greatest need of this territory right now is training. And, yes, I had training for four years but if I was not [removed] from Executive Council they would have got it done. And I am not going to debate it because I have more latitude in the motion, but just to answer the minister this: He had it (or he should have had it as I understood) when they moved me out of Executive Council, it shifted responsibility and went to him. Now, Mr. Speaker, they have done nothing with it.

What did I do? I created a committee of nearly thirty persons across the board and we reported to the Executive Council. The Executive Council did not accept all the reports. They would not even allow me to publish the report. What Executive Council did was to allow me to put forward certain recommendations. But could I get anything done with those recommendations? [Laughter]

The Speaker: Let us please go back to the debate.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I am in the debate! And I am not going to get into the merits of training or not training.

What I am dealing with is when they split up the ministry and how it has become ineffective. I have all the right to deal with that under the rules of the Standing Orders of the House and the Throne Speech. Don't you agree?

The Speaker: I am not arguing that, but I am asking that we use respect.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, please. If you say that I am being disrespectful . . . to whom? Did I call anybody a liar? Who was called a liar?

Now, do you know what I am going to do? I am going to ask you to ask him to withdraw it. Right now, please.

The Speaker: Honourable Member for Education, he does have a point of order that was not an appropriate word, please withdraw that.

Hon. Truman Boddén: Well, I will withdraw it.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you.

Hon. Truman Boddén: However, I am entitled to say the statement he made was untrue and is still untrue, and I still say that.

[Laughter]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, let's look at the argument. The argument is that training was given to the minister and that nothing has happened. Is that untrue? For the last eighteen or seventeen months he has had the responsibility. Am I right? Yes, I am right.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, that once again is untrue, untrue, untrue. When did I get it?

But why don't you ask me rather than getting up and—

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: On a point of order! He has imputed an improper motion.

[inaudible interjection]

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: That remains split the way it was when that honourable member was an Executive Council Member when he said nothing was done during his time. It only came fully to me in this last change over.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, is he rising on a point of order or does he want an explanation?

Hon. Truman Boddén: Yes, imputing improper motives, sir.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, please, I am not imputing any improper motive. I am saying that they split the ministry that he got training. Whether he got it in December 1997 or he got it in March of 1998, it is well over a year that he must have had training. I am saying that they do not have the purpose of conviction to do it unless they erode their traditional election base—the business community.

May I carry on, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Please continue. Let's get out of the cross side.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you. Tell him to behave himself over there!

Mr. Speaker, one thing they are not going to be able to do is to convince anybody in this House or in the general public that I did not try to do something about labour and training in this House. And I am not going to debate it for the reasons I stated. I will have a lot of latitude when the motion comes up in the House. But I am not going to take blame for something when I know the amount of back-stabbing that went on and how they tried to cut my throat to stop training because they felt it was socialist. Ask them to produce their report!

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman Bodden: On a point of order, the Honourable member is saying that we have been trying to cut his throat. That is imputing improper motives. It is totally untrue. With the amount of shouting that he is doing the public can see there is nothing wrong with his throat.

[Laughter]

The Speaker: Honourable member, please be careful with your words. I understand that you are a little bit heated, but—

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I thank the minister for that laughable interjection, but the matter of training is not laughable!

The Speaker: But the matter of cutting your throat, that is really not appropriate.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, Mr. Speaker. A rose by any other name is still a rose.

The Speaker: But I will just ask you to withdraw that little statement.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: To what? That they're trying to cut my throat? Mr. Speaker, a rose by any other name is just a rose.

The Speaker: I am not asking you about a rose, I am asking you about—

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, they tried to cut my throat . . . but I will withdraw it.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please continue.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: So nothing has been happening with training. Even if it was split, nothing happened.

What happened to youth affairs? They shared it up. But as I said the road to Hell is paved with many good intentions, and it is not effective.

Mr. Speaker, if this is good government then Hell is Heaven!

Community Development is becoming meaningless. As much as they talk about shared ministerial initiatives, talk is cheap and the facades are only dressing. I have spent the better part of two decades as an elected representative in public service, in the trenches struggling to help the people. I have seen crisis and calamities, but at this particular time our situation is very, very frightening.

If we believe this is an exaggeration, consider the amount of broken homes, consider the amount of incest, consider the amount of teenage pregnancy, consider the amount of young people in prison, consider the amount of young women on drugs. As we hear day in and day out there are as many guns on the streets of Cayman as anywhere else. The amount of youth deaths due to violence of some kind or another . . . this sad, litany could go on and on.

Many Caymanians believe that we have lost our moral bearings. But far too many—a significant number—seem to feel these problems are someone else's fault or someone else's responsibility or both. The biggest failure of all is the failure to appreciate where our own best interests lie. In my opinion if we hope to regain our confidence, we need to move to a fundamental shift in the country's perception of what is good.

People must see that selfish interest is not the same as the importance of what is collectively good. Of course, there are many persons whose commitment is larger than them, and this is inspiring. People volunteering to help others one way or the other . . . and I have said that if we had to pay for the work of the Lions Club, the Female Lions and the Rotary Club, and all those persons doing voluntary work, we would never be able to pay for it. We are fortunate. But far too many are not concerned about doing it collectively, and far too many are not involved at all. That's one of the problems we have.

And from my standpoint, the importance of the collective good of the community is an insight that seems to elude the government. In spite of dangers we face—the loss of a generation of children, the growth of an underclass and wiping out of whatever middle class existed—it is happening day in and day out. Government must see this, they must see that tearing down the ministry charged with Community Development after fighting for 25 years to get one is a mistake.

But they are not going to see that for the simple reason that I was interrupted just now. They are not going to get one with those kind of reasons because they don't want to hear what is the truth.

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Yes, they can call me that if they like. He knows better but he is good at saying anything because he is a lawyer.

The Speaker: Excuse me. When you reach a point where we can take the afternoon break, we shall do so.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: In a minute. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that you cannot give people the subject of training and housing that have no will, no fight, no innovation to do the job. That is what I am saying.

The Speaker: We will suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3:47 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4:15 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues. The First Elected Member for West Bay continuing.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

When we got to the break, I was saying that training is in shambles and the reason why is that it is where it shouldn't be. You can't give people training that have no will, no fight, no innovation to do the job, and that they had it long enough.

Hon. Truman Boddén: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order again. I put this point of order before.

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman Boddén: He is saying I have no will, no whatever . . . and he must withdraw it. With all due respect, I believe that I am more competent to lead training in this country than that member will ever be. And let him please get off it.

The Speaker: Please Honourable Member, I ask you not to dwell on this anymore.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, this is a subject and this is a Throne Speech. You know that the Throne Speech is wide enough for me to debate this issue. Now, he is tempting me to debate it, I am not going to debate it, sir. I am not going to go into the merits of it. Whereas I know I can under the Standing Orders, he is not going to tell me what I can debate from what I can't debate.

The Speaker: But I am telling you, you cannot make positive statements.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Like what?

The Speaker: That he is not competent.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Did I say that he was not competent? That is his interpretation, I never said that and as far as he being more competent than me . . . he should be, but is he getting the job done?

The Speaker: Anyway, I ask that you withdraw some statements.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: The government never spent any money on me to train me in London you know, or anywhere else. I wish I had that opportunity.

You are laughing? I am not laughing!

The Speaker: That's not the point we are discussing here at the present time. You must respect the honourable members. You must not impute wrong doings.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, please, may I address you now?

The Speaker: Yes, please.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: What you are saying, sir, is leading people to believe that I have done something against him. I didn't do anything against Truman Boddén, the Minister of Education. I didn't!

I am saying that the matter of training must be given to people who have the will, who have the fight and the innovation to get the job done.

The Speaker: Did you initially say it must be given? Or did you say it had been given?

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I said, you can't give.... Do you want me to repeat it, sir? I can easily repeat the whole thing.

The Speaker: No, that is not necessary. What I am asking: Did you make a positive statement? I thought you had said that he did not.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: I said, You can't give people training who have no will, no fight, no innovation to do the job.

The Speaker: Well, that is saying that the person who now has responsibility for training does not have the will.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Well, that's might be your interpretation. I didn't say that, but I mean it.

Now, if you want me to withdraw it under the rules, I will. But I believe today that they don't have the fight, they don't have the will and they are not doing the job to get training done in this country and people are suffering because of it!

Now, you tell me to withdraw it and I will withdraw it under the Standing Orders.

The Speaker: I ask that you withdraw it, please.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: I withdraw it, sir.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order where a member intentionally . . . are we now going to be in a position where we can intentionally get up and deliberately flout your rulings and make the statement on the basis that you just withdraw it and that's the end of it? If that's the case, you will get anarchy—

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, is the minister on a point of order?

Hon. Truman Bodden: That is a point of order, sir, because that honourable member—

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: What is the point of order? I didn't hear any point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Truman Bodden: The point of order is that the Honourable Member told you he was going to deliberately break the rules of the House, he stood up, he broke it and then he said, "I withdraw it."

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Does the Member have a point of order? Please rule on that.

Hon. Truman Bodden: It is!

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: I have withdrawn it. You asked me to withdraw, I withdrew it.

The Speaker: Yes, okay, go ahead, please continue First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Thank you very much, sir. Nothing hurts more than when they know they can't get the upper hand and when they know they are wrong. They will try to contradict me, but they know they are wrong. They know that training is in shambles.

Just leave him alone with his sense. I am glad his sense is his and not mine.

Mr. Speaker, at the widest centre of things, if this country wants to get better at moving forward they must recognise that we need one thing more than any other. We need a sense of national direction, we need a sense of national community, and we need to persuade the people that community is more than McKeever Bush, is more than nice sounding things we say every elected year.

I believe in being practical. And I am not afraid to try, but I can tell you one thing: You can get a lot further by appealing to people's practical self-interest—like their children—than by any other appeal. No matter how eloquent we may be we have to impress on people, government has to get its house in order and we must remind the people that community is much more than nice. It is necessary for the community to exist. Community development must exist.

We cannot hope to conquer the huge and sobering problems that stare us in the face, that are taking our children away from us day in and day out. The problems I mentioned are so big that we can't even comprehend some problems. Some problems this country created because we refused for thirty years at the minimum to insist on our common interest. Problems that will gobble up our future and some of them are left to be dealt with by people who don't care.

The uncoordinated personal initiatives of any minister, one, two or three too busy with their main subject of responsibility. That's what I am talking about. Let's us tell the people without a sense of national community that the country needs to be built. We will grow and continue to grow defenceless against politicians who offer wages (let's call it) instead of solutions, who seek to divide us one against the other for their momentary control and gain without a sense of national community.

Without a restoration of the powerful, the unwritten codes that taught us the difference between right and wrong, which prevented more lawlessness than the law ever did or could. Unless we have that and a restoration of it, we will be taken into a kind of society where nothing is left but decay, where government is taking care of the kids on the corner, your kids and mine.

We don't want that but that's where we will be headed. How will they do it? We cannot make it as a nation if we lose a generation of our children to drugs. We cannot make it as a nation if we lose a generation of our children to AIDS. We cannot make it, Mr. Minister of Education, if we lose a generation to inadequate education or training.

If they are not my children, they are your children! And one thing we cannot do is to survive without their talent, intelligence, and energy that we know our young people have. We cannot afford to build larger prisons, to jam our prisons and leave our Community College empty. That's what I am talking about, and they think that building the prison is the answer.

Mr. Speaker, for all that—

[inaudible interjection]

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Oh? Do you like the coaching I am getting? Yes! You should think so too!

Mr. Speaker, let me repeat it since they are listening and have caught up with what we are saying. We cannot make it as a country if we lose a generation of our children to drugs, to AIDS, to inadequate education, inadequate training even if they are not your children or mine.

We cannot survive (and it bears repeating) without the talent and intelligence and energy of the people of this country. We cannot afford to jam our prisons and leave our Community College empty as is being done.

We can build all the nice homes we want and we can put nice gates and even dress up people like Swedish guards in front of them. We can build all the nice roads like all the money that the Minister of Tourism now has to do. We can buy all the nice cars to run on those roads. We can have all the Pedro Castle we want with all its inadequacies. We can have the biggest stock market in the world. We can have the best monetary authority in the world. We can spend all the money we earn on tourism. These are things close to my heart.

Hear me now: We cannot make it if we fail to rescue those who have been left behind whom the government of the day is not reaching. Do you know what? They don't understand. And another thing, we will run out of places to hide. Then (and perhaps only then too sadly) we might understand what we might have not understood before—that no man is an island, no woman, no race, no country, no government.

For all the wealth that some have, for all the bad things they did, for all the opportunities they have taken away from others, you will not make it as individuals alone. You have to get back to that point where the community is foremost.

They have broken up the Ministry of Community Development. They have split it to where it is ineffective, so not even they knew what subject was where and so the matters were not addressed and so people suffer. And so who is hurt? The country suffers.

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4:30 p.m., I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this Honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman Boddien: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10 am tomorrow morning, sir.

The Speaker: The question is that this House do now adjourn until 10:00 am. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourned until 10:00 am tomorrow.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM FRIDAY, 12 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
FRIDAY
12 MARCH 1999
10.26 AM

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, who will be arriving later this morning, from the Honourable Third Official Member who is overseas on official business, from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is sick, and from the Third Elected Member for George Town who is overseas on a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Seminar.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question 11 is standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 11

No. 11: Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources how many banks continue to participate in the Government Guaranteed Mortgage Scheme.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As the First Elected Member for George Town will be aware, Finance Committee recently approved the continuation of the Government Guaranteed Home Mortgage Scheme when it approved increasing Government's blanket guarantee limit. Finance Committee also approved the renewal of the agreements with CIBC Bank & Trust Co. (Cayman) Ltd, the Bank of Butterfield International (Cayman) Ltd. and British American.

Approval has also been given to the other category "A" banks to participate in the scheme once they have Executive Council's prior approval. However, as there are 30 category "A" banks, the ministry is presently working on bringing the scheme back on line with CIBC, Bank of Butterfield and British American before beginning to include the other banks.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state exactly what the procedure is since Finance Committee has given its approval from here on in before the banks can actually engage in lending under the scheme?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It would entail the banks having new agreements signed to put everything in place.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I notice that I also represent the district of Bodden Town, which is fine with me. It's a pity they haven't included the Brac. But anyway, in following up . . . and that was said in jest. Can the honourable minister say if the criteria used prior to this for individuals to be eligible under the scheme remain the same, or have there been changes regarding the eligibility of the applicants?

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes. The definition of eligible borrower has been changed.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Is this simply because the amount has increased? Or is this based on experience with previous applicants?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is more or less based on the change which we are trying to put through plus trying to make sure that Caymanians have been defined properly and the eligibility (which has been changed) definitely shows that.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: If I am understanding the minister correctly, when he is addressing eligibility he has limited it to the status of the individual, whether it is truly a Caymanian or not. My question held a wider scope. Let me rephrase it so that it can be clear.

When I spoke about eligibility it included that, but not just that. What about the other criteria? My understanding is that the banks interview the prospective borrower and based on their criteria for eligibility they make the recommendation to government asking government to fill the gap with the guarantee. I am certain that there was some criteria that government used in either giving the application its blessing or refusing to issue the guarantee asked for. Has this changed since the new amount has been approved? Or is the way that government is dealing with it consistent with the way it dealt with it prior to this?

Hon. John B. McLean: I would say that it is consistent, but the agreement is something that is agreed between the banks and government.

The Speaker: The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: From the answer, it seems that this scheme was stopped. If so, why? He said, “. . .the Ministry is presently working on bringing the scheme back on line with CIBC, Bank of Butterfield and British American . . .” Was the scheme discontinued? If so, can the minister say why?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It was a couple of things. Of course, I mentioned the approval of Finance Committee, and it is my understanding that the agreement with CIBC was near its end as far as lending was concerned. So this too had to be extended. Taking this into consideration and getting this all renewed we may look at it as being stopped, while it was really not. It was more or less an extension.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House whether there is any variation in the interest rates among the various banks participating in this scheme? Or are all of the banks lending money at the same interest rate?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that the loan rates are supposed to be the same.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: If that is the case, can the honourable minister tell the House what the advantage is to the borrower with the variety of banks participating in the scheme?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I would say that it would give government a wider area to do negotiations for the various people who are in need.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Following up on what I was dealing with in relation to the scheme, can the honourable minister state where it is right now? There are many anxious individuals who have been making appointments. Since that approval was given, while it says “recently” in the answer, . . . I guess that is relative. I am wondering what else has to be done before everything is in line and applications under the scheme can be accepted by the banks.

Hon. John B. McLean: There are ongoing discussions with the banks and we are hoping that in the very near future to start up something again. But it has taken some time, as I mentioned. First of all, it was only taken over by my ministry and then we have been going through all of the negotiations. But it is ongoing and hopefully it will be in the very near future. I cannot give a date.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Understanding what the minister just said, and taking for granted that there is a commitment that the process will be speeded up as best as possible given the circumstances and the due process which have to take place, let me say that I have seen literature on it. But can the honourable minister state if there is any clear message being sent to the public so that they are quite aware of the requirements when they make application? Or is it simply being left to the banks to interview the prospective clients and to weed through them to see who is eligible from who is not under the scheme?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As this has been an ongoing thing, recently there has been no publicity. But it seems as if we really don't need any because there are persons constantly enquiring about the scheme. Even if they go to the banks and are not satisfied they come back to the ministry and we are still happy to work along with them to see whatever can be worked out to the best interest of the person who is in need.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Again, understanding what the minister just said, the reason I asked the question was because I know that at some points in time the personnel in the banks get a bit frustrated because they have to go through the same procedure over and over again with individuals who sometimes make more than one appointment and it keeps reoccurring. Perhaps the minister could give some type of undertaking that, without going into any huge expense, some type of "paper" could be produced outlining the entire situation.

The truth is that as a representative it is only by trial and error that I got a pretty good grasp of exactly how this system works. So if there was some method by which it could be explained, because the minister said his staff does not have a problem explaining it and walking people through the motions, . . . the representatives would not have a problem if they were fully informed as to exactly how it works and what people can expect, and what they need to prepare themselves with in order to fulfill the requirements of the application. So perhaps an undertaking along those lines would assist with the entire scheme, and also the undertaking that as fast as it can be done it will be done, that is the arrangements with the banks so that they can proceed.

Hon. John B. McLean: I give that undertaking, and I would also like to add that we do have some information on it and as soon as everything is streamlined we will definitely be willing to release that.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, the next question is number 12, standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTION 12

No. 12: Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources to list all dredging applications which have received approval in principle and also those which are pending.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: The following is a breakdown of all dredging applications which have either received approval in principle or are pending.

Approval in principle:

Heber Arch-	North Sound – 6 million cubic yards
Equipment Ltd	North Sound — 1.9 million yards
Mike Simmons-	North Sound — 122,000 cubic yards

Pending other than above:

L E Bell Constrution	122,000 cubic yards for channel at Heron Harbour
Caymarl Ltd	1 million cubic yards from the North Sound
Moxam Industries Ltd	2.12 million cubic yards from the North Sound
Selkirk Watler Jr	24,715 cubic yards at Red Bay North Sound

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Bearing in mind the Throne Speech of 1996 (or 1997) that famous statement made by the Governor where Mike Simmons' North Sound application was included when he said there would be no more dredging in the North Sound (and I am not quoting verbatim), except the continuing application that Caymarl had to complete the approval there, and also the 122,000 cubic yards for Mike Simmons, the way this answer is given, the 122,000 cubic yards by Mike Simmons is included with two other applications which are approved in principle. Can the honourable minister state how this will be handled?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Although approval in principle is given here for the ones I have listed, it was subject to the environmental impact study which is being carried out. So the statement was made by His Excellency the Governor in the Throne Speech, and as soon as that is carried out, I would take it for granted that it would go back to Executive Council and these would be approved fully.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Can the honourable minister say whether or not the ones approved in principle had any requirements like the requirements for the environmental study?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes, I would think that was attached to those.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: At what stage are the ones pending?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As is normal when such applications come to my ministry, they are passed on to Executive Council for a ruling prior to any further decision being taken. The ones in question here have been submitted to Executive Council where they are at present.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Bearing in mind the minister's reply to my supplementary question, and going back to what the Governor said in one of his previous Throne Speeches, is it fair for us to assume that since Mike Simmons' application was singled out along with Caymarl, it will follow that once the conditions for his approval are met that Executive Council will then approve his application as a separate application from all others, which, based on a Private Member's Motion that was unanimously accepted regarding dredging in the North Sound, all of the other applications have to be brought to the Legislative Assembly to be debated and decided upon?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I would suspect that once this study is carried out and is favourable (I cannot see the one that the First Elected Member for George Town just mentioned, Mr. Simmons, having any difficulties) it should be approved.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Just so that we can hear it clearly, Mr. Speaker. If there should be no hiccoughs and the conditions are met, an approval should be given by Executive Council and that is the end of the story. That one will not have to come to the Legislative Assembly. Is that what the minister is saying?

Hon. John B. McLean: This has been approved in principle, and that is why I said what I did. As far as I am concerned, it has been approved in principle. And once the other criteria is met I can't see anything to turn it back. It should be approved.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: The minister's answer is not in line with my understanding of his previous answers. The Governor mentioned Mike Simmons and Caymarl. Caymarl has now completed its dredging of the amount of fill that it was allowed to dredge from the North Sound. So that license no longer exists. It is completed.

The Governor mentioned Mike Simmons along with Caymarl. He did not mention the other two approvals in principle outlined in the answer. The way the minister has answered says to me that either one or all three of these, once the conditions are met, will be approved by Executive Council and that will be the end of the story.

The motion that was approved was based on the Governor's statement in his Throne Speech. So our understanding would be that the only exception to any application which would not have to come to the Legislative Assembly would be Mike Simmons' application. Is the minister now saying that the application for Heber Arch and Equipment Ltd. will not have to come to the Legislative Assembly once the conditions of the approval in principle are met?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: The Throne Speech mentioned Mr. Mike Simmons, and that is what I thought we were discussing. So, definitely the member is correct—it is only Mike Simmons we are talking about.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Again, just for clarity, and I understand what the minister just said . . . in the answer to a previous supplementary question the minister mentioned "these applications." That is why I just asked the question to clarify the situation.

Let me put it another way. The application which has approval in principle for Heber Arch for 6 million cubic yards, and the application for Equipment Ltd. for 1.9 million cubic yards, . . . Can the honourable minister say if upon final approval by Executive Council those two applications will have to come to the Legislative Assembly to receive final and absolute, total approval?

Hon. John B. McLean: The member is correct. They would have to come here.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I thank the minister for his answer which clarifies the situation. Now, another supplementary I want to get cleared up is procedures for these applications. We had gotten to the point where you can get approval in principle and then once you meet those conditions it goes back to Executive Council for final approval. Can the honourable minister state exactly what the situation is that presently obtains in regard to Executive Council giving final approval to these applications and them having to come to the Legislative Assembly? It is my understanding that there is some question in the air regarding whether Executive Council's final approval is indeed a final approval, or if it indeed has to come back to the Legislative Assembly as is required by the motion approved regarding dredging applications in the North Sound. I think it's a Constitutional question.

I am trying to determine (and I will put it very bluntly) if the situation is one where legally if Executive Council gives final approval for any one of these applications that can be the end of the story and it gives the applicants permission to go ahead with dredging. Or, is it Executive Council's position that based on the approval of the Private Member's Motion these applications do have to come back to the Legislative Assembly?

And before the minister answers, while I suspect what his answer is going to be, I would like for Council's position to be made crystal clear regarding the anomaly that seems to exist with the two approvals. That is something that has never been cleared up.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As to the first part of the question, it will definitely come back here. And on the latter part, we are seeking legal advice from the Legal Department on that. I wouldn't want to comment on that prior to having that information. But once we have it I will be happy to share that with the member.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I appreciate what the minister has said, and I understand what he has said thus far. But his answer raises one further question. If Council is seeking legal advice on this matter, how can the minister say that these approvals by Executive Council will still have to come to the Legislative Assembly? It is obvious that the situation is not clear.

I am not trying to confuse the issue, I am just trying to really make it clear. The minister is saying that it will come to the Legislative Assembly, these applications, after Executive Council has approved them; but he is also saying that Executive Council is seeking legal advice as to who really has the authority—Council or the Legislative Assembly. I want to find out exactly.

Hon. John B. McLean: The member is correct. That is the way that I understand it, subject to hearing something from the Legal Department. That's why I said as soon as we have a legal opinion on it I would be happy to share that with the member.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can the honourable minister say if Council is presently of the opinion that the Legislative Assembly does not have the authority to make the final decision regarding dredging? Is that Council's present position?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I may be stepping out of my bounds to answer that question as it deals directly with Council. I don't have any decision from Executive Council and I am not going to commit myself.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: When we can't answer questions that are at the heart of the substantive question it creates difficulties because if Council is under the opinion that perhaps the Private Member's Motion should not entitle the Legislative Assembly to make the final decision, I think it will influence this approval in principle situation. Since the Private Member's Motion was brought quite a while ago I think the Council should be in a position to at least say whether or not it is satisfied that the Legislative Assembly has the authority—

The Speaker: Could you bring that to a question, please?

Dr. Frank McField: Excuse me?

The Speaker: Can you bring that to a question? This is Question Time.

Dr. Frank McField: I know it's Question Time, Mr. Speaker, Thank you very much. The difficulty here is because of the fact that the minister is not directly answering the question. The question is, What is the government's present position regarding that Private Member's Motion? Has the government accepted the authority of the Legislative Assembly to make the final decision regarding dredging or is the government still seeking advice?

The Speaker: I think that was very clearly answered by the honourable minister. They are seeking advice.
The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House why, after voting to approve the motion brought by the Legislative Assembly, Executive Council decided to seek legal advice as to the legality of a position they had previously supported and approved?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I don't want to get into that part of it, but it is my understanding that it's the process that has been followed, and it's a legal process and that is what I want to do as long as I am in the ministry.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House if this is a common procedure with motions brought by the backbench if Executive Council also seeks legal advice as to the legality of it when they have given approval? Or is this just an exception?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I cant answer for the government. That is completely separate and apart from the question on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: As I understand it—

The Speaker: May I interrupt you for just a minute? Before we go on, I would entertain a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 23(7) and (8) so that Question Time can go beyond 11 o'clock.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8)

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I so move.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, I beg to second.

The Speaker: The Motion has been moved and seconded. Those in favour please say aye. Those against no.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8) SUSPENDED.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: In the Governor's Throne Speech, he mentioned two approvals. Now, one of those approvals has dredged and completed. The other one has not been able to start because government has not given the requisite go ahead. Am I right in saying that the one that got the dredging started and completed followed the conditions laid down and the next one that has not been able to start has not been able to follow the conditions?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: If I recall, the one in question, Caymarl, did come to the Legislative Assembly and that is what I said, that they will all come to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town, and there will be two additional supplementaries after this.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I respect your ruling at all times, but I think this is not only a sensitive issue, but one that the public wishes to understand. I would crave your indulgence, sir, if at all possible, you could find it in your heart that if we exceed two more, . . . so that we may clear the air. I will start with one of them now, sir. Thank you.

Just to follow up what the First Elected Member for West Bay has asked, what would clear the situation up for that specific application . . . The application for Mike Simmons has received approval in principle. I think that is clearly understood. Can the honourable minister state exactly why final approval has not been granted for that one based on what the Governor said in 1996?

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that it is subject to the environmental study being carried out.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: So we are understanding that there is an environmental impact study which is required for that application to be approved once that study supports the application, and government has not received that yet, and that's why that one is pending. Fine.

Another question I have is based on what the minister has said on previous occasions. Terms of reference have been drawn up by the relevant department. If my memory serves me right these terms of reference were passed on to Council for approval. At some subsequent date in the future (hopefully not too long from now) an environmental impact study which encompasses that and other things regarding needs for fill for the construction industry will be undertaken. Hopefully that study will be done, or at least commenced before the first half of this year is completed.

Based on the fact that government has recognised the need for this study, what is Executive Council's position then with these other applications including the other two pending? If it is accepted that a study is needed, there is approval in principle for nearly 8 million cubic yards (roughly) and there are pending applications for another 3.5 million cubic yards of fill to be dredged from the North Sound. Is it that Executive Council is taking the position that these applications will have to remain in the state they are in now until the findings of this study are complete?

Hon. John B. McLean: I would say that's correct.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: So, for purposes of clarity, the minister has just stated that these applications will not be entertained for final approval until government has the advantage of the findings of this study?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I would think that the member is correct; it would have to be subject to the study before a sensible decision would be taken.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, the very last one, I Promise.

Based on what the minister has just said, and on what has been said before, can the honourable minister then state clearly that the one exception to what he has said is the Mike Simmons' application? And that once that application fulfills the conditions outlined in the approval in principle, that Executive Council will then take it on its own to make a decision on that application based on what the Governor said—which I am sure was on Executive Council's advice—and that the remainder will be set into the other mode?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I would say the member is correct, that Mike Simmons' application is different and the decision will be taken, as I pointed out earlier, subject to whatever legal advice is given.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries that concludes Question Time for this morning.

OBITUARY

Mr. Levi Walton

The Speaker: Since taking the Chair this morning, I have received the sad news that the uncle of the Acting Third Official Member passed away this morning, namely, Levi Walton, a friend of all of ours in Cayman Brac. On behalf of all members I wish to offer condolences to Mr. Walton and all the family.

Moving on to item 4 on today's Order Paper. Government Business. Continuation of the debate on the throne speech delivered by His Excellency Mr John Owen, CMG., MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on Friday, 19th February, 1999. The First Elected Member for West Bay, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY, 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: When the House adjourned yesterday, I was dealing with the decline in national life and its effect on the country. Let me repeat what I said.

All of us in this House have a duty to lead lives that uplift and inspire the confidence of the people we serve and all the institutions in the country also have the same duty. I also said that community development should be the mechanism used to build the community. But with all the so-called joint ministerial initiatives, nothing substantial is being effected. Each minister is taken up with his or her main area of responsibility.

I said that training was in shambles and that there was no drive by the government and the ministers with responsibility for it. This matter of training, . . . and I should say, sir, that I had a chance to go through some of the assignments of ministers and members of Executive Council for certain business of the government and certain departments of government. In December of 1997 the minister of education still had technical and vocational training.

I was blamed for a lot of things when I was a member of the National Team, and a minister of Executive Council. It is time to stop using McKeeva Bush as a scapegoat. It is time to get on with the job. Training is important! From then until now substantial efforts should have been made in that direction. I know that everybody is busy. That's not the point. They point is that they are charged with the responsibility of doing something about the deficit in training. I am saying that the social deficit is widening in the country. And the lack of training is one of the causes.

If I had not been called a liar yesterday, I would not be taking the time this morning to clear some of this up. But it must be done because it is time to stop using McKeeva Bush as a scapegoat. It is time for those who have the responsibility to stand up and say 'I have the responsibility. I am sorry. I was not able to get to it. This is my intention. This is my plan. This is where we are headed. This is what needs to be done. This is what we have found out.'

For years concerns have been expressed about the absence of consistent training programmes and policies and career development for willing and able Caymanians. This complaint has gotten nowhere except for those attempts I made starting in 1994 when we set up the Manpower Development Advisory Committee.

And let me just say that the committee was accepted and approved by Executive Council. The committee's report of June 1995 was tabled in the House in July of 1995. I made a lot of effort to try and get something done on the subject of workplace training and career development. We put out the Cayman Training Initiative. That made some gains, but not as much as I had hoped. Several young people took up the challenge and entered the Community College to do the training initiative.

There has to be willingness. There has to be a shared responsibility to see that equal opportunity is afforded to Caymanians in the workplace. Caymanians have the ability and the desire to advance in education as well as in their careers. It's not something that will be done overnight. It takes two or four years to get a university degree. But, by God, there should be more effort made. If there was an effort made, and I know there is some, but if there were enough efforts made in this direction there would not be the grumbling and complaints from intelligent young people who have gone to the United States, to Canada, to the regional universities who have come back and are trying to move up the ladder of succession. Because some people stymie them, they do not get ahead. This is what government has to address. It is simple.

They don't need to call anyone from anywhere to tell them this because we see this day by day. We hear it from the young, intelligent Caymanians. We cannot afford to lose the goodwill of these people. We often cry down other regions and say look at the problems they are in. We should use that as an example because many times intelligent people cause problems because they are pushed into a corner. We don't want that. We want to utilise the goodwill of the young people.

I am not crying down any particular minister. I know how hard it is. But there has to be willingness, there has to be a drive; there has to be innovation. If they say that I did any good in Executive Council then they must agree that I made every effort to try to get training and labour matters on a plane where people could be helped.

The objective of a proper vocational or technical training system must include recognised and certified qualifications that are suited to Cayman's employment and provide value to all parties concerned. It should allow the acquisition of needed skills for upward mobility on the job, as well as allowing further study leading to the highest level of professional achievement.

There should be recognition and reward for resulting qualifications. There should be incentives and a partnership fostered among all participants. I am not saying something new. I said this while I was in Executive Council. That was the road I was on. The plan was left there in 1997.

Why try to blame me, saying "McKeeva's an idiot. He didn't do anything"? If I was the fool the Minister for Education says I am, then why in the world were these things tabled in this House? Why in the world did I go out from district to district in this country trying to get training opportunities for Caymanians, if I did not do my job as well as he did his?

I take offence. I had to listen last night after the meeting with the police in the town hall. I had to listen, and I said here's a man who professed to be my friend. But he stands in the House and says that I am an idiot because I am not as good as he is.

I am sorry to say that these kinds of people cannot have the wellness of the Caymanian at heart if they can honestly say that in this House.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I didn't call the honourable member an idiot. I don't remember that.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Ugh!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, let's forget about it. I have learned to take my blows ever since I was 13 and had to work for myself. I have been pushed into many corners, and have been trampled on many times. I seek no sympathy this morning. I take my licks.

When I do something wrong I own up that I did something wrong. But, by God, when I do something right say that I have done something right! And if you had the responsibility to take up the mantle, then take it up and follow on in the right path.

The Speaker: But the point of order is that you are now saying that he said you were an idiot? I do not recall him using those words.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, what is a fool? An idiot or a fool? Let's forget about it please.

The Speaker: They are two different things.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Let's forget about it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Would you just withdraw that you said that?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: That I said what, Mr. Speaker? Please?

The Speaker: That you were an idiot.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: You want me to withdraw that? You are not prepared to let it go, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Okay, continue.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Because we can go now and stop the House and get the Hansard. Thank you.

The Speaker: I know my power, and I know my responsibility.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: I know mine too, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect. I know the Standing Orders of this House after 16 years.

The Speaker: I would add that I didn't come here yesterday either.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Sorry?

The Speaker: I said that I would add that yesterday was not my first day here.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Neither was it mine. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As I said, I am prepared to forget it because we need to work hand in hand, with hearts together, to get some of the things done that are needed to be done in this country.

People in the workplace are very much dissatisfied because there is no upward mobility. They feel that they are stymied in their jobs. While there are a lot of companies that do in-house training, there are reasons why certain people are pushed into corners and are not able to move up the ladder. That is one of the things seriously needed. And you are not going to get it until it is put down in regulations, until it is put down where people must do these kinds of things where immigration says they must do it. And where there is constant follow up to see that it is done.

I am not talking about foreigner against Caymanian. Let nobody start that. I maintain that when somebody comes here and lives here for 25 years, if they don't have some knowledge and a kind heart toward Caymanians who need help, then I don't know what kind of charity we would have in our hearts. I am talking about everybody!

Project Prepare, the programme that deals with ex-prisoners, is something that I announced in April of 1997. We had begun the work before that, but that's when we began its implementation (in 1997) for the reintegration of ex-offenders into job placement. This takes the joint partnership of the government and the private sector. We are losing our people too fast. Jails are filled and the Community College is not full enough.

The Community College is a good arm. I am not saying the minister has not done something with it, because he has. Credit must be given where credit is due. One thing that is needed is more marketing and the re-education of Caymanians of what is available and what they can do—an all-out hard-nosed effort on radio, television, town halls, everything that can be used to educate the public as to what can be done.

The college is a complement to the country. It needs to grow further, of course (and it will talk about that later), but it needs to be marketed properly (and I believe the minister recognises that) so that our people can grasp what they can get out of it. And then government must move ahead to put things in place where even if they are working they have the opportunity to go.

Mr. Speaker, I can give a good account of my stewardship on Executive Council. I would not really have taken back the subject this morning if I had not been pounced upon yesterday saying I had not done anything because I had no sense.

I said yesterday that all the signs point to the social deterioration that is taking place. It didn't start with this government in 1992, but we were given a mandate to change that direction and take the lead. Nowhere is this more evident than in the schools. Not with the majority of children because the majority are good children. But something has to be wrong in society when we see so many children on the streets in the daytime when they should be at school.

What are parents doing about it? Where is the truancy officer? What are they doing about it? Is there a truancy officer?

You go through the districts and you can see these children all over the place. These are children of school age. Lack of discipline is rife. People ask what the police are doing. We need, as a society to examine ourselves and ask what is happening in our homes. What is it that we are doing wrong? Where have we gone wrong? What more can we as parents do? It takes a joint effort between community, meaning everybody—the home, the government, those employers, everybody has a duty.

Some people have the notion that they can't chastise their children lest they be prosecuted. We should say to them that that is not true. You can chastise your child without police interference. You can't brutalise, but you can discipline properly. All of us who are parents know that punishment can come in many different ways: Stop outings for a weekend; take away movie privileges; stop television watching.

Discipline can be meted out without brutalising. There is no law that says a parent cannot chastise his ten year old, or even his fourteen year old for that matter. As long as they are in your home at that age, they are your responsibility.

Too often we hear 'I can't do anything about my ten year old.' Do you mean to tell me that you have a child ten years old and you can't do something with him, that that child can ruin your life, that he can do as he pleases? If the child has some deficit, then the child should have some evaluation. Maybe the teachers in school will see it, if the parent doesn't pick that up. But no way in the world should a parent allow their ten-year-old to rule them.

I say again that we in this House must say to our people that it is not true that your child cannot be chastised without police interference. That's not true. But the lack of discipline continues in the schools and on the streets.

Sometime ago I made a call for a task force to deal with it. I don't know if anything happened, but I believe that that task force needs to be put in place. I said then, as I say now, that it should be made up of government, it should be made up of people on the street, pastors, social workers, community development officers, people in this House with degrees who can deal with it, if that's what they want. Mr. Speaker, there is sufficient goodwill existing to create this task force to deal with this lack of discipline. And if we don't deal with it, it's going to deal with us.

Nowhere is the social deterioration more evident than with the shooting up of the Courthouse, the halls of justice. While Nero fiddled, Rome burned.

We can speculate as to what the cause is all we want. But I do trust that if it was caused by a sentence meted out by the court or an effort to scare before sentencing, that the honourable court will not be deterred. This is no joke. No time for laying blame on anybody. Although we can say that any government that fails to address it now—nip it in the bud now, today, by bold action against criminals—is not fit to govern.

Last night at the police meeting in my district . . . and I don't want to refer to anybody in a disparaging way—and I won't—but there was a former candidate, Mr. Bothwell, who made a statement about putting first-time offenders under house arrest. That might sound all well and good. The one thing I could not agree with is that you can't put first-time sellers of dope under house arrest. I would never . . . and I said that to him then, and I say it to the House so the whole world can hear it: I would never agree to putting a first-time dope peddler on the street.

What about under house arrest? For what? So that they can utilise the telephone and make their deals?

Our children are the ones at risk. Let us beware of this so-to-seem kind-hearted plan. Sellers sell one rock to a child, one ganja stick, and he is damned for life. It could be your child. It could be my child. It could be any member of our family. We need to take action, and these kinds of plans take root and catch on and there is a push from the community for this type of thing. The only thing I don't believe that the community will accept is where a seller of dope, just because he got caught for the first time, would be put under house arrest.

There are ways of community service for lesser offences. There are many things we could be doing with the people at Northward. And I keep saying it is too full. I know that they do a lot. But if we do not take stock, if we don't take hard, positive action we are going to be driven into the ground. We are going to be put behind bars in our own homes. We are not going to have the good Caymanian porches like we have now. We are going to have bars.

And we say it happens somewhere else. It can happen here! And the signs are there and any government with a social conscience needs to do something now.

This is no time to be about getting back at McKeeva Bush, or getting back at John Jefferson, or anybody else on the backbench; or us getting back at the ministers. We are faced with the problems we have now, which we have been not been able to address sufficiently, and we need to put heart and hands together to deal with it. Education and hard decisions are what are needed, not house arrest for first time sellers of dope.

We must take action lest we lose our children, lose our islands. We must be serious when we see shooting up of the halls of justice. This is a warning to us, telling us what can be done. And we should watch out that it is not an effort to intimidate. That's what we have to be careful with. We have to talk to any bad element we know or suspect. We must deal with it as representatives. We must be willing to talk to them. We must be willing to go in the highways and byways and deal with it. We must be willing to educate ourselves because as long as we are divided in this House, we are going to suffer. Some may be able to run and hide, but not all of us.

We can't live in closed gate communities. We don't have that kind of wherewithal. I do recall when I was the minister responsible for youth that I made mention of a curfew and I almost got tore up over it. But I am still convinced that some kind of curfew should exist. This is a personal feeling. When you go out at 8.00 at night, don't tell me that a parent should not know where his ten year old, or even his 15 year old . . . and Mr. Speaker, I have a 22 year old. You can believe that I try very hard to know where he is at all times. And if I don't know you can believe that I chastise him for that, although he stands six feet three inches.

There has to be more parental responsibility. But at times, government has to put in place the mechanism to force things to happen. Sometimes we say we are going to put everything in place, and we see a slackening off and things beginning to get a little bit better. But you have to keep an eye on it. One good example of that is the "sessions."

I remember when we had so much trouble with the sessions. We put out a task force and they started to do things and there was a waning. As soon as that slacked up, it began again.

I also called for a Cadet Corp some time ago. I believe with the right effort it can be done. I don't know where we are going to put it. At that time my senior assistant secretary, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, and I looked at the makeup of the Cadet Corp under the Bermuda Defence Force. I was overjoyed, to say the least, to see the how the young people were dealt with.

And this can be an avenue for many things, for national assistance in the time of national disaster. It can be used to build respect. It can be used for discipline. Get some of those hard-nosed boys out there up at four o'clock in the morning for a run on the beach. Discipline by a shouting Serjeant-at-Arms . . . I mean Sargent, sorry Mr. Speaker!

National assistance community service. Paint the town halls. Do you know how that can save money, Mr. Speaker? Even help with the schoolyards. They could be helping the elderly as the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town said.

It's not a Coastguard, although there could be an arm of that. But that's not what I am talking about. I hope to be part of a government that gets one because I believe that that is the sort of thing that can create the discipline that makes the Cayman Islands the country we all want and desire. Put it in place! I know there will be some hollering and squealing about it.

There's a lot to be determined before we do that. We have to determine the age factor, where it's headed, from high school or where. But even for some of the lesser offences where people get before the courts, they could be sentenced to the Cadet Corp and used there.

My district needs at least two more officers. We have two officers on the beat on bicycles and they are doing a fantastic job. But hear the beat now! (I got that phrase from the First Elected Member for George Town!) That's a 1970s saying. Those officers are doing a good job. But let's say that one of them is at Northwest Point and the other is in Botabano, and something happens in central West Bay. They can't be everywhere at once. But we do need more officers.

We can spend all the money we want, all that we don't even have, we can go into all kinds of deficit to do these things, but we would never stop the line up of people who import and peddle drugs in the country. We need to educate. And it is starting. I am not knocking government. It is starting.

One thing I am concerned about is the vast increase in the people caught on drugs. I would wager a bet that when we get the next report we are going to see a dramatic increase in new people caught on drugs.

The Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the morning break? We shall suspend proceedings for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.48 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.33 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. The First Elected Member for West Bay, continuing.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, we had a long break, and the government bench is shy again.

With the increase of drug abuse comes a high increase of burglary. It is more important for government to try to stem the tide. We could be callous and say if they hurt themselves, they hurt themselves. But when it affects the community in the way that it is, then we have to sit up and take notice. We wait to see what the statistics will say, but I believe they will only be bad. But we will wait to see when the document is tabled.

In my district, and on a national basis, the community development officer was a good initiative. It was money well spent. The one in my district, Miss Powery is doing a fantastic job. Community development is something that keeps the community together. It utilises the community as a striking force against the negative impacts on that community. The work that she does ranges from one extreme to the next. It's only one person. I would hope that we won't need to see two although we now have over 7,000 people. But she is doing a good job and I want to publicly congratulate her on the work she is accomplishing.

Tackling the negative fallout of vibrant economies is not an easy task. But it is something that government should be committed to. Programmes should always be in place to assist young people rather than turning them off. I remember the programme Spotlight, which gave young people the opportunity to voice their feelings on a national level. It was effective.

We saw some absence of it for a year or so. And I understand there was some quarrelling over the amounts paid to the television station. I don't think it should have stopped, but I know what happens in Executive Council and we just can't blame one minister. I can blame all of them, but I can't blame one! But I sympathise with the minister and I appreciate her effort to get Spotlight back on line by some funds being in the budget. And I hope it will continue.

Anything that can be done to keep young people busy and for them to vent their frustrations, I think is good. If not, then perhaps it won't be the Courthouse next time, it will be the Glasshouse or the Legislative Assembly! You never know. We need to continue to do the positive things. I know that two young people had an interview with the Fourth Elected Member for George Town on his programme. I didn't get to watch it, but I heard it was excellent. I heard how well they acquitted themselves. But we need to continue to do these things to give them an avenue to vent their frustrations, to talk about their accomplishments or even their failures. We have intelligent young people and we have to continue in that vein.

I have great support for the National Drug Council. And I offer it my support. I appreciate the district drug councils because I feel that having the councils in the districts where people who are affected can get counselling or advice and support for their problems is the right way to go. But I am perturbed that it will take over the efforts of CoDACs. I hope not, but it seems that way.

In 1993 when I was given the subject of Health and Human Services, Vicky Moss-Solomon (the person responsible for CASA at the time) and I went to Aruba. When we came back from that workshop we developed the accepted United Nations Community Development Action Committees, or CoDACs, which had as its principle the promotion of a greater sense of community spirit and the empowerment necessary to address issues of concern unique to each district.

I see that the National Drug Council in its district councils is intending to do the same thing. I feel that if government sees the need to put in place a district arm of the National Drug Council, which I support, then it should be used as a striking force against the scourge of drugs.

Community Development should be left to the CoDACs if they are going to split them. But I have to warn them that this may be duplication of efforts. The district drug councils go on to say that the plans and programmes developed and implemented by these district councils should serve to strengthen the family unit and encourage more participation in community events. That's what the CoDACs are all about.

We have to be careful. We know there are only so many people to be involved. We are trying to continue to get CoDACs off on the right footing. I would trust that it is not going to be a duplication of efforts. But, with what I read in the letter from the National Drug Council, and knowing what the CoDACs do—which is all the same thing—I can't see how it is not going to be a duplication of efforts.

Drug Councils are needed. It is something that is really needed in the communities. I hope that the National Drug Council, since it is now a statutory body, will not overshadow CASA and cause it to wither away and die. CASA has been doing an excellent job. At times we may feel it is not effective, but much of the spirit and push to get things done came from CASA. I believe that we have to be careful that the National Drug Council does not erode the good done by CASA. We have to be very careful.

I want to congratulate both of them on their initiatives. And offer my continued support. When I can get to anything they have, I do so. But it's not always that we can be everywhere when there are so many things going on. That is why we have to be careful with duplication of efforts.

That's one of the problems we face in our community. We are small. A little group will start something and we get it off on a good footing, and it becomes even attractive nationally. But then something else starts, and someone says 'I can't work with that group so I'm going to that group.' Mind you, Mr. Speaker, every little bit helps, but we can become powerless and ineffective because we are so split up. That's what I mean when I say national community and the community development.

I hope that the National Drug Council will not remove the need for the CoDACs. But as far as I can see, they have the same terms of reference, if that's what I can call it. I will do whatever I can to assist the improvement of our communities and hope that both can be effective.

I want to deal with the Water Authority. I would have hoped that the minister would come in and listen.

I don't know if you want to take the lunch break, Mr. Speaker. I know we just got back, but . . .

The Speaker: I am in the hands of the House. If that's the wish, we shall suspend until 2.15 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.46 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.48 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The First Elected Member for West Bay, continuing.

Mr. W McKeever Bush: When we took the luncheon break I was dealing with the National Drug Council and its effort to establish district councils. I would like to move to the statutory authorities. But before doing that, I would like to suggest to the minister responsible (the Minister of Health) that perhaps the district councils could channel their community work through the CoDACs rather than duplicating efforts. Perhaps the minister would take this on board. I did discuss it before starting back. Maybe he can suggest this to the organising body.

The Water Authority is a very important body in this country. In fact, all the statutory authorities are. It seems, Mr. Speaker, . . . and I am sorry that the minister is not here in the Chamber, but I hope that he is in the building. This is not personal attack on the minister, Mr. Speaker, I want to make that clear, but I think what I am saying is practical and something needs to be done.

I don't think any minister can deal with it, in spite of moving me (as chairman) off the board, removing two of the members who were trying to make a contribution and replacing them with the Minister for Education—who really can't attend the meetings because he is too busy with his own problems. Let me ring a kind warning bell about the Water Authority. The present pace it is on will not do it any good.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: The member has said that I don't attend meetings because I am too busy with my business?

Mr. W McKeever Bush: No, sir! No, no, no. I didn't say that.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: I withdraw it, sir.

Mr. W McKeever Bush: I didn't say that. With your own ministerial problems.

Hon. Truman M. Boddin: I would just like to say, sir, rather than call it a ministerial problem, it's an Legislative Assembly problem. The two Water Authority meetings and some of the other meetings . . . we were here when they were held. And up to yesterday I had a problem with being here while the Civil Aviation Authority was to be held.

Mr. W McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I don't think that every time we get up here and talk about the problems facing us that government needs to get all vexed and heated up and try to claim that someone is trying to attack them personally. I made it absolutely clear that I am not attacking the minister personally. And the minister has no right to say that I am. He knows that I don't.

They can get as heated up as they like, but we want solutions to the problems we are facing. We want solutions. The present pace that the Water Authority is on will not do it any good. And I am talking about the inaction of those in charge.

While I was there as chairman and as minister responsible we had our problems—problems that I tackled and was not afraid to tackle, which I got criticised for, things that needed to be done. Sometimes mistakes were made, but the only person who doesn't make mistakes is the person who doesn't do anything. And you cannot see something that needs to be done and be afraid to take action because you are going to be criticised. You have to deal with the problems. You have to find solutions. When you put yourself in the position of chairman of an authority you have to take a position of leadership.

I did not allow the government to drain the last cent from the Water Authority, as is being done now, and as is being done with other authorities. Yes, the authorities can give government some money—if they have it. But it cannot give government, it must not give government the money it has for its projects—which government approved—or it will have to borrow more money. I amalgamated the bad loans and saved the authority and these islands millions of dollars. But if we had left it, it would have grown into millions. It had lost over $450,000 through the exchange basket of currencies.

Now, if they continue taking out every last cent, the authorities will have to borrow money to do the things that are needed. Instead of government recognising all of its needs then, it goes and takes from the authority. But that is a liability too for government, one that we recognise and if it fails in any way shape or form they will have to pay—“they,” meaning the country—meaning us!

What is so bad about what they are doing to the authorities is that while government can have some funds they must leave reserve funds in the authorities. But if they rake away every dime from the authorities what will be left in reserves to deal with the problems when they arise? Nothing! This is plain foolishness, and mismanagement of the worst kind.

While the First Elected Member for George Town was debating, there was some questioning between him and the Minister for Education. In his reply the minister explained away their actions by reading from the law which only says that the authorities must give up some of their cash. The law does not say that government must take every cent and leave the authorities high and dry without anything. But that is what is happening. It is wrong! I don't think government should do that.

The Water Authority is a well-run organisation. I found that I didn't have to do a lot of hands-on, although I tried to watch over things. I had competent people, Mr. Brainard Watler, Mr. Richard Flowers, Mr. Otto Watler. They were long time members of the Board, solid people who made good contributions to the Authority's business.

I had Mr. Ralph Williams. I had Mr. Jerry Wood from Bodden Town. I had Mr. Philip Hydes. And they all worked together good. From government there was the Deputy Financial Secretary or his representative. We managed well. I found a good foundation, and I enhanced it. We made good strides. But today it is slipping, through no fault of the staff management. The minister is not dealing with it properly as its chairman.

It is something that you have to keep your hands on. Anyone who is chairman of an authority knows that you have to keep hands on day to day. I see the Minister for Tourism laughing. I know he agrees. He won't say so, but he agrees. It is something that you have to keep your hands on. Many decisions need the agreement of the Board. The Board is vital. It makes the decisions that keep the authority in tip-top shape.

However, the Water Authority Board has not met since November last year, in spite of what ought to be a need to deal with urgent business on a month to month, day to day basis. The law requires that the Authority's Board meet monthly. If the minister is too busy, and perhaps he is, then he ought to appoint a new chairman in his place. And the government's Executive Council has the duty to see that it is so. It is a collective responsibility now. They ought to see that this is happening. Since November the Board has not met.

If I recall correctly, according to plans we put in place there has to be some new works this year, expensive works. If I remember correctly, it's a lot of rehabilitative works. The Authority will have to borrow for this. The new administration building is underway. The Authority cannot have a lot of money left to be able to give government $1 million. And coupled with all of those things, when I left they had started the work to East End. And that is needed. So with all of this going on the Authority cannot have a lot of money left to be able to give government $1 million.

Mr. Speaker, I am not attacking the Minister for Education, nor am I attacking the Minister with responsibility. But these matters need to be aired. This situation cannot continue to exist. The Authority is a very valuable instrument for progress in these islands.

[Inaudible interjection]

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: I am glad I was reminded of that. But there are some $9 million of works that need to be done over the next two years. We created a ten-year plan before I left and that is what they are working on.

How can they give up $1 million to government? I don't think that the intent in the creation of the law for the authorities was that they would give up their money that way. It couldn't make sense. That could not be the intent of the law.

The intent of the law had to be that if money is left over, yes, government gets it. That's the way I ran the Board. Mind you, I had pressure on me too to give up money to Executive Council. I had a lot of pressure, and at times I got money. But I didn't give them what they asked for. I fought against their requests. They know that.

They remember the fights we had. I believed that it did not make sense for the Water Authority to go out and borrow while it had money and was giving it to central government. It cannot make sense because a loan, whether it's self-financing or directly to government, or whether it's government guaranteeing it, it's still a loan against the country's finances. The country stands responsible. So this cannot be right.

I can't understand, for heaven's sake, knowing the work of the Water Authority, why they have not met since November. That's how many months? That's five months!

The Authority is a very valuable instrument for progress in these islands. Ministerial responsibility should not impede it. It is as simple as that. If I found my self too busy, I would appoint another chairman.

Now, what about the AIDB (the Agricultural Industrial Development Board)? When did that last meet and who are the members there? Are they all members from Executive Council again? That Board is the managing authority. How can business be done properly, or legally, if the boards are not meeting? How? This is a sad situation. But they can't blame this on McKeeva Bush. And I probably shouldn't keep saying that, but I think I need to say it a little bit now and then.

As I said, this is the result of mismanagement. Let me move to another subject, that of Immigration.

We have been going on this matter now since 1997, and we have a new Attorney General. He has really got going. What I want to say to the House is that we cannot exist in a state of paralysis. What I don't want to see is that the government in acting on this cause drops the matter right into the political campaign for the general election and for pressure to be put on people. That is what we don't want. But if you are going to get into it later this year, with budget and all the other committee work to be done, I am afraid that that just might happen.

I know that the new chairman is adamant and studious and has begun to move forward, and that is good. I trust that we will all be rational and deal with the matter whenever it comes up, at the end of this year, God willing, as one deserving of intelligent debate, mindful of people's lives those who came to our shores years ago, and mindful of future generations.

I believe that a balance needs to be found. There is no use in chiding about not attending Commonwealth Services. It would be better for all the people—Commonwealth citizen or not—if government would be brave enough to put in place an immigration law where people are treated better.

Let me deal with another Authority. I see the Minister of Tourism has left the Chamber, but I don't think he has left the building. I believe that the purchase of the slow motion crane was a bad decision. They removed a private company who for years, even at a time when government couldn't buy a crane, assisted the country—and at a lesser cost to the public than what it is today. What did that misguided action do? It increased the cost to the public, which I told them would happen. But, of course, they wouldn't listen. They wouldn't listen because they had put themselves in a position that they couldn't get out of, so they were forced to buy that crane. They bought it and increased the cost to the public.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here's the worst part of it, and it highlights the mismanagement: They now have to buy, or have bought (I don't know which) a smaller crane. Why? Because the big one—which was supposed to do everything that the Port needed—can't do the job. Now, the question that needs to be addressed is this, Did they have the authority from Executive Council to purchase the second crane? They say buying the cranes made economic sense. But good government is when you can get something done without hurting your people. That is good government.

They damaged the private company and put pressure on the public by increasing costs, which were already high. For all of this, the people suffer.

I don't know where they are headed, but it is certainly not on the right track. It's a brand new crane, supposedly. But I see that the part of the crane that picks up the container, which is the part it came with, has been replaced and a new one put in its place. I don't know what that cost the public. That is not good management.

[Inaudible interjection]

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I am not laughing at my own joke. But someone said that perhaps that should be sunk as an underwater attraction too!

Expansion of the Port was suggested many years ago. I will give the ministers the benefit of the doubt that they know what they are doing. Certainly the country is in a state of development and it seems that things are jammed tight over there.

What I don't know, and perhaps because this has been a debate for so long, and the question will arise if that is the proper place to spend $12 million for expansion. This is in the midst of a town. And perhaps it's too expensive to go anywhere else and we will have to suffer the rigors of that kind of development. I know it is not easy. But we have to question whether it is the best thing to do. I agree that it is all the more reason why they shouldn't rake off every last dime from the authorities.

The next subject is not an authority, but it's a hot one! It seems that government has gone all out to do what it can to make people believe that Pedro Castle is worth the $10 million spent on it. I have said before that I was not, and I am not now, opposed to the project. What I am opposed to is the $10 million spent. I don't believe that it makes good economic sense.

Sure, we needed to showcase that part of our history. However, there is a lot left to be desired with that project. We changed groups midway. I don't know if we have had the entire argument. I think the minister, from what I heard his nephew say, needs to explain those things. Some questions asked in Finance Committee of November last year have not been answered yet.

I have tremendous respect for the chairman of the board and some of the members, but we heard from the minister that he is still involved in the day to day management. That was in November. Perhaps that has changed. The manager reports to him. That needs to be changed. We said that. While the project highlights a certain part of our history, and it's a nice place to go, the economic sense of it—or lack of it—is what we have to be concerned about.

I believe that the ministry is doing all that it can to push groups into Pedro Castle to make it economically viable. In so doing, what are they doing to the Turtle Farm? If Pedro Castle was conceived, built, and operated on the basis that it would be profitable (by taking large groups of cruise visitors), then it holds that some economic damage has to be done to the Turtle Farm.

As I understand it, the time that a cruise visitor has on land for touring and shopping is not sufficient for them to do a tour of the Turtle Farm, Pedro Castle and the Botanic Park. There are no overnight stops. They come in at 7.00 in the morning and leave at 4.30 or 5.00. So which one will suffer?

If they are going to do all the tours then the shops will suffer. If they shop, go to Pedro Castle and Botanic Park, the Turtle Farm will suffer. If they do the Turtle Farm, shop and Pedro Castle, the Botanic Park will suffer. Which one will suffer? For the sake of the country, I hope that I am wrong. But, once again, I think common sense lost out to something else.

The Throne Speech says that plans for a new museum will be put in place. That is not new. When I was there the director and I spoke at length about it. She showed me the need. She is a very studious person. She knows what she is doing. She's capable. Part of my objection to the $10 million for Pedro Castle was because the director and I were trying to get the new museum going. But that was objected to and they built the facility for $10 million.

Here is my feeling about it: $10 million should have given us the new museum as well as the Pedro Castle. I firmly believe that. Perhaps we could have gotten both of them for less than $10 million. I don't have all of the information in front of me. I do know that I questioned the minister in Finance Committee on the operation of Pedro Castle. But according to the Third Elected Member for West Bay, there is much more happening at Pedro Castle than what was told to us in Finance Committee by the minister.

I am not saying that we asked him and he didn't tell us. I am saying that in our examination of the project we should have been told about these things. It seems that there were many invoices paid without proper billing and money spent without proper authority that accountability seems to have gone out the window. For an expenditure of such magnitude I hope that the Caribbean Development Bank will get the proper accounting it wants. I hope the minister will tell the House when he has the next chance all about the situation.

I will say no more about it. While I have documents it's not appropriate to talk about that at present. I bear no ill will for the project. If the project were in West Bay, I would say the same thing. One of the things I thought we could do was develop Hell. I have been saying that for many years.

All of us know quite well that tourism is very important to this country. But it is very obvious that tourism is in trouble today. The government must take a long and sensible look at what it has created with the last revenue increase. There are no two ways about it. It is having a devastating effect on the industry.

Businesses are suffering. There are other factors at work that cause us to be affected. It is becoming increasingly expensive to come here on vacation. As I understand it airfare from New York to London for three days including air and room is $460. You can fly to San Juan, Nassau or Barbados for between $50 to $200 less than what it costs to come here. So air cost is a very serious factor.

A lot of them have a tendency, that is, people in ExCo and in the industry, to blame Cayman Airways. But I don't think anyone should blame Cayman Airways alone because American Airlines probably won't lower costs because of our being a smaller destination in comparison to, say, San Juan. So they can't say that Cayman Airways is the problem.

Positions and strategy are sometimes based on politics and perception of vote catching, rather than common sense and what is good for the future of the country. Moral and religious platforms would be honourable even if it were misguided, except that it is pure hypocrisy and a perceived platform for vote catching. It is an example of a government which is unable to see the forest for the trees, unable to see the bigger picture, bogged down in its narrow views with no vision and no empathy for partners such as the cruise ship industry which is critical to Cayman's survival.

Government should be working together with partners, not against them. In spite of government's announced plan, put in place by the Minister of Tourism, it seems that the quality of the visitor is not the calibre of which the country should be focusing on. I know that the minister says that his plan is to bring in top level tourists, level of income that is. I think that is in the plan. I agree with that. But is that what is happening? I tell you this: I see whole lot of people riding bicycles rather than rental cars.

The bad part about that is that some of the hotels are renting out these bicycles. They are not paying any fees, but the rental cars have to pay fees. The taxis have to pay fees. That might be just nit picking about the type of tourist that is coming. But I will tell you that business people are saying the same thing. They are complaining. They are not getting the business. Costs, costs, costs, costs.

There must be a consistent productive policy not based on any form of discrimination towards anyone or any group, but a policy that provides benefits and opportunity to everyone in this country. The manner in which the idea to suspend Sunday cruise ship visits was handled illustrates the narrow-minded manner in which they work. I don't know if they really understand the importance of the cruise ship industry to our economy. They say they do.

As I understand it, cruise ship itineraries are planned two to three years in advance and cannot be changed at the drop of a hat. They all say that the cruise ship visits are beneficial to our business community from taxi drivers to merchants and hoteliers and should be made to feel a welcome partner in our growth.

I too am a churchman. I don't profess to be a born again Christian. And I will not be a hypocrite. I love Sundays and try to retain our former way of life as much as possible. I support the minister or anyone else who is trying to accomplish that. But we have to be practical. Yes, people who worship on Sundays and believe that Sunday is the only day, . . . that is one thing. And we can do a lot to appease them. But it does not stop there. That is the ideal world and we do not live in an ideal world. What about people who worship on Saturday? People for whom I have a tremendous amount of respect. Sometimes I worship on a Saturday.

I don't think it makes sense. I don't think it's good for this territory. Now, I can be lambasted for it, and I probably will be. One thing I know. I am not a hypocrite. I can't be. I won't be. This is bad. And I will tell you how it is bad. Those whom we are turning away on a Sunday have to develop elsewhere to go. They have to find somewhere to carry their people, another port to take them. Do we believe that they are going to be that generous to Cayman, just turn around and say, 'We will include you now and just keep you here with us'? It may not be economically feasible to them.

While government says that they are working with the business community and they say, 'Oh, you don't have to worry now that McKeeva Bush is not there. That little socialist can't hurt ya.' They are killing the business community. That is what they are doing—killing business initiative. They need to be the real partners that they say they are.

I agree with the Minister of Health that the private sector can help. But the government cannot expect the private sector to be a partner if they are constantly hammering them and killing their business by more taxes and taking opportunities to do business away. They can't.

There has been much aplomb about transport. I find that it's more to do about nothing. When I say that, the minister organised some of the buses. He moved the taxis. But what else is happening? Everything you hear is about taxis this, and taxis that. The poor taxi operators have taken the brunt of everything. They are shoved off in the corner up in the woods, to get rid of them from off of Front Street. So that's good policy? Pleasing a few people. Oh yeah? What does it do to them?

Taxi operators have to take general knowledge tests. That's good. But all tourism personal that deal with tourists on a daily basis need to have that test too. I believe that. Let's look at one case. They bring in hotel front desk staff from North America, Canada, USA, England, wherever, who also deal with tourists on a daily basis. And they put them in overnight. I have witnessed that myself. But they don't have any general knowledge of these islands, yet they deal with the people up front on a daily basis.

While we say we are doing something about transport, we need to do something to assist the taxi operators. Spending $10 million on Pedro Castle, we at least need to make sure that taxi operators have a fair chance at getting some business. We know that cruise ships, from which the Castle is hoping to get its largest share of visitors, are all pre-booked. The tour operators practically have a monopoly on the cruise ships. That's business. If they can go out and do it, that's what the free enterprise system is all about.

But I believe that the Minister of Tourism should set policy and say fifty passengers, if there are one hundred passengers, or 50% for taxi and 50% for tour operators. And they say that the cruise ships are the ones who determine this because it is their business. But they are in our waters also.

I believe that if you are innovative enough you can bring them to an understanding that the taxi people will not lose out. If there are 2,000 visitors, or whatever amount, 5,000, 7,000 visitors per week, taxi people must be able to get a fair share of this business. It is the business of the Minister for Tourism to see that this is done. Something needs to be done so that taxis are treated more fairly and have a chance at making a living and paying their bills.

They cannot go out and buy a big fleet of busses like some people can. Some of them struggle to get their car. I know what I am talking about. And they get into problems. And sometimes in spite of being out there at four o'clock in the morning sitting out there all day long, they don't get enough at the end of the month to pay their loans. I know that I will be told that they make good money. Mr. Speaker, you look at something and think it is so, go and test it. You know the saying "you think you know me, come live with me"? That's the same sort of scenario that you give to that situation.

Just because you see them on the road all the time doesn't mean that they are making skins of money, as the old people say. They have to get up at four o'clock in the morning. I know because I have a sister and that's what she does. Other constituents come to my office in West Bay and talk to me about it. Something needs to be done.

Whatever I can do to help the minister, I am willing to do. If there is something that I can do, please tell me. They are not going to put me on any board. They are not going to put me anywhere where I can talk with these people. I know that. And as I say to them, I can come here and I will talk to you, but I do not make policy. But when you put people on boards they should be the ones coming up with the ideas. They should be the innovative ones. That's the minister's advisors. We can't blame the minister alone. While he is the driving force of policy, he gives people a chance to be on the board. They need to be able to come up with the goods too. But when you get good people on boards, you shouldn't take them off either.

This whole situation is pitiful. It's hurtful and I could just cry over the whole thing. That wouldn't do the situation any good.

We look at the matter of roads. I keep saying that I would rather see $10 million spent on youth affairs to stop teenage pregnancy, to kill the drug abuse if they can, to do all of these other things, put it into education, than to build one big highway. I will get criticised for that because everybody says that traffic is costing the country too much and something needs to be done about it. So the minister runs and borrows money to try to get something done which he thinks is the right thing.

I had to look at the Caymanian Compass of Thursday, 11 March, "Traffic flow change at Crewe/Smith Road." Let me read what it says. I quote, "The major result of the realignment will be the traffic travelling east on Smith Road, towards Bodden Town, will not have to stop to make the turn onto Crewe Road. 'This eastbound movement will become one of the major movements,' the minister said.

"Traffic coming from central George Town or the airport heading for Bodden Town along Shedden Road will merge with the eastbound traffic from Smith Road."

Is that workable? If this is right—and tell me now if this report is not right—traffic travelling east on Smith Road towards Bodden Town will not have to stop to make the turn onto Crewe Road. They will come out of Smith Road and slam-bam onto Crewe Road. No stopping!

Traffic coming from central George Town or the airport heading for Bodden Town along Shedden Road will merge with the eastbound traffic. What are they going to do? They're not going to stop or slowdown? What's going to happen? That sounds like some sort of death trap. And you say I am exaggerating again.

[Inaudible interjections]

Mr. W McKeever Bush: I am hearing that they are going to put in more lanes. Well, I would hope so.

It's all good and well to come up with grandiose ideas and plans. I don't know if I can agree that putting that Miami traffic flow system at the junction up there was the right thing. Do traffic lights really help us in the small space we have? One or two might help, but now we have one on practically every corner. We are not talking about hundreds of miles at a time. I believe that the roundabout system is better, the roundabout system and the four-way stop. I have to wonder how much that costs. I don't know, but it had to cost a tremendous amount of money.

I remember back in 1984 when I got elected one of the things my constituents had cried out for was the four-way stop in West Bay central to be addressed. Everybody asked for a stoplight because government had just put them in in 1982 in George Town. Everybody wanted me to get a traffic light for that stop. I thought that was what was needed too.

I had a talk with Mr. Donovan Ebanks who was then the engineer. And he showed me what kind of traffic backup we could have. He said, "McKeeva, explain that to them and explain the difference between the light and the four-way stop." He convinced me, and I told the people that we would put a four-way stop there rather than the light. Some people still curse me for that, but you know that has worked all these many years. It has worked.

I don't think there has been one accident since the initial stages. I think they had one or two when they first put it in and people were not used to it. But as people became aware they got used to it. And look what it cost: a few lines in the road and a few metal stop signs.

I hope that that situation there is going to work out because I believe it is very expensive. We have to get it into our heads . . . and I heard the Third Elected Member for West Bay saying that we have a concrete jungle. We have to get it into our heads that if this is what we want this is what we ask for. Everybody cried out to live better, get better homes, drive better cars. Well, this is the result. Now to say that things could have been managed better, I believe that.

I will tell you this: In 1976 when that development plan was stopped we moved away from the chance to get the roads we needed. They said that between 1988 and 1992 when the Master Ground Transportation Plan was stopped, that that was the time. Mr. Speaker, it would have cost millions of dollars—and I am not knocking any particular government, I am trying to be practical—to try to put roads through developments that had already been put in place. And that's where we failed back then, in 1976.

I don't know if we are going to be able to pay for the kinds of roads everybody is screaming about. I don't know that the country can afford to. You are talking about the Crewe Road Bypass (phase 1) for $5 million. I believe that we need to look at a system of hooking up different roads. A good example for policy makers here would be to go to Bermuda and look at what they have done.

Mind you, they had 40 years of policy and people didn't like it, and so they worked it over 40 years and people accepted it. Well, 50 years now, from back in the 1940s. But we need to go and see how they hooked their roads up. No vast major highways. They go through communities. We have to get it into our heads first though that we can't drive 50 miles per hour any more in this country. That's the thing we have to be practical about. We can't do it. We need to be able to hook up to little road corridors.

Let's look at where we go by the Agape Worship Centre. If you look across from there you can see South Sound Road. Take it through there. Upgrade South Sound Road properly. Put a couple of lanes if you can, where you can. Don't tell me that won't work because I see it work in other places. But Bermuda's system works good. They don't have the gigantic highways. They don't have the fast moving speeds. But they handle their traffic. They have some traffic jams. They change roads around, going one way in the morning and the other way in the afternoon. These are the kinds of things we must look out for rather than borrowing humoungus sums trying to put what everyone wants in place. That's the innovation I am talking about.

The Speaker: When you reach a convenient time, we will take the afternoon break.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I just heard someone mention sports, and I want to get to that.

At this point in our history, let us face up to the mistakes that we and others made. Let us be practical and let us look at how we can be innovative and get a system that we can hook up the different streets rather than large highways.

I don't know if that Crewe Road Bypass is going to work. I have not been convinced, let's put it that way. But everybody wants the best highways. Everybody wants a good car to run on a good road. I believe in giving the communities their roads. I believe that we should upgrade where we can, but to try to build a vast highway, I don't know whether we could do it without spending the money that we don't have. I believe that we have to do something straight through from the North Side East End area coming across Boddan Town and open up that area coming into George Town.

I am not saying that that can all be done at one time. I am saying that they can look at it. But it would seem that that would be the general area that a through road could go. Plan for it. I think one of the governments used to do that—a mile here this year, a mile there next year. And in a couple of years' time you got it.

[Inaudible interjections]

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister for Tourism is having some fun with me. He didn't do that this year. He came and he said they were bringing a second budget and they were going to get the money they needed and that's what he did. Election is coming and he has to keep McKeeva out.

[Inaudible interjections]

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, let's take the break. The Minister for Tourism is throwing me off.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.48 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.19 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The First Elected Member for West Bay, continuing.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: [microphone not turned on]

We need to be innovative in all we do because of our small resource base. We can't spend the money to make us look like the United States of America. We cannot do the things that people see on television or when they go abroad. We can always go things to improve traffic flow, but we don't have the money to make us look like the United States.

Sports are close to my heart. Because of the neglect for over 25 or 30 years when we got elected we had to take the bull by the horns to do something with sports, to try to put it on a proper footing, not only with programmes, but with facilities. Until I got elected, and most of the members out there probably all of them said in the past—I don't know what they will say now—that the expenditure was well spent. And we took something like $4.5 million of capital—much less than 5% of all that was spent on capital works while I was there.

Facilities are not just something that will tumble down overnight. If they are properly maintained they will continue to grow in value. The facilities are appreciated and utilised. If you think that not building the Truman Bodden Sports Centre wasn't a good thing, go and see the number of people utilising it for their health—from children right up to the elderly. It was money well spent. So they cannot come back and try to say 'You chastise us for spending but you spent on sports.' I took a lot of licks while I was the minister because I saw the need to address the matter. And I had support to do so.

I even named the first one after the Minister for Education. How much have we spent? When they criticise me, Mr. Speaker, they need to consider—that is the members of ExCo—how much they spent on prisons and police. Sports is preventative and rehabilitative measures. Police and prisons take care of the problems in one way, we tried to prevent it from happening. We had to spend on sports. We had to.

How can you spend $200 million on roads and not have a playfield for your children to kick a ball, or a place to bat the ball? How can you spend $10 million on Pedro Castle but not want to spend $4.5 million on sports? We needed a place for the children to play basketball. This is good for the community. That is what we call community development.

I am not saying that it is a panacea for all of our social problems. It is not. But it's a vital part of addressing and preventing social problems from coming on line. It is not that I didn't support the minister—she's egging me on here—for her sports centre. I tried to do my best up there, and I realise that we have to do a lot of things in Cayman Brac because of the social problems that were building up. I know that. I visited Cayman Brac a lot. But we have to be careful too that we don't go overboard.

We can't make Cayman Brac the capital you know.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Good point!

Mr. W McKeever Bush: I support her in trying to get something done and I support the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman as well in what they try to accomplish. But we have to be practical.

So, the $4.5 million spent on sports was money well spent over the five years, from 1992 to 1997. But it wasn't easy, you know. I had to convince them that this had to be spent because you know some of them never had any social conscience. After their association with me, they became a little more socialistic. And it seems that they were just that—part-time converts. They have gone back now. They backslide!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. W McKeever Bush: We had to spend on sports. And if they want to chastise me for spending $4.5 million they must consider this: Government neglect of social programmes will mean that government will have to spend tens of millions of dollars on police and prisons to try to stem the tide of social deterioration. Just consider that.

If you want to poke fun at me, and tell the public that McKeever's not being fair because he chastises you, but didn't tell you what he spent . . . I can tell the world what I spent on sports. I can tell the world the effects of the housing programme we put in place too!

I can tell the world the effects of the Young Parents Programme, and I can also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when I took responsibility for Community Development youth crimes and problems were way out of hand and we brought it down from three hundred and ninety-something to well under one hundred (I think it was) or right around there. We went out and said we were going to do it, and everybody knew we meant business.

We put the programmes in place and youth crime came down. It is up again. You are slackening off.

So what's happening?

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Politics!

Mr. W McKeever Bush: As someone coined the phrase "part-time convicts (sic)" . . . CONVERTS, . . . "Part-time converts"!

Mr. Speaker, it's that time of the afternoon, and it's Friday! They are part-time converts to social development.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Freudian slip!

Mr. W McKeever Bush: So how can they get up now and chide me about spending that money?

I repeat: Their neglect for proper social programmes and the will to put things in place will take tens of millions of dollars to try to stem the tide that we see—the shooting up of the Courthouse, youth crime on the streets, the general lack of discipline. They said that if you think education is costly, try ignorance. Well, if you think that building a sports centre is costly, try rehabilitation. Try those kinds of curative measures.

Mr. Roy Bodden: All right, McKeever. Preach, preach, preach!

Mr. W McKeever Bush: You try it! And they will find out just how much they have to borrow because I am sure that by the time they get finished building roads they will have nothing in the Authorities, nothing in the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, can I sit down now?

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Monday at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Monday, 15 March. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 15 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
MONDAY
15 MARCH 1999
10:20 AM

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for West Bay]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, who will be absent today. I also have apologies from the Third Elected Member for George Town who is overseas on a Parliamentary Seminar.

Item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members and Ministers. Question numbers 13 and 14 stand in the name of the Third Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I understand that 13 and 14 were not ready yet. They had been on earlier but the papers were not brought down to the Legislative Assembly for today. And also the Third Elected Member for George Town is not here. So, we could defer 13 and 14, to be put on for Thursday.

DEFERRAL OF QUESTIONS 13 & 14

The Speaker: The question is that questions 13 and 14 be set down for a later sitting. Could you move that motion, Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning?

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I have to also move 15 and 16. No? I will have to just check to see if 15 and 16 can be taken as well but I move it on 13 and 14.

The Speaker: The question is that numbers 13 and 14 be put down for a later sitting. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: QUESTIONS 13 AND 14 DEFERRED.

The Speaker: Moving on to question number 15 standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps with your permission, sir, you could go on to 16, or rather to 17 and 18, as it seems the minister might be late arriving. He seems to have had some prior commitments. Perhaps if you don't mind, sir, and then he might be arriving by the time we get 17 and 18 out of the way.

The Speaker: Certainly. We will move on to question number 17 standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 17

No. 17: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister with responsibility for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources what was the outcome of the negotiations between government and Cable and Wireless regarding the charge for the use of the Internet.

Hon. John B. McLean: During the meetings with Cable & Wireless to discuss that matter, several concerns were addressed, including the rapid growth of the Internet service by Cable & Wireless customers. As such, additional telecommunications equipment was acquired to handle the increase in demand along with the requirement to provide greater capacity on the international links to the main Internet backbone in the United States of America. Once these necessary measures were in place, Cable & Wireless developed a new programme of significant reductions in pricing for Internet service.

Since the introduction of Internet service two years ago, the cost for Internet service has dropped dramatically. Originally set at 25 cents a minute for basic Internet service, the first cost reduction to 12 cents a minute cut the initial rate more than 50 percent. This year Cable & Wireless introduced new Internet service plans, which were sent to all of its customers in July 1998. The new plans are now based on hours of usage providing for a minimum 50 percent reduction of the previous rate. This translates to a 75 percent decrease in cost over a two-year period. However, if any customer chose to stay on the previous per minute rate plan, they were allowed to do so.

The new plans also include free amounts of bandwidth or volume. For every hour used, customers received two megabytes free. Each megabyte over that amount is only 25 cents. In order for customers to know how much bandwidth they use, Cable & Wireless has provided a programme to track this information.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Supplementaries. The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the Honourable Minister tell the House how these reduced rates compare with rates being offered to customers in the United States?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: While we really do not compare directly to the United States (as this is a different market), it is my understanding that it is quite competitive to what is offered up there.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the Minister say if he is aware that these rates, while they do represent a reduction, are still significantly higher than rates offered for Internet usage out of the United States from which most users access information?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I will have to agree with the Member. I give him and the House the assurance that my ministry and I will continue to work with Cable and Wireless to try to make this as low as possible and as economical as possible for the users here in the Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I would ask the Honourable Minister for an undertaking because it seems that Cable and Wireless has a monopoly according to complaints. And from time to time there are letters in the paper complaining about their rates doing a real serious disservice to their customers. I would like to ask the Minister for an undertaking that the Government will from time to time procure the services of an expert in this field who can really negotiate with Cable and Wireless using readily accessible information on competitive rates offered in other jurisdictions.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I will give that undertaking and also I would like to add that the schools have free connection on the Internet from Cable and Wireless.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries? The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, what the Honourable Minister has just said about the usage of the Internet in the schools is just the salve on the wound. But I have a few supplementaries.

Can the Minister first of all state when these negotiations were taking place exactly? And can the Minister state what the procedure is? Who negotiates on behalf of Government and what information is available to that person or persons to verify what is being said by Cable and Wireless to justify their charge? And in doing so could the Minister also explain in short order about the franchise? How does this work? Does it have special reference (the franchise) to Internet rates or is this something that comes along as an addendum to the original franchise?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Under the franchise, as I understand it, Cable and Wireless has to provide the necessary services. And it falls under that ambit of the franchise. With regard to negotiations the ministry, my Communications Officer and department, and Cable and Wireless would meet on negotiations and, therefore, once we come to some sort of agreement it would be passed on to Executive Council for a final decision.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state what method is used by whoever represents Government in the negotiations to verify the cost of providing these services (which I am sure are put forward by Cable and Wireless) to justify their rates?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: The negotiations have been between Cable and Wireless and my Communications Department and my ministry on to Executive Council. However, I must point out that the franchise the way it is written has not been something that has been done recently as the Member rightfully knows. What we have been doing is actually negotiating with Cable and Wireless and for that reason we have been able to come down as I pointed out. Hopefully, with further negotiations we will be able to bring it down closer to what the previous speaker spoke about in other territories where we have a much lower rate.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect to the Minister, he has not answered my question. I just asked the Minister what method is used to verify the cost of providing the service. I understand what he has said, but it does not satisfy the question. What I am trying to determine is what method the Government arm doing the negotiation uses to verify that the costs to be incurred to provide the services are real?

I understand that all of this is done in good faith and I am not suggesting that the cost of providing the service is not bona fide when presented. I am simply asking because in any negotiations, if I am on one side of the table and someone else is on the other side and they just simply tell me something . . . there must be some method by which I can verify what they are saying.

So I am asking what is the method used?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Many times we have compared even telephone rates throughout the territory and the countries surrounding us. And we find that we have been in a different category.

It is no different with this one. We have had figures actually put before Government, and as I pointed out earlier we have constantly been negotiating with Cable and Wireless. That is where we have gotten today. And we will continue to negotiate with the hope that from the figures which have been mentioned in the other territories that we can match them or even come lower.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: In answer to a supplementary question, the Minister himself said that Cayman cannot be compared to a lot of other territories for obvious reasons. Mr. Speaker, it is for this reason why I have asked the question. The Government must develop some type of machinery whenever negotiations are taking place to be able to verify what things cost. If the Government is simply taking the word of the other party, if 99 times out of 100 it is bona fide, sooner or later the Government is going to take the word of someone or some group of people which is not.

I am simply trying to ask the Government if in this instance there is a mechanism by which they verify these costs. Now, I am not trying to belabour this, but I don't want the same thing to be happening over and over with my supplementaries. To answer and say that the Government is negotiating doesn't answer the question. I want to know what method is used to verify that these charges are bona fide? They cannot simply be presented by the other party and accepted because they have presented them, no matter who it is. And I am asking what method is used to verify it.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that we actually base whatever negotiations we do on the international rates and from there we try to negotiate down as I pointed out before.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state specifically who did the negotiations with Cable and Wireless regarding the Internet?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As I pointed out earlier the negotiations have been between the ministry and our Communications Department with Cable and Wireless.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Again, sir, I asked specifically, who? The answer is generic. I am asking for the individuals officer or officers.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: In the Communications Department, Mr. Kiron (who is here on my left) is in charge of that and with whoever he needs to be his back-up staff. I am responsible for the ministry. It would be my Permanent Secretary and whoever else that would come in on the meeting. In Cable and Wireless, it would have been the manager of Cable and Wireless and their back-up staff.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Lest the Minister misunderstand my line of questioning, I am not suggesting for a second that the results given in the substantive answer were not real and in line. All I am questioning here is methodology.

Now, in the very last sentence, the minister said, "However, if any customer chose to stay on the previous per minute rate plan they were allowed to do so." Can the Minister give us any reasoning at all that would make it advantageous for a customer to stay on the most expensive plan available?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding they could opt to do whichever they wanted because they would have to be paying a monthly fee.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister say what advantage has been procured for the users of this service if the situation is as explained in the second paragraph in this answer? And I shall read, “This year Cable & Wireless introduced new Internet service plans, which were sent to all of its customers in July 1998. The new plans are now based on hours of usage providing for a minimum 50 percent reduction of the previous rate. This translates to a 75 percent decrease in cost over a two-year period. However, if any customer chose to stay on the previous per minute rate plan, they were allowed to do so.”

Can the Minister tell the House what advantage the alternative has over the previous plan? And can the Minister emphatically say that this is not a round-about way of really and truly not offering any significant reduction?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that the reason for the answer being the way it is for casual users, they would not have to pay a monthly fee as I pointed out earlier.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: So, Mr. Speaker, in essence the Minister is saying that there really has been no reduction because casual users will have to pay the same old fees which are not competitive when compared to the service as it is offered in the United States, Bermuda, and The Bahamas.

Would the Minister consider broadening the level of expertise in the Government’s negotiations with Cable and Wireless by trying to access outside persons who are more knowledgeable on Internet rates internationally, and who are more skilled and experienced in negotiating such rates in any future discussions with Cable and Wireless on this matter?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I give the undertaking that anything that we can do to bring the rates down within the Internet or any place in Cable and Wireless, we will definitely do so. I have no problem with Government entertaining somebody from the outside that is knowledgeable in this, who can advise us properly on it. Definitely, I will give that undertaking.

The Speaker: Any further supplementaries? If not, moving on, question number 18 is standing in the name of the Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTION 18

No. 18: Dr. Frank McField asked the Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources to provide a list of the insecticides used to spray mosquitoes.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, the list of insecticides for spraying mosquitoes in the Cayman Islands are as follows:

- 1 Adulcicides
 - a) Permethrin
Dibrom
Malathion
Bytes
 - b) Permanone (permethrin/PBO pre-mixed)
Demand (Lambdacyhalothrin)
Commodore (Lambdacyhalothrin)
 - c) Black Flag (d-Phenothrin)
Black Knight (d-Phenothrin)
Rapid Kill (Permethrin)
- 2 Larvicides
 - Altosid (Methoprene – IGR)
 - Altosid (Methoprene – IGR)
 - Vectobac (Bti – bacterial agent)
 - BMP (Bti – bacterial agent)
 - Acrobe (Bti – bacterial agent)
 - Adate (Temephos)

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister say if there is any insecticide listed here that might be considered harmful to humans?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: All insecticides used by MRCU for the spraying of mosquitoes have been approved by the Environmental or the World Health Organization, and, of course, the Environmental Protection Agency is in the United States.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town. Supplementary.

Dr. Frank McField: Could the Minister say how long these present insecticides have been used by MRCU?

Hon. John B. McLean: Malathion has been used from the 70s. We started and Altosid about 1989.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state if on the list that he has provided any of these have become ineffective because the mosquito larva (to put it in my language) have gotten used to them so they are no longer immune to the insecticides?

Hon. John B. McLean: Malathion is one of the adulticides where we have found (that from 1974) some resistance has been built up by mosquitoes.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state if it is still being used?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is no longer used here in Grand Cayman. Occasionally we have to use it in the Sister Islands.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: In the Minister's previous answer, he spoke of approval by various bodies for these insecticides. Can the Minister state if this approval includes all the perimeters, for instance, crops? Because the question that was asked was about humans. I am adding to that question by asking if these insecticides are approved based on the fact that there is no damage done to any type of crops peculiar to the Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the insecticides are used in the proper proportions so as not to be damaging to crops or, for example, bees which we depend on heavily here for pollination and, of course, in some areas honey.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Can the Minister tell the House what monitoring is done on these adulticides and larvicides, and conditions where they are applied so as to measure leachate or other negative effects they may have on the environment?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that in a short time all of the insecticides which are used break down to where they are harmless to everyone that comes in contact with them including, let's say, human beings and plants.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Is the House to understand then that because these adulticides and larvicides are biodegradable there is absolutely no negative effect on the environment due to leachate?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: That is my understanding. It should be nothing harmful to anyone.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: It is my understanding that insects quickly develop immunities to these adulticides and insecticides. Can the Minister tell the House what kind of experiments are undertaken so that the proper rotation is made so that the applied adulticides and larvicides can have maximum effect?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: We have a continuous monitoring of this through the lab at MRCU, and we would be able to identify as soon as the mosquitoes [become] a bit tolerant to it and we would have at that time to make a change.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Boddén: Can the Minister provide the House with the names of any other jurisdictions where these adulticides and larvicides are used in similar fashion to their usage in the Cayman Islands so that if necessary we may independently corroborate the results given in his answers to us?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you. No, because it is my understanding that all over the United States especially Florida, the same insecticides used here, are used there.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, in the answer to a previous supplementary, the Minister mentioned that there was no harm to humans from any one of these insecticides being used. Can the Minister state what precautions are taken by the individuals who physically deal with these insecticides to ensure that there are no negative effects? And without me going into detail, I suspect the Minister would understand what I am talking about.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Part of the operations in administering the insecticides we have mentioned this morning, . . . the individuals who will be handling them would have to be in full gear, including gloves and mask, somewhat of a special handling suit for it.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Is there any requirement that these individuals have periodic medical examinations?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: While there are no requirements, it is my understanding that especially those who have been directly involved with it such as the pilots of the planes, and with wind shifts these insecticides could spray on them. It has been in place for them and the department is presently putting in place for anybody who has actually been working with the department and doing any handling whatsoever to have periodic checks.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Is the Minister saying that this periodic medical examination is a policy or is it something which operates on an ad hoc basis? For example, in many organisations where individuals come in contact with chemicals of any sort whether they are biodegradable or non-biodegradable, it is a requirement that a medical exam be given every six months or at least once a year. Can the Minister say whether this is policy, it is voluntary or on an ad hoc basis depending on the interest of the individual?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is a departmental policy.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. Two additional supplementaries after this one.

Mr. Roy Bodden: With regard to the adulticides and larvicides mentioned in the answer, can the Minister say how long these have been in use? And also in the application have the MRCU been conducting any longitudinal studies with records to show the effectiveness and the necessity to alternate these adulticides and larvicides?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As I pointed out awhile ago, in 1974 Malathion, and I think Dibrom. The most recent ones that have been used since we had the rotation to try to keep the mosquito population down was Altosid which is the pellet methoprene.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I have noticed over the years that these adulticides and larvicides are applied and no information is given to the public about the effects they may have on the insects or other pests that they are supposed to control. Also, no reassurance is given to the public that they are harmless. Can the minister say if such a policy now exists? And if it doesn't exist would the Minister consider particularly in cases of new adulticides and larvicides publicising this so that the public may be knowledgeable and also assured that such things being used are not negatively affecting humans; not killing out the good insects and other stuff we have around the gardens. And birds that we have which promote the growth and pollination of our fruits and flowers, etc?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: This has been something ongoing. On a daily basis individuals call the department to find out exactly what the Member has just asked. We have no problem publicising as best we can.

I would go back to when we changed and tried to go to the pellet form of the Altasid. I think I answered a question in here with regard to that and pointed out the cost of it and the fact that it was less harmful than anything because we were only actually applying it into certain areas where we knew that we could control the mosquitoes better than we had being doing in the past. So definitely there is a dialogue that goes on continuously between the public and the department.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries? If not, we will revert back to question number 15 standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town. Would you call him please?

Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

DEFERRAL OF QUESTIONS 15 AND 16

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there is some misunderstanding. Last week we were thinking in terms of answering these two questions on Wednesday but some of these crept onto the Order Paper this morning. So I ask for those two questions to be deferred until Wednesday, please.

The Speaker: I shall put the question that questions number 15 and 16 be deferred. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: QUESTIONS 15 AND 16 DEFERRED.

The Speaker: That concludes Question Time for this morning. Moving on to item number 4 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday, 19th February 1999. Debate continuing, the First Elected Member for West Bay.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned on Friday, I had dealt with subjects that I thought the Government ought to be addressing. I said then that I don't think the alleviation of traffic jams is going to be helped in our small island by large intersections with stoplights resembling Miami or the United States. And it is not going to be helped if we continue the importation of vehicles. We could never afford to build the roads to hold them.

In connection with transport, I wish to say thanks to the Minister of Transport for finally getting the licensing done in the districts. It is something that we have been asking for for many years. While he was the Financial Secretary, motions were passed in this House concerning it. There were motions by the Third Elected Member and Fourth Elected Members for West Bay and myself on several occasions about it and I certainly appreciate the efforts to have it done. I think it is a good service and one of the good things that we accomplished. I believe when somebody does something good, it ought to be said that the person did it.

I was dealing with sports and had come to some agreement with the Minister responsible for Sports now that Cayman Brac needs some addressing. But she has to be careful that good money is not thrown after bad. I understand that the present site of the sports arena (as she proposes) will take serious amounts of money to fill and they don't know because of the dips or the holes in the bluff, the extent of it. When I was the Minister, the Second Elected Member from Cayman Brac and I visited the site around the Aston Ruddy Centre and we looked at that area so that everything could be in one general area as a place for future development. Government owns the land, we didn't have to buy, we would have place for parking and both facilities could utilise existing land for parking.

I thought that it was a good area. However, when she took the post this was all changed and I don't know I suppose she will give a good account of her stewardship and why she changed it. I agree with her that we need some facilities in what I call the eastern districts of Cayman Brac and that is the Spot Bay and Watering Place area.

I visited a site with her to put a playfield. Although it would not have been international size, it would have served community purposes. As I said, I suppose the Minister will be able to give an account of her stewardship on that matter.

I do hope the Minister tries to continue the policy of assisting the different sports clubs. Assistance with the hiring of coaches especially so that the community level, youth development in sports can really take place. This is something we started in 1993 but more emphasis was put on it in 1997. This is the way to build interest in sports so it can be used as an effective vehicle to assist in stopping the social deterioration that exists in our country. That is one of the reasons we should be assisting the different sporting organisations, not only for health purposes. Yes, for health purposes as well but for an effective vehicle to assist with social decay.

I should say here, while I am on my feet, that the West Indies seems to have found its level again in cricket. And I am proud of that. We were fearing for them in the last couple of months but thank God they are back on stream and seem to be giving the Australians a hard time, more power to them!

In 1995 I got into big problems with the business sector because I tried to put measures into the Labour Law intended to stop the laying off or pushing out of older persons from their jobs. I do recall the furore and the uproar in the country over those amendments. However, when we got agreement for the amendments that were put in place I was promised that companies who had people at the retirement age would do something for them because the pension would not effect anyone at age 60. My understanding is that the situation now is no different than in 1995 and elderly people are being pushed out of a job by some means or the other without any benefits.

I intend to have a look at the situation because after a person works on the job for 15-18 years and has reached the age of retirement but has no pension benefits, it is unfair to push him out to discard him as if he is a piece of waste cloth. It is one of the things that is causing the social deficit that I have been talking about. I call upon those companies who have not done anything yet to make some kind of arrangement for those staff members who are at the age of retirement but not eligible for pensions.

Also, during the same revision of the law, several different boards were set up to do labour complaints and arbitration. Mr. Speaker, that created a bureaucracy which I regret because for a long time while boards were created there was not the wherewithal to deal with staffing of the boards. I believe that it didn't help the situation because there was a backlog of cases.

I believe the cases are moving better now but while the Chamber of Commerce didn't want the Director handling the cases, the amendments made by Executive Council didn't do anything but create a large bureaucracy. I think that was a mistake but perhaps it can be more streamlined and I believe that the Minister will attempt to do that.

Mr. Speaker, there is a very sensitive matter which has to be watched very carefully in these islands due to many business mergers in the United States and around the world. Being an international business centre we are being affected by these mergers. We understand as a result of the mergers and acquisitions that it is necessary for companies to downsize. However, this is not the United States of America where staff can jump in a car and move to another city or another state.

While the requirements of the Labour Law can be easily met by these companies as far as severance pay is concerned, other factors must be considered. When a person who has served a company for 10-20 years is asked to retire though not of retirement age, we must understand what they face to get another job when they move out into the work place. They face competition from school leavers, younger people who can be paid less; and they face competition from persons brought in on work permits.

These are some of the obstacles and frustrations faced by these persons asked to go because of the mergers. We have to make sure that every effort is given to them for re-training and they have to be encouraged to do so, and also they need to be found jobs in other departments, perhaps of the same company and those employers can seek jobs from other companies for these people.

These persons who are asked to leave, Mr. Speaker, have given good service to the corporate. Every effort should be made to see that their future is secured.

The Third Elected Member from Bodden Town and I have a motion on training before the House and we intend to examine the situation more closely in that debate. But the effects of these mergers and acquisitions, while determined by global factors, have to be watched and monitored very closely here because a lot of good women are being affected.

I am not one of those persons in this House who usually speaks on education. However, I can say that while there have been gains made, there seem to be many areas in education which cry out for some different direction. I join my colleague, the [Third Elected] Member for West Bay, who called for work to be done now on the Sunrise Centre. I have made the call before, and I believe that we have about $100,000 in the budget. But it needs repeating.

The neglect there, Mr. Speaker, is blatant and it is pitiful. There are different programmes that can be put in place to help and assist these handicapped people. There should be a speech therapist. They also need a good room to exercise. But this cannot be done if you don't have a proper building, as the Fire Service condemned the present place. Then they would need equipment to do the exercise. These are things that one can easily see, but when you talk to the staff there are a lot of other things that need to be done at the Sunrise Centre.

A property was offered somewhere in that vicinity and I was instrumental in getting some funds in the budget in 1997, some $200,000. But nothing was done with it. This needs to be addressed urgently.

The salary adjustment for staff in that Sunrise Centre — some have been there on the same salary for over ten years. How do they expect these people to live if they are not brought up to par with the cost of living? Nobody can say they do not know about this because they do know. And I know everybody is busy, but we cannot expect to come here in this legislature and vote ourselves a large increase but not address these kind of situations.

These people are humans, they are staff, they are not in the regular school teaching regular education. But I would suspect that it is many times more difficult for them at times because of what they have to do. Dealing with handicapped people is not an easy thing. Those of us that have elderly parents know how difficult it is to deal with an elderly person who is not handicapped or was not born handicapped. So, Mr. Speaker, we all know, we all understand and I hope that the infrastructure at the Sunrise Centre will be quickly addressed and that the salary adjustments for the staff there be addressed at the same time or earlier.

In fact, I would think that the salary adjustment is something that can be addressed much easier and quicker than the needed infrastructure. But I would say to the Minister that he should look at the property that we were examining before. See whether the people are still willing to come to some agreement with Government and move as an urgent need exists.

The Deputy Speaker, the Member from North Side, spearheaded in 1986 (or there about) an effort to raise funds which helped that Sunrise Centre to get underway. She spearheaded an island wide effort, which raised quite a bit of funds. I think it was called Hands across Cayman and that was a good effort. Perhaps something like that can be taken up again, and I encourage her.

I know that the parents there do fundraising themselves, but maybe a national drive such as that would assist the Sunrise Centre. But since that time, not much has been done. As I said, the facility is pitiful. These students while they are handicapped, they are human too and they have human needs just as you and I have, just as all of us have in this House. I call on the Minister to address that matter very urgently.

At long last the West Bay Primary School Hall is now underway. If I was not in the House I would say, 'Hip, hip, hurrah!' I want to thank the Minister for getting it started; it is needed.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I have been thinking about for a long time is the subject of tertiary education. I want to propose now that it is time to make more tertiary education available and to enhance the educational opportunities for our people and for the development of the Caymanian human potential. I believe it is now time to turn the Community College of the Cayman Islands into a University.

I feel that the performance of the Caymanian at the high school level is not a true indication of his ability. It is no secret that the vast majority there under-achieve and those who do well would excel even under the most adverse circumstances. But it is also true that when the under-achiever becomes employed (which is usually no problem for a school leaver) he finds that his competitive spirit kicks in. On the job he sees other people getting ahead and getting better salaries, and so he wants to move forward, upward.

However, by this time many of them have family commitments and other obligations. Yes, they have a job but they want to change professions or improve themselves but because of their commitments they can't go overseas.

We also have to look at the cost for overseas education. For just two years it is [approximately] $25,000, and that depends on which university you are attending. Here it is somewhere around $2,500. Of course, if you move up the tertiary education level as a university, it might not be as cheap. But look at what this would save these islands in foreign exchange alone. You could say, 'Well, this would cost the country too much to develop a university.' But I believe that the development of human potential is the best investment any country can make. And if we are as prosperous and have as much money coming through these islands as they say then if we can be innovative. I believe this could be a reality in the not too far distant future. I think it is something that is needed.

We often say, 'Well it is good for our children to go overseas so they can get exposed to the world.' The world that exists today? I would better have my child here in the Cayman Islands even though we have tremendous problems.

This is you might say is far-fetched. But I believe that it is something that is needed. It is time for us to moot it. This can only enhance this country. We talk about building tourism, building monetary authorities and stock exchanges, all this is good. We are moving up the ladder of high finance. We have to move up the ladder of high education. Sometime ago, the Third Elected Member for George Town and I moved a resolution to create a teacher's training facility. I don't know how much thought has been given to it since then, but I firmly believe it is something that is needed, and I believe that the Fourth Elected Member for George Town also mentioned it in his contribution earlier.

We have to put more emphasis on getting Caymanians to want to enter the teaching profession. What a noble profession! It is the one thing that I wanted to be but, of course, we did not have that opportunity. We were not afforded that opportunity. But opportunities exist today and we need to encourage our people. Pay them the salaries to join the teaching profession. Pay them the salaries and make the environment of the teaching profession something that the young people want to get into.

It is sad because when you talk to a lot of the young people, you hear them say, 'I want to be a lawyer.' They think they will make millions of dollars. Some of them want to be accountants, and they want to be financing statisticians. Mr. Speaker, I am not hearing too much about being schoolteachers. We have to develop that and Government must put more emphasis on it or else we will have to continue importing, and importing, and importing.

Thank God we have good teachers, but God knows the day that we might not be able to get what we want. So this is something that the Ministry of Education has to get going with.

I believe that the Community College is going ahead very good but there needs to be better marketing. And I stress that because we have a good facility costing millions of dollars. When you go there and you see the library that exists, we have a good facility. We have to make sure that it is utilised much more than it is. We have to make sure, Mr. Speaker, that our people don't get left behind. We jam our prisons and the Community College goes empty.

I am sure that the management of the Community College would appreciate the assistance of Government in marketing the college. I said that I always believe in giving credit where credit is due, I think Mr. Basdeo is a very able man and I believe he and his staff have done a fine job and continue to do so. But I believe it is now time for the quantum leap to university level for advancement of our human potential.

Mr. Speaker, another matter that I think I ought to speak on is the one of career guidance. I hope that Government finally realises the serious need for career guidance. While I was in Executive Council, I had plans to incorporate career guidance into the training scheme, but career guidance has more to do with education and is more into the high school arena. However, if the machinery is already in place it is up to the ministry to ensure that it is functioning properly. If it is not in place then I must advocate strongly the establishment of a unit to ensure that this important service is available to our children.

Anyone who is providing such a service must have a thorough knowledge of the West Indian system, must have a thorough knowledge of the British system, the American and the Canadian systems of education because these are the destinations of choice for our children.

I firmly believe that it is most important to start this career service and it must be emphasised around grade 10 when children are choosing subjects before they enter the final two years of high school. Besides giving career talks, students must be individually interviewed and counselled to ensure that the subjects they choose to study at grades 11 and 12 are in keeping with the needs of their career choices.

Mr. Speaker, even in grade 10 some students are not sure what subjects they want. And in such cases it is very important for career officers as far as possible ensure that they have the right combination of subjects to have the flexibility in their career choices to ensure success later on. I can speak from experience. I have two children who went through the system. I know how difficult it was for them. And as a representative, I had to deal with many cases in the community. It is not something to get up here and attack the Minister. That's not what I am doing. It is talking about a real need that exists at that level.

A good example of having the right combination and the flexibility is if a child wants to do medicine but takes subjects more to do with economics. For instance, sir, there are variations in the subject needs for different specialisation in the education systems of the United States, Canada, West Indies and the British systems. In the British system, for instance, there is the requirement for maths, chemistry, and physics for the medical field; and in North America, maths, biology and chemistry for medicine. So it is quite clear why a proper career guidance and counselling system needs to be in place. I would hope that this is something that the ministry is moving on if not then I would advocate that they create a unit to deal with it.

Mr. Speaker, we have much crying and talking about the environment. I have always said that there can be a healthy balance between the environment and development. We have to have that in our country or else we will not exist. We can't save the entire environment and no development; we can't have all the development and no environment or we will not exist as a people, as a country. There can be a balance, and we have to strive to find that balance.

This thing about everybody becoming an expert on the environment and on development cannot be the basis upon which policy is made. But we do have some data that can give us some guidance on the sensitive areas and what can be done and what can't be done. There are also persons with general knowledge who can give guidance, but Government has to strive to that point, as it seems this is where the country wants to go.

Caymanians have got to realise that if they are going to keep the standard of living that everybody wants, and what the vast majority of people have, then there is going to have to be continuance of development. I said a long time ago that those of us in this House cannot keep complaining about development while we ourselves are developing hand over fist as individual members. We can't because that would be hypocrisy to say the least.

Government needs to strive to find that balance. One of the things that has always amazed me is that our country is a vast swamp. I think the Minister of Tourism some time ago gave the figure of about 50% swamp; this country is about 50% swamp. What has always amazed me is that we have all the swamp, very little beach, one major beach and you don't hear anybody saying, 'Save the beach.' Every person that wants to do a condominium development is on the Seven Mile Beach. The only beach in the country has been allowed to do it and you never heard phooey. Only one beach! But don't do anything with the mangroves.

Mr. Speaker, we have to be practical. Everybody loves a little bandwagon to jump on, to beat up on somebody. Everybody wants that. And when it is not me, I beat up on the Minister of Tourism, and he beats up on me or the Minister of Education beats up on me or some other Backbencher beats up on them and I join them or the outside person is doing the same thing. We have to be practical.

The Speaker: Could I interrupt you just one moment. For your information, you have ten additional minutes to speak. You may wish to summarise some of your presentation.

Please continue.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had forty minutes when I left Friday.

The Speaker: Forty-eight to be exact.

Mr. W. McKeever Bush: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

So we have to be practical. And while I cannot get further into the subject, as I said not everybody who says they are an expert on development or environment is. But Government has to take the lead and put the things in place.

I understand that they plan to declare Little Sound a Ramsar site in May. But there is no money in the budget to buy the land from the owners. Now, we cannot do that. We cannot go and take people's land unless you are ready to pay them for it. And that's one of the areas that everybody has said, 'That's the way — let us save that area.' And so they have planned to save it. But then you can't declare if there is no money in the budget.

There are two new developments in my community—a group called "Focus," led by two young ladies, Nina Orrett and Yolanda Smith—building character of young people. I want to congratulate them on that effort. I intend to do what I can to help them with it.

Also the Community Gym spearheaded by young Mr. Cline Glidden, Jr. and I. It costs $20 per month, $40 for a family of three. It got off the ground with a donation of equipment from the Holiday Inn and other community citizens. We need more equipment especially two good treadmills. Government gave two grants and I thank the Minister, as the rent is very high. We have to spend $1,500 a month on rent but it is a very good community project. More and more people are coming. This is good for health.

The Community Development Action Committee (CODAC) is moving good with Mr. Lennon Christian, but I would say again we don't need any more confusion between the Drug Council and creating the Drug Council to do the same thing that the CODAC is doing. I would hope that the Minister would take that on board and deal with it.

I am concerned about our public beach down in West Bay because it is not being kept as it should be. I do have a list of roads that the Minister of Tourism will have to look at and one major road to connect the innovation I spoke about earlier, from Birch Tree Hill to Boatswain Bay. That would have to be looked at and hopefully it can be done.

I also hope to put in place a Community Learn to Swim and Water Safety Programme for children utilising my own swimming pool at home. I would need volunteers to assist in teaching and running the programme and I think most people know where they can reach me. I think it is a good programme to teach children to learn to swim and teach them water safety, and I intend to utilise my own pool for that.

Mr. Speaker, in closing we all have a tremendous job ahead of us, God willing, in the new millennium. We have to be careful. We have to plan carefully lest we make regrettable choices. Caymanians must come together. The downfall of Caymanians has been that we like . . . and someone said it is derogatory. But I find it to be like crabs in a barrel—they see you getting ahead and they are going to tear you down to get up on top. Caymanians have to come together as a community. We have to because of the growing social deficit and more people with their hands out because of the inability to fit in.

We have to design a constructive intelligent system for our country to lead struggling people back to self-sufficiency. First, we have to educate them that they cannot do as they please; that there are rules and regulations to live by. A mass public education or re-education effort needs to take place for the new millennium. We cannot also bolt the door against the very people who seem endowed. Foreigners, we have some here for twenty-five years, fifteen years. . . . Caymanians have got to stop and understand that we can't bolt the door against the very people, Caymanians and foreigners, who seem endowed with all the qualities we say we are losing—fiery, hot ambition, a respect for hard work and responsibility and making it on merit and a passionate dedication to family.

This is what we want! This is the national community we want to build. Let us be careful lest we fall into the trap of those who disguise reflective scapegoating as seasoned analysts and persuade us that we have no better choice for leadership than what presently obtains. We hear our people say, "For God sake do something." Well, the warning bell that I like to ring is let us be careful before those voices switch from urgency to some kind of recklessness as I heard the other night.

"Do something," Mr. Speaker, becomes "do anything." We don't want that. We must respond to needs, the problems we face with substantial strength of constructive discussion and intelligent new consensus. Let us bring the country together. We need a strengthening of national life and more genuine effort—not selfish effort—to build national life.

Mr. Speaker, there was a song by Ernie Smith, and I will just say "KDT." Figure that one out, now. And this is what they said, "And as they fight one another for the power and the glory our country goes to waste. We the people want to know just where we are going? Where do we stand? Right now our hands are tied behind our backs while the Government is if'ing and but'ing. Where do we stand? We have too far to go not to really know just how we are getting there and if we are getting anywhere we have too much to change not to know the range."

Mr. Speaker, as they fight one another for the power and the glory our country goes to waste. Let us try to educate our people that all the rights they have come with great responsibilities. All that I am saying will take great strength in one's conviction. It will take extraordinary leadership for the country. Those people who care about others, who care about the future . . . it will take responsible leadership from politicians willing to throw away customary points and excuses and lead the people towards the truth no matter how risky politically. It will take moral leadership, insight and innovation.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, by God's help I have made up my mind to abide with people, work with people, link with people who are honest, who can help lead us in the new millennium, build the national community because they understand and have staked out this territory already with clean minds and generous minds.

"The woods are lovely, dark and deep. I have promises to keep and miles to go before I sleep." I hope I have not gone over the time and I trust that the Government will find something useful in my contribution and do something about the widening social deficit in this country.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11:52 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12:25 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. The floor is opened to debate but it is my understanding that it is the intention of this House that the Select Committee on Standing Orders will meet at 12:30 p.m.

[Interjection: Yes, sir]

The Speaker: In view of that I think before going into the debate we might as well adjourn at this time and we shall then suspend until 2:30 p.m. for lunch.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12:26 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2:53 PM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) Before I call on the Honourable Minister for Tourism, we have apologies from the Honourable First and Second Official Members who are performing other official duties this afternoon.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you. I may need to take a few minutes to get my papers together. (Pause)

I am very pleased to be able to bring my contribution to the Throne Speech. I begin by congratulating His Excellency the Governor for a comprehensive Throne Speech, a speech that was well developed, well delivered, and I believe that His Excellency being at the helm of this country for the past three plus years has assisted us to steer the good ship Cayman Islands in the proper direction.

I think we all need to be mindful of where this country has come from and how much time, energy and dedication was given by former members of this Legislative Assembly and of the Vestry, as well as our justices of the peace and former civil servants, be they senior civil servants or otherwise.

I am reminded of the fact that we can look far and wide around this Caribbean, around the Atlantic or even the Indian or Pacific Oceans and not find many—if any—places in the world that I would rather be. The Cayman Islands through the dedication of our predecessors and through the dedication of the members of this honourable House and the government created a stability in this country that has drawn investors' confidence all around the world.

Once we reach the top, or nearly the top, we then have to dedicate ourselves to carrying out the necessary work, for being open-minded enough to assess the position, to listen to the business people, to listen to members of our community in order to ensure that what was done by the government is in the direction that the community would like to see. Granted, sometimes they do not have as much information as we do, but we can build their input into that formula that has taken us so far.

The quality of life in this country is equal to any and better than many. The opportunities in this country for young people are quite unlimited. It depends upon the individual's ability. And it depends upon all of us who call ourselves Caymanian fighting to ensure that they have that opportunity to further their education, if that is their wish, to go off and study at a university to obtain their Bachelor's Degree whether that be in business or whatever other professional interest they may have so that they can prepare themselves to take up the mantle to be the cornerstones of this country for the future.

We know that no matter what, our time in this House, and our contribution to the people of this country will certainly come to an end. And we need to ensure, just as our forefathers did that we use some dedicated time to assist young people to find their respective positions in this community.

We have now developed as a country that is rated as one of the leading financial centres of the world. It didn't just happen overnight. Many, many people made contributions to it. Yes, it happened in our time. So we have a responsibility to ensure that the opportunity we had, and the opportunity which prevails today . . . that we commit ourselves to working to ensure that our children, your children, and every child in this country has a similar opportunity, a similar quality of life and we pray for Almighty God to guide us as we take each decision.

Sometimes we look around and begin to compare ourselves to other countries. And sometimes we say that our Constitution is probably not as up-to-date as any other country in the Caribbean. Or, if it is, not too many, if any. Yet, the population in this country, the quality of life in this country the world awareness that prevails in this country is probably right up there with the best of them. We have listened to many comments about the economic status of the Cayman Islands, about the financial position, about social values, about Vision 2008, about financial reforms, about public sector reforms, and on, and on, and on.

This country is probably in the best position it has ever been. When you look at the financial position in this country, or the economic position in this country, and we talked about being one of the worlds leading financial centres with $637 billion on the books of the banks in this country, with stay-over visitors in 1997, for example, spending $381.2 million in the Cayman Islands, the cruise ship visitors spending almost $21 million in this country. We know that even looking at the loans and advances to the residents of the Cayman Islands, in 1992 it was roughly $658 million. In 1997, it was $1.2 billion. And sometimes we get long lectures about our policies and our decisions.

Even the currency in circulation has almost doubled since 1992. Company formation on an annual basis moved from about 3,700 to 8,300 companies being registered in this country in 1997. When we look at the total registration of companies, when we took office in 1992 there was a little over 25,000 companies. At the end of 1997, there were 41,163 companies. Even the mutual funds legislation was created in 1993 (or 1994) and by 1997, there was 1,685 mutual funds operating in this country. Just a little taste of where we have come from and the contribution this government has made to this country during the last five years, in particular.

We even see that the number and value of approved development in this country. It's not easy to get development unless you get the confidence of investors. And we know that the majority of development, be it condominiums or hotels, and to some extent commercial buildings, is done by persons who are non-Caymanian. But even that development, when you look at it, in 1993 was almost $104 million. By 1997, it was almost $291 million.

And our contribution that we have made, even in the cases of crime, while we know there have been movements within an aggregate figure, in 1992 the total crimes reported was 3,058. In 1997, it was 3,307. And recent information indicates that that figure has been pretty stable for 1998. But we know that the development of the Cayman Islands as a tourism destination and as a place that produces quality of life for all of us who live here, crime must be kept under control. This government is dedicated and committed to taking the action necessary to keep it under control.

Many of us who have paid attention to it over a number of years basically see the peaks and valleys in certain types of crime, and see the relationship to some extent between the use of drugs and burglaries and other activities. These are items that concern each and every person in this country, including every member of this Legislative Assembly. I know that the police are committed to dealing with it.

I realise too that the new Commissioner has just passed his first anniversary in the Cayman Islands and I want to commend him and his members of staff, more specifically his policemen, be they constables, superintendents or the deputy commissioner. I want to commend all of them for the able job they are doing. Just like every one of us, Mr. Speaker, they can always do better. So we have to strive to do better. We have to improve our performance in this House or (in the case of the police) out there in the community.

What I wanted to say is that the government commits itself to the police and the support thereof, and I feel certain that every member of this Legislative Assembly echoes what I am saying.

We know that when we talk about road traffic accidents and other matters that in 1992 there were 820 accidents throughout the Cayman Islands. By 1997, the figure was 480—almost half the amount. I believe it's an indication of the work of the police; it's an indication of the youth being involved with many activities that were established by the government and by the community in many cases. And I want to pay my respects to those involved in community service and sporting activities, and to those who are involved with supporting the churches in this country who have done such an able job over the years and continue to be movers and shakers in our system of principles and values.

When we start quoting all of these statistics, we must be careful that the message is understood. Basically, the message is that we are doing well, we are growing well, we are dealing with items that concern us. We can improve the situation and we are committed to doing so, but the commitment is there all around. When we talk about social values, when I listen to what the community is saying . . . and maybe the way I am interpreting it is that we need people who the community looks up to, who set the standard and behave in a particular way. None of us wants to behave in a way that the community frowns upon. None of us want to behave in a way that misleads the children of this country. And I am reminded every time I stand up to offer my contribution of that great need to provide a positive influence for young people.

It wasn't that long ago that I was growing up as a teenager myself. There were many people within the community of West Bay, in particular. In those days you had to walk to George Town, we didn't have all these cars. Even if you wanted to ride your bicycle you went up Boggy Sand Road and got halfway through and had to stop. So many people in this country that we looked up to as role models influenced our lives. If we do not act in a way that gives positive values, then I think we have only ourselves to blame for the problems that come afterwards. I am not trying to say that we are causing the problem, I am saying that we must set the right standard.

We talk about Vision 2008, and I have to thank His Excellency the Governor for spearheading that movement. And I believe that each and every one of us in this Legislative Assembly is committed to Vision 2008 and that process. I believe it is necessary. Many a member across the floor, in particular, spoke about long-term planning. We have reached that day. I think we reached it quite some time ago. But there is always a problem of gestation when we reach these decisions to be able to digest it and then implement it.

We spoke too about financial reform. I watched the financial reform in this country from 1971 when we used bookkeeping machines. We made the switch in the very early 1980s to computers. And by mid 1986 we set up the Public Finance and Audit Law. As the world changes, as this country changes, there is a need to constantly amend the legislation or the procedures in order to ensure that Cayman is in step with the accountability to our public for the funds that we are spending.

We hear too about public sector reform. I don't think anyone in this House disagrees with it. I think there is a need to have that public sector reform to understand a new way of doing things. Change is not always something that people wish to do, but it is certainly in the best interest of this country to change for the sake of positive change and not just for the sake of changing.

Long term planning. We have all sorts of plans at the moment. We have a health plan, we have a Port Authority plan, we have a Water Authority plan, we have a drug plan, we have an education plan, we have an agricultural plan, we have a tourism plan . . . so, long term planning is not foreign in any way for government. And there's a need to do more planning. I think that's the point being highlighted. I am sure that the government will act as it has committed itself and will take the matter on and deal with it. But there is also a need to make sure that the change being put forward is a workable change, something that will benefit the country. Rushing headlong without properly assessing the pitfalls may do more damage than good.

I heard some comments the other day from one of the members across the floor. I wanted to take a few moments to talk a little bit about that. It was comments about tourism, the minister, and the director of tourism, and the fact that we always take credit when everything is going well and that tourism is on automatic pilot, the Third Elected Member for West Bay said. I want to ask him to research the statistics and tell me if he can make that statement convincingly because every statistic since 1992 show increase after increase, after increase, straight into 1998. How can you do that kind of operation on automatic pilot? Maybe his thoughts are on automatic pilot!

If we are living in sync with what is going on in the world around us many of us know that there was a substantial American Airlines strike. Now you can't have American Airlines going on strike for several days and not affect your tourism. The only way you could come to the conclusion that it does not affect your tourism is if you don't have a full understanding of the quantity of passengers that American Airlines actually lifts off the ground and takes to different parts of the United States and also brings to the Cayman Islands.

There were also comments about the minister of commerce and that the private member's motion that had been made and agreed to by government which spoke about restricting certain areas of the business to Caymanians, meaning watersports among others. Unless my memory is failing me, this whole thing went to select committee. And the select committee in its recommendations, and I haven't gone to the file to check the accuracy of what I am about to say, but I think it is close to the truth, the select committee made a recommendation that they would move legislation that separated trade and business activities away from the Immigration Board and set up the Trade and Business Licensing Board. It also focused on salesmen coming into the country and selling to different importers or business people in this country without what everybody thought was a work permit. And we dealt with that matter as far as I could understand.

There was no agreement or recommendation from the select committee that we would restrict certain businesses to Caymanians. So, no matter what the minister for commerce might think, unless the members of the select committee, who are the members of this honourable House, decide to go that route, you physically cannot carry out that thought or that action. So I don't want to do anything more than add comments that will put the accuracy of what took place as far as I can remember it to the public.

The member also made some comments about work permits. Perhaps he is listening to Caymanians who cannot get a job too easily. I hear that too, that there are so many people on work permits, particularly in the construction industry. I believe that's a valid statement. I believe that we must all commit ourselves to it. But you know, Mr. Speaker, I think I hear another member say that everybody is concerned about work permits until it comes to yours. 'Don't take mine. Take his and hers, but don't take mine.' I think we have to change that approach. We have to agree that in this country employment for Caymanians comes first. And I am taking my time to make this statement because I sincerely believe that that is the way it should be.

Now, the Caymanians have a responsibility to give value for that dollar earned. Whatever the compensation is, he or she has the responsibility—the obligation—to show up on time, to take the break without going excessively over time on the break, and to complete his or her work at the agreed hour. I don't see how anyone in this country can deny a Caymanian a job. If you are not showing up for work on time, if you are not giving 100% value—which is what you are paid for—to the employer, then he or she has every right to complain. And remember that they are not in business just to be kind; they are in business to make money. And your contribution to their business is almost as significant as they themselves being on time delivering the product. Because if the customer is not pleased will there be any repeat with that person coming back again? We know that repetition in this case is vital to the survival of a business place, that is, coming back time and time again for the same service that you delivered.

I noticed too in the comments made by the Third Elected Member for West Bay that he mentioned the amount of official travel in this year's budget of $1.2 million. He then went on to talk about the Minister for Tourism and the Director of Tourism spending too much time in the air than on the ground. I want to make it clear to the public that the $1.2 million is not mine, nor is it the director's. Sometimes, although there might not be any intention that way by the speaker, people interpret what they want to interpret. And spending time on the ground, for the year 1998 I was away from the office on promotion six times for the year. I wonder what would be his category that says I am spending too much time in the air.

If you are in the tourism business there are two things you can do: You can sit in your office and look pretty and expect all of that glory, or you can get out there and do the work. I think the track record that follows me from 1992 indicates what I have done. I have no hesitation about travelling if I have to travel, if it is in the best interests of this country, and I have always assessed whether or not it was beneficial to this country. Otherwise I don't need to travel. I'd rather be home with my wife.

As I was reading this document and the words of the Third Elected Member for West Bay, I got a real shock when he said, "But, Mr. Speaker, those responsible are more interested in attending cocktail parties and functions offered by those in senior authority. That's what they are concerned about."

You know, Mr. Speaker, those who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. And I take exception to that statement because he, himself, if all of us were present at the Hyatt Suites on Saturday evening, he was walking around with a glass of wine in his hand. So he should shut up!

[Members' laughter]

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: You can't do him that way. Behave yourself now, he's your nephew.

[Members' laughter]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: He should have considered that before he said what he did.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: All of us were not there.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, the First Elected Member for West Bay made a point. I didn't say that all of these members were there. I was saying if you were there.

[General uproar]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: [Microphone not turned on]

[Members' interjections]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to go on. I think they were pulling my leg.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Well, if you want to go—as long as you're not going on another cocktail party!

[Members' laughter]

The Speaker: I am completely in the hands of members. I will entertain a motion for the adjournment.

AT 3.37 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 18 MARCH 1999.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, it seems like it would be good to allow the minister to go and do his duties.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: I move the adjournment of this honourable House until . . . Wednesday at 10.00? Someone said Thursday.

Mr. Roy Bodden: No, no, no, no.

[General uproar]

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: I think it's Thursday at 10.00. I move the adjournment of this honourable House until Thursday at 10.00 AM.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 72(8)

The Speaker: Before I put the question, I would appreciate it if the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation would move the suspension of Standing Order 72(8) in order to allow the select committee to meet tomorrow and this afternoon.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 72(8) to allow the select committee to meet during the period of the House.

The Speaker: For the benefit of the listening public, that Standing Order reads, "A select committee may sit at any time when the House is adjourned, but except by leave of the House may not sit while the House is sitting."

I shall now put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 72(8) SUSPENDED TO ALLOW THE SELECT COMMITTEE TO MEET WHILE THE HOUSE IS SITTING.

ADJOURNMENT

The Speaker: The question is that this honourable House do adjourn until 10.00 AM Thursday. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

EDITED
THURSDAY
18 MARCH 1999
10:27 AM

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item number 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable First Official Member, who is performing other official duties this morning. The Honourable Third Official Member will be arriving later this morning. The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning, and the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation will also be arriving later this morning. And the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay will hopefully be arriving later this morning.

OBITUARY

Valda Louise Bodden

The Speaker: Honourable Members, I rise this morning to offer condolences to the family of the late Valda Louise Bodden (nee Merren), the daughter of a very prominent Caymanian, H.O. Merren, who was very instrumental in the early days of the business community of this island. And, later the wife of Captain Theo R. Bodden, a very prominent businessman whose family continues his business in the islands today. On behalf of all honourable members of this Honourable House I offer condolences to the family. May her soul rest in peace.

Item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question number 13 stands in the name of the Third Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

DEFERRED QUESTION 13
(Deferred on Monday, 15th March 1999)

No. 13 Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, this question is deferred from the last meeting of the House and it could be some what redundant at this point but I would nonetheless wish to ask the Honourable Minister to state (that is, the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources) who is responsible for the removal of the rubble from the site of the former Holiday Inn? And why this has not yet been removed? As I said, Mr. Speaker, this might now be redundant.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to thank the Member for what he has said because as the House knows, a few days ago I did answer a question that is literally saying the same thing that I would have to say in this one.

The applicant is responsible for the removal of the rubble from the site above. In most cases, the material is deposited at the landfill site.

Based upon staff discussions with the applicant's agent, it is our understanding that the applicant is considering using the rubble as fill for the proposed hotel parking lots which would be located across West Bay Road. Staff has advised the applicant that an application for planning permission is required to use fill in the manner desired by the applicant. No application to use the rubble for parking lot has been received to the date when we actually did the question.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: Supplementaries. The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I wonder if the Honourable Minister can state the name of the applicant? And is he aware of the reason why an application has not yet been received or made by the applicant to have the rubble removed?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I do not have the applicant's name and as far as I understand the fine rubble, some of it, was actually taken to the dump, but this is the hard part which could be used for fill. I will give the Member an undertaking that I would check and give him the names that he has requested.

The Speaker: No further supplementaries? We will move on to question 15 standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

DEFERRED QUESTION 15

(Deferred on Monday, 15th March 1999)

No. 15: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works if any consideration is being given to computerising the quantity surveying section of the Public Works Department.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, consideration is being given to computerising the quantity surveying section of the Public Works Department. It is hoped that this will be completed by the end of 1999.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The Minister will smile ruefully when I ask this question. Can the Minister state why consideration is being given to computerising this section of the Public Works Department?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I would have a tendency to say (and I haven't gotten this answer from Public Works themselves and I need to specify that) that firstly, it is one of trying to ensure that Public Works has the system in place to provide quantity surveying in terms of bill of quantities for buildings and things of that sort. If any part of the design changes then another bill of quantities would need to be put together.

So it provides a great flexibility for the Public Works Department and we have a young person who is presently studying the subject of Quantity Surveying overseas in London. Hopefully, he will return in the summer of this year and will be employed at Public Works.

Secondly, the quantity surveying work, a large percentage of it, is actually sub-contracted (if I could use that expression) to the private sector, meaning firms in the private sector that provide quantity surveying expertise.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The Minister has alluded to some of the functions of this section in the Public Works Department at present. Can he say briefly how this section now functions in regard to actual quantity surveying when it comes to capital projects? That is, building that is being carried on through that department for the Government.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: As I understand it the functions of quantity surveying are presently being carried out by firms that are employed by the Public Works Department. As I understand it, there is no one in Public Works at the moment that has the skills and the time to provide this amount of skill to the capital works system.

We do know (and I don't want to mislead the House in any way) that there is a person who has quantity surveying as an expertise. But my understanding is that the volume is so large that he is unable to do it simply because on the one hand, the system which we are proposing to establish in Public Works which will computerise that work is not now in place and, therefore, one person would not be able to carry it out without that system as I understand it. So we are looking forward to computerising the section.

We are looking forward to the young person coming back and taking up the duty officially and dealing with the quantity surveying needs of each particular project that Government may have. I shall go on to say building projects.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Bearing in mind that the Minister being questioned has recently taken over the subject of Public Works would the Minister be able to wager . . . or perhaps let me re-phrase that, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister be prepared to venture a comment with regard to how long has it been realised that this needed to be done?

And, is it something that is an accepted fact that because of the lack of this and because of the way the system works presently this has actually costed the Government much more than it should have over the years?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I am worried about this venture that I am taking about to take on. [Laughter]

I believe that in the absence of the quantity surveying unit being computerised, I can see the difficulty of one person actually carrying out this work and, therefore, to some extent they were left without any alternative in.... Let me back up a little bit.

It seems to me that without the section being computerised one person is unable to carry out the multi-construction projects that Public Works takes on. Therefore, the alternative to not being able to do it in house, so to speak, would be to go outside and buy that skill to ensure that these multi-projects do get implemented at least to that stage. It seems somewhat logical that if you go in that direction and you have a multitude of projects, such as schools and other buildings, if you keep farming out this work, it is possible that you are paying more than you would if you did it in house.

The First Elected Member from George Town asked me to go on this venture, Mr. Speaker. I am reluctant to go much further because I think in the absence of factual information, there is a strong possibility that the project is costing more because the quantity surveying—actually the person who is providing that skill is receiving a percentage of the total cost of the project. That is how [this] bill is turned into Public Works. Therefore, if you look at 10 or 15 projects being done it is very likely that it is a more costly way of doing it than if you are doing it in-house.

But let me go on to say that to do it in-house you need the section computerised. So, there will be a capital injection for the computerisation and the hardware and the software and that is the commitment that I make to this House for 1999, to computerise it.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I am trying to be as aware as I can of not asking too many supplementaries, sir, but I think this little subject, sir, warrants just a few more. I understand and accept the Minister's position at present. But I think once we have had this opportunity and it is aired properly then we might have more impetuous to rectify the situation and that is the whole purpose of this little exercise, sir.

Mr. Speaker just to follow up on what the Minister just said, if we simply look at a five-year period, or say from 1995 to 1999 inclusive, we can easily be looking in excess of $200M worth of capital projects. Certainly during that time it must have been seen that this cost was noticeably more than the way the department was supposed to be run. While I understand the lack of staff, certainly that should not be an insurmountable obstacle.

Can the Minister just go on to say (and I not trying to put words in his mouth, I am truly trying to make it as easily as possible for him to answer without getting himself in a corner) whether or not this has been realised as one of the important parts of the rectification of the working of the department? My understanding is that there was some recent type of "audit" done on the Public Works Department by an independent source.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to actually say how long this matter has been realised. I think I would be giving an opinion, or perhaps speculating, as to how long it has gone on. I am not able to do that. If the Member wishes me to look into it and come back with a written answer, I am prepared to do it in that way because I think then we will have a factual situation.

I believe that as we move forward and as we take on projects, sometimes we are so committed and focusing so much on the work ahead that we don't always look at the system. And sometimes even the re-allocation is not really looked at because you are focusing on getting the work done and the pressure is upon you to produce. So I believe that in the exercise going forward (and it is no secret that the Chief Engineer and others, as well as the person mentioned by the First Elected Member from George Town is assisting the whole process of reinvention of Public Works, the systems and organisation, and what have you) that is a process that we are not going to be able to deal with at one shot. It will take a little time to deal with the changes as we move on because first of all we need to ensure that the service supplied by the department is not hampered in any way, but the changes that are made enhance the services that are being given.

We know that the service to the public is paramount. It must be delivered on time, although we need to do workshops and training of some personnel along the way and not specifically in Public Works but we know that's the system that is normally used. You cannot tie people up in training if your department is on a time line to produce a particular project.

So, I am basically saying it will take a little time. We are working on it and we intend to carry this through.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One final supplementary, sir.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I think that it is clearly (and I will turn into a question before I am through) obvious by the exchange here that there needs to be some improvement. I can only say that I am happy to hear that there is some commitment to see this through. But one of the things that I also wish to point out to the Minister and seek a commitment from him on is if he looks in other areas of the department where there have been individuals trained in the past and consequently employed. History will show us that a lot of these young, qualified individuals have left the department. Perhaps, the commitment I will seek here is that in the future, . . . I am not limiting it to this exercise where this young man is supposed to be returning to that section of the department.

Perhaps due attention could be paid to the needs of that department on an overall basis looking down the line as to how it's going to work. And, I am not venturing here to say how the department is going to function in the future. There must be some type of vision. But if there is going to be any expertise within that department perhaps specific scholarships can be offered. Of course, there will also be a need to recognise the need for prospective upward mobility for these individuals, which I think has been a problem in the past.

So, I am just asking the Minister if he would give a commitment that when the whole thing is being looked at, that this will be part and parcel of the exercise. I believe it is important for us to have our own Caymanians entrenched in the system and be able to move forward. I think once they are there and everything is working properly we cannot ask for more. I am sure we will get better results with regard to their functioning within that department.

So, if the Minister could give that commitment, perhaps we can leave it at that.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Knowing the view of the Chief Engineer on this matter, I have no difficulty in giving the commitment to the First Elected Member from George Town that we will look at the overall position of Public Works, and I so commit.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, we will move on to question number 16 standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

DEFERRED QUESTION 16 (Deferred on Monday, 15th March 1999)

No. 16: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works what is the present policy of the Public Works Department regarding acquiring discounts on materials purchased.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: All goods and services procured by Public Works are done through one of the following processes:

- Competitive quotes;
- Competitive tendering through the Departmental Tenders Committee, or
- in the case of purchases over a CI $100,000, competitive tendering is submitted to the Central Tenders Committee.

Regarding single source suppliers, waivers are sought from the Public Works Tenders Committee or the Central Tenders Committee to negotiate with the supplier to secure the lowest possible price.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town, a supplementary.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Through you, sir. Can the Minister state how long this policy has been in effect?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge this system has been in place for quite some time.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: As I am sure the Honourable Minister will have read the Auditor General's Report of 31st December 1996, he will have seen that there was a question raised by the Auditor General with regard to this policy or lack thereof. If it was supposed to have been in effect for quite some time, it certainly has not been the case and that is why I asked the question.

Perhaps, the Minister could simply give the commitment and maybe we can end this one quite early too. The purpose of this is to be able to look back to see where the mistakes were and to be able to ensure that they don't re-occur in the future. But if we could find out from the Minister, and he can provide this in writing, if the Minister would be able to compare purchases and I am not talking about construction tenders, I am talking about single source suppliers. If the Minister would be able to do a comparison, once we find out exactly when this system has last been implemented . . . because obviously it has not been working well over the years.

So anything that has been done in the recent past will have been done as a result of the Auditor General's observations, at least that is the view I would take. So, if he could find out or get some comparisons with what materials cost a year before and what they are now costing a year hence, perhaps we could have a pretty good comparison to see how it is functioning at present.

I daresay that I would expect to see a marked improvement. And again, this question was simply raised to ensure that the observations made are being carried out.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I thank the Member for putting this question forward, and I do realise that it is with good intentions. He made the point that we assumed responsibility for Public Works just about 2 ½ months ago. We have been down here most of the time so I have not had time to deal in detail with a lot of this. But I have no difficulty with carrying out a comparison of purchases from the single source suppliers and comparing one area against the other whether the cost varies and comes back to the members in writing.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister say the number of persons on the Tenders Committee?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I take it that the Fourth Elected Member from George Town is speaking about the Departmental Tenders Committee. It is chaired by the Chief Engineer and the Secretary is the Executive Engineer in charge of roads. There is also a senior member of staff pulled in as well as a junior member of staff, and they have a listing for these members, and they vary.

They have a listing for who is likely to be the junior member in 1998 or 1999 and also the senior member. So it is not committed that they will always have the same people on it with the exception of the secretary, being the Executive Engineer for roads and the Chief Engineer as Chairman. So the other two individuals are rotated, they are not always there.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Could the Minister say if these persons are also private citizens that are also members of the PWD Tenders Committee or is it just engineers?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: When I say junior member of staff I am in particular talking about recent graduates, be they the engineer of a project, or the graduate architect, or a graduate engineer, or a superintendent of the building construction. And when I am speaking about a senior member of staff, I am talking about the executive engineer for buildings, or the architect, or the executive quantity surveyor, or the senior superintendent for building construction or the works manager. Those would be the senior individuals and the junior individuals would be really some of the recent graduates.

In terms of private people, the private sector personnel would actually be on the Central Tenders Committee, which is the committee with bids over $100,000.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I then think that perhaps my question relates more to the Central Tenders Committee. What is the proportion of engineers to private sector persons on the Central Tenders Committee?

Suspension of Standing Order 23 (7 & 8)

The Speaker: Honourable Minister, if I could interrupt you for one minute. Would you move the suspension of Standing Order 23(7) & (8) so that Question Time can go beyond the hour of 11:00 a.m.?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Under Standing Order 83, I move the suspension of Standing Order 23 (7) & (8) to allow the further supplementaries to be asked on this question.

The Speaker: I should put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. Question Time continues.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 23 (7)& (8) SUSPENDED.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, there are six members of the Central Tenders Committee and it really is evenly divided between private sector personnel and government personnel. Government personnel related to Finance or to Public Works in some way.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: The Minister has said that there are three private sector members of the Central Tenders Committee, are there any members from the private sector that have on-going business with the Government?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: There may be in one or two cases but it is not a continuous thing. It is kind of hard to be in the private sector and be in this construction area and your project is not run or you do not do a bid for the government. But in those cases the individual would have to excuse himself, and the other members of the Board take the decision.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Is it the policy then of the government to have people on the Central Tenders Committee that have specific expertise in specific areas? Or is the government interested in having private sector members that might have overall experience? Does it have to be very, very specific experience?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I would say that the intention is to have persons who have general overall experience. In some cases, the person has overall experience as well as a specific kind of skill.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I just wanted to know when I asked if there were any persons on the Central Tenders Committee that had on-going business with the government — and I believe that the minister is saying that in fact it is very difficult to find persons in the private sector that wouldn't have some business with the government. And in cases where this comes about the individual or individuals might have something coming before the Tenders Committee that they exclude themselves. If an individual performs on-going functions from the government . . . that somehow the interaction would be more to be looked at than the person excluding themselves.

Would the minister in his short time there have any possibility to examine this particular situation?

The Speaker : Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I may not have answered his question to the best of my ability because I did not focus on this continuous work that the individual who may be a member of the Central Tenders Committee may have. I think I went part way but not totally. As far as I can see on this list, there is no one in the Central Tenders Committee that constantly has on a weekly, or by a monthly basis, continuously worked with the government.

There are individuals who periodically, . . . their project will come up and they may be involved with it or they may own the construction company or whatever it may be from time to time. That is how I should have answered the question.

The Speaker: There are no further supplementaries, that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Item number 4 standing on today's Order Paper, Government Business. The continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on the 19th February, 1999.

Debate is continuing, the Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

On Monday afternoon when we took the break, I wanted to personally thank your good self and members of this Honourable House for agreeing to adjourn at about 3:30 p.m. or 3:35 p.m. to allow me to participate in the groundbreaking for the Crewe Road Bypass. I am deeply grateful.

I was making the point that the Cayman Islands in my view, is in a class by itself and I don't have any written notes but I have material from which I can speak and draw on.

I want to first say how grateful we should be to Almighty God for the guidance that He has given not only to us but to every former member of this Legislative Assembly as well as every member of the government who has been involved (and I include civil servants in that) with taking decisions on behalf of this country and making their contribution moving this country from an infested mosquito island to where we are today—one of the leading world financial centres and also a premier warm weather tourist destination.

We have to pay tribute to many other persons involved. We certainly need to pay tribute to the work of the churches who from the 1940s leading right up to today have played a role in the community in keeping a constant reminder of the need to be principled, of the need to deal fairly with individuals and to have those Christian values that we are well known for. Those are the values that in my view have made us honest, upright citizens of this country. Those are the values that allow us to travel and participate and work in many different professions and even as seamen in the 1950s and beyond. Those are the values that allow us to be so easily accepted and for us so easily to deliver the quality of work that satisfies our employer.

So, we, as current members of this Legislative Assembly, have a leading role to play in setting the standards in this country. We have seen a reduction in the honesty of some of our people. We have seen the effect of drugs and drug use in this country. We have seen the ramifications of theft, burglaries and other uncommon kinds of acts by parents and individuals alike. I believe we are drifting away from what the churches and our forefathers and our parents really taught us years ago. There is a right and a wrong. There is the responsibility of the parent to know where his child is. There is an obligation for the child to ensure that he or she is supported one hundred percent in his or her educational pursuit. For we know today that without it, the individual will be not as productive as he or she could be and may even have real difficulty getting the type of job that he or she would like.

So we as parents must shoulder that responsibility. And I am not just speaking to the public, I am speaking to all of us in here, and I am not excluding myself. I think we have to commit or re-commit ourselves to our obligations not only as parents, not only as community leaders but as members of Parliament who should be setting standards, who should be role models for young people to look up to. If you have the right example, a young person may follow your role model.

The positiveness of the life could be affected just by the way you behave, just by the things you commit yourself to, wholesome activities shouldering your community responsibility so that all of us in these Cayman Islands will have a better place to live and to rear our children and theirs. And we have that responsibility to ensure that all of this prosperity we now sometimes seem to take for granted . . . we have the responsibility to ensure that it is maintained so that the young people in this country and their children have a similar opportunity as we had.

I believe that Caymanians in this country have unlimited opportunity. Yes, you can find somebody who is trying to keep you down. You can always find that. But the important thing is to ensure that you, yourself are actually carrying out the work and presenting yourself, and giving 100% value for the dollar that you get paid.

I believe that Caymanians, whether it is the members of this House or leading members of the community, must indeed stand up for others, must indeed be people who take time to assist and help to guide the young people in this country. Sometimes, we become university graduates and then we come into the labour market. It would be helpful to also have guidance in it. The Third Elected Member [from Bodden Town] called it mentoring, and I certainly agree with that.

I believe it is not just a call for the employee being Caymanian and the employer being Caymanian or otherwise. There is a community need. There is a need for the employer also to be a good corporate citizen, to have an interest in training and promoting Caymanians. They should have an interest of being good corporate citizens and to ensure that young people, Caymanians, have an opportunity to rise to the highest level in the profession that they have chosen.

Quite frankly, if it doesn't happen, the social harmony and the social values in this country are going to be at risk. It is always easy to talk about what should be done. Words help. Action is better. I believe that is what I am talking about. I don't want any member to misinterpret what I am saying. I am saying that even us on this side will have to use words but the action is crucial in order to bring the effectiveness of what we are all talking about.

When we look at the crime statistics, we don't see a wide fluctuation in the total number of crimes but we see variations within that total number which concerns each and every one of us. That is what we are talking about, the burglary, the drug use and other uncommon kinds of crimes in this country. It is a matter that has to be dealt with. There probably is not any single answer, but it is a matter of joining forces and formulating a strategy that helps to bring more responsibility in the community especially by parents.

This country really has a glowing past. If anybody examined where we came from since 1966 to where we are today and how the quality of life in this country has improved, we have to give thanks to Almighty God. Yes, He said (and I am probably paraphrasing) "Man shall not live by bread alone . . ." but by the sweat of his brow. Yes, we have to work hard. Even more so now that we have reached near the top. We have to continue to work hard and we have to utilise the skills to help us maintain that position.

It has always been, in my view, a contribution that is made by members of our community who come from the indigenous side of the equation. We also have to give credit to those who have come to this country, who have delivered the kind of skill and expertise that has helped us to grow in the financial industry as well as in the tourism industry. We know that there are even some of us—meaning Caymanians—that don't always behave like we should. So we are going to have some of the non-Caymanians who shouldn't behave like they should either. But we have to support the system that says you have to follow the rules in this country and you have to abide by the law and be good corporate citizens.

I want to reiterate what I said on Monday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, knowing that the Commissioner of Police has recently passed his first anniversary here. I want to commend him not only for his commitment in dealing with good government and policing but I want to also commend him for the way in which he has taken on his responsibilities in what I would say an effective way.

There are a lot of things happening in this country, Mr. Speaker, that some of us, maybe all of us, do not know the full extent of. But they are being dealt with. I believe that when we even think about drugs, the whole magnitude of that situation, knowing our location in the Caribbean and just watching over the last thirty years where we . . . and I will give you an analogy if you wish for an example.

We had a young man who came in from Jamaica with a parcel. He handed it to a member of government, and I am not going to say what title he had. And that person walked through Customs with it in his hand not knowing what he had and then when he got outside, he took it back from him, later to discover it was ganja. Now, that system does not operate any more. But when we think about how those involved with moving drugs have become so powerful whether it is dollars we are talking about or the technology to make that happen and to allow that, including the equipment that they have available to them. Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take any rocket scientist to know that if you have a lot of money, you can buy the best of everything including the best of lawyers and everything else.

So I repeat myself, I commend the Commissioner of Police and all policemen and members of the Police Department and Customs as well.

Sometimes we find that the Immigration Board and the Immigration Department take so much of a beating that we have to say thank God for all of them. They are trying their best to deal with all matters. When we just visualise the growth in this country over the last ten years and how they have been able to cope. . . and I am talking about Immigration and Customs now. It is quite phenomenal. Perhaps the many members of the public and to some extent it just seems to go on, it just seems to operationally move on and deal with what comes up and, quite frankly, deal with it effectively.

All right, there is always a one-off case that I don't agree with or you don't agree with. But even in our own family these things happen. A member does something that you are not happy with. So we shouldn't be so studded when in a public place, in a public organisation whether it is Customs or Immigration, someone does something that you are not happy with. Well, let's report it to the Director, let's report it to the Head of Department and let him deal with him because if you don't point out the weakness in the system then perhaps they don't get corrected. And then we just complain, and we complain, and we mumble among ourselves, and then nothing happens because you didn't report it to the proper source to get it corrected.

I want to say that when we talk about the financial reforms in this country and I remember it from when they were doing it by hand. Then we moved on to bookkeeping machines and then sometime around 1979 – 1981, we brought along computers. The first computer we bought was really to produce straight statistics and we barely got it in place. We got the first trade statistics produced and all of a sudden everybody else wanted to use the computer. So that the computer then became not adequate to deal with this great demand. And we constantly changed it in order to provide the service and to create the word that is used now ("reform") to take the system further along to ensure that the tediousness of the job is done by a computer rather than somebody sitting down with pencil and paper.

The budget system in this country is going to be changed. The financial reforms in this country are going to happen. The government is committed and I daresay the members of this Legislative Assembly, all of them, are committed to seeing that change. We know that it is in the best interest of this country in the long term and we also know that the system has taken us far, what's there at the present time.

We know that it was only in the mid 80s that we actually produced the Public Finance and Audit, and the Financial and Stores Regulations. We also know that the budgeting exercise and how the Finance Department has been able to estimate the revenue given that they are looking at it in September or October of one year trying to project the following year, how much is going to be collected. I think they have a track record that is unequalled. And when I think of the Deputy Financial Secretary and his involvement in the budget . . . if you look for 1992 coming forward, they are very much on target every year.

So I think that system of estimation has worked well and obviously any improvement in technology is only going to make it better. When you can estimate an entire year and come within 97% or 98%, or in four years be in the 100% range, it has got to be good. This is not easy because remember that the whole situation in the Cayman Islands is seriously affected by external forces. So all of that has to be borne in mind when trying to deal with revenue estimates.

Quite frankly, I will put the Deputy Financial Secretary's estimation up against anybody in any part of the world doing estimates. I just thought he deserved those comments so I wanted to make them.

I just want too just to quote a few more statistics, if I may. When we look at the tourism arrivals in this country and really we need to quote what we are responsible for:

- In 1992, 241,800 visitors came to our shores;
- By 1993, it was over 287,000; and
- By 1994, it was 341,00; and
- By 1995, it moved to 361,000;
- 1996, it was 373,000;
- 1997, it was 381,000; and

Last year we passed the 400,000 mark, 404,000. That record was done by hard work, by tourism representatives around the world, by the Tourism Headquarters here in Grand Cayman, by the local partners in Grand Cayman and by a variety of travel agents and wholesalers who do business in Cayman but are also friends of the Cayman Islands.

We know that tourism is a major contributor because visitors move all over the island spending money. It is not just the hotels that are affected, or taxis, or water sports, or duty free shops. There are restaurants. There are the supermarkets among other kinds of services that they pay for.

We saw this figure move from $253M in 1990 to $381M in 1997. While the cruise visitors contribution moved from $14M . . . and they don't have the figure for 1997 but in 1996 it was $31M, we can see the benefit of that money being spent all over this country.

We also know that the first two weeks or so of January are traditionally soft. Always have been. We know too in recent times that there was a major American Airline strike. It doesn't take Einstein to figure out that all of us are going to be affected. If we read the Caymanian Compass, we find that Bermuda is down by about 12% and many of the other jurisdictions in the Caribbean are affected. But I heard all sorts of quotations about business being down by 40%. My figures don't say so. The air arrivals figure doesn't say any 40% reduction, so I don't know where these figures are coming from.

I always try to be open. When we compare 1998, January – February, we had total arrivals of a bit over 72,000. When we compare 1999, we had a bit over 70,000 so the difference is about 1,800 people. No way can you calculate that and make that 40%. I am not saying that the business is not flat. I am not saying that at all. I am saying that the percentage is not correct. That's what I am saying based on the information I have.

We are committed to action but we need to understand fully where the problem is before we start spending money. Sometimes there are attempts to just throw money at something without fully understanding what the problem is. That I do not propose to do, Mr. Speaker. I propose to sit down and discuss it with members of the business committee and to reach a solution where they play their part and I play mine. Not mine personally but I am talking about my responsibility as the Minister of Tourism.

It is that partnership that has helped us to grow tourism in this country, and it is the answer whenever we believe that there is a need to act. But there really is in my estimation no need for us to panic given the figures I see produced by the Immigration Department. These figures come from the immigration forms that are filled out as the passenger comes to the Cayman Islands, so I think it is accurate. I know in the past when we got into these situations some people said, 'Well, you cannot count the people coming from Jamaica because they don't stay in hotels or condominiums.' That's true, I am not trying to. I believe I understand tourism. And I believe if an answer can be found with the private sector, with the Department of Tourism, with the ministry, we will find it and we are committed to finding it.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister if you are going to a new point this might be a convenient time to take the morning break.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.44 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.22 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate continues on the Throne Speech. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works continuing.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes when you take the break you have a different thought so before I leave the subject of tourism, I would just like to make a few comments and maybe just to revisit the statistical abstract and just to see where we have come from with cruise passengers.

According to this, there was none in 1970; and then by 1975, there was about 22,000; by 1995, it was approximately 259,000; by 1992, it was 613,000 cruise ship passengers which remains somewhat close to the 600,000 mark during 1993 and 1994. And then in 1995, it increased to approximately 683,000 visitors. In 1996 and 1997, it moved on to 771,865.

I have already mentioned the contribution of cruise visitors to the Cayman Islands in terms of the amount of money they spend in this country. One thing I think is worthy of mention just to give an overall appreciation of the cruise lines. Someone sent me an article which was in the New York Times. The date is February 19th, and the title is, "Cruise lines profit from friends in Congress."

The media begins by saying: "The world's largest cruise company, Carnival Corporation earned [and I am reading it, Mr. Speaker] $2B in profits over the last three years. But the company with headquarters here in multi-storey in Carnival Place [which is Miami] paid less than 1% in income taxes even though its earning exceeding those of many Fortune 500 Companies."

"Royal Caribbean Cruises, the second largest cruise company whose headquarters overlook the port of Miami reported profits of $657M over the same period. Its financial statements do not even include a line for income taxes. Doing business under a decade old loophole in the federal tax and protected by an increasingly powerful lobbying force, the seventeen major cruise lines pay practically no income tax even though they are based in the country and 90% of their passengers are from with United States."

This article also talked about the big spending on lobbying which is done by the cruise line. Just to read this one paragraph, "There has never been a serious effort to alter the tax rules and the industry has developed an effective lobbying presence in Washington to protect its interest." I found this article rather educating. I think anyone who reads this article would have a real appreciation for the cruise business and the magnitude of that operation.

I was on the Internet the other night and I found another article written by The Associated Press, Sunday, March 7th, by a person named Dan Perry. I will just read a few paragraphs from it, Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence.

"The gargantuan cruise ship tied up in the port of Charlotte, Amelia, U.S. Virgin Islands dwarfs the old Danish style buildings along the waterfront. The gleaming floating city is steaming with many tourists out for fun and frolic, but will they spend their money here? Some leave the ship to venture ashore. Emerging from the ship's long shadow they squint in the Caribbean sun, adjust their visors and proceed to the shops and cafes. A tee-shirt and maybe a cheap watch and later it is back to ship to dine and dance and gamble and wake up the next morning in another port.

" 'It's home away from home,' said Mark Fish, a computer analyst in his 40s from Anchorage, Alaska. 'Touring by cruise ship,' he says, 'means less hassle and is less expensive than flying and paying for hotels.'

"Increasingly this is the Caribbean traveller and in the cash-strapped U.S. Virgin Islands, there is growing concern about the dwindling number of tourists who actually stay in hotels, eat in restaurants, rent cars and ride in cabs. The number of overnight visitors to the U.S. territory has fallen from 555,000 in 1988 to 410,000 last year, a decline of 26%.

"During the same period the number of annual arrivals aboard cruise ships shot up by half to 1.6 million."

This is also a very enlightening article, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I can lay both of them on the Table so every member will be able to have a copy. I think it is useful to be knowledgeable by reading what's included in these articles.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Sometimes we take decisions with information such as that and all of us who run across these articles, I think, should share them for the benefit of us all and for the benefit of the country.

I found another article, which to some extent deals with the other type of traveller. I got it off the CNN Travel on the Internet. It is entitled, "Disgruntled air traveller wins friends in Congress Administration, Senate holding hearings, airlines respond." The article was actually written in Washington and I think it was The Associated Press.

This is the way the article begins, "First there were mechanical problems at Denver, then the misconnection at Houston. An employee strike passengers weren't told about. A detour to Miami Super Bowl weekend without help in getting a hotel, a switch of airline to Grand Cayman, and adding injury to insult, lost baggage for which the original airline agreed to pay only $604." This article I would lay on the Table because I think all the information of this kind is useful.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you very much, sir.

We know about the American Airlines strike, among other things, and we don't need to go over that ground again.

I wish now to perhaps move from the beginning straight towards the end of what I have to say not to say that there is not something in between but I wanted to speak a little bit about Public Works. I want to ensure the public that we are trying our best to give advance notice to the public of the work that Public Works may be carrying out. We are also trying our best to ensure that work does not come at peak times when we can afford doing so.

The public relations part of it, we will (I am being a little bit repetitive but deliberately) try our best to keep the public informed on all aspects of Public Works work and especially on roads where we will be working and when. I would say to the public, stay tuned to Radio Cayman, the Caymanian Compass, and Cayman 27 News for more information. Those are the sources or areas of the media that we will use.

I want to also thank His Excellency the Governor and Mrs. Owen publicly for allowing us to use the facility of Government House to do the Long Service Awards to members of Public Works who served for twenty or more years. Actually, I didn't know it myself but there is a person working at Public Works that joined when Public Works was across the street in that little building across from CIBC in the old Public Works compound, a gentleman by the name of Alfred Jackson. For thirty-nine years he has been there. What a commitment to the Government! Imagine the changes he has witnessed, not just in Public Works but throughout the island on the whole.

I was indeed pleased that we could honour persons who have made significant contributions to this country. Now, if he joined back then we know that he fought mosquitoes while he was trying to do his job during the day and we know too that in some cases the equipment that we see around today was not evident at that time. Although, I said it personally to His Excellency I wanted to publicly thank him for allowing us (he and Mrs. Owen) to use Government House for that purpose.

I offer public congratulations to those persons who were honoured. If I tried to count them all up. I think it was in the range of 22 – 25 persons that were actually honoured that evening, in different areas of Public Works.

I want to just touch a little bit on the Smith Road and Bob Thompson Way intersection. I want to say congratulations to Public Works for what I would say is a job well done. When we look at what we have and when we realise this was done from expertise within Public Works, it is time to take off our hat and say, 'You have done us proud.' I believe they have.

Now, I know that the First Elected Member for West Bay questioned whether we should have done a roundabout. I think he was genuine in his question. The solution to a smooth traffic flow at every intersection, I am sure he will appreciate as well, is not always a roundabout. The traffic at each intersection . . . and I am saying this after having talked to some of the specialists that we have in Public Works. The traffic at each intersection must be carefully examined and a solution decided. It was to construct and install a system of traffic lights as well as a series of left turns, rights-of-way.

The First Elected Member for West Bay, I understand was told by a lady (who I believe is from the eastern district) that the intersection was not functioning properly and that the system was not working. I feel pretty sure that he was told that. But I took the time yesterday morning because I always try to verify whether my belief is correct or not. I took the time yesterday morning to be at the intersection from 8:00 a.m. to see for myself how the intersection and the traffic system was working. I was there up to probably 8:25 a.m. maybe closer to 8:30 a.m. What I saw, was a smooth flow through the intersection—cars and trucks coming from the east, the west, the north; and cars and trucks and buses coming from the south.

Quite frankly, there were so many vehicles at that intersection that I could not physically count them and be accurate in my count. The only slow down that I witnessed was caused by Public Works working on the shoulder of the road near the Credit Union Building. And you know how we are, Mr. Speaker, we want to look to see what they are doing. I am guilty of it sometimes myself. So in that process when you do that you generally slow down. So there was a little bit of a slower movement but never at a stop.

The Bob Thompson and Smith Road intersection between 7:30 a.m. – 8:45 a.m. in the morning, Public Works estimates 2,500 vehicles pass through it, and 2,200 between 4:30 p.m. and 4:45 p.m. So if that is the estimate and that intersection is not working properly, let me tell you, we are going to all know real quick. So the lady from the eastern district needs to go out there and examine it for herself and don't listen to anybody else because the information she is giving others is not accurate.

Work has also commenced on the re-alignment of Smith Road and Crewe Road to bring the full, smooth flow of traffic to Smith Road, especially going towards Bodden Town and this will take about three weeks to complete. Those who have passed by it do see some activity and some loss of grass and they are dealing with those little islands. I call them traffic islands. They are dealing with those in order to create the lanes to allow this to happen.

This work will take about three weeks to complete. As I mentioned earlier, this work starts at 9:00 a.m. in the morning and stops at 4:00 p.m. to provide the minimum of interruption to the traffic flow.

I believe it is appropriate too to thank the Lions Club for their work. I believe if my information is correct they are the ones who assisted with those traffic islands at the junction of Smith Road and Crewe Road. I want to say to them how much I appreciate not only that work but the serious contribution that they have made to the community of the Cayman Islands ever since they were chartered here, which I think dates back to the early 70's.

The traffic on Crewe Road . . . and I would go on to say that I might have an interest there as they have awarded me an honorary Lion so I have to tell you that is the case as well. But my comments are as genuine today as there is sunlight outside.

The traffic on Crewe Road going towards Bodden Town after this re-alignment is done will simply merge with the traffic coming up Smith Road without stopping. There will be additional space for more lanes in the Jose's Esso [Gas Station] area of Crewe Road to allow the merging of traffic to take place. We will provide more information through the press on these matters to assist and help to educate the public on this movement.

The other item I wish to come to is that my ministry has requested the Public Works in 1999 to begin a National Roads Plan. We have the blessing of Executive Council. The estimate for the work to actually put together a National Road Plan will take some time. But it is important that we begin the process. I know this is another item that has been talked about for some time.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: If there was one, I did not find it and I don't think the Third Elected Member — no, I should say that!

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: No, no, no, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to remain as neutral and fair as I possibly can so I am not going to entertain some of the comments that are coming at me. [Laughter]

It is estimated that this National Roads Plan will cost in the area of about $80,000 and with the agreement of the members across the floor I will say that we will propose to them that the money be taken from the 1999 capital development budget for roads. I think we can find the money there rather than increasing the budget any further.

We have dealt with the terms of reference for this exercise, we have actually formulated the planning process for the proposed National Road Plan. Public Works Road Section proposes to co-ordinate the preparation of this National Roads Plan. We also a schematic that looks at the two committees that need to be established to deal with it.

The traffic and transportation engineering at Public Works will split time. In addition to the engineer, additional support will be required such as engineering aides to assist with data collection and studies as well as clerical support. The amount of time required to carry out the study and prepare the National Road Plan will depend greatly on the priority that the exercise is given.

It is estimated that we could accomplish this between twelve to eighteen months. It may flow faster than that or it may flow slower than that. We know that when you start talking about corridors, a National Road Plan is difficult to develop unless you know that the corridors are there. So those two processes have really to come together and be synchronised, if I could use that expression. This plan will be compatible with environmental goals and the plan must be acceptable to the majority of the population, the legislative body, the business community, and others who might otherwise be objecting to it.

It is impossible to please all the people all the time, but it is possible to develop a plan that is both adequate and popular. As I mentioned, the plan must be in harmony with the master plan, which in this case is the development plan. Transport facilities must be located such as land use and intensities, and growth rates that the development plan specifies can be achieved. Most of all, this plan must be an affordable plan and the plan should indicate how you implement what phase of the road and when.

I believe that it is time that the government moved on and sought to put in place a National Roads Plan. We have several plans—we have the Health plan, we have the Water Authority plan, we have Agricultural plan, we have the Drug plan, we have the Port plan. So this is not a plan that helps to put us in a position knit it together with the economic situation in this country, and the financial future of this country and indicate then the revenue potential of this country and the capital expenditures that we are proposing in addition to the recurrent expenditures, which deals with the operational cost of the department.

We don't have all the pieces yet. But one of the things I want to mention and give credit to this government for is that the majority of plans that are in place today were done by us.

I want to say that sometimes eels attack the octopus too.

[inaudible interjections and laughter]

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I think I may have made an omission when I was talking about the long service awards. I don't believe I mentioned those employees who were awarded long service or given long service awards in the Department of Vehicles and Equipment Services. I apologise to them for not mentioning it at the same time.

I think the First Elected Member from George Town proposed a question as to whether we are going to computerise the Quantity Surveying Unit or Section of Public Works. And the answer we know is in the positive. But I would like to talk a little bit more about the structuring or re-structuring.

In every department of government there can be improvements. In every one of us there can be improvements. All I am talking about is possible improvements to a particular department. Public Works at the moment, the organisational structure (and I thought I had some material but I don't) is that the Chief Engineer is the Head of the Department. And there are various sections under him. There is the Building Maintenance Section (and these sections stand separate at the moment), there is also a Building Construction Section, which is dealing with construction of new buildings. There is the road section, and the road section is made up of New Road Construction and the Maintenance of Roads as well. There is also the Administration of Public Works, meaning the staff that does the administrative work for the department falling under . . . Well, the whole thing falls under the Chief Engineer but there is also the Quantity Surveying Unit.

We have looked at this, Mr. Speaker, and I must say that while the organisation benefits in the area of roads by having the new road construction and the maintenance of roads under the same person, it is not so with the building section. I think it is absolutely paramount that the building maintenance be under the same head as new building construction.

As we know that building maintenance can be a very important feedback to the building construction. So let me be more specific: The Executive Engineer in charge of roads will be in charge of roads sections, and lets divided the roads now. One section is maintenance, the other section is new construction.

The other Executive Engineer dealing with buildings will be in charge of building construction as well as building maintenance and we know that's Max. We know that, nothing new! What has happened before is that the Works Superintendent was in charge of the Building Maintenance which is . . . in other words, you had two separate units and we are trying to put it together because it is logical, it makes sense to go that direction.

This is not something that I am going to take credit for. I think the process was beginning as I took it over, so the arrangement to have it done was prior to my assuming the responsibility. We had a person who came in and assisted Public Works with the reinvention exercise, a man by the name of Bertram, who hails from the United Kingdom. He came in for a short period of time. I think it was probably a week to ten days, and he made a second visit but I liked his approach. His approach was, 'I am going to try to facilitate the change and let you, the staff of Public Works, cause that change to happen,' and I think as a result (and this is just my overview of it, I guess) he fell right into good company and everything moved on to our expectations so far.

They actually even changed the mission statement but . . . Mr. Speaker, if you wanted to take the break or take the adjournment—

The Speaker: Honourable members, this is a convenient time. It is my understanding that the House will now adjourn and I would entertain a motion for the adjournment.

The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow.

AT 1:02 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM FRIDAY, 19 MARCH 1999.

EDITED

MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have apologies from the Honourable First Official Member who is absent today as he is performing other official duties.

Item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question number 19 standing in the name....

POINT OF PROCEDURE

Mr. Roy Bodden: On a point of procedure, sir, before we proceed with today's business. I just want to call to the attention of the Chair and Honourable colleagues the fact that we seem to be stuck and not going anywhere. This is three weeks now and we still have not finished debating the Throne Speech. I am afraid that the business of the Country is not moving ahead fast enough because somehow it seems that we have lost the ability in the Parliament to manage in such a way that we could even catch up, let alone move ahead.

I am really concerned sir, that significant time is going to pass and we are still going to be in here making it increasingly possible for one Sitting to run into the next. I wish that we could find a way to hasten the business and I call upon you to see if you can guide us, spur us and help us to accelerate in such a way that we can put this agenda behind us and complete the business at hand within a reasonable time, sir.

The Speaker: I would like to say that I thank the Honourable Third Elected Member for Bodden Town for his comments and I call to your attention that it is now almost 10.25 a.m. I have been sitting in my office from before 9.00 this morning awaiting the opening of this Legislature.

So, as far as the Chair is concerned, I do not assume responsibility for that. I would ask all Honourable Members to let us heed what the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town has just said and let us attempt to move forward.

Does any other Member wish to comment? The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman Bodden: Mr. Speaker, only to say that we have been saying this now for many, many months. I think this is the fourth month that we have been here and it is going to take the joint effort of this whole House to try to curb the length of time that we speak. In fact, the Government Ministries, when you are out of anything for four months, are really hurting and the public is obviously getting upset at times when not being able to reach us. I am sure the same thing is happening with the Back-bench because I am sure that they are having their constituents calling in when we are sitting here. So, it has to be a joint effort by all of us.

I hope sir, when the Standing Orders Committee reports back that there will be something in that that can try to take us forward to a reasonable period of time.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I would not agree that it has to do with the length of time that we use speaking. As you rightly pointed out, it was 10.25 am before we began. That alone, sir, is where the time is going. I mean, we are procrastinating. My mother, God bless her soul, used to tell me that procrastination is the thief of time. We never seem to begin on time and you told us about the long breaks that we take. That, Mr. Speaker, is where I respectfully submit that the time is going.

We break for 15 minutes as you tell us and yet it takes half of an hour or 45 minutes before we return. We need, as you rightly pointed out, to exercise more self-discipline among ourselves in the breaks that we take and to ensure that we begin on time. I am not suggesting that any Honourable Member be called upon to curtail the length of his speech. I say we need to begin by adhering more rigidly to the times you give us for breaks and to ensure that we begin the sittings as they are required in the Standing Orders to be begun, sir.

The Speaker: Moving on to item number 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question number 19 is standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 19

No. 19: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economic Development if the Government is considering any initiatives towards widening its revenue base?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: As stated in the response to the Budget debate, the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development has been mandated by the Economic and Statistics Office to undertake an examination of the structure of revenue generation in the Cayman Island. Government will formulate an appropriate Revenue Policy on the results of this overall investigation.

The Policy will outline the ways in which Government intends to generate an adequate and reasonably stable source of revenue to meet the needs of the foreseeable future.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Honourable Third Official Member state if this examination is underway or has it not started yet?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: It is underway conceptually, Mr. Speaker. The Economics and Statistics Office has developed their work programme for the year 1999, and this is being submitted for consideration by Executive Council. There will be focus placed on four areas: One will be capital development; the second, revenue; the third, debt structure; and the fourth, recurrent expenditure. That is very much underway and will materialise in 1999.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Honourable Third Official Member state if there are any terms of reference which have been developed for this examination to take place? In other words, will the Economics and Statistics [Office] be given specific terms of reference or is it something that they are going to be examining on a very broad basis?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The terms of reference will be embraced within policy papers that will be put forward for consideration. The Government will be invited to comment on the policy initiatives that are outlined and this will encompass the terms of reference. What will be put forward for consideration will seek agreement by the Government.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Are these initiatives coming from the Economics and Statistics Unit, or will they be coming from the Third Official Member's portfolio?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: They will be coming from the Economic and Statistics Office through the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development. The reason for this is that whatever is being put forward as a policy initiative must be based on research that is carried out. This research will provide the relevant information to be considered. We will have to go in terms of what emerges out of the air, and I am sure the First Elected Member for George Town appreciates that.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Just to let the Honourable Third Official Member know that I do appreciate that. I just wanted to make sure I understood the sequence of events.

I am trying to understand the process. Once Government approves what is put forward, exactly what will take place after that? Is it something where there is going to be input allowed from elsewhere? Or, once the policy initiative is accepted by the Government, then the Economics and Statistics Unit will go straight into their examination to come up with some type of report on it?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Input will be sought at a very broad level not necessarily in the civil service but also going beyond. What is embraced within this is the emergence of the Medium Term Financial Strategy and the Public Sector Investment Programme the sectorial plans, which will outline the initiatives of the various sectors. The initiative will look at the financing of that which will mean that proper analysis will have to be carried out of existing revenue measures and also potential revenue measures. Also to be embraced within this is research carried to see, for example, where Government is significantly subsidising services that are being provided in given areas.

There is also a proposal that has been put forward for the establishment of a think tank. But that cannot be done until the terms of reference or the policy initiative has been agreed upon. Importantly, what is being done by the Economics and Statistics, the Government will have to ensure that the expertise of that office is not marginalised. Also, when the think tank is set up the terms of reference that is agreed does not result in any overlap that will create confusion in the process. So it will have to be set out what will be done at all levels. This is to ensure synergy in the process.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: I wish to thank the Third Official Member for the way he answered this question because it does give us some hope. I do trust that his portfolio and staff will follow through.

Just a final supplementary in this area: Can the Honourable Third Official Member state if (and I am not asking yes or not) there is any possibility that when this exercise is completed, there may be certain areas that the (for want of a better word) tax being levied now might lessen since it is a possibility that the base might be broaden?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: That possibility exists. That is a very good question posed by the Honourable Member. The decisions to be taken will be based on research. This will point out inequities that exist in given areas and if such inequities exist it will be appropriate for those to be addressed.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Sorry, but the Member's answer just prompted me to give one more supplementary. Is it then fair comment to say that Government accepts the fact that the way that revenue measures are charged now are not done based on any facts but just out of need?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The government accepts that the process needs to be refined and we have known this for some time. This government and other governments have been very prudent in terms of keeping revenue intake to a minimum, but we have now gotten to a stage where we need to look very closely at the sources. We know, for example, there are several areas (and all members of this Legislative Assembly are aware of those areas) where services are being significantly subsidised. And where services are being subsidised it means that the cost will have to be compensated for or the revenue intake from other areas.

So one will have to be looked at as against the other and based on this research and on informed findings then the appropriate decision can be taken in terms of what adjustment and where the adjustment should be made.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, I note from the Honourable Member's answer that a revenue exercise seems to be undertaken by the Economics and Statistics Office of government. This to me is somewhat regrettable in that (and I will turn this into a question) members of the private sector are not allowed to become a part of this group or this committee.

I wonder, in the light of that, whether the Honourable Member could state when the committee that was recommended for the think tank will be established and what will basically be the terms of reference for that committee since in fact it seems that this exercise is now already being done by the Economics and Statistics Office?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Firstly, let me say that I don't think the Honourable Third Elected Member for George Town heard me correctly. I did not say that the exercise will not include input from the private sector. Because of the fact that we have a department established one must appreciate that this department has emerged as the expertise to carry out research. Any think tank group that is going to be set up must be given appropriate terms of reference and it is necessary for a proper analysis to be done in order for an appraisal to be made as to the current situation as it exists within the different revenue areas of government.

When this is done and the policy initiative is put to Executive Council for consideration, it is likely that a part of that policy initiative will make recommendations for consultation to be carried out at appropriate levels, which will mean the private sector. It could also mean in terms of the setting up of the think tank group as to how this should be structured. But it must be carefully considered to ensure that all areas work in tandem.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: It is not my intention to lock horns with the Honourable Financial Secretary, the Third Official Member. But I believe if there is a misunderstanding it is with him—not with me—because his answer states here . . . and the question was, "Is the Government considering any initiatives towards widening its revenue base?" His answer was "As stated in the response to the budget debate, the Portfolio of Finance and Economic Development has been mandated to undertake an examination by the Economics and Statistics Office of the structure of revenue generation in the Cayman Islands. Government will formulate an appropriate Revenue Policy on the results of this overall investigation." No mention has been made here of the think tank or of any involvement of the private sector.

My question again to the Honourable Member is: Is there any intention to really set up a think tank and if so who will comprise that committee?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I appreciate the fact that the Third Elected Member [for George Town] agreed that it would not be advisable for us to lock horns on this issue.

As mentioned in the question, on the response to the question, once the appropriate revenue policy has been established this will embrace the structure of the think tank component in terms of the way forward. What is outlined here is the groundwork. At this point in time, one cannot say, for example, who the members of the think tank will be. A recommendation has been made by an Honourable Member of this Legislative Assembly, the name of that person is presently with me in my office. We will have to look very carefully in terms of the policy position that emerges on this.

It will not benefit anyone or the government (which includes myself and all members of the Legislative Assembly) to take an intransigent position in terms of not inviting or embracing the expertise of those person who can make a contribution. A proper analysis must be carried out on the revenue structure before we move forward on this because unless this is done we will have individuals sitting down with the best intentions in the world working off the basis of incomplete information.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Mr. Speaker, I will not protract this discussion because it is my intention to speak in more length on this during my Throne Speech debate, but the Honourable Member said that basically nothing has been done about the think tank. Would he confirm that he has really not made any effort to make an appointment of members to the think tank as yet for whatever reason? Basically, nothing has been done.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I think the Third Elected Member must recognise that it is not the intent that the think tank should not be set up. It is not a question of nothing being done. It involves a process that involves different stages in the process. At this point in time, for example, to call members into my office, or to agree, or to seek appointments to visit with them and to just talk broadly that the government would be very grateful if they would agree to participate as a member of a think tank group without having specific terms of reference and knowing exactly what will be done, at what level and what their input will embrace, I do not think this will allow for the members to give the appropriate and full consideration of what they are being invited to participate in.

This is a process. And the process has started. And at a point in time very soon in the process—as soon as the policy paper emerges that will set up the process for the review of the structure—this is where the think tank component of this exercise will be considered.

The Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries? If not, question number 20 is standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTION 20

No. 20: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Third Official Member responsible for Finance and Economics Development if the government has developed a firm policy regarding annual contributions to the General Reserves.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The Government has a continuing policy in place to build up the general reserves to represent three months of recurrent expenditure. In pursuit of this policy each year, the government includes an annual contribution as a line item in the Budget. In addition, additional contributions are being made to the general reserves, where an annual surplus permits, as is the case for 1998 where an additional sum of $2M will be contributed over and above the sum of $1M that was budgeted.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Might it not be a better situation if a fixed figure was involved in the policy? If it is so important to get to the level of having three months of recurrent expenditure in the general reserves might it not be better to have a fixed sum which is supposed to be a line item in the budget annually and whatever else works around that, rather than going the other route of saying if and when you can?

In other words, I heard what the policy is, I am just wondering if the Third Official Member might not consider that the policy might be better if it is more rigid and fixed rather than a bit loose the way it is?

The Speaker: Are you asking him for his opinion or a policy?

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, whoever creates the policy . . . he represents the government at this point in time regarding the policy. I am not asking him for his personal opinion, sir.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The First Elected Member for George Town is right in terms of a fixed figure. A fixed figure currently exists. But this sum is a very small amount. In response to earlier answers provided in this Legislative Assembly, it was indicated in terms of streamlining or a part of the financial reform review exercise will look in terms of the allocation of revenue. Ideally, a given percentage of revenue should be allocated to the general reserve—a given percentage to fund capital expenditure and a given percentage to recurrent and statutory. What we are doing is what could be described at this point in time as a creeping exercise recognising that there is a commitment or there are benefits to be derived in terms of having a nest egg established, which is the general reserves.

The level of revenue that is being generated at this point in time does not allow for large lump sum payments to be made into that fund. There is a commitment on the part of government to put in place an established policy and this will be included in the financial legislation that will emerge under the financial reform exercise.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: In view of the three months of recurrent revenue that has been established by government based on, I think it was the recommendation of Public Accounts Committee, three months of recurrent revenue which I believe based on this year's budget is something between $50M - $60M, can the Honourable Member state what the present balance is on the general reserve and what period of time that represents?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Mr. Speaker, the balance on general reserves as at 31st December is $10.5M. But Honourable members will recall that when the out turn for the year 1998 was presented, it was indicated that a future $2M from the surplus would be put into this account. Therefore, this will be included for consideration and approval on the next agenda of Finance Committee.

This will bring it up to $12.5M. When the $1M that included for 1999 is added it takes it up to $13.5M. Based on this, on the strict $10.5M as it now stands excluding the $2M to be further transferred this amounts to about 19 days of recurrent expenditure.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: We just heard that the revenue reserves of this country are less than three weeks when in fact it should be three months. Would the Honourable Third Official Member say whether it is realistic for government to pursue a policy of trying to reach the three-month level of recurrent expenditure?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Government may be some time away from achieving that target but ideally, I think it is one that should be met.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Would the Honourable Member not agree that in view of the economic boom in these islands that the balance on general reserves reflects very negatively on the stewardship of government?

The Speaker: I think you are asking him for an opinion. That is not allowed.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you so much. I will rephrase that question. Would the Honourable Member not agree that three weeks' reserves—when in fact it should be more like three months—reflects negatively on the government and that government should do more to bring this up to the required standard?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member. You may answer or you may not. It is left to you.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The Honourable Third Elected Member for George Town has put me in an invidious position and I am sure that he would not expect me to provide him with a response based on the question as outlined. But, as I indicated earlier, government is aware of the need to bring the general reserve balance up to a level representing three months of recurrent expenditure. Efforts are underway in the reform initiatives to achieve this.

What is important at this point in time is that there is recognition that a deficiency exists in terms of this reserve balance and attempts are being made to correct that deficiency.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The Honourable Third Official Member has just stated that measures are being undertaken to correct this deficiency in the reform initiatives. I know that it might well be difficult to give very exact timing on this, but based on the experiences now with the initiatives going on can the Honourable Third Official Member state what kind of timeline we might be looking at before such a policy comes into effect? And if, in fact, it might be possible to effect the policy regarding general reserves even if it takes a bit longer for the reform initiatives to come on line? Or do they have to go together?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: They have to go together. The reason being is that the reform initiative embraces the emergence of the medium term financial strategy. We are looking in terms of the macro economic management of government. This is what this document will outline in terms of the financing, revenue generation. We are looking in terms of the public sector investment programme. We are looking at the emergence of legislation. This is what I would call the primary stage, and all of the conceptual issues to be addressed or what will have to be enshrined in terms of policy initiatives to be implemented will have to be considered at that point.

Therefore, in terms of bringing the balance up to the required three-month level will not be achieved immediately. But if it is outlined that a specific part must be pursued in order to attain it, it will have to be done.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Just a final supplementary. Can the Honourable Third Official Member state if during the interim government might consider, while still dealing with during the budget preparation process, applying more funds to the general reserves even if it is a $1M more rather than fix it at the $1M that has been for several years now? $1M compared to 19 days worth of reserves and three months might seem to be nothing. I just wish to see more commitment on the part of the government.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: That is a very reasonable suggestion that has been advanced, and one that will be recommended to the government for the year 2000 in preparing the budget. What the government is considering is first of all, whatever lump sum of money has become available that this be put into the general reserves. But, ideally, it is to fix the contribution of the general reserve to represent 2% of general revenue. Once the three months balance has been achieved, that will be adjusted annually to make sure that the fund represents three months of recurrent expenditure.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town. Two additional supplementaries is all I can allow.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I only need one, sir. Maybe someone else will use up that other one.

Can the Honourable Third Official Member state if while all of the initiatives are taking place and this gradual build-up of general reserves is happening, will it be part of government policy whereby these general reserves which are totally different from all the other reserve funds (in my view, anyway) will be used as leverage for any government borrowings?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: That is possible. But just as how the reserves for the currency management of the country is now segregated, as such, prudence will also suggest that these funds be segregated, which is being done. When they are segregated, I am not sure whether it would be advisable to allow for the flexibility to be built in where these funds . . . because in effect to use them to leverage better, let's say, interest rates in effect would mean having to commit or pledge the funds as such. These are issues that will have to be visited at a point in the future.

But what is also happening at this time is that less than a month ago we had a visit from Caribbean Development Bank. Their senior economist, together with other persons, visited the Cayman Islands. Specifically they came here to look in terms of the funding needs of the Port Authority, but the opportunity was taken at that time to look in terms of the lending arrangements of the bank. We know that they have now gotten away from the concept in terms of multiple currencies. We know that monies are being lent over a longer period of time with a reasonable grace period. All of these factors are being considered and will have to be looked at so that the debt management or the repayment against the indebtedness does not become an onerous burden, as such, and this will be considered.

So emerging out of that . . . and at this point in time I must say that the local banks provide to the government very favourable rates. It is normally 1% to 1.5% over LIBOR, and this is very favourable. That compares with some of the best rates that we could get from Caribbean Development Bank.

The Speaker: Final supplementary, the First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It seems no one else wants to use it up so I will. Can the Honourable Third Official Member state if at present the general reserves held by the government are simply held in an account?

Let me try and explain what I am asking for. In a previous supplementary, the Member compared the general reserves with the funds held by the Monetary Authority. I am just wondering if there is any method of investing to get returns on those reserves or is it just put into an account and it stays there? I am trying to understand how it is used to generate more income for itself.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: That account is segregated from the general fund account of government. These monies are invested over the medium to long term to achieve the most favourable interest rate or return—fixed deposits and bonds.

The Speaker: Moving on to question number 21 standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

But before we do that, I would ask under Standing Order 86 that we have a motion to suspend Standing Order 23 (7) & (8) so that Question Time can go beyond 11:00 am. The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8)

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I so move that the relevant Standing Orders be suspended, that we can take the questions that are on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Thank you. I shall put the question: Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. Question Time continues.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8) SUSPENDED.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town, question number 21.

QUESTION 21

No. 21: Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources (a) if the Water Authority has any future plans for expansion and/or capital development; and (b) what period of time does it span?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes, the Water Authority has detailed plans for the maintenance, expansion and development of the public water supply and public wastewater collection and treatment systems in the Cayman Islands. These plans are detailed in a document entitled a "Ten Year Plan for the Development of Water and Sewerage Works November 1995 (Revised September 1996)" which was adopted by the Water Authority Board in October 1996.

The Plan includes the period from 1996 through 2005.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state if this plan has been available to members of the Legislative Assembly thus far?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: No, this has not been made available.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Bearing in mind that the members of the Legislative Assembly have to deal at some points in time with either guarantees or such the like for the Water Authority (through one method or the other including Finance Committee) might the minister consider it appropriate to allow members access to this so that they can be kept up to date with the Water Authority's plans? And, also, can the minister say if there was any specific reason why the plan was not made available to members thus far?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I have no problem making it available. There was no request for it so that is why it was not done before. But I have no problem making it available.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the minister state if there is any specific policy by way of methodology that the authority has developed when it comes to the financial arrangements for the expansion and the other necessary works included in this plan?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: The funding of projects for the Water Authority has so far been done in-house and with the authority of the Board. So we have been trying to do it through the recurrent revenue.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Let me go down a different lane. I understand what has taken place thus far. This plan includes future works, I would assume that this plan (because I have not seen it) will include timeframes for certain goals and achievements with regard to the expansion programme and maintenance and whatever else. I am asking if parallel to that is the means by which all of these expansion works and maintenance works and whatever else has to be done will be financed. There has to be some methodology.

I am certain that if there are goals and objectives the plan must have the ways and means by which financing would be achieved. That is what I am seeking to find out.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: It is my understanding that between 1996 and through 2005 we will definitely have to do some financing on the projects.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: Can the Minister state if the way in which government has been dealing in the recent past with requesting monies, from specifically the Water Authority, at the end of the year does not impede the means by which this financing can be achieved if it is going to be handled by the Water Authority on its own?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I certainly would agree with that if it was that government was not prepared to act as they usually do with guarantees to the Authority. But as the Member is aware, the Authority is an arm of government. And if funds are paid into the general revenue, and funds are needed for future development of the Water Authority then government's responsibility would be to act in the normal way of guaranteeing the necessary loans that would be needed.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: The minister is saying (if I understand him correctly) that if the Water Authority is made to hand over funds they might have in reserve to organise themselves in their expansion programme to government then when they need to do this expansion they have to borrow and then government will find itself being responsible by way of guaranteeing such funds. If my understanding is correct (such borrowings, that is) can the minister then state (and this is not an opinion I am asking for) if it is not fair comment to say that all the government is doing is having the Water Authority borrow money in its name and guaranteeing it rather than government borrow the money in its own name?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I heard what the member has said, but I have to defer a little bit because I think it is asking for my opinion with regard to government actually receiving the funds from the Water Authority and in turn the Water Authority goes ahead and borrows. As far as I am concerned, like all other authorities under the law that governs them at the end of the year, it is my understanding, that they have to turn in a certain amount of revenue or reserve cash to the Treasury.

I believe this is what has happened in this case. The Water Authority was called upon to make its contribution. I am sure I am correct in saying that if the contribution was made and other funds were needed by the Water Authority, definitely the Water Authority would have to liaise with Government and have a guarantee put in place.

The Speaker: Do you still have a follow-up? First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D. Kurt Tibbetts: This is in my view, sir, is a most important topic and my intention is not to try to embarrass anyone but it is something that has been going on. While the minister has mentioned about what the law states with the various authorities and funds being taken, it is my understanding that there is no fixed arrangement with these authorities regarding how much money is requested of them on an annual basis. Meaning that whatever is supposed to be a fixed arrangement, it varies from occasion to occasion.

The question is this: How can the government expect an entity such as the Water Authority to function properly and be able to plan its future—which is the whole purpose of it being an authority? While being an agency of government or an arm of government there is a certain amount of autonomy, my understanding is that that is the reason why these entities were made into authorities. How can they be expected to function if government is going to put them in a lame duck situation in this manner and continue to do so?

Now, again this is the second time, the minister might say to me that I am asking him for an opinion. I am not asking for an opinion! I want to know what is the situation. How can the government be saying that they should function and make their own plans? They are happy to hear the Water Authority is providing service for the Cayman Islands, they are moving on into the outer districts to provide well needed services but at the same time they are hampering them. By taking funds from them to balance their budget annually—that is, the Government's budget annually—the government is causing these authorities (specifically in this instance, the Water Authority) not to be able to deal with their future plans in the way that they should be able to.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I heard the First Elected Member from George Town. But I am sure he is aware that such a decision was not taken by me. It was taken at Executive Council level. I am aware of what you are saying.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. John B. McLean: I cannot tell you what...

Mr. Speaker, I am not one that likes to talk across the floor. But the fact remains, as everyone in here who has actually sat on Executive Council well knows, it is impossible for me to divulge matters that have been handled in Executive Council. My responsibility is for the Water Authority, and if a directive is given from the Executive Council to me as minister responsible for the Authority, I have no alternative but to carry it out. I cannot at this time say more than what I have said in regard to that matter.

The Speaker: The Member from North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is along a different line. Seeing that the district of North Side will be the last district to receive water, I wonder if the Honourable Minister could say if in the ten-year plan there is any testing of the water in that district being used by the public and the hotel industry?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. The testing of water actually falls under the Department of Environmental Health. From the Water Authority we don't really do testing like the Member for North Side is speaking of, but I am certain that they probably test all over the island.

The Speaker: The Member from North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I thank the Honourable Minister for his reply. But I wonder if the minister could say who is responsible for providing safe water to the residents of the Cayman Islands?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Safe water for the Cayman Islands—water that is produced by the Water Authority—definitely, we have to be sure that all aspects of that water are safe for the persons who will be actually utilising the facility. That is as much as I can tell the Member for North Side. We have a lot of water that is imported and I don't think that anybody actually looks after that. But we try our best with what is produced by the Water Authority to make sure that is safe for the people of this country.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town, supplementary.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, this supplementary brings us back to a supplementary that was asked by the First Elected Member for George Town.

In recreating a strategy for the Water Authority which would emphasise their concerns with customer satisfaction, lowering of the costs to the customer, can the minister say whether or not the Water Authority has considered the impact borrowing has upon the price that the customer must pay?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: When such a matter is put before the Board all aspects will have to be looked after. That would be one that would definitely have to be looked after, the cost of whatever is going to be produced and, of course, the sale to the populace of this country.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow that up by asking, if this is all taken into account, can the minister say if it is the decision of the Board that the customer must pay more if the Water Authority must constantly borrow and therefore pay interest on the money which it is using?

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Environment, Communications and Works.

Hon. John B. McLean: The Board has not taken a decision on what the member is asking thus far, because the fact remains that his question actually came from what we were discussing with regard to the contribution from the Water Authority to government. We held a meeting just a few days ago and no such matter came up. However, when it does come up we will definitely deal with it and the result of the discussions will be passed on back to government.

The Speaker: Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I would just like the minister to give an undertaking to ask the Board of the Water Authority and the government jointly to take seriously into consideration the extra cost which the public must incur if the monies which are spent to extend services are borrowed rather than accumulated as a result of the profits which the Water Authority earns.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: The concerns that have been aired here this morning with regard to this question will be forwarded to the government and Executive Council and I am certain that the necessary action will be taken with regard to all of the concerns that have been put forward.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries, that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Honourable members its been called to my attention that there is a luncheon for the Governor Owen Awards at 12.00 and it was the intention of this House to adjourn at 11.30. So, I would now entertain a motion of the adjournment of this Honourable House.

I would like to further say that I would suggest that we simply suspend and come back . . . I think the luncheon should be over, and we could come back at 2.30 p.m., if that is the wish of the House. Certainly, we should have ample time.

In that case I will just suspend the House until 2:30 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.25 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 3.06 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works continuing his debate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED
BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR
ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we adjourned yesterday, I was dealing with the restructuring of Public Works, which had received the blessing of Executive Council. We also talked about a series of things that would happen in this restructuring. Another element of this is that even the mission statement for the department will be changed.

At the moment, the mission statement is, “To provide the Cayman Islands with the appropriate public buildings and public roads in a cost effective manner.” That is due to be changed to a mission statement that reads, “To support the Cayman Islands provision of public infrastructure through the most efficient, imaginative, and cost-effective management in the design, construction and maintenance of public facilities and roads.”

I made mention of the input that Mr. Bertram, the consultant, had given to Public Works in its reinvention exercise. He paid two visits to us of approximately one week long, and I did indicate my reaction to his approach to be the facilitator rather than the person who implements or decides what happens. I think as a result, the Public Works senior and junior staff have taken on the entire exercise of reinvention with some amount of urgency.

I pointed out that the organisational structure of Public Works would be changed. Firstly, the two separate sections dealing with buildings—one dealing with new construction and the other dealing with maintenance of buildings—would be placed under the same executive engineer for buildings. And, also that the administration would be called the “support section” and these services would be the personnel, finance, purchasing and the administration of Public Works which obviously would fall directly under the Chief Engineer.

We also sought the blessing of Executive Council in terms of the conceptualisation of projects. And while those are big words, it really means how we put all these projects together, and who is responsible for that decision from the head of department or ministry’s point of view?

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that ministries have not been involved in policy decisions and capital projects until actually the very end when they have to decide how much money gets spent. Projects are approved in principle through the head of department supplying the brief to the Public Works Department architectural section and who will agree to details of that project in consultation with the architect. This we believe has resulted in an unusually high capital project over the years.

No reflection on the head of department, but we believe that the heads of departments are not sufficiently appraised of their overall goal of the government with respect to capital projects. Consequently, with the how to put together the projects so to speak and what we are going to agree on in putting the projects together. In an effort to try to reduce the cost, Executive Council has agreed that the details of projects and the maximum project cost should be agreed by the relevant ministry and the head of department before the project is referred to the architect for final or detailed drawings.

I think when we look at it historically, Mr. Speaker, what we find is that on many occasions a head of department had an idea, they went to the Public Works Department. The architects began to make a design and sometimes they had more design than they actually could implement, and perhaps it is not the most cost effective way of utilising your architectural staff. What I am saying is that the brief will continue to be supplied by the head of department (being the technical person), but it will be supplied in consultation with the ministry and the Public Works Department and those three parties would more or less agree on it before we spend the tremendous amounts of time doing designs, drawings, and what have you. The ministry will also have to satisfy itself about the ultimate cost of the project before we go to final drawings and run up cost in terms of the manpower for carrying out that service.

That leads me to the planning and design. Once the total details of the projects have been discussed and agreed with Public Works, and the maximum project cost is agreed by the ministry and the head of department, the architect it is at the point to commence the planning and the design of the project. Once this is completed, the total project cost is determined, the project will then move on to receive final approval from the relevant ministry before submission to Executive Council.

So, as we did in the budget process, we set aside a separate vote to deal with the need to carry out the planning and design phase of the project so that once it comes to the government, be it the Executive Council or the Finance Committee, we would know exactly what the amounts are and will not have to issue or write down preliminary or temporary project costs any longer, hopefully. That is the ultimate goal and we are going to move in that direction.

Another area that caused us some discussion and review is that the tendering process for capital projects is also in need of reform. The current system of formulating the capital budget leads itself to a decision making process that is not always as cost effective as it should be. It should also result in the whole process of design, planning and construction of a project. In order words it also results in that whole process of design planning and construction of a project being rushed because of constraints on the budget system.

This has brought about what we know to be common now, that is, the selected tendering process now in use on large projects as the smaller construction companies cannot accommodate requests for large projects, which require urgent completion.

May I go on to say that some of this rush adds to the cost of the project. We are always complaining about how costly the project is. If this suggestive course of action is taken to reform the system it will allow for a much more open and fair tendering process that will allow the smaller construction companies to bid for contracts. We know that there are many small construction companies in this country owned by local people who we have tried to assist in the past to gain work from the government.

It was probably two years ago that we decided that projects up to $1M could only be tendered. We would only receive tenders from those smaller construction companies that are locally owned. I believe this has worked reasonably well, but if we are to really help them we now have to assist them to graduate to another level and my view and the view of Executive Council is that these locally owned construction companies—and only those—should be allowed to bid for contracts up to a value of $2M.

I believe this would be welcomed by members of the General Contractors Association as well as the Building Society. The Building Society is where the majority of the smaller operators are members. I know that many of us here in the House have heard comments not only from them but also from the public about the larger companies taking the lion's share of the work. And if we are going to change that position we have to help them to graduate upward on the ladder to higher and higher numbers and to cause them also to do as they have been doing, being responsible about the time line on a project and meeting that time line in order for the government to provide the service to the public that it said it was going to do at a particular month or a particular year.

I believe that some of these matters that I have raised are not any blazing of the trail situation, but just common sense and logic that we should follow in order to deliver the service, in order to combine units in the Public Works Department, in order to structure the department in a much more logical and efficient manner, and also to ensure that local small contractors have a greater opportunity to participate for the tendering process.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, my view is that all government tenders should be opened to the public, not in a back room. If I have my way, I will make sure that happens. I believe it is the only system that you can use that actually causes people to believe that it is done honestly, openly and fairly and everybody who has bids gets that fair share.

There is a need for companies in this country (and let us focus on the construction companies in this county) to hire local people. And we know, yes, this one three years ago he was involved in something that I don't agree with but how are we going to help him if we leave him out there on the streets? Are we going to leave him so he breaks into my house before I decide to help him? Is that process of being productive. . . and this is just my experience . . . that actually instils some amount of discipline in how we carry ourselves and be responsible for our actions and also to gain independence. Quite frankly, the only person who actually owes you anything is your parents — nobody else owes you anything really. They brought you into the world and they are there to see you through that adolescence age, give you whatever they can in terms of an education to cause you to be competitive in the market place in whatever your interest is, whether it is construction, or legal work, or accounting work.

The Cayman Islands is not at the stage it is with social harmony, with an over abundance of jobs that we even have to bring people from the outside. And God bless those that we bring in because they have made their contribution to this country. But we have a responsibility likewise to ensure that local people have that opportunity to work. And let's not go holding things against people just because they did something that they should not have done and for the rest of their life they walk around with this tag on them that says, 'They don't want me to be a honest person. They don't want me to be a productive citizen in this country.'

We have seen over the last ten years in particular the effects of drug use in this country. It is some of these areas presently that surprises us almost on a monthly basis. While I must say that crime in this country has been kept under control—and I can go on to say and repeat myself that I have great respect for the police and the job that they are doing. It is being productive rather than being idle that helps us to move this country forward and to maintain that social harmony that everybody in this country, whether you live here or you visit here, loves to have and to enjoy a little bit of.

So, let's be general now, Mr. Speaker. Whether we are talking about a construction company or we are talking about a bank, or a law firm, or a trust company, or a restaurant, or a hotel, or a rent-a-car business, let's make sure that we give first job priority to a Caymanian. He is entitled to it! He is entitled to that kind of understanding from you. Not to say you owe it to him, but he is entitled to get that preference.

And quite frankly, it makes sense. If he is not working then he is going to be doing something else that none of us wants to happen. So let's all pull together and ensure that the blessing from Almighty God that we have received over the years continues so that all the business people in this country, whether they are in the construction field or otherwise continue to make that acceptable bottom line that business has a way of focusing on.

But while we are making those projects, let's be good corporate citizens as well. Let's not just think that the police can do everything that needs to be done. Let's not just think that Cayman Against Substance Abuse (CASA) can do all the things that need to be done or Social Services. The job gets easier if we all start pulling in the same direction and assisting the people in this community.

Yesterday, I was talking about mentoring of young people, not just the college graduates, the others as well. The Caymanian Compass had an editorial on me about six years ago. It said, "Once you become a politician you are like a fish swimming around in a fish tank—everybody's got their eyes on you." I remember that for a variety of reasons. One of those reasons is that you have to not only say you are doing something, you actually have to do it. If you say that you want to behave in a way that the community respects, you actually have to do it to get that respect. Talking does not just get it. Talking may not even be 50% of it, because if you preach things and you don't do it . . . boy, this community comes at you like a ton of bricks. They see you day and night, and never mind whether you are on holiday or you are sleeping on a beach, they are still watching you. So you have to play that role if you wish to be a role model in this country for the young people of this country and others to look up to.

The reason why I am going this way is because many people in my life influenced me. I want to thank God for the parents that I have. My father has passed on but my mother is still with us. On Sunday mornings I woke up, had a little breakfast to eat and then there was family devotion. Right after that we marched off to Sunday school and when church was out, and father and mother were at home we all sat down around the dinner table or the lunch table, every one of us in the family, and we had a meal together.

Right after that you didn't dare go anywhere else. Don't wake up any morning thinking that you got a smart idea of an excuse to avoid going to Sunday School because it was not going to be heard. It was going to be, 'Get dressed. You are on your way my boy!' So that's where we all come from, not just me but many others in this country.

Allow me to add this point: You can have as many psychiatrists that are in the world and bring them to the Cayman Islands, and they will never solve the problems, with all respect to them. You can have as many doctors as you want, they will never solve the problem. The problem gets solved by having reverence to Almighty God because His influence is upon us, and there is no person that can do it other than Him.

You know, some people say 'This is not Sunday School in here.' Maybe it is not! But Almighty God is in here. When we read our Bible and hear about the all-seeing eyes . . . never mind where you are, He observes us. And when we reach that day when an account has to be given, I hope we are ready. Bitterness sometimes causes us to do a lot of things we shouldn't do. I watched it in my life in this House because we are on opposite sides rather than move on with a project. And it is still happening! Rather than move on with a project because Tom Jefferson might get some votes by doing this project in the community, bitterness cause the other side to block that project. And if and when anybody start analysing what we are doing, it is the most selfish act that you could ever do because the people of this country then are denied the services that facility is going to deliver to young people, adults and others in this country. Whether I am on this side of the House or any other side, I pray to God that I never play that game.

Someone told me this week, 'You know, you are catching so much flak. You should really read Psalms 140, which talks about the deliverance prayer of a leader.' And when you read it, it is eye-opening. It takes you back quite a bit to know that while you understood a lot of it there are some sections that either you have read and forgotten or you never quite got there in the first place. We know God does not want us to lie, not about this statement or any other statement. So when I read Psalm 140 yesterday, it was like I woke up again. And I encourage everybody who is listening to me to read it and hear what is being said.

Mr. Speaker, we have long lectures sometimes about the government, and really if you didn't know the accuracy of the government's position, you could easily be swayed to think that the person is right. You hear them talking about government has borrowed over $100M and what can we see for it? You know, Mr. Speaker, if you are going to judge us, let's make sure that we are comparing oranges to oranges because if you are going to talk about what we borrowed, you should also talk about how much debt we paid.

I think that would be an accurate way of doing it. And when you do that you are going to come to the conclusion that the net position is about $55M because there was a $6M item when they closed down the Health Authority in 1994. It was never on the books of government so they transferred that. But that was not really our borrowing so that is how you arrive down to the $54M - $55M net.

The other point that I need to make about that borrowing is that in 1993 the government borrowed $16.7M really to wipe out debts from the previous government, the 1988—1992. So in fairness that debt was not really ours to pay and that's how we reach this roughly $55M net that we borrowed and added to the public debt.

But somebody is going to challenge that by saying, 'So what did you get for it?' And I am going to answer by saying, 'Boy, I am so glad you asked me to do that.' I have been sitting at home at nights for several weeks trying my best to remember all these projects we did. I am absolutely certain that I don't have all of them, but I have enough to convince the people in this country that this government has spent $55M but we can show you many, many things that we have put in place for it.

I have some examples to give you, Mr. Speaker. My figures also include (since we are talking about the borrowing) the $26.5M in 1999. So the buildings that I will talk about and other things also include 1999, what we propose to do.

I begin by taking the first item that pops to mind, health facilities, George Town Hospital. I must give great credit to my colleague, the Minister for Health. He has been able to transform not so much the bricks and mortar or the blocks and cement but the people who deliver the services at the Health Authority. I understand today that in the Governor's Award Scheme they cleaned up right, left and centre, these awards — and I say congratulations to the Minister and all of his staff for an able job done in this country.

He knows but I will say it publicly, he knows he has my support. So, George Town Hospital, $28.4M, already we are almost half of the $55M we are talking about or it is more than half.

Then we have the Bodden Town Medical Clinic or Health Clinic, over $600,000; the West Bay Health Clinic, $1M; the North Side Health Clinic, $1M; the East End Health Clinic, $1M; the hospital management team, $900,000; an improved sewage facilities, $400,000; the hospital safety upgrades, $250,000; the hospital new oxygen and sewage plant, $500,000; hospital renovations, $300,000.

When you just look at the health facilities that I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, and I don't claim that this all of it, because Cayman Brac had a lot of work done to it too which I don't have on my list. We are going to get those figures too just to make sure we are in a position to tell the people of the Brac this is what we did as well. And for their benefit, I am sure they want to know the exact amount but just looking at this figure alone, we are looking at in excess of $34M.

So we are at $55M, that we borrowed, $34m went in health services so we have $21M to account for now. Just trying to show the people how we spent the money and the area where I believe my list is grossly insufficient is educational facilities. I believe my list at best may cover 60% of it.

We have the George Hicks art block, $1.9M; George Hicks administration block, $1M; George Hicks cafeteria, $700,000; George Town Primary School classroom block, $800,000; West Bay multi-purpose hall (that's a 1999 item already started) $1.7M; East End Primary School new classrooms, $500,000; Spot Bay (so I have got a Cayman Brac item. Thank God!) multi-purpose hall, $500,000; Lighthouse school, $6M; Alternative educational facilities, $1.4M; Red Bay Primary School multi-purpose hall, $1.5M; John Gray High School renovations, $900,000; George Hicks renovation, $600,000; and the Red Bay Primary School administrative block, $1M.

So when we total this up we are now at $18.5M. You put the educational items that I have mentioned together with the health facilities that I have mentioned and you are very close to the $55M we were talking about before. Anybody who ask the question after this, Mr. Speaker, about what we got for it, he would not have to be in listening distance to ask that question or he is at some cocktail party.

When we turn to the next category that I have put together on this list, recreational and cultural facilities and here I admit that I don't have all the figures but I have items.

The North Side Craddock Ebanks Civic Centre, $800,000; the West Bay Ed Bush Sporting Complex; Truman Bodden Sporting Complex; West Bay district public beach; West Bay Heritage and Scholars Park; Pedro St. James Castle, $7.5M; Queen Elizabeth II Botanic Park, $2.3M.

And there are playing fields: Bodden Town playing field near the Civic Centre, $1.2M; East End, $600,000; Cayman Brac — and many fields were enhanced or improved.

So we have already crossed the $55M net that we were talking about if my calculator is working while I am reading.

There is another item under recreational and cultural facilities — it only shows you that some days the mind doesn't work 100 percent because I know I helped the Minister and the members to get the Spotts Public Beach, several years ago now. A fine facility! Well kept and well utilised.

I will be dealing with the roads — a lot it is coming up this year.

- The West Bay road resurfacing, from cemetery to four way stop. That was done several years ago, about three years ago.
- The three-lane road from Treasure Isle to what I call the Dixie Cemetery traffic light. That was also done several years ago.
- The resurfacing of Eastern Avenue Road — done in 1996.
- South Sound or South Church Street — I believe that was done in 1996 subject to checking.
- A new road connecting Smith Road and the entrance to Owen Roberts International Airport which I call Caledonia Avenue. About $1M for that.
- The Harquail [Bypass], phase 1, $6.7M — already in place.
- The Harquail [Bypass], phase 2 and the roundabout, $2.5M.

My understanding is on the roundabout that an agreement has been reached with the owner and all we need to do now is to proceed to draw up the documents, sign off, pay the bill and get on with the roundabout construction. I use that road almost every day and I must say it is progressively getting more and more dangerous to come down off the Harquail at the junction of North South Road and try to turn right.

Many mornings I go left and I have gone left for several weeks or several days during the past weeks. And I go to the airport and I come down through the Smith Road junction, Bob Thompson Way junction. But I can actually get to the West Bay Road Harquail junction, take that left turn and be at my office in five minutes now matter what time of the day it is. So there is a need to think about not coming up West Bay Road all the time but I am certain that one of the reasons is this dangerous turn to the right when anybody gets to the North South Road junction.

With the help of God we are going to put that right as well before any one gets seriously hurt.

- The Crewe Road Bypass which we broke ground for on Monday afternoon at 4:00 p.m. — there is a $5M.
- The resurfacing of roads, $2M, and we will certainly attempt to do the resurfacing on the worse parts of the roads in the country but hopefully every district will have some work done in it.
- Road reconstruction, $800,000

We know that when we leave the airport and end up through Industrial Park and come out on North Sound Road, even I say sometimes: Why doesn't the government do something about this? We are going to do it this year because I remember during Pirates Week when I nearly got drowned trying to go through there the water was so deep. I thank God I was in my truck because we know that was swamp so the water table is extremely high. And when you get heavy amounts of rain it doesn't have any place to go to if the water table is three inches underneath the road, you get the accumulation.

While I am on this, Mr. Speaker, Monday afternoon with the assistance of this House, we expect to break ground for the Harquail, Phase 2 Extension which comes out on the North Side of the Galleria Complex at 4:00 p.m. And we hope all the people that can be there, I know that's a working hour, will come and join us as we break ground for that extension of the Harquail. We hope to see an improved situation of driving into George Town from the West Bay district and Seven Mile Beach area.

We also have further traffic improvements, Mr. Speaker, and when I think of traffic improvements my mind takes me right to the Smith Road/Crewe Road re-alignment. And already, as I understand it, the skeptics are saying, 'It is not going to work.' And they probably don't even understand it yet, but it is not going to work. Do you know the most dangerous thing for any person including a politician is to believe that they know all the answers?

The reason why we can help people or how we can help people to grow is to give them a chance, let's listen to the technical people. They are going to make mistakes, so did we. But it is by that process that you learn because once you've made the mistake you are going to try every energy and skill in your system to avoid making it the second time. So, let's give Public Works the benefit of the doubt. In about a month to six weeks time, we will see whether it works or it doesn't work.

Another road is the East End main road, the re-routing near Cottage. And I don't have a figure for that but I know it is a substantial figure. I am sure it is well over $1M, probably closer to $2M but we will get all those figures.

We also had late last year the reconstruction of Smith Road, another that used to flood when the rain came. The left side of the road in the area by the Smith Road Plaza, you need to be careful, don't drop in that big hole where the drain was, it will damage not only your tyres but probably your rims as well. And I am not at all taking credit for what's done, it was done by the former Minister of Works. I am just listing it as an item that has been completed by this government.

The Smith Road/Bob Thompson Way junction improvement and signals. Everybody I [spoke] to, says, 'Boy, working well, man! Working well!' Fifty-three seconds coming through, the Minister for Health tells me. Prime time, peak time between 7:30 a.m. and 8:45 a.m. in the morning. Glory be to God!

You know, Mr. Speaker, I better move on to these land purchases, always controversial of course. The First Elected Member for George Town asked me a question sometime ago about the number of parcels of land that were purchased since, I think 1993—1998 and what were the arrangements and how much interest was paid and all sort of things. And I am glad that he did that because actually that piece of information helped me to put this list together. I must thank him for that.

The first one I have on this list is the Breakers Rehabilitation, which we bought, I think, back in 1993 — $600,000. And on this list that I am looking at it says, Spotts National Stadium, two parcels of land — $584,350.

There is another parcel of land, which I think is larger — it looks like that in accordance with the figure here, almost $881,000 for that parcel. It's these two or three parcels of land that I realise the Minister of Education is looking at to locate the third George Town Primary School. Another item on the list is the Department of Education (DOE) Offices. We had to buy some land for that, it cost us almost $300,000.

The East End Public Beach, three parcels of land for that — $521,000 roughly. Swimming pool and I believe this is Cayman Brac in the early days, 1993 or 1994. The cost for that one was over $208,000. And then there is a playing field also seems to be in the Brac — $170,000.

The extension of the district administration building, we had to buy some land there too — $200,000 roughly. A house for the National Trust, $66,000 — additional land to locate this house. We recently purchased the land and the building that stands on it — that we chuckled about a few weeks ago, the Racquet Club, $1.8M, roughly.

The Cayman Food Building, almost $1.5M We purchased land for the additional primary school in West Bay, almost $400,000. We purchased additional land for Savannah Primary School. I don't presently have the figure for that.

And this playing field that I mentioned which I thought was in the Brac and is in the Brac. $170,000 was for the Spot Bay Community near the field, not the field. The West Bay Public Beach, it's in the district (and I had to check this figure) but I think it is around $360,000, the first piece we bought. And we bought a second piece about three years ago, which is a much larger piece for about $500,000.

I must go on to add that there are many other facilities, various jetties, launching ramps with parking facilities through out all three islands including the bath room facilities in some locations, example, the Blossom Village in Little Cayman. Just trying to make sure that I capture as much information as I can about the three islands and those who know of projects that we did which I have not mentioned, I would certainly appreciate knowing.

The Government infrastructure: The Marco Giglioli Building on the North Sound Road, $2.3M.

- The Agricultural Pavilion Building;
- The Agricultural Office Building;
- The new police lock-up in George Town;
- The post office for Bodden Town, which is a 1999 item;
- The workmen's facility in Little Cayman;
- The Customs, phase 1 project at the airport; and
- The Customs administration as well;
- The secure remand that we talk so much about during the budget and Finance Committee;
- The drug rehabilitation, phase 1 and 2, which is coming on stream this year;
- The mail processing up at the airport, $2.6M;
- The Department of Vehicles and Equipment Services fuelling facilities at North Sound compound;
- The Central Police Station extension;
- The Little Cayman Community Centre; to name some of the government's infrastructural items.

And then on transportation, Mr. Speaker, some more items that we did. Just to make sure that we give the full flavour to the public of the accomplishments of this Government.

- We established an omni-bus depot north of the CIBC Building;
- We established a transportation omni-bus system;
- We increased the number of Caymanians in the taxi service;
- We opened a vehicle licensing unit in West Bay.

And then just to capture a little bit of what the statutory authorities have done, I will begin with mine, the Port Authority. Probably about four years ago now we dismantled the warehouse at the George Town dock. Quite frankly now I am having trouble picturing what it looked like.

Providing a Port Authority office at the airport for customer convenience so that when they go to Customs, you go right around a corner and they pay their port charges rather than running all over George Town trying to do this, the convenience for our public.

We doubled the space at the warehouse, at the cargo distribution centre. We also installed a racking system which allows us to stack up to four high and the ceiling is probably twenty feet high or may be more. So in addition to doubling the floor space we also multiplied the floor space by the number of stacking we could do in that particular — well, it is two buildings now, one joining the other.

We purchased additional land at the cargo distribution centre. Actually we bought two additional parcels of land to the west of it so that if you look at it as you go across North Sound Way and you see the fence that surrounds the cargo distribution centre of the port, all the property between it and North South Way is owned by the Port. We don't want to spend any money to fence it because it is not necessary so we have not done that part of it.

We purchased a crane in 1996, I almost lost my seat over it, Mr. Speaker, but I am going to talk a little bit more about that later. We purchased a second crane in 1998 as a back-up. There is one thing in life that you have difficulty arguing with is success, you know. And I am going to tell the public about that too — not my success, the success of the cranes that we bought.

We completed the south terminal for cruise passengers. That was started during the term of the now Third Elected Member for George Town [Government].

We established a taxi omni-bus dispatch area, we moved it from the port to near the education building up at Thomas Russell Way.

Last year we became responsible for the port operations in Little Cayman.

One of the areas on this list that I am sure...this list is grossly inadequate is the Water Authority. We extended the public water system to Spotts, to Bodden Town, to Pease Bay and Breakers, and I think if my memory is not failing me we are moving on to East End. There is also the new Water Authority Headquarters at Red Gate [Road]. And in the Civil Aviation Authority, the Owen Roberts International Airport Terminal, the custom area was doubled in space.

The immigration arrival hall substantially increase to allow when the passenger enters to allow direct access to all the booths rather than having to go around the corner to some of them. The departure lounge was also increased; the checking area substantially improved and increased for checking counter and lobby space.

Realising that this list is not one hundred percent, it might be questionably seventy-five percent even. All of these changes and projects that have been achieved — they have been simultaneously whilst the Public Service Pension Fund has been increased from $6.2M to $49.6M at the end of this year.

The General Reserves have been increased from $3.1M when we took over. And people want to argue about that — that they had $10.5M in the General Reserves and they had a deficit of over $7M in surplus account so when you net the two, what do you have? You have a little bit over $3M, and know how you can put your political spin or anything on that, you can make it different. I even heard somebody say that the Accountant General agreed with us that, that was the situation — or the Auditor General (I forget the exact person that was being quoted.) The General Reserves have been increased from $3.1M to $13.1M and then we will have to add the interest to that as well by the year 1999. All of this has been done and all this talk about borrowing, the debt service ratio remains below 8%, it is around 7.5%.

And when we talk about borrowing, if you don't understand the whole process and many people do not, I am luckily because I was part of it so I understand it. If you possess property, physical things on the ground that values $200M or more, $100M is not any real thing to worry about given that you can only take 7% of your income or 7.5% of your income and pay the bill. A lot of people in this country would love to be in that position. When I pay my mortgage, I would love for it to be 7.5% of what I make and I am sure many people in this country are feeling the same way. So no matter how you shout and how you twist, the facts are the facts, will always remain the facts and when you are talking about the Treasury facts, the Accountant General is going to agree with the facts.

You know we have this White Paper and I am not going to talk a lot about it but it has this section dealing with borrowing. What a surprise I got! I didn't know this was here until yesterday because that was when we saw the Paper for the first time.

On page 25 of it, it says, "Borrowing is a legitimate tool of government policy but must be used prudently." And this Government has used it prudently otherwise the UK would have been jumping up and down a long time ago when it felt that we were becoming a contingent liability to them. But every book you read and every piece of correspondence you read about the financial situation of this government and the responsibility of the government today and the governments in the past with minor exception, the UK is pleased because it is managed prudently.

The financial management in this country is what has set it apart from many of the countries in this hemisphere and elsewhere. It is the reason why the investor has such great confidence because nobody is taking other people's property. The government is not stepping in and taking anybody's property and claiming it so that they can sell it to do something else. The track record of the government of the Cayman Islands over the last thirty (30) years that I have known it in detail has been exceptional. No matter how you try to put any kind of negative to it — it depends on what you are looking for.

There are a few negatives — yes, but I am sure that the positives far, far out weigh any negative that you can come up with.

Mr. Speaker, I spent a lot of time, many years of my life in the Glass House, and I have watched a lot of ministers and members of Executive Council who were responsible for Public Works. I always had a little bit of sympathy for every one of them, but, quite frankly I must tell you today I am pleased to have that responsibility. This country needs action! We have to come to the forefront and say, 'Look the infrastructure in this country, if you don't deal with it, it is going to hamper your future development.' And anybody who doesn't believe that, they better go and do some reading and analyse some facts and understand to some extent what is the most serious problem that we have that the visitor is talking about.

And this is why I felt so strongly about it during the budget session and I even got accused of bringing two budgets but that doesn't matter to me. If we don't solve this traffic congestion problem in this country, you know, business — you think it is bad now, it can be a lot worse. The people in this country are getting frustrated trying to get to work in the mornings.

Someone was telling me the other day about the opening at Hurley's and the traffic problem that ensued by everybody going there and trying to turn into Hurley's Supermarket. I give great credit to those people who put that building there. I was pleasantly surprised by the facility that they put in place and, quite frankly, when you go inside and begin to understand what's there, after you are in there a little while, you have got to pinch yourself and ask yourself if you are really in the Cayman Islands because that is as modern as any other part of the world when you walk into a supermarket.

I must say I commend and congratulate Leonie and her family for that project — and I know they give good service, Mr. Speaker.

When you are dealing with traffic congestion, you cannot use a Band-Aid approach and hope to achieve anything. It is this reason why we came and asked for $13M or $14M; if we don't add a Crewe Road Bypass, tell me what are you going to do to try to relieve the situation when the traffic backs up to the Guard House and Bodden Town? What in the world are you going to do then if you don't try to have another access into the heart of George Town which also allows you to go down to the schools where much of the traffic is headed. I understand too from people who live in that area that when school is out, there is not a real problem but you have to deal with it when the school is in because we have every right to decide how our children get to school.

Anyone who was on West Bay Road today at lunch-time, trying to get back to Legislative Assembly or to George Town understands what the traffic problem is down there too. Now, if you don't extend the Harquail and we don't do the roundabout up at North Sound Junction to make it safer. . . how are we going to solve the problem? Are we going to put up a traffic light? Or are you going to say, 'Well, I will bury my head and it is going to go away'?

I don't think that is the approach the people are expecting. The people of this country expect us to step up to the plate and not strike out. They expect us to get the job done and you cannot correct this situation with $2M, and you cannot in any country always fund everything from local revenue, that is a fallacy. Show me which country does it? Certainly not New Zealand, it is certainly not the United States. I know it is not UK and neither is it in Europe.

So let's start selecting the Caribbean countries now and tell me which one. It is not Japan either or Hong Kong. So let's us not try to say anything that causes the public to believe that this government is acting irresponsibly. We hear so much about Singapore and everything that they do and everybody is trying to copy them. They are in real trouble now, you know. And so is New Zealand, in real trouble too.

We know what we have and we know where we have come from. We have people in this country who are as skilled as any other part of the world whether you are talking about accountants, lawyers, trust managers, bank managers or any other profession, even journalists. Give them credit. We are as skilled as any! So we don't have to go copying any system from anybody, we just have to improve our own.

Yes, input from all around is helpful but you have to understand where it is you are trying to reach in order to know how to step off and what course you are going to take to get there.

I have got to make this point (I know I am getting close to 4:30 p.m. but I have to make this point). I hear members and other people talking about roads not being the answer. What is the answer? Some people are saying, 'Too many cars.' Now tell me what that answer is and tell me which one of us in here (although we might stand up and make all kinds of statements) is going to vote to tell the public of this country that they can't have a car? Your household can only have one car like Bermuda. Tell me which one us is going to say that to the public and hope to win the next election?

And the other side of it, is it right? That's the most important part. Is it right for you to dictate what they do in that regard? But you know, when you are on the hot seat and have to produce it is a lot more difficult than when you are not in the hot seat and just have to do a little bit of talking. The job for those who are in the hot seat could be a lot easier if we all worked together. We are never going to be always right and we know that. You are going to always find on occasions or may be more than occasions that we do things that you don't agree with. That doesn't mean we don't have the best interest of the public at heart, it doesn't mean that at all. It means we have a difference in our thinking as to what the answer is.

So we have done the transportation system as I mentioned, and we have got a lot more work to do to it. We are going to employ public transport inspectors to help us to monitor the activities of the traffic, of the taxi drivers, of the omni-bus drivers, of the tour bus drivers, of people who just do not do it correctly, who have no difficulty in turning here and turning there when they should not be turning at all. I want to say to all the taxi drivers and omni-bus drivers, and tour bus drivers, let's be vigilant. Let's do what we know is right. We all know that there is a certain thing you should do and another thing you should not do. Let's not take any shortcuts just to make some more money, let's follow the correct route.

Let's not go in West Bay when you are a number 1 bus because you want to make sure your bus is full before you get to town. What about the other guy? Isn't it fair to leave some for him or for her so that they will have some money to feed their children and carry out their obligations as a parent? It's an area in this country that I think we need to pay attention to. Ten to fifteen years ago, you didn't have any major problems in Cayman with the word, greed. Today, regrettably it seems there are many people in this country not satisfied with just their professional job, which is making a lot of money. They have to get involved in this and get involved in that and compete with the local guy in the water sports, in the taxi situation, the duty free shops, in the restaurants and everywhere else.

How is the little guy going to live? Where is he going to get his money? These are some of things that are creating the resentment and I think all of us have to step up to the plate and address this issue. If we are not certain what to do then let's use the select committee process and hear what the public input is on the item. We need to ensure that we hold on to this social harmony that has made us so attractive. Yes, there are little ruffles here and there, we will always have those but 80%—90% is right. The crime situation, pretty good but it could be better. Let's try to help and support the Police and other people involved in the community to make it better.

Mr. Speaker, when I was spoke about this matter yesterday — I just want to correct my statement on the Long Service Award for Public Works. I believe I said around 22, there were 27 men and women awarded for their long service at Public Works and the Department of Vehicles and Equipment Services.

I want to say too that the commitment to this country for the National Gallery by Mrs. Owen is commendable. To physically go out and put her paintings on the market and auction them off in order to raise funds to begin the donation process for this government to be in a position to construct a National Gallery is really altruistic. In all senses of that one word: generous, kind, considerate, willing to do for others. I want to publicly thank her for her commitment not only to the National Gallery but to the support of His Excellency the Governor and her contribution to the people of the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Speaker, I was going to move on to a separate point.

The Speaker: I would entertain a motion of the adjournment of this Honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Then I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until 10:00 am Monday morning.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do adjourn until 10.00 a.m. on Monday.

Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The House do stand adjourned until 10.00 am on Monday.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY, 22 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
MONDAY
22 MARCH 1999
10.17 AM

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Oath of Allegiance by Mr. A Joel Walton, JP to be the honourable Temporary Acting Third Official Member.

Would you please come forward to the Clerk's table? Would all honourable members please stand?

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS
OR AFFIRMATIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE
by Mr. A Joel Walton, JP

Mr. Joel Walton: I, Arthur Joel Walton, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law, so help me God.

The Speaker: Mr. Walton, on behalf of all honourable members I welcome you to the legislature for the time of your service. Please take your seat as the honourable Temporary Acting Third Official Member.

Please be seated.

I have no messages or announcements this morning, so moving on to item number 4, Government Business, continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on 19th February 1999. The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY,
19TH FEBRUARY, 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you.

When we took the adjournment on Friday afternoon, I was really dealing with the comment made by a member about government spending more than $100 million and what did we get for it. I took the time to outline the number of projects accomplished by this government. I believe that when all the figures are finalised we will find the figure will be much above $100 million, or much above any borrowing.

Simultaneously while carrying out that number of projects, we have been able to add to the general reserve finding it at $3.1 million net. In the general reserves, there was something like $10.5 million, and in the surplus and deficit account there was a deficit in excess of $-7 million. So when we net the two we come up with a net position of a little bit over $3 million. By the end of this year, God willing, the balance of the general reserve account will be in the range of $13.5 million. And then there's interest that will accrue this year as well.

All these projects being accomplished, and the addition to the general reserves, and then the sum added to the public service pension fund (which will be nearing $50 million by the end of this year) is all being accomplished while simultaneously keeping the debt service ratio below 8%. I believe the calculation puts it near 7.5%. So in terms of management of government and fiscal policy, I believe our record will stand up under scrutiny, Mr. Speaker.

Granted, in everything we do whether individually or governmentally (and when I say individually I am not speaking about being an MLA or a Minister, there's always room for improvement) there's a need to point out where the weaknesses are so that we can address them. Having pointed out the weaknesses, if we fail to address them and they are genuine weaknesses, then I think there is room for more talk from whoever is pointing out the weaknesses.

Mr. Speaker, there is always a need to address matters that seem not to be clear to the listening public to ensure that they have the opportunity to hear both sides, and for them to decide which version they wish to believe is accurate.

I want to come now to the Pedro St. James, which I must say the ministry has taken a lot of flack and negative comment about in the past. I even heard a member across the floor talking about "shoddy records." I wonder to what extent he has justification for that statement. The procedure in dealing with the expenditures of Pedro St. James is really the same procedure utilised throughout the government in that work is carried out on a particular project, the project manager certifies that the work is done, the bill is then passed on to the ministry. The ministry scrutinises it and if there is need for additional documentation it calls for it, then it is passed on to the Treasury which, under its obligations under the Public Finance and Audit Law, scrutinises it further. And when they are satisfied they issue the cheque. That is the procedure for Pedro St. James expenditures. So if you are talking about shoddy records, I hope you realise you are making reference to the Treasury's records. I don't believe there is any room for that statement, Mr. Speaker, not in terms of what the Treasury does.

The same member from across the floor also talked about (and I am not trying to quote his exact words, but really to paraphrase what he said) claims made by the government to Caribbean Development Bank which have not been honoured. I am here to say that that statement is untrue. Every claim that we have submitted to the Caribbean Development Bank has been honoured by the bank. As a matter of fact, the claims that were submitted and the reimbursement totals in excess of $4 million and there is a further claim being prepared for a further draw down.

It could be that the member was misled. But what I am giving you is the factual position. Information from the Treasury is that all claims submitted to CDB as at 31st December 1998 were approximately $4 million and that the reimbursement received from CDB (to be quite to the penny) is $4,024,262.72 in United States dollars, passing through the Treasury and into the government's bank. So that matter is settled and we can put that one to bed.

There was some other comment by a member from across the floor (and I am not going to start calling names, but the public knows who they are and we do too) about the cruise ship passenger traffic that we have arranged for Pedro St. James. Nothing new. It was the entire concept from the very beginning, that we would market the facilities of Pedro St. James not only to cruise ship passengers, but to passengers who arrive by air, as well as all of us who reside here in order to ensure that the project becomes self-sufficient as quickly as possible to cover operational costs and to pay the annual loan amount to CDB. So we are beginning to see a little light at the end of the tunnel in that regard.

And I want to commend all of the staff involved with Pedro St. James. I think it is a fine facility. I believe that we would have to search long and hard to find an attraction facility equal to it anywhere in the Caribbean. And while we have spent in the range of $7.8 million (construction-wise), if we take care of it, fifty years from today it will still be there earning money.

Someone was telling me about a show they saw on Cayman 27 where the young people of this country were being interviewed on their comments about Pedro St. James. You know, on the one hand we talk about rewriting history (and that is certainly something that I support) to ensure that the history of the Cayman Islands is documented. But projects such as this highlight that history, that culture that we have been talking about. For the life of me, I do not understand why one person can talk about documenting the history, then turn around and bad-mouth this particular project which helps to enhance the documented history putting it in visual form.

But I am satisfied that the public who visited the site and saw the multimedia presentation and the facility we have created over the last eight years are talking about in a very positive way. So, thank God, the message is coming through. Even the skeptics, with the help of Almighty God, will turn around and agree with us for having done so.

Secondly, the Botanic Park, another fine facility—not for the tourists, but for us to capture 60-odd acres (granted we are not using all of those 60-odd acres) of land in its normal vegetation for the people of the Cayman Islands for the next 100 years or more so that we can say this is ours. However we develop it, that is ours for our children, and for their children, and for their children's children as well. And I have great commendation for the National Trust who stepped off on it in the early days. Everyone who volunteered for this particular facility and who continues to volunteer, as well as the staff who give daily of their skills, their energy and pleasantries to ensure that persons who visit that facility receive a rich and warm educational outing.

We have most recently approved the gazettal of that road to Botanic Park from the main road in Frank Sound, so we should be shortly getting on with improving the road leading into Botanic Park. For the benefit of the listening public, it was not a public road. So, we wanted to ensure that it was a public road before we spent any significant amount of government funds. We had access, but it was not a public road.

I want to move on to the Fire Service. When I mention that I feel a sense of warmth from the Caymanian community for the services delivered by the Chief Fire Officer and his staff. When we think about the domestic needs and what they have created in the Frank Sound Fire Station and the West Bay Fire Station, and then the domestic needs for George Town being managed from the same facility at the airport, I hear warm and appreciative comments about the service delivered by the Fire Service. I am indeed very pleased to have been the Minister of that department over the last six years or so.

When I was speaking last week, more currently on Friday about role models in this community, I think of people like the Chief Fire Officer and the community work that he has done both in the Lions and the National Trust and various other activities. Most recently, I think he is king of the orchid group, to put a little pun to it. But he has that green thumb as well, and I think that is why he has been so committed to the Botanic Park. This weekend there was an orchid show that I was unable to attend, but I understand it was received very well by everyone who attended.

I know too that the Chief Fire Officer is examining the location of a third fire station somewhere within the Lower Valley/Savannah area. The response time may not be satisfactory if the need is in the Bodden Town area if we respond from Frank Sound or George Town. So we are looking at that and we hope that we will be in a position to more justifiably come forward next year with some budgetary approval.

But when we hear about the growth in tourism and in the financial industry of the Cayman Islands and we look at the number of different planes between 12 o'clock and 3 o'clock lined up at the taxiway at Owen Roberts International Airport, we really must marvel. We take a lot of things for granted, and sometimes we don't remember the quality service that is being delivered not only by the Civil Aviation Authority (I believe they are doing a fine job) but also by the Fire Service. Members will recall that we put forward the need for additional fire equipment in the budget for this year.

This afternoon at 4.20 the BA flight is using the new equipment, the 777. It only brings to mind the need to constantly be upgrading our facilities and really commending the Fire Service for the able job and the image it portrays to the outside world. I think it's the leader in the Caribbean in that regard.

I want to turn now to the Port Authority just to look at how the revenues have increased and the capital expenditures, as well as the profits over the years. We began in 1993 when the Port Authority earned in the vicinity of $5.4 million. It has steadily increased year by year until we hit 1998 when the earnings were $9.3 million. And the expenditure is tracking somewhat similar. In 1993 $4.6 million, and 1994 and 1995 were basically underneath that same number, and in 1996 going forward into 1998 ending up somewhere in the range of $7.2 million.

And we watched the net income grow (which is really the objective of why government made it a statutory authority, to put it out and say to it you have to operate in a commercial way), the profit in 1993 was a bit over $800,000. By 1994 it was $1.4 million. And then it varied between $1.9 [million] and $1.7 [million] ending up in the year 1998 with $2.1 million.

And we have made a variety of contributions to the government. In 1993 we paid in excess of $700,000 as a contribution. And the high point was $1.5 million in 1997. And we dealt with capital expenditure needs of the Port Authority.

We know that Cayman is growing significantly on an annual basis, so there is always a need to watch our ability to provide the service in an efficient manner. And when we need to plan for the new millennium and secure the facilities for the Port Authority—no matter who the chairman or minister will be—we'll definitely be in a position to deliver the service for the public of this country. And in 1994 we spent roughly $1.5 million, the majority being the finishing touches to the South Terminal where cruise ship passengers land.

In 1994, we dealt with equipment such as trucks and other things that were needed, approximately $400,000. And in 1995 we dealt with more equipment but also the warehouse removal at the George Town dock and we spent about $600,000. In 1996 we spent about $5 million dealing with the purchase of the crane as well as land development. We purchased approximately two acres of land in 1996 and we also bought the first crane. Those were the major sums in the $5 million.

Then in 1997, because we had not reached west moving from the cargo distribution centre towards North Sound Way, because we had not reached the road, a proposal came forward to us from the owner of that parcel of land and we decided that made sense. Although we didn't need it right then, we had to secure it for the future so that five or even ten years from today (and I would expect we would get to that need long before ten years) the land will be there for us to utilise. It may even cause the flow of traffic to be different because now we have an entrance from the industrial park area, which is Dorcy Drive. We would also have an entrance from North Sound Way into the cargo distribution centre. So it's common sense to move in that direction.

In 1998 we spent something in the range of $3.4 million and that $3.4 [million] really was the purchase of additional land to the north of the George Town Dock, the land on which the Port building as we all understand it presently sits. And we also bought a second crane for a backup which the business in Cayman was pressing us to do, as well as we were of the view that no matter what the equipment is even the best of cars, whether it's a Rolls Royce or whatever, breaks down at times. And it may just break down at a time when you least expect it. So there's a need for that as well.

And you know, speaking of cranes. . . actually when I reflect on it I remember a cartoon that was done a couple of years ago when we were in the fray of receiving all sorts of flack and negative comments about purchasing the crane. I remember a cartoon which suggested we should use it for bungee-jumping off the dock and charge a fee. I also recall a comment being made by a member across the floor that we should sink the crane for a dive site. I know that was pun. I hadn't intended to say anything about the crane, to be quite honest, but I believe there is a need for all of us to understand, as well as the listening public.

I have gone to the dock on a number of occasions and I have seen things that I didn't expect to see. I have seen the crane loading two containers at one time (empty though they are) onto the ship. I don't recall ever seeing that done here or anywhere else before. So the expertise to operate the crane is in place. And the functioning of that crane, the larger one or the smaller one, seems to be satisfactory to the public as well as to the Port Authority.

You know, there's another little bit of information the public should understand. The Port Authority agreed to purchase a crane because we thought it was in the best interest of ensuring that the service being delivered by the Port Authority continues under their control. And we all had estimates about how viable this operation would be. Well, when we look at the 1998 position we see that the entire operation is capable of paying for all of its operational costs ending up with a profit at the end of the day.

I would think that's what the public wants to hear—that we didn't go out and waste money, but that we have spent money wisely, and that the fruits of our decision are now coming home in terms of the efficiency of the cranes as well as the money being made.

I must say that it's kind of difficult to argue with success. And may I humbly suggest that through all of the public outcry against Thomas Jefferson and the crane that it is really heartening that the decision to purchase the crane has proven to be right. I might go on to say that I concentrate on how the country can make money so that we can continue the good service to the public and I don't need to add (but I will!) that anyone can spend money—but not everybody can devise systems to make money.

I want to say that when we look at the Port operations over the period we are referring to (1993 to 1998) we note the number of ships that are calling (cargo ships) ranging from about 73 in 1993 (and I am talking about annual figures) to in 1997/1998 124. And of the cruise ship passengers and ships that call, 355 calls in 1993; 398 calls in 1998; 480,000 cruise ship passengers landed in 1993; and in 1998 we saw a much larger figure than that.

When we think of all the activities that take place at the George Town Port and at the cargo distribution centre I have to commend the director of the Port and his staff for the able work they are doing. They also include the little office which was set up at the airport warehouse area for the public so that they don't have to wander between one place and the next to pay their Port charges. They go to the customs office pay their custom duties and then go on next door to pay the port charges rather than running all over town. So as minister responsible for the Port I believe the public is pleased with the performance and I offer my warm congratulations to the director and his staff. And I include Cayman Brac in that.

I want to just turn to tourism. I have a few comments about it. I am reminded of that front page article on 8th February 1999 in the Caymanian Compass entitled "Tourism sets new record." I don't propose to read it, but it starts out by saying "For the fifth consecutive year, stay-over visitor arrivals to the Cayman Islands set a record."

Actually, I didn't call to make them correct it, but it's six years—1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, six years. I know that they had good intentions in making that statement, so I leave it as they have made it.

Then, like everything else, it's not so much all the things you have done right as it is that perception that something may be wrong that catches the marl road and shoo-shoo. But as I pointed out the other day (Monday or Friday) the 40% down in the market (that some MLA as well as people in the business are saying), I have to ask where did this figure come from. All the statistics that I have (and the statistics we are talking about) are taken from the immigration card the visitor presents at the Immigration desk at Owen Roberts International Airport. It's the information on that card that we use. Those statistics indicate that when we compare the 72,000 in January/February 1998 to the 70,200 in January/February 1999, its 1,800 persons. However you calculate that, if you are using that as a methodology for saying the market is down by 40% . . . my calculator don't work that way.

But let me also bring to the attention of members and the listening public that I was searching the Internet over the weekend. And what pops up but an article that says "AMR profit drop deepens on pilot sick-out." Now we know that AMR is the parent company of American Airlines. Just to read two short paragraphs of that—

The Speaker: Before you do that I would like to advise you that you have ten minutes remaining.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

"The parent company of American Airlines, AMR Corporation, said yesterday that the financial pain caused by the crippling ten day sick-out by pilots last month had been worse than expected and that its first quarter profit would be about half of Wall Street's current estimate." Pretty serious statement.

When they transfer that into another way of describing it, it goes on to say, "AMR [the parent company of American Airlines] said the sick-out which forced American Airlines to cancel more than 6,600 flights would reduce its sales by an estimated $200 million." When we hear those numbers I wonder how many tickets they are actually talking about that didn't sell. I wonder how many people trying to fly within the continental United States as well as on to the Caribbean and the Cayman Islands didn't arrive. This is a serious factor that has to be taken into account when we talk about the market in the Cayman Islands being soft. We can't have American Airlines cancelling 6,600 flights and not be affected. I am not saying that's the whole reason, but I am saying that was an important reason. If you can't lift from the United States and arrive in the Cayman Islands everything else doesn't count.

We are also getting stiff competition from the European area. We hear about flights and tickets being sold from New York to London for $499. But I have always said (and just to be repetitive), and I still believe that the partnership we have with the private sector and by working together we can solve any problem that we may have in the softness of the market in the Cayman Islands. And I wish to reiterate that point.

I must say too that I realise that the Director of Tourism is on the eve of her fifth anniversary of being in that position. I know that the first nine months of the five years she was serving in a designated position. But I must say that when we look at it overall she has done an able job. She has performed well. She is a bright lady who is committed to these islands and our people and I want to offer sincere congratulations to her and all members of her staff in the Cayman Islands and around the world.

When we talk about cruise ships now people begin to wonder what is it we are going to say. I read an article the other day about cruise lines and profit from Friends in Congress, and I laid it on the Table. Just for our benefit and that of the listening public, we know that while the air arrival numbers may be off a little bit (1,800), cruise ship traffic in the first two months of 1999 is up in excess of 21%.

We know too that when we look at the total arrivals in 1998 by cruise ship, it was 852,527. Of all those passengers when we go with the analysis we find that out of 852,527 visitors to the Cayman Islands by cruise ship, 18,651 came in on a Sunday. So when we talk about losing business, there are two arguments here. One is government's decision to try to preserve the Christian values that we all knew as we were growing up. Sometimes, as I was saying on Monday, they can bring all the psychiatrists from around the world to Cayman, and you can bring all the doctors too, but I bet you they can't solve the problem. The great architect of this universe, Almighty God, is the solver. And if we stay close to Him and we ask for His guidance and His blessings I am sure it will happen.

This decision was taken shortly after Hurricane Mitch. On the Friday afternoon when Mitch was to the south of us, and headed directly north . . . it couldn't miss the Cayman Islands if it continued on that track. And every church that I know of was praying. And every person in this country who resides here was worried. And even members of this House made public statements, wrote letters to the press, of concern that we should be praising Almighty God for having spared us because it was Saturday or Sunday (can't remember which day exactly) when the direction of that storm suddenly turned left towards Central America. And everybody, although we weren't saying it was going to continue in that direction, breathed a big sigh of relief.

It was in that kind of environment that government said if we are interpreting the views of the community, if we want to continue to build this country on Christian values, let's try to hold this thing in place.

If the Cayman Islands have to survive on a Sunday by having 18,000 passengers, we are in big trouble, if you are looking at it from a business point of view. We are in real big trouble if that is the case. Over 852,000 cruise ship passengers came to this country in 1998. But I know what the play is. I have been around here for a while. All of us need to stay tuned to the activities of that huge industry cruise ship industry and begin to understand how they deal. And I am not looking to badmouth anybody. I am basically saying just understand how they deal. It is not, in my view, in the best interests of the Cayman Islands to allow people to do all sorts of things to us; dictating that we must open up on a Sunday morning.

What happened to our people who go to the beach? How are they going to find a place on the beach if a cruise ship passenger . . . and God knows when they start you got trouble holding them back—

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: We'll have them going to the bars on a Sunday morning.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, we have to try to look out for our people. And sometimes the decision by government will not be popular. We don't expect it to be popular in one sense, but if you have a piece of granite (and let's relate that to Christian values in this country) and you keep chipping away at it with a chisel and a hammer eventually you are going to have nothing. We will end up like the rest of the world—open on Sundays. Families have no values, they don't sit down and have lunch or dinner on a Sunday with their children, and I believe that is wrong if we want to hold on to the values in this country. Family values must come from the Holy Book. Where are you going to get your family values? Not from the Devil! Not from Satan!

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Close the bars, then.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Mr. Speaker, I have been around here a little while too. I hear the comment. If the backbench wants to close the bars let them put forward a private member's motion.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: It's not the backbenchers' responsibility to do that. You lead us!

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: It is the First Elected Member for West Bay making that comment. If he wants to open the bar, let him put forward a private member's motion and let's see what happens to it.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

The Speaker: Let me hear your point of order please.

Mr. Roy Bodden: [interjecting] His time is up, sir.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: If the minister wants to do something like that, he just said he's the member making policy. He's responsible to do that! And if he was so concerned about Christianity then he would close bars and everything else that operates on Sunday.

The Speaker: That's not a point of order.

Honourable minister, your time has expired. Will you please wind it up?

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to say in winding this up that the public understands too the comment I just made.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your tolerance and for your understanding. I never dreamed that I would be speaking for four hours. But I take my cue from the Great Man above. There is a need in this country to stand up, not for political popularity but for what is right—and I intend to do that. They can vote me out if they want to. I intend to stand up for what is right in this country because I believe that we have a responsibility to the young people and others in this country to set some examples, not to get up in the House and badger each other and say all manner of things about each other because that doesn't set the right example, and we know that. In the heat of argument we say things that we regret and I understand that too. But I think we need to be more cognisant of the example we are setting for this population and we need to stand up for Christian values which is where we come from.

I want to also say that regardless of what people may think, I pray to Almighty God on a daily basis not only for my own needs but for the needs of every member of this Legislative Assembly and the government and the people of this country. The Book says love not only your friends. That's how I would interpret it. And I hear the giggles. I think he understands what I am saying.

Let me say that I want to pay respect to the members of this House, especially my colleagues for the way in which they have supported the things I have put forward. And sometimes they don't always say yes. I have to understand that too. And I know that there will be people outside the House and inside the House who try to divide us. I heard a comment as recent as last week. But let us stand firm for what is right.

I want to thank you Mr. Speaker, and I want to wish His Excellency (I might not get a chance to do that before he leaves) and Mrs. Owen God's blessings as they retire. They have both contributed significantly to this country and I certainly wish them God's blessing.

The Speaker: The floor is open for debate. Does any other member wish to speak? The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Would you prefer to take a break so he doesn't interrupt his speech? We shall suspend for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.20 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.43 AM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

In commencing my contribution to the Throne Speech I wish to thank His Excellency the Governor for his fine presentation of the 1999 Throne Speech. Like many others in this honourable House, I was saddened to learn that this was indeed his last Throne Speech as he and his good wife Carol will be leaving the Cayman Islands within a few weeks. The Cayman Islands are a richer place because of the presence of His Excellency and Mrs. Owen over the past number of years of his tenure. They both gave unstintingly and fully of their time and talents to these islands.

His Excellency will be remembered not only for his very friendly manner, but more so for the innovative approach he brought to bear during the period of his administration. I daresay the vast majority of Caymanians share my sentiments in saying that he was one of the best governors to serve in these islands and will long be remembered by the people of these islands. I am personally sorry that he could not have extended his time in these islands for at least another term so that he could have completed the many projects that he started here that are working so well thus far.

His Excellency's re-invention programme launched in 1996 is already showing positive results in the improvement and increased efficiency within the public service. It was in 1996 that His Excellency made one of the best decisions that has been made for these islands in a very long time when he decided to bring needed reforms to the public service. The Governor Owen Awards luncheon held on Friday (19th March) spoke in eloquent terms to the leadership qualities of His Excellency and the seed planted by him in 1996 is already bearing fruit that will benefit the public service in general, but in particular the public service of Grand Cayman.

His Excellency has brought a new style of leadership for the civil service, a more businesslike style. As a result of his leadership the civil service seems to have gotten a new energy to move things ahead in a more efficient manner. It is somewhat unfortunate that more members of this honourable House could not have been present at this function to show appreciation to His Excellency for his leadership and to those civil servants who received awards for their accomplishments in improving the public service.

May I also take this opportunity to say congratulations to Mrs. Carol Owen, the wife of His Excellency, who in her own right has made a vast contribution to these islands. Through her art and her cultural contribution, she has made this country a better place to live. Up until this morning Mrs. Owen was still pushing to get support for the establishment of a national gallery in these islands. And whether or not that may . . . most of us agree that this is the right priority for the needs of this country. One cannot in good conscience say that Mrs. Owen's commitment is not genuine. So I wish to congratulate her for the personal contribution and efforts and commitment she made to these islands. I trust that before too long they will find it possible to visit us, or perhaps even reside with us on a more permanent basis if that is their wish.

In his Throne Speech, His Excellency the Governor named 1999 as the year of challenge. He named as the two key challenges facing us 1) the OECD initiatives, and 2) the implementation of the Vision 2008. He said, and I quote, "1999 will be a year of challenges. The two key challenges facing us will be the OECD initiative and the implementation of the Vision 2008."

"Public interest and support for Vision 2008 has been overwhelming. I am grateful to you all for your support particularly the 250 people in the Round Tables who have been meeting regularly over the last four months and the 30 member Planning Team. You have all invested of that most precious of commodities, time. We owe you all a debt of gratitude. I offer my personal thanks to you all."

I wish for us to take particular note of what he said here, and that is, "Vision 2008, reinvention of government, fiscal reform, public sector management reform and freedom of information initiatives have given the Cayman Islands the opportunity to break out of the strait jacket of a colonial style system of bureaucracy which seeks to control from the centre."

He said, "I am grateful to the Members of the Legislative Assembly for your support of Vision 2008." Unfortunately there are still certain members of this honourable House who haven't seen fit to support this very worthy project. I trust that they will change their position on this so that we can all unite our efforts in trying to make this become a very successful venture.

He stated that the other challenge (other than Vision 2008) is the OECD initiatives on so-called tax havens. I intend to comment on this briefly later on, but I would just like to repeat what His Excellency said here as a basis for my comments. He said, "The Cayman Islands government and all the Members of this House are united on the need for Cayman to engage in dialogue with the OECD. But in doing so we need not be defensive. Cayman has a good story to tell. Cayman is putting quality first and continues to be at the forefront of the fight against money laundering." I want to support that statement 100% because that is exactly what we are doing.

“We should therefore take advantage of the OECD initiative and send a clear message to the world as well as the OECD that Cayman is committed to maintaining itself as a quality jurisdiction, which also acknowledges its responsibilities to the international community.” This is so true.

I would like to add that this will not be done by sitting down and waiting to see what sort of response we get from OECD. We cannot afford to take a reactive posture. Our position should be a proactive position and that is the only way that we can take advantage of the OECD initiative, by telling them the good things that we are doing rather than waiting for them to take action and then reacting to their position.

In regard to Vision 2008, I am pleased to have been appointed along with my colleague the First Elected Member for George Town, and other members of this House, to serve with His Excellency on the Strategic Integration Group Committee which was set up to monitor and coordinate the activities of the various initiatives being undertaken within the Vision 2008 programme.

His Excellency the Governor had this to say about the Vision 2008 programme, and I would just like to also make a brief reference to this. He said “Vision 2008 is on target. Last week the 16 Round Tables presented 234 action plans to the Planning Team. Based on the action plans the Planning Team is now working on drafting a Phased National Strategic Plan for presentation to Executive Council by early April. The Plan will then be tabled in the Legislative Assembly.

“When the Plan has been approved by this Honourable House, the Strategic Integration Group made up of senior civil servants as well as politicians from both sides of the House under my chairmanship will ensure that the National Strategic Plan will be implemented and will be integrated with other on going and proposed reform initiatives of government.” I endorse these words fully. We are now perhaps in the middle of the Vision 2008 and later on in my debate I will speak again on the progress being made on this plan.

I support the view that these islands cannot afford to steer an uncharted course into the 21st Century. Thus the reason why the Cayman Islands has embarked on the Vision 2008, the financial and fiscal reforms, and other reforms of government. May I also take this opportunity to congratulate the executive director, Mrs. Joy Basdeo and her team for their contributions to the success of this project thus far.

As mentioned earlier, the timeline for Vision 2008 is on track. This timeline is divided into four phases. We are now in the second phase, which is the planning phase. We have already completed the first phase, which was the awareness phase. The second phase ran from June of 1998 and will end on 30th March (this month), then on 1st April we commence with the first phase which is the implementation phase and that will run to April 2000. The final phase, which is the evaluation phase, will run from May to June 2000 and then on through 2008. There will be regular phases within the evaluation phase of evaluating what has been done to date.

Just so the listening public can be brought up to date and informed, I would just like to state that the planning phase is now involved with the formation of the roundtable groups which will develop specific proposals for action plans for the 16 strategies which form the vision statement as developed by the people of these islands. The third phase, or the implementation phase commences in April (next month) and this will slide into the Vision 2008 Plan together with other reforms including—and this is very important—the reforms of the financial and budgeting sectors of government. I will have more to say about the delay, some of which I regard as unnecessary, in some of the financial reforms which should have been put in place before this.

There is also the question of another most important reform, which seems to be dragging its feet. That is the question of the select committee on Freedom of Information. I would like to see more energy and action taken on this particular committee.

As stated, the evaluation phase of Vision 2008 will commence in March 2000 and the strategic plan will be reviewed and evaluated annually commencing in March 2000.

Much comment has been made in this House, publicly, and within the private sector about the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), a very powerful group, comprised of the most powerful countries in the world. I wish to say as a citizen of these islands and as a representative of the people that if the OECD initiatives are not handled properly all the reforms in the world, financial, freedom of information and otherwise, will be an academic exercise. It will render the exercise more theory than substance. It is important that top professionalism is used in dealing with the OECD initiatives. It is important that the government's political directorate is involved in every phase of the discussions with the OECD and the UK and other bodies.

In my opinion, the most important task or initiative facing these islands today is the OECD report and other initiatives associated with it such as the EU initiative and the G7 initiative. They are basically four initiatives even though the EU initiatives are usually combined. The first initiative in relation to the OECD report is the report on Harmful Tax Competition. A second is the G7 initiative on Harmful Tax Competition, and the third and fourth are the EU initiatives on the Code of Conduct on Business Taxation and the Draft Directive on Taxation of Interest. They are the main initiatives. The last one is the taxation of interest on savings income.

The Third Official Member, the honourable Financial Secretary, is to be congratulated for his efforts thus far in heading up the delegations that have represented these islands abroad to deal with the various OECD initiatives. I am pleased to have been selected by Executive Council to accompany the honourable Financial Secretary, the Minister of Tourism, the Minister of Education together with Miss Deborah Drummond, on a visit to London in September of 1998 with the first delegation to meet with the UK officials to discuss the possible implication of these initiatives and the effect they could have on the economy as a whole. I am proud to say that during that visit, even though I represent the Opposition bench in this House, I was able to go with this delegation from Executive Council on this important meeting and we were able to work together in the best interests of these islands.

That is as it should be. I feel that with a matter this important that will have a direct effect on the very life-blood of these islands that we should put aside any political or party or group differences we may have to work in the interest of these islands. I feel that we have shown a good example in the way this was handled in September of last year. Since then various contacts have been made through writing and personal visits.

Because this is so important to these islands on a national level, I feel that the members of this House should be kept informed by those heading up any responses to these initiatives and in particular the Chairman, the honourable Third Official Member. It is his responsibility to call the members together and inform them periodically of what is happening even though these matters may have to be kept in the deepest confidence. This is not just a matter for senior civil servants. This is a matter that must include the ministers and other members of the political directorate of this House.

Whilst I do not wish to go into any details on this subject at this time, I do believe that His Excellency's comments—perhaps even warnings that this is one of the two major challenges facing these islands—cannot and should not be ignored. We should now as a government be taking a firm and proactive position and not a reactive one, as I stated earlier. If indeed the honourable Third Official Member, the honourable Financial Secretary, at any point in time finds that his varied duties may preclude his spending sufficient time on this very important subject, then perhaps he should consider delegating some of it to another member of Council. I regret that the Third Official Member himself is not here today to hear my comments. But I trust that he will take the time to read them from the Hansards.

We cannot procrastinate; we cannot delay the process of dealing with this matter as a most urgent matter. It is not going to go away. We should take the example of Bermuda, which is taking every opportunity to make contact with the OECD and UK official. Not on a civil service level, but on a ministerial level. The Chief Minister herself and other ministers have been making contacts with the officials of the OECD and the UK. I am not here knocking the value of input from the official side of the House. I am saying that I am aware, because I was told this in the UK as recently as a few weeks ago, that the UK will pay perhaps more attention to the political directorate of the countries being affected by these initiatives.

As regards the OECD Report, the question that we in the Cayman Islands should be posing today to the OECD official is very simple. Rather than spending hours talking and not accomplishing very much, we should ask one straightforward question to OECD, and that question should be, What do we in the Cayman Islands need to do to be placed on the "approved" list? Not, What will we need to do to get off the "black list" if we are ever placed there. Let us approach them in a proactive stance and say to them "What do you want us to do to be placed on what you consider to be your approved list?" Because I believe, I truly believe that many of the questions that may be lurking in their minds regarding the Cayman Islands would be answered. They would see that we are operating a much better regulated financial centre than they may be accusing us of.

I recall on my trip to London sitting at the table with members of the House of Commons and the House of Lords when a member of the House of Commons, in asking me where I was from, said "Well, you're from the island where they have a lot of money laundering."

Mr. Speaker, I looked him straight in his eyes and I said to him, "I really don't know how I should answer you. It's obvious to me that as a Member of Parliament you should know much more about one of your Overseas Territories. And in making that statement it is obvious to me that you know nothing about the Cayman Islands."

And I proceeded to tell him and the others around the table—and you could hear a pin drop!—about the Cayman Islands. That is the proactive position I am talking about.

Half of those MPs in London do not have a clue about the way the Cayman Islands operate. And we should be making inroads at that level so that when this matter reaches them they will be knowledgeable of the Cayman Islands. It is one thing to talk to the civil servants in London, but they in turn cannot take any significant action. Those actions will have to be taken at the political level. They can make recommendations, but any serious action will have to be taken at that level. That is why you hear about the G7 initiatives. It is at that level that we are concerned, at the ministerial—Prime Minister, Chief Minister level. Later on I will be speaking about the proposals made by Mr. Robin Cook in his White Paper regarding setting up a committee of the heads of overseas territories which will also comprise members of the UK Parliament.

I must congratulate the Third Official Member for what he has done so far. But as I warned, we cannot afford to become complacent or reactive in any way. We cannot underestimate the seriousness of the OECD problem. The upcoming meeting in May of this year will be a crucial meeting and we should ensure without divulging any confidential information that no stone is left unturned in our preparation and the submission that we make of this meeting because the reports submitted will be used by the forum to determine which jurisdictions will be placed on the final list. Unless we are properly prepared, we could be placed on the blacklist, which we do not want.

Once placed on a list, it will be that much more difficult to be taken off of that list. So our major job is at the present time. We should be working very hard and contacting in particular our representatives of the OECD in the United States to have our open discussions with them whether or not they want to talk with us. We should insist on being able to tell our story to them. But to wait could be a grave mistake.

In November of this year the forum meeting of OECD will agree on the adoption of the final tax haven list. And by May next year, that list will be published. There is no doubt that anyone appearing on that blacklist, the intention of the OECD countries which comprise the most powerful countries in the world including the United States will endeavour to eliminate any countries that appear on the blacklist. I believe that the track record of the Cayman Islands will exempt us from the blacklist. I believe that our regulatory regime, our laws, our rule of law in this country and all that we have done thus far with the introduction of the MLAT in 1986, that the Proceeds of Criminal Conduct Law, more recently, with the Fiscal Reforms, the Re-invention of Government, the 2008 Reforms, all that we are doing in these islands which, by the way, have been made note of by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary, Sir Robin Cook, in the White Paper . . . he has recognised that the Cayman Islands is leading out in many of these reforms.

So even though I am warning that there is no place for complacency, I am also warning that we cannot afford not to take a proactive stance. I am saying at the same time that I believe the Cayman Islands presently have a good story to tell. But if we do not make that story known to the people who matter, that story may not be told and may not be heard.

I am disappointed that more effort has not been made to make direct contact with officials in the UK who can challenge our cause and indeed the forum members of the OECD. I know much has been done. This is such an urgent matter that I feel it should take top priority at this time amongst government business. I know that I have spent a lot of time on this subject, but I have only done this because of the level of importance that I place on this subject.

Ever since the OECD report and the various other related initiatives, that is the G7 and the EU initiatives that were published early last year, it has been recommended that Cayman, like Bermuda, like the BVI and other UK Overseas Territories (or UKOTs as they are called) should attempt to make direct contact with their counterparts in the UK and indeed with the top OECD officials, such as Mr. Geoffrey Owens in Paris, and Mr. Philip West in the United States, just to name a few.

Let me say once more on this particular subject that this is a major national issue. Let nobody fool you about that. And let us not push it under the carpet with the stupid excuse that it is so confidential that the people of this country should not be told about it; that they should be kept in darkness. That would be short-selling out people when indeed every other country, Bermuda, BVI and others, are dealing with this as a major issue and keeping their people informed about its ramifications.

As has been practised in the past, the honourable Speaker usually grants a fairly wide latitude in the debate on the Throne Speech, mainly because the Throne Speech represents the State of the Union Address for these islands and it covers every aspect of the operation and development of these islands from the finances straight through to expenditure; from the plans such as the Medium Term Financial or Economic Plan for the Public Sector Investment Programme, which is basically capital and other expenditure of government. It is not a budget debate. It is more important. It is much wider. It has to do with the operation of the whole country and takes into account plans and objectives of the various ministries and their departments as well as an accounting, bringing into account what has been done over the past year. It deals with administrative policies and plans for the future.

It is an opportunity for the members of this honourable House to ensure the maintenance of good government. A government is only as good as an effective opposition. Accordingly, before dealing with other areas of the Throne Speech, I would at this time wish to thank the local branch of the CPA for selecting me to attend the 40th Seminar on Parliamentary Practice and Procedures at Westminster, London, which gave me the opportunity to broaden my experience and indeed the opportunity to interact with not only the Members of the House of Commons but also the Members of the House of Lords and to interact with the delegates from the 25 countries that were represented at that seminar.

I was proud to see the high esteem in which you yourself, Mr. Speaker, are held by various Speakers, including the Speaker of the House of Commons the Rt. Honourable Betty Bothroy. In giving your greetings to the Rt. Honourable Bothroy, she has asked me to return the same to you, sir. And also from the Clerk of the House of Commons, Mr. Bill McHigh, who has also asked that I return his greetings to you. You are held in very high esteem by your peers and others in the UK.

This seminar was most informative and it was a way of developing a member of this Honourable House and I would definitely recommend it to any member if the opportunity arises, for them to take advantage of it. Not only did we meet with people at that level, but we had the opportunity to visit the Prime Minister's residence at 10 Downing Street, and to also attend a Commonwealth Day celebration at the Westminster Abbey in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, and HRH the Duke of Edinburgh and to also be presented to her later in the evening at a reception at Marlboro House. I am mentioning this to see the extent to which the UK Branch of the CPA went and will go to ensure that the members of the Commonwealth get as much exposure and as much experience as possible to render them better representatives within their respective countries.

I have made a report on my visit to London on the Seminar, which I handed to the honorary secretary today and I trust that each member of this House and of the CPA, the local branch, will have an opportunity to read it.

I now wish to turn my attention to the long awaited White Paper. This White Paper, believe it or not, was not only something that was long awaited by the members of this House and the people of these islands, but indeed by all of the United Kingdom Overseas Territories. This was expressed in very strong terms at the recent seminar I attended in the UK. Some of those questioning the release of this paper were more interested than we are in some of its recommendations. Indeed, the representatives of the smallest of the overseas territories have been pushing for many years for citizenship in the UK. It would seem to me that this is not a very strong desire of the people of these islands, even though it has been expressed to me that our people would like the freedom to travel free of any visa or other restrictions to the UK and other European countries.

The White Paper was presented by the Foreign Secretary (I might have called him the Commonwealth Secretary earlier), Sir Robin Cook, of the House of Commons on Wednesday, 17th March, just a couple of days ago. It is entitled "Partnership for Progress and Prosperity." In reading this I believe that the intent of the writer seems quite honourable towards the Overseas Territories. They have made it quite clear that they are not pushing all of these recommendations down our throats.

Because this is a White Paper, and not a final position taken by the House of Commons, I would hope that our government will respond with its views to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to Mr. Cook, on the position of the Cayman Islands on this matter. I would have wished to see the decision taken on the basis of a referendum on all these issues. But unfortunately a referendum has not yet been allowed to pass in this House. I know that provision is made in the Constitution so that the necessary legislation can be put in place, and I do hope that this is an issue where the government bench and the opposition can sit together and reach a consensus. It's too important for party politics, for bipartisan bickering. This is a matter that we should sit and discuss in the Committee Room so that we can reach a consensus and put forward our joint views.

Page 3 of the statement that was made by Mr. Robin Cook the Foreign Secretary deals with citizenship. He said here, and I quote, "There is a strong sense of grievance in many Overseas Territories that their right of abode in Britain was taken away from them and that is felt particularly strongly in St. Helena. The residents of the Overseas Territories are proud of their connection with Britain but often puzzled that Britain appears not to be proud to have them as British citizens."

He went on to say, "I can announce today that we will be offering British citizenship to all those residents of the Overseas Territories who wish to take it up." So it is open to those territories that may wish to take up British citizenship. Further he said, "This improved status will be welcomed throughout the Overseas Territories. It will give its residents the right to travel freely throughout the European Union and will enable their young people to support themselves through work experience while they study in Britain." Up to this point that was not possible. One had to obtain a work permit to be able to study as a student.

He said, "We do not expect this change in status to result in any substantial number taking up permanent residence in the United Kingdom. Seventy per cent of the citizens of the Overseas Territories have a higher per capita income than the United Kingdom and their residents, and they have no incentive to leave on a permanent basis." This point I am going to make from Mr. Cook's statement is very important. He said, "The offer of right of abode will be on a non-reciprocal basis."

What that means is that even if the people of these islands opted for citizenship which it seems they do not want at this time, at least not the majority of the people I have spoken to, even if they opted for it, the UK would not in turn expect that their citizens could have a right of abode in the Cayman Islands. One of the fears was that as a small country with less than 40,000 people, if the UK with the population level they have allowed their citizens the right of abode in these islands, it could destroy the economy and the lifestyle of our people. And they are aware of our fear in this respect. That is the reason why they are stating—and have stated categorically—that the offer of right of abode will be on a non-reciprocal basis.

The Speaker: If this is a convenient time, we shall take the luncheon break. We shall suspend until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.52 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.27 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The Third Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

When we took the lunch break I had begun to speak on the subject of the White Paper that was recently published by the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Sir Robin Cook. I had touched on the subject of citizenship. I now wish to move onto the subject of our international obligations under the White Paper as stated in the White Paper.

The White Paper states the following in regard to the international obligations of the UK Overseas Territories. It says, "The White Paper demonstrates that the United Kingdom is fully committed to meeting its obligations to the Overseas Territories. Any partnership must have obligations on both parts. The United Kingdom accepts its responsibility for the defence of the Overseas Territories and for their international representation. In return we have to insist on the governments of the Overseas Territories fulfilling their obligations to meet the standards of international organisations in which the United Kingdom represents. There are two issues which are our priority in meeting these obligations." And these are the words of Mr. Cook, the Secretary for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The first obligation for these territories is to match with international standards in financial regulations. It states, "Many Overseas Territories have made substantial progress in proper and transparent regulations of their large financial sectors. They have recognised that a sound reputation for financial regulation is a prime asset in maintaining the prosperity of a sound financial sector."

It goes on to say, "Nevertheless, some Overseas Territories do not yet fully meet international stan- dards. We will therefore be requiring all overseas territories by the end of this year [that is by the end of 1999] to meet in full international standards on money laundering, transparency, and cooperation with law enforcement authorities and independent financial regulation.” I believe that in the Cayman Islands we have covered most of these questions.

“The globalisation of international finance means that we cannot tolerate a weak link anywhere in the chain without exposing investors to risk.”

The second obligation that Mr. Cook referred to is one that the Cayman Islands might have some problems with. This is on the question of human rights. It states, “Overseas Territories that choose to remain British must abide by the same standards of human rights and good governance that we demand of ourselves. We require our Overseas Territories to maintain legislation that fully complies with the European Convention on Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to which the United Kingdom is a party.”

And here it spells out very clearly what they are talking about. It says specifically “We require changes in the law in a minority of Overseas Territories which retain corporal punishment and criminalise consensual homosexual acts in private.”

Mr. Speaker, we have sent a clear message to the world, including the UK, what our position is on tolerance towards open homosexual acts. Here they are saying that this specifically refers to consensual homosexual acts in private. There are many of us, and many of the churches, that would still not wish to see such a provision in any of our laws. But we will have to think very carefully whether Constitutionally we have the authority to prevent the UK from implementing such a law if it is their wish to do so, and we will therefore have no choice but to abide by it.

One can remember the position taken by the UK by Order in Council on the question of the death penalty. In that case there were many in the Cayman Islands who felt that the death penalty should remain on our books. But as long as we were a territory of the UK we had to comply with the same standards the UK set for itself. In a way, one can understand that this is not that unreasonable. If we wish to remain an Overseas Territory of the UK whatever laws are god for them we may have to also accept here in the Cayman Islands, especially as it relates to human rights.

This section goes on, “Our strong preference is that the Overseas Territories should enact the necessary reforms themselves. But we are ready to make such reforms by Order in Council if they fail to do so.” That’s very clear. Even though we know that the churches are opposed to homosexuality in these islands or encouraging homosexuals to come here in large numbers, and even though the average Caymanian, I would daresay the average resident here, is opposed to it, in the long run if the UK decides that they are going to accept this in the UK, they have the power, Constitutionally, to force the Cayman Islands and any of its territories, to a certain extent Bermuda, to tow the line if they so wish. I feel that on the basis of this report, that on the question of consensual homosexual acts in private that we are getting the message, although somewhat veiled, that they will in fact insist that we make the necessary law reforms to incorporate this in our laws.

I do hope that I am wrong on this assumption, but based on the reading of this statement from the Secretary of State, Mr. Robin Cook, I have no doubt that they mean exactly what they say. As long as we are an Overseas Territory of the UK, because of our Constitutional position, the final say will not be ours in these matters.

The White Paper also speaks to the question of modernisation. There is no question that the Labour Government has as one of its principle objectives to modernise not only the political process, but also as far as the UK is concerned to make the UK . . . as they say to re-establish Britain as a leading international player. And in so doing, whatever direction is given to her territories to tow the line, these directives will have to be complied with.

The White Paper states, on the question of modernisation, “The Government [meaning the UK Government] is committed to modernisation.” We have already seen the position taken on hereditary peers in the House of Lords. They have taken a very strong position on that. And in a way, I cannot personally say that I object to this for various reasons. I am one who has always felt that if you are going to fill those high political positions then they should be earned. In that regard, I am unable to fault them for the position they are taking in modernising and reforming the House of Lords. But that’s not a direct concern of mine at this time. My major concern is how these reforms and the modernisation will effect these islands.

The Paper goes on to say that “Modernisation is at the core of the Labour Government’s vision, its direction, and its policies. We are applying this process of modernisation systematically—to the economy, to the health service, to education, to crime prevention and to jobs. Modernisation is at the heart of our approach to renewing the framework of Britain: to new representational arrangements in Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, and London, and to new administrative arrangements in England. We are recasting the constitutional settlement to bring power closer to people.”

It goes on to say, “We are also reforming our relations with the rest of the world. We have ended Britain’s isolation in Europe, with increasingly tangible results. We have re-established Britain as a leading international player, prepared to take tough decisions to deal with complex and pointed international difficulties—and where necessary, to back them up with action.”

“Britain’s mutual relationship with the Overseas Territories must be seen in this context: within the overall framework of modernisation and reform, and within Britain’s new international role. As participants in the new global order and the new global economy, the Overseas Territories themselves must embrace reform and modernisation.”

I would like to read that again, “As participants in the new global order and the new global economy, the Overseas Territories themselves must embrace reform and modernisation. Britain must ensure that its structures and its practices are reformed and modernised. The relationship between Britain and the Overseas Territories needs to be effective and efficient, free and fair. It needs to be based on decency and democracy. Both Britain and the Overseas Territories have much to contribute to each other. They have done so in the past. They must continue to do so now, and in the future.”

It says here, Mr. Speaker, “The Territories should administer themselves in accordance with their constitutions and in full respect for those of the UK’s international obligations relevant to them.” This is basically telling us that any international obligation that Britain has entered into, like the OECD Report, the statements by the G7 ministers, and the EU initiatives, will all have to be respected by their territories. It is also telling us that in addition to any financial obligations that the UK will expect the Cayman Islands to comply with any international obligation they have entered into on human rights. And one such obligation as I have mentioned is the whole question of consensual homosexual acts in private.

Whether this is a White Paper and it is now for our government, if they feel strongly enough about this issue, to petition the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in this behalf and on other matters that we are not happy about. I feel that the Executive Council members should meet with the other members of this House, either in this forum or in the Committee Room, once we have all read this paper, and discuss what position we are going to take on it so that our government can make a representation to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Also, I have been reminded by one of my good colleagues that we do have a committee now appointed to deal with the Dependent Territories. Maybe this is the proper forum to deal with this review. Regardless of what position is taken, I feel that this matter should be dealt with without any undue delay.

It is not my intention to touch on all of the areas of the White Paper, because it is quite a lengthy report. But I felt that I would deal with those two issues because they have been highlighted in the report as the two key issues which are a priority in our meeting the obligations that the UK has referred to. As I stated earlier, the first obligation is the financial regulations, and the second is in regard to compliance with the human rights convention.

There is one section of this report that causes me some concern. Hopefully the Second Official Member if he speaks (or even in private) can discuss this matter. It is on page 24 of the report. It is included in the area dealing with the key components of the regulatory package we wish to see in place by the end of 1999. There are not many, so I will just go through these particular points. They are: legislation for the effective regulation of the offshore sector which fully meets accepted international standards. I think that we have demonstrated in many respects that we are the leaders in ensuring that we comply and that we enact proper regulations to regulate our financial sector.

We were the leaders with the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty as I said earlier, in 1986, and more recently government is to be commended for the enactment of the Proceeds of Criminal Conduct Law. Reference was also made in the White Paper of the strides being made by the Cayman Islands with certain needed reforms such as the re-invention, Vision 2008, Financial Reforms, the Information Committee that we have set up and so on. We have been leading out with necessary reforms.

The second point that they are asking for in the package is a comprehensive measure to combat money laundering which extends to all financial institutions and the introduction of legislation to improve regulations of information of company formation, agents and managers. We are way ahead in having led out already with this type of legislation. So we are the leaders. And some of the other UKOTs have followed our example, such as the BVI and, to an extent, the Turks and Caicos Islands. I know that even Bermuda, who is considered to be the senior Overseas Territory, has also examined some of our legislation. Right now I know that they are looking at our Marine Conservation Laws. As a matter of fact, one of the MPs from Bermuda recently asked me to let him have a copy of our law because they would like to model theirs on the basis of our own laws here.

The reason I mention that is to make the point that we in the Cayman Islands are not following, we are leading. We are trying our best to comply with international standards and regulations. I am not going to suggest that we do not have our problems here. But neither can London state that they don’t have problems in their market which is perhaps the second largest in the world. They also have a problem and we are trying our very best to keep our financial sector as clean as possible.

This is the section (which I am going to read) that causes me some concern. It states, “Powers to ensure that whatever the secrecy laws, regulators and law enforcement in those Overseas Territories with financial sectors can cooperate properly with their overseas counterparts including on investigation and enforcement matters.”

It states as a key component of the regulatory package that (and I will read this again), “Powers to ensure that whatever the secrecy laws, regulators and law enforcement in those Overseas Territories with financial sectors [such as the Cayman Islands] can cooperate properly with their overseas counterparts including on investigation and enforcement matters.”

What I would like to see clarified in that is whether the regulators in London or the United States or any of the OECD countries will be able to demand from regulators in the Cayman Islands that they be provided with information without going through the same procedures that they would have to follow under the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty. That is a very serious matter. I trust that our Second Official Member, the Attorney General, is making note of this because I would like to discuss this with him further and we need to have this particular point clarified. It is a very serious matter.

The next two points read, "Licensing and regulatory regimes for all financial activity that creates conditions for fair competition between Overseas Territories." As far as I am concerned, we already have this in place. We are functioning as an autonomous area from other Overseas Territories and we do deal with fair competition.

The last point was the establishment of independent regulatory authorities meeting accepted international standards. Again, we have complied with this in making the Monetary Authority an independent body, which is an autonomous body. So we have complied in all respects with the key components of the regulatory package that they wish to see in place at the end of this year. The one that bothers me, and to have clarified, whether the regulators in London, the United States and other major countries can demand to obtain information from regulators in the Cayman Islands without having to go through the same process they would under the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty. I trust, as I mentioned earlier that we can have further clarification on this by our legal advisor, the Second Official Member.

There is another area that I wish to refer to and it is on page 12 of the report. It has to do with the political forum, and that is the Overseas Territories Consultative Council, which will be comprised of British Ministers and Chief Ministers, with the first meeting to commence in September or October this year. This is on page 12, chapter 2, paragraph 2.4 and it reads, "The partnership will be based [speaking on the partnership of progress and prosperity between the UK and the Territories] on consultation and mutual understanding. A new political forum, the Overseas Territories Consultative Council, will be set up bringing together British Ministers and Chief Ministers and, where there is no ministerial system, elected members of Legislative Councils from the Overseas Territories to discuss matters of common concern."

Because of our peculiar Constitutional position we do not yet have a Chief Minister. So I guess the closest to that would probably be the Leader of Government Business. No doubt he will be invited to this Consultative Council. But I feel that whoever is appointed through government should make every effort to attend.

It goes on to say, "It will meet annually. Every other year, the Council will meet immediately before the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting to allow our representatives to attend in full knowledge of the views of the governments of the Overseas Territories. We plan to hold the first meeting of the Council in September/October 1999." I trust that we will hear more from government on what its position will be on becoming a member of this Overseas Territories Consultative Council. I believe that the unity of these members working together on matters of common interest can only enhance our position on certain matters especially in regard to matters such as the OECD, G7 and EU initiatives.

Regarding the new partnership it also says, and we notice this already, that instead of being called "Dependent Territories" we will be properly known as the United Kingdom Overseas Territories (UKOTs) or Overseas Territories for short.

That will be our name from here on. On the question of financial regulation the White Paper states that a checklist of regulatory measures for the territories to bring their financial regulation up to internationally accepted standards would be drawn up. The Overseas Territories would be invited to present proposals for the independent and properly resourced regulatory authorities. I have already spoken on their position on human rights and as stated by the Foreign Secretary there is no question that the UK is committed to going ahead and honouring their commitments under international obligations such as the Human Rights Convention of the European countries.

I trust that serious attention will be given by government on those particular points I have raised from the White Paper and that they will bring together both sides of this House so that we can discuss this crucial matter. They have also spoken on another important issue which has to do with financial control and in particular on the question of borrowing. I intend to speak on this later on, so I will refer to this particular issue when I reach that particular point. But at this time I would like to make reference to certain points raised by His Excellency in his Throne Speech. I refer to page 10, dealing with the health services.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the honourable Minister of Health for the fine job he is doing in his ministry and the good job he has done in regard to the health services. I have spoken to him privately on this and I think it's only fair that I should also speak to him through this medium, congratulating him accordingly. But there are a few matters that are of concern to me that I will raise after reading what His Excellency had to say here. He said, "The new Cayman Islands Health Services Complex will be officially opened in March. With greatly improved facilities and equipment and a renewed emphasis on meeting the needs of patients and their families, the community will receive an enhanced level of health care."

"The accident and emergency unit will be physically separated from the outpatient services and the department will be able to provide enhanced general practice service with additional "by appointment" doctors' clinics."

I would like to associate myself with the comments made in today's Caymanian Compass, where it says, "Lifesavers are prize winners," and to congratulate the Public Health Department team on winning the Governor Owen Award. If for no other reason, I wish to congratulate the minister in that his department, under his watch, was able to do a good for this country that had not been done before. I will read this so that I can be more specific. It says, "A Public Health Department team has won the $6,000 top prize in the inaugural 'Governor Owen Award for excellence in public service reinvention.' The team's efforts were directed toward women" at risk from cervical cancer. Their goal was to raise from 25% to 90% the number of such women who would have the Pap smear test which can detect pre-cancerous changes that are easily treated before cancer develops.” The public health department is to be congratulated for this lifesaving service they are providing the people of these islands. I think that it was well in order and that they were worthy of being chosen award winners for excellence in the public service reinvention programme.

What I am going to say now, I have already said to the honourable minister so he is aware of the complaints that I have personally received. Notwithstanding all of the good that is being done, there are still certain areas that need serious attention. I have received several complaints on the bad service being received at the hospital, not only from the doctors but also from some of the nurses. Let me make it quite clear that this is only coming and being applied to a minority of the staff because I do believe that the majority of the doctors and nurses are providing a very good service. But the old saying goes one bad apple can spoil the whole keg of apples.

Many of my constituents have told me that they have had to spend very long hours waiting to see a doctor. One patient told me that she took her child up there after the child had fallen and she thought the child had broken or fractured her arm, she sat there for hours and in the end a nurse gave her a prescription for some Tylenol and sent her back home without even having the child's arm x-rayed. I believe this is happening only in a minority of cases because I know that most of the doctors and nurses at the hospital and my experience has been that most of them are very dedicated and good doctors and nurses. But I would ask the honourable Minister if he could look into this matter with his Chief Medical Officer and the Chief Nursing Officer and others to see if this issue can be resolved. We now have new facilities but these facilities will not matter very much if the service is flawed. So I would ask the Minister to please look into this matter. I would also ask him to let them know that a nice smile and answer can create miracles, there is no need for rudeness to any patient who goes to that establishment for help.

I don't want my colleagues on this side to think that I am putting too many accolades on any member of government because they are our opposition. But fairness is fairness, and I feel that it's only fair that I should congratulate the same minister for his strides with the drug abuse prevention and rehabilitation programme. I know, because I have been asked to serve on a committee, that he is personally involved in these programmes. It is one thing to get your staff to do things, but it is another to get personally involved. That is why I do believe that the Reinvention, and the 2008 programmes launched by the Governor were such a success, because the Governor himself has been right on top of everything. Not only is he Chairman of the strategic integration group, but he personally visits all the roundtable functions to see that things are going in the right order. I would recommend this to the ministers and members of Executive Council.

When your portfolios are involved in these kinds of public matters, you should get as involved as possible.

I have said in this honourable House before that regardless of the good work being done on the level of rehabilitation it will become as naught if there is no follow up on these people being rehabilitated. I speak specifically of prisoners who have served their time in Northward Prison and are released back into society, who have gone through the rehabilitation programme, many of whom are fit to be released back into society. Unfortunately, many of those ex-prisoners are not given a fair chance because when they return to society they are not even given the opportunity. And I am not speaking about all cases, I don't know about all cases. I am speaking about those who have spoken to me and I understand that in the majority of cases a number of those ex-convicts, those individuals who come out with a fairly clean slate after being rehabilitated are not given the chance to get a decent job. I also understand that government may be one of the biggest culprits when it comes to this problem. But I know that it is being worked on and I would ask that the ministers responsible, as this may span more than one portfolio, insist that their staff do all within their power to assist these ex-convicts especially where they have been advised that they have gone through this period of rehabilitation and that they have come out with fairly good marks. Give them a chance so that they can be brought back into society.

I think that we also need to recognise the good work that is being done by the churches in assisting these prisoners. I know of a number of the churches that visit on a regular basis. I was so happy a few days ago when I heard that a relative of mine, who unfortunately ended up in Northward Prison, had been baptised by one of the churches. He turned his heart to God and was baptised. I want to congratulate him and anything that I can do personally to help him, I will do. But for the grace of God, any one of us could be in that position. So let us not turn our backs on these individuals when they come out, but give them the right hand of fellowship and help them in every way that we can.

I know that not much mention was made in the Throne Speech about the role that CASA is playing. I would like to say that I know personally that they are playing a very valuable role in this whole process. I believe that CASA is perhaps the leader in the Youth to Youth programme. I also believe that they are making every effort to work with the National Drug Council in accomplishing their aims. I would like to congratulate them for the good job that they are doing, and all other agencies that are involved in the fight against drugs.

I would not wish to forget the contribution being made by the Canaan Land Committee. They are doing a good job indeed.

I now wish to touch on the subject that has been near and dear to me over the years. I am sure my good friend . . . I don't think he now covers the subject of Public Works, but I am sure he won't mind if I touch that subject. In doing so I do not want to become too controversial but I think that even the government bench would not expect me to debate the Throne Speech without making reference to Public Works and the specific question of roads.

The cry goes up again, no road plan. I am not sure that I need to say much on this because it seems that the Minister of Tourism said much of what I would have said here from the opposition bench. I wondered at one stage whether he was not a member of the opposition! Perhaps, as my good colleague said, he is making a move to dip himself seven times in the Jordan and ask us to take him in!

Mr. Roy Bodden: Aye.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I am sure that some of my colleagues would have to think long and hard.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: He's coming in now! I knew that would bring him in!

[laughter]

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: My good colleague, the Honourable Minister, doesn't like the River Jordan. So my colleague has suggested that we take him to Murk River in Jamaica, he might like that a little better.

No roads plan. This is a serious indictment on this government. I remember that ten years ago in 1989 a number of the elected ministers in Council that now make up the Executive Council were then the opposition and they were able to persuade some other good-thinking members of this House (who have since regretted their involvement with them) to scuttle the Master Ground Transportation Plan.

Before I continue on that, let me make it quite clear that the Master Ground Transportation Plan was not a Linford Pierson plan. It was not a portfolio plan. It was a plan prepared by the engineers of Public Works—the same engineers who will prepare the plan (if they ever get around to it) for this government. So when you hear about individuals trying to associate me with the MGTP, I am proud to be associated with it. But I make the distinction that I do not have the capabilities of an engineer to have prepared such a good plan. It was not my plan, but I certainly feel that it was good for these islands.

When the Master Ground Transportation Plan was presented to this House in 1989, it was made quite clear that it would have been taken in phases. The country could not have afforded to put all of the roads in place at that time. It would have had to be done exactly the way they are now trying to do ten years hence. They are using the same bits and pieces of the Master Ground Transportation Plan, the only difference is that it is costing them ten times as much now as it would have cost ten years ago. If that opposition, who are now ministers of government (not all of them, some of them, including my good friend who was then our financial advisor) . . . scuttled this good plan.

Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if you were involved in that, but I know that those members were. Had they left in place the road corridors, . . . that is the important point. Had they left in place in the composite maps those road corridors we today would not be having the problems we have in trying to find the proper corridors to put in place to alleviate the problems we are experiencing with road congestion.

We hear a lot about the Harquail Bypass. We hear a lot about the Crewe Road Bypass, but they were all part of the Master Ground Transportation Plan, and that is why I was happy to support them because I believe that it will help in alleviating the congestion on the roads. After the Master Ground Transportation Plan was scuttled my portfolio, the ministry, got together with Public Works and we decided to do a modified form of that plan which was then called the Grand Cayman Roads Improvement Plan Study (GRIPS). But again, we did not get the support of the House on this particular issue.

That was out of political vindictiveness and it was short-sighted and ten years hence the government, or the part that was responsible for destroying the Master Ground Transportation Plan and the Grand Cayman Roads Improvement Plan Study has not come forward with a proper roads plan. I am going to leave the blame for why this was not done with the ministers of Executive Council. I heard the present minister responsible for roads taking his predecessor to task. I am not going to deal with that because I think that the honourable minister said enough on that. Only to say that I trust that any government that I may in the future be a part of will not take the position of destroying plans and studies just because they have been proposed by a previous administration. But that we as good representatives will work on the foundations laid by previous governments.

Before moving from the point I was making about the changeover of the subject of roads to the Minister of Tourism, I just want to repeat something that he said. The Minister of Tourism said that their plan was going to be an affordable one. But this really cannot be so if the plan is going to be a proper one, not ten years hence. Ten years of development and the increase in land costs alone dictates that it must cost more in the long run. But I regard that statement by the Honourable Minister of Tourism with responsibility for roads to be mere political rhetoric.

We on this side of the House supported PWD construction phase 1 of the Crewe Road Bypass. We made that quite clear. This will go from near Tropical Gardens Road to Bobby Thompson Way. We are aware that most of the traffic experienced is being caused on school days. When we have the school holidays we see a significant change and reduction in the amount of traffic congestion. So this Crewe Road Bypass will make a positive impact on our road system and in alleviating the road congestion. Also, the Galleria Loop around the shopping centre which will extend the Harquail Bypass will also reduce the amount of traffic on the West Bay Road. What will be very interesting to know at the end of the day, even though a certain budget has been agreed upon for that capital works programme, is the actual cost. I suspect that it will cost considerably more than we have budgeted for.

The Speaker: If this would be a convenient time, we shall take the afternoon break. We shall suspend for 15 minutes. And please, let's be back in 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.35 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.03 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. The Third Elected Member for George Town, continuing his debate on the Throne Speech.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Continuing on the question of roads, I would just like to say on the matter I raised about the Harquail Bypass and the Crewe Road Bypass, that the Harquail Bypass had in fact been completed by the former Minister of Roads and I think a very good job was done on that. I would like though to see some more streetlights put on that road because it is very dark in the night and it could create accidents if nothing is done.

I want to also refer to the Caymanian Compass Editorial of 19th March on the question of planning future roads. I trust that all members of this honourable House read that Editorial. Even though I may sometimes touch the Caymanian Compass I think they do have thoughtful Editorials. It says, "Planning future roads: Government is finally making a start on the preparation of a new roads plan for Grand Cayman. Road plans here do not have a universally happy history—they tend to be intensely controversial.

"Still, it is imperative that plans are made well in advance to accommodate future traffic volumes.

"Grand Cayman is experiencing painfully where an absence of forward planning can lead."

Mr. Speaker, this is not only in regard to our roads, but in regard to our finances and other areas of the country's development. "The increase in traffic volume which is causing so much congestion could well have been foreseen. The Master Ground Transportation Plan and the George Town Road Plan did indeed foresee the need for more road space, though not both at the same level." As I mentioned, the George Town Road Plan was a modified version of the Master Ground Transportation Plan.

"Road works could have been begun when it was known that the island was about to run out of road for all of the registered cars to drive on. If this had been done, so many people would not have to experience the daily frustration and waste of time in slow moving traffic.

"Road construction is expensive and those who balked at the price some years ago will have to accept an even higher price now. It is hoped that politics and electioneering will be kept away from this new roads plan and its execution.

"It should be a plan based on facts and science and not partisan politics and its execution should be sensible and orderly."

That was a very well-thought-out editorial, and one I will keep because I can see that come next year, God willing, it will come in very handy when I remind the government bench that their stewardship on the road improvement is somewhat lacking. They have, I hope, put in place the long awaited roads plan, the plan we have heard about since they came to power in 1992. It is now seven years hence and we have not seen a roads plan. We even heard from the honourable Minister of Tourism that the plans we had heard were in the making he had no knowledge of.

I trust that the honourable ministers of this government will get their act together and work together in providing the country with the infrastructural facilities we so badly need.

The Throne Speech spoke in general terms about the capital and other needs of the country. Even though much of the capital programme has been budgeted for and is already in the budget, the budget is only as valid as the performance of the economy. In other words, if the economy performs to the expected standards based on previous trends, then the budget will be valid. And I have no doubt that the budget will indeed be valid because we saw from the last budget that was prepared by the Honourable Acting Third Official Member that it was correct within a few hundred dollars. I am just sorry that that honourable individual is not going to be carrying out this function in the future because he did such a very good job before. I would like to congratulate him for the fine job he has done with the budget since taking it over especially regarding the whole question of revenue projections.

As I said, a budget is just that; it is a set of figures based on speculation. It's an estimate based on past trends and future expectations. The reason I mention this is that some of the situations occurring today tend to threaten the whole economic system. Our economy is divided into two sectors, and I will show the threat to our financial industry. I have already spoken of some of them. I will also be dealing with some of the threats within the tourism industry.

I am concerned that we will come to the time for the preparation of the next budget, which will be for the year 2000, without any proper financial planning. The financial requirements of this country will not lessen. If anything they will increase. The increase in our population, the increase in demands for schools, etc., the demand on our revenue structure will increase. Yet, we are now operating under a system that has not kept pace with other infrastructural developments in the public and private sector. The financial system we are using today is the same old system in a modified form that was used from the early 1970s. Presentation is much more presentable. When I say the same system, what I mean is the same items that we placed increase of revenue on, the same items used for revenue enhancement measures. We are still using those items today.

It is a most backward and antiquated system when you compare it with the development we have seen in our overall economy. It was against this background that I suggested some months back that government should seriously consider establishing a think tank. But it seems that the whole purpose of the think tank is misunderstood at certain levels. I think in today's paper reference was made to a think tank and it said (and it is on the front page of today's paper) "A think tank was being proposed to consider the information contained in the research [referring to the research that would be carried out by the Economic and Statistics Office within the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development]. This body could not function if it did not have research information to deal with." That statement is totally wrong. That is not the purpose of a think tank, not to consider information that is collected by the Economic and Statistical unit, the purpose of the think tank is to come up with their own ideas. That is the purpose of a think tank, not to just consider ideas that have come out of the Economic and Statistics Unit.

This is why I recommended to the Finance Department that the members of that think tank should go beyond civil servants. We have a lot of talent in these islands and they should be tapped. We have a lot of brilliant people within the financial sector, within the banking, the trusts, the mutual funds, the accounting . . . you name it, we have the talent there. But I daresay that the next budget will come about and we will still be waiting to have the think tank functioning because if it is going to be established on the basis that they can only consider information that has come through the Economics and Statistical units then it will be a waste of time to appoint such a body. That body should be making recommendations to the Financial Secretary that may be considered by his Economics and Statistical unit, and not the other way around.

It seems that the very basis on which this think tank is going to be set up is flawed. Why do we need a think tank? Much has been said about it, why do we need one? We shouldn't need one because we have a lot of staff within the Economics and Statistical unit of government, a lot of brilliant people there who should have already come up with recommendations to improve the present revenue system. But because that has not been done and we have seen evidence in the last budget exercise of management by crisis it is against this background that I am beseeching them to try to tap the expertise that is available in the private sector to work together with the expertise available within government to try to come out with the best product for these islands.

Could the reluctance be due to the fact that the suggestion came from the opposition? I hope not. Whether that suggestion came from the opposition side or not, no one can dispute that it is a good suggestion and should be put into effect post haste. There is no reason why it should be held up. If I am in this House and the next budget comes around and we have the same old budgetary system, they will hear more from me because there is no reason for us to be just dragging our feet on this most important issue.

One has only to have a quick look at the whole financial process we just went through in Finance Committee and in the budget process to see how badly a proper system is needed. We looked at the rushed revenue measures that were brought through under a system of management by crisis. We know that funds are needed, yet what we are doing is through the system of taxation being applied in these islands, they tend to call it "revenue enhancement measures," but it's a tax system, an indirect form of taxation. It has the result of pushing business away from these islands because of the high cost of living.

We recently saw an indication of this with the Hotel and Restaurant Association. Everywhere you turn people are complaining about the high cost of living in these islands. What I would like to see, come our new budget (God willing) is that government supported by the backbench would have such a rich and acceptable revenue package that we would be able to reimburse certain individuals on taxation that has been paid by them or at best cancel some of those measures, reduce some of them so that the people of this country will benefit.

That is possible if the Finance and Development Department would take note of the recommendations that have been made to utilise the expertise of people in the private sector. Let's get this committee going so that they can come up with recommendations to submit to the Finance Department and see if we can get a more realistic type of revenue package so that it is not choking our people to death.

We might say if it's increased on certain items it will not hurt us. But what we don't realise is that even though we may not buy those items, because it is being generally increased the trickle down effect will affect each one of us. I trust that it will not be necessary for me to speak at length on this matter again. I trust that action will be taken and that the procrastination will cease because the only people who are hurting . . . it's not hurting me when it is ignored. It is hurting me to a certain extent, but it is hurting the general public.

Lest anyone should get the impression that things are all bad in these islands, let me just quickly clear that up. Compared with our neighbours and our competitors we are still light-years ahead in many respects. This is why I said earlier that this was one of the reasons I am not extremely fearful about our ability to cope with the OECD initiatives. Many of the standards that are required by the international countries are now in place in the Cayman Islands. There are still those areas I mentioned that must be improved.

We have had a long established reputable financial centre. And even though I may at times disagree in playing semantics with the Third Official Member on whether the Cayman Islands is a financial centre or a tax haven, deep down in my heart, as far as I am concerned, I feel that we qualify as a financial centre. The question is until such time as we can convince our friends to the north, until such time as we can convince the members of the OECD group of countries that we are a legitimate and well run financial centre they will continue to regard us as just an ordinary tax haven with all of the negative connotations that apply to such a regime. But within the Cayman Islands we have an efficient and well run supervisory regime, one of the best in the world. I believe that this can be said without fear of successful contradiction.

The rule of law is maintained and manifest in all aspects of our operation. We maintain an independent judiciary. We respect the division of powers. Above all, we have one of the highest levels of skilled human resources you will find in any financial centre. I believe it is true to say that the Cayman Islands perhaps have one of the highest levels of per capital number of individuals within the financial section compared with the size of our population. This would compare favourably to anywhere in the world.

On my recent trip to London, some of my colleagues were very amazed to learn that with less than 40,000 people we are the fifth largest offshore [centre]. Some people say we are the eighth, but I contend that we are the fifth largest financial offshore operation. I was happy to be able to say that the reason for this is that we operate a stable government and a sound financial centre.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: We have reached the hour of 4.30. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment. The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

STANDING ORDER 72(8)

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 72(8), the consent of the House is required for a select committee to sit, the leave of the House rather, during the tenure of the House. I would just move a motion that the House do grant leave and consent to have Wednesday for the select committee on elections and perhaps whatever others that may need to go on that day, sir.

The Speaker: I shall put the question. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: LEAVE GRANTED FOR SELECT COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING TENURE OF HOUSE.

The Speaker: Will you move the adjournment?

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Boddan: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Thursday at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Thursday, 25 March. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.35 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 25 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
THURSDAY
25 MARCH 1999
10.25 AM

[Prayers read by the Fourth Elected Member for George Town]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies for late arrival from the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Deferred question 14 is standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

DEFERRED QUESTION 14

No. 14: Mr. Linford A. Pierson asked the Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs to state the names of the members of the committee responsible for the government's recent civil service salaries review, which included all elected members of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The names of the members of the committee responsible for the government's recent civil service salaries review, which included all elected members of the Legislative Assembly, are as follows:

1. Mr Joel Walton – Chairman
2. Mrs Joy Basdeo
3. Mrs Jenny Manderson
4. The President or designated representative of the Cayman Islands Civil Service Association
5. The President or designated representative of the Cayman Islands Public Service Managers Association Ltd
6. Mr Graham Wood

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I wish to thank the honourable First Official Member for his answer. I wonder if he can confirm that no politicians, that is no elected members of this House were involved in the exercise connected with the recent salaries review.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there were no elected representatives at all appointed to the salary review committee.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: As a result of elected members' refusal to accept the salary increase there was an anomaly created between the salaries of Ministers on Executive Council and their secretaries, and also in connection with the Official Members, with the exclusion of the Chief Secretary, in regard to salaries. Would the Honourable First Official Member state whether government has any intention of trying to correct this anomaly?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, it is quite correct that there is an anomaly between the salaries of ministers and their permanent secretaries once the salary increase is awarded. Certainly, there is also an anomaly in my opinion because of non-payment of the increase to other elected representatives. It is my view that every man and woman is worthy of his or her hire, and I have always tried to live by the view of an honest day's pay for an honest day's work. I believe that honourable ministers and members of this House are putting in very honest and very hard days' work and should be paid for it. It is my hope that the earlier decision to not pay the increase to elected representatives will be reversed and that they will be paid.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Would the honourable member state whether it is the intention of government to bring this matter back to Finance Committee as early as possible?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: I expressed a personal view in my last answer. I can only express that personal view. As the honourable member asking the question knows it is a collective decision of the Finance Committee—of which I am not a member. But it is my hope that it will be brought back in the very near future and agreed.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can the Honourable First Official Member give us an indication of the title of the members he named as being on that salary review committee?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The Chairman of that committee is the Deputy Financial Secretary, currently the honourable Acting Third Official Member sitting in the House. The second person is the Permanent Secretary for Education. The third person on the list is the Permanent Secretary of Personnel, and the other two members I named by title already. Finally, the secretary to that committee is the Deputy Permanent Secretary of Personnel.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can the honourable member say if the committee is still continuing to assess the pay structure within the civil service and whether or not the continuing review is soliciting input from lower grades in the civil service?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: No, not the committee that I spoke about earlier. The committee which was the subject of the substantive question was the committee appointed to carry out the salary review. But subsequent to that, a salary advisory group was appointed and that group with the assistance of staff in the Personnel Department and the Budget and Management Unit is still carrying out investigative work in regard to the salaries of individual civil servants.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries we will move on to question 22 standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 22

No. 22: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources what caused the cloudiness in the North Sound waters extending from Owen Roberts Airport to Salt Creek on 26th October, 1998.

Hon. John B. McLean: All government offices were closed on Monday 26 October due to hurricane Mitch, so the Department of Environment did not directly observe this situation. However, due to prevailing weather conditions at the time and the extended period of heavy rainfall resulting in substantial land runoff carrying considerable quantities of sediment and fine particulate matter, it would not have been unusual for cloudiness to exist in that area of the North Sound.

Additionally, heavy wave activity continually erodes unconsolidated exposed coastlines and dredging activity over many years could all be contributing factors to the cloudiness experienced.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister say whether the Department of Environment monitors such conditions and whether it has been established that these kinds of conditions bear any detriment to either the sea life or the flora of the surrounding areas?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes, the department continues to monitor situations where there are such conditions and takes the necessary action to try to ensure that if it is something that can be stopped it is stopped. But I believe in the instance we are speaking of here there was very little that they could do. I still appreciate the question from the member.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: In the substantive answer the minister addressed unconsolidated exposed coastlines. Can the honourable minister state whether or not it is a preferable situation that there be some type of retaining wall erected where there is reclaimed land on the coastline of the North Side?

The Speaker: I wonder if you are asking for his personal opinion, or a professional opinion.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, sir, I was not asking the minister's opinion, I was asking the professional . . . Well, when I asked it if it was more desirable or preferable, I was talking about what the department's position is on that.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: As I pointed out, the department tries to work closely with developers especially in cases like the member is speaking of. As far as I am concerned, I believe I am correct in saying that they would endeavour to encourage developers to cap an area like that so that we would not have the silting. But I will give the undertaking to answer his question properly to get that information from the department rather than me standing here and giving an opinion.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I happen to know that from a professional standpoint it is considered the best route to take. My first question was to lead up to this question: This being the case, can the minister then state why Executive Council would hold up an application for almost one year for such a retaining wall to be placed on an area that was dredged and is known to have (as the minister stated in his answer) "substantial land runoff carrying considerable quantities of sediment whenever there is rough weather"?

The Speaker: I understand the question, but I do not think that is a supplementary out of the substantive question. If the minister wishes to answer he may. The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources. (pause)

Any further supplementaries? The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I didn't fully understand what you said, could you explain—

The Speaker: I said that the question you posed did not come out of the substantive answer, and that is the purpose for a supplementary question. It is outside the ambit of this question. He can answer if he so desires, and he desires not to. So you may ask another question.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Thank you.

Can the honourable minister state if the department responsible has at any time made observations to his ministry regarding such substantial land runoff offering any possible solutions for this prevailing problem?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: I believe that the department in question has constantly monitored areas such as this and whenever it is seen that an area is actually becoming a detriment to the North Sound, or any other area around the island, they will definitely take the necessary steps to make sure that the developers or whoever in question corrects it. It is my understanding that the department has constantly done this and that's as much as I can say on it.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I accept that I run a risk here, sir, so I will have to take whatever comes after this from you or anyone else. However, I am going to proceed and I am going to be very specific.

Can the honourable minister state if the application to put a seawall on the piece of property adjacent to the North Sound Dock which was reclaimed by Mike Simmons was passed through the department and if they gave their considered opinion back to the ministry when the application was being dealt with that this was something that was correct and proper to do?

The Speaker: I would like to say that I think this would require a substantive question to be set down if you require an answer.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, that is fine sir. I have been known to wait for much longer periods of time than the next meeting to get answers to my questions. So I will follow your instructions sir.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Fourth Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. D. Dalmain Ebanks: Thank you.

I just wanted to ask the minister if there is a law pertaining to the building of these seawalls along the North Sound coast.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Normally the procedure is that applications would go in to Planning, then on to Executive Council and consideration would be given either for or against what the seawall actually entails, distance from the sea, and things such as that.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Item 4 on today's Order Paper, Government Business. Continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech, delivered by His Excellency Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on 19th February 1999. The Third Elected Member for George Town, continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON FRIDAY, 19th FEBRUARY, 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

On the adjournment of this honourable House on Monday, I had covered a number of topics relating to the Throne Speech in my contribution. One small observation in regard to the Throne Speech and the Budget Debate is that breaks, like we've had over the past two days, create a nuisance to the person debating. I speak specifically of Tuesday being used for ExCo (which has been a longstanding arrangement), and the more recent arrangement where Wednesdays will now be used for Committee meetings. But I am sure that we can meet as a House and decide how best we can resolve that matter.

I have mentioned to a number of my colleagues that it was my intention to raise a few matters regarding the operations of the House which would entail an amendment to the Standing Orders, and no doubt in certain sections of the Constitution. I note that very urgent action has been taken by somebody to make some of the same amendments and that this paper has been circulated for members' perusal. I am happy for that because it will indeed reinforce the suggestions that I will make in my debate. I do feel that with all of the modernisation processes and the reforms now underway by government that it is high time that we have a serious look at our Standing Orders. As I mentioned, we may have to also make consequential amendments to the Constitution.

I had touched on some important subjects such as the Vision 2008, and the OECD Report which was published in the papers on Tuesday, and I want to thank the Caymanian Compass for the very comprehensive report they gave on that. I trust that they will likewise give a fairly comprehensive report on my remarks on the White Paper that was recently published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary, Mr. Robin Cook. I do see that White Paper as having a major impact on the people of these islands. As I have spoken on that already I will not repeat myself except to say that I trust government will take the necessary action in dealing with some of the key issues relating to that White Paper as soon as possible.

In dealing with the economy I had mentioned the need for the strengthening and expansion of the revenue base and the creation and appointment of a think tank. I had explained the need and the objectives of creating such a committee that would assist the Economic and Statistics Office within the Finance and Development Department.

In my discourse on the economy I mentioned that even though there were certain weaknesses within our financial system—in particular the revenue structure, or revenue base of government—we had many pluses, and that these pluses placed us far ahead of many of our competitors. Indeed, we may be the leaders at this point in time in the region.

One of the areas that I mentioned as a plus for the Cayman Islands was our efficient supervisory regime. But I was somewhat taken aback when I read an article in the Caymanian Compass yesterday regarding the position that one of the OECD countries is taking regarding their bank regulatory regimes, keeping a close eye on the operation of their clients in regard to the concern about money laundering. In fact, the authorities and even the senate took a serious position on this. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to find that article.

It was on the 5th page of the Caymanian Compass yesterday, and it reads, "US Bank proposal draws criticism." I was very surprised to know that the United States—being one of the leading members of the OECD—would take this position, especially in view of the recent report they published in respect to financial centres such as the Cayman Islands and others that they regard as tax havens.

I would just like to refer to this article. It was written in Washington and it reads: "U.S. banking regulators Tuesday were expected to start dropping proposals that would have required banks to keep a closer eye on their customers to try to spot illegal activities like money-laundering. The proposed 'Know Your Customer' rules drew fire from Congress, the banking industry and the public with opponents saying there would be a serious violation of personal privacy."

That is coming from the United States! They are concerned about the violation of personal privacy: yet they are attacking the small financial centres like the Cayman Islands.

I would just like to continue to read here, Mr. Speaker. "They would have extended existing rules requiring banks to report suspicious transactions, making them set up systems to screen customers and monitor accounts for 'unusual' activity."

"Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) Chairwoman Donna Tanoue said last week she would recommend that her agency withdraw the proposals at its Board meeting Tuesday, and would urge other regulators involved to follow suit. She said the FDIC had received over 200,000 comments on the proposal, most from private individuals hostile to them."

"None of the agencies could have predicted the enormous concern and the volume of comments that would have been filed on a single bank regulatory issue," Tanoue said. 'I think it's the whole notion of personal privacy that so concerned consumers, and that is a lesson that everyone—the bankers and the regulators—should heed as we work on issues relating to privacy.'

"The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the chief regulator of nationally-chartered banks, has taken a similar position. Comptroller John Hawke told a House Judiciary subcommittee 4 March the proposals should be withdrawn when the comment period ended. 'Any marginal advantages to law enforcement in this proposal are strongly outweighed by its potential for inflicting lasting damage on our banking system,' he said."

"The U.S. Senate subsequently voted [listen to this, Mr. Speaker] to scuttle the rules, appending a provision to an education bill to prohibit the regulators from implementing them."

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the same people who are telling us it is not suitable for the regulators and the government to interfere in the banking system of the United States are trying to squeeze financial centres such as the Cayman Islands. I regard that as downright hypocrisy. Even though this was published in yesterday's Caymanian Compass I would like to table this article so that all members can have a copy of it.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: The United States of America is one of the key members of OECD and they themselves are objecting to any intrusion within the secrecy of their banking system. Yet they are the first ones (and some of the key individuals) to bring pressure on areas such as the Cayman Islands, Bermuda, and other financial centres to divulge confidential information. That is what I refer to as a double standard.

I also mentioned that in addition to a very efficient supervisory regime the Cayman Islands complies with all of the stated standard procedures followed internationally by banking regulators, such as the maintenance of the rule of law, a respect for the division of powers, an independent judiciary; and we have skilled human resources to support our centre. Above all, we are blessed to be very well located geographically.

There is one particular point that causes me some concern nonetheless, and that is our position in regard to our public debt and our contingent liabilities. This concern is mainly due to the fact that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has come down with a strict position on the contingent liabilities of its Overseas Territories. The most recent report I have is that our contingent liability (and I am speaking about the 1997 figures, as I have not yet seen the 1998 figures) is somewhere around $157 million. I would quickly say, before that is taken out of context, that that $157 million includes $127 million, which represents the shortfall in the public pension fund. So that should be understood. But I do know that efforts are being made to try to bring that public pension fund up to the required standard as soon as possible. I must say that I am also aware that in recent years a direct focus has been made in this respect.

What is also of concern is the growing public debt, which I am reliably informed is in the region of some $101 million. Even though, based on the ability of these islands to service the public debt, we are still within the 10% ceiling. Nonetheless, I feel that we should seriously start looking at the borrowings within these islands. I think it would also be important for government to have a look at what Mr. Robin Cook had to say about borrowing in the White Paper.

There is specific concern in the UK relating to contingent liabilities in its Overseas Territories. This was brought out by the select committee on the Public Accounts in their 37th Report which came out sometime in June last year. Again with your permission, I would just like to mention, for the Hansards of the House, some of these concerns. The article I am referring to is the 37th Report of the Select Committee on the Public Accounts of the United Kingdom. It is captioned "Foreign and Commonwealth Office Contingent Liabilities in the Dependent Territories." It is the introduction and summary of their conclusions and recommendations.

"Following the return of Hong Kong to the Peoples Republic of China on 1 July 1997, there now remain 13 Dependent Territories for which the United Kingdom Government has direct responsibility. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office are responsible to Parliament for the good government of the Territories, including their proper financial management.

"Under English and Dependent Territory law, the Dependent Territory governments are answerable for their own actions. If the Territories' resources are insufficient, the United Kingdom Government may come under pressure to provide assistance. It is, however, difficult to draw up a definitive list of all the circumstances that could result in potential liabilities for the United Kingdom taxpayer.

"On the basis of a report, together with two subsequent memoranda by the Comptroller and Auditor General, the Committee took evidence from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department for International Development and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. We focused our enquiries on the actual and contingent liabilities for the United Kingdom taxpayer which have arisen, or may arise, in the Dependent Territories.

"The United Kingdom usually has responsibility for the Dependent Territories' external affairs, defence, law and order, the public service and compliance with international treaties. Such responsibilities are significant in themselves and the way they are handled will reflect on the international reputation of the United Kingdom. They can also result in heavy financial costs to the United Kingdom if, for example, the Territory incurs international commitments greater than it can afford to pay out of its own resources, . . ." This is the main concern. I would like to repeat that. Speaking of the contingent liabilities and public debt, ". . . they can also result in heavy financial costs to the United Kingdom if, for example, the territory incurs international commitments greater than it can afford to pay out of its own resources or if it fails to manage its internal affairs prudently.

"We are therefore worried by the mismatch between the extent of these responsibilities and the adequacy of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's powers, strong in theory but limited in practice, to manage them. As a result of this mismatch, the United Kingdom taxpayer continues to be exposed to very significant liabilities in the Territories and, from time to time, these materialise. More generally, we are concerned at the Foreign Office's admission that everything is not wholly under control and that all risks are not weighed and properly covered."

I will not continue to read this article, but the rest of it continues along a similar line. The United Kingdom Government is concerned that its Overseas Territories will exceed their borrowing powers, or not get into a financial straight where the United Kingdom taxpayers may be called upon to pay for their excesses. It is against this background that I am so concerned about the very poor financial stewardship of our general reserves.

If we had a catastrophe in these islands tomorrow, the general reserves . . . and I am not speaking about the general reserves for pensioners, as mentioned by one of my honourable friends, I am speaking about reserves that are available to be used by the Treasury. We heard in this honourable House that this amounts to approximately $12.5 million. That equates to approximately three week's recurrent expenditure. This is a very bad indictment on the government considering that we have contingent liabilities of $157 million and our public debt is well over $100 million: Yet, we have only about $12.5 million in our general reserves.

It is not good enough for government to take the position that when all other expenses are met then whatever is left will be put in general reserves. I feel that the government should take the position like it does, for instance with pensions, that X amount each year will be placed in reserves regardless of where they have to cut expenses. There is no use in government making promises that this will be done as soon as possible. This is an urgent matter that should be given very top priority. This is my concern over the very poor financial position we are in.

It is more of a concern when one considers that we are nearing the end of our boom period. We have experienced a boom period in these islands ever since this present government took power in 1992. And this continues into the present time. This has not been caused through any financial or economic mechanism of government. We have been the lucky recipients of the financial and economic boom in the United States.

If government can state what economic mechanisms they have put in place, the lowering of interest rates or whatever, then I will give them credit. But until they can be specific about what economic and financial machinery they have put in place for the boom, then they should be truthful to the public and not take credit for the economic boom in these islands.

Credit must not go to government because it has sat back and accepted the good times. Like the foolish virgins, it did not use its talents (sic) right. As a result we have a polarised Treasury. Credit must go to the private sector because we have seen a continual increase in the economic growth in these islands. That is another point I am concerned about. We have very little in our revenue department of government to show from the big economic growth in the private sector—not even our infrastructure has kept up to a decent level.

For a country boasting to be the fifth largest financial centre in the world with only 40,000 people (or less) to spend it on, one would think that every road would be properly paved. We shouldn't have to be scratching around to get revenue. I have always said, regardless of which government is in power and regardless of our financial position, we should not be scratching around to find a few dollars to build schools, to complete our hospital, to build roads, to put water through the country. Things should be much better Mr. Speaker.

One of my honourable colleagues handed me an article entitled "Contingent Government Liabilities—a Hidden Risk." I thought this so important that I would want to include this also in my contribution.

It also points to the fact that more priority needs to be placed on bringing our general reserves up to the three months ceiling which would approximate to $50 million to $60 million, and not the $12.5 million that we have in the general reserves at this point in time. This article, which I will also lay on the Table of the House for any member who would like to read it, states:

"Many governments have faced serious fiscal instability as a result of their contingent liabilities—that is, fiscal obligations contingent on the occurrence of particular events. But these obligations are not budgeted and accounted for, nor are they considered in conventional fiscal analysis.

"If a country's banking centre fails, or its sub-national (state or local) governments find themselves unable to meet their obligations, or a large state guaranteed infrastructure project runs into difficulties, the central government comes to the rescue."

But how can our central government come to the rescue if it has no money available? We have no money to come to the rescue with! If something went wrong with our banking centre, or with our tourism sector, there is no money in our Treasury for the central government to assist with. Three weeks allowance is what we have in there.

It continues to say: "Whether a government is obligated by law or simply forced by circumstances to provide public finances to cover such contingencies, its contingent liabilities can lead to large increases in public debt." Even though we are saying they are contingent liabilities, if it comes to the point where government has to cover them, then they may become a public debt of government.

It continues, "Thus, fiscal adjustment aimed solely at keeping projected expenditure levels down is insufficient to prevent fiscal instability in countries with large, unbudgeted contingent liabilities." I would like to lay this article on the Table of the House.

The Speaker: So ordered.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: And I would definitely recommend this to the government because it is indeed a serious matter. Not only is it important for government to keep the financial sector in line and up to the required standards, but indeed it is important for the other sector of our economy—the tourism sector—to keep in line with development.

As we know, the economy is comprised of two main sectors. I have commented on the financial sector. I would now like to turn my attention to the tourism sector. Before doing so I would just like to say that in the past 20 years these islands have experienced phenomenal growth in the economy. But government must examine whether or not our people have benefited in proportion to this economic growth, and whether the two major economic sectors have made a fair and reasonable contribution to the Treasury of these islands.

I made reference to this earlier, but I would like to reinforce it by asking the question, Why is it that these islands—which boast one of the highest standards of living in this region, indeed in the world—are unable to generate sufficient funds to provide and maintain proper infrastructure facilities in these islands? It seems to me this is a lack of good planning, it is tunnel vision; it is non-compliance with the recommendations coming from this side of the House, in particular from the First Elected Member for George Town, that we should have had a Medium Term Financial Strategy done for these islands long ago with a Public Sector Investment Programme to work along with it. We have been promised over and over that this would be done. But thus far, it has not.

Another pertinent question is, Why has government not implemented a more equitable system for obtaining revenue enhancement measures? I would also ask why is it that the burden of these taxes (or as they wish to call them “revenue enhancement measures”) continues to be passed on to those who can least afford to absorb them, indeed burdening the tourism businesses as a result.

With $500 (or so) billion passing through our financial system each year we should be able to obtain a bit more towards infrastructure and other needed development in these islands. Despite what has been said by my good friend, the Minister for Tourism, there seems to be a downturn in the tourism industry in recent months. I recently saw a letter from the hotel and restaurant industry, that I would like to comment on.

It was sad to see the position taken by the honourable minister in disputing the content of this letter. He did in fact say that his records did not show the same information contained in . . . and he didn't refer to this letter in particular, but that had been talked about in the public. And I hope I am quoting him correctly, if not, I apologise. I suggest that the ministry needs to take a more thorough look at this problem.

The letter was quite straightforward. It has caused me much concern. The first subheading on the letter had to do with the drop in business. It said, “Many businesses are experiencing a decrease of 25% to 50% in business.” And they did make it quite clear that their letter to honourable members of Executive Council and the Legislative Assembly was in no way politically motivated, but one to communicate sincere concerns over actions recently taken by the government.

They said that during the Council of Associations meetings with government two years ago that the National Team Government gave its word. I would like to quote what they said here. “We would be able to have communication regarding our industries on any laws, duty raises, etc., reflecting on our business.” I will not read all of these details, but it says, “Requests for discussions by the industry have gone ignored.”

This government promised to be open, it promised to deal with these matters. Unfortunately the hotel and restaurant industry . . . and I have heard other people saying that there does not seem to be that communication promised during the last election and indeed as contained in the National Team's Manifesto.

They also raise the concern on the proposed amendment to section 21 (a) and (b) of the “Minors Law,” as they have referred to it here (Liquor Licensing (Protection of Minors and Need for Licensed Premises) Law, 1998. The concern is that young people leaving school will not have the opportunity to work in the hotels and restaurant industry if this amendment is passed because it will prohibit anyone 18 or younger from working in these businesses. I think that the authors of this letter are quite correct in saying that this law seriously conflicts with government's avowed policy to assist, hire, and train Caymanians.

It seems to be an area of conflict. On the one hand we are saying that we will train school leavers, encouraging them to come into the hotel and restaurant industries; on the other hand we intend to pass laws to prevent them from getting that opportunity. It seems like confusion, Mr. Speaker. And whether this is intended to get votes from the churches or not I think that the churches will view this as very political.

There have been hotels and restaurants established for many years where in order to get to the dining room one has to pass through the bar. To expect those hotels and restaurants to tear their facilities apart and put the bar in some other corner of the building is totally ridiculous. I also do not think it says very much for our young people when we say that they cannot pass by a bar without being attracted to go into it. If that is the sort of policing we plan to do, then we better have a clear look at all the other places and the temptations available to our young people.

But this is one amendment that will certainly receive wide debate if it comes to this House. Unless the government bench can show me good reasons for wanting to make this amendment then I am afraid they will not be receiving my support on it. I like to think that I am a law-abiding person and that as far as being a Christian is concerned, I follow the basic tenants of being a Christian. I try to live that life. But there is one thing in being a Christian and another in being fanatical or using Christianity for political reasons.

I believe that the Hotel and Restaurant Association is feeling the pinch with the recent tax increases levied on these islands—which they have received the direct brunt of most of the taxes. I have no doubt they are feeling the pinch. It is a shame that two years ago when ExCo attempted to bring the increases one of the biggest marches that I have seen around the Lions Centre was brought about. Yet, they have brought it again and inflicted it on the people of these islands. It is having a serious negative effect on the economy.

Some of the excuses I have heard seem silly. We will increase taxes on liquor and cigarettes . . . and let me make it quite clear that I have no major objection to this because I am totally opposed to both of those vices. But what seems silly is to say we are increasing taxes on these items because we want it to be a deterrent, while on the other hand we say the reason we are increasing it is so that we can get more revenue for government. That is a contradiction and I think that government needs to have a more serious look at its policies.

There are other very important areas of this letter. With approximately 35 minutes left, I will not go into all the details because there are some other points that I want to raise. But I am very concerned because in my opinion sufficient attention was not given to this letter. Let me qualify that, as reported in the Caymanian Compass. The Caymanian Compass did in fact say that it was the intention of the honourable minister to meet further with these individuals, so I am sure he will do that. I think he says he has already met with these individuals.

[The Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works rose]

The Speaker: Would you give way?

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Sure.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Just on a point of elucidation, I am thankful to the member for giving way. We have met with the Restaurant Association and a representative from the Hotel Association on more than one occasion. We have worked out an arrangement with section 7 of the Minors Law (which is coming forward) which is satisfactory to them. So we will be coming with an amendment to the section that came before the House.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town, please continue.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I am pleased that I gave way to the honourable minister. I am very happy to hear that something was worked out on this particular proposed amendment. As I said, in its present form I would have found it very difficult to support. But I trust that the revision to that which has been agreed upon by the ministry and the Restaurant and Hotel Association will also be satisfactory to this honourable House.

I did in fact speak of other areas that I feel should be given attention, and one is the proposal to prevent young school leavers 18 years or younger from entering the tourism industry to work in the areas that serve liquor or that sell cigarettes. I think that we need to put a little more confidence in our young people. I know a lot of good young people who would not even consider using alcohol, much less smoke. I think we need to put a little bit more confidence in them and a little bit more respect for their intelligence.

The Speaker: Maybe we could take the morning break. We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.45 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.09 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The Third Elected Member for George Town continuing.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you.

Continuing on the subject of tourism, I was somewhat appalled to read a letter tabled by the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works entitled "Cruise Lines Profit From Friends in Congress." What was appalling about this letter was (and I will not go through the whole of the letter) the first paragraph which reads, "The world's largest cruise company, the Carnival Corporation, earned $2 billion in profits over the last three years." This was written on 19th February 1999. "But the company, with headquarters here in two multi-storied buildings on Carnival Place [Miami] paid less than 1% in income taxes even though its earnings exceeded those of many Fortune 500 companies."

The reason for making reference to this article is that attached to it was some very revealing figures published by Mr. Dan Perry of The Associated Press. This was already tabled on the 18th of this month. It states that cruising casts a shadow. It was basically questioning whether all of the cruise ships coming to the various destinations, including the Cayman Islands, are indeed spending any money here. I won't read all of this because my time remaining is limited, but I would just like to read this last section here which states, "The problem is that even though cruise ship passengers account for 80% of all visitors coming to these islands [the Cayman Islands and other destinations] they provide only 25% of the total tourism revenue."

I trust that government will pay serious attention to this and try its best to improve its advertising policy where the overnight tourists are concerned, that is those who spend their time in the hotels and condominiums. It appears that they are the tourists who put the most into our economy. That is not to say that we should totally ignore the cruise ship passengers, but I think that we should be mindful of the fact that the large number of tourists from the cruise ships are not necessarily putting most into our economy.

During my discourse I made reference to the reforms and modernising process being placed as a priority by not only this government but by a number of governments the world over today, and in particular the UK government. We see reforms, modernisation in the way of the reinvention process in the Cayman Islands, the Vision 2008 ten year programme; fiscal reforms within the financial and economic department, and we also see freedom of information. It was my intention to speak on this question of freedom of information mainly because we have seen so little done in regard to the private member's motion passed during the June meeting of last year.

That motion was brought by the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town, Mr. Roy Bodden, seconded by the First Elected Member for George Town, Mr. Kurt Tibbetts. It basically resolved that a select committee of the whole House be convened to determine the parameters of the legislation on matters relating to statutory boards after public input. This was in relation to the UK's Freedom of Information White Paper.

The first resolve stated that the Cayman Islands Legislative Assembly enacts a Freedom of Information Law similar that proposed in the United Kingdom's Freedom of Information White Paper. I know that it is the intention of the member responsible for this to give it urgent attention. But he, like many other members of the House, has been bogged down in other urgent matters. I know that his plate has been full with matters to do with Immigration, Elections, and other things. But I would ask that as soon as possible attention be given to discussing these matters in the select committee appointed for this purpose.

As I intimated earlier, there are certain reforms needed within our Standing Orders. I mentioned some of these informally to certain members of the House. But one that deals with Standing Order 75(2), which has to do with the Standing Finance Committee, I do believe that more efficient use of the honourable Financial Secretary's time could be employed if his deputy was allowed to conduct the meetings of Finance Committee. Not only is he capable, but he is highly knowledgeable of all the workings of Finance Committee. The honourable Financial Secretary is precluded from doing this because of the terms of Standing Order 75(2), which reads as follows: "(2) The Finance Committee shall consist of the Financial Secretary as chairman and all the elected Members."

Even if the Financial Secretary would wish to allow his deputy or another officer to conduct certain meetings of the Finance Committee, unless there are certain pressing conditions for him to do so, he cannot just put somebody else in his place. He holds a very important role in government not only as the government's financial advisor but now as the Chairman of the Caribbean Financial Actions Task Force. He is also the Chairman of the OECD Consultative Committee. He is also the Chairman of the Financial Action Reforms, and on and on. From my observation he is having to spread himself so thinly that some of these areas could be neglected.

There would have to be an amendment to the Constitution because it does state in section 43 (2) that "A chairman of a committee established under section 42(1) of this Constitution shall be a member of the Executive Council." So both of these will possibly need to be amended. I believe that it is very necessary.

I also wish to mention that I would like to see a reform in the times of meetings in this House. I think it has also been mentioned in this paper circulated to members for perusal. But I am sure that members will recall that I did express concern over this. Rather than starting at 10.00 and ending at 4.00, I believe that we would get more done if we started at 9.30 and ended at 5.30, with ten minutes maximum for breaks so that more work could be done in this honourable House. I know that you try your very best.

Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have left now? Nineteen minutes? Twenty? Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that each member of this House is honourable. I believe that it is the intention of members to cooperate with you, Mr. Speaker. So I ask that when we are called by the Serjeant—and we are fortunate to have a very good Serjeant—we respond. It is only by our cooperating that we can help in moving the business of this House ahead.

I am sure that some of my colleagues will not agree with me on the point I am going to raise now, but I also feel that the time for debating should be amended from four hours to two hours. I am about to use up my four hours, and I would just like to say that if we are given four hours we will use it. Speaking for myself, I am sure that if I were given six hours I could probably use it! But we have to question whether or not all of that time is needed. When we find 15 elected members of the House debating the Throne Speech or the Budget Address and each person feeling he has to use from three to four hours, there must be a lot of unnecessary repetition. And a lot of the fault in this is because of the system of government we have.

If we had a more advanced system where there was an official Leader of the Opposition, with a Chief Minister on the other side we would find that the leader of the opposition could speak on behalf of the opposition rather than each member feeling that he must justify his being in this Assembly. The listening public wants to know that we are properly representing them, but if there was a system where they understood that the leader of the opposition would speak on behalf of the opposition on many matters then the whole process in the House could be expedited.

I don't want anybody to go out of here and say that I am advocating an advancement in the Constitution. But I am saying that we need to take a very serious look at the present system. In my opinion the present system renders the deliberation of the House less efficient than it could be under a more improved system, as I just explained. It is my feeling that under the present system, two hours would be sufficient for any member to deal in a factual matter with any subject coming before this House. That is my feeling, and it is not necessarily shared by my colleagues. If the reform came, including the reduction of that time now provided, I would be one of the first ones to take a very serious look at this.

Much complaint has been made about the time spent in Finance Committee recently. Even though I know that some ministers of government are the first to jump up and say that it was the opposition's fault, the other side of that coin is that had the budget been brought forward in a proper manner, with proper consultation, that would have been avoided. What we need is prior consultation on the budget and we need more and better communication and transparency in the whole system.

It must be understood that what we are doing on this side of the House is exactly what we were elected to do, and that is to be good stewards of the finances of this country. I must say that I congratulate my colleagues for the very minute details we scrutinised in the budget, especially the last budget that passed through this House.

We need to be the watchdogs. I made that distinction. Not hound dogs, but watchdogs. That is our job in this honourable House.

I believe that credit should be given where credit is due. I want to congratulate the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture for the establishment of the office for Women's Affairs in 1996. I had intended to speak at some length on this subject because I feel it is such an important subject, and to say that I am pleased to see that even in our society that more strides are being made in the advancement of women. We are fortunate even in this Honourable House to have three very outstanding women who have been making their contribution to the workings and deliberations of this honourable House. Indeed, for the first time in our Parliamentary history we now have a woman sitting on our Executive Council. I hope to see further advancements where the women of the Cayman Islands are concerned.

I was pleased to see that in the last election in the UK in 1997 that the women members in the House of Commons were increased by 100% over the last election. In 1992 the number was 60, but in 1997 that number was increased to 120. From my observation of the workings of the House of Commons recently and in the past, I can tell you that they are making a major contribution to Parliamentary democracy as they are in this House. I particularly want to single out the Member for North Side for her championing the cause of women in the Cayman Islands, and also, as being a strong proponent for the Women's Affairs office. I will go so far as to say that she was indeed the driving force behind that office. But in speaking of the ladies of this House I have to give special attention to that honourable lady.

Also I have noticed in The Parliamentarian that there is a special parliamentary committee for women. I trust that at some stage they will be able to hold a forum in the Cayman Islands. If one looks at the private sector and at government one will see that women have been holding their own. Some of them are in the top positions in their organisations. Indeed, in the service clubs, such as the Lions, they now even have their own Lions Club. They are doing a fantastic job. Even though the Rotary Club was slow to admit women, I must say that they have now opened their doors to women and as a result the Rotary has been enriched. It was a good day when the directors of Rotary decided that women should be admitted. I must say that I was happy to be involved in bringing at least three women members into Rotary and that the first woman president will be one of the members that I brought into the Rotary Club of Grand Cayman, Mrs. Sophia Harris. I want to congratulate that lady and all the others for the great work they are doing in the Rotary Club and other service clubs and organisations around the island.

I know that my time is limited, I have just about six minutes left. But I would like to say that I was pleased to learn from the Chief Secretary this morning that it is the intention of government to have another look at the salary review. I was one of the members who decided that politicians would not accept an increase in salary. And this was agreed upon by the whole House, that is all elected members. But there was an anomaly caused as a result of this. I feel that as good representatives we have a responsibility for good governance. I believe that we would be remiss in our duties if we did not attempt to correct those anomalies. You cannot have a situation where your permanent secretaries are paid more than the ministers in a portfolio. Neither is it right that the Official Members, excluding the Chief Secretary, should be paid more than their counterparts, the elected Ministers of government. That is not right. I feel that it is our duty to correct that. I would definitely support that such a correction be made.

I was happy to hear that government intends to bring this matter back to the Finance Committee. I know that some members might attempt to use this as a political football, but I believe that the listening public will understand that such a correction is needed and that they can differentiate between political rhetoric and what is right. I trust that they will move ahead in having this done.

In closing I would like to make reference again to the timeline that has been given to Vision 2008, and to agree with His Excellency the Governor that the 2008 ten year plan and the OECD initiatives are two of the major problems facing these islands today. As I said in opening, we are now within the planning phase of the 2008, we will start the implementation phase on the 1st of next month which will go through to April next year, after which we move into the evaluation phase. I would encourage each honourable member of this House to give this Vision 2008 his or her full support.

On the matter of the OECD, I trust that the points I have raised will be taken seriously by those responsible, in particular the members of the OECD Consultative Committee. I trust that there will be a greater focus to involve the elected members, particularly the ministers of government in this process.

On the question of the White Paper, I trust that government will take a serious look on the question of human rights. I feel that regardless of the position the UK may decide to take on the question of consensual homosexual acts that this honourable House should have the strength of character to deal with it in the way our conscience dictates and in the way we see fit. We should bring the matter before this House and deal with it and not be afraid of political consequences but do what is right. I feel that the vote on that should be a resounding no!

[applause]

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Regardless of what position the UK might want to take with making an order in Council on this question of consensual homosexual acts, I feel that the people of the Cayman Islands represented by their elected members and even the official members of this House should say no! We do not want that for the Cayman Islands.

I believe my time is pretty much up. So I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your time and your tolerance.

Again I want to thank His Excellency the Governor for his excellent presentation of his last Throne Speech, and to thank him and his good wife, Mrs. Owen, for the major contribution they have made to these islands.

The Speaker: We have just about reached the hour for lunch, and it's my understanding that it is the intention of the House that we adjourn in order to attend a funeral. If that is the case, I will entertain a motion for the adjournment.

The Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Anthony S. Eden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until tomorrow at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM tomorrow. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 12.44 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM FRIDAY, 26 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
FRIDAY
26 MARCH 1999
10.19 AM

[Prayers read by the Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Honourable Acting Third Official Member, who will be arriving later this morning; and apologies for absence from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is ill. I also have apologies from the Honourable Minister for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. He will also be arriving later on this morning.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question 23 is standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 23

No. 23: Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning to provide a list of inland mining approvals granted since January 1996 to date, outlining the quantities of fill to be removed.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The following approvals for inland mining only have been granted since January 1996:

1. Paul A Bodden: Block 47A Parcels 7 and 8 – 900,000 cubic yards approved 13 March 1996
2. Sweetwater Palms Ltd: Block 55A Parcel 53 – 145,540 cubic yards approved 13 November 1996.
3. Midland Acres (MM/111/97) (030/83): Block 47A Parcel 36 Rem 4 – 1,386,820 cubic yards approved 11 February 1998.

Department of Environmental Health (462/90): Block 13C Parcel 1 – 133,000 cubic yards approved 7 November 1990.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state the present policy regarding inland mining approvals? And can he also state when the moratorium on inland mining approvals was lifted?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: May I first just ask the honourable member which moratorium was this? When did that go on?

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: It is my understanding that there was a moratorium on inland mining in effect at least until 1994/1995. When that moratorium was lifted, and what is the present policy regarding inland mining approvals?

Mr. Speaker, so that the minister will fully understand, I am trying to determine if there is a policy which dictates quantities or the number of approvals within a set period of time. That is what I am seeking.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I understand that it was lifted in 1995, but I don't have that accurately. If the honourable member needs it more accurately, I would have to consult with the department and get back.

The Speaker: First Elected Member for George Town, I don't think he completed the answer.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I also asked about the policy. But as the minister will answer regarding this moratorium, if it was lifted in 1995, perhaps the minister could say on what authority the moratorium was lifted?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I think I will have to get the documentation on this before I attempt to answer specifically, as it was some time back. I don't want to answer and then find that I didn't give the correct data, authority or whatever.

The Speaker: I think what he requested was the policy as to how many applications were approved and the quantities.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: This is planning approval done by the Central Planning Authority. The appeal from that is to the Appeals Tribunal and then on to the Courts. I just say that because it is not on appeal to Executive Council, and I just needed to make that clear. They deal with it and they look at individual applications and, I would think, make their decisions on the merits or demerits of that and what is involved in the application, probably over and beyond the mining as such as well.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, let me try to put it into perspective. My original supplementary asked about the policy. I also asked when the moratorium was lifted. If there was a moratorium up until 1995, and that moratorium was lifted, and the Central Planning Authority now entertains applications for inland mining, do they operate in the decision-making process by way of a policy? Or is it first come, first served? How is it done? That is what I am trying to find out.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The law on this is very clear. When an application is made the Board has to make its decisions in accordance with the law. Each case, as I understand it, is looked at on an individual basis. I don't know what I can say beyond that.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state if the Central Planning Authority bases its decisions on some set limitations, or is it simply that once certain requirements are met that any application can be granted? Obviously, if there was a moratorium—and I am not taking any position on it I am simply trying to enquire about it—up until 1995, there was some reasoning behind it. If the moratorium has been lifted, is it simply that the Central Planning Authority deals with any and all applications ad infinitum? Or is it that they have said there are certain requirements in the construction industry and they are going to allow X amount of cubic yards to be mined from inland sources? That is what I am trying to understand.

The reason I am asking the question is because if there is no set policy and the moratorium has been lifted then something has to be amiss. Again, I am not suggesting that I am taking a position on this because I know there are needs for aggregate and fill for the building industry. I am just trying to determine how they go about making their decisions, if there are any directives or anything like that.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: An application for mining is the same as any other application under the law, and it has to comply with the law. I have spoken to the Director of Planning. I stated earlier that the appeals don't come to ExCo because then we are much closer in touch with what is happening. The appeals go into the courts from the tribunal. Each one is dealt with on its merits.

There are criteria laid down in the law, the regulations, and the Development Plan. Those criteria apply to all of the planning applications. But each one is dealt with on its merits within the law, as I understand it. That is the way I think any other application would be dealt with.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: In his answer, the minister gave us the names of three persons in areas that were granted approval for inland mining since 1996. Of these, how many were granted approval to mine specifically for the commercial construction of residential premises within the area being mined?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I understand that two of them had their own developments in which the marl was used, in other words, sub-divisions. One was purely for sale.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can the honourable minister say if the Department of Planning monitors the activities to see that persons holding these inland mining permit approvals are doing exactly what the permit allows them to do?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: The Planning Department does monitor these days what is happening in relation to this, as well as other things.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I think the minister said "does monitor these days." In other words, they are now beginning to see that as a critical point.

Can the honourable minister say whether or not that as a result of the recognition of the need for fill where we are always having to reclaim land the Planning Department is developing any kind of perspective as to whether or not this type of inland mining is desirable? Or will we have to look more towards dredging in the water, or importation? What can they say is the situation at this particular point?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: That's a bit of a difficult one to answer in that it depends upon the application. The Planning Department prefers the application to come in, that if they dig out one area of land they are going to fill the other one and turn it into a sub-division or something useful. What I would like to mention on this, Mr. Speaker, is that if government was to do some marl mining or whatever, and could get fill at $4 or $5 a cubic yard, instead of $22 or $25, then roads could be built at a quarter of the cost.

I thought I would just mention that because when I look at the amount of fill that is coming in here . . . and also the Department of the Environment, for example, has taken a sensible approach. Government owns the marl, obviously in large areas of this, and it seems to me that since it can be dug fairly cheaply, . . . I don't know if $5 is right, it may be $6, $7 or $8. But that's still a lot less than $23 or $25 a cubic yard.

Maybe government should be looking to do one of the three—dig the marl, import it or whatever to try to deal with the roads. I don't know what the cost of that would be. But I do know that the digging of the marl—and government has a lot of land—is bound to be to the public's benefit if it is used to fill government sites, for development, the building or whatever, or marl for the roads. I know quarry rock has to be used below the surface, but up above, by all means, we have our own fill there.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: I notice that the minister took this opportunity to make some statements there that I think—

The Speaker: You will turn this into a question before you are finished, please.

Dr. Frank McField: Yes, like I usually do.

What I am saying is that within the framework of the answer, since I would like to ask a supplementary to it, I am trying to put that supplementary that he answered in such a fashion that I can then pose a question to it again.

I am trying to find out if the government has ever considered the cost which Caymanians incur as a result of trying to fill land themselves—not just the government having to build roads—and the fact that government has been granting permits to persons to dredge and has allowed them to sell this mass fill at this very high price. Has government not also considered how it might be able to introduce a dredging or mining programme that would alleviate the economic hardship which occurs as a result of people having to pay such high prices for mass fill?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I can't, or I am not in a position to speak on government's policy on this because it's not my ministry. But I will give my personal views, sir. That is that government is the largest owner of marl and fill on the island. It seems to me not to be good economic policy, or money business, to be paying $20 to $25 per cubic yard when we basically have it in our backyard for $5 or $6 a cubic yard. My personal view—and I point this out, my personal view—is that government should go on its own land in a proper way with the proper studies, environmentally and otherwise, and proper approvals, and go ahead and dig its own marl and use it for government's buildings or government's roads or anything else because it will save the public about $18 to $20 per yard.

And if you just think of it . . . take the Harquail Bypass (and these figures may not be right) $4.5 million worth of fill went into it. Some of that had to be rock. Government also has rock. And if that was purchased between $20 and $22 a yard or a ton (I don't remember), it can be done at considerably less and government would have saved maybe half of that. That's $2 million! We could have built a lot more roads with that extra $2 million.

So, my personal view—and only my personal view—subject to proper approvals, government must get its approvals like anyone else, must do its studies, but I think the Department of the Environment obviously took advantage of this, the Department of Environmental Health, I'm sorry, took advantage of this and maybe government should look at it to save many, many millions in the building of roads and filling of property.

The Speaker: Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. Two additional supplementaries will be allowed after this one.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister give the House an undertaking to raise that matter with his colleagues for possible investigation and feasibility, and report back to the House?

We are in a quandary in providing housing, particularly for low-income people. And land costs so much, and much of the land has to be filled. If what the minister says could come to fruition, this would be one way of alleviating costs for persons wanting to build houses who fall into the lower income bracket. I am asking for an undertaking.

Since the government is in such a lucrative position, money-wise, they may be able to sell it to deserving persons at cost.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I think that is something that government will explore. The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works who is in charge of the roads, and I would think probably other ministers realise the advantage. The Minister for Tourism has mentioned that he supports the idea of going in and finding out how much of this fill government, at a considerably lower cost, could dig and use for roads, and by all means to assist with housing.

In fact, that is another area that if we can keep the cost of housing down in those income brackets I think it would be fantastic, sir. I can assure the honourable member that I will raise it. All of my colleagues are here, but I will raise it with them anyhow.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: I wonder whether or not the honourable minister could say (while he is talking about government having this tremendous amount of marl) if it is ocean bed or inland mining he is talking about?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I can't give any specifics obviously because it has been floated as an idea. But what I can say is that the Civil Aviation Authority has land given to it by government that we repay back. It is very extensive. It stretches . . . it's a vast amount of acreage. It is in an area that is not near housing, an area where I understand bores have already been done because many, many years ago, not during our time (and I say that meaning the time of the First Elected Member for West Bay or mine), they were looking at doing works for the airport.

In fact, some of the airport marl has been lifted out of there. So there is quite an extensive amount of land there and I don't know the North Sound area, there was a study done. I believe the burrow area . . . the Wickstead Study was actually by the airport, within the vicinity of that. But I do know that government has a lot of land with a lot of marl in that area.

I would also like to say that what I said in relation to the housing would be housing that government would do because government is not trying to get into the private marl or fill business. I just would like to point that out. I think that whatever marl or fill they can find they must use it themselves and they have ample projects, roads and everything to use it on.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Does government have land separate and apart from what the minister mentioned for inland mining?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: Let me just point out that government doesn't have land for inland mining. I am saying that government has land all over the place. All I am saying is that I gave that as an example because I know that studies had been carried out many, many years ago on this and the land is still there. Obviously, government owns land all over the place. If government can, subject to the approvals and the environmental aspects and the impacts of that, go and use its own land for fill at half or one-third of the cost of what we are paying for fill, it has to make good sense for government to do that.

It was quite obvious from the answer to the question that the Department of the Environment has just done it. I don't know where they took that from, Mr. Speaker, but I guess if they can do it there is no reason why the rest of the departments can't do something similar.

One hundred and thirty-three thousand yards of marl . . . if you are saving $6, $8 or $10 a yard, that's $1,300,000. So we are not looking at small money in that area. And if it is more advantageous to take it from the land or the sea, then that could also be done because at present the suppliers of marl cannot keep up with the private sector, much less with government. Any help could ease the pressure on them and would allow projects to be completed more on time perhaps.

The Speaker: Is this a follow up now?

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Yes sir, thank you very much. It's not often that you look down this side, but I appreciate this one.

I wonder if the minister would say if government has entered into any negotiations with any entity to look at mining possibilities, any department in government?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Boddén: I can only answer for my ministry and my departments and the answer to that is not that I know about.

The Speaker: The final supplementary, the First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I just wish to say to you, sir, that while I respect your ruling about this final supplementary, please listen carefully to how answers are given because if they are not given to properly answer the question, certainly, sir, you must allow me to get that cleared up. That's all I want to make sure of. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you for that.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I would like to go back to the question of the moratorium. The minister said that it was lifted in 1995. I was trying to get from the minister whether or not there was any policy that was some type of umbrella situation under which the Central Planning Authority was operating when granting these applications.

Really, what I was trying to find out (and I will ask a question) was if the Central Planning Authority bore in mind that there are certain environmentally sensitive issues that have to be dealt with. That's the kind of thing I was asking for. But going back to the moratorium, and I want to jog the minister's memory . . . The minister stated in his previous answer regarding this moratorium that he would have to get the details about the moratorium. I want to find out whenever there is a moratorium, for instance like there was on inland mining, what is the due process for that moratorium to be lifted?

And in jogging his memory, I want to find out if he remembers specifically writing and signing a letter instructing the Director of Planning that the moratorium was lifted.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Back in 1995 . . . I obviously will look back. If I signed something then I will come and admit it. But to be frank, for me to remember everything that I did back in 1995 . . . I would need to have a much bigger head than I have at present!

But if the honourable member has a letter that I have signed, I will look at it and admit it. I have no problem with it. But I will check back and see when it was and what it was. I will give the honourable member whatever particulars he would like on it.

The Speaker: Moving on the question 24—

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Mr. Speaker, I don't mean to be rude, sir, but that's why I said to you what I said before. I asked the minister in the question about the process that takes place for a moratorium of the nature of the one we talked about to be lifted, and he hasn't answered that part of the question, sir.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Education, Aviation and Planning.

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can do is go back to 1995 and look up and see what the circumstances around . . . I don't know at present. I guess what I am saying to the member, . . . obviously he expects me to remember everything back then. I don't.

The only thing I can do is look it up. If he is saying that I signed something lifting the moratorium, then I will look it up.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I don't know the process obviously.

[Laughter]

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: I don't understand what he is getting at.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: You knew the process when you did it!

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: He's asking me for process. I am going to go back and refresh my memory. At this stage I don't know. I will go back and look up the file. There is probably a file note saying somebody from, you know, Planning or somebody from the private sector or . . . I don't know.

But I will have to look up the facts. I don't know the process at this stage and I will refresh my memory and I will come back to the honourable member. I am a human being, you know. I can't be expected to remember everything.

The Speaker: Moving on to question 24, standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTION 24

No. 24: Mr. Linford A. Pierson asked the Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs to state: (a) the number of hurricane shelters in the three islands and their locations; (b) whether all the shelters are built and equipped to hurricane specifications; and (c) the standard specifications and equipment required for hurricane shelters.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: The total number of hurricane shelters in Grand Cayman is 19. There are three in Cayman Brac and one in Little Cayman. Attached is a schedule of hurricane shelters in the three Islands and their locations as well as the other information.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I wish to advise that I do in fact have a private member's motion (4/99) dealing with the question of a civic centre and hurricane centre in George Town. So I will be very careful not to pre-empt the possible outcome of that, even though by provision in the budget government has already given its indication to approve this.

Nonetheless, I wonder if the honourable member can state whether any property has been located for a hurricane shelter in George Town and, if so, can he given an indication of when this building will commence?

The Speaker: I think that that is somewhat outside the ambit of this question. But, if the honourable First Official Member has the information, he may give it. The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Thank you. I think you are quite right, Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: In the substantive answer, the honourable member stated that there are a total of 19 shelters in Grand Cayman with three in Cayman Brac. Can the honourable member state if he is aware that the population of Grand Cayman, based on the most recent statistics, shows that George Town has 58 percent of the total population in Grand Cayman, with only 950 spaces, with a total of 2,500 spaces for Grand Cayman? I wonder if the honourable member can state if he is aware of that, and whether he recognises the urgency in having the hurricane shelter commenced as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, I do recognise the urgency. But I think the member will recognise that I have responsibility for the utilisation of hurricane shelters, not the construction of hurricane shelters. While I can encourage my colleagues—including him—to be proactive in adding shelters, at the end of the day I can only make use of what is approved by the Finance Committee and built.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I noticed from the list the honourable member provided that there are in fact only four of these shelters which are built and equipped to hurricane specifications. I wonder if I could ask the honourable member for an undertaking to impress upon the government (I know it is not his responsibility for the building and equipping of these) and the relevant ministry this fact and to see what can be done to bring these shelters up to specification and equip them so that they can meet the criteria for being hurricane centres. It is perhaps difficult in the building, but for an assessment as to any improvements that can be made to the physical structure to achieve this standard.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, I am quite prepared to impress on my elected colleagues in Executive Council. In fact, I have for some time been doing so and there is a certain building under construction. Although not being built specifically as a hurricane shelter, a decision was taken by government to build it to hurricane standards at a considerable additional cost.

Regarding the current shelters, the buildings have in the past been inspected and as far as possible certified. But at the end of the day, it is extremely difficult when the structure is put up to do very much about it. I call to the member's attention a building that in 1988 had been certified to be up to hurricane standards and in that hurricane it did not stand up. So I think he understands the problem we are all facing with buildings that were not really designed to stand up to a hurricane.

Of course, I would also like to say that should we have a hurricane the magnitude of hurricane Mitch last year, any and all of our buildings are likely to suffer substantial damage even if they are designed for hurricane use.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8)

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 23(7) and (8) so that Question Time can go beyond 11 o'clock.

The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I move that the resolution be entertained.

The Speaker: Do we have a seconder?
The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I second the motion.

The Speaker: The Motion has been moved and seconded. Those in favour please say aye. Those against no.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8) SUSPENDED TO ENABLE QUESTION TIME TO CONTINUE BEYOND 11 O'CLOCK.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I believe that the honourable First Official Member, in answering a supplementary raised by me on the question of his being aware of when the George Town hurricane shelter will commence, and whether there was any property for that, indicated that that was somewhat outside his purview and that this was not basically his responsibility.

I wonder if he could state who is responsible for the subject of the hurricane shelters, and whether that person is kept informed of any development of hurricane shelters in the three islands?

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: I think the honourable member knows that we do not actually build hurricane shelters per se. Normally buildings such as civic centres are constructed and the secondary but nevertheless important use is for hurricane usage. The building that I think he is referring to would no doubt be a civic centre that would be designed to hurricane specifications to be used as a hurricane shelter.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I thank the honourable Member for that answer, but he did not answer the question as to who is responsible for the subject of the hurricane shelters. I am aware (and I will turn this into a question) that in the past buildings have been used as hurricane shelters—and this is most unfortunate as they are not equipped for that purpose. I was referring to the provision that has already been made in the budget for a hurricane shelter for George Town. I was asking if he is aware of who is responsible for that subject, whether it is he himself or some other minister. I am just seeking information.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: I thought I had answered that earlier when I said that I have responsibility for the use of hurricane shelters. I do not have responsibility for the construction of buildings used as hurricane shelters. I can only encourage, in the case of my elected colleagues on Executive Council, the minister who has responsibility for public works. And, in the case of George Town, the Minister of Education who is an elected representative for George Town, to give the construction of a building that can be used as a hurricane shelter priority.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I appreciate the problem the honourable member has mentioned, but from this side of the House it is important that we are kept abreast of the developments in these matters. I can only direct my question to the member who has responsibility for the subject. I wonder if he would give an undertaking to keep us abreast of any development in regard to the new hurricane shelter.

The Speaker: The Honourable First Official Member responsible for Internal and External Affairs.

Hon. James M. Ryan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as soon as I know I will inform the House.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries question 25 is standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTION 25

No. 25: Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works if the Port Authority has a capital development programme; and what time period it spans.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Just for clarity, in attempting to answer this question I will focus on the words “capital development programme.” And the answer is that we do not have a capital development programme, per se. The answer is no, the Port Authority does not have a capital development programme. It is all part of the annual budget.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I am certain, even though the minister has given the answer in this format, that he is quite prepared to answer other supplementaries which will relate. Can the honourable minister state if, as he just stated capital works is part of their annual budget, there are any medium to long range plans which involve capital works? And are they set with specific goals and objectives and time periods? Notwithstanding the fact that capital works is only dealt with annually in the budget.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: The answer, as frank and as honest as I can be, is that we do not have a medium term financial plan. We have been looking at building up a history of what has taken place in the Port Authority over the last five or six years in order to get a handle on what has been accomplished. But I think that can also serve as the basis for projections and to help us to focus on what it is we need to be doing in the next three years in particular.

It is a direction that as chairman of the board I intend to take, but we are not there as yet. We are in the throes of commencing, I would say—and I am not saying this just because the member has asked the question—but we are about to commence that exercise as we have a Master Port Development Programme. So we have some input or factual estimations which lead us down the road.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state what drives the Port Authority at present in what they perceive as meeting the needs and demands and the services required of them for these islands?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I think what drives all of us is that we have an understanding of the capacity that we presently have, whether we are dealing with the warehouse, or the trucking situation or anything else. We understand the capacity we are dealing with. We see the increase if we follow the statistics of importation, and we see the increase of cargo coming to the Cayman Islands over a period of time. And we can more or less project when we should be doing some amount of work, whether 12 months down the road or in some cases 24 months down the road at making some decisions.

It is a reason why we decided about 12 months ago to double the size of the warehouse at the cargo distribution centre in addition to providing a racking system which will get us four times the floor space in that particular accommodation. And the doubling of the warehouse space would also take us down the road probably five, six, ten years depending upon the volume of cargo being imported into this country.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: So, if I am understanding correctly, the minister is saying that to this point in time the Port Authority has basically, for lack of a better term (and I am not trying to castigate or anything like that), been feeling its way and doing what it sees at present, not necessarily with any strict format or any medium to long term projections.

But, is it the case that from here on in the board and management of the Port Authority will be looking at it in a more structured fashion in order to ensure that they are on top of things and will be meeting the needs and demands of the country in that area at all times in the future?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I believe it would be correct to say that although we have visualised the needs in the past ahead of a 12 month situation, we haven't actually put it in a document and called it a capital development programme. Basically what we have been doing in recent times is looking at the needs of the Port Authority five to ten years down the road. It's the reason why we have bought several acres of land that causes the cargo distribution centre to be expanded to the west and border on North Sound Way.

It's the reason why government has taken the decision not just to fix the Finger Pier, which is 142 feet long and 60 feet wide, but to extend it and widen it so that we are looking to the future. Because as we see the Morrant Bay, for example, docked alongside the present 142 feet of the Finger Pier, we note that the ship is quite some distance beyond the pier itself.

We will make some information about this decision available shortly as well. I think some information has gone out before, but our view is to look to the future in whatever we are doing. And whatever money we spend, we spend it as prudently as we possibly can with a view of not just using a Band-Aid approach, if I can use that expression, but to look to the future. And when we spend money, we are dealing with fixing something for the next ten to fifteen years.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister then state (and this is just for purposes of clarity) that in taking a fresh look at the way the Authority operates, included will be proper fiscal policy regarding timing of projects, weighing the cost of the projects, the income of the authority and also bearing in mind that the authority is under obligation to allocate certain of its revenue annually to the government?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Maybe I should begin to answer this question by saying that the George Town dock and the Port Authority of the Cayman Islands are deemed to be models in the Caribbean by the Caribbean Development Bank, not only in terms of efficiency in performance but also the fact that it has consistently year by year—long before I got there as chairman—paid for its operations, paid its loans and made a reasonable profit at the end of the day. So we will continue that same good fiscal policy.

What the member is searching for, if I understand him correctly, is what he wants to see. And we as a Port Authority do not want to run ahead of the government's financial reform and try to put something in place to later on have to come back and change. We want to move side by side, or hand in hand with the government's movements so that when we make the change it's one change and we will be done with it.

But every member in this House, as well as the listening public, can have my assurance that it is going to be done. And we are going to look in a comprehensive, global exercise at the Port Authority's operations, whether you are talking about capital items, operations, salaries, the income that's earned by the Port Authority or whatever the case may be. We will be doing that.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries question 26 is standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

No. 26: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works what is the government's policy regarding testing of private roads constructed to service sub-divisions.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Currently the Public Works Department carries out a set of visual inspections on the base course of all subdivision roads. These include quality of material, levels of final grade, and drainage and height above mean sea level. The design and construction specifications for subdivision roads are currently being reviewed and amended. It is envisaged that in 1999 the changes will be implemented and this will allow staff from the Public Works Department laboratory to undertake a variety of physical tests in accordance with American Society for Testing and Materials (ASTM) specifications.

Mr. Speaker, this question was passed from the previous ministry responsible for Works. And in talking to the executive engineer, I understand that the design and construction for specification of subdivision roads has already been done. These set specifications have already been passed to the Planning Department so the developers understand clearly what the specifications and needs are when they are dealing with subdivisions.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I thank the honourable minister for that added bit of information. May I ask the honourable minister whether the government now undertakes any laboratory testing of these materials and samples from roads thus constructed?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I must confess that I am a little weak in answering that question. My understanding is (and I haven't verified it) that they are in a position to carry out this testing and laboratory work. But I undertake to check it thoroughly and come back to him in writing.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state if these new specifications will mean that developers will be incurring additional cost with road construction, or is this simply to do with methodology?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: With the concurrence of the member asking the question, I would prefer to get an assurance from Public Works and pass that on to him in writing. I wouldn't want to speculate as to what it is.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I realise that the honourable minister is in somewhat of an awkward position because he has most recently been entrusted with this new responsibility. I would ask the honourable minister for an undertaking to ensure that all of the appropriate tests are done and standards met because I notice increasingly government is being asked to take over roads which were poorly constructed in the first place. It becomes six of one and half a dozen of the other where the developer may not be living up to his responsibility in constructing the road properly in the first place. The government then has the added expense when it takes over the road of reconstructing it and so it serves no one any good purpose.

I am asking the minister for an undertaking to ensure that all the standards have been met prior to government assuming responsibility and also that landowners who purchase lots in these subdivisions can be afforded their due protection.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I agree to undertake to discuss the matter with Public Works and to come back to the member with whatever assurance they can actually give me. But let me go on to say that while we are talking about subdivision roads, I want to ask the members for their support in dealing with the major roads. A number of times we see people cutting roads. If we spend the amount of money we have in the budget for resurfacing and some member of the public then comes along and cuts the road, I think we are all going to be very annoyed.

I intend to bring an amendment to the Roads Law to put some penalty for cutting roads when you don't have permission and the agreement of the Ministry or Public Works. I thank you for your understanding in allowing me to make that statement.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town, two more supplementaries.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: In his last answer, the minister went on talking about cutting roads. The reason I am explaining what I am saying is because this may be outside the ambit of the substantive question, but I think it warrants attention. There has been talk about synchronising the efforts of the various entities which may have to cut the roads, like Cable & Wireless or the Water Authority, and there has been a thought dangling in the air for many years about having the Public Works Department be the sole agency responsible for roadworks and maintenance and simply making assessments to the various entities who cause any damage to the road by their works.

Perhaps in the minister's overview to any amendment to the Roads Law, he would consider looking into this situation. Certainly, there seems to be some merit in having one agency totally responsible for the road and simply having the cost defrayed to the various agencies who cause the damage to the road, that is to simply have uniform quality of the road.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Let me thank the member for making his suggestion because I agree wholeheartedly with what he just said. I believe the time has come for us to ensure that the quality of the work in terms of restoring the cut in the road is of the standard that we expect. I believe that we will, with the support of the House, make sure that that comes into place.

But let me just say that there is a committee which is chaired by Public Works and has representation from Cable & Wireless, CUC, the water company, and that is the Water Authority as well as Cayman Water Company, that deals with this particular matter. But I just want to be sure that the government sends the correct message: While there is a committee and we are willing to sit down and deal with you in a personal and businesslike manner we also reserve the right to say that if you cut the road without our permission you are going to have to pay for it.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries question 27 is standing in the name of The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 27

No. 27: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works what is the number of excavations and quarries currently developed in the Cayman Islands where explosives are used.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Explosives are currently in use for excavations at the following locations (and this is another question that has been passed on to my ministry):

- ◆ Quarry Products
- ◆ Sweet Water Springs – west of Frank Sound Fire Station
- ◆ Tarpon Springs – north of Breakers
- ◆ Midland Acres
- ◆ Marl Pit – north east of Meagre Bay Pond
- ◆ Pedro Castle Quarry – Caribbean Stone Limited

- ◆ occasionally at Admirals Landing, Red Bay
- ◆ occasionally at Heron Development, Red Bay
- ◆ Jennifer Bay Quarry – Scott Development, Cayman Brac
- ◆ Little Cayman Quarry – Scott Development, Little Cayman.

On three occasions in 1998, explosives were used to excavate material at Pineapple Development on West Bay Road. This work is now completed. Also in 1998, a very small blast was used to remove a rock in the canal at Patrick's Island.

The Chief Engineer of Public Works Department investigates all complaints received regarding noise or vibration alleged to be due to the use of explosives. The explosive in common use in the quarries is ANFO, a mixture of ammonium nitrate and fuel oil. This low explosive is inherently safe to store and use because it cannot be set off accidentally, even with a detonator. It can only be detonated by using a detonator, together with a small amount of high explosive.

The four licensed blasters all use modern "delay" detonators. In blasts involving dozens of holes these delay detonators ensure that only one or two holes go off at one time. This technology has made vibration damage of a thing of the past. For the same reason, residents will hear a prolonged rumble rather than a sharp bang. Seismographs are in common use to check vibration and noise when blasting close to buildings.

The importation, transport, and use of explosives are controlled by the Explosives Law 1975 and the Explosives Regulations 1976.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House if the importation of this explosive material is limited to the four licensed blasters who then undertake work for other persons needing work to be done? Or is it an open importation where anyone in the business can import the explosives?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I would be grateful if the member would allow me to come back to that question in writing from the Public Works Department.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state if there have been any problems reported at any one of the locations mentioned in the answer regarding blasting and/or quarry excavation taking place beyond that property into property owned by other entities?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I am not absolutely sure that I am able to answer that question verbally. I would prefer to do that one in writing also, sir.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: I tried to be as generic as I could, but I will be very pointed. Can the honourable minister state if there have been any reports to the government regarding the activities at Quarry Products extending into adjacent property owned by the government of the Cayman Islands?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: My answer to that is yes, there has been some report.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state if this has been verified to be a fact?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: As I understand it, it has been verified that he has moved into a certain area of government land which is more or less adjoining the parcel that Quarry Products owns.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state what action government has taken regarding this infringement?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: My understanding is that the matter is being investigated by the Auditor General, as well as other arms of government, in order to bring rectification to this particular matter.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable minister state if there is any knowledge at present as to some idea, not necessarily the exact measurement but some idea, as to how many cubic yards or tons, whichever one is used, of material was taken from the government's property?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I don't have that accurate information available to me, and I wouldn't want to guess what the amount was. I undertake to provide it to the member in writing if he will allow me.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable minister tell the House whether there is any practice which allows the Public Works Department, which I gather is the administering department, to examine the sites blasted prior to and immediately after so as to ascertain that the damage is contained within the desired blasting area?

I have received numerous complaints from persons, some of whom are homeowners whose walls, foundations and other structures got damaged and cracked as a result of vibrations from blasting near to at least one site mentioned in this list.

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I can only add that I am happy to check that because I am not absolutely sure. I would rather check it and then come back to the member in writing or verbally if he wishes.

The Speaker: Two additional supplementaries.
The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Just getting back to the supplementary I was asking, can the honourable minister explain the procedure to ensure either restitution or restoration of the property involved, or compensation for the property? What steps will government have to employ to exact restitution?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: In my time in government, this is the first occasion that I am aware of where this has taken place. There really isn't any precedent to follow in that regard. To the best of my knowledge, the matter involves some legal advice from the government. I wouldn't want to make any particular declaration at this time, but certainly, to caucus with the respective individuals in the government and then with their concurrence come back to the member with a written answer.

The Speaker: Final supplementary. The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Well-timed, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

Can the honourable minister state given the extent of the encroachment onto the government's property, if government is convinced . . . and I am not asking for your personal opinion I am asking the government's state of mind, generally speaking. What is government's position bearing in mind the extent of the encroachment with the thought that it is obvious that the perpetrators were well aware that they were encroaching into government property?

The Speaker: The Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: I would be very hesitant to answer that question simply because the "government" hasn't taken any decision on it as yet, because the matter is still being processed leading up to that decision. But when the decision is reached, I will be happy to give the answer to the First Elected Member for George Town.

The Speaker: That concludes Question Time for this morning. At this time we shall suspend for 15 minutes. But I ask honourable members . . . this is a short day so let us come back in 15 minutes please.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.44 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.17 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Item 4 on today's Order Paper is Government Business, continuation of the debate on the Throne Speech, delivered by His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands, on 19th February 1999.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR JOHN OWEN, CMG, MBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY, 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you.

I rise to give my contribution to the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor some weeks ago. And I would like to go on record by thanking His Excellency for the very keen interest that he and his good wife have placed in the Cayman Islands and in particular in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

I can honestly say that His Excellency the Governor was a true friend of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman as well as the island we now work and speak from. From the very beginning His Excellency recognised that Cayman Brac and Little Cayman made up the family of the three Cayman Islands. I can vividly remember in his very first Throne Speech, he referred to the islands as family members, going on to indicate that whenever a particular member of that family was hurting that it was a moral and to some extent a legal obligation to come to the aid of the hurting family member. And he has done his very best in this regard.

I can also say that since his arrival I found him to be most sympathetic in regard to the needs of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. He went further than just making mere statements, but was instrumental in having the various economic incentives put in place a couple of years ago which have greatly benefited Cayman Brac in particular and to a lesser extent Little Cayman.

Last week when His Excellency the Governor and his wife visited our constituency on their very last official visit, we were thrilled that they were able to be there to meet with our people for the unveiling of the monument sign at the Spot Bay Community Cove. Over 400 of our residents attended that occasion. At the same time you will recall that his wife graciously accepted the request to plant a tree, which I can respectfully submit will assist the residents throughout the island to remember her for a very long time, and the enthusiasm with which she went about carrying out that official duty.

In these times when we hear so much about reform, whether it be financial reform or public service reform, I believe that His Excellency's tenure of service during the past three and one half years here within these Cayman Islands was very timely indeed. I believe he has shown that he is a man of vision with the character willing and prepared to carry out the vision not of himself or from the top, but which incorporated and sought to encompass a very wide range of views and ideas from all three of the Cayman Islands.

As far as Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are concerned, I am reminded of the Thatch Tree and the important role it played in the development of the Cayman Islands in years past. If I may be permitted to expand the reason why I chose to use such imagery, thatch rope was used to bind things together. His Excellency's leadership, integrity, honesty, wisdom, and humility served to bind these three Cayman Islands together.

Thatch rope is also made from three strands of string, which are bound together by a wooden cog and used to make a rope. This can, I submit, represent the three Cayman Islands.

When His Excellency first arrived, the islands were perhaps somewhat segregated by various economic factors. Through Vision 2008 he has successfully used this as a tool to bring the people of these three islands together. Vision 2008 was a tool that forced us to think together as three islands as to where we wanted to see our country in ten years' time and even beyond. I am grateful for the time that my constituents invested in Vision 2008 whether by their time generally speaking, or by way of their expertise. They look forward to the implementation stage of Vision 2008, as we do.

Thatch was also used to weave baskets, which carried many a load, be it ironwood or sand or even ground provisions. And the Governor too, I submit, has carried the administrative role of government quite ably for the past three and one half years.

Thatch was also used to make string which sewed together baskets and many other things, and in this respect also His Excellency the Governor has in his own humble way, together with his wife, attempted to make each of our residents feel very special, very unique. In so doing I believe that they have successfully brought together the six electoral districts of these three islands in peace and harmony.

I am also happy that the Governor in formulating the policy for Vision 2008 saw necessary to incorporate Cayman Brac and Little Cayman in this visionary exercise. Like the Good Book tells us, any country without a vision shall surely perish. I believe that the Cayman Islands are in no way an exception to this Biblical principle. I am glad to see that, although somewhat late, the government proper as well as all honourable colleagues on the backbench will surely agree that it's better late than never, and it's good that a visionary exercise has now taken place and is in its final stages. I trust that it will be for the betterment of all of the people of the Cayman Islands.

On behalf of my constituents, and your constituents, Mr. Speaker, I would like to personally thank His Excellency the Governor and his wife for all that they have done. I pray, sir, that the protecting hand of Almighty God will keep and sustain them throughout their future endeavours and that in all their goings and comings they would continue to acknowledge God, for in so doing He shall direct their path.

If I may now be permitted to turn to the various responsibilities falling under the Ministry of Community Affairs, Sports, Women and Culture, I will so do. In addition I have responsibility for District Administration, that is Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. Indeed, it has been a pleasure, an honour, and a privilege to carry out my responsibilities for the past two and one half years in such a high calling in regard to these two islands whom we both love very dearly.

As you know, sir, the needs of our constituents of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are varied and many. But thanks, sir, to the kind assistance of my honourable colleagues in this House—including the members of the Finance Committee—several needs of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman are continuing to be met. In particular I am grateful that the Public Works men have been able to work on a much more consistent basis thereby enabling them to provide for the economic well being of their families.

I really take my hat off to these hardworking and dedicated men at the Public Works Department and their management. While visiting the projects, I sat for several hours and really observed the hard work they have had to do in the hot sun and other less than desirable conditions, and the extent of avidness with which they go about carrying out their duties. Again this year it is my hope that the various roadworks, the buildings, the recreational facilities, and any other projects we were successful in having approved with the blessing of Finance Committee, will be sufficient to provide the necessary labour and work needed for the people of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. While at the same time being able to carry out the dual function of providing necessary infrastructural and developmental needs for both of these two islands.

This year as well, the Minister of Education with the support of the majority of the honourable members of this House was able to provide for the commencement of the Spot Bay Primary School hall which we both agreed was badly needed for a very long time, and were both anxious and eagerly awaited the commencement. I am sure the staff, the parents, the students and the wider community will gladly await the completion of this project.

Thanks to the policy of Sports for All—which I must say was implemented by the past minister and is being continued by the Ministry—the Brac has been included in this policy as well. This year, God willing, we will continue to work on the football field which, too, is another long-awaited project for the constituents of Cayman Brac in particular. Thanks to the provision of a coach and other hardworking volunteers like Mr. Garfield or Teddy Ritch, and Mr. Raymond Scott, the children and even those young at heart are seeing the tremendous benefit of having organised sports in the islands and taking a keen interest in our young people

I am happy to report that last year the Cayman Brac football team won the second division championship held here in Grand Cayman. This year again we were all pleasantly surprised when our junior football team which was a newcomer to the junior league, took away the championship cup as well. We were extremely proud to see the achievement of these young people in Cayman Brac and other districts of Grand Cayman.

When His Excellency delivered his Throne Speech, he made mention of efforts being made to diversify the tourism industry in Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. And over the past several months we have been able, with the help of Mrs. Bradley and other persons, to add to the five various sites of interest on the Brac for nature and ecotourism. We have now commenced placing appropriate signage at these sites.

We have also been able to clean up the saltwater pond on the south side as well as commence with the construction of one of three nature paths on the south side which I can also report have increased in popularity as they are excellent photo sites for birds and other environmental causes.

We have also been able to upgrade some of our marine facilities and parks, which improves the quality of life for our constituents. We have seen an increase in the construction industry, as well as the real estate industry. I believe this is a direct result of the economic incentives which were put in place a couple of years ago. Also, as a direct result we are now seeing more and more Brackers returning home either to build a second home or to retire.

We are seeing an increased amount of activity in the amount of Caymanians coming across to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman to build and take up residence, be it on a temporary nature on these two islands. But it all has a very positive economic spin-off within the community. However, there are still not enough white-collar jobs within the Cayman Brac community, and many of our young people are still being forced to come to Grand Cayman or other attractive and lucrative jurisdictions in order to seek employment.

I dream of the day when our young people can return to Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and be in a position to take up job opportunities that do not presently exist on those two islands. His Excellency also indicated that there was a civil service working group being set up with one of the purposes being to identify office work which can be transferred from Grand Cayman to Cayman Brac. I fully concur that this is an adventure worth exploring.

In particular, because we now live in a computer age where there is fax and all sorts of advance technology, I think it is time for this committee and government to look at the possibility for example, the computer department to see if there are any aspects of their operations that can be transferred to the Brac to provide some of these badly needed jobs.

The Speaker: If you have reached a point that you can, the Minister for Education has asked that we take the luncheon break at 12.30. So we shall suspend proceedings until 2.30 PM.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.34 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.45 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate on the Throne Speech continues. The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women Youth and Culture, continuing.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Thank you.

Before we took the luncheon break I was saying that on the Brac we still have not reached a position where we have sufficient white-collar jobs to offer our high school graduates or others who may wish to return to the Brac to take up the occupation of their choice. Nonetheless, it was still my desire, and that of your good self, that one day this would be the case and that the economy of the Brac could flourish as was the case in years past.

As mentioned before the break, His Excellency the Governor intimated in his Throne Speech that a civil service working group would be set up. I proposed that perhaps one of the areas that could first be looked into would be the area of the computer department to see whether there was any possibility that some function of that department could be transferred to the Brac.

I was also delighted, as were other members, when we were able to pass the motion which dealt with the increase to ex-servicemen from $200 per month to $250, subject to the final passage through Finance Committee, with a further commitment with a maximum of $400 per year by January of the year 2000. I am sure that all respective veterans will be forever grateful to all honourable members of this House for such consideration.

The veterans on the Brac, and here in Grand Cayman as well, are becoming more and more involved in various community activities. For example, on Remembrance Day, they marched therein, as well as various church services. I believe that on at least one Sunday per month they visit various churches throughout the island. In recent times in the Brac they have also been participating in the funeral services of their fellow veterans. I believe this is a good move in that it helps the younger generation to appreciate the role of the veterans. Plus, it shows the degree of respect and honour they have for their fellow veterans.

I am also aware that requests have been brought before Council and subsequently approved for the veterans on the Brac to have a piece of leased property. That will be coming to the honourable House in due course by the relevant minister and speaking both for myself and the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman we are both extremely grateful for government's favourable consideration in this regard and would also like to thank those persons who had responsibility for such a venture.

The veterans on the Brac see a need for an office and are working quite diligently. Many Saturdays when I am across on the Brac they are volunteering their time clearing the property and moving forward with the creation of a plan with the optimism that the construction will be as smooth and cost effective as possible and that in the very near future they will be able to have a nice facility to serve more than one purpose.

It is also a dream of mine for the veterans to have what I would term a veteran's park similar to the hero's park that was established by the past minister (now the First Elected Member for West Bay), whereby we could erect statues of people in wartime and put a plaque that would serve to cement their achievements, while at the same time expressing the country's gratitude to the veterans. Perhaps this dream can be realised sooner rather than later.

Moving on to the aspect of Community Development, a Community Development office has recently been appointed for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. This officer, as mentioned by my colleague, the Minister for Health the Hon. Anthony Eden, previously worked with the Social Services Department and will do an extremely good job in this new capacity as she has the ability to be enthusiastic and energetic and quite charismatic. I am looking forward to seeing good things coming from this new position. Both the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman and I pledge to her our full support in this regard.

I believe the need has existed for quite some time. As we have seen from the recent report on the family study, the level of alcohol abuse in Cayman Brac in particular is extremely high. I am looking forward to some positive inroads in preventing this alcohol abuse by offering some positive community activities for persons in this category.

There is still much work to be done in the various communities, that is, all six of the communities within the three islands. But it is going to take all of us working together for the betterment of our people. I may be able to make a very small contribution. But I am sure that if all members were assisting together—and I am sure members are so doing and I congratulate them for their efforts—the task would be that much easier. So I would implore all ministers and all other honourable members that this is a very big issue and that our country will long be grateful for full participation or consideration in our assistance wherever and whenever possible.

The ministry continues to support the churches throughout the three islands. There were a number of good programmes started by the past minister, which are continued by the ministry. For example, there were after school programmes where we still support the youth worker grants. There have been various recommendations made by the Auditor General which the ministry has endeavoured to meet as far as practical, and yet still be able to meet the needs within the community.

Many of these young people unfortunately come from broken families. I believe that the government has a moral and legal responsibility to cater to these needs. If it is left to be swept underneath the carpet, it is going to create a very profound negative impact on our society and community as a whole. Some of these same children come not only from broken homes, but homes where even if both parents are in the home, they are under much economic stress and strain for various reasons. As a result they often have to work very long and arduous hours to make ends meet.

We are finding that there are a number of children unsupervised especially after school dismissed until parents returned home at the end of their working day. So the after school programmes have worked quite well and we are committed to fund it as far as our financial constraints will allow us.

I would also make a special plea to the churches or other similar charitable organisations to continue to identify these needs in the community. I believe that this is but one area where a positive partnership can be struck between the private sector and government so that these children who often lack attention and love in their lives . . . we can get back to the principle of doing unto others as we would like to have happen to ourselves.

As I move around the various districts in Grand Cayman, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman it really pains my heart to see some of the young children in particular who are left to raise themselves and are going down the road of destruction. It would amaze us what one word of kindness or act of generosity would do to make a positive change in the lives of these young people. And I congratulate those persons who have taken it upon themselves, often out of their own pockets . . . I know the Lions Clubs and Rotary and other such organisations have made a tremendous positive impact on the lives of many persons in this category.

I believe that although there should be a separation of church and state as it were, that the church has a very significant role to play in the positive development of role models for these young persons. By that I mean up until the age of 25 and even those young at heart. I really congratulate the church for the rich Christian heritage they have given and continue to give us even in this New Age generation.

I firmly believe that if there is any area that this country has gone wrong it is the area of Christianity. By that I can remember not so very long ago, having gone through the primary, secondary and high schools in Cayman Brac, that religious education was a very fundamental and intricate part of our school curriculum whereby Christianity was what we were taught—the Bible and God's Holy Word. Nowadays there seems to be a dilution whereby all sorts of religions from around the world are taught.

I believe that there is an appropriate time for that to be done. But if we are saying that we are a Christian nation—and I believe all members would adhere to that statement—then I believe that that is what we should teach. And once the children are of the educational cognisance then they should be open to the other religions and be in a better position to make a choice.

So often, even with the schools that I visit, I notice that it is just a casual thing. And without appearing to be criticising any particular person (because I don't believe this has just started in the past six years but for some time now), I believe it would do the country good if we got back to the basics when it comes to religion. Maybe it would cut down on some of the deviancy we are now seeing in our communities.

The Caymanian community has been under a number of pressures. My personal view is that unless we strongly adhere to the Christian values and heritage, the success we now enjoy will be jeopardised in years to come. Again, I stress that is my personal belief.

While on the topic of Community Affairs, I wish to refer to the White Paper recently made available to us here in Cayman, dealing with Partnership for Progress and Prosperity—Britain and the Overseas Territories. In particular, I wish to deal briefly with chapter 4 dealing with encouraging good government and the subhead dealing specifically with the extremely controversial issues of human rights.

In my humble opinion the White Paper clearly states Britain's objective. With your permission I quote, "In those territories [which includes the Cayman Islands] which choose to remain British should abide by the same basic standards of human rights, openness and good government that the British people expect of their Government. This means that Overseas Territory legislation [again this includes us here in Cayman] should comply with the same international obligations which Britain is subject, such as the European Convention on Human Rights and the United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights."

The White Paper also goes on to say (regarding the issue of Human Rights) that there are still some necessary changes or reforms required in the UKOT's—Cayman being one said jurisdiction. The White Paper identified three basic areas dealing with human rights that Britain indicated she would like to see reform in. These are 1) judicial corporal punishment; 2) legislation which outlaws homosexual acts between consenting adults in private; and 3) capital punishment. For purposes of my contribution I will deal specifically with the second issue dealing with legislation outlawing homosexuality between consenting adults in private.

When one looks at the White Paper one will see (on page 21) that Britain believes that all Overseas Territories should enact legislation similar to what is now in the UK, that is, the UK Sexual Offences Act 1967 which in fact legalised homosexual acts between consenting adults in private. The paper went on to say that in some Caribbean communities there is still a particularly strong opposition to homosexuality—and I am glad to say that Cayman is one of those jurisdictions based firmly on our religious beliefs.

On page 20, the White Paper goes on to say that Britain's preference is for us to enact local legislation to legalise this aspect of the reform dealing with human rights and homosexuality. But it went on to say that in the absence of our taking local action that legislation could be imposed in the Caribbean territories by an order in Council, that is the British Council. It is with interest that when the Honourable Robin Cook made his presentation to the UK Parliament that he chose to raise the standard from could enact, by using the words "that the UK is ready to make such reforms by an order in Council" if we fail to do so.

Consequently, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind that it's the UK's intention to legalise homosexuality between consenting adults in private, and for those territories that choose to remain British. To me, sir, this is a very important matter and certainly not a matter where we should remain silent. Nor is it a matter that we should sweep under the carpet or invoke the ostrich syndrome and say we can do nothing about it because it will come by an order in Council.

For starters, the White Paper is just that, a discussion paper. It is not yet law or an order in Council. At the risk of being accused of trying to legislate morals, I believe it is prudent and necessary for us to pause and look at the very foundation of our Christian nation, that is, God's Holy Word the Bible. We will see when we take the time to do so that in Leviticus 18:22, using the Living Bible version, homosexuality is absolutely forbidden for it is an enormous sin.

And the King James version, in the same reference, Leviticus 18:22 says, "Thou shall not lie with mankind as womankind. It is an abomination." We see also in Leviticus 20:13 that "if a man lies with mankind as he lays with a woman both of them have committed an abomination and a sin."

The world being as it is, some may say 'Well, those are all Old Testament references. We are now under the dispensation of Grace.' So out of an abundance of caution let me provide at least one New Testament reference. At Romans 1:24 it reads, "Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lust of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves: who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed forever. Amen. For this cause God gave them up to vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature: and likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one towards another; men with men working that which is unseemly and receiving in themselves that recompense of their error which was meet.

"And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient; being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whispers, backbiters, haters of God, spiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful: who knowing the judgement of God that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."

The White Paper in my humble opinion seeks to set out the difference between homosexual acts carried out in private between consenting adults and similar acts carried out in public. My Bible tells me that homosexuality is sin. It seeks no distinction between private and public. And I believe to do this would be to fully concur with the homosexual's agenda which is to desensitise the public to this abomination, this sin.

I believe that if we would take some time to think even five years ago what our own individual reaction would have been to such a mandate, or such an indication, it would have been much stronger than it is today. But over the years, . . . and a lot of this has come, unfortunately, out of America. Even the Methodist Church . . . I was looking at an article that came out in March of this month where they ordained two lesbian women as bishops in their church.

And when we think of the fundamental religions that they came from, such as the Church of God Holiness and the Pentecostal and other such beliefs, it really shows us how this desensitisation is occurring. The article went on to refer to a show called "Ellen" and how millions of people across America tuned in when she publicly declared that she was a lesbian. It just shows the extent of depravity and the state that this world is now coming to.

The article was written by a man who was also homosexual, and it went on to say that there are many empty graves around and they felt that they could not desensitise this generation but their agenda was to attack the children because they felt that if they could wipe away this generation then the children that came afterwards would be in a better position. It went on to say that they were using music, television, magazines and a lot of games that perhaps some of our children are being exposed to.

That is what I mean by the psychological word of desensitisation. Even I was amazed to hear the comments from some persons whom I thought would have known better as if to say well it's in private so it's not really our business, and the UK will send it down so it's really not our business. I believe when I spoke about a country not having a vision and perishing . . . this would be one area that we certainly need to have a vision in and one area that politics would not seek to divide. If we don't decide at this point in our history to stand for what is right then I submit that we will fall for everything.

I further submit that this very important matter is one in which the country should go in much prayer and fasting. I know from personal experience that if we put God first in our lives that He will direct our ways provided we lean not on our own understanding. Solomon, the wisest man who ever lived admonished us in the book of Proverbs that God will laugh at our calamity and mock us if we do not accept His laws and do not fear Him. It is only then that we can dwell in safety and be quieted from the evil that is to come upon us.

Speaking for myself—and I trust it will be a conscience vote if it comes to that—I would like to go on record here in this honourable House today and say like Joshua of old, “As for me and my house we shall serve the LORD.” The last time that I dared to be bold enough to speak about God and prayer in this honourable House I was quickly reprimanded—let me hasten to say not by members of this House—with words to the effect that someone as educated as me should not be referring to prayer or God or the Bible because it does not sound like an educated person.

But let me say like Paul did in the New Testament, I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ because it is the power of God unto salvation. If we cannot come into the House that God has blessed us with over the years, with freedom and democracy, and exalt His name and lift it up, then we really have been desensitised in these Cayman Islands.

The White Paper categorically states that this new proposed partnership—and I really like that word it's so ironic it is not funny—between Britain and its Overseas Territories must be a partnership for progress and prosperity. It further states that this partnership between Britain and its Overseas Territories must be “effective, efficient, fair, free and based on decency and democracy.” These are the words found in the White Paper. I concur with it all, but for the life of me I have not been able to find anything decent about homosexuality whether it's in public or in private. And I would further submit that we as legislators have a legal obligation not to condone such demands.

I realise that we have a mandate from God himself that we are to love homosexuals—but not to condone their acts. That is the position that I take.

In regard to British citizenship, the White Paper states that the citizenship and the right to abode will be offered to people who now enjoy it in the UKOT's and who meet certain conditions. On page 18 of the White Paper it says that this British citizenship will not come with an obligation to introduce British tax regimes or tax rates, nor will this British citizenship in any way restrain any of the UKOT's from going the way of independence if that is their desire or in any way inhibit their constitutional rights to determine their future constitutional outcome.

The other important issue that was brought out in the White Paper is that the UK Overseas Territories or the British Dependent Territories citizenship . . . and this can be found on page 19, and I quote “British citizenship should be on a non-reciprocal offer as far as the right of abode is concerned.” I submit that to do otherwise would result in an influx of people from other similar jurisdictions and this could have been very negative and could dramatically alter the social cohesion and character of our Caymanian community.

My understanding as set out on page 17 of the same White Paper is that any British Dependent Territory citizen who does not want to take it up will have that discretion and they will then remain British Dependent Territory citizens. So it seems as if we are creating two types of citizens within the one jurisdiction. All of this will require Britain to put in place the necessary legislation for this principle to become a reality.

Then one may reasonably ask the question, What advantage is there to taking up this new offer, when it is fully legalised, that is, of becoming a British citizen? As I am sure you have heard from fellow Caymanians, many of us would not wish to go to the UK to take up permanent residence. We would prefer to stay here in the Cayman Islands. According to the paper, it is purported that one of the examples would be that such persons would be able to gain work experience in the UK and some people may wish to exercise this option of going to Britain to live and work permanently. I know that is not an option that will be speedily taken up by me. I am quite happy being here in Cayman.

Another purported advantage is that it would offer freedom of travel within Britain, as one would be able to enter Britain at the same ports that Brits do as well as other European nationals. This would give the British Dependent Territory citizens certain European community rights of free movement and residence within the European community and the European economic area in other member states.

In the White Paper Britain also proposed to make it possible for children of persons taking on the British citizenship of qualifying parents to automatically get this right at birth or at adoption. But they also intend to put a discretion in so that such children would have a right to choose to be British or not to be British. The White Paper also proposes several other types of reforms in the area of the environment, financial services, audit, borrowing and tax savings which the government will address in greater depth by way of either a statement or a press release in very short order.

The Ministry of Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, continues to formalise policies which will seek to support the community activities. And we are also striving to ensure that there is a holistic implementation of community development in all three of the islands. It is still the Ministry's mission to promote a sustainable level of community life and to ensure that there is sustainable economic level of development on Cayman Brac and Little Cayman as well.

Over the past year or so there have been several areas where we have made strides. I will briefly turn to those at this time. Under the area of Sports, we were able to almost complete the work at the Old Man Bay playfield and the Bodden Town playfield. And we hope to open the Bodden Town playfield in the very near future.

The George Town School canteen as well as their toilet and changing room facility at the Smith Road oval was also opened and is being used.

We were able to do a number of things at the Truman Bodden Sports Centre. We completed the steeplechase, the storage and hurdle, and water jump equipment area. And work has also started on our Sports Association offices on the main grandstand at the Truman Bodden Sports Complex.

The sports office staff has also been working in conjunction with the staff of the Education Department with a view to establishing a curriculum for physical education in the schools for the Cayman Islands. We found that within the primary schools, for whatever reason, there was not enough personnel dealing specifically with physical education. Although in football the primary schools seem to be making much progress when they reach the middle school they did not seem to have any set structure for such teams to continue. So we have been working to try to remedy this loophole. I must say that the education staff have been extremely cooperative and have assisted wherever possible.

We are also looking to see whether it would be practical and feasible to have a user fee structure to be able to recoup some of the expenditure. We are often being accused of being the ministry that spends and spends and does not have a lot of obvious monetary results. But I would say in defence of the responsibilities under the ministry that a lot of these things are social development programmes and we cannot expect to see X amount of dollars. But when we sit down and look at it from a preventive perspective then I believe that money spent in this area is money well spent. It has to be better to utilise positive catalyst and reinforcement in the lives of these young people through sports rather than trying to rehabilitate them at a much later stage when some of them could have been saved by such curative measures.

We also provided financial assistance to various groups including the Cayman Islands Olympic Committee which will enable them to attend the Central American Games in Venezuela and also for the teams that went to the Caribbean Games in Malaysia. We were also in a position to award the second recipient of the sports scholarship and that person commenced studies at the University of Tampa pursuing a Master's Degree in adaptive physical education. And we are continuing to give financial assistance to those athletes who perhaps could not afford it or got partial scholarships from overseas institutions. This was a policy put in place by the past minister and we saw fit to continue with the policy for it has proven itself and made some very positive results in the lives of these young people.

Moving on to the area of women, where we have also made strides, we now have a fulltime gender trained person with a Master's Degree. We were able to put a Caymanian officer in the Women's Resource Centre who is coordinating various programmes and seeing that the centre is used to its maximum potential. We hosted an open house at the Women's Resource Centre honouring women. And His Excellency the Governor graciously proclaimed March as such a month and we have been getting very good response throughout the entire month. I should also add that we had the occasion to honour three women on the Brac, which was very well attended, and we will do the same in Grand Cayman where a number of women will be honoured.

We had originally planned to have the event this coming Monday. But, because of conflicting events in Bodden Town and George Town we didn't want to force members to make a decision between their district events and the one for the women, so we decided to re-schedule it. We will be making members aware of the new date as soon as the venue has been confirmed.

We also honoured women with an exhibit at the museum called "Our Islands' Daughters." There were numerous television and radio advertisements and appearances throughout the year. We are trying our best to develop and maintain the Women's Resource Centre by coordinating a number of varied activities. We now have in place a group of core volunteers who are assisting us with the daily activities and programmes at the centre. I am grateful to the two honourable lady members, who had the vision and the foresight to bring a motion highlighting the issues of women, and to the past minister for taking up the mantle and getting it started.

I would really like to thank my staff, not only in this regard, but also in all areas. I am sure it must have been somewhat awkward to have a new minister come in mid-stream, but they have been of tremendous help and assistance and I would like to give them my deepest thanks and appreciation for their efforts in that regard.

As it relates to culture, the director of the National Archives and the History Monitoring Committee have been advising and monitoring the progress of the author of The New History of the Cayman Islands. The last briefing I received said we were up to chapter 10. I am looking forward to seeing the completion of this piece of history and I am sure our children for many generations to come can learn not only what happened in our past but be able to learn not to repeat the same mistakes over and over again.

We were also able to complete the conversion process of the North Side and East End district libraries. I understand they are being utilised within the community. We received a request from the residents of the East End community to make the opening hours somewhat more flexible so that persons working outside the district could have an opportunity to go to the library after 5.00 or 6.00. I have brought that up with the head librarian and she is putting in place new flex hours to accommodate that request.

As far as I am aware, we have not had a similar request from North Side. But if and when the need arises, we will do the very same and try to accommodate the needs within the district.

We are also working toward the reformation of the facility in Bodden Town so that they too can have their own district library. While I am disappointed that after some 37 years we don't have a national library per se to match the economic success of this country, I am grateful for the policy that sought to put in place various district libraries. This can help to alleviate the deficit of not having a national library.

Suffice it to say that this year will be some 60 years since the establishment of the George Town Library and we are planning a 60-year celebration. I trust that before I am out of the ministry we can get together and identify sufficient funds to put a proper national library in place. I believe that this is a very necessary infrastructural need within our country.

For the second year, we sponsored the summer music camp. From all reports, it was again a success. The London Chamber Players graciously performed last year on the Brac and Grand Cayman. They assisted for almost one week with the music camp, and it was an absolute delight to see the performance at the St. Ignatius Church where our young musicians came together with the professional musicians and really gave a splendid performance. I believe that exposure of this kind is the right direction to go.

We also put in place a manager of special projects. That person has been hired by the Cayman National Cultural Foundation and his main function is to coordinate the Children's National Choir and the Cayman Islands Big Band, and they held their first combined concert.

The National Gallery opened some 1400 square feet of office space last year, albeit temporary office space. They are now able to have various exhibits, and they have begun a number of programmes and various workshops. They have also played a significant role within our education system, holding various seminars and lectures free of charge throughout the school system.

We have also been fortunate enough to provide a second art scholarship. This person commenced studies at the Atlantic College of Arts and is now pursuing a Bachelor's Degree in Interior Design and Fine Arts. Once again, we sponsored the local Musician's Association to attend the Caribbean Music Market in Miami. It is our intention to do the same again this summer. And we had representation from the Cayman National Cultural Foundation both having a booth at this huge music market.

Turning now to the area of labour. As all honourable members know there was a tremendous backlog of labour complaints and we have been trying our very best to have those cases dealt with. We have now put six labour tribunals in place with the labour appeals board having been appointed. Members have been aware that there are amendments to the Labour Law before this House (on which I will go into more detail), which will give the ministry and the department more flexibility as to the quorum, the amount of membership with the tribunals.

There is great difficulty in forming a quorum and in persons volunteering the huge amount of time that is now required to deal with all of these complaints. Some of the complaints have been settled, but most remain unsettled unless dealt with by the tribunals. A tribunal should be meeting every day of the week, and one of the tribunals is making up the six which have been appointed for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman to deal specifically with their labour issues.

In Cayman Brac and Little Cayman we have also put in place a labour inspector. Government will be seeking to make a committee stage amendment.

The area of gratuities still remains problematic and there are concerns. As mentioned in His Excellency's Throne Speech, it is our intention to put a qualified accountant in the Labour Department to help with investigations and will hopefully be the first step in solving some of the disgruntlement in regard to gratuities.

In respect of the pension legislation, the National Pension Board was appointed in March 1998 and the Superintendent of Pensions commenced work. He has put in place the necessary registration for the pension plans as required by the law, and he will also amend the Golden Years booklet to reflect the various changes made to the Pensions Law back in 1998. This booklet is now available to the public for their information.

For this year the ministry has many areas where it would like to see improvement. We hope that we will be able to report on improvements in the year 2000. One area we are particularly keen about is the construction of a new swimming pool. All members who have been around the Truman Bodden Complex in recent times have observed that our swimming programme has been very successful. Many children are on a waiting list to get into the programme.

It is the ministry's intention, subject to the blessings of Finance Committee, to put in place a pool with a view to a three-year programme with subsequent years so that we can have sufficient facilities to take on the load. This is an area where the policy of sports for all is being applied, and we believe it is a necessary area that can actually save someone's life, enabling him or her to swim.

It is also our intention to further develop and maintain the Women's Resource Centre and to continue programmes such as we had this month honouring our women. We hope to support the 16 days of Activism Against Gender Violence campaign. When one looks at the police report one will see that the area of domestic violence is ongoing in these Cayman Islands. I believe that we must continue to move towards zero tolerance in this regard because it is causing such a negative impact not only on the receiving end, but also on the children who have no choice in the matter at all. I urge the police and other agencies dealing with this very sensitive issue to take all steps to treat it as a crime because that's what it is.

The days where we considered robbery, assault and battery, and those things falling under our Penal Code as more important than domestic violence are over. Unless that attitude is taken, we have no hope of ending domestic violence.

The Speaker: Excuse me, would this be a convenient time for the afternoon break?

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Yes sir.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.37 PMPROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.07 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated. Debate continues. The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women, Youth and Culture, continuing.

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Before we took the break I was saying that the ministry will continue with its development of the Women's Resource Centre and its programmes. Just as we have the policy of sports for all, the policy in the ministry as it relates to women is for all women—not just the poor women or the elite women, but any woman in need that the ministry can help, either by way of information or otherwise. That is our ultimate goal.

I would say that as it relates to this matter, again similar to the other community issue, it will take all of us working together in unity and in full cooperation if we are to solve these issues in a practical manner. These days every little bit helps. And one or two of us women cannot accomplish all of these very varied goals unless we have the help of the churches and other organisations, even the men.

I was especially delighted at the function over on the Brac where we had some brave and courageous men come out to honour the women. We had some asking whether or not men could come. I am sure all that know me know that while I am in the ministry it is going to be a gender issue. While realising that there are issues relating to women, there are similar issues relating to men. Being the minister responsible for community affairs I believe that I have a responsibility to deal with all gender issues and to do whatever within our power to put the requisite policy in place.

I believe that we come from a history where we learned that unity is still the best tool for a successful community. It is neither the ministry's intention or mine to create any policy that would be prejudicial or divisive, but to try to bring our community together. Again I stress that in order to do that we need the cooperation of all.

I believe that women have played a very significant and important role during the development of our history in Cayman. Even today we have many women in top positions making important and significant decisions. Having travelled around the world, I say that the rights our Caymanian women enjoy are by far above the rights of many other women around the world.

We recently had an artist recognised at the Women's Resource Centre. It was heartrending to hear of her experiences in South Africa with the really terrible things happening to the women there because of their culture. But, thank God, again because of our Biblical beliefs, we have not had to go through such terrible times in the Cayman Islands. With our seafaring men and with the women having to run the country for some time, we have a culture of unison and I seek to keep it that way.

As stated, there are still strides to be made in respect to domestic violence and the ministry is continuing to work in that regard. We are grateful for the kind assistance we have received from the Business and Professional Women's Club. We will assist them this year financially and otherwise in their endeavours.

The ministry has responsibility for the training of ex-prisoners to enable them to come back into the job mainstream. We have put in place a dedicated Caymanian women officer who deals specifically with this area within the labour department. And from the briefing received, she is doing an excellent job and has been able to reform some of the ex-prisoners who have come out of Northward Prison.

Just looking at the name of the ministry one can see there are a number of responsibilities falling within the ambit. We have been doing everything possible to address these issues taking into consideration the amount of time we have had to spend in the House, which is also a vital part of the responsibility; and the shortness of my tenure thus far. We are open to constructive criticism. We are open to assistance where it can improve and help the ministry because at the end of the day it is my objective to improve the entire community within the Cayman Islands, politics not being one of those considerations.

I have not made an attempt to cover every aspect within the ministry because of the time and the volume of business before this honourable House. But with the remarks that I have made thus far I chose to highlight certain issues spending the majority of time dealing with community affairs and the White Paper which recently came out and the potential effect it can have. Even if it is mandated through an order in Council from the UK, our community has to be prepared. If there is any one issue I believe my Caymanian people would make a life and death issue, it is this issue.

So we each have a responsibility to prepare our people to let them know exactly what is happening, to be transparent yet accountable, and also not to be afraid to let them know what the word of God says. I believe that we have arrived where we are today because of our belief in God Almighty. I do not believe it is a coincidence that the financial reforms are coming at the same time as the human rights reforms, and if we are faithful to God's word, and put it as a paramount consideration, then perhaps it may be the solution to our financial reforms.

I believe when we made the decision about homosexuals on the gay ship it was not a popular decision. But adhering to God's commandments is not based on popularity it is based on what is right and what is wrong. I believe that we still have statesmen and stateswomen within this parliament who are prepared to stand up on those principles.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your kind indulgence.

The Speaker: The floor is open to debate. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) The floor is open to debate. Does any other member wish to speak? (Pause) The floor is open to debate does any other member wish to speak? (Pause)

The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: It was not my intention to debate the Throne Speech, seeing as there is not much more that can be said. But seeing that I am the only representative in this parliament for the district of North Side, I am certain that my people would like to hear my feelings on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor.

I too would like to join all other honourable members of this parliament in congratulating His Excellency on the presentation of his farewell Throne Speech. As other members said, His Excellency said in his introduction that the two key challenges facing us will be the OECD initiative and the implementation of Vision 2008. These words are very true.

I will not go into the OECD White Paper. I feel that it was the right of all other members who dealt with it, but I believe that this parliament set up a committee specifically study the White Paper when it was received to go back to the United Kingdom and the people of these islands with recommendations on what we are prepared to accept. I personally believe (and I have not discussed this with any other member) that this White Paper . . . if it is one time that this country should look at a referendum law, it is to deal with this particular paper. There are issues that we must allow our people to make the decisions on—not us as their representatives. They must voice their opinions, they must say what they are prepared to accept or not accept and this must be forwarded to the UK government.

I would like to congratulate Mrs. Joy Basdeo on her commitment to the 2008 project. It may be said that I tend to commend women too often, but I will as long as I am a representative in the Legislative Assembly of the Cayman Islands. I feel she has done a very good job. I am happy that the Governor took the decision to put this on the shoulders of a woman who is prepared to see it through.

I thank the people of these islands who have contributed to the Vision 2008 project, particularly the 250 people in the roundtables who have been meeting for some four months and putting their ideas forward to where they would like to see this country go down the road. As I said in another debate on the Throne Speech, we have had contributions from sociologists, accountants, economists, you name it, that this parliament has. But my comments will be more along the line of a commoner, and I will deal with particular paragraphs of His Excellency's Throne Speech.

I would like to congratulate the new Chief Justice on his commitment to improve the listing of cases in summary court and to dispose of the more than 50 outstanding criminal cases over two years old by 1st July 1999. I feel that it is not good for cases to stay before the courts for too long a period in a country like the Cayman Islands. I congratulate him also on looking at eligibility of clients for legal aid and alternative ways of recovering legal costs that will be reviewed.

I think the courts were questioned on this particular legal aid during a meeting of Finance Committee. It was felt that it was being extended beyond persons who really needed legal aid. I think it is time that we really looked at it and I feel that if there is any way that we can recover some of these legal costs that this should be done. The Cayman Islands needs whatever money it can collect, as we have seen clearly from one budget to the next.

I would like to move on to the Royal Cayman Islands Police (RCIP). I would like to congratulate the new Commissioner of Police. I feel he is doing a good job. I feel that he is listening to the people when he attends these police meetings held in the districts on a monthly or quarterly basis.

One item under the RCIP that gives me great concern is the managing of crime. I live in the district of North Side, a very quiet, relaxed area of Grand Cayman. In the past six weeks there have been, as I understand, some 39 cases of burglary in the district of North Side. These burglaries are taking place in the Cayman Kai area where we have a lot of retired Americans, or persons who have winter homes there who spend the winter with us. To me it sends a bad signal to those people.

We hear, when we question the cause of these burglaries, that it is just by a handful of young people paying for their drug habits. I think we have to look at this situation very closely. If this is the problem there needs to be some coordination between the police department and the portfolio responsible for drug rehabilitation to see what can be done. It has always been my belief that if we are able to save one or two of our young people from the drug habit we are achieving. We cannot just put them behind bars. Some, when they return to the public after two days, are back behind bars.

Just recently in the district of North Side at the boat ramp, four cars were burglarised between the hours of 10.00 and 12 noon. It is my understanding that a young man who just came out of prison two days before turned himself in with some of the jewellery that was removed from one of those cars because he said he wanted to return to Northward Prison. We must find out why these young people want to return to prison. We must assist them in whatever way possible to change their ways.

I remember in the district of North Side when one could go to bed at night and leave the doors and windows unlocked without worry. It is the job of the police to find these persons who are committing these crimes and take them before the courts. But I stress that there must be some coordination, and let us get some help. Let us find out why they want to return to Northward Prison.

The Commissioner of Police also spoke of community relations and community problem solving. I must thank him, for at last a community officer will be appointed for the district of North Side. My people are calling for 24-hour police service in the district. I have been calling for 24-hour police coverage of that district for almost eight years now. I can agree with the Commissioner of Police when he says he would rather his policemen be on the roads than in the police station. But it is comforting to the public when they dial the local police station that someone answers. I ask members and ministers of Council to do whatever possible for 24-hour coverage of the eastern district police stations.

I would like to turn to the capital construction programme for new roads. I would like to commend the honourable minister for taking the decision, as supported by the backbench, for the Crewe Road Bypass. This is a much-needed road to assist persons in the eastern districts travelling to George Town daily. A 24-mile drive takes one hour and a half.

I would ask the honourable minister if the Crewe Road Bypass could be given preference over the additional Harquail Bypass extension. We know both roads are needed, but I believe the Crewe Road Bypass is very necessary to assist persons from the eastern districts.

I feel that if we look at having compulsory bussing for children in Grand Cayman it would help alleviate the traffic problem. I have said this before. We will get the Crewe Road Bypass, but what happens when the traffic reaches George Town? That is a big problem. During the summer holiday when schools are out, travel from the district of North Side can take 30 to 45 minutes staying within the speed limit. It is my suggestion to the honourable minister that we look to see if compulsory bussing of school children is workable.

The Ministry for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation—

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: May I interrupt you for one moment?

Before you go into that, maybe it would be the correct time to take the adjournment. I would entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

The Honourable Minister responsible for Community Affairs, Sports, Women Youth and Culture.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Julianna O'Connor-Connolly: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Monday at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Monday. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM MONDAY 29 MARCH 1999.

EDITED
MONDAY
29 MARCH 1999
10.19 AM

[Prayers read by the Third Elected Member for West Bay]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper, Reading by the Speaker of Messages and Announcements.

READING BY THE SPEAKER OF
MESSAGES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

APOLOGIES

The Speaker: I have received apologies from the Honourable Minister responsible for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works who will be arriving later today. And from the Fourth Elected Member for West Bay who is ill.

Item 3 on today's Order Paper, Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question 28 is standing in the name of the First Elected Member for George Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 28

No. 28: Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts asked the Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development to give an update on the ongoing financial reforms.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Honourable Members will recall that the financial reform initiative began approximately ten months ago and has involved periodic briefings and seminars for members of the Legislative Assembly as well as the civil service.

Following the diagnostic study, which was presented to members of the Legislative Assembly and to civil servants, we are now at the stage where drafts of the detailed design of the reforms and implementation plan are being finalised. It is the intention to provide a full briefing to the members of the Legislative Assembly on these drafts as soon as they are finalised and available.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable Third Official Member explain the relationship of the financial reforms with the Vision 2008 exercise?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: An integral part of the Vision 2008 exercise is the financial reform initiative. It will look at the reform initiative right across the public sector of government not only central government but also statutory authorities as well. It will take into account the components such as the Medium-Term Financial Strategy, the Public Sector Investment Programme. It ties all of the areas together because the financial reform is an integral part of the overall reform process. Unless that is in place the effective and efficient management of governmental resources will not be achieved.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable Third Official Member state how these reforms will affect the budget process?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: First of all, we are moving away from what is referred to as input based budgeting, which means looking at the requirements in terms of money amounts by departments. What will be looked at is what can be expected in terms of the range of services, or quantifying the range of services that will be provided by a given department or entity within government. It will go further and look at the utility in terms of why these services are being produced? How will they be consumed? And in terms of how this fits into the overall macro-economic management of government.

This is what will essentially happen. This is a significant shift in the budget process from what currently exists.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Can the honourable Third Official Member also explain the significance of the move from the cash-based accounting system to the accrual accounting system?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: At this point in time the cash-based accounting system provides limited information to honourable members of the Legislative Assembly, the decision-makers of government, controlling officers and the community at large.

For example, if one takes the providing of a given service in the Education Department, the amount of money for the services to be provided looks at the cash expenditure needs. It doesn't take into account, for example, the depreciation of equipment, the depreciation of buildings, and it doesn't take into account other relevant charges.

What it also does is distort the accuracy of financial information in a given year. For example, we have recently completed a new hospital facility which has a life based on a period of 40 years. Based on how the financial information has been presented, the write-off of that expenditure would have taken place from the time the project commenced (two and a half years ago) up to the point where expenditure ceases on that facility which, in terms of its development cost, would be in 1999. Surely, if it were done on an accrual basis what would be looked is the developmental cost being aggregated and we would have an asset value.

Let's say from the year 1999, if this is when the facility is put in use, the depreciation of that hospital would have commenced and what would really be reflected in the budget for the year 1999 would be the value of that building that would be used up in terms of the providing of medical services for the community.

So we wouldn't have instances where the budget for 1997, 1998, and 1999 would have been bloated because of the sums put in in order to cover the developmental costs of these facilities. That would not be the case. So what it does is take into account the direct expenditure, the notional expenditure, and at the end of the day it provides a very good understanding as to what the overall expenditure for a timeframe really is.

Take for example another area, insurance. Often times some of these policies go beyond a period of one year. But instead of treating these as prepaid assets to be used up over a defined period, what happens is that from the very time the expenditure is incurred, this is when it is booked as having been spent, no consideration is taken in terms of extending the benefits into future periods.

We also have certain expenditures that are not being recognised, yet they are accruing, such as the liability for the public service pension. That is not a contingent liability; that is a direct liability. This will develop a financial statement position that will allow government to see what its asset base really is; it will look at the potential revenue because this will be provided through the income and expenditure statement. It provides complete financial information, which is not being provided at this time.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I totally agree with the honourable Third Official Member, that the accrual system will improve the presentation of the financial statements and give a better position. I am sure he would agree that it will not reduce the expenditure of government, if anything it will increase the expenditure because there will be certain expenses involved. Can the honourable Third Official Member say whether or not the revenue base restructuring that we understand is now being done by the Economics and Statistics Unit will also be given equal priority?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: First let me say that I agree with the Third Elected Member for George Town when he says that it will not necessarily decrease the value of the estimates presented to the Legislative Assembly. We have certain expenditures outside of what is shown in the estimates, and this may not necessarily be shown in terms of disbursements made, but from the very minute that liabilities are accruing and not being recognised. This will bring about a change in terms of the completeness of information because all of this information will have to be assembled and presented to the legislature for consideration.

The revenue side is an integral part that needs to be revisited. This exercise will have to be given top priority. We have quite a range of services now being provided by government that are subsidised and up to this point in time, the relevant information as to the cost of these services cannot be accurately presented under the cash accounting system. Every item of revenue will have to be looked at. This is where the research is being carried out at this time in order to develop the background information so that further policy decisions can be taken in regard to revenue.

What is important is revenue maintenance. That can be described in terms of the process that will be put in place to make sure that the revenue base doesn't experience significant diminution over a period of time. It has been suggested in this House (and also commented on in the papers) that we could look at various ways of making sure that revenue items are indexed to the cost of living index so that wherever there is an erosion as a result of inflation these can be corrected immediately. But we cannot leave any aspect . . . the quantification of assets and liabilities, everything will have to be looked at because we are talking about a full picture.

Also, what will be different in terms of the budget process, and again we are going to look at the specific legislative requirements for this, where the budget is now being brought to the House in November, we are going to have the budget preceded by the budget policy statement where members of the Legislative Assembly will be provided with an overview in terms of government's expenditure or financial programme for a given time frame and to examine issues. These issues will embrace the funding of expenditure, looking at the revenue stream, all relevant areas of government's finances.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: My thanks to the honourable member for that answer. Based on the accrual system which takes into account a lot of expenses which are not included in the cash system, such as depreciation and other accruals, would the honourable Third Official Member not agree that if that accrual system is introduced that he might have to cut back on other expenses or otherwise increase the revenue if he is to maintain the current expenditure profile?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I take note of what the member has said, but we will have to look in terms of the impact on the other side as well, the receipt or revenue side. Let us say, for example, that there are significant receivables due, payable and collectable that are being excluded at this time. From the very minute that we start to show receivables in our financials, it will put a different impetus entirely in terms of the revenue collection mode within departments and right across government as a whole. At the end of the day this will be a part of the basis on which performance will be assessed.

For example, where a government department has the potential to collect X million dollars, and is collecting less than X, this will allow for members of the Legislative Assembly to raise questions as to why, for example, 20% of the revenue due, collectable and payable for services rendered is not being collected. It will allow for full transparency right across the board.

We will see favourable impacts on the revenue side and also on the expenditure side. What we must bear in mind is that where we have a capital development budget now, for example the most recent one, we are looking at expensing major items with a significant life within a short time frame. We are still going to have significant capital budgets, but this will take into account the portion of facilities that will be used up during an accounting period. It will take into account depreciation and all of the charges relevant to that. But one of the things we will get away from is where, for example a 40 year facility is being developed and expensed in one year.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I thank the member for that answer. But I am sure that he will agree that receivables are really not taken into the revenue side of your income and expenditure accounts. It is an asset item. I am not really speaking of receivables that would produce cash. My trend of question has to do, really, with the bottom line regarding your surplus and your deficit on the income and expenditure side of your accounts, not on the asset side.

Bearing in mind that on an average of 5% of building and equipment that your expenditure side in depreciation is going to increase significantly and that you may not have sufficient revenue to cover your present expenditure plus the additional accrual expenses such as depreciation, the question is, Do you feel that you may have to consider looking at other types of revenue, in other words, decrease the present recurrent expenditure mode? I understand the position of receivables that produce cash, which is a totally different issue from what I am dealing with at this point. I am dealing with the surplus and deficit account.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I respect the views of the member, but I will differ to one slight extent. Not to say that we are not thinking alike in terms of the structure of government's finances, but we cannot factor out the receivables from the income and expenditure statement for the reason that a receivable is a claim that exists.

Let's take the Immigration Department for example. If it has the potential to collect $1 million for 1999 and it only collects $750,000, under the present cash system, the only part that would be counted as revenue is the $750,000 collected. What will not be factored into the income statement will be that $250,000 due. When that is factored into the income statement it creates an item that shows the department that government has built up an asset because of monies that are due through services rendered by this department, but not yet collected.

I think the member will agree with me on that point in terms of what has given rise to the receivables. Then it affects the asset side. It's an asset item in the balance sheet and also an integral part of the income and expenditure statement.

We will have to look very carefully in terms of expenditure. First of all, we are changing the mode. We are making a shift from input to output. If a given department is now getting $2 million to defray annual expenditure and this only takes into account the direct expenditure needs, when other expenditure items are added and that brings it up to $5 million, the focus is going to shift. It is going to take account of the $5 million. But the question is, What is that department providing to government for $5 million? How are these services being used? How do they dovetail into the overall macroeconomic programme of government? How does it roll up what happens at the portfolio level? And what happens in terms of the mission statement of the portfolio and the overall programmes of central government? All of these will have to be looked at.

There could be a need for cutbacks, not necessarily to reduce expenditure but if the services being provided were previously regarded as useful and are now found to be less than what the government was seeking, it will mean that the whole process will have to be revisited.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Can the honourable Third Official Member tell the House what significant factors transpired to persuade government to change its position from that taken in 1995—when a private member's motion was brought to the House to investigate the feasibility of operating under a system—to the radical position taken now where government is prepared to study and implement the accrual system?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The late Miss Annie Huldah Bodden said at one time in this Legislative Assembly it's either a dead person or another category that could not change his mind on issues. I said to the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town that the motion moved by him and the Second Elected Member for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman was very timely at that time.

This has created a part of the backdrop for the initiatives that are now being considered. We have also looked and considered very carefully the type of questions that have been posed by members of this House in Finance Committee. When we are talking about a budget in excess of $300 million, this requires having to look very carefully and having to bring on board the best system that will optimise the utilisation of that amount of resources.

Part of the dynamics of life is that life is constantly changing. Something may be relevant and applicable today, but it could change tomorrow. We have to put ourselves in that mode. Up to this point in time accrual accounting . . . the optimum level of transparency, the best basis on which information can be provided, the best basis on which judgments can be made and the best basis for allowing for the accuracy of information to be gleaned is where we have now moved to. We all, including myself, recognise the deficiencies and we have done this for quite some time on the cash basis accounting. If we don't start now to make sure that we optimise the utilisation of resources that are available that plan of securing the future of these islands will not be achieved.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Is the honourable member then saying that the reasons which existed in 1995 are the same reasons which exist today and the only difference was one of expediency?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development. I think he's asking for your opinion. You may answer if you wish.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The reasons that exist today are the same reasons that existed in 1995. But the member will appreciate that I will have to restrict my comments to what I have just said.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you, this is the last supplementary to my good friend. The point I want to make, and I want to clear this with the Finance Department, is that my understanding under the generally accepted accounting principle is that on an accrual system receivables do not enter into your income account. The way receivables come about is that if you sell an item for $200, that sale is entered into your income account. If the cash paid on that was $100 then you have a balance of $100, that is your receivable.

So the point I was trying to make earlier is that the receivable would have already been taken into account on the sale or revenue item. What appears as a receivable is the amount of that sale that is not received by the government. That is the receivable for government and that comes through as cash. Would not the member agree with that explanation?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: As I said earlier, I respect the views of the Third Elected Member for George Town. First of all, if we look at what type of industry government is in, government is a service industry. If we are going to have receivables they are going to come about because of claims created for services rendered. When a service is provided, let's say the hospital medical health services at this point in time, we find that the value of services provided on an annual basis amounts to $4 million or $5 million. We see this by the amount of receivables outstanding for a specific time period at the end of the year.

We are told that the range of services provided amounts to X, but only a given sum of that money is collected. When we have $5 million worth of services provided by a department and only $3 million collected, we cannot allow the $2 million (that would otherwise constitute the receivables claim to monies that are due and payable) not to impact the income statement. It will, because the value of services at $5 million will have to be brought in.

Now, what is going to show as going through the cash, because you would have already realised a part of that asset of $5 million (being the $3 million in cash collected), and you would have claimed the $2 million for future settlement whereby government has a right. We agree on this point. So if government is in the service industry and we do recognise that we have a combination of trading concerns such as the Water Authority, and we have the service activities and so on, but we cannot allow for the $2 million that would otherwise be listed as receivables not to impact the income and expenditure statement.

So, it seems to me that we could be agreeing, but probably we may have a difference in thinking on this.

The Speaker: The First Elected Member for George Town, two additional supplementaries, please.

Mr. D Kurt Tibbetts: Yes, sir, thank you.

Can the honourable Third Official Member state (if he is prepared to answer this question) what will be involved in regard to training in the public sector in order to accomplish the financial reforms?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: To a limited extent the training has already commenced in that we had two workshops that were run earlier this month. We had the broad design workshop where we brought together controlling officers from different departments and we then held the output specification workshop where we found there was a need to bring controlling officers together to start thinking in terms of what the outputs will mean.

First, it will start with the members of the Legislative Assembly, which includes members of Executive Council. It will require bringing together all heads of departments within government, permanent secretaries, heads of departments, deputies, senior assistant secretaries, in fact right across the entire spectrum of government.

When we understand what accrual accounting will do, it's a more manageable process than the cash accounting system because the accrual allows for the implementation of specific disciplines to be put in place. We are going to bring together (and this is where the trainers are now being trained) all relevant persons and we are going to say to them that this is not a process where one should be intimidated. It should be a training-friendly environment where some will be stronger in some areas than others and we are going to be making available resource persons to go around to assist departments after putting them through the training exercises.

But this is an integral part of the whole process because there has to be a shift from how we are presently thinking in terms of the management of government's resources to exactly where we want to go and training is an integral part of that. It's not a one or two day . . . it's getting people into a training environment and making sure that they have an understanding, one that can be demonstrated in terms of how the process works.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town, and this is the last supplementary.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Thank you. I think if I am not misquoting the honourable Third Official Member he said that the contemplated accrual system is easier than the present cash accounting system. I beg to differ with him. I think that he will go through a period of nightmares when the accrual system is put into effect (and I will turn this into a question) because the accrual system will entail having to schedule all of government's assets, depreciating them and making sure that all accruals such as receivables are kept in place.

He said earlier that if you sold X amount of medical services at the hospital, which would have to be your sales or revenue, that you would then have to keep an account of the cash received and the receivables. But what he didn't say is that a proper billing system would have to be put in place to ensure that that $5 million is eventually collected. Would the honourable Third Official Member not agree with my summary of this point?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Let me deal with the questions in two parts. When I said it's an easier system to understand, probably that is an understatement. I will say, to clarify the point that I wanted to make, that it is a more intelligent system.

A significant point of interest in this honourable House is the lunch being provided by Anita. Just use her for example. Let's say that the budget allows $24,000 to pay her on an annual basis, and $24,000 for food. That amounts to $48,000. Let's say that a stove has been bought and it cost $1,000 and we are going to depreciate it on a straight-line basis. First of all we are going to take one-tenth of the value of that stove, which is $100. So where the budget prepared by the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly would show a value of $48,000 being put in to defray the provision of beverages and the occasional lunches, now it becomes $48,100.

Let's say that pots and pans are there and they have a value of $500 over a period of ten years (this is just an example), then we add another $50 on to that. So we have $48,150. Let's say she uses 100 square feet in terms of space that is provided. Let's say the remainder of the life of this building is 20 years and a given value is put on that. When we factor the depreciation into it we find that what was previously shown as a budget of $48,000 becomes in excess of $50,000. This allows for one to see with greater clarity the cost of providing these services.

Let's say the $48,000 was taken to be the value of providing the services, and to average it out in terms of the cost in providing snacks it came out to be X. Now when we move to an accrual basis it's going to become X plus Y.

Now, going on to the second part in terms of the receivables or the system now in place at the hospital. I agree with the member that, as I pointed out earlier, an integral part of the financial reform is to have a proper billing system in place in every department. He himself is a chartered accountant, and a very good one as we hear from the questions put and it is known throughout the islands. Where this honourable member sits back and sees that the earning potential of the hospital is $5 million but only $3 million is collected, he is going to raise a question, What is happening to this $2 million? What has happened to a previous period? What is going to happen in subsequent periods and so on?

We are talking about interlocking every significant aspect of the system to make sure that everything functions so that we can optimise the entire process.

The Speaker: Moving on to question 29, standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTION 29

No. 29: Mr. Roy Bodden asked The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development what duty free concessions does Cable and Wireless Ltd and Caribbean Utilities Co Ltd receive from the Cayman Islands Government.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8)

The Speaker: Before I call upon the honourable Third Official Member, I will entertain a motion for the suspension of Standing Order 23(7) and (8) so that Question Time can go beyond 11 o'clock.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I so move.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I second the motion.

The Speaker: The Motion has been moved and seconded. Those in favour please say aye. Those against no.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 23 (7) & (8) SUSPENDED TO ENABLE QUESTION TIME TO CONTINUE BEYOND 11 O'CLOCK.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Under the terms of its franchise, Cable and Wireless Ltd is exempted from customs import duty on all telecommunications equipment, apparatus and machinery required for the operation of its telecommunication installations and business.

Under the terms of its licence, Caribbean Utilities Co Ltd receives full concessions on specified capital assets (being the core generating plant) and a rate of 10 per cent import duty on all other capital assets, goods, materials and supplies imported for use in connection with the Company's operations and business, excluding fuel.

I would respectfully direct any supplementaries to do with the respective licences to the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources by way of a substantive question in a subsequent meeting.

SUPPLEMENTARIES

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I believe that under the CUC franchise there is a built in 12% return on capital employed. Can the Third Official Member, or the Minister with responsibility say whether there is any consideration to attempt to amend this return on capital employed since this has been in place since the company was established many, many years ago? And, if I may say, it was my understanding that this was put in place to encourage the company to establish itself here, and since that time they are really making some really huge profits. I wonder if the honourable member can say if it is being considered by government that this matter will be revised at some future date.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The return on capital that is guaranteed is not 12% but 15%. But as the honourable member can appreciate, this subject falls under the Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources. In terms of communicating government's policy initiative on this, it would be advisable for this information to be provided by the minister.

As I said earlier, this may be done by way of a substantive question at a subsequent meeting of the Legislative Assembly, or if the minister would want to intervene in terms of those questions he is able to respond to. But it would not be appropriate for me as this does not fall under the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: I thank the honourable Third Official Member for that correction. It is indeed 15%—which makes it even worse than I had thought!

Can the member or the minister say whether this return on capital employed has been reached by the company in recent years? Or has the government had to meet the shortfall by increasing the cost of that utility to the public?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Within the past two years or so I am not aware of any request being put forward for any shortfall to be met. But it may be better, and it is not that I am trying to evade the question, but in terms of the implications this could have for the honourable minister responsible for this subject, I think the member for George Town will appreciate if I attempt to limit my responses. It's not that I am trying to be evasive, but the member at one time was himself the minister for that ministry, so he can appreciate the predicament I am facing in terms of dealing with questions falling under another ministry.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: I wish to assure the honourable gentleman that I will not attempt to put him on the spot. I take note of his suggestion and I certainly will avail myself of that opportunity. My question is, Are there any other entities operating within the Cayman Islands enjoying such duty free concessions?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: There are numerous entities enjoying concessions in one form or the other. A report has been done on this and the matter is under review by Executive Council. The legal implications of these concessions are being considered by the Attorney General's office.

The Speaker: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town.

Dr. Frank McField: Can the honourable Third Official Member give us an idea of what is meant by this 15% return on capital investment?

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I can say that it is a return on the capital employed in the generating of electricity. But as I indicated earlier in terms of the specifics of that, it would be useful if that were embodied in a substantive question to be provided by the honourable minister.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: The Fourth Elected Member for George Town was trying to get information as to what was meant by return on capital employed (and I will turn this into a question). It is the net profit expressed over the assets used in the company, especially the capital assets used in a company to produce the net profit and that's the percentage.

I wonder if the honourable Third Official Member would not agree that this is the position. And what position has government taken in recent years to ensure that that capital base is correct? What I am trying to get at is whether any of that capital base should be written off because the bigger the capital base the harder it is for the company to produce the 15%.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I can appreciate the attempt by the member to explain what the return on capital ratio is, and I will not differ with that. But when he says that it is the net profit over the value of capital employed, it is not strictly the net profit because the honourable member is aware that it is the net profit minus certain allowable expenses. This is why I said earlier that in providing the breakdown of this (in terms of what those allowable expenses are) it would be useful for the minister to go into that.

Mr. Speaker, I looked very carefully at this question on Saturday, but I did not have a copy of the franchise agreement available at that time as I had just returned to the island on Thursday afternoon. I wanted to go through the franchise for Cable & Wireless and also CUC, but I was not able to access those documents. So I am not able to get into the specifics in terms of allowable expenses and further details now being sought.

If it is a question of going into the specifics in terms of allowable expenses and non-allowables and also the asset base, because everything has been developed along certain procedures for qualifying and being recognised as part of the rate base . . . It could be that there are certain assets on the books. But the member will recall that from the time he was there the company provides what is called an interim report. That would be confirmed at a subsequent date by a set of audited financial statements.

I am not trying to be evasive. What I am trying to do is not provide misleading information. I would not want to do so to any member of this honourable House.

The Speaker: Do you have a follow up? Third Elected Member for George Town.

Mr. Linford A. Pierson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I totally agree with the honourable Third Official Member on the allowable expenses. I guess once he takes off the allowable expenses he would call the net profit a net, net profit.

But that was only part of the question. He keeps referring to the time I was there, but when I was there I knew that a proper accounting system was in place. I don't know about today, but I assume that it is still in place.

Part of my question was if the honourable member could give an indication of what assets . . . Mr. Speaker, when he is finished consulting with his deputy I will continue my question because he needs to hear what I am saying.

I just wondered if he could say if the list of assets in the asset capital base have been checked by the finance department and whether or not they can categorically state that all of those assets are employed or if some of them might have been written off.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: At one point in time the checks used to be carried out by the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development. This was done on behalf of the ministry. At a period in time there was a request by the ministry that the returns from CUC should be submitted to the ministry for examination and the work that was being carried out by the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development should, in effect, be carried out by the ministry.

We know that the ministry has assigned an officer to carry out this examination and I would imagine it takes place at all levels. First there is an interim report submitted by the company. When this interim report used to be done by the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development it would have been gone into in line with the provisions of the franchise agreement to make sure that only the schedule of assets that would be recognised in the rate base would be considered. If there were any differences it would be sorted out with the company and I imagine that this is still being done.

This would be confirmed at a later date by the audited financial statements provided. We have two audit processes in government: the Internal Audit Unit and the Auditor General's office. I did not consult with both of these entities to see if a review had been carried out by any of them but the financials are there. This is all based on properly documented information.

The Speaker: The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I wonder if the honourable Third Official Member would be in a position to give the Legislative Assembly some idea of the monetary value of these exemptions on an annual basis.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: The financials that are submitted to the Ministry of Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources, . . . there is an officer assigned. And part of that officer's duty would be to carry out an analysis. What I spoke about earlier was not intended to mean that it is not being done. I can talk about what used to be done in the portfolio of Finance and Economic Development.

I said that I wanted to believe that the same process is being carried out by the ministry and I have been advised that it is being done, so this will be useful for honourable members to hear. There is no breakdown there.

At this point in time it will be difficult to say off hand to the honourable member for North Side what the value of the concessions are. But I can undertake to provide that information as best as it can be quantified.

The Speaker: The Elected Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I look forward to receiving that information. I wonder if the member could say if motor vehicles for these two companies are included in these exemptions.

The Speaker: The Honourable Third Official Member Responsible for Finance and Economic Development.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: I will have to check on the exemptions on vehicles for CUC, but those for Cable & Wireless are included in the exemption. I should point out that when we say vehicles for Cable & Wireless are included in the exemption, that is one aspect of it. And while a question has not been posed, it would be useful to hear.

At this point in time, members are aware that there is a certain payment made by Cable & Wireless under the terms of the revised agreement to government. For the year 1998 the revised figure on receipts from the company would have been in the region of $7.5 million. This is expected to increase upward to approximately $10 million for the year 1999. This is based on a calculation, a given percentage of the company's profit, which is approximately 20%. I am not sure if that is net or gross. That would have to be confirmed.

The Speaker: If there are no further supplementaries that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Moving on to item 4 on today's Order Paper, Government Business, continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on Friday 19th February 1999. The Elected Member for North Side continuing.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED BY HIS EXCELLENCY MR JOHN OWEN, CMG, MBE, GOVERNOR OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS ON FRIDAY 19TH FEBRUARY, 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Thank you.

When we took the adjournment on Friday afternoon, I was making some comments on the Crewe Road Bypass, and moving into the Ministry of Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. Over the weekend I felt that it would be an injustice to the past minister responsible for Public Works if this parliament did not pass on its thanks for his contribution to the Crewe Road Bypass which has now become a reality.

I think it was the past minister who put in place the road corridors for the Crewe Road Bypass and for the Harquail extension. I think he deserves thanks for the traffic lights, which I think are being successful at the present time, particularly on Monday mornings.

Coming from the district of North Side, I wonder if it is the traffic lights or if people have decided to arrive at work later on a Monday morning. But I must say that the traffic is flowing much freer now than it was before. So the traffic lights are now a reality and I am certain that they could not have become a reality just overnight. Certain work had to be done a long time ago for us to have been able to switch on those lights just a few days ago.

I still have some concerns about the Crewe Road Bypass because from Northward to Tropical Gardens there are some 50 to 60 side roads that feed into the main Bodden Town/George Town road. There are three schools with entrances and exits and there is a fourth school about to be constructed in the Spotts area. I don't want to preach doom because whatever assistance can be given to persons travelling from the eastern districts to speed up their time of arrival in George Town (which sometimes takes up to an hour and one half) I appreciate very much and I am grateful.

I would like to say that we cannot always take the praise for things that are working when someone else has contributed, and we must pay thanks and praise to whoever has contributed. I would like to say to the past minister, Thanks for putting in place the Crewe Road Bypass particularly, to ease the travelling from his district and mine, and the district of Bodden Town.

At this time I would like to turn to the Ministry for Health, Social Welfare, Drug Abuse Prevention and Rehabilitation. We saw in the Throne Speech, "Amendments to the Health Services Fees Law relating to the cost of new services will soon be presented to the Legislative Assembly." I am sure there is a need for these fees to be looked at because of the new facility, which became a reality Saturday with the official opening. But we must look at the increase in these fees carefully to make sure that the health insurance that has been put in place will cover these costs. I don't think that some of our people can take much more of a burden in the cost of health services or any other service government provides.

On the other side, we Caymanians are proud of their new hospital and we know we have to be prepared to pay. We must look toward receiving the service in the Cayman Islands if it is offered at our hospital rather than looking to travel overseas.

The honourable Minister for Health must be an awfully proud man this morning seeing that a project the size of the George Town Hospital has now opened its doors to the people of the Cayman Islands. I am proud to have been associated with the decision to build the new George Town Hospital. I assure the honourable minister that he has my support wherever needed to make this facility work.

But I have had a number of people from my district complain about the attitudes of some of the staff at this hospital. We can provide the most gorgeous building in the world but if it is not properly run by staff prepared to care for the sick, it will not work. I have confidence in the honourable Minister for Health. I know he will look into this problem because I am certain they have visited him with these complaints also.

I note that under the Health Services, one paragraph read, "Health care surveys of prevalent diseases will be conducted in order to assist the department to further improve the level of patient care and types of treatment provided." I wonder, in reading the newspaper and hearing of cases of whooping cough in these islands, if it is not time for us to require public health certificates (if we do not require them at present) from persons travelling from areas that have these diseases in order to protect our people and stop an outbreak.

I would ask the honourable minister to look into this, and if this requirement is not in place now that we do put something in place so that we can protect our people.

Social Services: I was a bit disappointed that the United Nations has declared 1999 the year of the elderly and there was no mention in the Throne Speech as to what we intend to do for the elderly of these islands. The North Side Senior Citizens Health Care Centre is one of the projects appearing in the capital development projects, with an estimated total cost prepared by Public Works for the building thereof. Unfortunately, it was one of those projects removed from the capital projects for 1999. I would ask government to reconsider this facility.

The Family Study has shown that the majority of our elderly live in the district of North Side. It shows that the majority of those elderly are women. And the majority of those women are widows. So I will say that whatever consideration given to bringing this project back in 1999 would be more than appreciated by the people of the district of North Side.

The honourable minister has said that the architectural design will commence on the adult care centre this year for the elderly in the district of North Side. I don't know whether to hope or not because there was $90,000 in the budget for 1998 and there were no plans drawn up, as I understand it. And the provision this year is only $25,000. So if we didn't achieve the plans in 1998 with $90,000 I wonder how we are going to achieve it in 1999 with only $25,000.

I will touch on education very briefly because I feel that education was covered by every member who spoke before me. My comments will be to ask the minister to keep in the forefront the projection of the number of children coming of school age so that facilities will be provided in advance, and not come to the point we are at now where we need some $54 million to upgrade facilities for education. I will ask the honourable minister . . . and I have to say now that whatever my requests have been for the primary school in North Side the minister, his ministry, and the education department have made provision for those needs.

But I am still concerned that the North Side Primary School has a double class being taught by one teacher at present. I think the attitude is that it's a small school with a small number of children. But when we have 25 children of the lower ages it is pretty hard for one teacher to teach while keeping control. So I ask the honourable minister and his department to give the North Side Primary School an additional teacher as quickly as possible.

Someone told me that they visited that school and said that it has facilities that no other school in the island has. I am proud, and I am thankful that the North Side Primary School has reached that stage because between the years 1988 and 1992 the North Side Primary School was totally forgotten. I also am thankful for the school being air-conditioned. I know this is a project that has been undertaken for all primary schools in the island, and it is well needed.

I am looking forward to hearing that the site-based report of the North Side Primary School has been completed. If there are problems, this study will tell us where they are so that we can find solutions.

I now turn to the Ministry of Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources. I have one concern under Agriculture. “The year 1999 has been designated the ‘Year of Agriculture’ by the Ministry of Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources. During the year a review and evaluation of the roll over Agricultural Plan (1996-2000) will be conducted.” I don’t know how the government expects the honourable Minister for Agriculture to achieve the Year of Agriculture in 1999. I have looked at the budget document and the estimates and all I can find is $120,000 for agriculture programmes. I find no funds for agricultural roads in Grand Cayman and I think that one of the proposals in the agriculture plan some time back was a recommendation to continue to open up more farmland by providing roads for farmers.

Some people may argue that the old Caymanian farmer did it on horse or on donkey or by foot. Those days are long gone and farming in the Cayman Islands is done under adverse conditions. We know that we do not have acres and acres of nice soil that can be ripped and planted. We have very rocky, very limy soil to deal with. Coming from the district of North Side where there are a lot of farmers who contribute to the Farmers Market with their produce, I would ask government to look at providing the ministry and the agriculture department with a realistic sum of money to enable them to say that 1999 is the Year of Agriculture to encourage our farmers to produce more.

We are now self-sufficient in green bananas, but I believe a lot can be done where we can become self-sufficient in more areas.

Under the Ministry of Health I missed the Mental Healthcare Law. Since 1993 I have been asking in this parliament for a facility for our mental health patients. We can no longer allow these people to walk the streets without a long-term care facility. I think there are provisions for these persons in the new hospital but it is the long-term facility that is a priority in these islands. I think we intend to turn the old West Bay Health Clinic into a mental health care facility, but I am certain that this will be an outpatient facility.

On the eve of the 21st Century, and speaking of the best standard of living in the region, we can no longer put our mental health patients in the downtown lockup. That is not the place for them. We can no longer allow them to roam the streets and sleep on the dock or under the trees. I think government needs to look at this problem urgently. Many of these have been drug abusers, but whether or not that is so, they are our people.

The Hawley Estate is about to become a reality, and I know that this was one of the pet projects of the First Elected Member for West Bay, the previous minister. I would say to the minister now responsible that whatever it takes to provide this facility, let us do it.

I now turn to the Ministry of Community Affairs, Women, Sports Youth and Culture. Before I get into the meat of my contribution on this portfolio, I would like to congratulate the minister on her achievements in her district. But I would ask that the ministers in Executive Council look at the district of North Side in the same light as they do Cayman Brac and Little Cayman.

Mr. Speaker, I remember before you took your seat where you are now, whenever I asked for certain funds for the district of North Side in Finance Committee you would always say Cayman Brac needs the same amount as North Side. I now say to the government that the district of North Side needs the same consideration. We have the most elderly people in the islands, as stated by the Family survey. But the young people of my district are leaving. I can say that since January 1999 probably five young people have left that district. So the district of North Side does need special attention.

One of those needs is a shorter road to cut down the travel distance to George Town. I look forward to seeing a public library in the district of George Town that could be considered a national library for the islands.

Sports: We have gone a long way in providing sporting facilities for these islands. I would like to thank all persons—and this started when the First Elected Member for West Bay was in the ministry—for the upgrading of the Old Man Bay playfield, for the provision of the basketball court. I was a bit disappointed, and maybe I did not hear correctly, but I thought the minister said she would be opening the Bodden Town playing field shortly. But I heard no reference of the Old Man Bay playing field. That district has no other area for the young people to go and play.

Our North Side Primary School children must travel to the Truman Bodden Sports Complex to practice for inter-island sports day to get used to the finish on the track. They must travel to the district of George Town to the Truman Bodden Sports Complex to have their sports day. I think the time has come for some consideration to be given to schools in the eastern districts, to be given a facility where they can practice and be able to compete at the inter-schools sports day at the Truman Bodden Sports Complex.

I am thankful that the Frank Sound Park will hopefully become a reality in the year 1999. I noticed that some fill is being dumped on it at the present time. Frank Sound is an area where the young children . . . and I think it is one of the fastest growing areas in the district of North Side with young families. And those children have nowhere to kick a ball. Many an evening you will see them playing on the road, which is a 50-MPH zone. So when this Frank Sound Park is completed I am sure they will be most grateful.

I would now like to touch on Women. I want to make it very clear that it is not my intention to criticise for the sake of criticism, and it is not my intention to embarrass anyone. My sole intention on the subject of women is to deal with the problems affecting women. Had I not been interested in problems affecting the women of these islands I would not have brought a motion in 1995 to set up a Women's Affairs Office.

I think these entire islands realise that the needs of our women differ from those of men. I have never said that domestic violence must not be dealt with on a gender or partnership basis. I think if we research the motion I brought, it said plainly that we would like to do this in partnership. I have here statistics—

The Speaker: May I interrupt you for just a moment? Would this not be a good time to take the morning break before you start with your statistics?

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.47 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 12.19 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate continues. The Member for North Side continuing.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Thank you.

When we took the suspension I was about to look at some statistics relating to domestic problems. In January 1996, we had a total of 80: 47 for assault, 7 for damage to property, 26 for domestic abuse. In February we had 68: 27 domestic abuse, 35 assault.

In March, we had 61: 28 assault, 26 domestic abuse. (I am not reading damage to property because it's a small number). In April 1996 we had 78 total: 45 assault, 26 domestic abuse. In May we had 72: 38 assault, 29 domestic abuse. In June we had 67: 36 assault, domestic abuse 30. In July we had 55: 19 assault, 34 domestic abuse. In August we had 62 total: 36 assault, 25 domestic abuse. In September we had 56: 23 assault, 31 domestic abuse. And in October, November, and December 1996 there were none.

My reason for mentioning these statistics is because the matter of domestic violence in this country is now a serious problem. Whether we deal with it as just a woman's issue or we deal with it as a gender issue, it matters not to me. My only concern is that we address it before it escalates any further. I think if my memory serves me correctly, that we have had two or three deaths related to domestic violence. In my opinion, that is too many deaths for a country as small as ours.

A place of shelter for the abused is a priority. I see nothing in the Throne Speech about government's commitment. Maybe I missed it.

Anger management for those who commit the crime, male or female, is a priority. We must stamp this out. I think the studies will show that this is a cycle and we must break it. Maybe we have our young people who grew up with grandfather and grandmother because of domestic abuse, so they think it is the way of life. We can no longer continue along that road because we will end up in disaster.

I have a list of international agreements and conventions on women and children. I am not aware of any of these being extended to the Cayman Islands. I am sure that the United Kingdom is a signatory to these conventions or agreements. I would ask the honourable minister responsible for women's affairs to do whatever she can to get the conventions that apply to our situation here extended to the Cayman Islands.

We have the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women. We have the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women Towards the Year 2000. We have the World Declaration on Education for All. We have the Convention on the Rights of the Child. We have the Declaration of Child Survival Development and Protection. We have the Declaration on Violence Against Women.

When I enquired as to why the Convention on the Elimination of all Violence Against Women (and this was not from the honourable lady minister) was not extended to these islands I was told because women would have more rights than men, because there is no human rights law, or no Bill of Rights. I do not see that as an argument that we cannot protect the women of these islands against violence.

I will read from the Beijing declaration and platform for action. "To promote an educational setting that eliminates all barriers that impede the schooling of married and or pregnant girls and young mothers, including as appropriate, affordable, and physically accessible, childcare facilities and parental education to encourage those who have responsibilities for the care of their children and siblings during their school years to return to or continue with and complete schooling."

I know there are a number of women in these islands who are in the hotel industry being paid very little. I am sure that if they were given the opportunity to go back to school . . . but not in a setting like the community college. We would have to work out some other facility to allow them to go back to school and get better educated where they can demand better jobs to care for their children. Let us re-train every woman in these islands. Give them the opportunity to make a better life for themselves and their children.

I argue that we can bring a national youth policy to these islands, and I look forward to that. I hope it is earlier rather than later. But I do believe that until we solve the problems of the women in these islands, we cannot honestly solve the problems of the youth. Why is there no provision in the Throne Speech or in the Budget for a specific unit of the Royal Cayman Islands Police Force with trained police to deal solely with domestic violence or problems? It is a necessity and I am certain that it is most welcomed by the people of these islands.

We hear of sexual molestation of our young girls. I had the opportunity of having young mothers come to me asking 'Where do I go?' We need a facility where these young mothers can go to get help. It is obvious, when we put ourselves in their shoes, the embarrassment they go through. We must offer assistance to them.

God in His Omnipotence realised that He couldn't be everywhere all the time so he created mothers. We must take the necessary action to put in place appropriate legislative, administrative, social, and educational measures to protect the girl child in the household and in society from all forms of physical and/or mental violence, injury or abuse, neglect or negligent treatment, maltreatment or exploitation, including sexual abuse. We must put legislation in place to protect girls from all forms of violence, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child pornography, and develop age appropriate and safe and confidential programmes, medical, social and psychological support services to assist girls who are subjected to violence.

We hear too often of the situation where these young girls are being molested. I read from the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, of which I think the United Kingdom is a part. I have yet to find out if the Cayman Islands government has accepted this platform. If we have not, we need to. There are sections that do not apply to the Cayman Islands. I know that. But we need to accept the sections that apply to the problems in these islands.

It is time that we bring about mandatory minimum sentences for sexual molestation of young girls, for incest. Whatever the problem, we must not allow these predators to walk into our prisons where there is no hard labour any more and walk out in nine months, or in four or five years. I say the punishment must reflect the deed that has been committed by these people.

In talking to some of these young mothers who come along with their suspicion of sexual molestation, . . . is it in our schools? Are we giving courses to these young children? Remember when we were growing up? I do not know if it is correct to say that we were not as mature or advanced because we didn't go to school until we were six years old. Our children are entering school at three years nine months, four years. Are there any subjects in the curriculum that will teach these young girls and boys if they are being molested where they can go?

These are the services that we as a concerned government, as concerned representatives of these islands, must put in place. What happens to the young child? Are there counselling services? What happens?

In my opinion it is time that this country published the names of people who commit these crimes so that other women can protect their young girls from such disasters. In my opinion, sexual molestation and things of that nature are attempted murder because it has killed that young lady. We must put a stop to it!

It would shock this country to know that we have stalkers. Several years ago a young mother came to me in tears over the situation of her young daughter. The boyfriend (from whom the daughter had decided to move away from) had held her daughter at gunpoint in her own home. We cannot allow this to go on any more. We can no longer sweep it under the carpet and expect it to solve itself. These are the things I am asking for. Let us reach those persons most in need of the help. Let us provide the help and let us reach those who are too embarrassed to come forward.

When I was president of the Business and Professional Women's Club back in 1995, there was the 16 days of Activism Against Gender Violence. The club put forward several ideas to the minister then responsible for women's affairs. Some of those were a specific domestic violence unit within the Cayman Islands Police Force, the extension of legal and personal counselling provision to encompass the following: the establishment of a crisis line that operates for 24 hours per day (I think that is in place); the provision of rehabilitative counselling for victims of abuse; the provision of mandatory and voluntary counselling for abusers focusing on issues such as anger management and the dynamics of abuse; the provision of support groups for those wishing to avoid or recover from the negative side effects of domestic abuse; the provision of support groups for women wishing to move from learned helplessness and to develop their inner strength, self-respect and dignity; the provision of free bi-monthly workshops at which legal counselling and additional personal counselling is offered; the provision of free first-contact counsellors and attorneys who are willing to provide initial advice to victims of domestic violence receiving hospital or medical treatment. I do think that the women's resource centre, through the befrienders, now offers this service.

The provision of a wide range of educational experiences and educational material including, but not limited to, information leaflets on legislation, a section in the public library for abuse related issues; further work in schools on the development of positive personal relationships; the further involvement of the churches in an educative and supportive capacity towards the abused and the abuser; changes in legislation relating to domestic violence legislation and related Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on and read these things.

The changes in the implementation of legislation to include police guidelines, guidelines relating to the bail law, 24-hour emergency legal service, legal aid. Mr. Speaker, it goes on and on and on.

I was kind of shocked to realise that the Summary Jurisdiction Domestic Violence Law, 1992 (maybe this has been changed or the regulations put in place, I don't know) at that time the BPW Club expressed concern that no regulations had been prepared. The regulations are required for this law and should be promptly issued for all amended and new laws.

Maybe it is time for us to put in our legislation that the court orders for counselling . . . it's time for us to put a no drop prosecution. At the time when I was the BPW Club president, I got some information from Canada on the legislation that they have in place for domestic violence. We all tend to say that the woman reports this incident to the police, but when it comes to prosecuting, she doesn't want to go as a witness. Canada has in place legislation that once the police arrive and see that a criminal act has been committed there is no necessity for them to insist that the woman or man (whoever reported the incident) attend in court. These are the things we need to look at.

If the honourable minister does not have a copy of this, I would be more than happy to let her have a copy. I encourage the government to accept the sections of the Beijing Platform that will be workable in the Cayman Islands as soon as possible.

There are young fathers in these islands who are concerned about what is happening to the girl child. A young father handed me these words of a song that he wrote. Mr. Speaker, we need to take note: “Father’s lust for a daughter he should love so much. His passion far too strong to bear. Her skin taught from an innocent touch. Her sweet smiles can hide her increased fear. From the pimp to the poster, he life is so confused, with a spirit that’s so badly broken and bruised. What childhood sin could have caused this terrible curse? Life for this young child could not have been any worse. Stop the violence, break the cycle, our children are rare gifts.”

When we read newspapers and see what is happening, we should listen to those words, sir. I mentioned earlier the district of North Side and what is happening with people moving. I call upon the government to look into this situation as a priority. We would hate to see all our young people leave this district. Maybe it is time that we looked at what the Fourth Elected Member for George Town has said. It is time that we start moving to the eastern districts with more development that can keep our people employed.

Maybe it is time for government to move sections of the government that can ably go into the eastern districts and provide jobs for the people of those districts. Help with the traffic situation in downtown George Town by sending some of the traffic to Bodden Town, North Side and East End.

At one point I had suggested that maybe the place for the Agriculture Department could have been on the Frank Sound Road, seeing that the majority of our farmers come from East End and North Side. I think I am correct in saying that. But whatever we can do to keep people in those districts employed so that they too can stay in the district that they live in and be able to make a decent salary and not have the hassle of travelling to George Town everyday leaving their children from 6.30 in the morning heading to work so they can get there on time, and not getting back until 6.00 and 7.00 in the evening, we should do Mr. Speaker.

On the matter of women, there was one item that I missed that I would like to ask the honourable minister to look into, if she would be so kind. I think that our Maintenance Law says that a child must be maintained to age 16. I think our school age has been increased by one or two years, so I feel that this Maintenance Law should be amended so that we are in sync—that the child will be maintained up to school leaving age, or let us say age 18, and that assistance with that child, should that child go off to college, will also be given.

Before I sit down, I would urge the government . . . because when I heard the reply to the question here on hurricane shelter safety I was a little bit shocked. When out of 19 hurricane shelters in Grand Cayman and three on Cayman Brac and one in Little Cayman there are only four built and equipped to hurricane specifications. I know that if we experience a hurricane like Mitch, which just stayed there doing his damage, we are going to suffer a great loss. We may not have a hurricane the strength of Mitch, but we may have one like Gilbert. So I feel that we really need to look at the provision of hurricane shelters in these islands that are built to hurricane specifications as soon as possible.

When I think of the district of George Town, with some 8,000 residents; West Bay with some 5,000 or 6,000 which do not have proper hurricane shelters, it concerns me Mr. Speaker. I would like to throw out a challenge to the honourable Financial Secretary and the entire Executive Council that we can no longer delay a national disaster fund for these islands.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Hear, hear!

[Applause]

Mrs. Edna Moyle: That is an absolute necessity and a priority!

It is a priority because it is for all the residents of the entire Cayman Islands. So let us look carefully at what projects we now have in capital development that, in my opinion, are political projects to re-elect representatives. Take those funds and provide a national disaster fund for the people of these islands.

Priorities are priorities. We all know the meaning of the word. We would all like to get re-elected in the year 2000. But if I go down to the polls in the year 2000 because I didn’t provide a specific facility in my district, but I did provide a national disaster fund for the people of these islands, I would not have lost the election I would have gained because my people would have been protected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceedings are suspended until 2.15.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 12.43 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 2.45 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Debate continues on the Throne Speech. Does any other member wish to speak? The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources.

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you.

As other members have done, I would also like to congratulate the Governor on what I consider a very comprehensive Throne Speech. I am pleased to know that after being with us for some time we have presented to us a Throne Speech that tells exactly what is taking place and shows the Cayman Islands in a very, very good position.

I would also like to thank His Excellency and his good wife for their contribution to the Cayman Islands and our people and especially their involvement with the youth. We can all say ‘thank you for a job well done.’ I believe I am correct in saying that Mr. Owen actually worked slightly different from other Governors by leading us into Vision 2008 for the betterment of the future of the Cayman Islands.

The individual areas under his portfolio, such as the Royal Cayman Islands Police, we have to give credit for. While I believe each one of us in here would like to see a lot more happening in that area we have to give credit that certain things have been done for the betterment of these islands. I wish God's speed for him and his wife and I trust that they will be back with us in the Cayman Islands in the future.

A lot was said on the Throne Speech and I will not try to repeat things that have already been dealt with. But I must say that I will be dealing with the areas concerning my ministry. I would like to start off with what everyone knows is my favourite subject, and that is agriculture. May I say that I have been very pleased with the progress in agriculture over the last four years? We have seen improvements not only in the farms, not only in the crops or our animals, but we have also seen improvements in the services which the department and the government offered to the agricultural sector of the Cayman Islands.

It is a known fact that the agriculture show has become a national event, one which is also a family event, an event where tourists and our people alike are privileged to come to a beautiful island to enjoy a wonderful day. The last show spoke for itself. We have been offered through the Agriculture Society, the Department of Agriculture and the work of my ministry . . . although there are some who believe that certain things have not been done through my ministry, but I will deal with that later.

I am proud and pleased to know the various departments under my ministry have done so well, and with much less funds. What we have had we have dealt with in the interest of the populace of the Cayman Islands. We provided an excellent show.

When I receive letters of commendation on behalf of the society and me, it makes me proud. That event is not an event of alcohol and cigarettes, and it is held on our soil. It is the participation of the people of the Cayman Islands with our good friends from foreign territories that make that event a success. I speak on behalf of the Department of Agriculture. I speak on behalf of the Agricultural Society and last, but very important, I speak on behalf of the people and families of the Cayman Islands who enjoy that very special day.

We have tried our endeavours (my ministry working in conjunction with the department and the society) to provide services to our farmers. We can go to the Farmers Market or to individual farmers and it makes us all proud, at least those who will tell the truth! But you know we have some that find it hard to do that. At least those who will tell the truth will admit that we have today an advanced system in Agriculture here in the Cayman Islands whereby, thank God, we have been providing crops and meat to our people. As I said, this has been through the participation of the people of the Cayman Islands and their money and not through cocktail parties or wasted funds.

Let me say that I have been ridiculed heavily for many things. But in the area of agriculture I stand firm. The persons whom I have helped are definitely not the black-tie people. They are the little people we talk about sometimes, persons whom we must continue to assist in this country. As I have said many times, I also happen to be a farmer, I know the hardships. But those who sit behind desks and are prepared to say 'Yes we are going to have this here and that there' with government's funds.

In the case of agriculture it's different. It is because of blood, sweat and tears that the farmers of this country are able to put food in the Farmers Market, the supermarkets and feed their families. So I stand behind them 100% while others try to ride my back.

In my ministry we are also responsible for communications. Today I am proud to know that we have a system of communications such as we do here in the Cayman Islands. It is not something that is 100%, but God knows that we continue to work on it. And we can compare the Cayman Islands to any other islands within our territory. I guarantee you that we have surpassed them in many ways. But, of course, it is very seldom that the good things that anyone or any ministry does get mentioned. But I can stand here and say that I am justly proud of the second department in my ministry—being communications—and the country can be proud of it. It is because of the dedicated personnel who have worked long hours when others might have been at cocktail parties. We work in our departments, and I am coming down further, Mr. Speaker.

You know, Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I heard . . . and the Bible tells us about people like this but today I am trying not to take my little Testament out. But when you hear certain hypocrites talk about standing up for what is right and Christian rights and beliefs, what is right what is true, I believe that the saying is look in that crowded backyard and you will find where the snakes are. I say this without fear of contradiction that I have found many times, and have seen it happen before. God knows I will see it again—you tap snake he bite you. I say no more.

My Christian belief is that I should do exactly as I have done for the past 20-odd years when the same persons who tried to ridicule me and my ministry and my departments were not even participating. I am going to say this because it's a fact that there were people like Craddock Ebanks, Truman Bodden, and God bless my colleagues who have passed on, who were in here with me when we were paid nothing! But we were here because of dedication.

And, Mr. Speaker, that is why John McLean is here today. Regardless of what is said about me let me say that I am going to leave here as I came in—with my country and my people first in mind.

To come back to communications, I would like anyone in this Chamber, or outside this Chamber, to tell me when we have experienced communications throughout the Cayman Islands like we have today. I need not say what took place prior to now because we know. But having proper communications has been the success of this country. We can boast of tourism and our financial sector, but if we did not have this we would be exactly where we were before.

I say again that as long as I am responsible for the ministry I was given by His Excellency the Governor the things I have done and have tried to do—and most times trying to help others while I received nothing in return . . . That is okay because I am not somebody who is actually looking back over my shoulders hoping something is not following me. I believe as portrayed in the Governor's Throne Speech that we in the Cayman Islands are in a good position, we are on the right track, and I will have to say now that if we could stop trying to divide each other within our own camp and work together, the Cayman Islands would be a better place.

I hear where there is concern in regard to other nationalities coming into the Cayman Islands and their closeness. We should use that as an example instead of trying to cut each other's throats. We should try to work together for the betterment of the Cayman Islands.

I have been very proud to be the captain of all my departments, especially two departments that have actually helped each and every member of this Legislative Assembly in one way or the other. I speak of Public Works and the Department of Vehicles, which we know play a very important part.

The Department of Public Works under my guidance, regardless if some like to hear this or not, did much for this country over the years. When I look back and see the progress, especially with the Harquail Bypass—which we were able to open about one year ago that is serving the West Bay area—I wish that the government had only assisted me with the recommendations to go ahead and do the Crewe Road Bypass as suggested by my ministry and the Public Works Department at that time. And the members of our team know that I am correct because we had an estimate for the Crewe Road Bypass and the Harquail Bypass and additional funds when we would be able to continue to do the work in the various districts.

But maybe some people may be better off than me, because I did not have the funds at my fingertips. And I was able through the Public Works Department do to as much as I could. I claim no glory from it. But I put the praise to the hard workers in the Public Works Department who worked with the funds that were actually provided to them.

I will say this much: It is a fact that had we bitten the bullet at that time and built the Harquail Bypass, built the Crewe Road Bypass, I know for sure we would have saved this country a lot more money than it is going to cost now. But I cannot tolerate to hear that there was no sort of national programme in place for roads. If I am wrong, then it must be the director of Public Works who advised me at the time when I was responsible for Public Works that the Harquail Bypass and the Crewe Road Bypass would form a part of the national programme. Common sense would tell us that because the Harquail Bypass is the area that is going to open up West Bay and the Crewe Road Bypass has to be the link to the eastern districts . . . Unless we are planning to build another road parallel to that, I cannot see how we can do it.

I recall the figures that were put forward to the group who called themselves at that time (which was a very close group) the government of the day . . . what I would have thought would be a government, a group that would have stayed together. The figure that was put across was $14,600,000, $6,500,000 for the Harquail Bypass at the time and $6,500,000 for the Crewe Road Bypass. But I am not as rich as other people are. I do not have the contacts that other people have. I couldn't take it out of my pocket. I couldn't make the contacts that other people may make. Therefore, all I can say is that it had to wait until the funds were provided for the Public Works Department to carry out the work.

But to say the corridors were not actually put in place is incorrect. How is it that the one on the Harquail Bypass is the one we have utilised? Who was the minister who tried and did negotiate with the Westin part where I didn't even have an invitation to come for the groundbreaking, and the same with the Crewe Road Bypass? Mr. Speaker, I have walked properties all over the Cayman Islands including the two I mentioned. As far as I am concerned, I look at it as a slap in the face to my ministry when I know that we have done so much for roads in the Cayman Islands.

As I pointed out, and I say this with the greatest of respect, I have tried my endeavours as minister to help every person in this House who represents individual districts. And if the truth is told they know I am correct. But it is a true saying, Mr. Speaker, what goes around comes around. I was raised poor—but with pride. It only takes time to watch it, and it happens. And that is exactly what I am doing, sir.

I ask the question, Who was the minister in the ministry that started making sure that the long serving people in the Public Works Department were acknowledged? I am not patting my shoulder because I am not that kind of person, but it happened when I was there. I give credit where credit is due, and I expect the same in return. To me it is like water off a duck's back. But I have to mention it.

The Department of Public Works was not only provided during my tenure with some funds which were reasonable and within the budget, but we were also able with the cooperation of certain persons in this House to provide other departments not only with buildings, not only with construction or vehicles, but with technical support. I cannot think of any time that I was called upon when I said to anybody that we couldn't do it. I have always tried to accommodate them.

I would also like to congratulate and thank the persons in that department who work so hard to make sure that the street lighting system in Grand Cayman became a reality. That was something that each and every one of us benefited from politically and everyone asked for support that they received. I would like to publicly thank the individuals in the Public Works Department who worked so hard to make that a reality. I only hope that it will continue and that we will continue to make sure that that area will be serviced properly.

I would like to make it abundantly clear that my ministry has always been heavily laden. As far as I am concerned we will still have to provide some services in conjunction with the Public Works Department which we are happy to do. But as my good friend, the First Elected Member for George Town says, I had to get that off my stomach. As far as I am concerned, the department has done an excellent job under my ministry.

Common sense would tell the people of this country—and they have that, Mr. Speaker. And I am sure it's going to speak soon at the polls that especially with street lights and the junction like Thomas Russell Way and all other roadworks, that is not something that happens over night. If the plans were not in place for things such as the junction by the airport, the Thomas Russell Way, it could not have happened over night.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, sir.

That has always been worked on and thank God . . . and I support it because it is something we needed. But the time that it even takes to do drawings for junctions and roads like we have there now, . . . we have to use our common sense. It could not have happened over night.

I am pleased to see it there. I know the situation. I know exactly what takes place. I have dealt with too many junctions as far as streetlights are concerned. I know the time it takes to order them, the time it takes for them to get here, the work on site, the purchasing of property, the laying out of the roads, the whole works. Yet, when my ministry was relieved of public works it happened overnight and the group that did it got no praise for it. That's unfair.

Like I said, one thing that I have never done in my life, . . . I was raised poor but I have never, and excuse the words I am going to use, but I have never kissed around, and I will never do it! I am too much of a man for that. And if that is what it is going to take to make John McLean popular, it will never happen. I can hang my gloves up anytime against anybody else.

I only hope that we will try, especially in the area of public works, to look at the needs not of individuals but what is necessary for this country. Everybody knows that where we were trying to do the roads over especially district to district with hot mix we had that in place. I hope that will continue. I hope that we will recognise the request of each member here because I am sure that we are all thinking the same, looking for the benefits and good results for our districts. I hope that nobody will be victimised in that area.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. John B. McLean: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been asked a question that I don't know. I know for sure that the records will show that I certainly asked for it.

It seems as if I have some friends on the other side. And I know the one speaking right now, my good friend from West Bay, knows what I am talking about.

Mr. W McKeeva Bush: Yeah.

Hon. John B. McLean: I would like to briefly say a few words in regard to the environment. I would like to say that this is another department that this country can be justly proud of. I take my hat off to all of the hardworking personnel who are actually employed there.

No area is an easy task within the environmental department. I would like to pay tribute to the person in charge. I am sure the lady member for North Side will like what I am going to say. There is a lady in charge there and she is doing an excellent job.

This country can be justly proud of our progress over the years. But we have to stop and think because if we could not offer to the tourists, our financial centre and everyone else a clean Cayman, we would not be able to boast of the large figures in tourism. It is one of the hardest jobs, and with the staff we have employed the equipment we have at our disposal I consider the job well done.

I wish to my good Lord that I only had a couple of million dollars that I could throw into that department to make sure that we had more garbage trucks and more staff so that we could service this country better. At the same time, I feel that I am correct in saying that we would see an increase in tourism to these islands. If we can increase our services in that area we would definitely make the visitors to our shores happier.

Along with that I am sure that my good friend the Minister for Health has to agree with me, we will be keeping our country clean and quite free from the diseases we find in other areas that cannot afford such a service as we offer here in Grand Cayman.

[Inaudible interjection]

Hon. John B. McLean: Mr. Speaker, my good friend on the other side is really prompting me and he would like me to repeat that this is definitely good for the tourist industry. And that is a fact. We have a clean country and we have a lot of visitors to our islands. We have hotels, restaurants that we can be proud of. Thank God for that.

I would like to comment on the prison department. Yesterday I had the chance to visit the prison. Sometimes it actually hurts my heart to have to visit the prison. But I do so and the reason for saying this is that when you actually visit there and you see the individuals who are actually in the prison, youngsters who are so promising, persons so talented, it can really get to you when you think about it. I enjoy going there and speaking to a few each time I go, but I still believe that we have to do something more than what we are doing. I believe that preventative measures are much better than actually having our young people put into prison.

I am not here to say that if someone commits a crime that they should not be penalised for it. What I am saying is that I would like to see when we could surpass that and actually have the situation reversed. I believe that with our advancement here in the Cayman Islands we can actually dedicate ourselves . . . and I would again call upon the churches of this country to work closer together with not only the youth, but all aspects where by now we realise have been creating the problems which end up in a prison sentence.

As you walk around today and hear the talk of the town, it's very serious especially when it comes to break-ins and other types of serious crime. We have families and churches that are disturbed because of it, communities that were once known as chosen communities and today when someone leaves his apartment he must make sure that the doors are locked. I am not here to say that the police are able to do everything because we know that's not correct. We would need a policeman for each person in this country and that's impossible.

I believe that the people of this country must be more aware of what is taking place and that we must cooperate and work together. When we see things happening in our communities, instead of going back into our shell (as the saying goes) we should come forward as a united community and make sure it's corrected. I think this is very important and until we are prepared to deal with issues such as I have mentioned, it won't get any better.

It saddened my heart a few days ago when I heard a story of a young person who I am sure will be ruined for life. Each and every one of us as parents must feel quite sympathetic to this person. It is cases like this when it is seen that the spoken word should be said. If we are not prepared to do that then I believe we are looking at a community that will go down the chute.

Morals are one thing, communication is another. And the two can work together if we are prepared to communicate and make sure that in our Christian community the morals such as I have just mentioned are maintained. Let me say that I am not blaming any one individual. I am stating facts. We as a Christian community must work together to preserve what we have enjoyed in the Cayman Islands and to make sure that we can continue in the next years to boast of our forefathers who actually have laid the groundwork for us, who showed us the way it should be and who we should try to follow.

I would like to just go on to other areas in my ministry. I would like to touch on the MRCU Unit and Natural Resources. I am pleased to know that they continue to do a good job. Today we have staff in that department who have dedicated themselves to making sure that Again I must say that everything in my ministry continues to surround the continuation of finances and tourism in the Cayman Islands. If MRCU should collapse we can look forward to tourism and finances also collapsing.

But, thank God, we have dedicated people there. I would like to pay tribute to those who worked and are still working for most of their lives in that department to ensure that we do have in place a system and a continual dedicated group to carry out the works necessary to make sure that we do not have the infestation of mosquitoes in the Cayman Islands like we had before.

As we did before with the Agriculture Department we are trying to do the same thing with MRCU. We are trying to construct a facility where they will be able to serve the public in a better fashion. I am asking each and every one in here to give me the support necessary to achieve that goal.

If I did not comment on my good friend and colleague, the Minister for Health, I would have been out of place. But I must offer congratulations to him for his dedication to this country and our people in making sure that we have a facility that many people thought would never ever become a reality. I speak of the hospital, a place that all of us by just driving across (you need not go in) can feel justly proud knowing where we have come from and seeing exactly where we are today. It is my hope that the staff of that facility will give their best in supporting not only the minister and the ministry, but this country. The first in the history of these islands that we can boast of such a facility for the betterment of our people and their health today, thank God, we can do so.

When we look at the present facilities, we can think back to elections where we were told by other persons trying to form a government that it would never become a reality. I recall many times when we stood up on platforms (the minister and some members of the backbench today) and we preached what has become a reality—that we would provide a service for the people of this country that would actually improve what we have had in the past. We are not only speaking of a hospital here in George Town, but we have provided a service in all districts. That is something that was never heard of because with the exception of my district we only had very tiny clinics. It makes me proud to drive around these islands now and know that in most areas we have facilities that can cater not only to the people of the Cayman Islands but to visitors also. I come back again to another handout to our friends, visitors, and tourists to our islands.

I was part of a government that took a lot of criticism because of our stand in trying to provide medical facilities for the Cayman Islands. But I will say this much: If our government has done nothing worse than what it has done in that area, each and every one of us can give ourselves a great hug because we have taken care of those who needed us. The people who actually need medical assistance in this country no longer have to rush from their districts to the central hospital. They can walk in some cases to the clinics. And the facilities and assistance surpasses a lot that I have seen in other islands.

Thank God for the Cayman Islands, and thank God that we as a government had the foresight to put all of this in place. I hope and trust that the medical staff will now give the government the assistance it needs to properly operate and put forward the services the facilities offer to the people of the Cayman Islands.

Of course, I must speak on education. I would like to say that any country that has a good medical system and a good educational system is a country that with God's help must progress. We can look back to the good Lord and say "thank you" because we have been blessed with both. I know that sometimes in heated debate we will hear certain of our members make remarks in regard to one thing or the other in education. But that is the sort of thing that I call politics.

Each one of us in here knows exactly where he or she is coming from and what this country offers. We are aware that even if we sometimes play politics that the educational system in place here today is something we can take our hats off to. We can be proud of it.

I recall when we actually sat in a town hall. We didn't have fans. Sometimes we were under trees. Today we have qualified teachers in all fields. We have facilities. We have computers. And most important, we have dedication from persons who have actually worked along in this field, and who continue to work along to make sure that our communities surpass other areas. In here we have persons who have actually taught in schools and done a wonderful job. So they are quite knowledgeable in the needs of this country. Of course, even if sometimes we get a little heated we are all here for the common cause, and that is to make sure that we continue to offer to the people of this country, the youth of this country, a system of education that our people one day can rise to the top.

Nowadays when you are in a primary school you actually can speak to a child there who can hold a conversation with you because of the calibre of teacher teaching him on a daily basis. But as legislators we must all appeal to the parents of these children because a teacher cannot educate a child. The education starts at home. If a child is not tutored at home it is simple of one to send him to school. As the old people used to say, the bringing up is the brought up in the school.

I am pleased to know that we have in place a wonderful educational scheme. The schools are supplied, and I am not saying that sometimes there may not be a shortage of something, but overall this country can be justly proud of the funds we have actually spent on education and health.

I have said before, and I will say again, when you talk of education and health, an educated and healthy country makes a good country. And all of us bear that brunt on our shoulders. We must continue to encourage the young people of the Cayman Islands not just to go to school, but when they go to school to make sure that they take every opportunity passed on to them.

Nowadays if kids don't have lunch, they can have lunch. They are all trucked in by buss. When we went to school we didn't have somebody on the bus guiding us from the time we got on till we got off. If you go to the principal and say you don't have any lunch, there's no problem. We have a system here. And we must give credit to Mr. Truman Bodden, the Minister for Education because he has dedicated the last years of his life to education in this country. That is a fact. Today this country is paying off for it.

It makes me proud when I go around from the Public Works Department straight back to Finance, straight through Tourism, and I can see our young people coming in gradually. In insurance, you look at the Monetary Authority, all places we never thought about when we were going to school. Top positions are being filled because of the educational system we have in place preparing our people. It is unfortunate that we have some who have drifted away.

I will just go back to what I said a while ago. This is where this country needs to come together. Instead of having them sent to prison there is another area they can still fit into. And we can work on that, each and every one of us to make sure that we complete a system that is so good in the Cayman Islands.

I don't think that I have ever spoken on a Throne Speech where I didn't touch on Cayman Airways. But it has always been in support of Cayman Airways.

The Speaker: Would this be a convenient time to take the afternoon break? We shall suspend for 15 minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 3.47 PM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 4.18 PM

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communications, Environment and Natural Resources continuing.

Hon. John B. McLean: When we took the break I was about to move on to another area in my ministry. I referred to the postal services. I would like to say how pleased I am with the department. Once again we have somebody in charge who has been working very hard to ensure that all of our postal services are carried out in a very prompt and high calibre, not only here in George Town but also throughout the Cayman Islands. Miss Mona Banks has been doing an excellent job.

As mentioned here in the Throne Speech, in 1999 it is our hope that we will be renovating and refurbishing the East End Post Office and constructing a new post office in Bodden Town and we will also be doing the architectural design for the West Bay and West End post offices of the Cayman Islands.

Since falling under my ministry, this department has gone from strength to strength. I can recall when it was taken over. It was a department that each and every one had a complaint about, but at the same time the solutions were not there. First of all, I would like to thank Miss Corrine Glasgow for the good work she did during the time she was there, and the present Postmaster General.

Today we have a facility that is dealing with mail throughout the Cayman Islands. We were able to construct and put into operation (with the help of the British Postal Services) a new facility at the airport here in Grand Cayman. This has proven to be one of the greatest things that has happened in the postal services since it was started here in the Cayman Islands. We have a sorting centre there and we are able to offer to the people of the Cayman Islands a much more efficient service than we were able to do in the past. That is more or less the headquarters where the mail is received and sorted and it is the distribution point. From that point we must make sure that not only here in the Cayman Islands (the five districts) and the satellite centres we have but that we are producing the same calibre of services to our people in the sister islands.

I am so pleased to know that we were able to acquire the services of the British Postal Services in England to be consultants to the Cayman Islands Government and to recommend and stay with us until we sorted it through . . . that we have such a facility and indeed the recommendations for other facilities throughout the islands.

I await the day when in Breakers, for example, we will no longer be the islands that time forgot. I want to see that the postal services will be offering to our people the necessary facilities that will allow them to have the services throughout each settlement that we offer at the George Town Central Post Office. This is our goal. We have achieved some and we are working steadfastly with a dedicated staff and good guidance from the department and ministry. We are hoping we can bring this as far as it can go and to once again put in place for our people all of the necessary services they lacked over the years.

We presently have in the district of East End a little area within the civic centre. We are hoping to open up and facilitate the area there and also in the Old Man Bay area we are hoping to do something there. We are also doing something in the Breakers area. In Bodden Town we are definitely going to have a new post office and West End Cayman Brac and all areas of Cayman Brac and Little Cayman will also be looked at.

The same service that we have here in Grand Cayman will be throughout the Cayman Islands and whatever is offered here in Grand Cayman will be also offered in Cayman Brac.

I am pleased to know that this service today has actually been bringing revenue into government which we did not receive in the past. I think it was in the first or second year that we had certain improvements that we were able to show greater revenue to the country than what we had in the past. Let me say that revenue is one thing, but what pleases me is when I can actually speak to bankers and trust company managers and hear that they are so pleased with the services we presently offer in the post offices throughout the Cayman Islands. This we intend to improve upon and with God's help and the support of the Legislative Assembly we shall do so.

I would like to move on to the Water Authority of the Cayman Islands. In the annual report, I paid tribute to the last Chairman, Mr. McKeeva Bush, who was then the minister responsible for the Water Authority. I will do so today and say thanks for the work and his dedication when he was responsible for the subject.

Today I am pleased to know that the Water Authority continues on the same basis it started, that is, people first. They have shown this throughout. While some people may believe that water is expensive in the Cayman Islands they must realise it is a service equally as important or more important than even electricity. When we talk about drinking water, we are talking about health. I am so happy to know that just prior to the last Chairman's departure, put in place with government's assistance was the assurance that water would be piped into the eastern part of the island. That includes my district of East End and North Side.

The East End district has the largest resource of fresh water. We have kindly allowed the other areas of the islands to have water from that source. With the good works of the Water Authority and the cooperation of the Cayman Islands government, thank God, today I can say that we have the necessary pipes on the road and the system is now being put in place to facilitate that district and thereafter we will be doing the district of North Side.

Of course, as everyone knows we already have a small facility in Cayman Brac. It is my hope that under my chairmanship the Water Authority should be able to try to facilitate that island too. As I pointed out, the Water Authority and the Cayman Islands government try their best and most times with the support of members of the backbench facilitate not only Grand Cayman but Cayman Brac and Little Cayman. We look upon it equally as important for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman as Grand Cayman.

So we will definitely be looking at whatever can be done there and I only ask that I get the continued support of my fellow colleagues in government and members of the Legislative Assembly to make this a reality.

MOMENT OF INTERRUPTION—4.30 PM

The Speaker: If you are coming to the end of a subject, we are coming to the 4.30 mark.

Hon. John B. McLean: Yes Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I will entertain a motion for the adjournment of this honourable House.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Truman M. Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this Honourable House until Thursday, 1 April at 10.00 AM.

The Speaker: The question is that this Honourable House do now adjourn until 10.00 AM Thursday 1 April. Those in favour, please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AT 4.30 PM THE HOUSE STOOD ADJOURNED UNTIL 10.00 AM THURSDAY, 1 APRIL 1999.

EDITED
THURSDAY
1 APRIL 1999
10.14 AM

[Prayers read by the Elected Member for North Side]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Proceedings are resumed. Item 2 on today's Order Paper is Questions to Honourable Members/Ministers. Question 30 is standing in the name of the Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

QUESTIONS TO HONOURABLE
MEMBERS/MINISTERS

QUESTION 30
(Deferred)

No. 30: Mr. Roy Bodden asked the Honourable Minister with responsibility for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works . . . Mr. Speaker, I noticed that all three questions are addressed to this Honourable Minister who is not here at the moment.

The Speaker: I note that and I also note that the mover of that the following question (33) is not present. So that concludes Question Time for this morning.

Moving on to Government Business. I would ask for the suspension of Standing Order 14(3). The Honourable Minister for Education, Aviation and Planning would you suspend Standing Order 14(3), please. Today is Thursday.

POINT OF PROCEDURE

Mr. Roy Bodden: Are we going to defer the questions or are we going to just strike them from the business of the House?

The Speaker: We will defer them to a later sitting.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 14(3)

Hon. Truman Bodden: I move the suspension of Standing Order 14(3) for the continuation of the Throne Speech in priority to Private Members' Business.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: Mr. Speaker, I think that a motion has to moved so that the questions on the Order Paper this morning can be deferred.

The Speaker: I shall now do that. The motion of Standing Order 14(3) has been moved. I will put the question to that, that Government Business will take precedence over Private Members' Motions. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against, No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: STANDING ORDER 14(3) SUSPENDED.

DEFERRAL OF QUESTIONS 30, 31, 32 & 33

The Speaker: I will now entertain a motion for the deferral of these questions to a later sitting.
Member for North Side.

Mrs. Edna Moyle: I so move, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Seconded by....

Mr. Roy Bodden: Seconded, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town. Thank you. The motion has been moved and seconded that these questions be deferred. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it. The questions have been deferred to a later sitting.

AGREED: QUESTIONS 30, 31, 32 AND 33 DEFERRED TO A LATER SITTING.

The Speaker: Moving on to Government Business. Continuation of debate on the Throne Speech delivered by His Excellency, Mr. John Owen, CMG, MBE, Governor of the Cayman Islands on the 19th February 1999. The Honourable Minister for Agriculture, Communication Environment and Works continuing the debate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

DEBATE ON THE THRONE SPEECH DELIVERED
BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR
ON FRIDAY, 19TH FEBRUARY 1999

(Continuation of debate thereon)

Hon. John B. McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we took the adjournment, I was about to move on to deal with the Turtle Farm. I would like to say how pleased I am with what has taken place there since responsibility for the Turtle Farm was actually given to me. I think it is the first time since the Turtle Farm became the Cayman Islands Turtle Farm 1983 Limited (owned by the Cayman Islands Government) that we can honestly boast that not only can we here in Grand Cayman receive turtle meat from the farm at just about at any time it is desired, but also in the Sister Islands.

I am pleased to say that we have a very, very strong Board of Directors at the Turtle Farm. We have very knowledgeable business people. We have lawyers and we are very proud to know that we also have input from our Financial Secretary.

Much has been done over the last few years with the new management of the farm, and I am pleased to know that certain decisions taken by me with the assistance of the Board were correct decisions. Today, we can look back with pride on certain actions we took, although I as Chairman at the time was ridiculed for those actions. There are many of us today who will look back and say, 'I am glad that he took those decisions because of what has taken place since that time.'

At present, we are trying to do a face-lift on the farm. We have already started with renovations to the new pump station. And we are also now in the process of repairing a very essential part of the farm—the tanks in which we keep the turtles.

I must also pay tribute to a very dedicated group of individuals who form a part of the staff of the Turtle Farm. We can be justly proud of the day-to-day management because we have one of our Caymanians, a West Bayer, assisted by another Caymanian who has been doing an outstanding job in the operation of the Turtle Farm down in West Bay. We have co-operation among our staff and, of course, this can be seen from the progress it has made over a very short time. As Chairman, I am happy to have a Managing Director such as Mr. Kenneth Hydes.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago some questions were raised with regard to our landfill here in George Town and I would like to give a little background and make a few remarks on that.

At present, the Cayman Islands Government owns a parcel of land in George Town, which is approximately 58 acres, utilised for waste management. Landfill, storage, processing of recyclable materials and incineration of assorted special waste is all carried out on this property. Sometimes we have to resort to open burning. But let me say that with what we have had over the last few years to operate with the management there has done their utmost to make sure that it was done in the safest fashion possible.

I am aware that there was somebody who was on the island who actually spoke to us with regard to recycling certain items that were taken to the dump. But the truth has never been told in full by this individual as to what he was really intending to do. It is my understanding that he has in recent times disappeared from the island.

First, I am aware of the individual. I had an opportunity to meet with the person. My ministry did and so did the department. But we should not be fooled, as it seems as if the individual was trying to sell a complex waste management system to the Cayman Islands Government.

We have heard stories of surrounding islands that have actually ventured into this at a cost they were not able to maintain. Again I will refer to that saying that we have in place a very competent individual who has been much more exposed to this sort of thing than someone that I would call a salesman. She has been involved in the day-to-day running of landfills and management of landfills not just running around as a salesman.

However, I think the point that was alluded to was leeching from the dump. And I am not here to say that we may not have some leeching. But the fact remains within the ambit of what can be done and what we would do, we took every necessary precaution to make sure that this was curtailed as much as was possible.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when we will definitely have to bite the bullet and decide on one thing or the other where we will have to close the present dump and open another. And, of course, the fact remains that no one wants a dump in his back yard. That is a fact! So I think we will have to look at other technical ways of dispersing with garbage that is accumulated here. But what we must keep in mind is that it is something that we will soon have to take a firm decision on. This is not something that can actually wait any longer because there are projections as to how long the facility presently used can remain in operation.

Sometimes knowing the extent to which such a department has been going to make sure that things are done right, to know that we can find certain individuals like I have mentioned coming in and first of all giving false ideas to individuals. . . The first thing that was said was that we and government did not actually meet with the company or individuals—and that is incorrect. But I believe from what has taken place since that time perhaps meeting with the individual was the correct thing, but I am surely glad that we did not enter into any agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to also pay tribute to another department that falls under my ministry and that is the Lands and Survey Department. This is a department that many individuals and areas of our community depend upon heavily. As we know, we have the Survey Department, we have the LIS Department, and this is something that we must continue to give the necessary personnel while at the same time the necessities to continue at the high calibre in which it has performed over the last years. We have some very competent staff in that department and again, I am aware that not everyone has been satisfied with regard to the times when surveys have been carried out. But we have to realise that the work there becomes very technical and there are not a large amount of persons to carry out the job.

Overall, I am happy to have the various departments I have mentioned under my ministry and I hope and trust that we will see no difference in the performance as we have seen thus far. I would like to ask each of my colleagues here to continue to offer whatever support they can. I am not saying that sometimes we will not see things in different directions but at least when credit should be given, I would trust it will be given.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that it has been a pleasure for me to make some remarks on the Governor's Throne Speech. Once again, I congratulate him and I would like on behalf of the people of the country to offer special thanks to him and his good wife for the term that they have actually put in here in the Cayman Islands.

The Speaker: The floor is opened to debate. Does anyone wish to speak?

The Honourable Third Official Member.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: [Part of tape inaudible] to comment on the Throne Speech but I think since this is the last Throne Speech of such to be delivered by His Excellency the Governor, and considering the contributions that have been made by His Excellency during his tenure in office in the Cayman Islands, it would be somewhat remiss of me not to share my gratitude especially for the reform initiatives that have been spearheaded by His Excellency the Governor.

In effect, he will be leaving behind for the Cayman Islands a very good legacy from which we will benefit in years to come.

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency said in his introductory remarks, "1999 will be a year of challenges. Two key challenges facing us will be the OECD initiatives and the implementation of Vision 2008." I would like to comment just briefly on the OECD initiatives. With your permission, I would like to quote another paragraph, which is to be found on page 1. It is the third paragraph from the bottom of the page, and it reads, "The other challenge is the OECD initiative on so called tax havens. The Cayman Islands government and all the Members of this House are united on the need for Cayman to engage in dialogue with the OECD. But in doing so we need not be defensive. Cayman has a good story to tell. Cayman is putting quality first and continues to be at the forefront of the fight against money laundering. We should therefore take advantage of the OECD initiative and send a clear message to the world as well as the OECD that Cayman is committed to maintaining itself as a quality jurisdiction, which also acknowledges its responsibilities to the international community."

I think this paragraph is so profound especially the very last sentence, "We should, therefore, take advantage of the OECD initiative and send a clear message to the world as well as the OECD that Cayman is committed to maintaining itself as a quality jurisdiction. . ." Mr. Speaker, I have been made to understand that there are quite a number of persons within the community, especially the financial industry, who, by some unusual ability to look into the future, have been making statements to the effect that the Cayman Islands as a financial centre will disappear within a period of five years. It is quite unfortunate that we have individuals who will be cultivating this level of pessimism.

I will not be overly critical of them, because when one is bombarded by the amount of information that is put out in the international media, often times one does not have the other side in terms of what is happening with these initiatives, in terms of what is being done in order for proper assessments to be made as to what is happening. These conclusions are likely to be drawn. But, Mr. Speaker, I should say that the Cayman Islands stand very tall in the international financial community as one of the prominent and leading international financial centres. This has been built up over the past three decades and I am optimistic along with the majority of people in our community that we will continue as an international financial centre for a long time to come.

This Honourable House will recall that at the June Meeting of 1998 held in Cayman Brac, we became aware of the OECD Report that was published under the title of "Harmful Tax Competition Initiative." I went to the United Kingdom at the invitation of the Caribbean Financial Action Task Force (CFATF) to deliver an address at a workshop that was sponsored by the Commonwealth Secretariat on the operations of the CFATF, and what was being done with anti-money laundering initiatives that were being promoted in the region and the workings as such of the CFATF.

I became aware of this report and I took the decision that it would be useful to secure a profile with the assistance of our public relations firm in the United Kingdom. We managed to get about 18 – 20 copies. I packed them in my suitcase and brought them back to the Cayman Islands where I handed out a copy to every Member of the Legislative Assembly. At that point, the government recognised that this initiative when combined with those of the European Union and the G-7 warranted serious attention.

From the discussions that took place over the OECD Report, we have established an advisory strategy group. This was put into place in August of last year and this group has examined various aspects of the initiatives both internally and with the benefit of external information papers and advice. This is through the engagement of consultancy services that we have perused since that time of individuals we know who have the capacity to inform these initiatives. We know that we have spent a lot of time in the legislature up until now, but time has been taken by the government to pay serious attention to what these initiatives entail.

Mr. Speaker, honourable members will recall that there was also a meeting held in the United Kingdom in September last year at which a delegation from the Cayman Islands together with delegates from other overseas territories were in attendance. The meeting was opened by Baroness Simons. She gave the opening remarks and various questions were put. What is of interest is that in a short while, in fact next month, there is to be a follow-up meeting taking place in the United Kingdom, which will be round two in terms of discussing these initiatives.

It is hoped that the same delegation will visit the United Kingdom to be updated in terms of where we now stand or where the United Kingdom now stands in terms of dealing with these initiatives and what will be the likely implication for the Overseas Territories.

I should point out that in the early part of last month, a delegation comprising the Honourable Attorney General; Mr. Bill Walker; the Assistant Financial Secretary and me, travelled to the United Kingdom. The purpose of going there was to meet with individuals at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. In fact, I had a brief meeting with Baroness Simons in which I spoke to her concerning a meeting that was planned in Paris with the OECD. Also, we had meetings with the Treasury Department and the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Speaker, those meetings were very useful and we are at this time finalising the report in terms of the discussions that took place. There will be a meeting of the Government Private Sector Consultative Committee next Wednesday together with the strategy group, where we will be reviewing the findings in terms of the observations made.

The meeting in Paris with the Committee of Fiscal Affairs, comprised of Mr. Jeffrey Owens, Miss Frances Honner, an adviser that they had by the name of Mr. Hugh Halt, and another Canadian adviser who was very helpful. . . Ww spent three hours in discussions with these individuals. Mr. Jeffrey Owens at the commencement of the meeting opened discussions, and if you will permit me just to read a paragraph from a report that we are now working on.

The Speaker: Sure.

Hon. George A. McCarthy: Noting that face to face informal dialogue was welcomed, he referred to the success of the tax competition initiative to date in terms of the endorsement from the OECD members and the G-7, which was seen as signalling a change in political attitudes reflecting globalisation and liberalisation. He stressed that the report was not about tax harmonisation, setting minimum acceptable levels of taxation, protection of government and setting one fiscal standard for all countries, that is, in respect of globalise fiscal sovereignty. The report was about encouraging fair tax competition, level playing fields, and transparency in the international tax community.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would just like to share a few of the remarks passed on by the Caymanian delegation. I started off by setting out the delegation's position. I shared these remarks with the group, and I quote: "On behalf of the Cayman Islands delegation, I would like to thank the entire delegation from the OECD [which was present] for making [themselves] available to meet with the Cayman Islands delegation."

It was pointed out that the meeting was of particular significance as we do recognise that there is a certain level of misunderstanding in some sectors of the international financial community as to how the Cayman Islands conducts business as an international financial centre. I went on further to say, "We would like to assure the group that the Cayman Islands is a well regulated financial jurisdiction having the institutional and legislative capabilities to effectively monitor the wide range of financial services activities conducted in the Cayman Islands. In addition, we do take our international obligations quite seriously recognising that we are a significant part of the global financial community and that whatever is done in our islands impacts upon other economies and financial markets of the world.

"It is, therefore, incumbent upon us to ensure that the quality and range of financial services activities allowed within our borders are of the highest standard and at the regulatory level we maintain the capacity to judge the substance over the form of such business activities conducted within our shores."

I went on further to point out that in satisfying our local and international obligation in subscribing to the principles of sound business practises, the Cayman Islands has allied itself to the offshore group of banking supervisors, the offshore group of insurance regulators, the emerging group of mutual funds regulators which is now in formation; that we fully subscribe to the implementation of the Basle Guidelines, that we are one of the founding members of the CFATF.

At this point in time, we should also add that discussions are underway for the setting up of an academic programme at the graduate level in collaboration with the University of London for the training of regulators in the region. We will be having talks quite soon on this subject at the Community College through the Ministry of Education because this is a programme that will not only benefit the region but will benefit the international financial community.

In terms of the CFATF, we do recognise that of the forty-seven countries that have been identified by the OECD as likely to be perpetuating harmful tax initiatives or practises, twenty-one of those countries are within the Caribbean region. What is quite interesting [is that] the CFATF to date has a membership of twenty-six countries, and of that twenty-six, twenty-one are deemed by the OECD to be practising or perpetuating harmful tax practises. That puts the percentage of the CFATF membership that has been so identified in the region to 90 percent.

The Cayman Islands spearheaded a motion at the CFATF that was held here to form a sub-group in order to study these initiatives and to report to the Ministerial Council of the CFATF. This resolution was reinforced last week by the passing of a further resolution at the CFATF (Plenary 8) in Trinidad, which I Chaired. [This position was reinforced by] seeking a meeting with the Committee of Fiscal Affairs to represent the regional interests and also to bring these initiatives to the attention of the Caricom Heads of Government. This is underway.

When we look at these initiatives . . . and it may be useful if I were to just read a few short paragraphs setting out the Cayman Islands' position. I think it will give precision to where we are at this time. As I said earlier, this honourable House will recall that I conveyed the views in June of last year that the OECD Harmful Tax Competition Initiative and Allied European Union and G-7 initiatives warranted serious attention. This view has informed of all activities to date, which since that time have encompassed in particular:

- the establishment of an advisory statutory group in August of 1998, which has examined various aspects of the initiatives both internally and with the benefit of external information papers and advice;
- preliminary representations to the United Kingdom Government in September 1998;
- establishment in November 1998 during the commencement of my Chairmanship of the CFATF (which is the Caribbean Financial Action Task Force) of a sub-group of the CFATF to deal with the implications of the Harmful Tax Competition initiatives as they intersect with the regional anti-money laundering concerns; and
- the establishment of a secretariat over the period, January through March 1999, to provide dedicated, ongoing monitoring, reporting and analysis on relevant issues.

In addition to this, a sustained series of contacts and consultations have occurred and will continue to occur on key fronts including direct contact with the OECD and with the United Kingdom Government on the tax competition issues.

In the latter regard, I would like to advise this honourable House that during the early part of last month (March) a series of meetings in London and Paris were held where we established direct channels of communication with the Fiscal Affairs Division of the OECD (that is, the division charged with pursuing the initiative), and with the United Kingdom Government officials who represent the United Kingdom in these matters. In doing so, we have put on record our willingness and ability to engage in genuine constructive dialogue, our intent to protect our legitimate interests, and our requirements to be kept fully informed of the initiatives as they develop.

While the process employed by the OECD to date has had its shortcomings (and this has been acknowledged by the group we met with in Paris and elsewhere, it can be seen in terms of the discussions and the exchange of communication to date), we have reason to believe that a better understanding has been reached which we expect to inform of the process as it progresses.

Members will recognise that we are not in a position to control what the OECD does. However, I can assure this honourable House that we have made all the appropriate and available moves to open and maintain important channels of communication. We have used, and intend to continue to use these and any other available channels to secure access to advance our views, to influence the agenda as it develops and provide substantive input.

Mr. Speaker, the government is aware that clear minded incisive thinking, coupled with decisive action is required to position the Cayman Islands properly for the long term in the face of these changes which are occurring within the international environment. We have responded successfully to such challenges before, such as the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty or what led up to the introduction of that piece of legislation. We have a profound responsibility to continue to protect our financial industry and to monitor these initiatives thus securing the way forward for the future.

Mr. Speaker, in quite a number of my comments, I have used the pronoun "I." But when I say "I," firstly, I should correct myself and say "the government" because the government has been fully supportive of these initiatives. The delegation comprised of official members that went off as a fact-finding delegation. We have since (the Attorney General and I) spoken to Executive Council and we have spoken informally to several members of the Legislative Assembly just giving a brief overview of some of our observations from the meetings that were held during the recent trip to the United Kingdom and Paris.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in time it would be a bit premature to extrapolate what we can glean as the likely outcome from some of the meetings that were held both in London and Paris. But we are in a very favourably position. When we get a chance to talk to honourable members, they will be able to glean for themselves that it is very likely that whenever this list is published that the Cayman Islands may not be on it.

We are well known within the international financial community as to where we stand as a leading financial centre. We have subscribed to all of the international conventions as I mentioned earlier. We have spear-headed key legislation that has allowed us to have dialogue with the international community. Most recently we have entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with the Government of Brazil or the Central Bank of Brazil because we do recognise the level of the Brazilian [community] that is here in the Cayman Islands. The Brazilian community is very happy in terms of this Memorandum of Understanding having been entered into.

Where we now stand with all these initiatives . . . and I must say that I welcome the views that have been shared by honourable members in this House. It is for us to continue to stay abreast of developments that are occurring.

We know that we have many avid readers here and we have to look very carefully at the White Paper. At this point, I will not comment on the White Paper because as you are aware a select committee of this House has been set up and you have appointed the Financial Secretary Chairman of that committee. Hopefully, within the next fortnight we will be having our first meeting to look through the White Paper and to start to formulate our views.

The way forward is not one that should be based on pessimism. We have to be very robust. As the Governor said in his Throne Speech, "It is an opportunity for us to enlighten the international community." Members would have seen quite recently, where mention has been made of a study to be carried out by the United Nations in which the Cayman Islands has been invited to participate along with three or four other territories. The idea behind that is, first of all the United Nations has approached us as a leading international financial centre to get a sense of how we operate. Hopefully, they will be apprised as to how we conduct business in the Cayman Islands, how the international financial centres work and also to create a list amongst themselves. According to them, they have decided to give it a colour [but] I am not into the black and white issue. According to them, they are going to.... Let's say a favourable list, one that will reflect upon those jurisdictions that have introduced or implemented prudent practises.

We have reason to believe that we will feature very prominently on that list of jurisdictions that have introduced prudent legislative regimes as we have the capability in place (as I said earlier) to monitor very carefully the type of business that is done on our shores; to send a very good report to the international community as to where we stand and to say more importantly on the issue of secrecy that our legislation, the Confidential Relationships Preservation Law.... This piece of legislation has been used by quite a number of people to probably send information to the international community that anything goes in the Cayman Islands. That piece of legislation allows for guided disclosure; it protects legitimate business but it does not shield deviant activities.

When we look in terms of the range of gateways that have been approved through different pieces of legislation by honourable members of this House, we can see that there is a commitment within the legislature right across government, right across the financial industry for us to operate a credible international financial centre. This has not been done by just members of the Legislative Assembly that are here today, but by quite a few that have gone. Some of them are now deceased but they left a very rich legacy.

We have to be thankful especially to our previous Financial Secretary, Sir Vassel Johnson, for the work that he has done. We have to be thankful for his deputy at that time, Mr. Linford Pierson, followed by Mr. Tomas Jefferson, who then succeeded Sir Vassel. All of these people together with members of the private sector have made their contribution. We have to be thankful to members of Executive Council, longstanding members such as the Honourable Truman Bodden, the Honourable John McLean, the Honourable Anthony Eden, the Honourable Julianna O'Connor-Connolly. We have to be thankful to all of those members. We have to be thankful to the Honourable Chief Secretary, Mr. James Ryan, and more recently, the Honourable Attorney General.

I must say that Mr. Ballantyne made me very proud of the way he handled the meeting and the legal issues at the OECD conference in Paris. He stood up very well right across the board. And we could see that it was quite evident to the team on the other side that they were taking note of what was being said because he went into the depths of the legal issues.

Mr. Speaker, what is very important is that we have put in place arrangements for future dialogue. In fact, while not wanting to make a premature statement, one of the senior members around the table indicated to us that he would be quite willing to come to the Cayman Islands for further dialogue.

Our gratitude will also have to be given on behalf of the Assistant Financial Secretary, Miss Drummond. She has been doing an excellent job in terms of following up these initiatives. More recently, she has been joined by Mr. Langston Sibblies.

We have in place the secretariat and this secretariat is being headed by Mr. William Walker, he also performed very well in terms of the relevant questions that were raised. At the meeting with the senior officials in London and in Paris as well.

Thanks will also have to be expressed to Mr. Anthony Travers, who took time out to not only attend the meetings in Paris but also those in London with us. There is goodwill within our community in terms of supporting the financial industry and for strengthening the economy. We have had quite a number of persons within the private sector who have given of their valuable time. A number of them have taken time out to carry out research and to develop reports that have been forwarded to our office and also considered by the Private Sector Consultative Committee.

Mr. Speaker, we know that there is goodwill in this House in terms of continuing to do what is necessary to protect and to strengthen the Cayman Islands economy, to look very carefully at these initiatives and their implications for the Cayman Islands, to sit down and to engage in constructive dialogue with whoever it is necessary for us to talk to in order to explain what we are about and to hear what their concerns are about and to address those.

We have been quite fortunate to enter into a preliminary understanding. We are hoping to firm this up into a contractual arrangement with one of the very senior persons who recently retired from the Inland Revenue Office and has been carrying out consultancy work on behalf of several other countries. His name is Mr. Ian Spence. He is very much in depth in terms of what these initiatives are about and he is also one of the persons involved from the very early stages. We are hoping to have him in the Cayman Islands to meet with members of the legislature, to meet with members of Executive Council towards the middle of this month.

So, Mr. Speaker, a lot is happening. There is no element of complacency. Too much is riding on this. If need be, we have to expend the energy and the time to commit the necessary resources in order to make sure that the Cayman Islands does not lose a benefit that would otherwise accrue by staying abreast of these initiatives. We know there is full commitment right across the board.

Not only are we looking to what is happening on our shores but there is a commitment on our part in terms of supporting the initiatives of the Caribbean Financial Action Task Force. What we found interesting was that when the resolution was put at the ministerial meeting in November of last year, there were quite a number of countries that were represented at that meeting who did not know that they were on this preliminary list or had been written to. We have managed through this process to heighten awareness within the region. There will be a meeting with the Committee of Fiscal Affairs within another month or so and that's a group to discuss the way forward on these initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, there will be a meeting of the strategic group that has been formed next Wednesday afternoon, a joint meeting between the strategic group and the Government Private Sector Consultative Committee. An update will be provided as to the details of the meetings that took place in London and Paris. More importantly, the secretariat is planning to put in place a work programme and we will have to identify a day and time each week when meetings will be held with our office strategic group. The strategic group will be apprised of developments occurring on a weekly basis by the secretariat.

We have now engaged the services of Mr. Langston Sibbles, and he has very much taken up the mantle and will be introduced to the members of the strategic group and the Government Private Sector Consultative Committee at the meeting to be held on Wednesday afternoon.

We are now talking to another prominent individual within our local financial community who has very good banking experience. This has come at the suggestion of the Honourable Attorney General who thinks that it is a good idea. I have to be thankful to him for advancing this suggestion that we should not be attempting to analyse it from the legal side but we should also look at the economic implications of all of these initiatives.

This individual is well known to quite a number of members of the Legislative Assembly. I will not run the risk at this time and mention his name because we are now discussing contractual arrangements, but we are hoping that he will be on board before the end of April.

It is not a question in terms of just dealing with these initiatives. This is an opportunity for us to do an audit of where the Cayman Islands now stands as a financial industry, and decide on what has to be done. We have talked about the fiscal reform side. We have to look at what is happening on the financial industry side.

The Third Elected Member for George Town has mentioned the setting up of a board in order to make recommendations to government on the revenue initiatives. We are hoping that this individual will also play a prominent role on that side as well, but we are looking at it very carefully. There has to be synchronisation in terms of moving forward. But, as I said, I think what I am most elated about is the commitment of our financial industry, the commitment of the entire community and members of the Legislative Assembly in terms of raising questions as to exactly what is happening. It is important whenever the opportunity comes up to share and to provide an update in terms of where we now stand on these initiatives and we will continue to do so.

More importantly, the secretariat will be operating with an open door policy. Members of the community that are travelling overseas—especially from the private sector—who will have to give speeches and make addresses to various forums can always go to the secretariat and get information as to where we now stand on these initiatives and be enlightened in terms of what we can expect, for example, in terms of future outcomes. This is to make sure that our financial industry is properly apprised so that they can correctly inform the international community in terms of what level of dialogue is entered into, in terms of where we now stand. It has taken some time for us to get to this stage but I think quite a lot has been accomplished.

Once more, I would like to say thanks to the government for supporting this setting up of secretariat. I want to say thanks to honourable members of the Legislative Assembly for supporting this setting up of the secretariat and also for their interest in terms of what is happening with these initiatives.

And lastly, mention has been made of the Cayman Islands hosting the Commonwealth Finance Minister's Meeting. This will be in September of this year. We know that there will be over 54 Commonwealth countries represented at this meeting. We know that quite a number of Prime Ministers will be coming to the Cayman Islands. In fact, the primary lead person at the conference will be the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in terms of being the primary Chair. Cayman will also be in the Chair as well.

We can expect over 250 overseas delegates to be coming to the Cayman Islands. This is an opportunity for the government to combine its energies with the financial community to show off our financial industry. To take the Ministers of Government, Prime Ministers, Finance Ministers and others that are coming along across to the Monetary Authority. To meet with the Members of the Legislative Assembly, to go into some of the offices in the private sector and to see that Cayman has got the capacity to talk complex international financial language. When it comes on to this, Mr. Speaker, it is not something that we are lacking in.

And we have seen evidence of this before. We know that we have got the capacity to match the ability or abilities of the international community at any level in terms of complex financial transactions and we see this. This is why today when the question is put in terms of no value added to business done in the Cayman Islands . . . that is ludicrous! It should not be believed by the international financial community or the local community. There is no value that can be placed in terms of intellectual ability.

We see today that head-hunters are paid substantial sums of money to identify individuals with the requisite expertise to provide leadership to companies all over the world. We know that we have got this capacity within the Cayman Islands. When it comes on the mutual funds industry, we have been so innovative. We have been the first in the region to introduce legislation regulating the mutual funds industry. Companies that were reluctant to come to the Cayman Islands before are now coming here in droves.

At the end of these initiatives, this should give us the opportunity to seek for OECD recognition markets that we cannot access now, in terms of the marketing of our mutual funds we should be able to do so. We are hoping to get recognition for our stock exchange. All of these things as far as I am concerned represent a whole lot of stars on the horizon.

So those individuals that are saying that Cayman will disappear in the next five years . . . what I would say, if they are so pessimistic, is shift to one side and make way for individuals with optimism and the capacity and willingness to work with the government, the financial industry and the Cayman industry as a whole to protect what we have developed and worked so hard for over the past thirty years.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, before the Honourable Financial Secretary sits down, will he say what is the government's intention on the Committee that the House set up to deal with the White Paper in London on Dependent Territories? Some of the issues that he spoke about are contained in that White Paper.

The Speaker: He mentioned that earlier, I think you were out of the Chamber.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Okay, thank you.

The Speaker: Honourable Minister for Tourism, Commerce, Transport and Works.

Hon. Thomas C. Jefferson: Thank you for allowing me to say something. I basically wanted to offer my apologies for being a bit late this morning. I did ask my staff to call and say that I was dealing with an urgent official matter that I could not just drop. My apologies.

The Speaker: Does any other honourable Member wish to speak?

The Honourable Second Official Member.

Hon. David Ballantyne: Mr. Speaker, I realise this is perhaps a break with tradition, but I do have one or two matters that I wish to bring to the attention of the House.

You may note that the Portfolio of Legal Administration had a relatively short contribution and I would like to update the House in relation to one or two of those matters. I am providing information first of all and, secondly, I want to add some comments on issues that are pertinent I believe.

In the first place, the commitment was given that resources would be added at a senior level to augment legislative drafting capabilities. And that was with the view to enabling a fast track, as members may recall, for financial services laws and also to the scheduling of laws on a legislative calendar rather more in a managed fashion than perhaps may have been the case with a view to timely enactment. This is particularly important when the country faces the challenges of initiatives such as the OECD.

I am happy to tell the House that a senior legal draftsman has been recruited and will be joining my complement in the middle of the year.

I would like to mention briefly criminal matters, as they were mentioned also. International co-operation in criminal matters is a necessary component of an outward looking modern country, and in that regard I am conducting a review of these arrangements with a view to ascertaining the adequacy of them and to recommend any necessary improvements. The criminal lawyers within my portfolio are also focusing on asset forfeiture and confiscation in relation to the proceeds of crime and particularly drug offenders' assets. It is my understanding that cases are being brought before the courts in this regard.

Probably the single largest issue facing the country, facing the House—facing us all—is the initiatives to which the Third Official Member has referred relating to the OECD process and related initiatives. I simply want to add what I can for the understanding of the House and people at large that the primary commitment of the government's legal service is to offer sound and timely legal advice and services. I am pleased to have been afforded an opportunity to play a part as a member of the team on the OECD initiative in particular.

I think I can without fear of contradiction say that the OECD process, from what the officials involved say, is not about setting minimum levels of taxation. It is not, we are told, to protect big government. It is not about the harmonisation of taxes and it is not about imposing one set of values. What they say is that they are trying to promote fair tax competition, a level playing field and transparency. And the two words that were emphasised on the occasion of the visit to Paris were transparency of process and the need for effective dialogue.

It is not my place to comment on the Third Official Member's portfolio or matters pertaining to it, and I don't propose to do so. But I liken this process to a negotiation whereby that dialogue will hopefully produce results. I think the expectation on the OECD members' part is that their concerns should be addressed in some way. But we have also had the opportunity of making it clear that the Cayman Islands expects that its legitimate economic interests be addressed also. I would like to say that those interests include maintaining confidence in the jurisdiction and in the financial services industry in particular.

It is my opinion that rapport at an official level has been established with Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom and with the OECD Officials. I acknowledge and trust that the political input will come at the appropriate point in time. All that we are seeking to do at this stage is to ascertain what the arrangements are and to carry out an analysis of the issues so that those who have the responsibility—including us—for the administration of the country and this honourable house can be fully informed and can take informed decisions.

I think I don't wish to dwell on this beyond saying that on the strength of what has occurred so far, I think there are grounds for cautious optimism, provided that there is substance to this dialogue and that a proper course is laid out and adopted by government and the islands as a whole.

This is all I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to you for the opportunity, even if it is unusual, except to add that I want personally to offer my thanks to His Excellency the Governor, Mr. John Owen, for his commitment and his initiatives during his tenure here and to acknowledge the support that he has had from his wife and her part in the life of the community. I wish him and his wife a successful and happy future and no doubt a happy return.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Speaker: I think that concludes debate on the Throne Speech. No other Member wishes to speak.

The question before the honourable House is: Be it resolved that this Honourable Legislative Assembly record its grateful thanks to His Excellency the Governor for his speech delivered at this meeting. There has accordingly been debate, and I shall put the question that this honourable House record its grateful thanks to His Excellency the Governor for the address delivered at this meeting. Those in favour please say Aye. Those against No.

AYES.

The Speaker: The Ayes have it.

AGREED: THAT THIS HONOURABLE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY RECORDS ITS GRATEFUL THANKS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR FOR HIS SPEECH DELIVERED AT THIS MEETING.

The Speaker: We shall suspend proceedings for fifteen minutes.

PROCEEDINGS SUSPENDED AT 11.27 AM

PROCEEDINGS RESUMED AT 11.53 AM

The Speaker: Proceedings are resumed. Item number 5, Other Business, Private Members' Motions, Private Member's Motion No. 1/99, standing in the name of the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION NO. 1/99

AFTER-SCHOOL PROGRAMME FOR BODDEN TOWN

Miss Heather Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg to move Private Member's Motion No. 1/99 entitled After-School Programme for Bodden Town, which reads as follows:

"WHEREAS between the hours of 3.00 p.m. to 6.30 p.m. is the time when most children are left alone or unsupervised;

"AND WHEREAS the Government, over the past several years has accepted the policy of supporting 'after-school' programmes in the various districts;

"AND WHEREAS the district of Bodden Town has no such programme;

"BE IT NOW THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT the Department of Social Services, through its Community Development Officer, establish such a programme for the district of Bodden Town."

The Speaker: Do we have a seconder?

The First Elected Member for West Bay.

Mr. W. McKeeva Bush: Mr. Speaker, I second the motion.

The Speaker: Private Member's Motion No. 1/99 has been duly moved and seconded. Does the mover wish to speak to it? The Second Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Miss Heather Bodden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin my debate, let me just pause here and thank the First Elected Member for West Bay for seconding this Motion. I am aware of this member's association with these after-school programmes while he was the minister. Much of what has been achieved so far with these programmes that are now in place would not have come about had he not utilised the churches and assisted them by way of grants to get youth workers to help with these after-school programmes.

Like me, the First Elected Member for West Bay has his heart in the right place when it comes to our youth. The welfare of our youth has been a keen concern of mine since the earliest years of my involvement in community services. It is a concern that has been a driving force in my life and a motivating factor in my work. Our young people represent the future, and when we look at them, we see a glimpse of what things could be like later on. That is why in my response to the 1996 Throne Speech I indicated my commitment to setting up an after-school programme in the district of Bodden Town.

In my debate, I said that I would be approaching the minister about setting up such a programme, as it is very much needed. For these reasons, this motion is especially near and dear to my heart.

I also believe that paying attention to our youth during these critical after-school hours is more urgent today than it has ever been before. Unfortunately, there is more today for them to experience—drugs, sex, pornography and violence.

Touching on violence, Mr. Speaker, TV is a big problem today in the lives of our children. The number of potential negative influences that a young person may be exposed to on any given day is frightening. Many parents may not even be aware of the dangers lurking in the form of so many temptations that can easily turn into actions which may later be regretted for years or even a lifetime.

An after-school programme is a preventative measure designed to keep this from happening. In addition, it can be so much more. The old saying, "An idle mind is the Devil's playground," is just as true today as it has ever been. Without supervision, it is too tempting for young people to fall into the trap of a life without values.

Most of Cayman's culture and history is built on good moral values. When we were growing up, we seldom had to worry about the kinds of negative influences that have become commonplace today. Moreover, even if they had been there, we were seldom left alone long enough for temptation to take over. When we came home from school we had our parents, our grandparents, or another family member to take care of us. That is certainly not the case anymore, Mr. Speaker, everyone's obligations have grown. In most families, both parents work—sometimes two and three jobs. Even grandparents often work today.

By process of elimination, the responsibility for taking care of the children after school falls to the helper, who may or not consider it a priority, or worse, to the children themselves.

Mr. Speaker, these problems arise from a lack of parental guidance and involvement in the lives of the children. Today, it is very difficult for one parent to manage alone. It seems that all too often when a child begins to have problems, the parent or parents give up and the children are left to fend for themselves on the streets. Here they find an atmosphere that is full of negative influences and opportunities to go astray.

Sometimes parents are too tired and may be too quick to give in to the child's demands. Parents need to spend more time supporting and encouraging their children. A parent's words and actions are two of the most important influences on a child's self-esteem. With love and diligent effort like supporting an after-school programme, parents can help develop solid self-esteem that will serve them through out their lives.

Mr. Speaker, this is where the after-school programme steps in. It means peace of mind for parents and a new opportunity for children to find a positive outlook for their energy and talents. It gets the children off the streets and into a safe and controlled environment where growth and learning are encouraged. This programme will encourage a partnership, so to speak, between parents and the government, whose primary goal is to help produce productive and well-rounded citizens for our community. It will seek to enhance and optimise an outside of the classroom environment for educational and recreational opportunities for our children's development.

As you know, after-school programmes are already in operation in West Bay and George Town. Their success is an encouragement to us. Today, Mr. Speaker, Bodden Town continues to be the fastest growing district in the Cayman Islands. Everywhere you look, you see new construction and housing going up as more families move in. This incredible growth rate makes the need for an after-school programme even more urgent.

Having said all that, I would like to turn now to some of the considerations about the organisation and running of such a programme in Bodden Town. This programme will target children up to the age of approximately 14. These are the ages where children are most vulnerable and in need of a structured environment. Discipline is very, very important. Everything we know about young people points to the need for discipline in their lives so this will be a key part of the programme.

Fun is also important. After all, this is not meant to be school. There will certainly be a variety of activities to keep the children occupied. I would like to see this programme opened with devotion and singing. Also, a healthy and nutritious snack will be provided. For many, the after-school programme will be a time to delve into new creative pursuits or to explore subjects that may not be offered in the traditional classroom setting—things like thatch weaving and other crafts come to mind. It can present students with opportunities for self-discovery and allow them to choose their path rather than a one-size-fits-all approach.

Mr. Speaker, it will certainly allow the students to discover and strengthen their individual skills and talents by presenting them with choices at an earlier age. Don't get me wrong, completing homework assignments will also be a priority, but the programme will also offer an opportunity to bring our children into greater contact with their culture and historical past. This is why activities such as art, crafts, drama, and music are all welcome.

Finally, I would like to stress that although the programme will make life easier for parents, it will rely very heavily on their support to make it work. Scheduling and organising will be critical to the success of such a programme. The current school bus system can be used to provide adequate transportation for students thereby increasing usage and attendance. A register will be set up to register children as they are dropped off. Parents and guardians will be responsible for collecting the children on time at the end of the day.

Most of all, Mr. Speaker, the programme will require the care and commitment of concerned adults, be they parents or anyone else who has a love for young people and a desire to make a difference in their lives. In this respect, I would strongly encourage some of our senior citizens to become involved. Our children are badly in need of wise and understanding parents and guardians who can anchor them during their time of personal crisis.

Mr. Speaker, you need not have a college degree to be a good parent, guardian, or youth worker. It is just a matter of doing simple things every day—praise and encouragement when due, and discipline as required. Acceptance of our children for who they are and not what we want them to be will allow our children to accept and respect themselves. We will count on committed adults in our community to build relationships with our young people and to pass on to them the values that we learned growing up. Children need to be inculcated with the sense of responsibility not only for their own actions but also for the actions of their peers and a healthy respect for others and they will have to be disciplined. It is not always easy but my experience in working with teens and other young people in Cayman has taught me that however difficult it can be sometimes, these rewards are always greater in the time and energy you put into the task.

Today, Mr. Speaker, as the saying goes, "It takes a Village to Raise a Child." That's why this programme will need the commitment of the community but I feel we have everything it takes to achieve our goals.

Mr. Tony Scott, Bodden Town's Community Development Officer, is an expert at setting up an after-school programme. Everyone here will recall how he set up a two-week summer camp for kids at the Bodden Town Civic Centre last summer. The success of the programme gives me tremendous optimism with respect to what we can achieve with this after-school programme.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, our young people represent our future. I know we will all be proud one day when we can look back on this programme and say, 'We did the right thing.' Our youth today are important. Whatever needs to be done to ensure a brighter future for them, I want parents to know they can count on me to help achieve. I also want parents to know that I am here to provide solutions that will make life a little easier for them. If it means taking that stress away from them for three hours knowing their child is in a safe environment, then that is what this motion is all about.

Mr. Speaker, too often while I am at the Bodden Town Civic Centre I see so many children in that area doing things I know their parents would not approve of and truthfully this bothers me. I ask the government to look at this motion favourably.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does any other Member wishes to speak?
The Third Elected Member for Bodden Town.

Mr. Roy Bodden: Mr. Speaker, I rise to associate my efforts with the call to establish an after-school programme in Bodden Town. Sometime ago I was approached with a proposal by two interested members of the Committee, both with some experience in teaching. I passed on this proposal to the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town, and at least one other minister of government.

I read the proposal myself and I thought that it was a very good rudimentary proposal. The only conspicuous absence was no mention of a physical facility that could be utilised, and I am going to say more about this later because if there is a challenge to be met, it would be in this area.

As an educator myself, and as someone who has been involved with youth in the community of Bodden Town since 1970—well before I knew that I would be politically inclined—I noticed that one of things sadly lacking is a sense of self-esteem and self-importance. I have to say that I had a fortunate upbringing because my mother, God rest her memory, was really excellent at inculcating in us a sense of self-esteem and a sense of self-importance. On numerous occasions since I have been in this House I have complimented her on that and I can only regret now that she is not around to hear a further compliment. But be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, what I want to say now is more important than purely my own personal experience.

I believe the reason why this area is not developed is because the demographics and the society of the Cayman Islands now has changed in such a way as to not afford parents to be full-time parents. My mother was a full-time mother and housewife. So her responsibilities were exclusively geared for taking care of her family and for bringing up her children. In that sense, if she had failed, her failure to my mind would have been a greater failure than some of the failures that take place now.

Unfortunately, to be a full-time exclusive mother and housewife now is a luxury that not many people can afford. Society and economic demands necessitate that both mothers and fathers have to work. As a result, much quality time is not afforded to spend with the children.

What happens is that the school is in loco parentis—the school then has to take the place of the parents. That is an awesome and added responsibility at the school that has the children legally from about 8.30 a.m. till 3.00 p.m. The school then has to begin earlier and carry on later, so already the teachers and the staff of the school are taxed. It would be fitting if we could arrive at some other kind of arrangement to take some of the burden for the upbringing off the school and place it solely in some organisation which would not have to worry so much about teaching the three R's, but could concentrate on other things which are also of vital importance in creating and moulding a well-rounded individual. It is in this regard that an after-school programme would be very effective and is certainly much needed.

Mr. Speaker, I too noticed that there are quite a significant number of youngsters around Bodden Town who are obviously not constructively involved for long enough periods of the day. We have some organised activities: soccer, basketball for the boys; and there are some activities for the girls. The churches play a very significant and important role in providing some activities. But there is a core of youngsters who fall within the range of about seven to ten where there is a dire need for some kind of organised arrangement. These are the most formative years of a child and these are the years in which he should be able to have some kind of organised setting where he can meet with his peers.

They can be supervised, they can have fun, they can take part in learning even if those activities are relatively unstructured when we compare them with formal schooling.

Now, as I have said before, the challenge I find in Bodden Town is a two-fold challenge because by its very nature the community is extended in terms of the Cayman Islands. And we have at least two large significant areas of settlement. In the ideal, I believe that we would need to have two physical facilities. To have one that contains all of the children in the programme would mean that it would be so large almost as to be prohibitive when it comes to staff and to organising and setting up certain activities.

I would, however, like to say from the outset that if we go the route of having two physical settings, I would like to see some kind of amalgamation and some joining together for collective activities. Even if it's, say, monthly or even a twice monthly or on a thrice-monthly basis so that no particular element feels left out or exclusive. What I would like to see developed is a programme where there could be some mutual feelings that all belong to a community, albeit the numbers may preclude having only one centre.

Now, in order to meet that, the challenge would be to finding a physical facility that currently exists either in the Bodden Town or Savannah area. I have scratched my head many times, Mr. Speaker. I have failed to come up with a facility, which would be adequate to accommodate such a programme. Adequate, that is, in terms of the physical space available, and adequate also in terms of a central location. We are, therefore, left with the added challenge of having to procure such a centre.

It may well be that we can interest and co-opt services of one of the churches in our constituency. That would be good. But I am not sure if one facility alone would be significant. We may have to get two or even three.

We who support the motion recognise that the motion is not without its challenges. But I am confident that these challenges can be overcome by those of us and the government if it is so minded. The proposal is a good starting point. From what I have heard and understood cursorily there may be one or two church congregations interested also in becoming involved in such a programme, and that itself is excellent. I certainly would encourage that, since the churches are eminently equipped to offer some kind of training and already have in place by virtue of their formalised youth programmes and their Sunday school programmes certain programmes that can be adapted to help these children along in certain ways.

I see the church as an important tenant in this whole business of socialisation. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we like to claim that we are very cognisant of our religious and Christian background. So, I think definitely that the churches will have a complementary role to play and I will certainly encourage them to become involved.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that parents will be supportive of this programme because many parents work until 5.00 p.m. And when they come home, one or either of the parents have to assume the responsibility for supervising the homework, that is in addition to preparing the evening meal and preparing the children for bedtime. Now, in a household with two or three children this is quite a significant effort Monday to Friday, coming from a job where parents have to work from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. sometimes under rather stressful conditions. So, relief by way of an after-school programme would ease the burden physically and emotionally.

I noticed that the Second Elected Member for Bodden Town mentioned that one of the items in the programme could be some kind of supervision of schoolwork. Certainly, I would hope that the facilities could be such that assignments and homework could have some place and the children could be able to get some help and some supervision in this so that they would not have to rely exclusively on the parents.

Another important facet of such a programme would be that it would arrest this whole habit of having the television as a surrogate parent. I have always been suspicious . . . and I remember in my earlier years here, I lamented substituting parental love, concern, and supervision with the television. I would adapt the cliché that the television is a good servant but a bad master. It is like fire, a good servant but a bad master. An unsupervised television as far as children are concerned is a weapon as dangerous as a firecracker or any dangers that destroys our children. Indeed, it may be worse than a firecracker because once a firecracker has exploded you cannot explode that same firecracker again. One bad idea or one bad notion gleaned from the television embedded in the mind of a young child or a young person can be repeated over and over, and worse can be shared, can be dispensed, can be dealt to any number of young people and children. I see far too much unsupervised watching of television by children.

I want to say that as an educator and as a parent, one practise I have is that I try to educate my youngsters to the positive qualities of television. I have a little son who is six years old, and I encourage him to watch the news with me in the evenings and we discuss things and he now knows about Kosovo and he can talk about Belgrade, the United Nations and President Clinton. But, Mr. Speaker, I never allow him to watch violent cartoons, never. So Tom and Jerry and all that kind of stuff even though people say, 'Well, it is a cartoon and what is wrong with that?' No, Mr. Speaker, I tell him, "Listen, it is news time."

And he can even tell me . . . we had a little quarrel up to yesterday afternoon because I like the BBC and he is a CNN man. So, Mr. Speaker, we have to face the facts. Television is here to stay. I would not advocate trying to live without it because it would mean depriving ourselves of a certain educational tool. But once we understand that it should be kept in the realm of an educational tool and ensure that when our children come in contact with it, they are properly supervised and trained to use it in constructive ways then it is all well and good. It is the unsupervised use.
